VII. By Possession then, we understand not the bare retention of a Thing; such as a Keeper, an Administrator, a Borrower, or a Tenant for Use and Profit, have with regard to the Goods of Others; but such as carries along with it an Affection and Desire of having the Thing to ones self. (3) This they divide into Natural and Civil: Which Division may again be consider'd in Two respects; either as to the outward manner of possessing or retaining; or as to the inward Form or Essence of Possession. In the Former Sense we are then said to have Natural Possession, when having once taken a Thing, we stick to it, not only by the Inclination of our Mind, but by Actual, and as it were, Corporal Application. Civil Possession may in this Sense be kept in the Mind only, when 'tis lost as to the Body. Inasmuch as National Laws, in some particular Cases, still allow the Advantages which follow Possession, to those who have quitted their Actual hold, or lost Things out of their Hands. In the latter respect Natural Possession is, when we have indeed a Mind and Inclination to keep a Thing as our own, yet without any just persuasion of Property, such as might arise from a Lawful Title. But Civil Possession implies not only a Desire, but likewise a Reasonable Ground for that Desire; which according to the Common and Regular Course, is always understood in National Constitutions, when they allow any Favour to Possession (a).

Now the proper Subject of Possession, are Bodily Substances, (4) whether with or without Motion: The less proper or the Analogous Subject, are Incorporeal Things, as Rights, which we possess by using them, and by the power of so using them (5); as likewise Deeds and Writings, upon which an Action may be grounded towards some certain Claims. To the constituting and compleating the Nature of Possession it is requisite, that the Person to be put in to possession, shall either by himself, or by Proxy, (6) corporally take to him the Thing it self, or the Badge and Sign of it, or the Instrument of Custody, according as the Nature of the Thing permits; and consequently, that the Thing be after such a manner subjected to his power, as that he may be able actually to dispose of it. If many Bodies are united and connected to each other, then the taking any one part with a desire of possessing the whole, is construed for taking the whole, so far as it lies free and void of Owners. Thus, for instance, He who would take possession of a Field, or of a House, is not obliged to walk over every Foot of Ground, or to creep into every Garret, but 'tis enough for him to enter on any part (b). A Complex Body made up of particular separate Bodies, as a Flock, for Example; if all the Parts are present, is supposed to be taken all by laying hold on any one. But if the Parts are divided as to place, one part of the Flock, for Instance, in this Field, and another in that; here each part is to be taken by it self. Incorporeal Things when they adhere to a Corporeal, are presum'd to be taken together with it. But if they are to be acquired in the Goods of others, then they are taken either when we are introduced to a Thing, (7) over which (for Instance) we design to appoint a Right or Service, or when we exercise any Act which flows, as it were, from such a Right (c).

In Negative Rights, it is equivalent to Possession, if I forbid a Man any Thing, or oppose him in his Design upon it, and if he rests-satisfied after my forbidding or opposing him. To proceed; Such a Seizure, or the exercise of such an Act is necessarily required in the obtaining of every Possession: Though it may by Civil Ordinances be appointed, That the Property of a Thing shall otherwise by Right pass to a Man so effectually, as that he shall bring as strong an Action against one who detains the Thing from him, as if he had taken Corporal Possession of it (d).

(1) Vid. D. Lib. 41. t. 1. De A. R. D. Leg. 31. princip. (2) C. 4. f. 4. Mr. Barbeyrac has shewn the Contrary in his 2d Note upon this Sect. (3) Vid. D. Lib. 41. t. 2. De acquir. rerum possess. Leg. 3. f. 1. (a) Vid. Polyb. l. 12. c. 7. (4) Vid. Instit. Lib. 2. t. 2. f. 1, 2. (5) Vid. D. Lib. 8. t. 1. De Servitut. Leg. 20. (6) D. Lib. 41. t. 2. De acquir. vel amit. possess. Leg. 9. (b) Ibid. Vid. l. 3. f. 1. D. de acquir. possess. (7) Vid. D. Lib. 7. t. 1. De Usufr. &c. Leg. 3. princip. (c) Add. D. Lib. 9. t. 1. l. 3. f. 2. D. de act. empt. &c. (d) To which Point belongs what is alledg'd by Gratius, L. 2. c. 8. f. 25.

Farther; As to the acquiring a Thing by Occupancy, it is necessary, that the Thing lay free and vacant: So if a Thing is to pass from Another to me, with such force and virtue, as that I may be able hereafter actually to dispose of it, it is likewise necessary, that he abdicate and divest himself of the Possession, and remove it, as it were, out of his Custody, that I may have power immediately to seize on it. And this is enough to make it properly be said, that a Thing is deliver'd by another; there being no need that he should directly put it into my very Hands. As I may very well be said to feed a Man, though I do not chew his Meat for him, and then thrust it into his Mouth, but only lay it in such a place, whence he may conveniently reach it for his Use (a).

VIII. These Rules being laid down, it is evident, that Dominion consider'd merely as a Moral Quality, and as it abstracts from Possession, (1) may certainly be transfer'd by bare Covenants; but that as 'tis understood to include likewise some degree of Natural Power, by means of which it may immediately be put in Act, besides Covenants, Delivery is farther required: which doth not arise from the force of Positive Law, but from pure Natural Reason. Nor yet is it necessary to affirm, That before Delivery the Alienator retains some kind of Imperfect Dominion; unless we would, very unartificially ascribe the Name of Dominion to a bare Natural Ability, actually to dispose of a Thing, without a Moral Power or Right.

For after the Covenant is compleated, or after the Right is by Covenant transfer'd on another, the Thing immediately commenceth his, and regards purely his Interest and Advantage; and the Alienator can lawfully exercise no Act about it, but such as tends towards delivering up the Possession to the other Party. If, before Delivery, he make any other disposal of the said Thing, he doth this only de facto, and not de jure. And Delivery it self is not properly the final Act of Dominion, but the releasment and abdication of Corporal Custody. For that only is esteem'd an Act of Dominion, which by virtue of Dominion is freely perform'd. But Delivery is made not freely, but upon Necessity, or Obligation. As the Resignation of a Magistrate cannot be styl'd an Act of his Office, if we consider that Office, as denoting a Power to command Others.

But tho' a Thing can no longer be reckon'd my own, when I have made over the full Right of it to another Man, yet 'tis somewhat different whether I still corporally detain the said Thing, or whether the other Party hath already got possession of it. For in the former Case, he is both unable to apply it presently to his Actual Use; and besides, if I refuse to deliver it, he must compel me to grant him possession, in a forcible way. And if Matters stand thus, besides the Inconvenience of wanting the Thing in the mean time, if you live under Civil Government, you must be at the trouble of making out your Right to the Judge; and if he either through Corruption or Neglect shall pronounce a False Sentence, you must sit down contented: But if you are in a State of Natural Liberty, you must try out the Matter by the Doubtful Fortune of War.

On this account it is that the Roman Laws affirm, That those Contracts which treat of the alienating of Things, do give only a Right to the Thing (2); as if before Delivery the Person were plac'd, as one may say, at a distance from the Thing, only with a Right of joining it to himself hereafter. But that when Dominion hath received its Final Completion from Corporal Seizure, then a Right is establish'd in the Thing. Yet the Law frequently supplies the former Deficiency: As for Instance, by reckoning amongst the Rights in a Thing the Right of Inheritance, (3) or that which the Heirs have to the Goods of the Deceas'd, although they have not yet got Possession. As for the other Distinction of the Roman Laws, in granting a Real Action (4) upon a Right in a Thing, and a Personal Action upon a Right to a Thing, the ground of it seems to be this; That when a Thing once perfectly belongs to me, I have nothing to do but to pursue and take it wheresoever I find it; and there is no new and Peculiar Obligation requir'd in the other Party to engage him to deliver it. But a Bare Right to a Thing, presupposeth that the Thing is not yet fully united to me, and that the other party is by a peculiar Obligation tied to procure that it shall be thus united: Therefore I am to urge him, That he would leave the Thing, as 'twere vacant, for me, so that I may take it into my own Possession.

As to what remains, though it be a common Saying, That a Thing in Hand is better than an Action in the Court; yet 'tis certain, that our Estate may be encreas'd by a bare Right to a Thing, and by Personal Actions. As on the contrary, what a Man by a perfect Obligation owes to another, he cannot, to any purpose, reckon amongst his Goods and Fortunes, tho' he retains, as yet, the Corporal Possession of it. Hence, he who possesseth a Thousand Pounds, and owes a Thousand, hath nothing; and he that owes more than he possesseth, hath less than nothing. For, in the Words of the Civil Law; Id ei abesse videtur in quo est obligatus (b), So much seems wanting to him, as he is bound to make good.

IX. We are to observe besides, that Delivery is either true, or feigned and suppos'd; the latter of which is done manu brevi (5), in short, and without Formality, to save Time and Trouble. Now this chiefly takes place, when I make over by Grant, the Property of my Goods

(a) Vid. lib. 41. t. 2. l. 1. f. 21. l. 51. D. de acquir. possess.

(2) See Mr. Barbeyrac's Third Note upon this Section.

(4) See Mr. Barbeyrac's Fourth Note upon this Section.

(5) See Mr. Barbeyrac's Remark upon this in his Note upon this Section.

(1) See Mr. Barbeyrac's First Note upon this Sect.

(3) D. lib. 1. t. 17. de divers. reg. Jur. leg. 19.

(b) L. 3. t. 5. leg. 28. D. de negot. gest.

to another, reserving, for a certain Term, the Use and Profits to my self (a). (Though in some Grants of this kind, it is now an usual Practice, for the Donor to deliver the Keys to the other Party, who immediately restores them again.) As likewise, when I resolve that a Thing of mine, which another now hath in his Possession, shall, for the future, be his Right and Property (b). Or when having first lent, or set out to hire, or given in trust, a certain Thing to you, I afterwards sell it you, or resign it in way of Profit or Portion (c). This feign'd Delivery is likewise of use between Three Persons, by Delegation (1); as if, for Instance, a Man out of Bounty or Debt, would give me somewhat, and I order him to give it a Third Person. For that's the same as if it had been first offer'd to me, and by me deliver'd into the other Party's Hands.

Delivery is then said to be made manu longa, or by a round-about way, when a Thing is not immediately brought to another Body, but only shewn or pointed out at a less or a greater distance. For I have, as far as in me lies, deliver'd that, of which I have quitted the Possession, and have put another in a Method of obtaining for himself (d). And to this Head they refer also those Cases, in which any Sign or Instrument of Custody (as Keys, for Instance;) is given up (e). As for the Case of throwing or scattering Largeesses among the common People, the Design of it is not, that the Things thus dispers'd should be look'd on as derelict, or forsaken, and so be afterwards acquired, in the way of Occupancy, by the first Takers. But such a piece of Bounty is really a Species of Donation, reach'd out indefinitely to all the Members of the Crowd; so that the Thing thus thrown in common, is suppos'd to be deliver'd, as 'twere, to the first Man in the Multitude that lays hands on it (2). Yet Cæsar speaks otherwise in his Complement to the Soldiers, upon granting them the Liberty of Plunder :

—————
*Neque enim donare vocabo,
Quod sibi quisque dabit (f).*

I call it not my Gift what each Brave Man Shall give himself.

Sometimes only Tickets are scatter'd, upon producing of which the Bearers receive the Import and Contents of them. Thus Titus the Emperor, in some of the Shows which he presented, threw about little round Tablets of Wood, each with some kind of Prize inscribed, as Garments, Gold, Horses, Oxen, Sheep, and Slaves. Those who had the good Fortune to catch these Tables, upon carrying them to the Managers and Stewards, were gratified with the Purport of the Inscription (g).

(a) Vid. l. 8. t. 54. l. 28. C. de donat. (b) Vid. l. 41. t. 1. l. 21. D. de A. R. D. (c) L. 9. f. 5. D. dist. Tit. (1) See B. 5. c. 11. f. 13. (d) Vid. D. 1.46. t. 3. l. 79. D. de Solution. & Lib. 41. t. 2. l. 1. f. 21. l. 18. f. 2. l. 51. D. de acquir. possess. (e) Vid. l. 41. t. 1. l. 9. f. 6. D. de A. R. D. & l. 8. t. 54. Leg. 1. C. de donationibus, & l. 18. t. 1. l. 74. D. de contrah. empt. (2) Vid. Instit. l. 2. t. 1. f. 45. (f) Lucan. Pharsal. l. 7. v. 739, 740. (g) Zonar. Tom. 2. Comp. Bacler ad Grof. l. 2. c. 6. f. 2.

CHAP. X.

Of Wills and Testaments.

AMongst the Derivative ways of Acquisition, some regard the Chance of Death, and some transfer Things whilst both Parties are alive (1). In both Cases the Things are convey'd from one Person to another, either by express Will of the former Proprietor, or by the Appointment of some Law interposing in the Affair (a).

II. On account of Death, 'tis the Common Practice of Mankind to transfer things by Testament: The Nature and Origine of which Act we ought with some Care to examine. According to Grotius (b) therefore a Testament is the Alienation of a whole Estate in case of Death, and before that time revocable; in the mean while, the Right of Possessing and of Enjoying being reserv'd. Whereas 'tis not altogether certain, whether a Testament can rightly be call'd an Alienation, in that strict Sense under which it denotes such an Act by which a Man makes a thing that was his Own become Another's. For Alienation, being in this sense, a transferring of Right from one to another Person, consequently supposeth the Existence of the Two Parties at the time of its date; so that henceforward the Thing may be said, to be estrang'd from him who thus transferr'd it. But the Testator, so long as he draws Breath, retains a full and absolute Right to all his Goods, without the least Diminution. Therefore whilst he lives, he cannot properly be said to have alienated any Thing: And at the Moment of his Death he loseth immediately all the Right he held whilst alive, and is reckon'd as no Body, in Civil Consideration. Therefore an Alienation cannot be said to be made at that time, when in respect of the Party who should alienate, nothing can be call'd his own or another's. Nor is the Difficulty taken off, if we affirm, That the Alienation is indeed made when the Will is sign'd, but depends in the mean while upon the Casualty of Death, as upon a necessary Condition. For in every Act of Alienation Two Parties must join Consents, the one from whom, and the other to whom, the Thing is transferr'd; and these Consents must be united by conspiring, as it were, together at the same time. But now nothing happens more frequently, than that a Man shall not know himself to be Heir till the Will comes to be open'd upon the Testator's Decease. And likewise when the Will is thus open'd, 'tis at the Choice of the Heir appointed, whether he will enter upon the Inheritance, or wave and refuse it.

(1) Mr. Barbeyrac is more Exact in dividing Derivative Acquisitions into Natural, Civil, and Mix'd, which he explains in his First Note upon this Section. (a) Varro de re rustica, l. 2. Somewhat must necessarily intervene before what was another's can become mine. (b) L. 2. c. 6. f. 14.

Again, Since all the Right of the Heir by Will commenceth at the Testator's Death; he hath not, before that Moment, any Right which can be said to depend on the Death of the Party as on a Condition. Besides, when any kind of Alienation is made, though such as may be recall'd, yet it ought to transfer such a Right on the Person towards whom it is directed, that it shall not be disannull'd at the bare pleasure of the Alienator. For otherwise, neither the Alienator can be suppos'd to have contracted any Obligation, nor the other Party to have acquired any Right, if the whole Transaction amounted to no more, (for Example) than this slight Promise, You shall have, one time or other, somewhat which I now possess, provided you don't displease me in the mean while; but then you shall have no Right to hinder me from being displeas'd at any time when I think fit, or without any manner of Reason. Such an Act as this cannot be stiled an Alienation, being a bare Declaration of a Man's present Design, without any Necessity of continuing the same Resolution; which is incapable of producing any Obligation on the one side or any Right on the other (a). But a Testament is really such a Declaration of a Man's Intentions, as doth not confer any Right on the other Party before the Testator's Death; such, at least, as may have the Effect of full and perfect Right against the Claim of the Testator himself. For after the Will is drawn up, the Testator doth not only retain the most absolute Right of possessing and enjoying, making over to the Heir only the bare Property; but indeed the Property it self is still, without the least Diminution, his own. Of which we have this evident Token, that after all this, he may alienate his Goods, or may strike out those who at present stand Heirs, without any Possibility of Redress. But now even revocable Alienations ever suppose some Casualty, or some Condition under which they are to be revers'd, and which doth not depend merely on the Alienator's Pleasure or Humour.

III. We shall express the Nature of a Testament more plainly and more agreeably to the Sense of the Roman Lawyers, if we call it, A Declaration (1) of our Will touching the Successors to our Goods, after our Decease, yet such as is mutable and revocable at our pleasure whilst we live, and which creates a Right in others to take place only when we are gone. Concerning which Mutability, the Law of General Kindness commands thus much (2); That no Man, unless on account of his Demerit, be wheedled and cajoled with false Hopes, or be ridicul'd and expos'd. Whence, though we can hardly disapprove of what Pliny reports of Domitius Tullus, who had chous'd some hungry Rascals in the wicked Tribe of the Heredipete; Others on the contrary, says he (b), commended this Humour; in that he frustrated the Evil Hopes of such Men, whom, considering the Practice of the Age, it is a part of Prudence thus to deceive (c): Yet Valerius Maximus (d) had good reason to censure Q. Cæcilius and T. Barrulus, of whom the former put a Trick of this kind on L. Lucullus; the latter on Lentulus Spintber, their greatest Friends and Benefactors.

IV. Whether these Testaments owe their Original to Natural or to Positive Law, is disputed amongst the Learned. The Meaning of which Question, is not, Whether a Man be obliged by the Law of Nature to make a Will, (for that certainly is in every Man's Choice, unless so far as it proves necessary to prevent Quarrels amongst his Relations (e);) but, whether after Property hath been introduc'd, it necessarily follows from the Nature of that Establishment, that a Man may effectually dispose of his Goods by Will; or whether this Power is granted to Proprietors by positive Constitution. Grotius's Judgment (3) in the Case is, That a Testament, as many other Acts, may indeed receive a particular Form from Civil Ordinances; yet the Essence and Substance of it is nearly allied to Property, and, upon Supposition of Property, belongs to the Law of Nature. Or, that the Power of disposing effectually of what we possess, is deriv'd from the Law of Nations; which the Civilians term Jus primarium, the first or principal Law; but the Restraint which lies upon us to dispose of them only after such a certain manner, is owing to Civil Appointment. In regard to which Assertion, 'tis not improbable but that some Scruple may arise (4). For since the Things over which Property was first established are designed only to serve the Uses of Men in this Life, and since the Dead lose all their Title to Worldly Possessions, it seem'd not altogether so needful, that Property should contain in it a power of

(a) Vid. supra, Lib. 3. c. 5. f. 5. (1) Vid. D. 1. 28. t. 1. leg. 1. & l. 34. t. 4. leg. 4. (2) See Mr. Barbeyrac's Second Note upon this Section. (b) Lib. 8. Epist. 18. p. 275. Edit. Amst. (d) Lib. 7. c. 8. f. 5, 8.

(4) See Mr. Barbeyrac's First Note upon this Section.

(c) Add Lucian in Dialog. Simyl. & Polystrat. Tom. 1. (e) Comp. Isaiah 38. v. 1. (3) Ubi supra.

Ordering what should become of a Man's Things after his Decease. But it might have been sufficient to have allow'd every Person the Command of his Goods during Life, disabling him to extend it farther, and to have left to the Care of the Living the Management of what belong'd to the Dead, who are no longer Members of Human Society.

Farther, since Death removes Men from all Concerns below, it seem'd that the Disposals and Declarations made in their Lifetime, might be afterwards neglected with Impunity.

Id cinerem & manes credis curare sepultos (1)?

Think you Cold Dust and Shadows feel such [Cares?

An Evidence of this it seems to be, that the most Ancient Men we read of in Story, were wont to engage their Friends by Oaths to fulfil their last Commands, as if no Human Bond were strong enough to oblige them in this Case (a). Therefore 'twas at the pleasure of the Survivors, whether or no a Man's Will should take effect, even after he was dead. And consequently they were to determine by some Agreement amongst themselves, how far they should comply with the Desires of those who had now lost the common Rights of Men. Without such an Appointment, any precedent Disposal would have been vain and usefess, which the Author could not, and others who could, would not maintain and put in Execution.

But, on the contrary, it manifestly appears, that 'twas not sufficient in order to the Peace of Human Society, to introduce such a Property or Dominion of things, as should turn only to the present momentary Use; but 'twas needful to make it such as should hold good hereafter: Man, so far as Nature allows, having no less a Right to preserve Life for the future, and to provide Means towards obtaining that End, than for the present Moment. To which if we add, That we are enjoind to take a particular Care of those who are allied to us in Blood, whose Race we wish may continue to an indefinite extent of Ages, it will on the whole appear to have been conducive to the Peace of Mankind, not to make the Force of Property depend on any fix'd Period of Time; since this would have created no less Confusion and Trouble than the Primitive Community: But to assign it, as 'twere, an Indefinite Duration, by means of which it might pass down and be continued to others. Now as to the preserving and the continuing this Property, those who live in a state of Natural Freedom, appoint Means according to their own Judgment. But in Civil Governments, as it is supported by the Publick Strength, so it hath been variously temper'd and retrench'd, as particular Nations have at any time thought it to be for their Interest.

As for the Notion invented by the Author of the New Method of Law (b) (2), I question whether it will meet with the Approbation of sound Judges. Testaments, says he, by meer Right, that is, without the Confirmation of Civil Ordinances, would be of no force or weight, unless the Soul were Immortal, but because those who are taken out of this World do really still live, therefore they remain Proprietors of their Goods; and those whom they appoint their Heirs, are to be look'd on as their Stewards and Managers (c).

V. But as no one will be forward to maintain, that for a Man to be able to dispose of his Goods at such a time as he is the true Proprietor, and to fix the Effect of his Disposal on a time when he shall not be Proprietor, is repugnant to the Law of Nature: So, on the other hand, it doth by no means appear that this flows by any necessary Reason from the Essence of Property.

Thus much indeed flows from thence, That a Man whilst alive may confer a Right to his Goods on another living Person, which shall not be extinct upon the Death of the Collator, being still kept alive in the other Party who survives. For inasmuch as the Efficient and the Effect are distinct and separate Beings,

(1) Vid. Virgil. Æn. 4. 34. (a) See Gen. XXIV. 2, 3. XLVII. 29. L. 25. Diodor. Sic. l. 2. p. 119. Ed. Rhodom. c. 33. Speaking of Parsides's Death.

Thus too in Sophocles, (Trachin. vers. 1192, &c.) Hercules requires an Oath from Hyllus, for the Performance of his last Commands.

So Constantinus Ducas obligeth his Wife Eudocia by Oath, never to enter on a second Marriage after his Decease. Yet by what Stratagem she recover'd her Writing from the Patriarch who had the keeping of it, and how, as if she had hereby been releas'd from her Engagement is very strange; she marry'd Diogenes, we read in Zonar; Tom. 3. in Eudocia, and in Michael Glyc. Ann. Tom. 4.

So in Josephus, (Archæolog. Jud. XVII. 10.) Herod's Commands for slaying the Chief of the Jews, are neglected by his Sister and her Husband. So,

*Jusserat hæc Rapidis aboleri carmina flammis Virgilius Phrygiùm quæ cecinerè Ducem.
Tucca vetat, Variusque simul; tu maxime Cæsar, Non finis.*

Virgil those Strains which rais'd the Trojans Fame, Dying bequeath'd to feed th' injurious Flame.
Tucca and Varius stop the rash Design,
And You, Great Cæsar, save the Glories of Your Line.

Dio Cassius, l. 59. relating how Tiberius's Will was declar'd null by Caligula and the Senate, adds this Reflection, That no Counsel or Foresight can prevail against the Ingratitude of Men, and the Power of Posterity. To which may be applied that Saying of Lucan,

Nulla fides rebus post terga relictis: l. 2.
In vain we trust to Things we leave behind.

(b) Pag. 56.
Sirac XI. 20.

(2) See Mr. Barbeyrac's Second Note upon this Section.

(c) Comp. Luke XII. 20.

there's no Necessity, that the latter should always die with the former. And therefore, as a Man in his Life-time may fully transfer somewhat which he possesseth, on Another, who shall not lose the Property of it by the Death of him from whom it was receiv'd; so nothing hinders but that a Man may make over the Property of any Thing to some Person else, yet so as to reserve still to himself a certain Right over the said Thing during his Continuance in this World. Hence in the most Ancient Times we find the Fathers of Families disposing of their Goods at the Approach of Death; (for as to the Passage in Gen. XX. 3. Abraham seems not to have already made his Servant's Son his Heir, but only to have thought of making him, in case he happen'd himself to die without Issue;) yet so, as that they themselves open'd and publish'd their Will to their Children, that these by acquiescing in it, might seem to confirm it by mutual Covenant amongst themselves. By this means the Right immediately pass'd from the living Parents to the living Children; and the latter were admitted presently, as 'twere, into Possession of the Goods. And 'tis probable, that those primitive Men, who follow'd so plain and frugal a way of Life, commonly were not cut off by our sudden and violent Distempers, but decay'd leisurely by the gentle wasting of the Radical Moisture; so that they were Masters of their Reason to the last, and were never summon'd by Death unawares, and upon a surprize (a).

After the same manner, Cyrus, in Xenophon (b), allots his Sons, with his own Mouth the Division of their Father's Fortunes. And indeed these last Disposals ought to obtain great Favour and Allowance; it being thought no small Comfort under our Mortal Condition, that what a Man hath labour'd for in his Life, should afterwards fall to that Person rather than others, whom he particularly chuseth and desires. 'Tis establish'd, says Quintilian (c), by the Laws and Customs of the State, that as often as it can possibly be done, the Testaments of the Deceas'd should be strictly obeyed. And this upon no ordinary Grounds and Reasons. For there seems no greater Consolation in Death, than to have a Will which shall hold good after Death. Otherwise a Man might think an Estate a Burthen, if he had not the full Disposal of it; and if all the Right which we are allow'd to have over it whilst we live, were to be taken from us when we die (d).

VI. But the Question under debate doth not proceed so much with regard to these actual Disposals during Life, as to those Testaments by which a Man so conveys his Possessions, as to retain the liberty of altering them to his last Breath, so that the Right of the Heir to the respective Goods shall not commence till the Testator's Decease: Which Method of Appointment many have, with very good reason, prefer'd to that other, but now mention'd, by which Men upon the brink of Death, distributed their Goods amongst their Heirs with their own Hands. For, some sudden unforeseen Fate frequently either hurries Men out of the World, or however removes them far from their Friends, so as they want Time or Opportunity to express by Mouth their last Resolution.

And again, Persons who seem'd to have had more than one Foot in the Grave, have often by some strange Turn, recover'd their Health, when they utterly despair'd of it. And it was likewise judg'd more convenient, that a Man should dispose of his Goods, rather whilst he was in Ease and Quiet, and Master of a sound and clear Reason, than when he was trembling at his last Hour, or when his Mind was shock'd and weakened by the force of his Distemper.

Besides, it was more advantageous for each Person to remain Lord of his own Possessions to his final Gasp, and to give no Man such a Right over them, as he might not, without Inconvenience at any time revoke, when either the Merit of the Party, or his own Inclination shall alter (e). (As the French tell us, 'Tis senseless to put off our Cloaths before we are near going to Bed.) For though the Conveyance of Right, in this Case, might be made reversible, or such as the Conveyer might disannul, upon Appearance of some Condition, either Casual or Voluntary (1), on the part of him to whom the Conveyance was made, yet the Doubts which must necessarily have arisen about the Proof of this Condition, and which each Person would have urg'd for his own Title, must have occasion'd endless Disputes. At least, he who had been once declar'd Heir, would have conceiv'd the highest and most Mortal Resentment against the Disposer, should he for any slight Reason, be depriv'd

(a) See Gen. XXV. 5, 6. XLVIII. 22. Deut. XXI. 16, 17. 1 Kings I. 35. Sirac XXXIII. 24.

(b) Cyropad. 1. 8. (c) Declam. 308. princip.

(d) Nor is Statius's Reflection on Barrenness unworthy Consideration:

*Orbitas omni fagienda nisu,
Quam premit votis inimicus heres,
Optimo poscens, (pudet heu!) propinquum Fumus amico.*

*Orbitas nullo tumultu fletu!
Stat domo capta cupidus superstes
Imminens leti spoliis, & ipsum Computat ignem.*

Syl. Lib. IV.

(e) See Sirac XXXIII. 20, &c.

(1) See B. 3. c. 8. l. 4.

From Barrenness, Good Providence defend!
Which feeds the Wishes of th' Ungodly Heir, Begging the speedy Funeral of his Friend.
Barrenness buried with no parting Tear!
The eager Successor in th' empty Seat
Stalks like a Victor in a Fortress won,
Greedy to fasten on the Spoils of Fate;
And counts, with Grudging Care, the Charges of a [Stone.

Sylv. 7. v. 33, &c.

of what he had already seiz'd upon in Hope and Expectation. Many likewise have expos'd themselves to very great Dangers, by openly naming their Heir too soon. Thus Caligula, when Persons who had put him down in their Wills amongst their Children, and had made open Profession of it, and yet still liv'd on, he gave them the Name of Mockers, and sent many of them a Poisonous Mefls to dispatch them (a).

When Herod had taken up a Design of dividing his Kingdom amongst his Sons, Augustus forbade him to proceed, ordering him, so long as he liv'd, to keep both his Kingdom and his Sons in due Subjection (b). As the Family of Augustus himself was afterwards distracted with a very fatal Emulation, upon his naming a Successor in his Life-time. It hath therefore been thought safe to take Care that Men's Wills should only be publish'd after their Death, that they may bring no Odium, and no Danger upon them whilst they live.

On the same Ground it hath been look'd on as a most detestable and barbarous Villany to unseal and divulge a Testament during the Life of the Testator. So when Cæsar upon the breaking out of the Civil War, caus'd Antony's Will, which he had deposited in the Hands of the Vestal Virgins, to be rehear'd in open Senate; many took very grievous Offence at the Act. For, as Plutarch observes (c), they judg'd it to be most monstrous and unreasonable, that a Man should be obliged to give an account whilst alive, of those things which he intended should be done after his Death. Especially since amongst the Romans 'twas a usual Custom to give Judgments and Characters of particular Persons in these last Instruments (d) (1).

Now though the Reasons here alledged, and others the like, highly recommend to most Nations this way of final Disposal, yet we cannot hence evince, that such Testaments do naturally flow from the Propriety of Things, and consequently are prescribed by the Law of Nature. For though we should suppose, that by the common Consent of Mankind such a Force was granted and affixed to Property, as that a Person might constitute whom he pleas'd to possess his Goods after his Decease, yet that this should be done in such a particular manner, whereby, both the Testator's Will should remain Ambulatory or Changable during his Life (e) (2), and the Right of the Heir not begin till the Testator's Death, and the Party who is Heir not know so much till then; all this is invented and establish'd by positive Ordinances. For, otherwise in transferring Right from one to another, according to the regular Course, it had been necessary that the Consents of the Two Parties should exist together at the same time, and, as 'twere, meet and unite: From which Union the Translation of Right is conceiv'd to arise (3). But now in the Case before us, 'tis so far from being necessary, that the Consents of the Testator and of the Heir should be united; that there is allow'd an Interval of Time, even between the Death of the former, and the Entrance of the latter; the Law, in the meanwhile, supporting the Heir's Right, which might otherwise sink (f).

VII. It is wont likewise, with great Pains and Labour, to be disputed; Whether the Heir by Will, can with a safe Conscience enter upon the Inheritance, when the Will was defective in any Point or Form required by Civil Ordinances? As likewise, Whether the Heir at Law, or he who was to succeed, in case the Party had died Intestate, can honestly overthrow such a Will, upon Failure of these Formalities, though he is assur'd that the Testator seriously design'd to bequeath his Goods to the Person there specified? Those who take the Negative side of both Questions, rely chiefly on the Hypothesis formerly mention'd (4), that the making of Wills is a Precept of the Law of Nature. Whence they conceive, that he who overthrows a Will thus defective, may indeed defend his proceeding in outward Cognizance, or in Civil Courts, but not in the inward Judicature, or in the Court of Conscience.

For the thorough Understanding of these Matters, we ought beforehand to observe, That National Laws are scarce in any Point more careful, or more strictly exact in requiring certain Forms and Ceremonies, than in Testaments; as well to prevent the many Frauds and Juglings which might creep into those written Instruments, as to cut off those most grievous Contentions, which Avarice would have rais'd upon the Case; scarce any thing being gotten with less Pains than a rich and plentiful Inheritance. Hence, in as much as every Person of competent Years, and not stupidly rude and ignorant is presum'd either to have known himself, or to have been able to learn from more skilful Heads, after what manner the Laws of his Country command Testaments to be made; no one is supposed to have express'd his serious Resolution in such a way as he knew would not hold good against those who should oppose it in Court; especially considering that Men are allowed so vast a Time for the settling this Business. When therefore a Testament is found disagreeable to the Civil Constitutions, 'tis easily presum'd that there

(a) Sueton. Calig. c. 38. Add. Sueton. Galb. c. 9. Liv. XL. c. 54.

(b) Josephus Antiq. Jud. XVI. c. 8.

(c) In Anton. 942. Dio Cass. l. 50. calls this Act of Cæsar, A most Unjust Proceeding. (d) As appears from frequent Instances in Tacitus. Add. leg. 1. f. 38. D. depositi, l. 1. f. 5. D. ad. L. Cornel. de Falsis.

(1) Vid. D. l. 16. t. 3. Depositum vel contra, & l. 48. t. 10. ad Leg. Cornel. de Falsis. (e) Vid. l. 4. D. de adimend. & transfor. legat. (2) See Mr. Barbeyrac's Second Note upon this Section. (f) Vid. lib. 41. t. 1. l. 61. D. de acquir. Dom.

(3) See Section the Fourth, and Mr. Barbeyrac's First Note upon it.

(4) See Mr. Barbeyrac's First Note upon this Section.

both been some Fraudulent Contrivance, or that the Testator either was not well in his Wits, or else drew up the Instrument negligently and hastily, and more by the Instigation of others, than by his own free Motion: So that the only End and Design of those Forms was, that a Forged Testament should not be set a foot instead of a True one; or a sudden and unadvis'd Impulse be admitted for a deliberate Resolution: Especially since, without any such Act, the Law calls to the Inheritance the next of Kin, those who are, ordinarily, suppos'd to have stood fairest in the Opinion and Wishes of the Deceas'd. But though it may so happen, that one who goes about to declare his Mind in this matter, upon serious thoughts and mature deliberation, may mistake as to the usual Forms; yet Courts of Judicature have no other means to be inform'd what was the Intention of the Deceas'd, than by these Instruments. And since 'twas at first allowable for the Civil Authority to put this power of making Wills under such Rules as should render it more serviceable to the publick Good, there's no need to recede from the common Decrees, for the sake of one or two private Persons; since if such a Precedent were once admitted, endless Cheats and Quarrels would ever be starting up.

Again, He who is balk'd of an expected Inheritance upon a Failure in the Writings, cannot complain of hard Usage: For, neither can he plead the Prerogative of Blood and Birth, (because then he would have succeeded without Will;) nor can any Man by Testament acquire a Right which shall hold good, at least in case of Opposition, unless it be squar'd according to the Statute. Wherefore such a Person must attribute his Disappointment rather to his own Misfortune, than to any Injury of others. But, notwithstanding all this, if the Will be not call'd in question, then the nominated Heir may fairly enter upon the Possessions. For the Flaw which the Civil Ordinances supposed upon defect of Formalities, doth in this Case vanish; (it being taken for granted that the Testator seriously design'd this Person for his Heir;) and really the Goods belong to him rather than to any others, after those who according to the general Course of the Law, would have succeeded by Birth, acquiesce in his Claim, and tacitly wave their own Right. Because a serious Purpose not declared with due Solemnity is so far only adjudg'd by the Civil Laws insufficient to transfer Right, as it seems to require that others should be excluded, who might challenge a Right to the same thing upon another Bottom.

Therefore, if the Business be not brought into Court, the want of those Solemn Forms requir'd by positive Statutes, doth not in the least affect or impair it, provided it have all Conditions besides, which otherwise, and according to the General Law of Nature, are sufficient to constitute a Right. So that the Failure in point of Form, seems to prejudice the Heir by Will only, if he is oppos'd by those whom the Law would have advanc'd to the Succession, in case the Party had died without Will. But when these are silent, and forbear to plead their Title, then for the Testator to have any way signified in earnest whom he intended for his Heir, is judg'd sufficient to transfer the Property. And this some Nations which were either unacquainted, or disgusted with the scrupulous Exactness of the Roman Law, have thought enough to make a Will perfectly Valid. After all, 'tis certain beyond Dispute, that they who receive any thing by Virtue of a Will which they know to be forg'd, are really guilty of a Sin, though they were not themselves concern'd in the Cheat (a). For, in the first place, the Testator did not intend that his Goods should come to them; and then, the same Goods were already assign'd by the Laws to others, upon the not appearing of any Legal Testament of the Deceas'd.

VIII. Nor, (as to the Second Question;) doth the Heir at Law, by overthrowing such a defective Will, whatever assurance he may have that 'twas the serious Intention of the Deceas'd, properly do any Injury, either to the Testator himself, or to the Testamentary Heir. Not to the former, because he had no Right of bestowing his Goods by his last Disposal on any others than the Natural Heirs, unless he had observed the Form prescribed by the Laws of his Country. Not to the latter; because no Right which shall hold good against the Natural Heirs can be conferr'd on him in any other way than by a Testament fram'd as the Civil Constitutions direct. Nevertheless, Persons who have courted the Fame of extraordinary Humanity, have thought it more generous to stick close to the Will of the Deceas'd though not exactly express'd according to the Forms of Law; either to avoid the Imputation of Avarice, or because Tender and Compassionate Minds are so sensibly affected with the Thoughts of Death, as not to suffer that what a Man intended for his Last Appointment should be intended in vain (b). He that will follow this Example, ought certainly to be applauded for a Noble and Bountiful Spirit. For the same Reason, those who desire the Character of great Benevolence, are careful to perform the Last Commands or Requests of their Relations or Friends, though somewhat burthenfome to themselves. On which occasion we may take notice of that Irregular Will in Lucian, (a) Where a poor Man bequeaths to one of his Rich Friends his Mother to keep, and to another his Daughter to match her off, and to give her a Portion. Yet still on the other hand, he is not to be censur'd, who doth not refuse an Advantage allow'd him by the Laws of his Country.

