Febris, huius febris, f. g. An ague or feuer, whiche is an vnnaturall heate kendled at the harte: and brought fro thense by veynes & arteries is spredde into all the bodie sensibly hurtinge the naturall operations of it. Thereof be three kyndes accordyng to the three partes of our bodie, Diaria febris, Humoralis, and Hectica. Diaria is when the spirites vitalle, naturall, or animall by any disordered cause are inflamed and therewith setteth the whole bodie in a distempered heate. It is resembled to a bottell full of hoate ayre or vapour whiche warmeth the bottell that conteyneth it: and is called Diaria febris, because commonly it continueth not aboue a daye. Febris Humoralis, that ryseth of the humours conteyned in the bodie and is very dyuers and of many sortes accordynge as the humours be putrified or not putrified, within the veynes or in other places without the veynes, all together, or any one or two geuynge the cause of the disease. It is resembled to scaldynge water, whiche setteth in a heate the vessell conteynyng it. Hectica is when the vnnaturall heate possesseth not only the spirites and humours but the firme partes and principal substance of the bodie, and is resembled to a warme vessell that heateth all thyng conteyned in it.