(a) Hence Tully justly censures the Act of M. Crassus & Q. Hortensius, who in the Case of a Forged Will, because they were not conscious to themselves of any Share in the Cheat, did not refuse a Share in the Advantage. De Offic. l. 3. c. 18. Add. Valer. Max. l. 9. c. 4. f. 1. (b) Plin. L. 4. Epist. 10. You are wont most religiously to observe the Wills of the Deceas'd; the bare understanding of which (however it be express'd) is to a good Executor the same as the nicest Form of Law. Idem l. 2. Epist. 16. I have fix'd it as a kind of Private and peculiar Law to my self, to defend a Will as Perfect, though deficient in some Legal Point. Idem l. 5. Epist. 7. This Testament, if you regard the Law, is null; but if you consider the Intention of the Deceas'd, is firm and valid. As for my part (though I fear the Men of my own Profession will not relish very well such a Declaration) I am more sway'd by the Testator's Intention, than by any exactness of Law.

The Questions which remain are to be determin'd by the Customs and Ordinances of particular States (1): As how far a Man may be authoriz'd to divide his Estate amongst many, either all Co-heirs, or some Heirs, and others Legatees. As likewise, Whether an Inheritance passeth down with a full conveyance of Right; or whether under the Nature and Burthen of a Trust? On which Points the Civilians discourse at large (2). But this the Law of Nature manifestly requires, That the Burthens and Debts incumbring an Estate, shall lie on the Heir, (3) by whatever Means he succeeds: Yet not beyond the Value of the Inheritance, nor so as that he should be bound to make up the Deficiency out of his own Separate Fortunes, unless he hath laid a particular Obligation on himself to that purpose.

IX. We usually distinguish from Testaments, Donations in Case of Death; (4) by which both Parties living and consenting, one transfers on the other a Right to his Goods, if he chance to die. Of these there seem to be Two kinds especially remarkable.

One, (5) When a Man conceiving himself to be under a probability of Mortal Danger, so grants a Thing to another as not to make it his immediately upon his acceptance, but only if the Danger really proves Mortal as he expects: Or, when a Man makes his own Death, which he apprehends to be near on account of the present Danger, the Condition of his Grant; so that if he escape the Danger, the Grant is void (b). The other, When any Person makes over to another his Possessions after his Death, reserving to himself in the mean time, the Possession, and the full Use and Profits; but in such a manner, that the Donation shall, before his Death, be revocable on some particular Cause; as if the other party should afterwards offer him some signal Injury; or if he himself, being Childless when the Grant was made, shall afterwards have Issue of his own.

But, If the Donor made his Grant reversible, not on any External Condition, but meerly of his own Pleasure, then the Grantee shall acquire no Right, so long as the Donor retains a Natural Ability to change his Mind; that is, so long as he continues Master of his Reason. For, as on the one side, he is not under any Obligation, who may release himself when he plealeth, without any Payment or Performance; so on the other side, a bare Hope, which may be taken away purely at another's Fancy, cannot come under the Name of Right. The Right therefore of the Grantee shall commence only upon the Donor's Decease; and consequently this Act approacheth near to the Case of a Testament, strictly so call'd.

But, when a Person moved with the Thoughts of any Danger which threatens his Life, so grants a Thing, as to make it immediately upon acceptance, belong to the other Party, and doth not recall it, upon escaping the Danger, then the Promise shall be rather put in the Class of Ordinary Donation, or such as are made without any regard to Death. (6) Though in case the Grant was very large, and such as will weaken the Donor's Estate, much more if it comprehend the whole Possession, it shall be presum'd to have been made only upon his present Prospect of Death, and not to hold good unless he so miscarried.

That kind of Grant likewise, by which a Man transfers Property on Another, without the Power of retracting, yet so as to enjoy the Use and Property during his own Life, is to be reckon'd amongst the Ordinary Donations, or such as are made between Living Parties.

(a) In Toxar. p. 47. t. 2. Ed. Amst. (1) See Mr. Daumat's 2d part des Loix Civiles dans leur Ordre Naturel. See D. B. XXVIII. to the 39th, and the Institutes B. II. from Title the 10th, to the End. (2) Vid. Instit. Lib. 2. t. 23, 24. D. L. 36. t. 1. Ad Senatus consult. Trebellian. (3) See the next Chap. the last Section. (4) Vid. Instit. L. 2. t. 7. f. 1.

(5) Vid. D. Lib. 39. t. 6. De Mortis Causa donation. &c. Leg. 2. (b) See an Example in Homere, Odyss. Lib. 17. v. 78, &c. It may not be altogether improper to rank under the same Head the Act of King Philip, in Livy (l. 32. c. 38.) who finding himself under a necessity of engaging with the Romans in Battle, delivered the City Argos to Nabis, as 'twere to hold in trust; to be restored in case he got the Victory, but to be kept if he proved Unfortunate.

Add. Diodor. Sic. l. 15. c. 19. p. 341. C. Ed. Rhodom. Where he speaks of Amyntas his Gift to the Olynthians.

Thus Hercules speaks in Euripides (Alcest. v. 1020. &c.)

With you I leave the Dame, to be restor'd
When I return and lead in Triumph home
The Thracian Steeds, when first the Tyrant's Fate
This Hand hath seal'd. But if my Wishes fail (Which Heaven avert!) then keep her as Your own:
Add a new Honour to Your Family.

(6) In the Roman Laws this passes for a Donation in Case of Death. See the above-cited places in the Digest.

CHAP. XI.

Of Succession to Persons who Die Intestate.

According to the disposal of the Law of Nature, without any particular express Act of the former Lord, the Properties of things are said to pass in Successions to Intestates. For Property having been at first endued with such a Force and Power, as that by virtue of it, a Man was enabled not only to do what he pleas'd with his Goods during his own Life, but likewise effectually to transfer them upon others after his Death; it did not seem probable that if a Person was found to have made no settlement of his Goods whilst he lived, he was therefore willing they should after his Death become, as it were derelict, and lie free to any that would take possession of them (a). In this Case then, Natural Reason suggested, That Men ought to follow the Presum'd Will of the Deceas'd, or such a disposal as he might most probably be suppos'd to have design'd. Now in doubtful matters every one is suppos'd to have design'd that, which is most agreeable both to his Natural Inclination, and to the Engagements of his Duty (b).

II. The Regular Course of Natural Inclination is this, That we should labour to make the most plentiful Provision for those who descend from our own Body, and next to these for the rest who are allied to us in the degrees of Consanguinity: For nearness of Blood commonly unites and engageth Mens Minds in a particular Affection; and almost all Persons have this Desire implanted in them, that they especially wish well to their own Families, and would have them succeed and flourish as much as possible.

As to Natural Duties, one of the chief of them is, That we take due care for the maintenance of those, whom Nature hath enjoin'd us to cherish with a peculiar concern and regard; as likewise, that we shew our selves grateful towards our Benefactors.

Now although it might so happen that these Presumptions should often vary from the Real Intention of the Deceas'd, yet the Peace and Tranquillity of Mankind required, That no particular Conjectures should be easily admitted against these Common Rules; since by this means a Door would be opened to endless Contentions. And therefore the present Affair in the Intentions of the Deceas'd is considered, not so much according to what it was, as according to what it ought to have been, and agreeably to the Rules of Duty. Amongst which one of the first Rank is this; That no Man give occasion to Ruptures and Quarrels amongst others Hence it is expedient for the Common Peace, that some General Method should be follow'd in this Business, though the Intention of some few should happen to be neglected, rather than that by endeavouring to satisfy the Desire of every private Person, we should involve our selves and others in endless Difficulties.

Besides, He who would have his own particular Purpose absolutely obey'd, ought to have expressly signified thus much. Thus nothing is more usual, than for a Father to love one of his Children with a more ardent Affection than the rest: And then who doubts but he is willing an extraordinary Provision should be made for his Darling's Subsistence? Yet if he die Intestate, they shall divide the Inheritance by equal shares; not as if 'twere repugnant to the Law of Nature, to allot one Child a larger Portion than another, but because there would arise infinite Disputes in Families, if the Father's Affection were to be the Measure of parcelling out Estates. The same Inconvenience would follow, if a Man dying Childless should leave several Brothers, to whom he express'd very different degrees of kindness in his Life time.

Again, 'Tis no uncommon Thing for a Man at his Decease to leave behind him a Kinsman in some remote degree, for whom he had never any particular Passion, and to whom he was never oblig'd for any Service or Favour; whereas, on the other side, he may have ow'd all his Fortunes to the Kindness of a Stranger. Who will not say, That the Deceas'd set a much greater Value on his Benefactor, in this Case, than on his Relation? yet because to enter into a Comparison between the Ties of Blood, and of Gratitude, must have occasion'd many Controversies difficult to be resolv'd, it hath been the Judgment of all Nations, that in the Case of Intestates, a Kinsman shall be prefer'd to a Patron, or Benefactor. Especially, since if a Person on account of a Kindness bestow'd, were to stand in the Roll of Inheritance, before the Relations of the Deceas'd, he might seem to have performed the former Act more as a Usurer, than as a Friend. But if the Benefactor were preferred in the Express Will of the Deceas'd, 'tis but Equity that the said Will should be obeyed.

From all which it appears, that Natural Reason in deciding the Case of Succession, upon default of Testamentary Disposals, re(a) Pindar Olymp. Od. 10.

ΠΑΥΤΕ ὁ λαχὼν ποιμένα, &c.

Those Riches grieve the Dying Man
Which Strangers Hands must seize

(b) Comp. Grof. l. 2. c. 7. Sect. 3.

gards the Intention of the Deceas'd Party, not as it was strictly in it self, concerning which there is often very little assurance; but according as it agrees with the Common Inclinations of Mankind, and with the Measures of Duty, and so as that no Fuel may be administered to Controversies and Contentions (a).

This Judgment of Natural Reason is seconded in all States by Civil Ordinances; as well that the Avarice of some Persons might not stir up desperate Quarrels amongst those who seem'd to have equal Reason on their side; as that this whole Affair might be wisely accommodated to the publick Safety.

III. In the Succession, therefore to Intestates, by the guidance of Reason, and by the consent of all the known Kingdoms, Children have the preference of all others, even of Parents themselves (b). That which so highly favours the Childrens Claim is, not only the Obligation laid by Nature on their Parents, to provide for their Maintenance and good Institution, but likewise that strong and vehement Affection, which can only be extinguish'd, (and that very rarely) either by the Enormous Wickedness of the Children, or by the unusual Barbarity of the Parents.

IV. As to that Maintenance, which Parents owe their Children, it hath been doubted by Authors, whether the Obligation to pay it, were Perfect or Imperfect, or whether it belong'd to Expletive or to Attributive Justice (c). 'Tis the Opinion of some, That Parents do indeed owe their Children Maintenance, but then 'tis by the latter kind of Justice only, and not by the former; so that Parents would act very inhumanly should they deny them this Assistance; yet Children have no Right to challenge it from them against their Wills, this being the proper Effect of Expletive Justice: though Civil Statutes may invest Children with a full and perfect Right in this Matter. But we are rather inclined to think, That Parents lie under a perfect Obligation to maintain their Children, so long as they are unable to maintain themselves; and this Duty seems to be laid upon them, not only by Nature it self, but by their own Proper Act, in bringing them into the World. For they would be in the highest manner injurious to their Issue, should they have given the Children Life, for no other Reason, but that they might afterwards see them perish. By the Act of Generation therefore they seem to have voluntarily bound themselves, to endeavour as far as in them lies, that the Life which they have bestow'd shall be supported and preserved. And thus the Children will have a Perfect Right of receiving Maintenance from their Parents. Yet this Right is hindred from producing all its Effects by the Natural Weakness of Children under that Age in which they cannot provide for their own Support. And consequently they do not so much want Right as Power and Strength to execute that Right; only in some Points the Civil Ordinances help them out, and compel their Parents to keep and feed them, upon refusal. Though through the Wise Ordering of the Creator, the Natural Affection of Parents is of so great force, as that commonly speaking, they joyfully undertake and discharge their Duty, without the compulsion of the Civil Government.

V. Not only those things which are necessary for the preservation of Natural Life fall under the Term of Maintenance or Alimony, but those likewise which fit and prepare a Man for a Social and Civil Life. And the former are due 'till such time as the Children are able to support themselves by their own Industry. As for the Measure of what ought to be spent on Education, in training up Children for a Civil Life, it is to be Stated according to the Fortunes of the Parents, and the Genius and Capacity of the Children. Thus much at least is required, That they be enabled to become Honest and Useful Members of Human Society. But this is a General Rule in the whole Affair; That as Nature doth not command Parents to pinch and defraud their own Inclinations, and to make themselves miserable for the sake of their Issue; so a Parent plac'd in a high and wealthy Condition, is no doubt, in fault, if he do not take care that his Children be brought up after the most Exact and Accomplish'd Manner of Institution.

VI. Under the General Name of Children (1) are comprehended not only those of the First degree, but those too of the Second, &c.

(a) Add. Bæcler, ad Grot. l. 2. c. 7. f. 13. (b) See 2 Corinth. XII. 14. Rom. VIII. 17. If Children, then Heirs. Aristot. Nicom. VIII. 14.

Parents have a more certain knowledge that such Persons are their Children, than Children can have that such are their Parents. And in this Case there seems to commence a stronger Relation from the Cause to the Effect, than from the Effect to the Cause.

Isæus, Orat. V.

The Law it self assigns over to the Son the Goods of the Father, and allows not him to make a contrary Will who hath Legitimate Issue. Idem Orat. II. If a Man deceasing leave Daughters lawfully begotten, he can give away nothing, nor make any disposal without their Consent. And again, a little after, The Law says, a Man shall dispose of his Goods at his own pleasure, if he leave no Legitimate Sons; but if he leave Daughters, their pleasure is to determine his Disposal, and not his own. Therefore with their Daughters Consent, they may give and bequeath, or appoint any method of Succession. But without such Approbation, they cannot adopt an Heir, or put their Fortunes into other Hands.

Add. Lib. 48. t. 20. Leg. 7. Princip. D. de bonis damnator.

Julian in Cesarib. It is the Legal Custom to let the Sons succeed to what the Fathers possess; and this is a Rule which we all desire to see observed.

Thus Valerius Maximus observes (L. 7. c. 7. Sect. 2.) that the procreacionis vinculum, the Band of Generation, is the strongest and closest Tye which can affect Mankind.

(c) Vid. Grot. dict. loc. Sect. 4.

(1) Vid. D. Lib. 50. t. 16. De verbor. significat. Leg. 220. & Instit. Lib. 1. t. 14. Qui testamento tutores dari possunt; Leg. 5.

whether descending from Sons or Daughters; in case their nearer and more Proper Parents are not able to maintain them (a).

Farther, Maintenance is due not to Legitimate Children alone; but to Natural, (1) and even to Incestuous Issue. For what reason is there that the Poor Innocent Infant should be suffer'd to famish for another's Sin? Yet if the latter be left together with the Legitimate Issue, they shall not easily challenge to be admitted to equal Shares, unless the Parents made express Declaration to this purpose (b).

In respect of these several parts of Maintenance, upon the Parent's Decease during the Minority of the Children, the Inheritance is not only theirs if he died Intestate, but farther, it cannot rightly be taken from them by his Express Will so far as is necessary for the obtaining this End. For it doth not seem probable that a Child of these Years should be capable of committing any such Offence as might render him unworthy of so needful a Support (c).

VII. Whatever exceeds this Proportion of Maintenance, is due to the Children when able to provide for themselves, not so much by any express Command of the Law of Nature, as upon this Principle, that commonly speaking, Parents desire that none should fare better than their own Descendants. Therefore 'twas a very singular Disposal, that of Crates the Theban, who lodg'd his Money in the Hands of the Bankers upon these Terms, That if his Children proved Ignorant, it should be restored to them; but if they happen'd to be Philosophers, it should be distributed amongst the common People; because Men of that Profession could be in want of nothing (d). As to what some have advanced, That Parents get all for the sake of their Children, and therefore the Children, even in the Parent's Life-time, have such a Right to their Goods, as shall be valued against them, in other Cases, beyond the Necessaries of Maintenance; this is absolutely false: For, every Man in his Gettings hath first of all an Eye to himself, and labours chiefly on his own Account (e); but what remains above his Private Necessaries, he is willing should pass to those who are dearest to him, as commonly, his Children are presum'd to be (f). And Children have thus far only a peculiar Title to hope for their Parent's Estate, as that in case of no express Will to the contrary, their Claim is pre-ferr'd to all others; and because it very rarely happens, that Parents are induc'd to lay aside this Ordinary Affection (g).

It is well enacted by the Roman Laws, That every Parent who dis-inherits his Child, shall be oblig'd expressly to give his Reason for so doing; and that some certain Causes only shall be sufficient to justify him in this Proceeding. Nay farther, the same Laws gave the dis-inherited Children an Action, de inofficiso Testamento; Of a Will not made according to Natural Affection and Duty. The Design of which was not to bring into dispute, Whether or no the Testator had a Power of transmitting his Goods to others, rather than to his Children, upon just Causes; but to discuss and examine the Reasons which mov'd the Deceas'd to make a Settlement contrary to the common Inclinations of Mankind. And if, upon such a Hearing, it was discover'd that the Father thus neglected his Issue, either through his own absurd Fancy and Humour, or through the fraudulent Intrusion of others, the Inheritance was by publick Authority avowed to those to whom it would otherwise have descended, had the Father consulted with Reason and Conscience in his last Disposal. And therefore Cicero (h) well replies upon Erucius, who charg'd his Client Roscius with a Design to dis-inherit his own Son, It ought to have been the Business of the Accuser, to lay open all the Sins and Vices of the Young Man, which might be suppos'd able to incense the Father to such a height, as that he should once entertain a Resolution of doing Violence to Nature it self, of banishing that Affection which was so deeply rooted in his Mind; and, in a word, of forgetting utterly that he was a Father (i). 'Tis remarkable under what Colour the dis-inherited Children, by the same Laws, mov'd for Relief: For it being necessary that they should ground their Complaint on a Supposition that the Cause of their Dis-inheritance was unjust, they pretended in the Form of the Action, That their Parents at the time of making such a Will had lost the use of their Reason (k).

Still, as to other matters, a Father ought so to favour his Children as not to lay aside his just Regard to other Duties. Hence, when he may be judg'd to have made sufficient Provision for his own Family, he is not in the least hindered from employing his Goods in Acts of Gratitude and Liberality, tho' to the lessening of his Children's Fortunes. Thus, in case a Man

(a) Vid. lib. 6. t. 61. leg. 8. f. 5. C. de bonis quæ liberis adquir. Vid. D. de agnosc. & alend. liberis, lib. 25. t. 3. leg. 5. f. 8. (1) See Mr. Barbeyrac's Third Note upon this Section. (b) Vid. Gen. XXI. 10. XLIX. 19, 20. Judges IX. 18. XI. 1, 2. Add. Bœcler ad Grot. dist. loc. f. 4. (c) Add. lib. 5. t. 1. 27. f. 3. D. de inoffic. testam. (d) Diogen. Laert. l. 6. f. 88. Ed. Amst. (e) Horat. lib. 2. Epist. 2. v. 190, &c.

Utar, & ex modico, quantum res poscet, acervo
Tollam, nec metuum quid de me judicet hæres,
Quod non plura datis invenerit.

Juvenal. Sat. 14. ————— Manifesta phrenensis
Ut locuples moriaris egenti vivere fato.

(f) Vid. Nicephor. Gregor. l. 5. sub fin. (g) Nor can we, farther than this, admit of Law, the 11th of B. 28. t. 2. D. de liberis & posth. (h) Pro Sext. Rosc. c. 19. (i) Add. l. 2. t. 18. Instit. & l. 5. t. 2. D. (k) Vid. Mornac. 3d. d. 1. 2 & 4, & Grot. in for. spars. ad d. 1.

hath either receiv'd extraordinary Kindnesses from another, or is able by a seasonable Beneficence to put some great Genius, now struggling with Poverty, into a way of doing great Service; what reason is there but that he should be allow'd to devise some part of his Goods to such excellent Uses? It's plain, Antiquity highly celebrated the Action of King Attalus, who having been oblig'd by his Brother Eumenes with very singular Favours, left his Kingdom to Eumenes's Son, tho' he abounded in Male Issue of his own (a).

VIII. Neither doth a Father lie under any Necessity of dividing his Goods amongst his Children in equal Shares; but he may assign to one or two somewhat above the rest, as an extraordinary Bounty; either on account of singular Merit, or of great and illustrious Hopes, or even of particular Affection (b). So likewise in distributing Portions, a just regard may be had to the Credit of the Family, that it may hereafter retain its Strength and Splendor. If this Interest cannot be secur'd upon an equal Division of the Patrimony between many Children, the Father may without any Breach of the Law of Nature, devise the chief part of his Goods to one, and command the rest to sit down contented with smaller Portions. Hence the Rights of Primogeniture obtain'd among many Nations, which according to the most ancient Institution, conferr'd on the Eldest Son the Regal Government of the Family, the Domestical Priesthood (1), and double Share of what his Father possessed. Which double Proportion was design'd to defray the Charge of Entertainments, and of Religious Ceremonies; as Grotius conceives (c) (2).

On the contrary there have not been wanting Nations, where the Younger Brother succeeded to the largest Share of the Inheritance, or at least have their Option, to chuse what part they like. Which Custom is built on this Principle, That the Elder Brothers have for a long time enjoy'd the Benefit of Education from their Parents; of which the Younger being often depriv'd by too untimely a Loss, they deserve some Consideration to requite and comfort them under their Disadvantage.

Tho' the latter of these Institutions seems more agreeable to low and mean Families, the former to the Great and Noble.

So again, When Daughters marry into other Families, 'tis not necessary that they should receive Fortunes out of their Father's Estate equal to their Brother's Shares. For 'tis a very foolish Argument, to imagine, that a Father must needs act contrary to his Duty, in making an unequal Distribution of his Goods amongst those whom he hath equally begotten. Therefore Pliny (d) speaking of a Lady who had left Two Thirds of her Estate to a Nephew, and but One Third to a Niece, calls it Honestissimum Testamentum, A most honest and worthy Testament.

And hence too, it may be appointed not only by Statute, but by bare Covenant likewise, That Children born in Concubinage, or in such Marriage as is construed good and just only in a Natural Sense, not in the Eye of the Law, shall claim no more than necessary Maintenance, or at least shall be excluded from the main Inheritance (e).

And here, by the way, we cannot but wonder why St. Austin (f) should pass so severe a Censure on the Voconian Law, by which Female Issues were incapacitated to receive in Inheritance above such a certain Sum. It's plain the Spartan Law was far more grievous, which utterly forbid the giving Portions to Virgins; for this Reason, as Plutarch tells us; (g) Lest some should remain unmarried for want of larger Fortunes; and others again be courted for their Riches; but that every Man in seeking out a Partner for himself, should look wholly into the Manners of the Woman, and make Virtue alone the Rule and Standard of his Choice. Nevertheless, this is a Point which requires great Caution and Prudence, lest a Father should sow the Seeds of Envy and Hatred amongst his Children, if, without very weighty Cause, he should seem to have treated with unequal Favour those who were equal in Merit and Degree (h). And the Divine Law of Deut. 21. 17. is grounded on the strongest Reason; lest the Father charm'd with the Enticements of his now beloved Wife, should either frame a false Cause for discarding the First Born, the Son of a former hated one; or should catch at every little Failing to his disadvantage. 'Tis indeed altogether the safest course, not to recede in this Matter from the direction and disposal of the Laws of our Country (i). (3) Which made my Lord Bacon (k) observe, That Younger Brothers, though otherwise commonly Fortunate, are seldom or never so, where the Elder are disinherited.

Hence it is, that in Case the Father Die Intestate, and the Laws of the Land ordain no-

(a) As we find the Story in Plutarch, de fratern. amor. & in Apothegm. The like Instance we read in Hieron Orosius de gest. reg. Emanuel. l. 4. p. 117. (b) See Gen. XLVIII. 22. (1) It is not certain that Priesthood was a Right of Primogeniture. See Mr. Le Clerc on Gen. XXV. 31. (c) Add Deut. XXI. 17. Of the extraordinary Prerogative of the First-born amongst the Japense. See Bern. Varen. Descript. Japon. c. 15.
 (2) In locum Deut. cit. (d) L. 7. Ep. 24. (e) Vid. Grot. lib. 2. c. 7. f. 8. sub. fin. & Boecler ad d. l.
 (f) De Civit. Dei. l. 3. c. 31. His Words are, ea lege quid iniquius dici aut cogitari possit, ignoro. I know not what could be said or thought of, more unjust than that Law. The Law he speaks of was made at the motion of Cato the Censor, and Enacted, That none should leave a Daughter above five and twenty thousand Sesterces in Inheritance: as Paulus Manutius (de L.L. Rom.) shew'd from Dio. Cass. l. 56. Though Asconius Padianus, (ad Orat. Cicer. in Verrem de prætura vrb.) reports the Thing thus: Voconius prefer'd a Law, That no Census, i. e. no very Rich Person should make his Daughter his Heiress. He had said before, the Ancients call'd those Persons Censu, who own'd themselves before the Censor to be worth an Hundred thousand Sesterces. Add Liv. Epit. l. 41. Quintil. Declam. 264. Gell. l. 7. 13. 17. 6.
 (g) Apoth. Lacon. 227, 228. Ed. Wech. (h) See Gen. XXXVII. 4. (i) Vid. Charron de la Sageffe, l. 3. c. 14. n. 38. Montaigne's Ess. l. 2. c. 8. (3) See Mr. Barbeyrac's 3d Note upon this Sect. (k) Essay 7. towards the End.

thing to the contrary, Children succeed to the Inheritance, with equal Shares: Because, when the Point is doubtful, those who stand related to the Deceas'd in an Equal Degree, are presum'd to have been equally beloved. Now those likewise are accounted Equal Shares, which though not strictly so, because inferior, perhaps, in value to the rest, yet have been taken by any one of the Co-heirs, either by his own choice, with the consent of his Fellows, or by their Assignation, or by the Decision of Lots (a).

IX. But we are obliged to add on this Subject, that not only the Laws of particular States, but Natural Reason it self allows more favour to Legitimate than to Natural Children; though the latter partake no less of the Father's Blood than the former. For they who owe their Birth to a Man's Irregular Lust, without any serious Intention, can on no account enter into comparison with those who were begotten for the increase and defence of his Family, and upon the desire of having Heirs to succeed him. But if any Person is inclined to advance a Natural Son to the Station and the Rights of Legitimate Issue, in a State of Nature he may fairly do it after he hath once taken care that no Injury shall thereby accrue to his Children who are properly Legitimate, or to any who have obtain'd the next Right after them: Under Civil Government he must proceed in the Affair as the Laws permit and direct (b). Aristophanes (c) reports, it was one of Solon's Laws, That upon failure of Legitimate Offspring, the Inheritance shall be shared by the next of kin: But that a Bastard shall not be deem'd next of Kin, nor any Relation be supposed between him and the proper Sons (1). On the contrary, amongst the Mahometans, as to the point of sharing the Father's Estate, there is no difference observed between the Sons of the Wife, the Concubine, or the Servant Maid.

When a Man is desirous to raise Issue rather by a Concubine who hath engag'd her self to be true to his Bed, than by a Proper Wife, for the benefit of his Children by a former Marriage, the Sons of the Concubine, shall, even without (2) any express Will of the Father, be postpon'd; and upon receiving moderate Portions, shall leave the main Inheritance to the others. Yet in Case a Man hath therefore taken a Concubine, that he might avoid the Pride or the Expences of a Wife, or will not admit her to his Name and Honour, or for some other Political Reasons, or on account of some Covenant or Obligation which he lies under; then the Publick Ordinances of the Common-wealth are to determine, whether such Children shall be admitted to an equality with others born in Lawful Wedlock; or whether, upon failure of these, they shall exclude the next of Kin. For if the Man were absolutely free from the Restraint of Positive Laws, I see nothing that could be offer'd in prejudice of the Concubinary Issue, in this Case; since the Cohabiting of their Father and Mother amounted in Natural Consideration, to a True Marriage: Especially if the Father in the Business of their Education, and in his Actions and Expressions of Affection towards them, hath never made any distinction. Hence I should be of Opinion, that Jacob's Sons born of his Handmaids, should have succeeded to equal Shares with the rest, even upon supposition that their Father had made no such express Disposal; because we do not find that he ever treated them in a different manner. But still, if the Father shall particularly declare, That he refuseth to enter into solemn Marriage, for this Reason, That what he hath may descend to the nearest of his Collateral Kindred, (as some Political Considerations may now and then move a Man to do,) then even the Concubinary Children in the fairest Case shall be allow'd to claim no more out of the Estate, than a bare Maintenance, or whatever the Will of their Father, or the Laws of the Land assign them more (d).

As the bare Law of Nature knows no difference of Rank and Degree, so according to that, 'tis the same Thing whether a Man have Issue by a Wife of a more Illustrious, or of a more Obscure Condition, provided she is honestly betroth'd to him. If therefore in any Place the Children of a less Noble Mother are allow'd less Priviledge and Favour, this is wholly owing to Positive Constitutions. Which likewise as they may upon account of some Reasons of State postpone the Concubinary to the Legitimate Race, and not admit them with the Ascending Line upon failure of the Descending: So they can scarce in Equity, utterly exclude them, if there was no Original Fault in the Act of Generation. But then these are by all means to be distinguish'd from Children begotten in a way Naturally Sinful, as in Adultery or Incest: Who how clear soever they may be of any share in their Parents Guilt (e), yet shall on account of it be obliged to rest

(a) Quintilian's Observation (Declam. 5. p. 65, 66. Edit. Lugd. Bat.) is not unworthy our Remark. We have the same Natural Affection towards all our Children, without any difference or degree; yet, taking any one of them by themselves, we commonly find some peculiar Reason for our fondness, and without breaking the equality of their Endearment to us, there is somewhat again which by a tacit Instinct of the Mind engageth us to set our Love deeply upon each in particular, as if he were the only Object of it. One is recommended by his precedency in Birth; another by the Innocence of Infancy; a third by a Sweet Aspect, and a Face that invites a Kiss: Some are especially valued for their Honest Gravity, and Severe Plainness of Temper: In some we love their very Misfortunes and Calamities, and embrace with a peculiar pity a Maim'd Limb, or a Weak and Distemper'd Body. But still the General Equality holds good; whilst whatsoever any of them seems to want to render him amiable in one respect, is made up to him by some other advantage above the rest.

(b) Vid. lib. 5. t. 27. l. 6 & 7. C. de Natural. lib. (c) In Avibus. (1) See Dr. Potter's Antiquities of Greece, B. IV. c. 15. (2) In all the Editions of the Original 'tis quite contrary, the Word Sine being omitted.

(d) Add Baclar ad Grat. d. l. Sect. 8.

(e) Vid. Gratian c. 3. &c. Distinct. 56.

satisfy'd with Maintenance only, and shall not be admitted with the other Children, who were begotten on the hope and prospect of inheriting their Father's Possessions. But the Parties could entertain no such hope of raising Heirs, when they concurr'd in these Impurities; since they wish that their Sin may perpetually lay conceal'd rather than be the means of producing those who should, as it were, bear Publick Testimony to the Shame and the Wickedness of their Parents.

X. Grotius (a) farther remarks, that there are Two more Conditions still required in the Succession to Intestate, That the Children appear to have been really begotten by him whose Estate they claim, and that there be no Tokens extant of a contrary Will. For no Man shews a Fatherly Affection for Children begotten by others; and a Presum'd Will must always give place, when contradicted by an Express Declaration and Disposal. As to the first of these Conditions; That such a Person was the Father of another, cannot always be either demonstrated by indubitable Arguments, or so clearly made out by Testimony, as in the Mother's Case; especially, where Women live under no other Guard or Restraint besides their own Modesty and Conscience: The main Proof therefore in this Point is, the certainty of Marriage; by which Union the Wife both engageth her Faith, to be true to her Husband's Bed, and likewise is plac'd as it were under his Inspection, he at the same time receiving a Power over her Body. Now all Persons are presum'd both to observe the Faith they have engag'd, and to exercise the Power they have receiv'd, unless there be direct and manifest Evidence of the contrary. So that every one seems to be, as it were, in possession of this Right, that he shall be deem'd the Son of him who appears to be join'd in Marriage with his Mother (b). And no Man, unless he is out of his Wits, will disturb himself in this Possession, and accuse his Mother of Adultery, for the sake of finding a new Sire (c). If others attempt to bring this Matter into dispute, it shall be incumbent on them to prove their Charge: As, for Instance, That the Pretended Father at the time of the Conception was disabled by Sickness, or was absent in a distant Country (d).

XI. As to the Second Condition, it is judg'd another Exception against a Son's succeeding to an Intestate Father, if it appear that his Father hath expressly desired and declared the contrary: As, suppose, if he hath either abandon'd (as was usual amongst the Ancient Greeks;) or dis-inherited him, as 'twas a Custom among the Romans (1).

We have before intimated, that very great and weighty Causes are requir'd to justify either of these Proceedings (e). Grotius adds, That Sustenance is Still to be allow'd to the Abandon'd or Dis-inherited Son, unless his Crime deserv'd Death. Though I can hardly see how it is possible that a Son during those Years of Minority in which his Father Naturally owes him Sustenance, can be guilty of such an Offence, as shall deserve either Capital Punishment or Dis-herison.

XII. On the Proposition which we before advanced, That Parents are oblig'd to afford Sustenance to their Children, not only of the first, but of farther Degrees, in case their Proper Parents who ought to perform this Office are extinct, is chiefly founded the Equity of that Right term'd, The Right of Representation; by virtue of which, (f) Children are suppos'd to fill the Place of their Deceas'd Father, so as to be allow'd the same share in the Family Inheritance, as their Father, were he now living, would receive; and consequently to succeed on the level (2) with those who stand in their Father's Degree. And it would indeed be a lamentable Misfortune, if besides the untimely loss of their Father, they should farther be deprived of those Possessions, which either the Rule of the Law, or the Design of their Progenitors had given their Parents just hopes of enjoying (g). But if in any Place the Civil Constitutions will not admit of this Representative Right, the Children who have been so unhappily bereav'd of their Father and of their Hopes, must endeavour to bear the Calamity as an Affliction which Providence hath laid upon them.

XIII. Upon failure of Issue in the first, and the other descending Degrees, (3) Reason suggested that Inheritance ought to turn back into the Line of Ascendants; as well in consideration that, for the most part, either the Possessions themselves, or at least, the first Seeds and Principles of them which the Children afterwards increas'd, proceed from the Parents, as because their Extraordinary Benefits give them an especial Title to this Reward: Who since they would much rather have desired, That their Children should inherit their Fortunes, yet when they survived them, contrary to the ordinary course of Nature, 'twas but equitable they should receive, however, this Melancholy

(a) Dist. loc. Sect. 8. (b) Lib. 2. t. 4. leg. 5. D. de in jus vocando. (c) Tacit. Hist. 4. 55. Julius Sabinus, with his Natural Vanity, was strangely exalted by ascribing to himself the Glory of a False Original; Pretending that his Great-Grandmother had been very nearly acquainted with Julius Cæsar in his Gallick Expedition.

Jupiter aut falsus pater est, aut crimine verus.
Jove's a False Father, or in Sin a True.

(d) In Xenophon (Hist. Græc. l. 3 p. 289. Ed. H. Steph.) Agelaus endeavours to prove Leotychides Illegitimate upon these Reasons; That his Father had some time disown'd him; that he exceeded his Father in Comeliness of Body; that he was born Ten Months after the parting of his Father and Mother; that his Father Agis had expelled his Mother from the Royal Bed. (1) See Bæcler upon Grot. in the place above cited, Sect. 7. (e) Antenor (in Distys Græc. l. 3. c. 26.) resolv'd to banish his Son Glaucus from his Family, for making one of Paris's Company, at the stealing of Helen. (f) Vid. Lib. 1. t. 6. l. 7. D. de his qui sui vel alien. jur. sunt. l. 2. f. 7. D. de excus. tutor. (2) See Mr. Barbeyrac's 2d Note on this Sect. (g) Add. Bæcler ad Grot. d. l. Sect. 6. (3) Vid. Grot. L. 1. c. 7. f. 5. liq. Ziegler.

Comfort, of succeeding to what the Children possess'd. 'Tis a Condition (as Pliny (a) observes) abundantly unhappy, for a Father to be the sole Heir of his own Son.

Philo the Jew, (b) reporting, That Moses establish'd this Order of Inheritance, That the Sons should stand first, the Daughters next, then the Brothers, and in the fourth place the Uncles by the Father's side; useth this as an Argument to prove, that Fathers likewise may inherit what their Sons leave behind; For 'twould be senseless (says he) to imagine, that the Uncle should be allow'd to succeed his Brother's Son, as a near Kinsman to the Father, and yet the Father himself be abridg'd of that Privilege. But inasmuch as the Law of Nature appoints, that Children should be Heirs to their Parents, and not Parents to their Children, Moses pass'd this Case over in silence, as Ominous and Unlucky, and contrary to all Pious Wishes and Desires: Lest the Father and Mother should seem to be Gainers by the Immature Death of their Children, who ought to be afflicted with most inexpressible Grief. Yet by allowing the Right of Inheritance to the Uncles, he obliquely admits the Claim of the Parents, both for the preservation of Decency and Order, and for the continuing the Estate in the same Family.

Some Parents too have the Additional Title of an Infirm and Indigent Old Age; under which Sad Condition their Children were, otherwise, oblig'd to maintain them: As one of the Attic Laws Expressly enjoin'd (c). Yet in case a Father hath without Reason grievously hated and injur'd his Son, without any subsequent Reconciliation, the Son may justly exclude him from the Right of Inheritance (1). It's the same with him who expos'd his Son when an Infant, utterly neglecting his Support: For here no doubt the Claim of the Foster-Father who hath undertaken the Care and Burthen of the Child's Education, ought first to be admitted. Nay farther, it seems reasonable, That an Adoptive Father should, in this Point, be prefer'd to a Natural Parent; that he may recover what he hath expended on bringing up another's Child. We are likewise to observe, That the Lawyers do not admit of Representation in the Ascending Line as they do in the Descending. That is, If a Man die without Issue, leaving a Father, and a Grand-Father by his Mother's side, the latter of these shall not be allow'd to make Claim in the room of his Daughter. A Rule which seems to be grounded on this Consideration, That naturally the Hopes of Succession do not ascend, but descend: Wherefore, the Son had indeed Hopes of succeeding his Father, and might transmit the same Hopes to his own Issue; but the Mother had never any Hope or Desire of inheriting after her Children; and so could not, contrary to the Order of Nature, convey back any such Hope to her own Parents: And consequently, the nearer Claimant (2) here excludes very Justly the more remote.

XIV. When the Descending and the Ascending Lines both fail, the Succession to Intestates devolves on the Collateral Kindred. As to the order in which they are to be admitted, where the Civil Statutes do not expressly settle it, 'tis to be determin'd by Natural Conjecture: which always favours that Person, whom we presume to have stood fairest in the Affection of the deceas'd: Yet so, as that we measure this Affection more by the common Inclination of wise and sober Men, and according as it tends to the Prevention of Quarrels, than by the morose Humour of some few particular Persons. Now according to the Judgment of wise Men, Natural Reason in this Case pays an especial Regard to Nearness of Blood, yet so as at the same time to consider from what Source the respective Possessions seem'd to flow to the deceas'd, or who formerly part'd with any Thing, or suffer'd any Loss upon account of his coming into the World. Thus Aristotle's first Rule (d) is, The Affection between Parents and Children; and his next, The Love between Brethren, arising from their Relation to the same common Stock, and improv'd by the likeness of Years and Education. After these follow Brother's Children, and other Relations join'd to us by Virtue of that Fraternal Union. And then (all these being first consider'd, whom Nature, as it were, necessitates us to love and esteem;) in the last place those are admitted, whom either past Kindnesses or Agreeableness of Temper and Manners, or peculiar Likeness of Inclinations, or known Fidelity, recommends and endears. Tully placeth (e) the Degrees of Kindred in the Order following: The first Society is in Wedlock; the next in Children; it comes then to a Family, and a Community of all Things. The Relation of Brothers come next; and after that, of Brothers and Sisters Children; who when they are too many for one House, are transplanted into others, as into Colonies. And then follow Matches and Alliances, with Increase of Kindred, con-

(a) Panegy. c. 38. Vid. L. 5. t. 2. l. 15. D. de inoffic. testam. Lib. 29. t. 4. D. si quis ommissa causa &c. Leg. 26. C. Lib. 3. t. 28. De inoffic. testam. & t. 25. de Institut. &c. Leg. 9. & L. 6. t. 56. ad SCtum Tertull. & Lib. 3. t. 3. de SCto Tertull. (b) De Vit. Mosi, l. 3. p. 533. Edit. Genev. (c) Iseus Orat. 7. The Law commands us to maintain our Parents, under which Name are comprehended not only our Father and Mother, but our Grandfather. For these are the first of our Kindred, and from these descend the Goods and Fortunes which their Posterity enjoy. These therefore we are necessarily bound to support, even though they should have nothing to leave us. Add. Grot. d. l. sect. 5. & Ziegler ad d. l.

(1) See the 15th of Justinian's Novels, Chap. 4.

(2) Novel 118. c. 2.

(d) Nicom. 8. c. 14.

(e) Off. 1. c. 16. Of the Relation between Brothers, See Plutarch de fratern. amor, & Xenophon l. 5. Cyrop. in Cyrus's last Speech; & l. 2. Socrat. memorab. Add. Bæcler. ad Grot. diſt. loc. f. 9, 10, 11. Towards illustrating the Obligation between those of the same Blood, it may not be improper to mention the Law receiv'd in the Kingdom of Tonguin, by which all Quarrels arising amongst Persons thus allied, are refer'd to the Decision of their Common Kindred, and not brought into the Ordinary Courts of Justice; as we are told by Alexander de Rhodes, Itiner. l. 2. c. 7.

sequent upon them. Now the Relation of Blood and the Kindness that ariseth from it, necessarily endears Men to one another.

XV. But the high Encomiums given to Friendship in Authors, may raise a Doubt, Whether Friends are not sometimes to be preferr'd to Relations? Of all Societies, says Tully (a), none hath more of Excellency, or of Strength, than when Good Men, alike in Manners, are united by a Familiar Acquaintance.

So Homer (b),
A hearty Friend deserves a Brother's Love.

And Euripides (c), ——— A Stranger to our Line,
If once in Mind and Manners firmly tied,
Is worth a Thousand Kinsmen. ———

And indeed it frequently happens, that we take more Satisfaction in the Company and Conversation of an indifferent Person, than of one related to us in Blood, and intrust many Things with the Secrecy and Fidelity of the former which we conceal from the latter. In fine, We address our selves more readily to serve the Friend, than the Relation; because he, on the other side, is the more ready of the Two to assist us in any Difficulty.

But it cannot hence be concluded, That by virtue of a general Custom, coming up almost to the force of Law, a Friend is to take place of Relations, though the deceased Party should chance to have expressed more Tokens of Affection towards him, than towards them. For in the Business of transmitting an Inheritance, we are not guided only by Kindness and Good-will, but we consider farther, on whom 'tis most proper and convenient that our Fortunes should descend. And since Men are carried on by a general Propension, to wish the Family in as good a Condition as possible, from which they derive their Original, therefore 'tis commonly most convenient that our Goods should continue in our own Line. Besides, 'tis no necessary Consequence to say, I was highly delighted with this Person's Familiarity and Converse; therefore 'twas my Inclination likewise to transfer my Possessions upon him. For this Friendship between Persons not allied in Race, generally extends no farther than to a mutual Signification of Good-will, a Communication of Designs, and the ordinary Services and Offices of Life. But before I can be conceiv'd, to have join'd Houses, as it were, with a Stranger, by conveying to him my Estate, 'twill be necessary to produce an Express and Legal Will to this purpose. Thus, although according to the Ancient Manners of the Romans, in the order of common Duties, After Parents and Children, the first Place was given to Pupils or Wards; the second to Clients or Dependents; the third to Guests; and the last to the Kindred by Blood and Marriage, according to the Degree of Nearness in which they stood (d): yet in transmitting Possessions this Method of proceeding was not in the least regarded. Farther, if Friends in the Case of Intestates, were at any time to have the Advantage of Kinsmen, this would open a wide Field for Quarrels and Contentions, as well amongst the Friends themselves, if they happen'd to be more than one, as between them and the Relations. For to take more pleasure in a Man's Company, or to communicate Affairs more freely with him, is not presently to be look'd on as an Infallible Token, that he stands highest in our Affection. Many times, a Jocular or Easy Temper, Equality of Years, or Sagacity of Judgment, render the Acquaintance of a Friend more pleasant or more profitable to us, than that of a Relation, who possibly may want the same Advantages. Yet when we are about to dispose of our Goods, we are seldom sway'd by this Consideration, to favour the former more than the latter. Hesiod's Advice will here be good,

Let not thy Friend thy Brother's Rights In-
vade (e) (1).

Lastly, The Degrees of Kindred are easily distinguish'd and reckon'd up; but who will undertake to settle the Degrees of Friendship in so exact an order, as to leave no room for Cavil and Dispute?

XVI. But still 'tis urg'd with better Pre- tence, That those Friends at least are to be preferr'd to Relations in the Case of Succession to Estates, by whose Bounty, Counsel, or Assistance the respective Estate was acquir'd, it being but Equitable, that the Goods should return to the place, whence they Originally flow'd. Yet here likewise, there will be most plentiful Matter for Contentions; the cutting off of which ought to be made the chief Aim and Design of all Laws. For a Friend putting in his Claim with such a Plea, might be well answer'd to this Purpose: That either what he takes for Merit was not the conferring, but the returning a Kindness; or, That if he was the first Benefactor, he hath since receiv'd a sufficient Requital: or, That he gave without any hope or prospect of Return; and desired, That his Bounty should reach not to the Person only, but to the Family of his Friend: or, That what he did was undertaken upon the Principle of Glory, or of present Advantage: That, in case we had not found his Assistance, we did not want Opportunity of being reliev'd in our Distress by other Means: That it cannot certainly be determin'd how much his Aid contributed to our acquiring those Goods

(a) Dist. loco. (b) Odysf. versf. ult. (c) Orest. v. 806, 807. Add. Val. Max. l. 4. c. 7. princip.
(d) Gell. l. 5. c. 13, (e) Op. & Dier. l. 2. v. 707 (1) See a Treatise of Friendship writ by M. de Sacy, which he demands to inherit: And then again, That he who hath been only useful to us in getting a Thing, cannot presently require, That we should admit him to hold the Thing in common with us. Farther, That the good Offices of Friends would be turn'd into a Mercenary Service, or rather into perfect Usury, if they were to be advanc'd to the Estate of Intestates, before the Relations of the deceas'd: For then a Kindness to another could not be suppos'd to be conferr'd with any other Design, than that the Receiver should only for a little time, be the Steward and Keeper of what was bestow'd, or should restore it with large Increase at his Death. Therefore, when there is no express Disposal extant in favour of the Friend, the Right of the Kinsmen shall obtain: Yet so as that together with the Goods of the deceased, they shall likewise take upon themselves his Obligation towards this great Benefactor; and shall endeavour, as far as in them lies, to repay it in a most grateful manner, acknowledging by whose Assistance they arrive at so ample an Inheritance. Nor is it reasonable for any Man obstinately to urge against this Judgment, that Saying of Aristotle (a), We ought rather to requite a Benefactor, than to oblige a Friend, if both cannot be done together: Or that of Cicero (b); There is no Duty more necessary, than that of repaying Kindnesses. And again; There being two Kinds of Liberality, one of bestowing, the other of returning a Benefit; whether or no we will bestow, depends on our own Choice; but not to return the Favours of a Good Man, is absolutely unlawful, provided it may be done without injuring any other Person (c). Because indeed, the Business of Successions to Intestates, by no means can be, or ought to be exactly squar'd in all respects according to the Rules observ'd in conferring and in returning Benefits. For the latter are guided by the Virtues of Humanity and Bounty, and, properly speaking, are vouchsafed to those only, who had no ground to expect them from us, but what is owing to the Suggestions of these Virtues in our Mind. Whereas the former are built on other Foundations, on the Obligation we lie under of making Provision for some particular Persons, on Nearness of Blood, and on that Propension to advance, improve, and preserve our own Family, enjoin'd by the Dictate of Nature (d). And in this Affair, that which ought to be our principal Case, is, That we establish so clear a Method as shall be expos'd, as little as possible, to Controversy and Doubt. Now, there can be no such Way or Method more ready than this, That in Default of an express Disposal by Will, the Inheritance shall pass down according to the different degrees in which the Relations of the deceased stood nearer to him one than the other.

Hence Authors have remark'd, That Successions to Intestates proceed in a contrary Course to the Rule of common Kindness; it being in the former the more necessary Duty to give, in the latter to repay: As, in the Case before us, our Children have the Preference of our Parents, to whom we are much more indebted and engaged (e). Yet in what hath been here offer'd, we would not be understood to insinuate, as if the Duty of Gratitude were to be allow'd no place in the last Disposal of our Fortunes; but only, that 'twould be inconvenient to go about to settle a General Method for the Estates of Intestates to be guided by, taken barely from the presum'd Will of the Party deceased, touching the Exercise of this Vertue.

XVII. From what hath been laid down, it appears, that of all the Collateral Line the Brothers stand nearest to the Inheritance; as well on the account of the most sweet and hearty Affection by which they commonly are engag'd to us, as because they on the score of raising their Brother's Fortunes, receiv'd smaller Portions out of their Father's Estate (f) (1). With whom the Sisters are likewise to be admitted, at least to those Goods which were either Brought by the Mother, or lately acquir'd; but they have not the same Title to the Father's Possessions, which are usually design'd to preserve the Splendor of the Family; whereas Women, for the most part, marry out of their own Line. Brothers by the Father's side, in the Paternal Inheritance exclude those by the Mother's side; as again, in the Fortunes left by the Mother, the latter have the Preference of the former. In Goods newly gotten since the time my Father married the Mother of my Half-Brother, 'tis convenient that I should carry off the largest Share; since toward the acquiring these Goods the Man usually contributes more than the Woman. Upon Default of Brothers, the Brother's Sons shall come in; tho' it should seem that these ought at the same time to let in the Great-Uncles, because they too had smaller Fortunes, on account of dividing the Estate with the Father of the deceased. The same is to be said of Sister's Sons, and their Great-Uncles by the Mother, with regard to the Mother's Goods. And this Order and Method shall be continued down in all other Instances; but still with this Proviso, That where the Paternal Line fails, there the Mother's Kindred shall be admitted to the Father's Estate, and so the Kinsmen by the Father, to the Mother's Goods, upon Failure of her own Line.

(a) Nicom. l. 9. c. 2. (b) Off. l. 1. c. 16. (c) Or that of Phocion, (in Plutarch's Apothegms) who being several times called upon to give somewhat towards the Expence of a Sacrifice, whilst all the rest contributed that were about him, answer'd, It would be a Shame to give You before I pay this Honest Man: pointing to a Creditor of his that stood by. Add. lib. 39. t. 5. l. 12. D. de donation. (d) Isæus Orat. 6. All Persons as they approach near to their End, are provident in disposing of what they possess, lest they should bring their Family to Ruin and Desolation. (e) Lucian Abdicat. 'Tis the Ordinance and Appointment of Nature, that the Affection of Parents towards their Children should exceed that of Children towards their Parents. Comp. Bæcler. ad Grot. d. 1. (f) Quintil. Declam. 321. pag. 509. init. Edit. Lugd. Bat. What Friendship can be so happy as that which imitates Brotherly Affection? Certainly, when we would complement those whom we take for our Friends, Flattery it self cannot invent a higher Endearment than the Name of Brothers. (1) Vid. Xenophon. ubi supr. & Val. Max. l. 5. c. 5. init. & Stobæum Serm. 82.

XVIII. But we ought well to observe, That the Rules which we have propos'd for the determining this Matter are stiled Natural, not because they are so exactly prescrib'd by any Precept of the Law of Nature, as that they cannot be alter'd, but because they are in the highest Manner agreeable to the Law of Nature, and seem to be the most ready Means of cutting off all Dispute, in Cases where either the express Will of the deceased, or the National Laws are silent. Yet indeed in the whole Subject and Compass of the Civil Ordinances, there is scarce any thing about which they are found more careful and solicitous than about the Disposal of Inheritances, not only for the Prevention of Quarrels amongst Relations, but likewise because 'tis the Interest of the Publick, to have this Business settled and moderated according to the Ends and Reasons of particular Governments. Hence in some places, the power of making Wills is left very free and wide; in others it is more or less abridg'd and restrain'd. Amongst the Romans 'twas one of the Laws of the Twelve Tables (1), That whatever a Master of a Family, settled or bequeath'd with regard to his Family, or to his Fortunes, should so stand. Which was borrow'd from the Attic System of Law compos'd by Solon: For thus Plutarch (a) reports, That the Ordinances of his, by which he gave free Subjects the liberty of making Wills, which they never enjoy'd before, was most greedily embrac'd, and was esteem'd most just and right. Now the Reason which moved Solon to the passing this Act, was not that he intended to defraud the Nearest Relations of their Right of Kindred, but that by setting before Men's Eyes this common Advantage, he might engage them all to contend with each other in good Offices, and that Relations might keep the greater Affection and the stricter Ties amongst themselves, considering that they must exceed Strangers in Kindness and Good-will, if they desired to be admitted before them to the Wealth of the Family (b). Besides, it seems more suitable to Liberty, and to the full extent of Properties, That no one should be forced to leave his Goods, but to those only whom he loved more than others. To which we may add, That we often conceive more probable Hopes that a Stranger to our Blood may better employ our Possessions in the Service and Assistance of Virtue, than some near Kinsman, whom the Expectation of a Rich Inheritance frequently seduceth to Luxury and Idleness (c). And lastly, That 'tis some Comfort, under the Necessity of a Mortal Condition, if a Man may consign over what he hath got by his own Labour, to those whom he looks upon as his dearest Friends (d). This Exception only there was in Solon's Law; That those should not be permitted to make Wills who had Legitimate Male-Children living, to whom the Paternal Inheritance was beyond all Controversy due. It cannot be denied, but that under this ample Power of disposing of Goods by Testament, there crept in, as well at Athens as at Rome, a prodigious Spawn of Cheats, like a Pestilential Infection; such as Parasitical Flattery and Inveigling, especially of Old and Childish Persons, Circumventions, Forgery of Writings, and the like.

Bodinus (e) chiefly objects against these Testamentary Constitutions of Solon, That they allowed Men to bequeath by Will Real as well as Personal Estates. By which means, as he observes, whilst many of those Estates might happen to fall on one Person, there arose a vast Inequality of Wealth between the Subjects, whence the Poor grew envious towards the Rich; the Rich proud and insolent towards the Poor; Mischiefs that have a peculiar Tendency to the disturbing and subverting of Government: Especially since the Proverb is often made good, That the more a Man hath, the more he shall have. But Bodinus observes, That 'tis the Interest of States, where the Supreme Power is lodg'd in the People, to take care that some few Persons do not exceed the rest by too vast a Disproportion. Which likewise was the Reason of that Jewish Law (2), forbidding the perpetual Alienation of Land; and of that other, by which Women who had receiv'd Land in Inheritance, were enjoind to Marry into their own Tribe, least otherwise the Land should pass from one Tribe to another (f).

Aristotle (g) amongst his Rules for preserving a Democratical Government, gives this as one, That Inheritances should descend not by Testament, but by Kindred, because thus the Fortunes of Men will be kept more upon a Level. What Mischiefs were introduced into the Spartan Commonwealth by that Liberty of Testaments which Epitades Ephorus set up in opposition to Lycurgus's Laws, may be read at large in Plutarch's Life of Agis (h). Amongst other Nations, Men were allow'd no Liberty in this Point; or if they had any such Privilege, it was very much abridg'd and restrain'd.

(1) See the Law cited upon this Account in B. I. c. 6. s. 6. (a) In Solon, p. 90. (b) Demosthen. adverb. Leptin. p. 374 Edit. Genev. When Solon enact'd by Law; That every Man who wanted Legitimate Issue, should appoint for his Heir, whom he pleas'd; he did it not to rob the next in Blood or Affinity of their Right of Kindred, but that by proposing this Common Advantage, he might engage Men to contend with each other in Good Offices.

(c) Theocr. Idyl. 10. The Living waste the Fortunes of the Dead. (d) Isocrat. Aginer. (e) L. 5. c. 2. De Repub.

(2) Levit. XXV. 10. Upon which see Mr. Le Clerk's Comments. (f) See Numb. XXXVI. 8.

(g) Polit. lib. 5. c. 8. in fin. (h) Add. Aristot. Polit. 11. 9.

Of the Hebrew Laws on this Particular, Selden (a) and Grotius (b) give a full account. Of the Ancient Germans, Tacitus (1) reports, That, they had no such things as Wills or Testaments, but every Man's Children were his Heirs and Successors: and, in default of Children, those of the next Degree, as Brothers and Uncles by both Parents. Which place of the Historian, why we should interpret with some in this manner, That the Germans, who had not yet learnt the use of Letters, did not make use of Formal and Written Wills after the Roman Custom, which Tacitus for the most part hath an Eye to in that Description, we cannot yet find sufficient Reason. For amongst the Romans themselves Testaments by Word of Mouth, and without Writing were also allow'd (2). And therefore if Tacitus had design'd to observe, That only Written Wills were those with which the Germans were unacquainted; he would have express'd himself more particularly and distinctly.

Besides, That the Rights of Kindred were honour'd with the highest Reverence, and most sacred Veneration amongst those People, appears from what the same Historian afterward remarks. The greater number of Relations any Man hath, whether by Blood or by Marriage, the more Respect is paid him in his Old Age: Nor are any Rewards allow'd to comfort Persons under the Misfortune of being Childless. Every one looks on it as his necessary Obligation, to undertake the Quarrels of his Father or of any near Kinsman, as well as their Friendships and Alliances. In many parts of Germany at this day, if a Man hath a Son born to him, 'tis an usual Expression to say, He hath got an Heir.

Again, It doth not appear why a Nation, such as the Old Germans then were, quite ignorant of the ways of heaping up Wealth, content with the poor accommodation of Household Conveniencies, and scarcely desiring any farther advantage from their Fields, their Cattle, and their Pains in Hunting, than a daily Subsistence; why such a Nation should have any reason to desire the privilege of Testaments. It being an idle and unnecessary care, for those who follow this way of Life, to covet to themselves any large extent of Land. Nor is the making of a Will so necessary a consequence of Property, but that a State or People may introduce some one uniform Method of Inheritance, without any such express Disposal. And this will especially hold good of that People, who as Tacitus informs us, assigned such a Tract of Land to such a number of People; who afterwards parcell'd it out into private Shares, ac-

ording to the worth and esteem of particular Persons. If it be said, That these Men were wont, however, at their Decease, to leave some sort of Orders and Injunctions to their Family, we deny that every Act of this kind comes up to the Nature of a Testament (c).

This Method of Succession, as 'tis the most plain and simple, and most agreeable to the Common Inclinations of Nature, so hath it an especial tendency to the keeping up an equal proportion in the Wealth of the Subjects, to the securing a supply of Natives in a just and proper number, and to the preserving the Estates and the perpetuity of Families (d).

It hath likewise been the Common Opinion, that this must prove a new Bond of Affection between Relations, and engage them more heartily to promote each others good, whilst they consider'd, that they were, of necessity, to succeed each other in their Possessions (e). And yet those Governments seem to have settled the Matter with most Prudence, which left Men the privilege of disposing by Will those Goods only which they acquired by their proper Industry; ordaining, That whatever they received from their Parents or Ancestors, should pass down again to their nearest Relations. For by this Method all the Reasons produc'd on both sides of the present Question, are most happily brought to a Temperament and Union.

It is altogether strange to the Manners and Customs of us Europeans, what we are told of the People of the Kingdom of Siam, That those who are Men of Substance amongst them, are commonly oblig'd to parcel out their Wealth into Three Divisions, one of which goes to the King, another to the Priests, (whence likewise the Funeral Charges are defray'd) and the Third only to the Children. And no less strange is the Practice of the Ethiopians on the Coasts of Guinea; where the Goods of either Parents do not descend to their Children, but to the nearest of their other Kindred (f).

XIX. The Heir by Will, and the Heir at Law, though they succeed in a different manner to their respective Estates, yet have this Obligation common to them both, That they shall discharge the Debts of the Deceas'd. And that not so much on account of any Tacit Engagement which they have entred into to this purpose (g), as because these Debts are a necessary Burthen affecting the Possessions in the manner of a Tacit Mortgage. For, as Quintilian (h) observes, Such is the Nature and condition of an Inheritance, that the Creditors must first be satisfied before it can effectually take place. And so much only is to be reckon'd a Man's

(a) De Successionibus ad bona Hebraeorum, especially in Cap. 24. (b) Ad Num. 27. v. 8. &c. (1) C. 20. (2) Provided the Testator declar'd his Will by Word of Mouth before 7 Witnesses. See Instit. B. 2. t. 10. f. 14.

(c) The Arabian Impostor hath likewise publish'd Laws to regulate Successions, in his Alcoran under the Chapter of Wives. (d) See Bacon's Hen. VII. p. 127. (e) To this Point belongs the Passage of Plato (1 11. de LL.) produc'd by Grotius, 1. 2. c. 7. Sect. 9. and explained by Baeler ad dict. loc. And hence Pliny in Panegy. c. 37. n. 2. Ed. Cellar. so highly commends it. (f) Jodoc Schouten. in Descript. Regn. Siam.

(g) On which Reason depends that Disposal of the Old Roman Law which we meet with in B. 29. t. 2. l. 3. D. de acquir. vel omitt. hered. (h) Declam. 273. p. 389. Ed. Lugd. Bat.

Estate, as remains when All are paid their own (a). Whence, likewise, 'tis most highly agreeable to Natural Equity, that the Heir be not charged with Debts above the Value of the Inheritance (b).

(a) Add. Valer. Max. l. 7. c. 2. f. 11. (b) Add. Lib. 3. t. 6. l. 5. init. D. de calumniatoribus. Lib. 11. t. 7. de Religiosis, &c. l. 14. f. 1. Vid. Lib. 16. t. 3. Leg. 7. f. 1. D. de pign. vel contra, l. 11. Lib. 49. t. 14. D. de jure fisci. Leges Wisigoth. l. 7. t. 2. c. 19. Nor should we omit what Gabriel the Sionite tells us in his Book of the Manners of the Eastern Nations, That the Mussulmanni when they make their last Will, are bound to restore all that they have taken by Robbery or Violence, to the proper Owner, from whom they receive a formal Discharge in Writing: And if they know not the Person to whom restitution should be made, they lay out the Sum in Publick Buildings, as Hospitals, Moschs, and Bagnios, or else bequeath it to the Poor, or to some Religious Order.

In Ferdinand Pinto, Cap. 21. the Chinese Hermit adviseth Antony de Faria, who had been guilty of Sacrilege, to do these three things for his Soul's health; to restore what he had taken away, to beg pardon for his Offences with Tears, and to distribute largely in Charity to the Poor. Add. Cap. 60.

CHAP. XII.

Of Prescription.

IT belongs to our present Design to enquire likewise concerning that Method of Acquisition by which he who hath gotten Possession of what was really anothers, by a just Title, and with honest Intentions, and hath also held it for a considerable time without being disturb'd or oppos'd, obtains the full Propriety of the thing thus possess'd, so as to extinguish all the Right and Legal Claim of the former Owner. This the Roman Law terms Usucapio, because the Thing is, as it were, taken and acquired by long Use or Possession (1).

The Word Præscriptio in the sense of the same Law imports strictly, that Plea, Demur, or Exception by which the Person thus in Possession invalidates the Claim of the first Proprietor. Though these different Names are frequently taken for the very same Notion; and the latter now prevails in Common Use, and is the Term by which we render the former.

It may be worth our while to premise, what the Roman Law appointed or directed in this matter; because we shall hence easily gather how far the Business depends on Positive Constitutions, and how far on the Laws of Nature.

II. Prescription, as Modestinus (a) defines it, is the Addition of a Property, by means of long Possession continued to the Term of Years fixed by the Law. Cujacius and others, on the Authority of Ulpian, use the word adeptio instead of adjectio, Acquisition instead of Addition; but we do not apprehend that this makes the least difference in the Thing. For he that having gotten Possession of a Thing with honest Intention, continues his Possession to that determinate Period which the Law expresseth, may be said to have somewhat added to him, which he hitherto wanted. And again, he to whom the Law thus adds any new Property, may be said to have acquired or obtained it.

To proceed, As every Man who is otherwise capable of acquiring Dominion, is likewise capable of prescribing; so by this Right of Prescription, we may acquire Dominion over both sorts of Things, Moveable and Immoveable, unless they are particularly excepted by the Laws.

And First, (2) Freemen are thus excepted: For since Liberty is so sweet a Comfort, as no one can be presum'd to have neglected any Opportunity of recovering, 'tis justly suppos'd that the Party in this Case continued so long under Servitude, and did not put in his Claim to be releas'd, only out of Ignorance of his present Condition; not that by this Continuance, he tacitly consented to be a Slave. So that this long Patience under his Misfortune ought rather to make him a more worthy Object of Pity, than to be interpreted to his Disadvantage. Things consecrated or set apart for the Service of Religion are likewise excepted; and so too are the Goods of Minors, during their Non-age: For by Reason of their unexperienc'd Years, the Neglect of challenging what is their own, cannot be so far charg'd upon them, as that they ought on this account to lose it; and it would be too hard and severe if they were to suffer for the Carelessness of their Guardians: Further, the Law excepts Stolen Goods (3), Runagate Servants, and Things gotten by Violence, tho' some Third Person hath obtain'd the Possession of them by honest means.

Thus the Laws of the Twelve Tables ordain, Rei furtivæ æterna autoritas esto, Let the Claim against things stolen hold good everlastingly. For, as to the Robber himself, his

(1) This is the most considerable sort of Civil Acquisition. Our Author speaks of Two other sorts in his Abridgment of the Duty of a Man and Citizen, B. 1. c. 12. f. 14. The First is when a Sovereign or the Laws take from a Criminal all his Goods, at least part of them, and applies them to the Publick Treasure, or to the Person Injur'd. Of this we shall treat more at large in B. 8. c. 3. The Second sort is by Arms, or by the Law of War. Of this we have treated in Chap. 6. f. 14.

(2) Our Author forgets, in reckoning up the things incapable of Prescription, Publick Places, Goods which appertain to the Publick, such as the Exchequer, and the Dominion of a Prince. See Mr. Barbeyrac's Second Note upon this Section.

(3) Vid. Aul. Gell. l. 17. c. 8.

Crime hinders him from prescribing. And the Third Person, the honest Possessor, is likewise stop'd in his Right, by that Fault which is suppos'd to affect and attend the Thing arising from the unjust Means by which it was before acquired: For though, properly speaking, there is no Fault or Blemish in the Thing considered by it self, yet inasmuch as it was taken from the former Owner, in an Unjust and Villainous manner, it seem'd Equitable to enact, That his Right should not hereby cease or be extinct; and at the same time to take Effectual Care, that no one should be a Gainer by his Wickedness. For, since Three Years Prescription is sufficient for movable Things, it had been easy for Thieves so to secure their Booty, by carrying it off, and putting it into other Hands, as that the Lawful Owner should not be able in a search of Three Years to discover it.

Besides, Amongst the Reasons on which the Right of Prescription is founded, One is the Negligence of the Owner, in seeking after them. But now, since Stolen Goods are usually concealed with the strictest Caution and Cunning, this Reason cannot take place against the Persons who lost them. Yet notwithstanding all this, since it was by some subsequent Laws (a) enacted, That all Actions after a constant Silence for Thirty or Forty Years, should utterly drop, and be extinct, the Prescription likewise of stolen Goods, as well as other Prescriptions, shall be valid, at Civil Law, after so long a Period, and shall overthrow the Claim of the former Proprietor: Which how Unreasonable soever it may appear to some, who look upon it as very absurd that Injury and Impunity should, by Length of Time, turn into a Foundation for Equity and Right; yet it deserves Excuse on account of the General Advantage arising from it to the Publick. Because it highly concerns the Publick Peace, that Suits and Quarrels should at length be finally quash'd, and not suffer'd to run on for ever, and that the Propriety of Things should not hang perpetually (1) in Uncertainty and under Dispute. And because within the Compass of Thirty Years Mankind seem to put on a new Face, it was thought very Inconvenient that the following Age should be disturb'd upon every slight Occasion.

Besides, When a Man had been without such a part of his Goods for Thirty Years together, he was justly suppos'd to have sat down quietly under the Loys; so that there was no need of troubling so long a Possession on his account. The same Reason will hold for that Prescription which is sometimes allow'd in Criiminal Cases (2); it seeming Unnecessary to bring to the Bar, Offences committed almost an Age since, the Ill Effects of which, Time it self hath sufficiently purg'd and effac'd, so that the true End of Punishment is now superseded (b).

III. But that Prescription may Effectually proceed, 'tis requisite that the Party, receiving the Thing at the Hands of a false Proprietor, do obtain this Possession by a just Title (3), or upon such Grounds as are esteem'd sufficient in other Cases for the transferring and the acquiring of Property. And consequently, that he act in this Matter bona fide, with fair and honest Intention; that is, that he be able to alledge a sufficient Reason why he thus possesseth it, and be perswaded in his Mind, that the Property was transferr'd really on him, and himself constituted true Owner (c). According to the Civil Law, 'tis enough if a Man had this bona fides (4), this Uprightness and Integrity of Thought at his first entering on the Possession, tho' he happen afterwards to discover, that the Person who convey'd it to him was not the just Proprietor. But the Canon Law requires the same Integrity through the whole Term of Years on which the Prescription is built (d); so that if a Man comes in the mean time to know that the Thing was made over to him by one who had no Right to dispose of it, he begins immediately to be obliged to restore it to the lawful Owner, and from thence-forward detains it mala fide, foully and dishonestly; especially in Case he go about to hide it from the Owner's Knowledge by Craft and Design. Which Judgment seems to approach nearest to the Strictness and Sanctity of the Law of Nature: Inasmuch as upon the introducing of distinct Properties, all Men were supposed to enter into an Obligation, That they would, to the utmost of their Power, let every Person enjoy his own again, when they should happen to be in Possession of it without his Consent (e). But the Compilers of the Civil Law were contented with securing the outward Innocence of Men's Actions; and authoriz'd the Possessor quietly to enjoy what he had honestly gotten; leaving to the respective Owners the whole Care of seeking after their Goods, and of challenging them upon a timely Discovery.

IV. Another necessary Condition in order to Prescription is, That it be founded on constant Possession, such as hath not been interrupted either Naturally (5), as if the Thing hath return'd in the mean-while to the former Owner, or hath at any time laid abandon'd or forsaken: Or Civilly (6), as if the Owner hath

(a) Vid. lib. 7. c. 39. l. 3 & 4. C. de præscript. 30 vel 40 annor.

(2) Vid. Cod. lib. 9. t. 22. ad Leg. Cornel. de falsis, leg. 12. (b) Vid. Ant. Matth. de Crimin. ad l. 48. D. t. 19. c. 4. & t. 20. c. 4. f. 14.

(3) Vid. Instir. l. 2. t. 6. princip.

(c) Liban. Declam. 1. pag. 194. Edit. Paris.

A Man doth not become just Possessor of a Thing barely by taking it to himself, but by holding it innocently. Hence when the Lands, which were formerly King Apion's, being left to the Roman People, every Man seiz'd on what part he liked best: Tacitus calls this way of proceeding, Diutina licentia & injuria, A long continued Licentiousness and Injustice.

(4) Vid. C. lib. 7. c. 31. De Usucap. transferend. &c. (d) C. ult. Canon. de præscript. (e) See Chap. 13. l. 2. of this Book. (5) Vid. D. lib. 41. c. 3. De Usurpat. & Usucap. leg. 5. (6) C. lib. 7. c. 32. De acquir. & retinend. poss. leg. 10.

been actually engaged at Law with the Possessor for the Recovery of what he lost; or at least, by solemn Protestations hath put in a Salvo to his Right.

Bæcler and Ziegler in their Annotations on Grotius (a) observe farther on this Subject, That the Space of time during which the Prime Possessor holds the Thing of which we speak, shall be reckoned to the Benefit of him that succeeds (1) in the Possession; provided that both the former, and the latter first entred upon it, with honest Minds, and upon a just Title: For otherwise the Prime Possessor shall not be allow'd to make over his Time to the next Holder; and consequently if the former came to the Possession by Dishonest Means, the Time he pass'd in it shall not be computed towards the Prescription of the latter, though he, for his own part, obtain'd the Possession fairly and justly.

And this Rule takes place as well in a General Successor, an Heir, a Particular, as a Buyer, a Grantee, &c. But then here is the Difference between these two kinds of Successors; the last of them, though he cannot reckon the Time of the dishonest Acquirer, to lengthen out his own, yet in case he himself was not privy to the wrongful Dealing, the Fault of the said Acquirer, if it cannot be used for his Advantage, shall not turn to his Prejudice; but he shall be allow'd to compleat the Term of Prescription in his own Person (2). Whereas 'tis otherwise in the Case of a General Successor, or an Heir (3): For he cannot by his own Ignorance and honest Intention, atone for the Fault of the deceased, whom he represents, and whose Rights he takes in full upon himself.

A longer space of Time is required for prescribing against one that is absent, than one that is present (4).

So again, Movable Things may pass into Prescription, sooner than Immovables. (5) The Reason of which latter Constitution seems to be, That Immovables are judg'd a much greater Loss than the contrary; that they are not so frequently made the Subject of Commerce between Man and Man; that 'tis not so easy to acquire the Possession of them without knowing whether the party that conveys them be the true Proprietor or the false; and consequently that they are likely to administer much less occasion to Controversies and Suits. Plato's Rules for the prescription of Movables are as follow; If a Thing of this kind be used openly in the City, let it pass into Prescription in one Year; if in the Country, in five Years; If it be used privately in the City, the Prescription shall not be compleated in less than three Years. If it be thus held with privacy and security in the Country, the Person that lost it shall have ten Years allow'd him to put in his Claim (b). As for the Prescription of Immovables, this the Constitution of Plato's Commonwealth was not acquainted with.

V. The chief Reasons which the Learned in the Roman Law assign for the first introducing of Property are to this purpose; That in order to the avoiding of Confusion, and the cutting off of Disputes and Quarrels, it is of great consequence to the Publick Welfare, that the Proprieties of Things should be fixt and certain amongst the Subjects. Which would be impossible, should perpetual Indulgence be allow'd to the Negligence of former Owners, and should the new Possessors be left in continual fear of losing what they held.

Then again, Trade and Commerce could not otherwise subsist in the World: For who would ever contract with another? Who would ever make a Purchase, if he could never be secur'd in the quiet possession of any Thing convey'd to him? Nor would it be a sufficient Remedy in this Case, That if the Thing should be thus challeng'd by a Third Party, the Person from whom we receive it should be oblig'd to make it good (6); for after so long a course of Time, Thousands of Accidents might render him incapable of giving us this Satisfaction: And what grievous Commotions must shake the Commonwealth, if at so vast a distance of Years, so many Contracts were to be disannulled, (7) so many Successions to be declared void, so many Possessors to be ejected? It was therefore judg'd sufficient to allow such a space, as large as in reason could be desired, during which the Lawful Proprietors might recover their own. But if through Sloth and Neglect they suffer'd it to slip; the Prætor might fairly reject their too late importunity. And though it might so happen that now and then a particular Person lost his advantage of recovering his Goods, utterly against his Will, and without his Fault, only because he was unable to find out the Possessor; yet the Damage and Inconvenience arising from that General Statute to some few private Men, is compensated by the Benefit it affords to the Publick. But we ought well to observe, That before we can charge the Ancient Proprietor with Carelessness and Sloth, we must suppose, That he had a convenient season to exert his Diligence.

Hence it is highly agreeable to Reason and Equity, That the Time during which a Country hath been the Seat of War, shall not avail towards Prescription: As Honorius particularly decreed, That no one should reckon towards the procuring of Prescription, that space of time in which the Vandals staid upon the Roman Ground (c).

(a) L. 2. c. 4. f. 9. (1) Vid. D. lib. 44. t. 3. De divers. temporalib. præscript. &c. leg. 14. f. 1. (2) Vid. Inst. lib. 2. t. 6. f. 7. (3) Ibid. f. 12. Vid. D. Lib. 44. t. 3. De divers. tempor. præscript. &c. Leg. 11. (4) Vid. C. Lib. 7. t. 33. De præscript. longi temporis decem vel viginti annorum. Leg. 11. & Justiniani Novel. 119. c. 7. Vid. Inst. Lib. 2. t. 2. princ. (5) Vid. Inst. ubi Supr. (b) De LL. l. 12. p. 990, 991. Ed. Wech. (6) See hereafter in B. 5. c. 5. f. 5. (7) See the Judicious reflexion of Aratus of Sicyon in Tully's Offices, B. 2. c. 23. And he thought it Unjust that Possessions of 50 Years should be disturb'd, because many of 'em for a long time were held by Inheritance, many by Purchaser, and many by Marriages. (c) Procop. Hist. Vandal. l. 1. c. 3.

VI. But there's no necessity, that in order to assert the Justice of Civil Governments, in establishing the Right of Prescription, we should have recourse (with a certain Author (a)) to that power of executing Punishment on the Guilty, with which the Chief Magistrate is invested. As if the Law denied an Action to those who for so long a Time forbore to challenge their own, for this Reason only, Because the Parties deserve to be put into the List of Criminals, for suffering Prescription to be pleaded against them; whilst by thus neglecting their Property, they not only prejudice the Common Good of the Society, but likewise Sin against their own Nature, which hath in all Cases an especial regard to the Publick Advantage: And that therefore as Solon ordain'd a Penalty against those who were idle and negligent, so here the neglect of the Proprietor is punish'd with the loss of his Property.

But indeed the principal aim and design of the Law concerning Prescription, is not to punish Mens Defaults in this respect, but to provide, that the State be not disturb'd by uncertain Titles, and by Properties in constant doubt and suspence. Tho' it's true, that by a Person's being denied to sue for Recovery, when he hath long neglected it, he suffers some loss or damage as a necessary consequence.

Besides, To be excluded from some Advantage, lying open to those only who are vigilant and industrious in their own Affairs, doth not come up strictly to the Nature of a Punishment. For we certainly use a Figure when we say, That an Idle Temper is a sufficient revenge to it self: Or, That 'tis Punishment enough to the slothful and unactive, that being shut out from all Posts of Honour, they are constrain'd to pass their Days in Obscurity.

Besides, The Assertion is not true, That those who suffer their Goods to be with-held from them by Prescription, are really Offenders against the Commonwealth. They indeed do manifestly injure the Publick, who either abuse and squander away their Substance, or whilst they sit brooding over it, and are Proprietors only in Name, and let it grow useless for want of Application. But now a Thing that is gain'd by Prescription, is however under the care and management of some Person; so as still to be serviceable to the Occasions of the Community. And 'tis altogether the same Thing to the State, whether such a piece of Ground, for Instance, be in the hands of this Man, or of that, provided it doth not lie quite neglected, without any one to cultivate and improve it.

To these Reasons we may add farther, That when any private Person receives advantage from another's Punishment, 'tis necessarily supposed, that he was before considerably hurt or endamaged by the party offending. Whereas he who commenceth a Proprietor, by the Right of Prescription, can on no account be said to have suffer'd harm from the Neglect of the Party whom he thus succeeds (b).

Since then the Law concerning Prescription is not a Penal Statute, 'tis idle to dispute, Why the Negligence of the Proprietor should be rather punish'd by the loss of the neglected Goods, than by some Pecuniary Mulct? Tho' it is very evident, that such a Mulct could not procure the true End of the Civil Constitutions in this Affair, which was, To cut off all those Suits and Quarrels that would for ever have been springing up, and to ensure, at least, a quiet Enjoyment to long Possessors, whose Case entitles them to more than ordinary Favour.

For in the first place, the Matter must have been brought into Court by the Claim of the former Proprietor, where the Cause would have been the more difficult and perplex'd, by reason of the Things continuing so long in other hands; and then the Present Possessor was to be ejected, whence a new Hardship would arise. For if the Fine were to go to the Magistrate, then the Possessor's Just Title, and honest Intentions were likely to stand him in no stead. Nor if the Possessor himself were to receive the Fine for a Comfort and Recompence, would all the Doubts be hereby resolv'd. Because, should the Fine be less in value than what the Possessor loseth by quitting his Hold, he must still be, in part, a sufferer: But were it as much, or more, then the Ancient Claimant would get little by his Suit. Therefore there cannot be, in the Point before us, a more ready way to Peace and Quietness, than to declare, that after the Term of Years appointed for Prescription, the Right of the former Owner shall cease and be extinct.

VII. By what Law Prescription was first set on foot, the Learned are not well agreed: Most ascribe its Original to Civil or Positive Law, and oppose it to those Methods of Acquisition, which are commonly said to proceed from the Law of Nations. Nay, Cujacius (c) goes so far as to affirm, That Prescription doth really contradict the Law of Nations, in that it takes a Man's Property from him, without his Consent: That it interferes likewise with Natural Equity, though only for the sake of Publick Good; whilst it endamageth Private Owners, but turns to the Benefit and Advantage of the Community. To which De Roy (d) answers, That each particular Proprietor in subjecting himself to those Laws which establish Prescription, doth at least implicitly consent to that translation of his Right. Another Reason urg'd by Cujacius, to prove this Establishment to be contrary to the Law of Nations, is as follows: That, according to the said Law, no Man can constitute another as the true Proprietor of a Thing, unless he were himself so before: Whereas, by the Civil Law, he who receives a Thing

(a) Hugo de Roy, de eo quod justum est, l. 3. t. 3, 4. (b) Nor doth he rightly apply to the present purpose those Words of l. 31. of Book 16. t. 3. D. Depositi, &c. Male meritis publice, &c. He that hath deserv'd ill of the Publick by embazling what was deliver'd to him in charge, ought to be left to struggle with Poverty, that he may serve for an Example to deter others from Wickedness.

(c) Ad Leg. 1. D. de Usucap.

(d) Dist. loc.

from one who was not the Proprietor, may yet obtain the Property of it himself, if he can prescribe for it in the usual manner. To which De Roy (a) again replies, That in the Business of Prescription, the Seller, or any other Non-proprietor conveys nothing more than the Title and Honest Possession; but that the Property is wholly added either by the Standing Law, or by the Publick Magistrate, who even according to the Law of Nations is invested with just Power to make new Ordinances, and to transfer Properties from one Person to another, out of a fair and reasonable regard to the Publick Good; the party who thus suffers for his own neglect, really consenting to this conveyance of his Property, or at least being presum'd to consent by his long silence.

Some maintain Prescription to proceed from Civil and Positive Law, upon the strength of this Argument; that in case a Man hath not originally obtain'd a Right on some other bottom, the bare length of Time can give none, as being destitute of all power to produce any effect. For tho' every Thing, say they, is done in Time, yet Time it self can do nothing.

Now as to the Reason here propos'd, thus much indeed is certain, That it depends wholly on the determination of Positive Law, why Prescription should be rather compleated at the Tenth or Twentieth Year (for Instance) than at the Ninth, or at the Sixteenth: Yet no one can deny but that the consent of all Nations, to which they were mov'd by their Care of the Common Peace, might be able to assign some Moral Efficacy to the Course of Years; at least so far, as that in process of Time, some certain Presumptions and Favours on the side of Persons in possession, should be granted to defend and confirm their Right, tho' attributed to other Causes than the bare Time it self. For tho' pure Natural Reason, and the Agreement of all the World, do not fix any one point of Time as the necessary Condition of obtaining a future Right, yet they might allow this effect to a space of very considerable extent and latitude.

Others have chose to express themselves doubtfully and timerously in the matter; being sensible of the vast Advantage which the Law for Prescription brings to the Publick; they thought it probable, that from the very Nature of the Thing, and its antecedency to any Positive Ordinance, Prescription is of force to transfer Property; since Natural Reason in the strictest manner commands the doing of those Things which conduce to the Common Benefit and Peace. But then they qualifie this Assertion, by adding, That though the Light of Reason suggests that the Thing is highly fitting, and that 'tis expedient it should be enacted by a Positive Constitution, yet 'tis not altogether so necessary, as to be immediately establish'd by the meer Law of Nature.

Again, Many do not stick to acknowledge, that prescription is not repugnant to the Law of Nature; that it carries Natural Equity along with it; that it is grounded on the fairest Right, and, as it were, on the Law of Nature; yet they decline to assert in plain Terms, That 'tis a direct Command of the same Law (b).

VIII. Grotius (c) undertaking to shew that Prescription doth truly belong to the Law of Nature, and consequently, that it may be pleaded as a fair Title amongst those who are wholly govern'd by the said Law, in relation to each other, lays the foundation of it in the tacit Dereliction of the former Proprietor: For the proof of which, he supposeth beforehand, That Nature allows every Man to renounce and abdicate his Right when he thinks fit to hold it no longer. Now that this desire of abdicating should be able to produce any Effect in relation to others, 'tis necessary that it discover it self by some certain Tokens; it being incongruous to Human Nature to derive any outward Efficacy from the bare Internal Acts of the Mind. These Tokens are either Words or Deeds. If the Will be express'd by Words, then there's no need of waiting for the Term of Prescription, since the Right is immediately transferr'd on the other Party. And it is the same when a Man declares his resolution concerning a Thing by some Positive Deed; as suppose, if he either cast it from him, or abandon it; unless the Circumstances be such, as that we ought to conclude that he either rejected, or relinquish'd it only for a time, with intention to demand and resume it again hereafter (d). Thus if the Right Owner of a Thing shall knowingly deal and bargain about the same Thing with another who hath the actual possession of it, he shall justly be deemed to have given up his own Right, so that it shall fall and be extinct upon the very moment of compleating any such Bargain or Transaction. Prescription therefore can take place in those Things alone which the former Owner hath not renounc'd either by Words, or by any Express Deed, or Overt Act, but in which we presume his Inclination to leave them, from his neglecting to enquire after them, and to challenge them again. For even Non-performances or Omissions, consider'd with their due Circumstances, do, in Moral account, pass for Actual Deeds, and may prejudice the Non-performer. (e) But before we can presume upon a Man's Intention from such an Omission, 'tis necessary that the Omission did not arise from pure Inculpable Ignorance. Wherefore those who are in possession of other Mens Goods, do then only gain the Property of them by the Tacit Consent of the former Owner, when he knows them to be thus possess'd, and yet forbears to challenge them upon a convenient Opportunity. For there can no other Reason be assign'd, why a Person who thus knows the matter, and hath his free choice to determine accordingly, should yet be utterly negligent and silent in it, but this, that he hath no longer any care or concern for the Thing detain'd, nor will reckon it his own for the future (a).

(a) L. 3. t. 4. f. 8. (b) Add. Grot. l. 2. c. 4. f. 9. Baeler & Ziegler. ad dict. loc. f. 1. (c) L. 2. c. 4. f. 3. &c. (d) Add. Lib. 41. t. 1. l. 9. Secl. ult. D. de A. R. D. f. 8. Lib. 14. t. 2. ad L. Rhod. l. 8. Lib. 47. t. 2. Leg. 43. f. 11. D. de furtis. Lib. 2. t. 14. l. 2. f. 1. D. de pactis. (e) Vid. Numb. XXX. 5. 12. D. Lib. 22. t. 1. l. 17. f. 1. de Usuris. &c. Lib. 41. t. 1. Leg. 44. D. de A. R. D.

Farther, As to the raising this Presumption of a Man's voluntary Neglect to demand his Property, length of time affords a very strong Conjecture: For 'tis hardly possible, but that in a course of many Years, we should gain Intelligence that our Goods are in other hands, and have Opportunity of recovering them, or at least of interrupting the Possessor's Title, by declaring and protesting against it.

Again, if we were at first hindred from putting in our Claim through Fear, this Fear too will in time vanish, and we shall be likewise able to provide so well for our own Security, as to be in no danger of suffering from the unjust Detainer.

As to the Objection, That no one can easily be presum'd to throw away his own; 'tis answer'd by affirming on the other hand, that no one can be thought willing, that a thing which for so vast a while he hath not at all regarded, nor given any one Indication of Care about it, should any more appertain to him.

Though all this be very plausibly alledg'd, yet 'tis certain that a long continued Silence doth not always give us sufficient Ground to suppose a Tacit Dereliction. For, as it may happen that a Man, for the longest space we can fix, might either have been ignorant of his Right, or hindred from asserting it through want of Power and Apprehension of Danger; (b) so again, if he claims his Goods, though after never so long a Season, 'tis manifest that he did not before absolutely abandon and give them over. And consequently this Foundation for Prescription will not be such, as shall hold universally, or extend to all Cases.

As to that other Reason offer'd by Grotius, to prove that a Dereliction may be presum'd from long Silence, Because we must not believe that Men are so uncharitably dispos'd towards each other, as that they would suffer any Person to continue in a perpetual Course of Sin, for the sake of a perishable Enjoyment; this doth not at all affect the present Question. For, besides that it seems a little too simple to flatter our selves with so large Promises of Men's Conscience and Piety; (c) he that comes to a Possession by Honest Means, and with Innocency of Intention, (and him only we have pronounc'd capable of commencing Proprietor by Prescription,) is really in no Sin; because the manner of his obtaining the Possession fully perswades him, that he obtain'd the Property together with it. And it doth not appear that any Man's obliged voluntarily to call in question his own Right, established upon a lawful and probable Title. But if the detaining of another's Goods after this manner, were indeed, in it self Sinful, the Guilt were to be taken off, not by the Silence of the Owner, but by his express Confession, and the Renunciation of his Right; did he resolve to give full Relief and Satisfaction to the Conscience of the Possessor. But in this Case, the Possessor's Right would not be owing to Prescription, but to the Solemn Act of the former Proprietor.

IX. Amongst these different Opinions, this seems to be clear and evident, That as the Propriety of Things was introduced out of a regard to the Common Peace, so it flows as a Consequence from the same Principle, That they who have been let in to the Possession of any thing upon a fair and honest Presumption, should at length be secured in the Enjoyment of it; and that others should not be allowed to raise perpetual Suits and Quarrels about their Title. But the particular space of time within which such an Innocent Possession grows up to the force and strength of Property, we do not find precisely determined, either by Natural Reason, or the Universal Consent of Nations; but it is to be adjudg'd by the Opinion of good and true Men upon the Case, not without some considerable degree of Latitude. Yet so as that this Latitude shall not be cavill'd and pick'd at, with the like Sophistry as Horace hath used on another Occasion:

*Scire velim chartis pretium quotus arroget annus:
Scriptor ab hinc annos centum qui decidit, inter
Perfectos veteresq; referri debet, an inter
Viles atque novos? excludat iurgia finis.
Est vetus atq; probus centum qui perficit annos.
Quid, qui deperit minor uno mense vel anno,
Inter quos referendus erit? veteresne poetas,
An quos & praesens & postera respuet aetas?
Iste quidem veteres inter ponetur honeste,
Qui vel mense brevi, vel toto est junior anno.
Utor permissis, caudeq; pilos ut equina
Paulatim vello, & demo unum, demo etiam unum, &c.*

Epist. I. L. 2. v. 35, &c.

I'd know what Years an Author's Ripe for [Fame;
Suppose a Century gone; where shall his Name
Be fix'd? ith' Ancient Roll of finish'd Wit,
Or the Vile Modern? let the Bounds be set.
He's old and stanch at a full Century's Date.
What if he dropt a Month, a Year too late;
With the old Heroes shall he share the Prize,
Or sink with those our Children shall despise,
Upon their Father's Judgment? We'll presume
Him of full Age who comes so near the Sum.
I'll hold you to't, 'till by degrees I clear
The Horse's Tail, and pick it Hair by Hair (d).

But in fixing the particular Period, a regard shall be had both to the Ancient Owner, and

(a) Add. Bæcler ad Grot. d. I. Sect. 5. & Ziegler ad l. d.

(c) Add. Ziegler ad Grot. loc. citat. Sect. 8.

verbi signific.

(b) Vid. Can. 13, 14. Caus. 16. quest. 3. in Gratian.

(d) Add. Grot. in flor. spars. ad Leg. 177. D. lib. 50. t. 16.

to the New Possessor. To the former, lest he should be too soon excluded from the Privilege of following and finding out what he hath lost. In which point Natural Equity requires that Prescription should not be compleated in so little time between absent Parties, as between those who are both on the spot. To the latter, lest he should undeservedly suffer Damage, when 'tis too late for him to gain Redress by convicting the first Injurious Detainer (1), from whom the Thing was honestly receiv'd; or when the thing is so riveted to his Fortunes and Estates, as to make the chief Bottom upon which they depend. Hence, inasmuch as Movable Things pass in Commerce to others more frequently than Immovables, so that having gone through so many hands, 'tis more difficult to find out the Person by whom they were first convey'd, 'tis but reasonable to allow a longer space for the recovering the former than the latter; especially, since those likewise do much sooner suffer and decay by Use than these: For it would little avail the former Proprietor, to receive his Goods when impair'd and wasted, and rendred unfit for his Service. And tho' a Man at his first gaining such a Thing of anothers, may have made a very advantageous Bargain, or though his Title cost him little, yet it seems hard, and an obvious matter of complaint, that any one should be forc'd to part with a Thing that hath now a long Time grown, as it were, into his Patrimony and Inheritance: And the rather, because on the other hand, we have reason to believe, that he who hath contentedly wanted a Thing during a great part of his Life, within which he hath been able to make sufficient Provision for himself by other means, will not think it an Injury or Hardship that he be oblig'd to want it for ever (a). So that upon taking in all these Considerations, it will be no difficult Task for a fair and honest Arbitrator to find out such a Term for Prescription in particular Cases, as shall be agreeable to Natural Equity. Though 'tis the better way in Civil States, that all the Points of Controversy may be brought within a narrow compass, to fix in general some certain and necessary Bounds at which Prescription shall commence Valid, according to the Nature of the Subject. We are therefore altogether of Opinion, that Prescription as it abstracts from the Points of time establish'd by Civil Ordinances, is, as it were, the Corollary, or Appendix of Property. And by consequence, that when the Property was first introduc'd, it was likewise agreed upon by general Consent, for the sake of the Publick Peace, that he who possessed a Thing in his own name, neither by violent Detention, nor by fraudulent Concealment, nor by a precarious Title, should be presum'd the True Proprietor of it, till any one was able to prove the contrary: And that he who had held a Thing honestly obtain'd, a very long Season, during which any Man of ordinary Diligence would have enquired after his own, should defend his Hold against the Tardy Claimant, who so long neglected to make his Challenge.

X. Upon these Principles, and if we place the Reason of Prescription not barely in the Dereliction of the former Owner, we may with the more ease resolve this very intricate Question, Whether or no, or after what manner, Children not come into the World, can lose their Right by the Tacit Dereliction of their Parents and Ancestors? Which we may understand two ways; either of such Prescription as was compleated before Children were born, or of such as only commenced in their Father's Time, and was compleated at his Death. In the former Sense, if we take the Negative side, we are encounter'd with this Difficulty, that Prescription thus understood, will not in the least contribute to the Peace of Empires and Dominions; most Goods being in their Nature capable of descending by Inheritance to Posterity; and therefore 'twould be in vain for the Prescriber to overthrow the Claim of the Father, if the Son might afterwards renew the Suit. But if we incline to the Affirmative part, it will seem strange how Silence or Negligence should prejudice those who were unable to prefer an Action, or so much as to speak a word, and indeed, who were not yet in Being; or how the Default of one Person should thus turn to the Damage of another. Which Doubt Grotius (b) hath taken off by the following Remark: That a thing not yet existent can have no Accidents, so a Person who is as yet no part of Nature, can have no Right, and consequently nothing can be said to be taken from him (c). By him, who is as yet no part of Nature, we mean him who is not Conceived, not he who is Conceived, but not Born: Because the latter in many Instances of Right, is already suppos'd to be a Member of Human Society (d). It may be added in Confirmation of this Judgment, That the Goods of Parents do only then begin to belong to their Children, when the Parents themselves hold and enjoy them till the very Time at which the Children ought to inherit them. Which Rule may be thus extended to a larger Compass: He that is not yet in Being can acquire no Right, unless

(1) The Original in all the Editions of it, has it per Evictionem, This is an Inadvertency of our Author, who doubtless meant per Evictionis prestationem. (a) To which may be apply'd that of Tully, Off. 2. c. 22. Where's the Equity, that an Estate possess'd many Years before, should be got by him that had it not, and be lost by him that had it? See the Story of Aratus the Sicyonian, in the next Chapter. (b) L. 2. c. 4. f. 10. n. 2.

(c) M. Senec. Controver. l. 1. c. 6. p. 93. towards the end, Edit. Gronov. Before we obtain'd any Actual Existence, Nature hath the whole Government of us, and casts us into what Fortune she pleaseth. Our True Rate and Value then commenseth, when we are at our own Disposal. (d) Vid. lib. 37. t. 9. l. 7. princ. D. de ventre in possess. mittend. & lib. 38. t. 16. l. 7. D. de suis & legitim. hered. & lib. 50. t. 16. l. 231. D. de verb. signif.

by the Intervention of another already in being, from whom the Right shall be deriv'd to him upon his coming into the World, yet so as that it shall obtain no Effect in Relation to him, till after he is actually born. And this happens when any Thing is acquir'd or deliver'd to another, to be held in such a manner as that he shall be able to transmit it to his Successors. Yet here there is an observable Difference; for some Things are so conferr'd on another, as that the Interest of the Giver is not at all affected, whether the Thing descend to the Heirs, or not; though so far as he is concern'd, he grants the Receiver free leave thus to transmit it. But other Things are conferr'd after such a sort, as that the Donor retains a Right over the manner of holding, which he himself appointed, so that it cannot be altered without his Consent. Now which soever of these ways we suppose a Thing possess'd by any Man, with the power of transmitting it to his unborn Posterity, if it happen by any Means to be intercepted or alienated before the Birth of the Heir, he is not in the least injured thereby; unless the Title or Pretension to it (if not the Thing itself) were expressly left him in the manner of an Inheritance. For in the former Case, since both the Thing holden, and the way of holding it are fully in the Possessor's Disposal, if he convey it away from himself; or if, by any Change whatsoever it cease to be his, all the Right he had to it is immediately extinguish'd; and consequently cannot be derived upon his Heir as yet unborn, who can claim no Right to Goods of this Nature held by his Ancestors, but what they deliver to him, as it were from hand to hand, after he is actually in Being (a). But in the latter Case, inasmuch as the prime Donor still reserv'd to himself a power over the Tenure (1), if his Consent be obtained, the Possessor doth not at all damnify those that come after him, should he either alienate the Thing or give it over for lost by whatever Accident it was convey'd from him. Though all this be true, yet Pisistratus was of another Opinion; as appears from his Epistle to Solon, where he gives the following Reason amongst others for his seizing on the Government; I have not usurped what belong'd to others; I only claim that by my own just Right and Title, which the Athenians, having first confirmed by Oath to Codrus and his Family, afterwards took away (b).

The Question taken in the latter of the two Senses which we observed it to be capable of, is denied by the Civilians; for they say, That Prescription heretofore begun, stops during the Years of Minority (2), and upon their Expiration runs on effectually again. Yet I am of Opinion, there may be a Case, in which the Favour of Possession shall over-balance the Favour of Minority: As for Instance, suppose it should so happen, that when I want only a Month or Two of completing my Prescription, and it is Morally certain that the Ancient Proprietor will not within that space give me any trouble about the Title, and if he should then decease, leaving an Infant Heir, it would be unreasonably hard, if after five and twenty Years Possession, I should be thrust out of my Hold for want of those two Months: Especially, if it be now impossible for me to recover Damages of him from whom I received what is thus challenged; as I might have done, had the dispute been started before the Goods devolv'd upon the Minor. Here certainly, if the Business be referr'd to the Arbitration of an honest Man, and one who knows that the Grounds and Reasons of Prescription are not to be drawn barely from the Neglect of the former Owner, he will give Judgment for me rather than for the other Party. Nor, doth it seem so very grievous, that a Right which under the Father was, as we may say, at its last Gasp, should utterly expire under the Minor Son: And especially, because Men esteem it a much greater Hardship to let go a Thing which they have held a considerable time, than to be debarr'd of what is not yet come to their Hands.

XI. From hence it appears, that they too, who are subject to no Common Law besides that of Nature and of Nations, may allege against each others Claim, a long, uninterrupted, and honestly obtained Possession: And so much the rather, as Publick Possessions cannot be disturbed without far greater Confusion and Danger than Private. Though it must be confessed, that in Controversies between Princes and States, it is frequently not altogether so Necessary to appeal to Prescription, since the Right of the Possessor may, or at least should be deduc'd more solidly from other Foundations. And Bæcler (c) hath observ'd before us, That those who in this Business of Prescription, mention only the Point of Time, often intend to sum up their whole Claim in this short Expression: Under which are likewise to be understood the Adjuncts of Time, as the quitting the Thing which is now the matter of Dispute, or the Intention of quitting it, or any Tokens of renouncing the Right and Title. And since the Plea of Time is in the main plausible, especially with Vulgar Hearers, (as if it gave an Advantage to other Proofs,) it is a politick Stratagem to urge this Notion in general, and in gross, wilfully avoiding all Explications or Additions which might be able to give Strength to such a thing as Time, which of it self can produce no Effect; and instead of them, to heap up Instances and Examples of former Disputes, that the Discourse may seem more full, and may carry a fairer Colour as to the main Point.

(a) Vid. lib. 1. t. 9. l. 7. c. 1. de Senator.

(1) See hereafter in B. 8. c. 5. l. 9.

(b) Diogen. Laert. in

Solon, lib. 1. f. 53.

(2) Vid. C. lib. 7. t. 35.

Quibus non obijcitur longi temporis prescriptio. leg. 3.

(c) Ad Grot. dist. loc. sect. 2.

Tacitus (a) calls it by no better Name than Vaniloquentia, Impertinence or Idle Talk in Artabanus, when he laid claim to the Ancient Bounds of the Persian and Macedonian Empires.

Sapores, as Ammianus Marcellinus (b) informs us, renewed the same Claim many Ages after; to whom Constantius gave this Answer in his own way; That 'twas strange he should forget how the Persians were enslaved by the Macedonians; the latter of which Nations being subdued by the Roman Power, their Bonds-men could not but fall under the same Dominion (c).

Thus likewise, Solyman the Great Turk would often say, That he had a Right to the City of Rome, and to all the Western Empire, as being the lawful Successor of Constantine, who had remov'd the Imperial Seat to Byzantium. Yet in the most noble Examples upon Record, you will find, that besides the Argument of long continued Possession, some Title or other capable of producing Sovereignty, hath been at the same time alledg'd.

Thus Isocrates (1), under the Person of Archidamus, having shown in the first place that the Lacedaemonians became Masters of Messene by the Title of a Just War; afterwards brings in the length of Possession, as a kind of Secondary and Inferior Proof: Nor are you Ignorant, says he, that all the World agree, Possessions whether Publick or Private, should after a long Period of Time, be fix'd and confirm'd, and pass as lawful Inheritance. To which he subjoins, That the Title of his Country to Messene, was not controverted heretofore, when a fair Opportunity was offer'd to that purpose (d). And indeed in Causes of this Nature, 'tis always a fair Presumption in favour of the Possessor's Right, that during so long a space, no Person else hath put in his Pretensions. For these Matters are usually of so very great importance, and are transacted so openly and in broad Day, that if a Third Party hath any Right in the Case, he can neither be long ignorant of it, nor want occasion of preserving it, at least by declaring and protesting against the Usurper.

Therefore there can happen very few Cases, in which Dominion and Sovereignty shall not be the Consequences of Prescription, when a State or People have possess'd themselves of any Thing upon a Peaceful Title. And as for what they gain in War, it is hardly necessary to plead Prescription on that account. For so long as the Hostility continues, the possession of all that hath been won from the Enemy, is supported only by Force and Violence; and at the same time the Enemy hath a Right of recovering his Losses by any means he can use: Especially, if, having given any unjust occasion of the Quarrel, he is ready to make satisfaction. Hence, inasmuch as a War may be protracted for more than Fifty Years, they who lost any Place at the first breaking out of the Difference, may regain it by Force at any time before the Business is adjusted by a Peace.

The Numidians, in Livy (e), pleading Prescription against the Carthaginians for a Tract of Land, (which bore the Name of Emporia), talk to this purpose; That the Right was sometimes held by the State of Carthage, and sometimes by the Kings of Numidia, as either had opportunity to seize upon it; and that the Possession was always in the Hands of those who appear'd strongest in the Field.

When a Peace is concluded, 'tis easy to see what both sides are to hold for the future; and then what is yielded up by one Party, the other immediately acquires with full Right, and hath no need to wait for the Title of Prescription. If any Third Person lays claim to the same Thing, he will be sure to declare his Pretensions in good time; and if possible, whilst the Treaty is in agitation: For afterwards Warriors will not easily be prevail'd upon to restore what they have won by the Sword, to those who were Idle Spectators of the Quarrel (f).

(a) Ann. 6. c. 31. (b) L. 17. c. 5. (c) In Zonaras, Tom. 3. ad ann. 354. See likewise Herodian, l. 6. c. 6. (1) Isocrat. in Archidam. p. 208. Ed. Parisi. See Judges XI. 15. &c. (d) Add. Alberic. Gensil. de Jure Belli, l. 1. c. 22. (e) L. 34. cap. ult. (f) Vid. Grov. l. 3. c. 6. Sect. 7.

CHAP. XIII.

Of the Obligations which arise immediately from Property.

HAVING enquired into the Nature and Origin of Property, as likewise into the several ways by which it is establish'd, it follows that we consider those Obligations, which upon the introducing of Property affect Mankind, immediately (1) and on their own account, (2) without the Intervention of other Duties. Of these the first is, That every Man shall suffer another who is not engag'd in Hostility against him, to dispose of his own Possessions, and likewise quietly to hold and enjoy them; nor shall either by Force or Fraud, impair, divert, or draw them to himself. Whence it appears, that Theft, Rapine, removing of Boundaries, and the like Crimes are forbidden by the bare Law of Nature. Euripides (a) speaks excellently to this purpose;

(1) Vid. Grov. L. 2. c. 10. (2) See Titius's 303d Observation, cited in Mr. Barbeyrac's 1st Note upon this Sect. (a) Helen. v. 909, &c.

Μισὴ τῶν βίβλων, &c.

God hates the Violent, commanding All,
To live on what their Honest Pains procure;
And not to feed their Wants with Mutual Spoils.
Oppressors should be banish'd Human Race,
Unworthy of the Name. One Common Heaven
Gives Light and Air to Man; one Earth a Seat,
A Scene of Industry, where All may strive
To raise their Stock, and spread their Fortunes wide;
But not to rob, or force their Neighbour's store.

II. Farther, When the Things of one Man come into the Hands of another without the latter's Fault; (where under the General Name of Things we comprehend likewise our Right over Persons, so far as it may be profitable to us, as the Right of Masters over their Servants,) we are to consider, whether the Thing be still remaining or not.

As to Things which remain, there ariseth this Obligation concerning them; That he who is in possession of what belongs to us, ought to employ his utmost ability towards putting it again under our Command. Which Obligation doth not exert its force till such time as the Party in possession comes to know that the Thing is ours.

We add, That he employ his utmost ability, or do as much as in him lies; for no one can be bound to an Impossible Performance. Nor is he oblig'd to put himself to charges in making the Restitution; and whatever Expences he hath been at on any Thing on that account, he may fairly demand of the Owner, and may detain the Thing till they are paid. But 'tis enough if he signifie, that another's Goods are in his Hands, (a) and that he will be no hindrance to the Owner in the Recovery of them. And these Rules are so true, that the Roman Laws forbid Men to challenge their own when found by others, sine pactione, without some Bargain in order to give the Finder satisfaction (b); whilst they affirm at the same time, That he who takes up any Thing of another's with a design of converting it to his own Use, is guilty of Theft, whether he knows the particular Owner, or not (c) (2) Yet if I become Master of a Thing upon a Just Title, and with Honest Intention, I am not bound to call my own Right into dispute, and to give publick notice that such a Thing is in my Custody, to the end that it may be challeng'd, if it should happen to belong to another. For when the manner of my getting the Possession was in no respect faulty, my Innocence and Integrity clear me from all Imputation of Guilt in detaining another's Goods.

This farther Restriction is likewise to be understood in the present Duty; If he who was before the true Owner, hath still any probable means left of his recovering what he lost; that the Obligation we are now asserting, may not be thought to overthrow the Right of Prescription (d).

III. Now that this Obligation is sufficiently founded in the bare Notion of Property, appears evident. For since a person may happen, by many Accidents, to lose his hold, and be thrown out of the Possession of what is really his own, our Goods, and especially those which are movable, would be in a very slippery and uncertain condition, if when they stray into another Man's Hands, he might intercept or conceal them from us; much more, if he might detain such a Thing openly, and repulse us with Violence, when we attempted to make good our Claim. And therefore as in a State of Communion, 'tis a matter of Right that each Person shall be allow'd to use the Common Store as fully and freely as the rest; so upon the first appropriation of Things, when all other Persons did, as it were, renounce their Right to what any one had receiv'd as his private Share, the distinct Proprietors are supposed to have made this Agreement amongst themselves, (3) That he who chanced to be in possession of Another's Goods, after he knew it to be Another's, should cause it to return to its Owner. For the Power and Virtue of Property would be too weak, and the keeping of Things would require too much Expence, as well as too much Care and Trouble, if these stray'd Goods were only then to be restor'd when the Owner made a formal Challenge of them; because he must very frequently be ignorant which way they are gone, or where they are lodg'd.

As to a Man's being bound to restore a Thing when claim'd by the Owner, 'tis altogether the same case whether he got possession by Honest or by Dishonest Means: For this Obligation doth not arise from any Default, or any Fact of ours, or from any particular Covenant made with the Claimant, but from the Thing it self; or rather from that General Covenant to this purpose, which we suppose to be the necessary attendant of Property. He then who obtain'd the Thing honestly, is barely oblig'd to make Restitution; but he who procur'd it dishonestly, besides the necessity of Restitution, hath likewise contracted a Guilt, and is on that account, liable to Punishment. Good Faith, or Honest Intention, doth then cease, at least, in the Court of Conscience, when a Man hath full assurance, that what he holds belongs to another (a). Though 'tis enough to secure him from Human Punishment, if he were thus well-meaning and sincere only at his first entering on the Possession.

(a) Vid. D. Lib. 10. t. 4. l. 1. f. 3. De fugitivo. We speak here all along of the Innocent and Well-meaning Possessor; for the Obligations which lie on the Dishonest Possessor are open'd in another place. See the next Paragraph towards the End.

(b) Vid. Lib. 47. t. 2. l. 43. f. 9. D. de furtis. Lib. 19. t. 5. l. 15. D. de Præscript. verbis. & Lib. 12. t. 5. l. 4. f. 5. D. de cond. ob turp. caus. (c) Josephus Antiq. IV. c. 8. He that takes up Gold or Silver in the Way, let him seek out the Person who lost it, and by the help of the Cryer, let him restore it in the same place where 'twas found; and let him be persuaded, that 'tis a very ill way of gaining Profit, to enrich himself by the damage of others. (2) Concerning this, see c. 6. f. 12.

(d) Comp. Grot. in the place above-cited. (3) This general Agreement is not at all necessary. See Mr. Barbeyrac upon Chap. 4. and 6. f. 5.

IV. This is confirm'd and illustrated by the Divine Law it self, Deut. XXII. 1, 2, 3. And lest any should imagine that the Duty there enjoin'd is to be paid to Friendship only, 'tis expressly added, Exod. XXIII. 4. that the same ought to be perform'd to an Enemy.

Josephus (b) hath given us this Gloss on the Law which we are now mentioning: If any Man (says he) find Gold or Silver in his Way, let him seek out the party who lost it, and restore it by the Hands of the Publick Cryer, in the very place where he took it up, judging with himself, that no Advantage can be good, which ariseth from another's Damage. The same he must do with regard to the stray Sheep and Cattle he meets with in the Desert. If he cannot presently find out the Owner, let him retain the Things in his own Custody, calling God to witness, that he intended not to make a Gain of what belong'd to his Neighbour. Yet the Mortal Hatred which the Jewish Nation profess'd against all others, afterwards turn'd this Natural, into a Civil Law, to be put in practice only towards their own Countrymen (c).

One of the most remarkable Instances of Restitution which History affords, is that of the Emperour Theophilus, Who when a Woman cry'd after him in his Progress, and claim'd the Horse which he rode, finding upon enquiry that the Governor of a certain Province had taken it away, and presented it to him in his own Name, he immediately gave back the Horse to the Poor Woman; and having no others at hand from his own Stables, was content to make use of the next he could borrow. Which, they tell us, was the rise of that Custom which afterwards obtain'd, for the Emperours to carry in their Train a great number of Horses, for Supplies in case of any such Accident (d).

The Example of the Spartans, which Grotius mentions (i), who condemned their General Phœbidas for seizing on the Cadmean Fort, and yet still kept the Place in their Hands (e), doth not come up to our Point: For they were, no doubt, injurious and dishonest Possessors, and therefore were bound to Restitution by another Principle. Nor is the Story of M. Crassus, and Q. Hortensius more proper in the present Question, as Tully (f) gives the Report: Some Persons, says he, brought out of Greece to Rome a Forged Will of L. Minutius Basilus, a very Wealthy Man; and the more easily to carry their Point, put down M. Crassus, and Q. Hortensius, two who had the greatest

Power and Interest in the City, as Joint-Heirs with themselves. The two Gentlemen, though they suspected the Deed to be Counterfeit, yet relying upon their own Innocence in the matter, did not refuse to make this small Advantage of the others Wickedness. What then? is it enough that they appear to have had no hand in the Fact? I am not of that Opinion: For he certainly is to be censur'd as Unjust, who, not only forbears to drive off an Injury from another, but aids and encourages it. Here the Gentlemen had as great a share in the Crime of Forgery, as Receivers are said to have in that of Theft; inasmuch as they apprehended themselves to have been put into the Will for no other Reason, but that their Name and Authority might protect the Authors of the Cheat.

From the same Head we may discover the Custom of awarding Wrecks to the Prince, or to the State, to be disagreeable to Equity (g). As we may likewise gather the Absurdity of that Practice in some Countries, by which the Stolen Goods when discover'd, are not restor'd to the Owner, but are claim'd by the Publick Treasury (h).

V. Inasmuch as this Engagement to restore the Goods of Others ariseth from a General Agreement amongst all Mankind, a Bar is hereby put to all particular Contracts made about a Thing which is any way kept from the True Owner; the effect of which is, that when the Thing is known to be Another's, any Bargain about the conveying it to a Third Party, becomes null and void. And this too is the Ground of Diogenes's Jest on two Thieves, one of which had plunder'd the other; One (he said) had stolen somewhat, but the other had lost nothing (i).

As to that Law of the Digest (k) produc'd by Ziegler (l), to prove that a Contract made after such a Discovery, is not always evacuated or hinder'd by the force of Property, it is really no prejudice to what we now assert: For in the Case there alledg'd, the Interest of the Creditor is more concern'd that the Pledge should remain safe, than the Interest of the Debtor who owns it; and the Debtor cannot challenge the Pledge, unless upon Payment (m).

The Judgment of Tryphoninus, in the same place of the Digest, upon the other Case which he there proposeth, doth not to me appear satisfactory. A Man Cast for a Capital Crime, (says he) hath deposited an Hundred Pounds in your Hands; the Man is afterwards transported, and his Goods confiscated; the Question is, Whether you shall restore the Hundred Pounds to him who gave it you in Charge, or whether you shall pay it into the Treasury? If we regard only the Law of Nature and of Nations, the Money is to be given back to the party who committed it to your Trust (1); if we consider the end of Civil Government, and the Rule and Method of Positive Laws, you ought rather to throw it into the Publick Stock. For he who hath deserv'd ill of the whole State, should be left to struggle with Poverty too amongst his other Inconveniencies, that his Example may deter others from offending.

(a) Vid. Lib. 16. t. 3. l. 1. Sect. ult. D. l. 2. l. 3. l. 4. depositi, vel contra. (b) Antiq. l. 4. c. 8. (c) Vid. Seldem De J. N. & G. Sec. Hebr. l. 6. c. 4. & Grot. in Annot. ad. d. l. Sect. 1. Add. Polyb. l. 6. c. 31. princip. (d) Cyropalate de Off. Constant. & Cedren. (i) Ubi Supra. n. 3. (e) Plutarch & Cornel. Nep. in Pelopid. (f) Off. 3. c. 18. (g) Vid. Grot. l. 2. c. 7. f. 1. & Bæcler ad. d. l. Jac. Godofred de Imperio Maris, c. 11. Jo. Loccenius de Jure Maritimo, l. 1. c. 7. f. 9. Bodin. de Repub. l. 1. c. 10. Gramond Hist. Gall. Lib. 16. and others. (h) Vid. Anc. Matthe. de crimin. tit. de furtis, c. 4. f. 4. (i) Diog. Laert. l. 6. f. 54. (k) Lib. 4. t. 9. Leg. 1. f. 7. Naus. Caup. Stab. &c. (l) Ad. Grot. d. l. Sect. 1. (m) See a full Instance in B. XVI. t. 3. l. 31. f. 1. D. depositi vel contra.

But indeed, since Sovereign Rulers have even by the Law of Nations a Power to punish Criminals in their Fortunes and Estates; when such a Penalty is justly decreed against a Malefactor, 'tis agreeable to the very Law of Nature, that all his Goods should be forfeited to the Government. Yet that the Confiscation of Goods should attend any one particular Crime rather than others, is purely owing to the appointment of Positive Constitutions. The consideration of that Benefit which accrues to the Publick from Penalties duly inflicted, (the Reason urg'd by Tryphoninus) did indeed shew that such a Penal Sanction ought to be approv'd of; but it was not, properly, the Cause why the Treasury should have the advantage of the Criminal, as to challenging the Sum which he had lodg'd in other Hands. For by the Sentence of the Court all the Right and Property of the Condemn'd Criminal over his Goods was taken from him, and conferr'd on the Government; and consequently, what he formerly gave in Trust, is to be deliver'd back not to him, but to the Publick Receivers. Because all kind of Property, whether it ariseth from Positive Ordinances, or from the Law of Nations, hath this effect amongst others, That he who is in possession of any Thing over which the said property extends, shall be bound to restore it to the party who at present appears to be the true Owner. What Demurs and Exceptions the Law of restoring Things given in charge admits in other Cases upon account of particular Circumstances, is frequently shewn by Authors (a).

Upon this Natural Obligation to Restitution, the Compilers of the Civil Law have built a great number of additional Rules (b). And this too is the Ground of claiming by Judicial Process, what is detain'd from us (1), together with all the Actions which border on that Claim; and, in some sort, the Action of false Debt (2); the Action for Recovery of what we have given (3), either upon some Reason, which Reason hath not been made good, or else upon no Reason at all (4). Though these Actions are said likewise to depend upon a kind of Imaginary Contract. For when we deliver a Thing without intending it for a matter of pure Bounty, it is suppos'd to be given by the one Party, and received by the other on this Condition, That it shall be delivered back, in case there appear no Reason why it was given.

What hath been said about the Restitution of the main Thing or Substance, extends likewise to the Fruits or Profits of it, such as are now remaining; so much still being deducted as amounts to the Charges of producing, gathering or preserving them.

VI. But if what we have honestly gotten, though really belonging to another, hath been as honestly spent, then it seems most agreeable to Natural Equity, that we should not pay the whole Value of it to the Owner, but only the Advantage they brought us, or so much as we were made the richer by it; provided still that the Owner hath not been requir'd for what he lost, some other way. For if I honestly acquire and consume what was stolen from you, when you have already received full Satisfaction from the Thief, you can then demand nothing of me, how much soever I have been a Gainer by my Bargain. The Ground and Reason of this Assertion is not so much to be taken from the End of Property (5), (which was establish'd that every Man might, according to Proportion, enjoy his own; whereas he who gains by what is mine, hath more than his Proportion, as I on the contrary have less;) as from the following Consideration; That a Thing in which I have not lost my Property, either by my own free Consent, or by Default, or by the Right of War, still belongs to me; as doth likewise all the Fruit and Product of it. When such a thing therefore hath fallen into another Man's hands, who hath made an Advantage by spending it; his Honesty and good Intention secure him indeed from all Guilt and Censure; yet he can on no Pretence withhold the Profits when I lay Claim to them, because they are to be look'd on as the Residue, or the surviving part of the Thing, at least they are the proper and necessary Fruit proceeding from it. Hence 'tis one of the most common and proverbial Sayings, That no Man ought to gain by another's Loss: That is, by such a Loss as he did not himself procure either by his Consent or Default, so as to be the Cause of the Damage, or to have it any way imputed to him: For it can be no Sin in me, to take an Occasion of Advantage from the Loss or Damage of another, when it was not of my own procuring (c). It is observable that in the

(1) Vid. D. Ibid. princip. (a) Vid. Ciceron. Off. 3. c. 25. Seneca de Benef. l. 4. c. 10. Ambros. de Off. l. 1. c. ult. To which may be added what Polybius (in excerpt. Peiresc. p. 172.) reports of Ariarathes King of Cappadocia, who having recover'd the Kingdom from Orophernes, demanded of the Prienians the forty Talents which Orophernes had put into their Hands; and upon their refusing to deliver them to him, fell upon their City with Fire and Sword, in Polybius's Opinion very unjustly. Tho' this Action of Ariarathes may be commended, if we first suppose that Orophernes had injuriously depriv'd him of his Crown. (b) Vid. l. 25. t. 2. leg. 25. D. de act. rer. amotar. (1) Vid. D. lib. 6. t. 1. (2) See above, B. 3. c. 4. f. 5. (3) See the Ninth Chapter of this Book, sect. 4. (4) Vid. D. lib. 12. t. 7. (5) Vid. Grot. l. 2. c. 10. f. 2. (c) See Montaigne's Ess. l. 1. c. 20. Cicero, Off. 3. c. 5. 'Tis against Nature to increase our own Advantage, by the Damage of another Man. Which is borrowed from that of Terence, Andr. A. 4. Scen. 1. Hocine est credibile, &c. Add. lib. 50. t. 17. l. 206. D. de divers. reg. juris.

Books of the Roman Laws many Cases are determin'd according to the Equity of this general Rule, with some Difference from the ordinary Tenour and Strictness of the Letter (a) (1).

VII. From the Rules already propos'd may be drawn a satisfactory Decision of many Points usually controverted as well by Lawyers as Divines; which we think it may be proper to transcribe out of Grotius: First, He that honestly and innocently gains Possession of what is anothers, (for of him only we would here be all along understood; inasmuch as the Dishonest Possessor doth not only stand oblig'd on account of the thing it self, but is farther obnoxious by his own Crime:) so long as he continues in this Integrity (b), is bound to no Restitution, in case the thing perish or be lost; because he neither enjoys the Substance, nor any Fruit or Advantage of it (c). We add, That he doth not stand bound, though it should have happened to perish by his Default: For his honest Intention was to him in the place of Property. Now a Proprietor though he lose his Goods through his own Neglect, yet is thought to sustain sufficient Damage by the Loss, and is liable to no farther Punishment: but we are to pronounce otherwise, if the Person in Possession, understanding the thing to be anothers, voluntarily made away with it to avoid Restitution.

VIII. Secondly, Such a Possessor through honest Mistake, is bound to restore not only the thing it self, but likewise such Fruits or Products of it as are still remaining; because, in Natural Estimation, he that is Owner of the thing, is Owner too of the Fruits (d). Yet here they do distinguish between the Fruits of the thing, and the Fruits of the Man's own Labour. Grotius is of Opinion, That the former only ought to be given up, and not the latter; because these are not due to the thing it self, tho' perhaps they could not have been procur'd without it. Others think, that even the latter Fruits should be restored, and alledge a Law of the Code (e) in favour of their Assertion. And indeed this Judgment seems to come nearest to the Rule of Kindness and Humanity; provided this Clause be subjoin'd, that the honest Possessor may in this Case deduct, as well the Expence which the thing hath put him to, as a due Reward for his Labour (f): As likewise that to prevent troublesome Suits, the Proprietor upon claiming his own should not be too raking and greedy, should not (as we say) sweep Dust and all: for after the Business hath been qualified by these two Alleviations, it will seldom happen that the honest Possessor shall have much to give up out of the Advantage he made by his own Industry.

IX. Thirdly, Such a Possessor is bound not only to restore the thing, but likewise to satisfy for the Fruits which he hath spent, if it appear, that he would have spent as much otherwise (g): For he is judg'd to be so much the richer, whilst by spending anothers Goods, he hath saved his own (h). Yet here we are of Opinion, That besides the Limitation above added, it should be likewise consider'd, whether the well-meaning Possessor be able to recover of the Party, who sold him the Thing, so much as he loseth upon its being claim'd by the true Owner. If this is impossible to be done, the Possessor is ne'er the richer by the Bargain, when he is forced to restore what he bought, and yet cannot make himself whole by recovering the Price he gave. As to the Example of Caligula produced from (i) Sueton, who tells us, That when he restored any exil'd Princes to their Dominions, he gave them up likewise the Revenues, which had been brought in the mean-time into the Roman Treasury: We may observe, that he believed their Kingdoms to have been unjustly taken from them, and consequently himself to be in dishonest Possession. Or if he did not condemn his Predecessor's Act in this matter, yet it may still be question'd, whether he restored these Fruits and Profits out of supposed Duty and Conscience, or out of meer Generosity. So that we take it to be the truer Judgment to affirm, that the Innocent Possessor is not oblig'd to restore the Value of what he hath spent, when he cannot recover Damages of the Person who cheated him with this false Title. For in that Case, he cannot be supposed to have enrich'd himself by the Purchase. And it seems a greater Hardship to pay the Value of a thing that is spent and gone, than to restore the thing it self were it forth-coming.

X. Fourthly, Such a Possessor is not bound to make good those Fruits or Profits which he neglected to take; because he neither hath them, nor any thing else in their Room. And his Negligence about what was his own, or in all respects the same as if it had been his own, is adjudg'd to be a sufficient Prejudice to him (k).

XI. Fifthly, If such a Possessor having receiv'd the thing as a free Gift, shall have afterwards bestow'd it on another, he is not oblig'd to make Satisfaction to the Owner, unless it appear, that he would have given as much some other way; for then the sparing his own Stock will be reckon'd a matter of Gain and Advantage to him. This Account seems to suppose a Distinction between Donations out of Duty, and Donations out of meer Bounty; as that the former only are to be made good in the Case before us, and not the

(a) Vid. Instit. lib. 4. tit. 7. Upon the same Foundation the Action which they term de in rem verso seems to depend. Vid. D. lib. 15. tit. 3. (1) See Examples of this in Grotius's B. 2. c. 10. f. 2. n. 2, &c.

(b) Comp. Ziegler. ad Grot. d. l. (c) Vid. D. lib. 5. t. 3. l. 40. D. de hered. petit. & lib. 6. t. 3. D. de rei vindic.

(d) Add. lib. 6. t. 1. l. 20. l. 50. D. de rei vindic. (e) Lib. 3. tit. 32. leg. 22. de rei vindic.

(f) Vid. l. 5. t. 3. l. 36. f. 5. l. 38, 39. D. de hered. petit. & l. 6. t. 1. l. 27. f. 5. l. 31. l. 48. l. 65. D. de rei vindic.

(g) Vid. lib. ubi sup. l. 25. f. 8, 9. D. de hered. petit. & lib. 6. t. 1. l. 52. D. de rei vindic. (h) Add. l. 46. t. 3. l. 47. f. 1. D. de soluton. (i) Calig. c. 16. (k) Vid. lib. 6. t. 1. l. 78. D. de rei vindic.

latter. Because ordinarily speaking, no Man is presumed to give, in this gratuitous manner, unless he thinks himself to have somewhat superfluous; and consequently, his Inclination to give, is judged to have proceeded from his Opinion, that the thing which he thus disposed of, and which proved to be another's, was more than he wanted for his own use. And as to that Obligation which ariseth from such a Bounty in the Receiver, it is by no means reckon'd amongst those things which are capable of being rated at a set Price; and therefore he who only expects an uncertain return for what he hath actually bestow'd, doth not, in the least, appear to have been made richer by what he parted with on this Prospect (a). But it is to be considered likewise farther, whether the present be still remaining in the last Receiver's hands or not: If it be, the Proprietor shall claim it directly of him, and not trouble the Intermediate Receiver: If not, the main Burthen shall still fall on the Person who either now possesseth the thing, or hath been made richer by it. But the Intermediate Possessor shall only come in for a small Share in the Burthen, inasmuch as he too perhaps had an Opportunity of making some Advantage (b).

XII. Sixthly, If such a Possessor having first bought the thing, shall afterwards have alienated it, he shall not be bound to give the Owner any more than the Overplus of the prime Cost; or so much as he hath gain'd by his Bargain. But if it first cost him nothing, and yet he hath sold it, he shall then be obliged to give up the Price received, in case the Owner cannot recover the the thing it self of the present Possessor; and unless the former Party hath squander'd away the Price he took, which if not so easily gotten, had not been so prodigally spent. But he who puts a thing off for just so much as it cost him, is no Gainer, being supposed only to recover his Own. Nor can it be said in this case, that the Price supplies the room of the thing; unless he parted with it out of a knavish Design: Because otherwise, the Owner is to challenge his Goods from the Hands of him who is now in Possession.

There is a Law of the Digest (c) urg'd in the present Case, which runs thus; If after a Thief hath sold the Goods he stole, the Owner of them shall by violent means get the Price out of his hands, he seems to be guilty of Robbery as much as the other party was before, and to be equally obnoxious to the Law. For all agree that the Advantage of a Stolen Thing, or the Money into which it is turn'd, is not it self likewise Stolen. But this Law properly respects Civil Governments. For those who live in a State of Natural Liberty, may as fairly seize by Violence the Price of what hath been stolen from them, as the Thing it self.

XIII. Seventhly, Such a Possessor, tho' he purchas'd the Thing at a considerable Expence, yet is bound to restore it, and cannot require his Charges of the Owner, but of the Seller. For, otherwise, the Right of Challenging would turn to no account, if the Challenger were to refund the Price. And he who buys a Thing of another whom he might suspect not to be the true Proprietor, ought to have provided particularly for his own Security, in case the Thing should afterwards happen to be claim'd: Tho' this Condition of securing the Buyer's Title, is indeed imply'd in all Contracts of Sale, according to Natural Equity (d).

To the Rule above-mention'd the following Exception ought to be added; Unless in a Case where the True Proprietor could not in all probability have recover'd possession of his own, without some Expence: As suppose the Goods were detain'd in the hands of Thieves or Pirates, and from them purchas'd. For here the honest Man who delivers the Goods, may fairly deduct so much as the Proprietor would have gladly spent to regain them: Because, the Actual Possession, especially when not to be recover'd without difficulty, is capable of being rated at a certain value, and the Proprietor when reinstated in it, is adjudg'd to be, on this account, so much the richer. Whence arose the Custom for Persons who have lost any Thing, to promise Mercenarii, a Reward and Encouragement to the Finder. (e) For the same Reason, tho' the buying of what's already our own be void, according to the ordinary Course of the Civil Law, yet Paulus (f) affirms it to be good and valid, if it be first agreed upon, that the possession of what's our own may be purchas'd, when remaining with another.

'Tis propos'd as a farther Question on this Point; Whether a Man who buys a Thing thus detain'd, purely with design to convey it to the Owner, may demand the Price to be refunded? Some take the Negative part; because, say they, The Right accruing to the Proprietor cannot be taken off by this allegation of the Buyer. (g) But indeed, if such a Purchaser foresaw with fair probability, that the True Owner would hardly recover his Goods by other Means, and if the Price which he gave do not rise above what the Actual Possession which he restores may be valu'd at, then 'tis absolutely requisite that what he expended should be repaid him. But whether he who redeems the Thing in this Case shall be allow'd an Action against the Proprietor, such as they term Negotiorum gestorum, or to recover the Charges he hath been at in the Proprietor's Business, it is the Province of the Civilians more nicely to State and enquire. (1) The Reason which Grotius offers for his omitting to determine that Matter, is, Because the aforesaid Action ariseth purely from the Civil Law, having none of those Foundations to rest upon, from which bare Nature introduceth an Obligation in the Case. But tho'tis not indeed the Concern of the Law of Nature to examine or determine to what Particular Action at Civil Law, the present Case may be, or ought to be reduc'd; yet it cannot be deny'd, but that the very Action above specify'd, of recovering Charges on account of Business manag'd for another, hath a Foundation in Natural Equity, and in Tacit Compact. (2) For it cannot on any pretence be requir'd of me, that I should by my Kind and Generous Assistance preserve or improve another Man's Goods altogether gratuitously, and without receiving what I am out of Pocket in his Service (a). It seems therefore the most plain and natural way of resolving such Cases, that the party who redeems a Thing after this manner, as likewise he who transacts any Business on another's behalf, be suppos'd to hold the Thing which he hath redeemed, or about which he hath employ'd his Money or his Pains, as a Pledge or Mortgage, till such time as he receives satisfaction. Yet if there be no Fruits of his Labour remaining, which he might take hold on for his own security, and if the other barbarously deny to pay him for his so useful and profitable Assistance, I am not of opinion that he may apply the same Means towards asserting his Right, as are us'd in that other kind of Right which ariseth from express Contract; But all he can do shall be to expose the Ungrateful Wretch to Publick Hatred and Detestation, as one who doth not deserve the least Instance of Good Will from Mankind (b). The Roman Laws have consider'd the Equity of such a Restitution, in handling the like Cases (c). And in the whole Compass of this Affair, Terence's Remark ought to pass for a General Caution, that Jus summum summa saepe est malitia (d); The highest Right is very often the highest Wrong.

(a) Vid. lib. 5. t. 3. l. 25. f. 8. D. de hered. petit. Comp. Ziegler ad Grot. d. 1. sect. 7. (b) Add. Struv. Exercitat. XI. sect. 13. (c) Vid. Lib. 47. t. 2. l. 48. Sect. ult. D. de furtis. (d) Vid. Lib. 5. t. 3. l. 22. D. de hered. petit. l. 25. princ. & Sect. 1. & Lib. 18. t. 1. De Contrah. Emp. &c. Leg. 16. & C. Lib. 6. t. 32. l. 3. & C. de rei vindic. Lib. 21. t. 2. l. 1. D. de evict. &c. Lib. 14. t. 2. l. 2. f. 3. D. de L. Rhodia, & Lib. 8. t. 45. l. 16. D. de evict. & Lib. 6. t. 2. l. 2. C. de furtis. (e) Vid. Mosch. Idyll. 1. imitated by Apuleius, Metam. l. 6. (f) In Lib. 18. t. 1. l. 34. f. 4. D. de Contrah. emptione. (g) Vid. Lib. 50. t. 17. l. 11. D. de divers. reg. juris.

XIV. Eighthly, In the Opinion of Grotius, He who buys another Man's Goods, cannot return them upon the Hands of the Seller, and demand back his Money in their stead: Because so soon as ever they came under his power, there commenc'd in him an obligation of restoring them to their true Owner. In which Case, we are of a different Judgment: For certainly I am not bound to purchase a Thing which I knew to be another's, only that the True Master may recover his Goods, and that I may lose my Money. When therefore I find the Thing which I bought to belong to another Owner, and am unwilling the Claim should be directed against me, either to avoid the trouble of the Dispute, or because I despair of getting my Money again of the Seller, I should think, That I might fairly recede from such a Bargain, (provided it were not too late,) to avoid the drawing upon my self an unnecessary and unprofitable Contention; yet so as that I should be at the same time oblig'd to discover to the Owner, upon his demand, where his Goods are lodg'd, that he may have an opportunity of regaining them (e).

XV. Ninthly, He who comes honestly by the Possession of a Thing, and knows not whose it is, is not, by the Law of Nature bound to give it to the Poor; tho' such an Appointment by Civil Ordinances would be very just and commendable. The Reason is, Because by the force of Property none can claim a Right in the Thing besides the Proprietor. But now to the Party here concern'd, the not appearing of a Proprietor, is the same as if there really were none: Which is indeed a General Rule in other Cases. And therefore there's no body who hath a better Title to hold the Goods, whilst the Owner is unknown, than he who after this fair and upright manner is at present in possession of them.

XVI. Tenthly, What Grotius asserts, 'That a Fee taken either on a dishonest account, or for an honest Service, yet such as ought to have been perform'd gratis, is not to be restor'd, we allow; if the necessity of Restitution is to be deriv'd wholly from the Propriety of Things, consider'd by it self. For thus, he, to whom any Thing hath pass'd with the Consent of the former Owner, cannot be oblig'd to refund it. But when the Cause of receiving such a Fee was dishonest, as suppose Extortion, then there ariseth an Obligation to restore it, from another Principle. And under the General Name of Extortion ought to be comprehended all Ways and Methods (though not so violent) of picking Mens Pockets by Corrupt Dealings: As when Magistrates refuse to administer Justice without a Bribe (f).

(1) An Actio negotiorum gestorum is, when One Man has done for another a Business unknown to Him, without any Commission or any express Order from Him. See B. III. t. 5. D. De Negotiis gestis. (2) See Mr. Barbeyrac's Third Note upon this Section. (a) Add. Ziegler ad Grot. d. I. Sect. 9. (b) See 1 Sam. XXV. 7. 15. 21.

(c) Vid. Lib. 11. t. 7. l. 14. sect. 13. D. de religiof. & sumpt. funerum. & Lib. 3. t. 5. l. 6. f. 3. D. de negot. gest. & Lib. 14. t. 2. l. 1. D. de lege Rhodia. (d) Heautontim. Act. 4. Scen. 5. v. 47, 48. (e) Vid. Lib. 6. t. 1. l. 17. princ. D. de rei vindic. & Ziegler ad Grot. d. I. Sect. 10. (f) See 1 Sam. XII. 3, 4. Where Samuel's Intention seems to have been, not to make shew of any extraordinary Sanctity, but to declare by that Solemn Protestation that he had in no respect transgress'd the Common Duty of a Judge; and consequently, that he had not deserv'd by any Fault of his to be thrust out of his Office, by the creation of a King. See before, Book. III. c. 7. Section 9.

O F T H E
LAW of NATURE
A N D
N A T I O N S.

B O O K the F I F T H.

By WILLIAM PERCIVALE, M. A. Student of Christ-Church.

C H A P. I.

O f P R I C E.

SINCE Things that are the Subject of Property, are of different Natures, and administer differently to human Necessities, and since it often happens, that either the same Thing belongs to many, (the Parts of which are not in all respects alike) or that Things of a different Nature are to be exchange'd for one another; hence it becomes necessary for Men to agree upon some common Measure, by which Things of a different Nature may be compared together, and made equal to one another. Now Things are thus compared, and found to be equal, or unequal in respect of their Quantities, for Equality is nothing else but an Agreement of Quantities; and therefore we must consider the Quantity of Things and Actions, as far as they are useful to human Life, together with the Foundation and common Measure of that Quantity.

II. We find then, that Things are said to be equal, not only as they agree in the three Dimensions, but in some other respect. Thus Honour, Labour, and Wages are said to be equal, or unequal, not by reason of their agreeing, or disagreeing in Dimension, but upon some other Account. And therefore there must be some other Quantity, besides that which is term'd Physical and Mathematical, tho' Philosophers have hitherto talked of no other. Which is evident, if we consider, that the Nature of Quantity in general, does not consist in the Extension of Substance, but in Things being capable of having a Value put upon them, and consequently of being compared together. But since Things receive a Value, not only from their natural Substance, but also in respect of some Moral Consideration, it follows, that besides the Natural, there must be also a Moral Quantity (1). However Things of the same Nature and Goodness receive a Value even from their Natural Quantity, as a great Diamond, cæteris paribus, is more valuable than a small one; which yet we have not always a Regard to in the Valuation of Things of a different Species, or Goodness; for a great Dog is not always more Valuable than a little one; or a great Mass of Lead than a small Piece of Gold.

How Persons are Morally valued according to Opinion (2); and their Actions, according as they are productive of Merit or Demerit, has already been discoursed of in its proper place (3). My Design here is only to treat of the Moral Quantity of Things and Actions, as they are conceiv'd to have some Use in the common Affairs of Life, and as they are capable of being compared together in order to Commerce. This we call Price, which is the Moral Quantity or Value of Things or Actions, by which they are usually compared together in order to Traffick.

III. Price may be divided into Proper and Eminent (4); the first is placed in Things

(1) See B. 1. c. 1. f. 22. (2) See B. 8. c. 4. (3) See B. 1. c. 8. See B. 8. c. 3. f. 18, &c. (4) In the Original 'tis Pretium Vulgare, which Mr. Barbeyrac translates Price Proper or Intrinsic, because thus 'tis distinguish'd from Pretium Commune in Sect. 9. and more properly expresses the Idea our Author had of the Term Vulgare.

and Actions, so far as they are capable of procuring either the Necessaries, or Conveniencies, or Pleasures of Life: The other is placed in Money, which is supposed to contain virtually the Prices of all Things else, and to be the common Measure and Standard of them.

IV. For the right understanding the Nature of the proper Price, it is necessary to consider distinctly, First, upon what it is founded; Secondly, what it is that raises or sinks it. The Foundation of the Price or Value of any Action or Thing is, Fitness (1) to procure, either mediately or immediately, the Necessaries, or Conveniencies, or Pleasures of human Life. Hence in common Discourse we call those Things that are useless, Things of no Value; and those Men too we say are of no Value, that are unprofitable Burthens of the Earth. Thus the Cock in the Fable set no Value upon the Jewel, because of no use to him. Grotius (a) is of Opinion, That Want is the most natural Measure of the Price of things: Where if he means, that Want, in its own Nature is the Foundation of Price, or that therefore Men only value a thing, because they want it, it will not universally hold true. For, if so, those things, that are subservient to our superfluous Pleasures, wou'd bear no Price, which yet the Luxury of Man has set a great Rate upon. For we do not really want any thing, but what we cannot, unless with great Inconvenience, be without (b). But if his meaning be, that the Want of the Buyer raises the Price, I own it is commonly so; but, that it is the Natural Measure of Price, that the more a Man's Necessities press him, the more may be justly exacted of him, no honest Man will admit; Nor does that place of Aristotle, (c) cited by Grotius, make for the purpose: For the χρῆσις, or Want he speaks of there, which in a manner preserves and holds together all Commerce, is not the Foundation of Price, but of Bartering only. For if Men wanted Nothing, but what they could supply themselves with, there would be no Bartering, or Exchanging Commodities, but every one would keep and enjoy his own (d).

V. Yet it is observable, that some of the most useful Things of human Life have no Price set upon them, either because they are and ought to be free from Property; or because they are excluded from Commerce; or, lastly, because they come within the reach of it, no otherwise than as Appendages of some other Thing: besides, the Law has remov'd some Actions from Commerce, and thereby exempted them from Price. Thus the Air, the Sky, the heavenly Bodies, and the vast Ocean not being appropriated, can bear no Price, how serviceable soever they may be to human Life. And the Law having forbid things sacred to be brought into Commerce (2), has thereby exempted them from Price, although some of them have nothing in their own Nature to render them incapable of it. Nor, can any Price be assign'd for a Free-man's Head, it being a Contradiction to be free, and at the same time expos'd to Sale; for he is no sooner expos'd to Sale, but he ceases to be free: And therefore, even upon this Account, Liberty is said to be an invaluable Thing, because the Advantages of it are so great as to exceed all Value (e) (3).

Many Things also have no Price, because they are not capable of being possess'd separately by themselves, which yet very much enhance the Price of the Thing they appertain to; as the want of them takes from it not a little. Thus the lying open to the Sun, a clear and wholsom Air, a pleasant Prospect, the Winds, Shades, &c. considered separately in themselves bear no Price, because they cannot be enjoy'd without the Land they belong to; but yet of what Moment they are in the Purchase of Lands and Tenements, no Man is Ignorant. (f) And hence, by the way, it appears, how the Cause that Demosthenes pleaded before the Judges, about the Shadow of the Ass, ought to be decided: For he that hired the Ass could not hinder the Owner from lying down where the Shadow of the Beast fell, but might have immediately have taken it away by driving the Ass to some other place. Lastly, whatsoever Actions, either divine, or human Laws command to be done gratis, or forbid to be done at all, and so exclude from Commerce, cannot be brought under any Price. Of which Nature are those several Actions which have some supernatural Effect assign'd to them by divine Institution; as Remission of Sin, by the Absolution of the Priest; the Application of spiritual Benefits, by means of the Sacraments; and such like. Which who-soever confers upon another for any valuable

(1) See Mr. Barbeyrac's 1st Note upon this Sect. (a) L. 2. c. 12. §. 14. (b) Mat. IX. 12. (c) Nicom. l. 5. c. 8. p. 65. B. Ed. Paris. (d) Ib. Arist. Polit. l. 1. c. 6. (9) Bartering obtains in every thing, and began Naturally from some Peoples having more than they had occasion for, and others having less. For then they were forc'd to exchange till they had furnish'd themselves with what they wanted. (2) By Res Religiosæ, the Roman Law understands principally places where any thing had been buried. See Instit. B. 2. t. 1. §. 8, 9. and Dig. B. 11. t. 7. de religiof. & sumptib. funerum, &c.

(e) Here 'tis worth observing what Philo Judæus de Spec. Leg. p. 597. Edit. Genev. delivers. Prices were set upon those who had devoted not only their Goods, but themselves; not according to their Beauty, or Stature, or such like, but according to their Age and Sex: for the Law fixes CC silver Pieces Price for a Man, from the 20th to the 60th Year of his Age, and a CXX upon a Woman; from the 5th to the 20th Year LXXX for a Man, and XL for a Woman; from Infancy to the 5th Year XX for a Man, and XII for a Woman; if past the 60th Year for a Man LX, for a Woman XL. All of the same Age and Sex are rated at the same Price, for Three good Reasons: 1st, Because the Dignity of the Vow is the same whether great, or mean Persons make it. 2dly, In the Case of a Vow Persons ought not to be rated upon the same Terms with Slaves expos'd to Sale; for those are more, or less esteem'd according to the Beauty and Vigour of their Bodies. 3dly, and chiefly, Because with God there is no Respect of Persons, as there is with Men. (3) See the 27th Chap. of Levit.

(f) Pliny, Nat. Hist. lib. 12. cap. 1. says of the Plane-tree, That the People pay Taxes for the very Shade of it. Thus in Holland those that have Windmills pay a Yearly Tribute for the Publick Wind, as is pretended.

Confideration, is guilty of Simony: and to measure fuch Things with Money is look'd upon as Impiety and Irreverence towards the Divine Author (a). Unlawful too it is, to beftow Ecclefiaftical Preferments for Money, upon unworthy Perfons, which ought to be given to deferving Men gratis (b). Neither ought the Rewards and Testimonials of Virtue and Learning to be fold to thofe that don't deferve them; not only becaufe by this means they grow cheap, but becaufe fuch Men are often, by a pompous Title, recommended to publick Employments, to the great Prejudice of the Common-wealth (1). And indeed 'tis a Shame to the Men of Letters that fome fhould take fuch Liberty, as Fabius of Bentivoglio (c) expreff in Jeft, who going to make a certain Perfon a Doctor, met by Chance an Afs, that yawning with an open Mouth, look'd as if he were laughing; to whom, Why laugh you, fays he, you Silly Creature? We can make you a Doctor too, if you have but Money (d). Thus a Judge ought not to fell that Juftice which he fhould adminifter gratis (e). A Ruffian, or a Sorcerer, can't juftify his being hired, for Money, to kill a Man. A Scholar ought not to debase his Style and Learning in writing Scandal, nor ought any Man to prostrate his Credit by maintaining an unjuft Cause, or to ruin a juft one by Perjury; and many more of the fame Stamp.

VI. There are feveral Reafons why the Prices of Things fhould rife, or fall, why one Thing fhould be prefer'd before another of as great, or greater Ufe. For here the Necessity of the Thing, and the Eminency of its Ufe, does not always take place. Nay, we generally find the moft neceffary Things are cheapeft, becaufe by the peculiar Providence of God, Nature affords a greater Increase of them (f). That which chiefly raifes the Price, is Scarcity. Thofe

Things that are fcarce, fays Sextus Empiricus, (g) *are valued: thofe that grow amongst us, and are every where to be had, are quite otherwife. If Water were difficult to be met with, how much more valuable would it be, than the Things we moft value now? Or, if Gold lay in the Streets, as common as Stones, who, do you think, would value it, or lock it up? And therefore fome have thought it a Matter-piece in Trade, to procure a Scarcity. As the Dutch, in many Parts of the Indies, root up the Cloves and Nutmegs, to prevent too great a Plenty of thofe Spices (h). Befides, a Thing is ftill more valuable, when 'tis not only fcarce, but alfo comes from remote Places. Pliny (i) tells us of two Boys, the one Born in Asia, the other in France, who were wonderfully alike, and whom therefore the Merchant fet a prodigious Rate upon, and the Purchafers look'd upon nothing, in his whole Eftate, to be more valuable. For the Ambition of Mortals efteem thofe Things moft, which few Men have in Common with them; and on the other fide, thinks meanly of thofe, which are feen in the Hands of every one. Nay, fo perverfe we often are, as to efteem a Thing the more becaufe it is forbidden; its being forbidden whets our Curiofity. And therefore Lucian (k) with Reafon ridicul'd thofe, *Who in Winter load themfelves with Roses, and are pleas'd with them when fcarce and out of Season; but naufeate and defpife what is in Season, and agreeable to Nature.

But, generally we fet a great Value upon nothing, but what raifes us in fome Meafure above the Rank and Condition of others: and for this Reafon Honours particularly, are more valuable for being fcarce (l). Tho' indeed it proceeds from the Corruption and Pravity of Human Nature, that we value real Goods more or lefs, according as few or many poffefs them in Common with us. For my Goods are never

(a) See Acts VIII. 20. (b) Add. Decretum Gratiani, Cauf. 1. Quæft. 1, 2, 3. (1) Vid. Plin. Nat. Hift. l. 16. c. 4. (c) Vid. Janum Nictum Erythraeum, Pinocotheca 2. c. 29. (d) Ovid. de Arte Amandi, L. 2. v. 163. Secum habet ingenium, qui cum libet, accipe dicit. The Practice of the Chinese is otherwife, of whofe Examinations and Preferments, Vid. Neuhof. in Gen. defcrip. Sina. c. 3. Plin. N. Hift. l. 16. c. 4. 'Oaken Crowns were the noble Badge of the Soldier's Valour, but now of late are Marks of the Emperor's Clemency, fince, by Reafon of the Licentiousness of our Civil Wars, it feems meritorious not to kill a Subject. O happy Times! which have rewarded fuch noble Services with Honour only, and, when other Crowns were valued for the Gold they were made of, would not allow the Preferring a Subject to be rewarded with any Thing that might bear a Price, thereby clearly profefling, that they thought it a Sin even to fave a Subject for the fake of Lucre.

(e) Non bene conducti vendunt perjuriam testes, Non bene selecti iudicis arca patet. Turpe reos empti miseris defendere lingua,

Quod faciat magnas turpe tribunal oper. Turpe tori raditu census augere Paternos, Et faciem Lucro protituisse suum.

Ovid. Amor. lib. 1. El. 10. v. 37, &c.

Plutarch, in the Life of Romulus p. 25. talking of the Duty of Patrons towards their Clients, adds; 'Tis accounted a mean and sordid Thing for thofe who are Rich to accept of a Fee of thofe who are Poor. From whence the Cincian Law afterwards had its Original. Hic clamosi rabiosa fori Jurgia vendens improbus, iras & verba locat. Sen. Herc. fur. v. 171, &c. Vid. Quint. Inftit. Orat. l. 12. c. 9. The Roman Laws thought it mean to fet a Price upon Philofophy and Civil Knowledge. Vid. lib. 50. t. 18. leg. 1. f. 4, 5. D. de Extraordin. cognit. and Grot. in Flor. Spar. in h. l. and Quint. Inftit. Orat. l. 12. c. 7. where difputing whether a Price ought to be fet on Eloquence, among other Things, fays, It may be a Means of vendring Things Cheap to put a Price upon them.

(f) 'Whatsoever is neceffary for Mankind, the Divine Providence has contriv'd, that it fhould not be dear, or hard to be got, as are Pearls, Gold, Silver and other Things, which neither our Body, nor Nature requires: but as for thofe Things we cannot fafely be without, fhe has plentifully difpers'd them throughout the World. Vitruv. de Architect. l. 8. in the Preface. (g) Pyrron. Hypoth. l. 1. c. 14. p. 29. Ed. Genev. (h) 'The Egyptians do not permit their Paper-reed to grow in many Places, by which they procure a Scarcity, and confequently raife the Price, but hinder the common Ufe and Advantage of it. Strabo, l. 17. p. 550. Plato Euthydemo, p. 211. C. Ed. Wech. That which is fcarce is valuable, Water is not valued altho' the moft ufeul Thing in the World. Mamertin Paneg. Julian. c. 11. n. 3. Ed. Cellar. 'Curious Dainties are not valued for their Tafte, but for their being hard to be gotten.

(i) L. 7. c. 12. (k) In Nigrino. p. 38, 39. Ed. Amft. (1) Vid. Corn. Nep. Miltiade, c. 6. Cic. de Invent. l. 2. c. 39. The Rewards of Vertue ought to be chafte and facred, not to be communicated to wicked, or mean Perfons; for Things that are fcarce and difficult are recommended to Men by the Rewards that attend them.

the worse, because others possess the like; nor the better, because others want them. Thus my Health is not the less valuable to me, because others also enjoy theirs; nor the more, because others are sick. Nor is my Knowledge less worth, because others are knowing too; Nor would the Value of my Wisdom rise, should other People prove Fools. He therefore that prides himself in seeing others want the good Things which he is Master of, seems indeed to take Pleasure in other Men's Misfortunes: and on the other side, he that thinks his own Goods the worse, because others possess them in Common with him, seems to be moved with Envy.

(a) But indeed, as in many Things, so in this, the general course of Men's Inclinations deviates from right Reason. Hence it is, that the Luxury of Man has set most unreasonable Rates upon many things, which Human Nature could easily be without. Which some think were contriv'd on purpose, that there might be some Use in vast prodigious Riches. What mighty Rates some Pearls bear, Whose Goodness consists in such a Degree of Whiteness, Largeness, Smoothness and Weight; Qualities so hard to be match'd, (b)? Nay, the Folly of Men fancies there must be something extraordinary in what costs much. Heliogabalus order'd the Prices of the Dainties, provided for his Table, to be represented to him greater than really they were, for that, he said, created an Appetite to them (c). Janus Nicius Erythraeus (d) tells us of Tulips, that thirty Years ago (when he writ this) they lay upon the Top of the Alps without any Care or Notice taken of them: Yet when they were brought to Town, the People, fond of them for their Rarity, set such a Price upon them, as that every Root sold for above a hundred Crowns. But after they had encreas'd and grew common, their Price sunk so low, that hardly any Thing was cheaper. (e) For Mankind is so whimsical and silly, as to think those happy who possess Superfluities; rather than those who abound in all the Necessaries and Conveniencies of Life. And therefore it ought to be rank'd among the senseless Opinions of the common People, to value Things, either for their being new, or scarce, or hard to be gotten, or brought from far, unless their Goodness also, and their Usefulness recommend them (f). But those Things, that are of daily Use, and especially such as relate to Provision, Apparel, and Arms, rise in their Price, when they become necessary as well as scarce; as in a Dearth of Corn, or in a Siege, or in slow Voyages, where Hunger and Thirst are craving to be satisfied, and Life must be preserved upon any Terms (g). When Hannibal besieged Casilinum, a Mouse was sold for two hundred Pieces of Gold, and he that sold it died of Hunger, whereas he that bought it was preserv'd. The Prices of Artificial Things, besides the Scarcity of them, are much rais'd by the Neatness of the Art; (h) The Reputation of the Artificer adds Credit to some, and others are the more valuable for the Character of their former Possessor. As Lucian (i) mentions one, who had bought Epicetus's earthen Lamp at three hundred Denarii, hoping, no doubt, to get Epicetus's Wisdom, by studying by that Light. Thus the City Cusco in Peru was in so great Request, that even the Seed that grew near it, tho' really no better than any other, was yet of more Value, than that which grew elsewhere (k). In short, the Difficulty, the Elegancy, the Usefulness, Necessity of the Work, the Scarcity of Workmen, their being Masters in the Art (l), their not being under a

(a) See Numb. XI. 28, 29. Mark IX. 38, 39. (b) Plin. Nat. Hist. l. 9. c. 35. 'Pearls bear the greatest Price of any Thing; they were first brought to Rome when Alexandria was taken, not long before Sylla's Time; but a little after were so much in Fashion, that even ordinary Women affected to wear them; for they used to say, 'A Pearl to Women, when they appear'd in Publick, was as good as a Lictor. Idem. ibid. Some Jewels are so valuable that no Price can be set upon them. Id. l. 37. Proem. Our Coral amongst the Indians bears as great a Price, as their Jewels do amongst us. Idem. l. 32. c. 2. Ad. Idem. c. 17. 34. L. 10. c. 29. L. 12. c. 14. 17. 19. L. 13. c. 15. L. 37. c. 4. L. 6. c. 17. Of Silk. With so much Pains, and so far is it brought, that Women when they appear in Publick may be seen through. At this Day, Amber with us bears a moderate Rate, in the East 'tis vastly dear. (c) — magis illa juvant, quae plaris emuntur. Juv. Sat. 11. v. 16. Luxury has impos'd a Price upon the very Dregs that the Sea casts up. Curr. l. 8. c. 9. n. 19. — Old Plate receives a Value from the Fame of the Workmen, Brass from a few Mens folly. Sen. Consol. ad Helv. c. 11. (d) Pinacoth. l. 3. c. 17. & 24. In the Life of J. Barclay who was a great Admirer of them. (e) 'As our Desires are, so are our Esteem of Things; and there's no End of raising the Prices of Things, unless we first set Bounds to our Extravagancies, Cicero in Verrum. l. 4. c. 7. Chins and Earthen Wares are the dearer for being brittle. For 'tis an Argument of Riches, and a glorious Piece of Extravagancy to have a Thing that shall immediately be wholly destroy'd. Plin. l. 33. The Brittleness makes Crystal the dearer. For among unskilful People, the Danger, which ought to sink the Price, raises it. Sen. de Ben. l. 7. c. 9. Strab. l. 2 p. 87. Ed. Genev. Of precious Stones, that are so much valued, that those that have them not, are as happy as those that have them. (f) Vid. Charron de la Sageffe. l. 1. c. 39. num. 11. and l. 2. c. 10. num. 2. Agatharcid. de Mari rubro. c. 49. speaking of the Alilai and Cassandrini whose Country abounded in Gold, says, 'They bartered Gold for a tripple Quantity of Brass, but gave double for Iron. For they proportioned their Rates according to the Plenty, or Scarcity of the Commodities; in which we have not so much Regard to the Nature of the Thing, as the Necessity of its Use. (g) Plin. Nat. Hist. l. 8. c. 57. Quintil. Declam. 12. p. 176. Ed. Lug. Bat. 'In a very great Scarcity any Thing that can be bought is cheap. (h) In which L. Mummius was so ignorant, that when he had taken Corinth, and thereby got Possession of the Statues and Pictures drawn by the ablest Masters, he proclaimed to those whom he had hired to transport them into Italy, that if they lost them, they should find him new ones. Vell. Pat. l. 1. c. 13. (i) Adversus indoctum. p. 386. Ed. Amstel. (k) Garcilasso de la Vega Comment. Reg. l. 3. c. 20. (l) 'The Athenians had more need of good strong Roofs to their Houses, than the famous Ivory Statue of Minerva, yet I had rather be Phidias than the best of Carpenters. For a Man must be rated, not according to what he can do, but according to what Reputation he is in; especially, since few can Draw, or Carve finely: but any one is capable of being a Carpenter, or a Porter. Cic. in Bruto. c. 73. 'Thus Nicias gave a Talent for a Servant to look after his Silver Mines, Xen. Mem. Socrat. p. 435. in fin. l. 2.

Necessity of working, all contribute to the raising of the Price (a).

VII. But sometimes it happens, that some certain Things are valued at a high Rate, by some particular People only, which may be called the Price of Fancy (b). And this where Animals are the Object, proceeds from a sort of Acquaintance with them; (1) or, because they know how to fute themselves with our Humour; or because we have escaped some imminent Danger by their Assistance; or perhaps they are the Remembrancers of some signal Event. Besides, some Things are recommended by the Friend that gives them, so that we wou'd not part with them for several others of the same Goodness (c). Many also put a Value on Things because some great Man, whom they are willing to compliment, has express'd an Esteem for them. Thus this, or that Provision, or Apparel rises in its Price, when the King is pleas'd to be taken with it. But here some observe, that the Fancy of the Buyer ought not to raise the Price of the Commodity, unless some other Causes concur. The Roman Laws make no Allowance for the Fancy of the Party in the Restitution of Damage done by Chance (d); And yet Merchants frequently raise the Price when they see the Buyer fond of the Commodity. Diodorus Siculus (e) observes what an Advantage the Italian Factors made of the Drunkenness of the Gauls. They bought them Wine, and sold it at most unconscionable Rates; For they had a Boy for a Hogthead, and so exchange'd their Wine for a Butler.

However the Affection of the Seller may fairly raise the Price, if so be he signifies it to the Buyer; for to part with a beloved Thing, for the Sake of the Buyer, deserves some Consideration (f). Lastly, the Price of Things is sometimes enhanced by some vicious Habit of Mind, as Vain-Glory, Cruelty, and the like (g).

VIII. And these, always, raise the Prices of Things, as their Contraries always lower them. But, in order, to regulate the Prices of particular Things, pro hic & nunc, and to reduce them to a just Standard; we must remember, that in the State of Nature every one has power to put what Price he pleases upon his own Goods, as being, in that State, the sole and supreme Master of them. For, in this Case, should another prize my Goods, it would still be in my power to accept or reject it; and thus I should in the end put the Price upon them my self: and, though I lay never so extravagant a Rate upon them, no Man can have any Cause to complain; for, no one ought to be concern'd how much I magnify my Riches in my own Fancy: and they who think the Price too great, may let it alone. And therefore, if any one has a Mind to my Goods, 'tis fit I should put what Price upon them I please: as on the other side, should I force my Commodity upon another, I must take what the Buyer, who is indifferent, will be pleas'd to give me. Indeed, if any one, through ill Nature, or Hatred, or Envy, refuses a Man in want, either to sell at all, or, at least, sells upon hard unreasonable Terms, then, and only then, is there Cause to complain. From whence it follows, that in a State of Nature, the Price of every thing is to be determined by the Agreement of the Contractors; nor can any one be said to have offended against the Law of Commerce for making the best of his Market, provided he has not been Inhuman towards the Necessitous (h).

But in a regular Government the Prices of Things are determined; either by an Order from the Magistrate, or some Laws, or else by the common Judgment and Estimate of Men, together with the Consent of the Parties. The former may be called the Legal, the other the Natural Price (2). The Legal is always presum'd to be consonant to Justice and Equity, unless the contrary does evidently appear: for sometimes gross Ignorance, and more frequently, Hatred, or Favour towards the Buyer or Seller, or some other Corruption, or private Interest interposes. The Legal Price is fixt, as it were, in a Point, and admits of no Latitude, but the least Excess becomes Injustice. And when 'tis fixt (as most commonly it is) in Favour of the Buyer, the Seller cannot, in Justice, demand more; but the Buyer may, with the Consent of the Seller, sink below it; provided he does not fall short of the lowest Degree in the Natural Price: and the Seller may lawfully take less,

(a) That sort of Work is most artificial, which depends least upon Fortune; that the most sordid, which most defiles the Body; that the most servile, which is of most Labour to the Body; that the most ignoble, which requires the least Vertue. Arist. Polit. l. 1. c. 7. (11). And again, That Exercise, Art, or Discipline is to be reputed mean, that renders either the Body, or the Soul unfit for the Practice of Vertue. Pol. l. 8. c. 2. As for the more noble Arts, some are more worth than they cost; you purchase of a Physician Life and Health, Things invaluable; of a learned Tutor the Liberal Sciences, and the Adornment of the Mind. And therefore, in such Cases, we do not pay for the Things they teach us, but for their Labour, Sen. de Ben. l. 6. c. 15. (b) It was a Saying of a certain Arabian, Whatsoever is dear, although it be dear, yet, if I have a Fancy for it, it is not dear; nor can any Thing, that pleases, be said to cost too much. Leo Afric. l. 3. All Gifts are valued as they are acceptable to the Receiver. Liban. Declam. 41. p. 870. D. Ed. Paris. (1) See our Author's Abridgment, De offic. Hom. & Civ. Lib. 1. c. 14. l. 4.

(c) — Mihi lintheum remitte

Quod me non movet estimatione,

Verum est μνημόνων mei sodalis. Catullus, Carm. 12. 11, 12, 13.

— Acceptissima semper

Munera sunt, Author quæ pretiosa facit. Ovid. Epist. XVII. v. 71, 72.

(d) Vid. Lib. 9. t. 2. l. 34. D. ad L. Aquil. & Lib. 35. t. 2. Leg. 36. Ad Leg. Falcid. (e) L. 5. c. 26. p. 304. The same d. l. c. 17. relates, That the People of Balaeres valued one Woman at the Rate of four Men, they were so prone to Venerary. (f) Ad. l. 62. f. 1. l. 63. D. ad L. Falcidiam. (g) What Rates the old Gauls set upon the Heads of their Enemies, See in Diod. Sic. l. 5. c. 29. p. 307. and Strab. l. 4. (h) See Gen. XLI. 49. XLVII. 13. &c.

(2) That is, as Mr. Barbeyrac has it, the Ordinary or Current Price.

provided it does not tend to the Perjudice of others of the same Trade. But if the Price be fixt in Favour of the Seller, then the Buyer cannot lawfully press the Seller to take less, who yet, if he thinks fit, may take it; for any Man may recede from his own Right: However, in this Case, the Seller may take more, provided it does not exceed the highest Degree in the Natural Price. On Labour, the Price is generally fixt in Favour of the Labourer; on Commodities in Favour of the Buyer. In some Places, a more subtle Method is taken to prevent unreasonable Prices; as in Greece the Fishmongers were not permitted to sit, but obliged to sell their Fish standing, that so by the Tedioufness and Tirefomness of the Posture they might be forced to sell them while they were sweet, and at a moderate Rate.

IX. But the Natural Price, which is not fixt by Law, admits of some Latitude, within which more or less may be demanded and given (a). (1) By Reason of this Latitude they generally, divide the Natural Price into three Degrees, the lowest, or favourable, the middle, or reasonable, the highest, or rigorous: within which Degrees any Thing may be bought, or sold dearer, or cheaper. But, of what Extent this Latitude may be, it is not easy to give a Rule that will reach all Cases; But that may be said to be the just Price, which is generally agreed upon by those who sufficiently understand the Market and the Commodities (b).

X. In regulating this Natural Price, Regard is to be had to the Labour and Expence (2) of the Merchant in Importing and taking Care of his Goods; for upon this Ground it is that a Merchant can justify his selling so much dearer than he bought: But this Regard is only to be had to those Expences which they are usually put to; extraordinary Chances have nothing to do here. And therefore it can be no Reason for a Merchant to raise his Rates because he happened to break his Leg, or to fall sick, or because Part of his Goods were cast away, or stolen; unless such Accidents contribute to the Scarcity of the Commodity; much less can he bring in his own extravagant and superfluous Expences. But his Time, his Study, his Care, in getting, pre-servng, and sorting his Commodities, as also his Servant's Wages may fairly be rated by him. And it would be inhuman, and tend to the Discouragement of Industry to allow a Tradesman, or a Man of any other Calling, no more Gain than just enough to supply him poorly and sparingly with the Necessities of Life. The Difficulty also, and Length and Danger of the Voyage may be brought into the Account, as also the different Value of Moneys and Commodities in different Countries. Besides, the Way of Sale may alter the Case; for they who sell by Retail may demand somewhat more than those who sell by Wholesale; their Trouble being greater, and it being more advantageous to have a round Sum paid down at once, than to receive the same by little and little. But what sudden and frequent Alterations the Market admits of by Reason of the Plenty, or Scarcity of Buyers, Money, or Commodities, is well known. For the Scarcity of Money and Buyers proceeding from some particular Cause, meeting with a Glut of Commodities, Sinks the Price (c). As on the other side, the Plenty of Buyers and Money, or the Scarcity of the Commodity raises it (d) (3). Besides, it helps to lower the Price, when the Seller forces his Commodities upon us of his own accord, as if they lay upon his hands (e), for that proceeds from a Scarcity of Buyers, and besides, in this Case, the Purchaser has often no Occasion for the Thing, nor would buy it but that he thinks it a good Bargain: and indeed, in such a Case we often buy not so much for our own, as for the Seller's sake. And therefore, when Things are sold by Auction, or Inch of Candle, they often go off for less than otherwise they would sell for; it being the Condition of that sort of Sale, that the Ware should go to the highest Bidder: and yet, sometimes, the Warmth and Emulation of the Company rises above the ordinary Price: which is, indeed at all Times, rais'd by the Plenty of the Buyers. Lastly, the Seller ought to have Allowance made him for the Loss ensuing, or the Gain he foregoes by selling at that particular Time when the Buyer is Importunate: for it would be unreasonable to ex-

(a) Of this Price Seneca is to be understood when he says, What matter how much it is, since the Buyer and Seller agree upon it; the Value of Things is according to the Market, when you have commended them, they are worth so much as they can sell for and no more. De Benef. l. 6. c. 15. And Law 63. of Book XXXV. t. 2. of the D. ad L. Falcid. The Prices of Things are not fix'd according to the Fancy, or Use of particular People, but as they are valuable to every Body. See also Law 33. of B. IX. t. 2. of the D. ad L. Aquiliam. In some Places, (says Aristotle Nicom. 9. 1. towards the end.) The Laws allow no Action for voluntary Commerce; thinking it reasonable that the Creditor should intirely depend upon the Honesty of the Debtor. For they thought the Debtor fitter to judge how much ought to be paid, than the other. For many Things are differently rated by those that are in Possession, and those that desire to be in Possession of them: every one setting a great Rate upon his own. But a Return ought to be made according to the Opinion of him that is to make it, which perhaps ought to be adjusted not according to the Value he puts upon the Things, when in Possession of them, but according to the Value he puts upon them before he had them.

(1) Vid. Grot. L. 2. c. 12. f. 14. & Cicero. Verrin. de Signis. Qui modus est in his rebus Cupiditatis, idem est estimationis. (b) Hither may be referred that of Varro de Ling. lat. l. 4. Pretium est, quod estimationis emptioisque causa constituitur: dictum a peritis, quod hi soli possunt facere recte id. Yet Salmasius de Ujuris, ridicules this Derivation.

(2) See Grot. in the place above-cited. (c) Cheapness proceeds from a Multitude of Sellers. Tacit. An. 6. c. 17.

(d) Vid. Socrat. Hist. Eccles. l. 3. c. 17. in the beginning. (3) Mr. Barbeyrac here has added a Period taken out of our Author's Abridgment. De Offic. Hom. & Civ. B. I. c. 14. f. 6. where 'tis said, a high Price is set upon a thing, when 'tis sold only to please One importunate to have it, and without which Intreaty it would not have been sold.

(e) Especially, where Cato's Rule of good Husbandry is observed, which Plutarch relates in his Life, 'Nothing is cheap that is superfluous, but what we have no Occasion for, although 'tis sold for a Farthing it comes dear.' 'Tis a Proverb, Merx ultronea putet. Proffer'd Ware stinks.

pect me to part with my Goods, but upon such Terms as to be no loser by them. Besides, the Loss, or Gain by Reason of slow, or prompt Payment, may be, and indeed always is, brought into the Account: for a Day is part of the Price, which is more if paid down upon the Nail, than if paid some time after; for, in the mean time, I might, perhaps, turn and apply it another way to my Advantage (a). And therefore, (b) Polybius commends the Generosity of the Younger Scipio, for paying his Sisters their Portions forthwith, which he was not obliged to do till two, or three Years after, and that too at Rome, a City where no Man gives away any Thing at all, or pays a Penny before it be due; so diligent is every Body in getting Money, and so much Advantage do they make of the Time.

Lastly, we may add, what Themistocles, when he was going to sell his Farm, gave a publick Advertisement of (c): That he had a good Neighbour. A House, says Sadus (d), that has got such a Neighbour as you, (speaking to a Rascally Jew) may possibly sell for Ten Drachmæ of bad Money, but there is Hopes that when you are gone, it may be worth an Hundred. A good Neighbour therefore raises the Price of a Farm: especially, in a Country, where the good old way of the Spartans obtains (e), Who made free with their Neighbours Servants, Dogs and Horses as if they were their own: And when a Man wanted any Thing that his Neighbour was Master of, he need but to open his Store-house, and to furnish himself from thence with what he had Occasion for. The Cause of raising the Price of Slaves in Justin was very unusual and not a little owing to Cruelty. The Price of the Theban Captives was rais'd, says he, not for their being serviceable to the Buyer, but out of Hatred to the Enemy (f).

XI. But, when most Nations had degenerated from their primitive Simplicity, 'tis easy to imagine, that this proper Price could not suffice for the Dispatch of Business and Commerce which daily increased. For, Commerce consisted in Bartering only, and Work was paid in Work, or else in Commodities. But after our Luxury had increas'd our Necessities, and we, not content with the Produce of our own Soil, had a mind to the Delicacies of other Nations, it was hard for any one to possess such Goods, for which any other would be willing to barter those Commodities that we wanted, or which, indeed, could be exactly equivalent to them. And, in a well regulated State where the Subjects are divided into various Orders and Ranks, there must needs be several Sorts of Men, which would not be able to subsist, or at least very hardly, did the simple Way of Bartering still prevail. As 'tis very evident that those Nations, who are yet unacquainted with the Use of Money, are perfect Strangers to the more improv'd and cultivated Way of Living (g).

XII. And therefore the most civiliz'd Nations by Agreement, thought fit to set a certain Eminent Price upon some particular Thing, as a Measure and Standard for the Price of every Thing else: by the Help of which one might procure any saleable Commodity, and Commerce might be carried on more conveniently. To this Purpose, Aristotle (h) discourses excellently, When Want, says he, had made Bartering necessary, any simple Exchange of Commodities was sufficient to answer our present Exigencies. But because we knew not what, or how much we might have Occasion for hereafter, the Use of Money was introduc'd; which is, as it were, a Pledge, or Security, on which Men have agreed to impose such a Power, as to make it capable of procuring any saleable Commodity. And in another Place (i), When Men's Necessities were to be supply'd from abroad, by importing what they wanted and exporting what they abounded with, it was necessary to introduce the Use of Money. For every Thing necessary for Life could not easily be convey'd backward and forward. And therefore to carry on such a Barter, they consented to give and receive such a Thing, at such a Value, as Iron, Silver, or any thing else: which, at first, was determin'd by Quantity, or Weight: but after, had a Stamp put upon it, to save the Trouble of Weighing; for the Stamp is a Token and Demonstration of such a Quantity. Again (k), because an Architect deserves more for his Work than a Shoemaker does for his; and it would be difficult for these Two to barter together, it being unreasonable to give a House for a Pair of Shoes; therefore to render such Things saleable, Mankind

(a) Vid. Mart. l. 6. ep. 30. (b) In excerptis Peirescianis. Add. Grot. l. 2. c. 12. f. 14. (c) Plut. Apothegm. p. 185. D. (d) Rosar. Perf. c. 4. (e) Mentioned by Plutarch Institutis Laconicis. p. 238. Ed. Wech.
 (f) Just. l. 11. c. 4. (g) Vid. Busbeq. Epist. 3. where he treats of the Manners of the Colchi. Add. l. 1. print. lib. 18. r. 1. D. de contrah. Empt. And therefore Maximus Tyrius, Diff. 36. p. 344. Ed. Lugd. A. 1630. is in a sweet Dream, when he says, 'Meat, Drink, and Raiment and other Necessaries Men provide, by bartering Brass and Iron; and those of more Value, by Gold and Silver. But this is through the Corruption of Mankind: for without any Use of Metals they might communicate gratis to one another, by this most just Measure, that he who wants, should provide for his Necessity, by borrowing of him that abounds, and he that abounds should lend upon no other Condition, than that he in his Turn should be serviceable to him. (h) Nicom. lib. 5. c. 8. Money was found out as a common Measure, to which all other Things should be referred. Nicom. 9. cap. 1. (i) Pol. lib. 1. 6. (9).
Nicom. lib. 5. cap. 8. 'All Things that are barter'd ought to be capable of being compared together, to which Use Money is subservient, which in a manner is a Medium, for it measures all Things: For Money was substituted, by Consent, and is, therefore, called νόμισμα as being such, not by Nature, but νόμος by the Law; it being in the Power of Man, to alter it or make it useless. Every Thing ought to have a Price set upon it, for so there will be continual Traffick, and where that is, there must be Society. Money therefore, as a Medium, renders Things commensurable, and consequently equal. For there can be no Society where there is no Exchanging; nor Exchanging, where there is no Equality; nor Equality, but where Things are commensurable. (k) Magn. Moral. lib. 1. c. 34. Rhet. lib. 1. cap. 16. 'Money is, as it were, the Rate of the Worth of other Things. And therefore all others are procurable by it.

have thought fit, by common Consent, to make use of a Piece of Silver, which they call Money: and this, for the Maintenance of Civil Communication, they have agreed should be accepted for any Commodity according to the Value and Price of it.

XIII. For this Purpose, the more noble and scarce Metals, Gold (a), (1) Silver and Brass seemed most proper. For as we accept a Man of known Credit and Value, and not every common Fellow for a Surety, so no Man would part with his Goods, which perhaps he had acquired with great Labour and Industry, for what he might meet with any where, as a handful of Dust or Sand; it was necessary therefore Money should consist of such a Matter as might be convenient for keeping, and by Reason of its Scarcity should have the Value of many Things crowded and united in it. These Qualities are found in Metals, which are also of such a close compacted Substance, as not easily to be worn out, and yet capable of being divided into minute Pieces, both which are absolutely necessary for that which is design'd to be a Standard and common Measure in Commerce. But since this Use of Money does not follow from the Nature of Things, but the common Consent and Agreement of Men (b), any thing else, in Cases of Exigency, may serve in its stead. Thus Leather, Paper, and such like, with some certain Stamp upon them, have often pass'd for Money, in times of Necessity; which, when those Emergencies were over, have been exchange'd for the common Species (c). Thus in the Kingdom of Congo and Tombutto in Africa (d), and in many Places of North America, a certain sort of Sea-shell is in Use, instead of Money. The Apalachites, a People of Florida (e) use certain black and white Grains for Money. The small Money of the Province of Canichu are Lumps of Salt (f), which are also currant among the Abyssines; (g) Though certainly such sort of Money is capable of carrying on but a very small Trade. In the Kingdom of Siam the great Money is Silver, the small a certain sort of Shell (h). And here, by the way, we may observe, that, in Congo, they look upon Iron to be a nobler Metal than Gold, or Silver, because these are of little Use, whereas that affords most convenient Instruments for the Service of Life. Among the Ethiopians Brass was the most scarce and precious Metal (i). And indeed laying aside the Use of Money, Mankind could better be without Gold and Silver than without Iron. The Peruvians (k) thought themselves happy that the Europeans help'd them to Iron Instruments. And one of their Grandees could not enough admire a Pair of Sizzers brought over by the Spaniards, saying, Had the Spaniards brought nothing else, but Razors, Sizzers, Combs and Looking-Glasses, it would have easily oblig'd them to give all their Gold and Silver in return. For before that, they shaved themselves with Knives of Stone, not without great Pain. As for their Gold and Silver and Jewels they gave them their King, not as Tribute but as a Gift (l). In a certain Country of Arabia, they bartered an equal Weight of Gold and Silver for Iron, for they abounded in the former Metals and wanted the latter (m). Heretofore these Metals us'd to pass by Weight (n); insomuch that still, among some Nations, the Money is denominated from the Names of Weight. But that growing inconvenient it became customary every where for the several Princes of each Nation, to coin Money of a certain Size, and to Stamp it with a certain Mark, to determine its Value (o).

XIV. But although the Value of Gold and Silver and Money depend upon the Agreement of Men; yet the supreme Magistrate has not a Power at large of determining it as he thinks fit: but must have regard to some certain Considerations. And First, all Nations, that we know of, agree that Brass is less worth than Silver, and Silver than Gold; and that Silver bears such a certain Proportion to Gold (p). Again, Money is not design'd for the Convenience of Commerce between Natives only, but also between them and Foreigners. And therefore, if the Magistrate shall raise the Money extravagantly, he would render it useless in our Traffick with Foreigners. Indeed among Subjects of the same Nation (q), Neither the Banker, nor the Farmer can refuse the

(a) Which why it is esteemed the most noble, may be seen in Plin. Nat. Hist. lib. 33. cap. 3. about the end.

(1) Vid. etiam lib. 34. c. 14. Plin. N. H. & Lucian. in Charon. p. 350. Ed. Amst. where Iron is prefer'd to Gold.

(b) Add. Philostr. in vita Apollonii Tyan. lib. 2. cap. 3. (c) Vid. Polyæn. Stratag. lib. 3. cap. 10. n. 1. of Timotheus and Demetrius. Seneca de Beneficiis, lib. 5. cap. 14. at the End. (d) In Leo. Afric. lib. 7. (e) Concerning which, vid. Rochefort Descript. Antillarum Insul. Part 2. c. 8. n. 8. (f) As Paul of Venice relates, lib. 2. cap. 38.

(g) Franc. Alvarez. cap. 46. (h) Vid. Jod. Schouten, in Descript. Regn. Siam. Add. Polydor. Virgil. de Invent. rer. lib. 2. cap. 20. Alexand. Neapol. lib. 4. cap. 15. Budeus ad l. 1. D. de contrah. empt. (i) Herodotus Thalia concerning the Ethiopians. (k) Garcilass. Comment. reg. l. 1. 21. (l) Idem ibid. l. 5. c. 7. Add. Th. Mor. Utopia, l. 2.

(m) Diodor. Sic. l. 3. c. 45. Add. Strab. l. 16. Iron is therefore said to be better than Gold, because this is defended by that. Lucian. in Charon. d. l. And Plin. Nat. Hist. lib. 34. cap. 14. (n) Vid. Plin. lib. 33. cap. 3.

(o) From whence that of Juvenal, Sat. 14. v. 291. Concisum argentum in Titulos, faciesque minutas. Alex. Severus gave Order, 'That the Pieces of Money of Two, Three, Four and Ten Pound weight, up to those of Fifty and an Hundred, which Heliogabalus had coin'd, should be melted down and no longer pass in Payment; and that for the future the Money should be denominated from the Quantity of the Metal. For he observed that the Emperour was at a greater Expence in Largeesses, by being under a Necessity of giving away Ten Shillings, nay sometimes Thirty, Fifty or a Hundred in a single Piece, because he had not a sufficient Stock of smaller Pieces to distribute. Lamp. c. 39.

(p) 'If for half a Pound of Gold a Man receives a double Proportion of Silver, he receives only a double, whereas he ought to receive a Twelfth Proportion, Plat. in Hipparcho, p. 514. C. Ed. Wech. In the League that the Romans made with the Ætoliens, they were to give one Pound of Gold for ten of Silver, Polyb. excerpt. leg. l. 18. 5. Add. Bod. de Rep. l. 6. c. 3. p. 1071, &c. (q) That of Arrian takes place, Dissert. Epist. l. 3. c. 7.

King's Money; but whether they like it or no, must take it in Payment. But between us and Foreigners, should not the Quantity and Goodness of the Metal be so adjusted, as to render our Money, at least, as good as that of the Country with which we traffick, it would be a great Clog and Hinderance to Merchandize, and would reduce us again to the Necessity of Bartering, which, of it self would not be sufficient to carry on Trade, unless we export as much, or more, than we import; and Foreigners stand in need of our Commodities and we not of theirs (a). And because, where our Estate lies in Movables, it chiefly consists in Money, it must apparently be much less'n'd, when that admits of so much Alloy as to discover its own Baseness in its Looks (1). Polyænus (b) relates of Leucon, that he commanded all his Subjects to bring in their Money, to have it new coined; and, when he had coin'd it, he order'd every Piece to go for Double, and so gain'd half of the Money without doing Wrong to his People. Indeed such a Thing, as this, may admit of some Excuse, in Case of Necessity, if remedied when that is over. But what Zonaras, and others tell of Nic. Phocas cannot be palliated. For he having coin'd a Quantity of light Money, besides the Weighty that was Currant, would receive none but the Weighty into his Treasury, but made all his Payments in the light (c).

Some Legislators, indeed, have taken this Course to extirpate Covetousness, Luxury, and such Vices, by introducing base Money. Lycurgus (d) cry'd down all the Gold and Silver of Sparta, and allowed Nothing to pass but Iron, having assign'd a small Price to a vast Weight and Bulk of it; so that 10l. would take up a large Room, and require a Team of Oxen to bring it Home. By this Means, he utterly rooted out several Sorts of Villany. For who would steal, or cheat, or receive a Bribe which could not be conceal'd: and which no Man was the better for having in his Possession, since it could not be apply'd to any other Use. For, they say, he made all the Iron red hot and quenched it in Vinegar, which, by that Means, became Brittle and good for Nothing. By the same Methods were all idle superfluous Arts rooted out, when Nothing could be got by them: for the Iron Money not passing in Greece, none of the foreign Delicacies could be imported from thence into Sparta, which cut the very Nerves and Sinews of Luxury. Lysander (e) brought back Gold and Silver into Sparta, and with them Avarice. Indeed among other Nations too, Covetousness crept in with the use of Money. For as long as their Riches consisted in Corn, Cattle, and such like, the Cumberfomness of their Goods, together with the Difficulty of managing and preserving that which was so liable to Corruption, was sure, at length, to put a Stop to their Boundless Desire of encreasing their Store. But now since the Use of Gold and Silver has been found out, a Covetous Man may embrace his Millions. Plato (f) in his Common-wealth, to take off his Subjects from too great a Thirst after Lucre, commanded, That no private Man should have any Gold or Silver: That the Money which the Subjects make use of, should be such as passes no where else. But yet that the Publick should have in Possession some of the currant Money of Greece, in Case they should have an Occasion of waging War, of Travelling, or of sending an Embassy; that Travellers, at their Return home, should pay into the Publick, all the foreign Money they bring with them, and receive that of their own Country for it. The great Cham at Cambalu put his Royal Stamp upon a vast Sum of Money made of the Bark of Mulberry-Trees, which no Man in his Dominions, upon pain of Death dared to refuse, or to coin and use other (g). The Foreigners too, who traded into those Parts for the Gold, Silver and Jewels which they imported, were forc'd to take that Money which they converted into the Commodities of the Country, and so exported again. By which Means that Prince heaped up a prodigious Quantity of Gold and Silver. The Persians call the leather Money, which an unjust King had imposed upon them, Schebreena (i. e.) Money impos'd on the Subject at the Pleasure of the Prince. The Memory of which has made such an Impression upon them, that when they would denote the Injustice of any King, they express it by saying, He imposes Leather Money upon his People (h). On the other hand, the Care that the Venetian Senate took of their Subjects, is much to be commended: For when the small Money had been debas'd, and a vast Quantity of it crept in among them, that Calamity not being removable any other way, the Senate made a Decree, That whosoever within such a time, should bring in their Bad Money should have it exchange'd for Good. Upon which Account, above Five Hundred Thousand Crowns were disburs'd out of the Treasury (i).

XV. But since Money is the common Measure of the Value of other Things, its Value ought, by no means to be alter'd, but where the Interest of the Publick does evidently require it. And then too, the more moderate the Alteration is, the less will the Peoples Accounts be confounded. And therefore, such a sort of matter was chosen for the carrying on of Commerce, the Publick and Unalterable Value of which, constantly apply'd to the same Quantity, might be able to relieve and supply all the Inconveniencies that were found in simple Barter (a).

(a) Vid. Polyb. l. 6. c. 47. about the end. (1) See Mr. Barbeyrac's Note upon this Section. (b) Lib. 6. c. 9. Add. Bodin. de Rep. l. 6. c. 3. Greg. Tholosan. Syntag. juris univ. l. 36. c. 2. (c) Add. Jo. Mariana, Hist. Hispan. l. 15. c. 9. (d) Plutarch in Lycurg p. 44, 45. Ed. Wech. (e) Vid. eundem in Lysandr. (f) De Legibus, lib. 5. p. 848. (g) See M. Paul. of Ven l. 2. c. 21. (h) G. Gentius ad Sadi Rosarium Persicum, c. 3. Add. Buchanan Hist. Scot. l. 12. p. 450. (i) Andr. Maurocenus Hist. Venet. l. 14. p. 641. We may observe out of Plin. Nat. Hist. lib. 6. cap. 22. That the King of Taprobanes very much admired the Justice of the Romans in that Denarii, which he had taken, were all of equal Weight, whereas the Stamp made it appear that they had been coined at different Times, Vid. Solin. Cap. 66.

But yet as to the Unchangeable Value of Money, we must observe what Grotius (1) asserts, That the Currency of Money is not naturally derived from the Matter only, nor yet from this, or that particular Form and Denomination, but from its Capacity of being compar'd with all other Things, or at least, all those that are most necessary. The Meaning of which place is, that it does not proceed from the Matter (2) of the Money only, v. g. its being Gold or Silver, that a certain Piece goes, pro hic & nunc, for so much, and is equivalent to such a Commodity, (for the Currency of Money does not only depend upon one Piece's being equivalent to another of the same Quantity and Quality, (for all Consumable Commodities are such,) but upon its containing Virtually the Prices of every thing else,) nor from any particular Denomination, as that it is call'd a Ducat, Crown, Dollar, or Florin; nor from its having such a certain Stamp (b); but from its Capacity of being compar'd, in respect of Plenty, or Scarcity with other things, especially those that afford the more Necessary Supports of Human Life. Now Land does this; for from it, mediately or immediately, proceed most Things, that Human Life subsists upon. And the Product of it being one Year with another pretty equal, it may be presum'd to have its Natural Value fix'd and certain, to which the Prices of other Things, at least, of such as have not received their Value from the Luxury, or Folly of Man, are refer'd as to a Standard. For 'tis very reasonable that the Prices of such things, as are the Product of Land, or are maintain'd by it, should be regulated by the Price of the Land it self. Since therefore the Land, every where, is in private Hands (most Men's Estates being now in Land) the Value of Money must needs rise, or fall according as it is scarce, or plentiful, in Proportion to Land. For every civiliz'd Nation, consisting chiefly of two Sorts of Men, the Farmer and the Tradesman, or Labourer, if in a great Plenty of Money, Land, and its Product should sell cheap, it must needs break the Farmer: and on the other Hand, should Money be scarce, and Land and its Product dear, it must needs beggar the Tradesman. Which in Fact we find true; for when a plentiful Harvest makes Corn cheap, if the Work of the Tradesman, and those that earn their Living by their Labour, stand at the same Rate as in less fruitful Years, the Farmer is found to get little by his plentiful Crop. And the same Inconvenience presses the Tradesman and Labourer when Corn is dear; if still their Labour keeps its old Price. Since therefore, in indifferent Years, the Commerce between the Labourer and the Farmer, is best adjusted, and there is then least Complaint between them; it is evident, that in fixing the Price of Money, the greatest Regard ought to be had to Land, especially where the Country does not subsist upon Merchandise only, but chiefly upon its own Produce.

XVI. From what has been said we may judge, whether a Farm, that was rated at a hundred Pounds two hundred Years ago, ought not, ceteris paribus, to be rated at more now; and whether the Wages that were large enough then, are not, in all Reason, a little too scanty now. For it will not suffice to say, that the Pieces of Money have the same Weight, Goodness, Name and Shape which they had formerly. But we must consider, that within these two hundred Years, such a vast Quantity of Gold and Silver has been imported into Europe from Africa and the Indies, not to mention the many Silver-Mines of Europe it self, that the Value of Money has, by degrees, sunk very much; infomuch that (as Bodin (c) observes) Commodities bear ten times the Price they did formerly, by Reason of the Plenty of Gold and Silver. And therefore the old Price of Land and Wages ought to rise, ceteris paribus, in the same Proportion (d). For suppose commerce to be carried on by pure Barter in any Country, which affords very little Wine, but abundance of Corn; here, for a small Parcel of Wine, we shall receive a great deal of Corn: but if, by good Management, the Vineyards should happen to produce a larger Vintage, without doubt, for the same Quantity of Corn, we must give a greater Proportion of Wine than formerly. In like manner when Money is scarce, in Comparison of other Things, a great many Things will be purchas'd with a little Money: but Money, on the other hand, increasing, more of it must be given for the same Things. For since the Metal as to its Natural Price may be, and often is, brought into Commerce, as well as other Commodities, its Value must rise and fall according to the Scarcity or Plenty of it. And the Eminent Price of Money must, necessarily, follow the Natural Price of the Metal: for it is unreasonable that a Quantity of Silver, consider'd as a Commodity, should bear a very different Price from what it does when consider'd as Money. For so the same Thing, consider'd as its own Measure, would be greater, or less than it self, consider'd as the Thing measured. And this is the Reason why, when the Prices of almost every Thing else have been alter'd by Reason of the Plenty of Money, Gold and Silver have still kept their old Price, an Ounce of Silver being worth about a Crown now, as well as formerly. For if the Price of

(a) Vid. lib. 18. t. 1. l. 1. D. de contrah. empt.

(1) B. 2. c. 12. f. 17.

(2) Vid. leg. ubi supr.

(b) Vid. l. 1. D. de contrah. empt. ubi supr. Money is of use, not so much, for its Substance; as its Quantity. Also lib. 46. t. 3. l. 94. f. 1. D. de Solution. In Money the Species is not so much consider'd as the Quantity.

(c) De Rep. l. 6. c. 2. p. m. 1028.

(d) Add. Val. Max. lib. 4. c. 3. f. 12.

Bullion, like the Prices of other Things, had been v. g. quadrupled, an Ounce of Silver now would cost four Crowns, so that little would be got by Coining Money.

When therefore the Price of a Thing happens to be changed, we must carefully distinguish, whether that Change be made in the Value of the Thing, or in the Value of Money. The former happens when the Plenty of Money, standing as it was, the Commodity begins to be more plentiful, or scarce, than usual; the latter, when the Commodity remaining as usual, the Plenty of Money has increas'd, or decreas'd: Thus when in a Plentiful Season, I can buy a Bushel of Wheat for one Crown, which, in a Dearth I cannot have under Three, the Reason is because the Value of Wheat, and not of Money, is chang'd; but when a Farm now lets for two hundred Pounds, which an Age ago let but for an Hundred; the Value, not of the Farm, but of the Money is alter'd (a). But although Money admits of vast Changes, and a Common Measure ought to be fix'd and unalterable, Money, nevertheless, is capable of being made a common Measure. For this Change in Money, is never so sudden, as in other things, which depend very much upon the Uncertainties of the Weather, Storms and other Casualties; but the Value of it is lessen'd by such insensible Degrees, that we do not perceive it while it decreases, but, after a long time, find that it has decreas'd (b).

(a) 'The Royal Treasure, being brought into the City, at the Alexandrine Triumph, caused such a Plenty of Money, that the Interest of it sinking very much (Orosius says half in half) the Price of Land was rais'd, Sueton. in August. 42. Add. Joseph. de Bello Judaico, lib. 6. c. 32. Franc. Lopez de Gomera Hist. Gen. Ind. cap. 117.

(b) Add. Jac. Godofredi Dissert. de mutatione & augmento Monetæ aureæ.

CHAP. II.

Of Contracts in General, that presuppose the Price of Things.

WE come now to treat of such Contracts as presuppose Property and Price. And first, we will enquire into the Difference between Simple Pacts and Contracts. Hobbes (a) defines a Contract to be the Action of two, or more, making over their Right to one another. But since in every Contract, either both Parties perform their Bargain upon the Spot, so as neither trusts the other; or one performs and the other is trusted: or neither performs, but each trusts the other; To the first of these only, he gives the general Name of Contract: The other two Sorts, where either one, or both Parties are trusted, he calls Pacts. But this Difference does not concern the intrinsic Nature of Contracts and Pacts, but regards the Execution of them only: and 'tis against common Sense that a Sale, v. g. where the Goods are deliver'd for ready Money, should be call'd a Contract, but where the Goods are deliver'd, and the Money not paid 'till some Time after, should be call'd only a Pact.

II. The Roman Lawyers almost all agree in making Pact the general term which comprehends all the affairs, wherein Men are concern'd with one another, and (b) they define it in general to be, The Agreement of two, or more in the same Thing. Then they divide Pact into Pact properly so call'd, and Contract; the former is, when the Object is some Matter of no Consequence, and, in its own Nature, incapable of bearing an Action in the Civil Court. This they again divide into Simple Pact, and not Simple, which latter they again subdivide into Legal and Additional (c). They say farther, that an Agreement may become more than a Simple Pact, either by its own intrinsic Nature, or by the external Confirmation of the Law: for it is that, that properly renders Agreements Legal Pacts. Moreover, They tell us, that this intrinsic Nature may be of two Sorts, for some do not retain the general Name of Agreements, but are called by some particular Name of Contract; others, altho' of no particular Denomination, or Form, yet exceed the Limits of Simple Pact, by having a Matter of Consequence for the Object of them, as the Performance of a Promise, the Delivery of Goods, or the Doing of Work; and these are properly Contracts, which by their own Force effectually oblige; and which, in Justice and Equity, bear an Action. Yet they add, that Simple Pacts may be made Actionable, by Consent of the Parties; and Pacts added to such Contracts as admit of Equity, partake of the Nature and Force of Contracts (1).

III. But since Pacts are not, in their own Nature, Actionable in the Civil Court, and 'tis our Business to explain the Force they have in their own Nature, we can't therefore follow this Division so closely. For 'tis evident, that the Law may deny Agreements, even in Matters of Consequence, an Action in the Civil Court (d). (2) But as to what the Roman Law says, that Simple Pacts admit of no Action, we must distinguish between such as are Affirmative, and such as are Negative. The Force of Negative Pacts, (where the Agreement is, not to demand) is both in the Natural and Civil Law, not to be productive of, but to exempt from an Action:

(a) De Civ. c. 2. § 9. (b) L. 2. t. 14. l. 1. f. 2. D. de Pactis. (c) Ubi obiter monendum cordatioribus recte abstinere a vocabulo Pactorum vestitorum. Non enim quia dicitur e. g. ex nuda gratia, ex nuda benevolentia, etiam dicendum fuerit ex gratia vestita. (1) See Mr. Barbeyrac's Notes upon this Section. (d) To this purpose says Strabo, l. 15. p. 488. in the beginning. 'A Trust of Charge cannot be recovered by Law; Witnesses and Seals signify nothing; for 'tis but a bare Trust. Sen. De Benef. l. 3. c. 15. Wishes 'That no Debts had the Benefit of the Law, but were left to depend entirely on the Honesty of the Party. (2) See Grat. B. II. c. 18. f. 10.

(1) For since they are design'd in Favour of the Debtor, that Nothing may be demanded of him, they can be of no other Use, than to keep off the Demand of the Creditor, i. e., to exempt from an Action. But as for Simple Affirmative Pacts, they do not want, in themselves, a Power of obliging (a). But the Reason why the Roman Law did not make them Actionable, was, to prevent a vast Multitude of Law-suits; especially, considering that some of these Pacts proceeded from Unadvisedness, (for else they might have been made in Form of Law) and others were of no Use, as tending to no Consequence, (b) when put in Execution. Thus if any should agree, not to Wash their Hands, or Comb their Head, or change their Linnen for such a Time (as some Slovens have done) what need would there be to trouble a Magistrate upon the Breach of such Agreements: Which indeed are scarce allowable by the Law of Nature.

IV. In my Opinion, the Difference between Pact and Contract may be best taken from the Object, so as to call that Contract which concerns those Things and Actions that are the Subject of Traffick, and so presuppose Property and Price; and that Pact, by which we Covenant about other Things. By this Means Pacts, strictly speaking, will take in all Negative Agreements, by which we Covenant not to do, or not to demand, what otherwise we might do, or demand: As also those Agreements that have, for their Object, the Exercise of our Natural Faculties, so far as they barely tend to the promoting mutual Profit and Advantage, consider'd merely by themselves, without any Regard to Price, or any valuable Consideration; in a Word, when we agree to do some Work that is not Mercenary: Tho' some Agreements there are, which not being conversant about Things, may indifferently be called either Pacts or Contracts, as that of Matrimony.

V. All Contracts may be divided into three Sorts. First, Those that lay an Obligation upon one Party * only, which Condition cannot be changed by any Thing ex post facto; as in the Loan of a consumable Commodity, and Stipulation. Secondly, Those that equally oblige both Parties †, as in Buying and Selling, Letting and Renting, Partnership, &c. Thirdly, Those of a Middle-Nature, as the Loan of a Thing not consumable, a Trust, a Pledge, &c. Which naturally, as appears from the principal End of the Contract, oblige me only that am the Receiver; nor can they originally affect the Giver. But Accidents may fall out so as to lay an Obligation upon him also: as if I shou'd be at necessary Expences for the Thing, or suffer Damage by it, for which the Owner ought to be answerable. In this Case the Expences are to be repaid, and the Damage made good.

VI. Again, The Roman Lawyers frequently divide Contract (2) into Real, Consensual, Literal, and Verbal. The Real is so call'd, not because it is conversant about some real Thing, for all Contracts are so; but because a Pre-delivery of some real Commodity, is necessary to intitle us to a demand of that, which gives this Contract its Denomination (c). Thus I must have received something of my Creditor before I can stand obliged as a Debtor (d): nor can a Trust, or Loan be demanded, before it has been deliver'd to me. But, by the way, the Contract of Lending is one Thing; A Pact, or Promise to lend, another. A Trust, one Thing; a Promise to take in Charge, another.

Consensual are so call'd (3) (not because they alone require the Parties Consent) but because they immediately oblige, upon each Parties declaring his Consent, by proper Signs. Nor is it necessary, that some Thing should be first delivered, or some Work first done.

A Verbal Contract, or Stipulation, (4) as it consists in usual Forms of Asking and Answering Questions, is unknown to the Law of Nature.

Nor is it more agreeable to that Law, that a Man who has not receiv'd a Thing, should be oblig'd by bare Writings, (5) as much as if he had. But yet, there is good Reason why this should obtain in the Roman Law: For since the Magistrate cannot be satisfy'd of the Truth of a Debt, but by Instruments and other Proofs, when Writings appear owning the Debt, he must presume upon it, till the Contrary be prov'd. Indeed there are no Contracts, but what may be express'd in Writing; and this may be done two Ways; for either the Contract may be made, and the Consent of the Parties declar'd in Writing; and, in this Case, the Contract is then finished, when the Writings are, in all Respects, perfected; which obtains chiefly in Consensual, and such Sort of Contracts: Or else the Writing is only an Evidence of a Contract, already finish'd. Which last is to be presum'd, if the Case be doubtful (e).

VII. Again, Contracts are divided into Named and Nameless. The former Sort are those, which by reason of their daily Use, have a particular proper Name assign'd them, expressive of the Form and Contents of the Business; and which being mention'd, immediately signifies what was done: (for altho' Bartering, which is reckoned amongst the Nameless Contracts, seems to have a Name, yet 'tis a general one, and does not express, whether it be the Contract of Goods for Goods, Buying, Selling, or any other) And therefore in the Roman Law, these had certain fix'd Forms of proceeding; whereas others of less frequent Use, containing no more than what was expressly mention'd, had no Proper Form of their own, but one accommodated to the Thing, and therefore an Action, upon Account of these, was always express'd in a certain Form of Words (a).

(1) Nuda pactio obligationem non parit, sed parit Exceptionem, D. Lib. 2. t. 14. De Pactis, Leg. 1. f. 4. (a) See above l. 3. c. 5. f. 9, 10, 11. (b) That this is the Signification of the Word Causa, so often made use of by the Civilians is plain from Plaut. Asinar. Act. 3. Scen. 1. v. 17. Sola ego in castris ubi quiesco omnis familia causa consistit, i. e. omne emolumentum quod ex familia capis. (*) εὐνομία. (†) δίκη. (2) Obligationum quae ex contractu sunt, quatuor sunt species. Aut enim re contrahuntur, aut verbis, aut literis, aut consensu. Instit. l. 3. t. 14. De Obligat. (c) Vid. Lib. 2. t. 14. l. 17. D. de Pactis. (d) Add. Val. Max. l. 8. c. 2. f. 2. (3) Vid. Institut. Lib. 3. t. 23. De Obligat. ex Consensu. (4) Vid. Institut. ubi sup. t. 16. (5) Vid. Institut. ubi sup. t. 22. (e) Vid. Gror. l. 2. c. 16. f. 30. and hereafter in c. 5. f. 2. in fin. ibiq. not.

VIII. The Division of Contracts into † Gainful and * Chargeable, makes most for our Purpose, whereof the first brings some Advantage to one Party gratis, as in the Case of a Loan, Commission, or Charge. (1) The latter binds both to an equal Share of the Burthen; for here we act, or give, in order to receive an equivalent. Upon this, seems to be founded the distinction of Contracts into those that admit of Equity, and those that are tyed up to the Rigour of the Law. In the former the Magistrate has Liberty to weigh and estimate the Thing, according to Equity and Conscience; in the latter he is oblig'd, right, or wrong, to proceed according to the Stated Forms of Law. Now Reason tells us, that Chargeable Contracts are of the former Sort, and admit of a more loose Interpretation in the Courts of Equity; for since the Obligation is mutual, neither Party ought to be overburthened. But Gainful Contracts belong to the latter, and do not allow of such a loose Interpretation, or that any one should be bound to do more than he has expressly declar'd; for else a Man's Generosity might prove too great a Burthen to him (b).

IX. All Chargeable Contracts are reducible to four Heads. First, † Goods for Goods; Secondly, * Work for Work; Thirdly, † Goods for Work; Fourthly, * Work for Goods. Where the Word Work, is taken in a large Sense, so as to comprehend even the Deed of another Man. Grotius (c) admits of but three, leaving out Goods for Work: For that, he thinks, falls in with Work for Goods; and indeed, there is no real Difference between them, for both express that Goods and Work are barter'd for one another: But in one, the Contract, in a manner, begins upon the Delivery of the Goods; in the other, upon Doing the Work. So that, in the one, the Doer seems the Author of the Contract; in the other, the Giver: For in some Contracts, tho' both Sides are equally oblig'd, yet they take their Rise from one only. As in Buying, the Buyer begins the Contract; in Letting, the Tenant, &c.

To the first Head belongs all those Contracts, where one Thing is exchange'd for another, as in Bartering strictly so call'd. Where we may observe a Distinction nice enough, which some make between the general Contract of Goods for Goods, and Bartering. The former is, when the Things exchange'd are indefinite, as an Ox for a Mule; or where, at least, one Part is so; as a Horse for this particular Ox; Oyl for Corn in general. But when the Goods, in Contract, are determin'd, v. g. this Ox for this Horse, it becomes Bartering (d). Hither may be referred the giving Money for other Money of different Species, or in a different Place: which is now call'd Exchange (e). Sometimes indeed, Money is given for Money, so as to make it perfectly Buying and Selling; as the Money stamp'd with Victory; which Pliny (f) tells us, before it had received that Stamp, was accounted Commodity. If Goods are given for Money, the Contract is call'd Buying and Selling. Sometimes the Use of a Commodity is given for a Commodity, as if I lend my Horse for a Book. Sometimes the Use of one Thing for the Use of another, as if I let you live in my House, upon Condition that you let me enjoy your Land. Sometimes the Use of a Thing for Money, which is properly call'd Letting and Renting. Some Things too we give in order to receive as much, of the same Sort, some Time after.

Of the second Head, Work for Work, there are innumerable Sorts, according to the infinite Variety of useful, or pleasant Actions, which may, in a manner, be exchange'd and perform'd for one another (g).

To the Third Sort, Goods for Work, belong the Letting out, or Hiring work, or Day-labour for Money, as also that Sort of Contract, by which Goods are secur'd and free'd from Danger for Money, which is call'd Insuring. As also when any Commodity, consumable or not consumable, is given for the Performance of any Work.

To the fourth Head, Work for Goods, belong those Contracts, by which any Work is done for any Thing, or for the Use of any Thing, and such like (h). Besides, there may be Contracts not reducible to any of these Heads, as implying Disjunction (i). Such as were the Nuptial Donatives among the Muscovites; of which Sigismund, Baron of Herberstein, gives this Account. Those that are invited to the Wedding present the Bride; all the Presents the Bridegroom marks, and lays up carefully; when the Wedding is over he reviews them, and those that he likes, he sends to the Market to be priz'd: all the rest, he returns back with Thanks. Those

(a) Vid. Grot. l. 2. c. 12. f. 3. (†) Contractus Beneficus. (*) Contractus Onerosus. (1) Our Author has forgot to mention Donations made between Living Parties, as well in Chap. 4. as in this, but Mr. Barbeyrac in his First Note upon the 1st Sect. of that Chap. has supply'd this defect. (b) Add. Arn. Vinnius ad. f. 28. Instit. de Actionibus, Lib. 4. t. 4.

(†) Do ut des. (*) Facio ut Facias. (†) Do ut Facias. (*) Facio ut des. (c) In the aforesaid Place. (d) Vid. Mornacium ad l. 5. D. de præscriptis verbis. (e) In Latin, Cambium, in Greek Κόλλυβον.

(f) Nat. Hist. l. 33. c. 3. (g) In Amm. Marcellinus, l. 16. c. 10. This sort of Contract is called Pañum reddende vicissim. And in Apuleius in Apolog. Mutuarias operas cum vicinis cambire. (h) Vid. Totum t. 5. l. 19. D. de præscript. verbis.

(i) As also the Contractus estimatorius, de quo vid. l. 19. t. 3. D. de estimatoria actione. Add. Plaut. Captiv. Act. Sc. 3. v. 18, &c.

that he keeps, he makes amends for, at the end of the Year, according to the Value of them, either in Money, or something equivalent. If any one puts a greater Value upon his Gifts, the Bridegroom appeals to the sworn Apprizers, and forces him to stand to their Valuation. But if, in a Years Time, he does not make a Return, or send back the Gift, he is fined double. And if he forgets to have it valued by the sworn Apprizers, he is forc'd to repay it at the Value of the Giver. And this Custom the Common People observe in all Sorts of Donatives. The same Thing is related of the Presents, the Persians give liberally to Strangers (a); for which, if they do not receive a greater Return, they not only complain, but often revoke what they had given, or the Value of it.

All these Sorts of Contracts have this in Common, that when they are perform'd on both Sides, the Parties have no longer any Thing to do with one another upon this Score. And therefore Grotius (b) (1) calls them Dirimtorii, and opposes them to those Contracts which he calls Commutatorii, the Completion of which consists in having Dealings continued between the Parties, as in that of Partnership, where for one anothers Advantage, Two, or more joyn, either Work, or Goods, or Work on one Side, with Goods on the other. And these together with those which we call Gainful are generally Simple Contracts.

X. But some Contracts are Mixt, and as it were compounded of two Sorts; as if I designedly buy a Thing for more than the Value, and so give the Overplus of the Price to the Seller; or sell a Thing for less than the Value, and so give what is wanting of the Price to the Buyer: This is partly Giving, partly Buying and Selling. Thus Cæsar sold vast Farms to Servilia for a Trifle (c). If I give greater Wages than the Work is worth, it will be partly Gift, partly Hire: Which great Men sometimes do out of Grandeur, thinking it for their Honour to reward any Man's Work more than it deserves, and this is partly Liberality, partly Contract (d). And on the other side, a Man may accept of Part of his Wages, and forgive the rest (e). If I bargain with a Goldsmith to make me Rings out of his own Gold, it will be partly Buying, partly Hiring (f). Tho' some look upon it to be only Buying: Since in Buying, we not only pay for the Materials, but for the Workmanship too. And there is little Difference whether the Thing is already made, or to be made. Nor can I be properly said to hire, where the Person of the Workman remains at his own Disposal (g). When Land is lent out for Rent, it is a Mixt Contract of Selling and Hiring, tho' the Law of Zeno makes it a Species of it self. A Grant by Fee is so far a Gainful Contract, as being much greater than the Military Service that is due for it. Indeed as far as this Military Service may be exacted for the Protection that the Lord gives his Vassal, it partakes something of the second Sort of Contract, Work for Work; yet that which is the Principal in the Contract, belongs to the third Sort, Goods for Work. But if this Fee be charged with the Incumbrance of a certain Quit-Rent, so far it partakes of Land-renting. Lastly, Nautick Interest, or what we call Bottomry, which vastly exceeds all other common Usury, is mixt of Borrowing and Insuring. But in Partnership, tho' one contributes Money and Work, another only Money, yet it does not seem to be a mixt Contract. For it does not become mixt from the different Performances (for if I hire a Man to dig in my Vineyard, to sow my Ground and plant my Orchard, it is all but the Simple Contract of Hiring) but from our Agreements in Matters, of a different Nature, by one and the same Covenant.

Grotius (h) is of Opinion, that a Contract becomes mixt by the Accession of one Act to another, as in Suretiship and Pledges. But in this he seems not so very accurate, for a third Species must result from a Mixture properly so call'd: Whereas in Suretiship, the Security is not mixt with the principal Contract, but is only added to it, as an extrinseck Confirmation. For the giving Security makes no Alteration in the Debt; but only makes Provision for the Creditor, in Case the principal Debtor should prove insolvent. However to speak more accurately, there are in Suretiship two Contracts, which seem to be but one, because the same Surety hath to do with both Creditor and Debtor; for there passes but a bare Promise between the Surety and the Creditor, and yet, strictly speaking, that Promise only shews that he is oblig'd to make good the Debt, and is not that which obliges him; for that which obliges him is the principal Contract, whereby the Surety, by his Promise, has brought an Obligation upon himself to supply the Failure of the Debtor. So that this Promise partakes of the Nature of the Contract it self. Now this Suretiship is no Gain to the Creditor; for he gets nothing by it, but a proper Means of recovering his own. And although his Security is hereby provided for, yet not the Creditor, but the Debtor is beholden to the Surety: for without this Security, the Creditor had never enter'd into Contract.

But when the Surety pays the Debt, then there arises an Account between him and the Debtor. For in this Case, he is suppos'd to have lent the Debtor the Money, or, which is all as one, to have paid it by his Order and Commission. Now this Act of Suretiship cannot be reckon'd an Act of Liberality, either in respect of the Debtor, or Creditor, for the Debtor gets nothing by it, and the Creditor, without it, had not entred into any Engagement.

(a) Vid. Petrus, della Valle, Itin. Part. 2. Epist. 1.

(b) In the aforesaid Place. (1) See Mr. Barbeyrac's 5th Note upon this Section.

(c) Suetonius Julio, c. 50. (d) Add. Matt. 20. 9. &c. Lib. 26. t. 7. L. 12. f. 3. D. de Ad-

mon. B. & peric. tutorum. (e) Add. Val. Max. L. 5. c. 2. f. 10. (f) So says Grotius in the aforesaid Place, f. 5.

(g) Vid. Lib. 18. tit. 1. l. 20. D. de contrah. empt. & Lib. 3. t. 25. f. 4. Instit. de locat. & conduct. (h) In the aforesaid Place, f. 6.

C H A P. III.

Concerning the Equality that ought to be observed in Chargeable Contracts.

IN all Contracts that are purely Chargeable, and have nothing of the Gainful mixt with them, where the Law, or the Market has fixt the Prices of Things, an Equality ought to be observed: Or, one Party ought to receive as much as the other; and if one happens to receive less, he has a Right to demand the rest. And this is plain from the End of such Contracts, for therefore a Man enters into them, that for his Goods or Work he may receive an Equivalent; which for certain Reasons he prefers to his own Goods or Work.

But yet this admits of a more accurate Demonstration; for since Contracts are necessary for my obtaining those Things which I had no Right to claim; and since it is presum'd that a Man gives nothing gratis, which he parts with upon Contract; we cannot therefore think, that any one designs to give away, by Contract, more than he supposes he receives, and consequently a Contract can give a Right to another Man's Goods, no farther than as they are equivalent to something, which that other Man receives (a).

II. Now to find out, and adjust this Equality, it is necessary that the Parties contracting, be each of them alike acquainted with the Commodity and the Qualities of it (b). And therefore he that is going to make over the Property of a Thing ought to expose, not only the good Qualities, but also, to the best of his Knowledge, the Defects and Faults of it; for, otherwise, a just Price cannot be assign'd (c).

Plato (d) makes it a Law, that if a Physician buys a Slave, who labours under any incurable Distemper of Body or Mind, he must stand to the Bargain: but if an unskilful Person makes the Purchase, the Seller, that imposes upon his Ignorance, must be fined double: But if one unskilful Man buys of another, the single Price is to be restor'd (e).

III. This Necessity of discovering the Faults, arises from the Nature of the Thing, because otherwise a just Price could not be assign'd, and not from the common Bond of Humanity, (as if that received a closer Tye by Contract) nor from the Contractors (1) entering into some sort of Acquaintance, which may seem to oblige them to other Duties, than those that are required by the Nature of Contracts; for when the Conditions are perform'd on Both sides, we don't think our selves more oblig'd to him we dealt with, than to any other Man, though indeed such an Occasion may, sometimes, be the Means of an Acquaintance and Friendship with him. And therefore, it is no Consequence, that, because it is not against the Law of Humanity to conceal a Thing, therefore it is not against the Law of Contract. For if I be not engag'd in Contract, I may lawfully conceal from others several Things, though I alone am Gainer by it, which if I should discover, other People would share with me. As in case I should find a Treasure in a desert Place, without any Owner, no Law obliges me to tell another, that he too may partake of it (2) (f).

IV. But as it cannot be doubted, but the Faults of the Thing it self ought to be declar'd; so

(a) Vid. Deut. XXV. 13, &c. L. 47. t. 2. L. 52. f. 22. de furtis, L. 6. f. 1, 2. D. de extraord. crimin. L. 32. f. 1. de Leg. Cornel. de falsis. (b) Φῶς ἀπολήμασι ἐπέτι, Contracts ought to be made in the Light, Eur. Cycl. v. 137.

Consule de gemmis, de tincta murice lana,
Consule de facie corporibusque diem. Ovid. de Arte Amandi, L. 1. v. 250, 251.

(c) To this Place belongs B. 19. t. 1. L. 1. f. 1. D. de Añ. Empt. & Vend. Lib. 18 t. 1. L. 43. f. 2. D. de contrah. empt. As also the whole 1st Title De aedilit. edict. B. 19. Where the Faults are reckoned up one by one, which ought to be told in Sale of Cattle and Slaves; and which, if conceal'd, makes void the Bargain. Add. Gell. 1. 4. c. 2. Cicero, Off. 3. c. 16. 'It is an Ordinance of the Civil Law, in the Matter of Estates, that the Vender should still tell the Purchaser the Defects, or Inconveniencies of the Estate; for it being sufficiently provided by the twelve Tables, that every Man should make good what he promises, or declares by Word of Mouth, upon the Penalty of double Damages, for denying it; the Civilians have set a Punishment upon Concealments too, by enacting that if the Seller of an Estate, knew any Fault, or Error, without expressly acquainting the Purchaser with it, he should be obliged to make it Good. Add the Example that follows in Cicero, Ambros. de Off. 1. 3. c. 10. 'In Contracts the Faults of the Commodity ought to be express'd, which, if it be neglected, although the Goods be in the Possession of the Purchaser, yet the Bargain may be vacated by an Action of Deceit. (Although what he there says of an Action of Deceit does not rightly agree with the Roman Laws.) Laëtant. 1. 5. c. 17. 'He who does not correct the Error of the Seller, (as suppose he sees him deliver, by Mistake, a more precious Commodity than was agreed for,) or who does not own his Servant to be a Runaway, or his House to be infected, consulting his own Profit and Advantage, is not a Wise Man, as Cornelius would have it, but a crafty Knave.

(d) De LL. 1. 11. p. 965, Ed. Wech. (e) Plato in the same Place, 'Let no Commendation, or Oaths attend the Sale of any Commodity. (1) See Grotius B. 2. c. 12. f. 9. n. 1. cited and explain'd in Mr. Barbeyrac's First Note upon this Section. (2) See above B. 4. c. 6. f. 13, and Mr. Barbeyrac's 2d Note upon this Section. (f) Vid. Matt. 13. 44. For here if the Purchaser had told of the Treasure, he had not bought the Field so Cheap. Vid. Grot. 1. 2. c. 8. f. 7. Hitherto may be referred the Story of Anicas, who first discovered the Samojedes, and settled a Trade with them, related by Lundorpius in his Continuation of Sleidan, ad an. 1607. Cic. Off. 3. c. 10. says well, 'That we ought not to neglect our own Advantage, when we can improve it without Injury to another. For as Chrysippus Elegantly observed, so whether circumstantial Matters, which tho' they be not of the Substance of the Thing it self, yet Help in the just prizing of it, ought to be laid open, both on the side of the Buyer and of the Seller, has been controverted among the Ancients. Cicero (a) has a Case to this purpose. An honest Man, says he, sets Sail from Alexandria to Rhodes with a Freight of Corn; the Rhodians in great Distress for want of it, and the Commodity bearing an excessive Price: This Person knows that there are other Alexandrian Ships under Way, and bound for the same Port, and with the same Cargo: shall he tell the Rhodians there are other Merchants coming with Relief, or say nothing of it, and make the best Market of his Corn, that he can? Antipater is of Opinion, That all the Circumstances ought to be laid open; so that the Purchaser may not be kept ignorant of any Thing (tho' it does not concern the Substance of the Thing in hand) which the other knows. Diogenes on the other side says, That the Vender is bound to discover all the Faults, so far as he is obliged to it by the Civil Law; and to manage his Bargain without Fraud; so that being to sell the Commodity, he may, without Deceit, make the best of it. Here, says he, I have brought my Corn; I have expos'd it to Sale; I set no higher a Rate upon it than others do, nay perhaps I can afford it cheaper, there being now a greater Quantity than there was before. How is that? replies Antipater, Is it not our Duty to consult the Good of Mankind, and serve human Society? Don't we lie under an Obligation, from our Cradle, to make our private Interest the same with the publick, and the publick the same with our private? Shall we then conceal that from the People, which it so much concerns them to be inform'd of? To this Diogenes: 'Tis one thing to conceal, and another not to tell. Do I tell you, at this Instant, what is the Nature of God, and what the Happiness, or Chief Good of Man, which it much more concerns you to know than the Price of Corn? And yet you will not say, that I conceal this from you. But I am not oblig'd to tell whatever is for your Advantage to hear. To this Antipater replies, Yes, you are oblig'd, if you remember that Men are naturally linked together in Society. Well, says Diogenes, I do not forget it: But will you have it to be such a Society, as that no Man shall have any thing particular in it of his own? If so, there's no longer any Buying and Selling, but only Giving. Here Cicero himself seems to incline towards Antipater's Opinion (1), for, he says, This Concealment of the Corn Merchant is not the Practice of an open, a frank, a sincere, a just, a good Man; but rather of a shifting, a close, a deceitful, a malicious Huckster. And yet Cicero himself seems to free him from the Imputation of Knavery; for a little after (2), he defines Knavery to be, The Pretending one thing and the Doing another, which cannot be objected in this Case. And therefore, the Merchant, did not act unjustly, in saying nothing of the Ships, that were coming. For Justice only obliges us to expose, what immediately concerns the Thing it self; as If a House, by reason of its being infected, had been commanded, by the Magistrates, to be pulled down; with which Example Cicero illustrates this Passage. But nothing of this Nature, was conceal'd; the Goodness of the Corn appear'd openly, and, at the Time of Contract, was really worth as much as it was sold for, altho' likely to be less worth, in a little time. Nor had the Rhodians a Right, properly speaking, to know this of the Merchant, as never having made any Bargain with him about it (3). But whether he acted against the Law of Courtesy and Good-nature, is another Question, which I would not easily hold in the Affirmative. For, Good-nature does not oblige me, to do another Man a Courtesy gratis, except he be in extream Want of it. But this was not the Case of the Rhodians, they wanted Corn indeed, but not Money, for they were famous among the Ancients for their Riches. Besides, I am not oblig'd to do a Kindness, when 'tis like to tend more to the Detriment of the Giver than the Benefit of the Receiver. But, in this Case, the Merchant would have lost more than the Purchasers would have got by the Intelligence. For if he vended it to a great many Purchasers at the Market-price, each would have felt it but little, and if any one Man had engross'd the whole, he might thank his own Avarice, if he lost by it; and indeed we cannot expect, in the common way of the World, that Men should be so very exact in the Performance of this Duty: For, provided the Love of Money does not tempt the Merchants to cheat us, we may easily excuse them from what the Law of Courtesy and Good-nature may seem to oblige them to.

V. As for Faults already known to the Buyer, they need not be mentioned, for, in this Case, both Parties proceed upon the same Foot (4). So likewise, where the Seller has told the Faults, observes, 'He that runs a Race, ought to endeavour might and main to get the Victory, yet he must not lay hands on him that he runs with, or use any other foul Play. And just so it is in human Life, any one may lawfully endeavour to better his Condition, but not at the Expence and Injury of another. Ambr. has express'd this Passage, Off. l. 3. c. 4. In Contracts, that of Val. Max. l. 8. c. 2. f. 1. ought to take place. 'A fair Dealer ought, neither to magnify the good Qualities, nor conceal the ill ones of his Commodities. Hither may be referred that of Plato de Leg. lib. 11. p. 966. The Law which provides against the Seller's Over-reaching, ought also to be extended to the Workman. And therefore he had best take heed, that he does not rate his Work at more than 'tis worth, for he can't be ignorant of the Value of it. And certainly it ought to be allowed, in a free State, that a Workman should make use of Art, which is a plain Thing, and far from Deceit to impose upon the Unskilful. Hither too may be apply'd, that which Socrates says he heard of Aspasia, 'Good Match-makers, that are sincere in their Commendations of others, do good in making Alliances between Families; but those, that are false, do no good in Commending. For, when the Parties are undeceived, it so happens, that they hate one another; and those too that were instrumental in the Match. Xen. Mem. l. 2. p. 439. Ed. H. Steph. (a) Off. l. 3. c. 12. (1) Chap. 13. d. 1. (2) Chap. 1a.

(3) Vid. Groc. l. 2. c. 12. f. 9. n. 2. (4) Vid. Groc. l. 2. ubi supr. n. 3.

the Bargain ought to stand good; for then 'tis manifest that the Buyer consents to them; Cicero (a) has a Case to this purpose. Gratidianus sold to S. Orata those very Houses which he himself had bought of him, but a few Years before. These Houses paid a Duty to Orata; (which was out of his Mind) but Gratidianus made no Mention of it in conveying his Right. The Cause was brought into the Court. Crassus was for Orata, and Anthony for Gratidianus: Crassus insisted upon the Law, that the Seller knowing it, ought to have acquainted the Purchaser with the Incumbrance, but did not do it. Anthony insisted upon Matter of Equity, that the Incumbrance was not unknown to Orata, who had sold the Houses; which made it needless for Gratidianus to say any thing of it, nor could Orata be said to be deceived, that knew what Title he had bought (b). Upon the same Principle was founded the Sentence that Marius gave in the Case of (c) Fannia, who had been married to Tinnius, but upon a Divorce demanded back her Dowry, which was considerable. He objected Adultery against her. The Cause was brought before the Consul. After a Hearing on both sides, it appearing that she had been an immodest Woman, and that her Husband knowing her to be such, had yet ventur'd to marry her, the Consul reprov'd them both, and order'd him to restore her Dowry, and her to be fin'd four Asses for her scandalous Behaviour (d).

VI. Besides, as in all Pacts, so especially in Contracts, neither Party should be forc'd into a Bargain by an unjust Fear. The Lacedemonians therefore did right in rescinding the Purchase of the Land, that the Elians had extorted from the Possessors through Fear: For they were of Opinion, To force a Title from the weaker, under Pretence of Purchase, was no better than downright Robbery (e) (1). Thus when Cicero (f) objected against Verres, the Pictures and Statues, which he had brought out of Sicily, Verres thought he could answer the Accusation in a Word, by saying, I bought them. But Cicero replies, That their Ancestors had wisely enacted that whosoever should be sent Governour into a Province, should not be allow'd to make any Manner of Purchase. And for that Reason, Money and Equipage was provided them by the Publick. Slaves indeed were not, because there was scarce any Man of Figure, in Rome, but had some of them. And yet no Man, in his Province, could buy a Slave, but in the room of a dead one: for they look'd upon it to be Plundering, and not Purchasing, when the Seller could not sell at his own Rate. And in a Province they were convinced, that if the Governour, back'd with Power and Authority, should be permitted to buy what he pleas'd, it would be brought to that pass, that he would have whatsoever he had a Fancy for, whether expos'd to Sale or no, and at his own Rates (g). But yet sometimes the Subject may be forc'd, by the Government, in Matters of Sale or Hire. As when Merchants are oblig'd to sell, that which the Government is in great want of; or when their Waggon, or Ships, or they themselves are prest; which, when the Good, or Necessity of the Publick requires, and a just Rate is paid, may be fairly allowed of. Sometimes too, the State obliges us to buy such a sort of Commodity, of this or that Man only, and no where else.

VII. But 'tis plain, that in Gainful Contracts, this Equality does not take place; for where an Equality is to be observed, the Contract ceases to be gainful (h). And yet, in a Charge, or a Commission, an Equality may sometimes be regarded, tho' indirectly, and by Accident; for if any thing, besides Labour, has been laid out in soliciting the Business, or managing the Charge, it ought exactly to be refunded. And the reason is because in such Contracts as these, the Labour is given gratis, but the Expence, tacitly agreed upon to be repaid (i).

VIII. But in Chargeable Contracts an Equality is to be so strictly regarded, that if one Party has receiv'd more than his Due, he must not retain the Overplus, upon Presumption that it was design'd for a Gift. For Men do not enter into such sort of Contracts with a Design to give any Thing. And therefore such a Mixt Contract must not be presum'd unless the Party

(a) De Off. l. 3. c. 16. (b) For as Ulpian says, L. 19. t. 1. l. 1. f. 1. D. de act. empt. 'He does not seem to have the Thing conceal'd, who knew it, nor ought he to be advertis'd of it who was not ignorant. Add. lib. 18. t. 1. l. 43. f. 1. l. 57. f. 3. D. de contrah. empt. Lib. ult. D. de Edilit. editio. To this belongs that of Horace, l. 2. Ep. 2. v. 14, &c. where he brings in a Fellow selling a Slave, who after having reckon'd up his good Qualities, adds

— Semel hic cessavit; & ut fit,
In scalis latuit metuens pendens habenz.
Des nummos, excepta nihil te si fuga ledat.
Ille serat pretium pæne securus, opinor.
Prudens emisti vitiosum: dicta tibi est lex.

This Boy was faulty once, he stay'd at Play,
And when he fear'd the Lash, he run away:
Buy, if you like him now, his Faults are told.
The Dealing's fair, and he may take your Gold,
And ne'er be thought a Cheat for what he fold.

Mr. Creech.

Add. lib. 29. t. 5. l. 1. f. 33. D. de Scto Silaniano. Lib. 21. t. 1. D. de Edilit. editio, leg. 14. f. 10.
(c) Plutarch in Mario, p. 427. Ed. Wech. and Val. Max. l. 8. c. 2. f. 3. (d) Vid. lib. 48. t. 5. l. 13. f. 9. 10. D. ad L. Jul. de adult. (e) Xenoph. l. 3. rer. Græcarum, p. 288. (f) Vid. Grot. l. 2. c. 12. f. 10. (g) Orat. 9: l. 4. c. 5. (h) Add. lib. 18. t. 1. l. 46. l. 62. D. de contr. empr. & lib. 48. t. 11. l. penult. D. ad L. Jul. repetund. l. 6. Lib. 2. t. 20. l. 11. de his quæ vi metusque causa, &c. Constitur. Sicularum, l. 1. t. 88. f. 1. Tacitus, An. 14. c. 14. in fin. 'When the Purchaser can force him to it, the Seller lies under a Necessity of parting with his Goods. Hither may be referred what Dio Cassius relates of Caesar, l. 42. who after Pompey's Defeat seized upon that Money, which he had no other Pretence of Levying, than under the specious Name of a Loan, though otherwise he had taken it by Force, as if it had been his Due, and never had any Design to restore it. (i) Vid. S. Fin. Instit. de Mandato, lib. 3. t. 27. f. 13. & D. lib. 16. t. 3. l. 1. f. 9. D. Depos. &c. (i) Vid. l. 12. prin. D. depositi. d. 1.

expressly consents to it, or it appears that he knew the Thing to be under-rated (a).

IX. From what has been said it follows, that altho' all the Faults have been expos'd (1), and Nothing demanded more, than what was suppos'd to be the Value, yet if afterwards there appears to have been an Inequality, without any Fault of the Contractors (as suppose some Blemish lay undiscover'd, or they mistook the Price) it ought to be corrected, and Amends made to the Sufferer (b). Nor is it necessary by the Law of Nature, that this Inequality should exceed the Half of the just Price. For that famous Law (c), which refuses Relief, but where the Inequality is so notorious, is purely positive, and founded principally upon this, that it would be impossible to dispatch Business, if the Magistrate might be appeal'd to for every little Injury of this kind. And besides, the Nature of the Market requires, that we should look about us if we would not be deceiv'd; for whatever Rate the Seller puts upon his Goods, the Price is ultimately determin'd by the Buyer (d); though indeed the Determination of this Law is too gross. For tho' the Magistrate ought not to be troubled for every Trifle, yet I see no Reason why he should not relieve me, if I have been very much injur'd, although not half in half; As if I should sell a House worth 900*l.* for 600*l.* 'tis hard I should be debarr'd the Benefit of the Law, for the Recovery of the 300*l.* when in much less considerable Cases an Action is allowed me. And therefore as a small Damage, even in the Law of Nature, is not sufficient to break off a Bargain, so where the Damage is great, although it amounts not to half the just Price, the Bargain ought to be rescinded, or the Price made up. And this Greatness of the Damage is to be estimated, either by the Exorbitancy of the Price, or the Poverty of the injur'd, which sometimes renders the Loss intolerable to him, which a richer Man would not be sensible of. Nay, even where the said Law is in force, the Buyer is oblig'd, in Conscience, to make up a very great Damage, although it comes not up to half the Price; for that Law only designs the Ease of the Magistrate, and not that one Man should be a Gainer at another's Loss. Indeed they do well to extend the Benefit of the Law to the Buyer as well as to the Seller, which too, they tell us, is to be extended to all other sort of Contracts.

Among the Jews (e), if one defrauded another, whether Buyer, or Seller, the Law afforded no Relief, if the Cheat came under the sixth Part of the just Price. But if it exceeded the Sixth Part, the Buyer might either immediately, or at any time during the Negotiation rescind the Bargain, and recover the whole Price: but if the Seller had been the Sufferer, he was never barred from making a Recovery. And the same Law obtained in the Bartering of consumable Commodities, as of Fruit, Corn, and such like. But the Jew only, if injur'd, enjoy'd the Benefit of this Law; and not the Gentile, if injur'd by a Jew.

X. To what has been said, the Roman Lawyers have taken a great deal of Pains to reconcile a Passage in the Digests (f), which says, That, in Buying and Selling, the Parties may Naturally over-reach one another. Of which Grotius (g) seems to give a good Explication. For, he shews, that May and Must do not always denote that it is Lawful, but only that it is so far permitted, as that the Sufferer can have no Remedy, in case the other insists upon the Bargain, and, being tax'd of Injustice replies, that it was nothing but what was agreed upon betwixt them: And he that won't open his Eyes, as the Saying is, must open his Purse (h). As for the Instance of Jacob (i), his Craftiness is the more excusable, because he had to do with a designing Man, who endeavoured every way to over-reach him, and who impos'd hard Conditions upon him, giving him only half of the Young for keeping his Sheep, and yet making him stand to all Accidents. So also the Word, Naturally (k), does not always signify, what ought to be done, or what is congruous to the Law of Nature, but what is customary, as, 1 Cor. XI. 14. Doth not even Nature it self teach you, that if a Man have long Hair it is a shame unto him. Yet here the word Κουὰν, to have long Hair, may be taken for too nice a Care in adorning the Hair, which Women seem to claim as their Right, and which looks too effeminate in a Man (l). Tho' indeed it is

(a) An Example we have in Pliny, l. 7. Epist. 11. & 14. where he says he had, upon the Score of Friendship, sold Lands for less than they are worth. It was generously done of Scævola, who being upon a Purchase, bid the Proprietor tell him, in one word, what he would have for the Estate; who when he had done it, Scævola told him he had undervalued it, and gave him 10000 Sesterces more than his Bargain, Cic. Off. l. 3. c. 15. (1) V. Grot. l. 2. c. 12. f. 12. (b) Add. lib. 19. t. 1. l. 13. Princ. f. 1, 2, 3, 4. D. de us. emp. & lib. 21. t. 1. l. 1. f. 2. D. de edit. edicto.

(c) Lib. 4. t. 44. l. 2. C. de rescindend. vendit. (d) To which may be apply'd that of Cicero, Off. l. 3. c. 17. Laws and Philosophers provide against Frauds different ways: The Laws regarding only Matters of Overt Act, whereas Philosophers judge according to Equity and Reason. (e) Selden, de J. N. & G. l. 6. c. 5. (f) Lib. 4. t. 4. l. 16. f. 4. D. de minoribus. Add. lib. 19. t. 2. l. 22. f. 3. D. locati, &c. (g) L. 2. c. 12. f. 26. (h) Add. Lex Bajuvarior. t. 15. c. 9. f. 1. and Capitulare Caroli, l. 5. c. 210. In Xenoph. de memorab. Socr. l. 2. towards the End, this Rule is given, 'Tis a Piece of good Husbandry when a valuable Thing can be bought cheap, to buy it. Add a witty Saying of Cicero's in Gellius, lib. 12. cap. 12. Vid. Sen. de Beneficiis, lib. 6. cap. 38. Where he disputes, whether Demades did well, at Athens, in condemning one who got his Livelihood by providing things necessary for Funerals, having proved that he desired a quick Trade, which could not be without the Death of a great many People. Add. Capitulare Caroli, l. 1. c. 131. (i) Gen. XXXI. 39 (k) Mornacius upon the words naturaliter licet circumvenire, explains the word naturaliter by ἁπλοῦς; dexterously; but he is in the wrong. For that word does not belong to circumvenire, but to licet.

(l) According to that of Ovid, Ep. 4. Heroid. v. 75.

Sint procul a nobis juvenes, ut famina, compsi.

disagreeable to the Dictates of Natural Reason for a Man to assume that Habit, which length of time has appropriated to Women, and by which their Sex is distinguish'd from ours. But to return to the Matter in hand (a). Every Man has naturally a great Desire of increasing his Stock, and therefore Trade could hardly be carried on in a Society, were there not some Incouragement for Industry (b). Besides, each Party seems by tacit Consent, (since an exact Equality, even by the nicest Scrutiny, is so difficult to be determin'd,) to indulge one another the liberty of deviating a little from the true Price. And therefore it seems to be the receiv'd Law of the Market, that every one should be free to make his best Advantage of Buying and Selling, provided there be no Deceit in the Commodity it self (c). For if there be; the Opinion of Fulgentius (d) will take Place, who says, That Mercury was therefore suppos'd to be the God of Trade and Thievery, because there is no Difference between the Cheating and Lying of a Tradesman, and the Robbery and Perjury of a Thief (e).

(a) Lib. 4. t. 44. l. 8. C. de rescind. vendit. 'It is the constant way of Buying and Selling for the Buyer to beat down the Price, and the Seller to raise it, till after many words on both sides, the former rises in his Bidding, and the latter falls a little from his Demands, at last they agree in a certain Price. Anacharsis, in Diogenes Laertius, B. 1. f. 105. did not absurdly call the Market, 'A Place to cheat one another in, and destined to Covetousness. Add. l. 18. l. 19. D. de edilit. edicto. (b) Vid. l. 17. D. de contrah. empt. 'He deserves to be laugh'd at who suffers himself to be imposed upon. Plin. l. 1. c. 24. princip. 'To make a bad Bargain is the more ungrateful, because it exposes the Folly of the Maker.

*An tibi mavis
Insidias fieri pretiumque avellier ante
Quam mercem ostendi?* —————

Hor. Sat. l. 1. f. 2. v. 103, 104, 105.

Would you be cheated, the Occasion's fair?
Since you would Buy before you see the Ware.

Mr. Creech.

(c) Add. Mich. Montaigne, Ess. B. 1. c. 20. (d) Mytholog. l. 1. c. 23. (e) 'The Ephori fined a Young Man for buying a Farm at a cheap Rate; and the Reason they gave was, because so Young a Man was so much given to Lucre. Æl. V. H. l. 14. c. 44.

CHAP. IV.

Of Gainful Contracts in particular.

WE come now to consider some of the principal Contracts more particularly; which, tho' they have been handled very Copiously by the Roman Lawyers, yet, since most of what they have said, has been taken from the Law of Nature and Nations, may fairly be brought back to their proper place. Of Gainful Contracts the chief (1) is a * Commission (2), whereby one Man undertakes gratis another Man's Business, at his Request, and upon his Authority. This Contract indeed does not directly and in it self, presuppose Property and the Price of things, but only by Accident, so far as the Person giving the Commission is concern'd to repay to the Person receiving it, whatsoever Charges he happens to be at in the Management of it: for his Labour only is suppos'd to be promised gratis. Now if any Man undertakes another's Business, unknown to him, and manages it with Success, the Roman Law allows him (†) an Action for Business done, which is founded upon what we may properly call a Tacit Commission (3), as is the Obligation between a Guardian and a Minor (a).

II. The old Romans were extremely Exact and Conscientious in the Discharge of this Trust. For they look'd upon it to be founded upon good Nature and Friendship, the great Bands and Cements of Human Society: And therefore deservedly had those in Detestation, who under such specious Pretences should deceive one, who lays himself open to their Mercy, by having too good an Opinion of their Probity (b). In private Affairs, says Cicero, our Ancestors thought guilty of the highest Crime, not only him that manag'd his Commission Knavishly, for his own Gain and Advantage, but even him who was wanting in his Care, and therefore judged the Breach of Trust to be as bad as Theft. For where we cannot be present our selves, the Fidelity of our Friends is presum'd to supply our place; which, whosoever violates, impugns the Safeguard of every Man, and, as much as in him lies, disturbs Society. We cannot do every thing our selves, at some things, some are better than others. And therefore we contract Friendships, that by mutual good Offices our common Advantages may be carried on. Why do you undertake a Commission, if you design to neglect it, or to make a Gain of it? Why do you intrude your self into my Concerns, and by your pretended Kindness clog and hinder my Designs? Stand off, I can get another to do it for me. You undertake the Burthen of an Office, which you think you can go through with, and which never seems heavy to those, who are not light themselves; this therefore is the basest of Crimes; because it violates the two most sacred

(1) Here our Author, as has been observ'd in another place, has forgot to mention Donations between Parties living as Principal Contracts. See his first Note upon this Section. * Mandatium. (2) See what we have said upon this in B. 3. c. 9. (†) Actio negotiorum gestorum. (3) See above in B. 4. c. 13. f. 7. (a) Vid. lib. 44. t. 7. l. 5. prin. f. 1. D. de obligat. & action. (b) Vid. lib. 3. t. 2. l. 1. D. de his qui nor. infam. & lib. 17. t. 1. l. 1. f. 4. D. mandati, &c.

Things, Friendship and Faith. For no Man commits his Business but to a Friend: Nor trusts any but whom he thinks faithful. The greatest of Villains therefore must be he who breaks in upon Friendship; and at the same time cheats him, who had not been capable of being thus cheated, had he not believed the Villain honest (a).

III. For the same Reason the Roman Laws require, that a Commission should be executed, with the utmost Diligence, altho' undertaken purely for the Benefit of the Person intrusting it (1). Of this Corn. Nepos gives us Atticus as a perfect Pattern (b). He never made any Promise but with great Care and Caution; for he did not think it a Piece of Generosity, but rather Levity, to promise more than he could perform. But when once he had undertaken any thing, he was as indefatigable in the Prosecution of it, as if it had not been his Friends but his own Concern; in such a case, he look'd upon his Reputation to be at Stake, than which nothing was more dear to him (c).

But if we hope to succeed well in giving a Commission, we ought to consider and form our Opinion of the Man from his past Diligence, and the Tenor of his former Life. For he that trusts a profligate Person may thank himself for his Disappointments, unless he particularly takes upon him to be more diligent than ordinary, and is capable of being so. We read a pleasant Story of a Man (d), who had sore Eyes and came to a Horse-Doctor for Relief; the Doctor anointed his Eyes with the same Ointment he us'd amongst his Horses; upon which the Man falls blind, and the Cause is brought before the Judge; who acquits the Physician; For if the Fellow, says he, had not been an Ass, he had never apply'd himself to a Horse-Doctor.

IV. On the other hand, the * Agent ought to be repaid whatever Charges he has been at in the Execution of the Commission. For having promised Nothing gratis, but his Care, Diligence and Fidelity, a tacit Compact is suppos'd to have been made for the Repayment of Charges: And indeed it would be hard to render a Man's Kindness expensive to him (2). And the same holds good of any Loss that happens, by Reason of the Trust, but not of such a Loss as is only occasion'd obliquely by it: And therefore those Damages only are to be made up, which directly proceed from the Commission, and not those which happen only by the By, whilst the Business was on Foot. To this purpose is that Passage in the Digests (e): The Agent shall not account to the Person employing him, all the Expences, though perhaps some of them he had not been at, were it not for his Commission; as if he has been plunder'd, or shipwrack'd, or put to Charges by his own, or his Servants Sickness. For such Expences as these, ought to be imputed to Chance, and not to the Commission. Indeed when a Man of his own Accord, upon no other Motive than his own Good-will, takes upon himself the Management of another's Business, he is suppos'd willingly to run the Risque of all Casualties, that unexpectedly happen in Human Affairs. But, the Case is alter'd, when a Man is commanded to manage another's Business, for there he that commands is concern'd to bear him harmless; since, in this Case, the Person in Commission had not Power to act otherwise. But when a Man undertakes a Business, in its own Nature, hazardous and dangerous, he is suppos'd (unless he expressly declares against it) to take upon him the common Accidents, that usually attend such a Business (f).

V. It is a celebrated Question, Whether a Commission can be satisfied by an Equivalent? which we find elegantly debated in Gellius (g). The Question, says he, is whether having a Commission given, and Orders how to manage it, you ought to act Counter, if it seems for the Advantage of him that gave it? Those that hold the Negative, argue that many have determined to have their Business done after such a particular Manner; and therefore he whose Business it is, having deliberated and fixed upon a Method, it ought not to be done otherwise, altho' some sudden unexpected Accident should promise a better Issue; for fear, in Case of Disappointment, the Guilt of Disobedience, and the Punishment due to it should unavoidably follow: Whereas should the Thing succeed right, Thanks be to Providence: But yet an ill Precedent would be introduc'd, for breaking in upon well laid Counsels, and the Sacredness of a Commission. Others, on the contrary, are of Opinion, That the Inconveniencies that may happen, upon acting Counter to Order, ought to be compared with the Probability of succeeding; and if the former appear lighter and less than the latter, then ought we to proceed accordingly: For fear of losing an Opportunity, which Heaven, in this Case, seems to offer; neither need we fear giving such a Precedent, if those that follow the Example never do it, but with the same Reason. Then follow some Precepts of Prudence, Particularly, Regard is to be had to the Temper and Nature of him from whom the Commission is receiv'd; that he be not of a cruel, rough, untractable, inexorable Disposition (h), for, in such a Case, the safest way would be to stick to his Orders. He adds as an Example Crassius Mutianus, Who sent an Architect for the greater of two Beams to raise his Battering Ram with, but the Architect thinking the lesser the fittest, brought that, upon which Account Mutianus order'd him to be scourged; for he imagin'd that Discipline would be trampled upon, and Authority despis'd, if a Man, (a) Cic. pro S. Roscio, c. 38, 39. Plautus Mercatore, Act. 2. Sc. 3. v. 42. 'Every wise Man ought, in the first place, to look after a Commission intrusted to him. (1) Vid. Jac. Gothofred. ad leg. 23. D. de div. reg. juris.

(b) In Vita Attici, c. 15. (c) Ter. And. Act. 4. Sc. 1. v. 5. &c. (d) Sadius, Rosar. Pers. c. 7. * Mandatarius, &c. (2) See Grot. B. 2. c. 12. f. 13. (e) B. 17. t. 1. l. 26. f. 6. D. mandati, &c. (f) Vid. Mornac. ad l. 26. f. 6. D. mandati, & lib. 17. t. 2. L. 52. f. 4. pro Socio. (g) L. 1. c. 13. (h) As was Piso in Seneca de Ita; l. 1. c. 16.

under Command, instead of obeying the Orders of his Superior should impertinently interpose his own Judgment: Though this is to be said for the Architect, that Mutianus sending a Man, Skilful in the Art, and signifying to him what Use he design'd the Beam for, seem'd in a manner to advise with him about it (a). On the other side, we have an Example of Mildness in the Emperor Adrian (b); for when the People had demanded Something in a tumultuous Manner, he order'd the Cryer to proclaim Silence. But he fearing the Consequence of such an harsh and unusual word, stretch'd out his hand, and having thereby procured Silence, cry'd aloud, This is what the Emperor would have, with which the Emperor was not offended (c). Grozius (d) is of Opinion that a Commission may be discharg'd by an Equivalent, provided it appears, that it was not prescrib'd to be manag'd under any particular Form, but under the general Consideration and Prospect of some Advantage which may be obtain'd, as well one way as the other.

In short, the State of the Case is this: In some Commissions the Business only is specified, and the Management of it left to the Discretion of the Agent: Sometimes the Management too is prescrib'd, but rather by way of Advice, as seeming best to him that gives the Commission; but yet so as not to exclude the Agent from using his own Method (e) if it should seem best at the Point of Execution. But lastly, The Method is sometimes so strictly prescrib'd, that the Agent cannot depart from it, let what will happen. Here 'tis plain that a Commission is satisfy'd with an Equivalent in the Second Case, not in the Third. To this Purpose we have a Case in the Digests (f). I commission you to be Surety to Sempronius for Titius, you don't make your self a Surety, but give Sempronius a Commission to trust Titius. If you have been at Expence, upon this Account, the Question is, Am I responsible? Which is declar'd in the Affirmative. For I gained my End, which was, that Sempronius should trust Titius, and whether he does it by your Suretiship, or your Commission, it is all alike to me: And I am obliged by one, as well as the other, to repay what you have laid out upon this Account.

But, as I observ'd above, we must carefully distinguish (g) between the Commission of a Superior, and the Commission of a Friend; which two are widely different, and agree in Nothing but the Name: And therefore what the Civilians have said upon the latter, are very injudiciously apply'd to the former. For, in private Affairs, 'tis easy to presume, that the Method is prescrib'd only by way of Advice, so as to leave Room for the Discretion of the Agent. But when a Business is enjoy'd by a Superior, the bare Execution of it is suppos'd to be meant; and, in this Case, it will not be lawful to depart from the Method prescrib'd, unless Leave be given (as frequently it is) by an express Clause to deviate from it, as Occasion shall require: or unless the Words interpreted according to Reason, and the receiv'd Rules of Speech, so as to answer the Design of the Commission, can warrant the doing of it. For that Sense that the Meaning of his Words fairly imports, is to be presum'd, the Meaning of the Person: Yet this Liberty is not to be taken, but in Cases of Necessity, for all the Force of Authority would be eluded, and the Commonwealth would be often brought into Danger, if a Minister, of his own Head, should take upon him the Part of the Governour (h). Yet Ministers of great Abilities, do well in neglecting the foolish Orders of their Prince (i).

VI. (†) A Loan (that is when we allow another gratis the Use of any Commodity not consumable) carries along with it these Conditions; that it be carefully preserv'd, and with the same Diligence that prudent Men keep their own (k): That it be not put to any other Use, nor made Use of any farther than the Person lending design'd it (l): Lastly, That it be return'd in the same State and Condition as when it was borrowed (m); indeed what Detriment it necessarily receives from the ordinary Use of it, need not be repair'd, for that the Owner is suppos'd to give gratis (n). Besides, if I lend a thing for such a certain Time, and in the mean while by some unforeseen Accident want it my self, the other is obliged to deliver it immediately upon Demand: For no Man is presum'd to lend his Goods, but so long as he can conveniently be without them. And he must be either very careless, or have a Design to impose upon another, who lends those Things which he is Likely to want himself. And therefore a Loan for a certain Time, is

(a) Add. Mich. Montaign. Ess. l. 1. c. 16.

(b) Vid. Xiphilin. Epit. Dionis ann. 118. & Zonaræ, Tom. 2.

(c) 'One time when Commodus found the Bath too warm, he order'd the Keeper of it to be thrown into the Furnace: But the Servant, who had received the Order, threw in a Sheep-skin, by the Stink thereof to induce the Emperor to believe his Order to be put in Execution. Lamprid. in Commodo, c. 1. (d) L. 2. c. 16. f. 21.

(e) As in the Proverb, Mitte sapientem & ipsi nihil dicas. (f) L. 17. c. 1. l. ult. f. 1. D. mandati. (g) Which Bæcker takes Notice of in his Dissertat. de religione mandati. (h) Tacitus, H. L. 1. c. 73. 'If every Man, when he is commanded, is allowed to ask Questions, there is an End of all Authority. And again, l. 2. c. 39. 'Tis a poor Comendation for a Soldier to comment upon, rather than execute the Commands of his Superior. Add. lib. 49. t. 16. l. 3. f. 15. D. de re militari, & Liv. l. 44. c. 34. (i) See 2 Kings XVIII. 14. XIX. 6. Vid. Val. Max. l. 3. c. 8. f. 1. Cor. Nepos, Epam. c. 7, 8. 'Thus Bavalan did wisely in not putting in Execution the Murder of Cliffon, which his Master, the Duke of Bretagne had intrusted him with. See the Story in Bussier's Hist. Franc. l. 11. p. m. 391. and Mezeray, p. 526. tom. 2. Par. Edit. 'Tis remarkable, that the Vice-Roy of the Indies had a fair Opportunity of seizing upon the City Alen, but yet did not do it, because it was against the King's Command, when yet the Taking of that place was of the greatest Importance. Hier. Ofor. de gestis Emanuel. l. 11. (†) Commodatum. (k) L. 13. t. 6. l. 5. f. 5. D. commodati.

(l) Vid. Val. Max. l. 8. c. 2. f. 4. And Gellius, l. 7. c. 15. Vid. lib. 13. t. 6. l. 5. f. 8. in fin. D. commodati, & lib. 47. t. 2. l. 54. f. 1. de furtis. (m) Vid. lib. 13. t. 6. l. 3. f. 1. D. commodati. (n) Add. l. ult. D. commodati.

upon Condition, that the Owner shall not, in the mean Time, have urgent Occasion for the thing himself, but without such an urgent Necessity a Loan ought not to be demanded before the Time (a).

Let us see therefore in what such a Loan as this, and (*) a Grant at Will and Pleasure differ and agree. In respect of the Object and the Use they agree; for the same thing that may be lent, may be granted during Pleasure, and the Use, in both Cases, is given gratis. But they differ, in that the Loan is a Contract, the Grant is not: the former obligatory on both Sides, the latter only on one. The Loan is given for a certain Time, or End; the Grant only during the Will of the Giver. The Receiver of the Loan must make good all Damages; the Receiver of the Grant, only those that happen by his Knavery, or gross Negligence (b).

It may indeed be doubted, whether the Receiver of a Loan is bound to stand to those Chances which it was not in his power to prevent, and this is generally held in the Negative (c). But, in my Opinion, we ought to distinguish, whether or no the Damage had happen'd, if the Thing had continued in the Owner's Custody (1): for if it had, no Restitution is due; but if it had not, it seems due in Equity: for otherwise a Man's Generosity and good Nature might be too expensive to him, if besides the free Use of his Goods, he must be depriv'd of the Perpetuity of them, which he had not been but upon this Account. Nor is there any Reason why he, rather than the other, should bear the Burthen of the Misfortune, since the other was the Occasion of it. The Roman Law (d) gave the Lender Damages if the Loan was stole; and yet such a Robbery might be committed without any Fault in the Person robb'd. Indeed if a Man, by Fire, should lose all and be reduc'd to extream Poverty, it would be Inhuman to demand the Value of the Loan; and since Fire, Ship-wrack, and such Chances often happen, the Lender may be presum'd willing to run the Risque of them (e). But yet if the Borrower, when he might have sav'd the Loan preserves something more Valuable of his own, he becomes responsible. For tho' no Man can blame him for letting that perish which was less Valuable, yet since it might have been sav'd, and was lost for the Benefit of the Borrower, there is no Reason, why the Lender should stand to the Loss (f). On the other side it is but reasonable, that if any Expence has been laid out upon the Loan, besides what was necessary for the Use of it, the Owner should repay it (g).

VII. (†) A Charge is when we commit to another's Trust and Custody any Thing belonging to us to be kept gratis (2). And here the Trustee is bound to preserve it diligently, and to return it upon Demand (h). Yet sometimes Circumstances may so happen as to excuse him from making a Return even then. A Charge, (i) which you have receiv'd from a sober Person, you shall not return when he is drunk, or extravagant, or mad. For in such a Condition, he is not fit to make use of it. Nor shall you return it to Debtors or Slaves, whose Creditors and Masters lie in wait for them, for this would not be to return, but to betray the Charge. Suppose a Man (k), in his Senses, leaves a Sword in your Keeping, and demands it when he is mad; in such a case, to restore it is a Crime, and the Refusal of it a Duty. What if you should receive Money, in Trust, for him, and then find that he is taking up Arms against his Country, Would you return the Money? certainly not; because it would be against the Common-wealth, which ought to be prefer'd. To restore (l) a Charge, is in it self a commendable Thing; yet all Times and Places may not be proper for it. Sometimes the restoring it may be as bad as the disowning it. The Owner's Advantage ought to be consulted, and if the restoring it tends to his Prejudice, it ought to be withheld (m).

But if I had agreed to call for the Charge at such a certain time, I may nevertheless, if I please, change my Mind, and demand it sooner (n). A Passage in Quintilian (o) seems counter to this. Some Charges, says he, are depos'd to be return'd at Demand; some at such a Time. How was this depos'd? To be paid you when you had left off being Extravagant: but when you demanded it, you had not parted with your Extravagancies, and therefore it was not due; nor can he be said to have broke his Trust for refusing to restore it at a Time when you your self own he could not be forc'd to it. To this I answer, If he, that demanded it, was the very Person that depos'd it, it ought not to be withheld; but if another had depos'd it, suppose him whose Heir the Demandant is, the Trustee could not be oblig'd to restore it, before the Conditions required were perform'd (p).

As for the Degree, it is allowed on all hands, that ordinary Diligence is sufficient, for the Contract is not for the Trustees, but the Depo-

(a) Vid. D. ubi sup. l. 17. f. 3, 4. D. commodati. (*) Precarium. (b) Vid. Wisseback ad D. disp. 24. f. 19.

(c) Vid. lib. 13. t. 6. commodati, &c. § l. 19. & lib. 44. t. 7. l. 1. f. 4. D. de oblig. & act. (1) Vid. Grot. l. 2. c. 12. f. 13. n. 1.

(d) Vid. D. ubi supra, l. 21. 22.

(e) And thus I think that Law the 18. prin. and

l. 5. f. 4 & 7. D. commodati ought to be limited. Neither can I well approve of what is said in l. 19. D. diff. tit. which does not seem to agree with what is said in l. 12. f. 1. D. diff. tit. (f) Vid. l. 5. f. 4. D. commodati. See also Exod. XXII. 13, 14, 15. And d. l. 1. 18. princ. D. commodati. (g) Add. ubi supra, l. 18. f. 2. D. commodati. (†) Depositum.

(2) Vid. lib. 16. t. 3. Depositum, &c. leg. 1. princ. f. 8. (h) Vid. Instit. l. 3. t. 15. & l. 12. f. 3. D. depositi, ubi supr.

(i) Philo Jud. de plantatione Noach. (k) Cicero Offic. l. 3. c. 25. (l) Vid. Sen. de Benef. l. 4. c. 10. (m) Ambr. Offic. l. 1. c. ult. brings these Instances. If a Man who had intrusted Money to you, joins with the Barbarians against his Country; or, if any present be likely to rob him of it; or, if he be mad and cannot keep it, you ought not to restore it. Would it not be a Breach of Duty to give a mad Man his Sword? Or to restore any Thing stolen to the Prejudice of him that lost it? (n) Vid. lib. 16. t. 3. l. 1. f. 45, 46. D. depositi. (o) Declam. 245.

(p) Add. Val. Max. l. 7. c. 3. f. 5. inter externa.

ment's Advantage, and it is his own Fault if he depofes his Goods in the Hands of a carelefs Perfon: And for this Reason the Trustee does his Duty, if he takes the fame Care of the Charge, as he does of other Things, and applies the fame Diligence about that as about his own Affairs, be it never fo fmall (a). But fince, in a Charge, fome Offices of Friendship do ufually intervene (for no Man depofes but with a Friend, or one that he has a good Opinion of) I think, generally fpeaking, that Care is requir'd in the Management of a Charge, which diligent, induftrious Men ufually take about their own Affairs. Nay fometimes a more exact Care is neceffary, not only when it is exprefly promifed, but when the Condition of the Charge requires it, as if it be very valuable, or if ones whole Fortune depends upon it (b). Which Carefulnefs does not confift in having it Day and Night before our Eyes, but that we lay it up in the fafeft place we can, and where it is likely to receive leaft Damage. And therefore although I fatisfy the Laws of Friendship, if I take the fame Care of my Friend's Goods as I do of my own, nor can any one, in Modesty defire more; yet it is fit, when I cannot fave both, that I negle& my own, if of little worth, to preferve my Friends that is more valuable; for Inftance, in a Fire, I ought to preferve a Cheft of Gold and other precious Things, or full of Deeds and Writings of Moment, rather than fome of my own poor Houfhold-ftuff. But then the Deponent will be oblig'd to pay me the Value of thofe Things which I fuffer'd to perifh for the Prefervation of his, as well as other Expences and Loffes receiv'd upon the Account of the Charge. But if a Man fhould prefer the Prefervation of his own mean Goods to the more valuable Charge of his Friend (if it has not been covenanted to the contrary) he can be thought only to have Violated the Laws of Friendship and Good-nature, and cannot be forc'd to make good the Value of the Thing; for he is no Gainer by it, and the Intermiffion of Acts of Friendship and Good-nature does not oblige to the Reftitution of what Loffes may happen thereupon. But the Reason why the Roman Lawyers require a lefs Degree of Diligence in a Charge, than in a Commiſſion is becauſe the latter is manag'd by our own peculiar Act, and which therefore we have in our own Power to direct in every little Circumftance of it. But, in the former no Body defires, that I fhould be oblig'd to fit up, and watch by my Charge Night and Day, it being enough if I lay it up in a convenient place, and never view it, unlefs when ſome particular Occaſion requires, as I uſe to do with ſuch Things of my own. To the Law in Exod. XXII. 12. If it be ſtolen from him, he ſhall make Reftitution unto the Owner thereof; Grotius adds this Glofs, Provided it be by palpable Negligence, which does not much differ from Knavery.

It may bear a Queſtion, Whether the Trustee may make uſe of the Thing intruſted with him? To which I answer, that if the Charge can poſſibly receive any Damage in the Uſe, he ought not to do it without the Owner's Conſent (c). But if the Thing be never the worſe for being uſ'd, as if I ſhould lay a Silver Cup for Ornament on the Side-board, or make Uſe of it for the Entertainment of ſome extraordinary Gueſt, I don't ſee any Harm in this, provided the Owner is not particularly concern'd that no Body ſhould ſee it, and the Trustee knows that he is to ſtand to whatever Riſque it may run by being ſo uſ'd. But when the Owner has lock'd or ſeal'd up the Charge, we ought not, upon any Account, to open it (d). Nay a conſumable Commodity given in Charge, although neither lock'd nor ſeal'd up, may not be made uſe of by the Trustee, unleſs he be able to reſtore the ſame in Quantity and Quality upon Demand: for we are often in ſo great want of ſuch Sort of Things, that we cannot part with them upon any terms. Laſtly, 'tis well ordain'd in the Roman Law, that whoſoever ſhould diſown a Charge, which the Deponent, in Diſtreſs, had repoſed with him, as being in Danger of Fire, Shipwreck, Tumult, or ſuch like, ſhould be fined double; for ſuch Inhuman Villany deſerves to be ſeverely puniſh'd, which does not ſcruple to make a Gain of thoſe Men, who are the Objects of Compaſſion (e). Nay I think it a worſe Crime to diſown, or with-hold a Charge, than to commit a Robbery, for here only Juſtice and Property are violated, but there Friendship and Good-nature too ſuffer (f). Nor does it extenuate the Crime that the Trustee, having the Charge put into his Hands, has an Opportunity of playing the Knave (which is otherwiſe tempting enough) laid in his Way; whereas the Thief has no ſuch Temptation, but of his own Accord ſeizes upon other Men's Goods, and, which is more, breaks in upon that common Security, which makes every Man's Houſe his fafeſt Sanctuary. Nor is a Guardian guilty of a leſs heinous Crime, who debauches an Orphan committed to his Truſt, and receiv'd into his Houſe (g).

Since the Keeping only is given gratis, it is plain that all Expences laid out upon the Charge ought to be repaid. Upon which Ground it is rightly declar'd in the Digeſts (h), That if a Charge be receiv'd at Aſia to be reſtor'd at Rome, it muſt be at the Expence of the Owner, not of the Trustee.

(a) Vid. lib. 44. t. 7. l. 1. f. 5. D. de obligat. & act. (b) Add. Ambr. Off. l. 2. c. 29. (c) Scævola in Gellius, l. 7. c. 15. He that uſes a thing that was ſimply committed to his keeping; or puts it to other Uſes than the Owner gave him Leave, is guilty of Theft. Add. Inſtit. de oblig. quæ ex del. naſ. lib. 4. t. 1. (d) Add. lib. 16. t. 3. l. 1. c. 36. D. depoſiti. (e) Vid. l. 1. f. 1, 2, 4. D. depoſiti, d. 1. Quintilian, Decl. 245. adds, 'A Charge ought to be reſtor'd the ſooner, for being deliver'd ſecretly and without Proof. Add Exod. XXII. 7, 8, 9. Lev. VI. 2, &c. (f) In Pifidia the Breach of this Duty was Capital, Nicolaus Damascenus. (g) Add. Ariſt. Prob. Sect. 29. Qu. 2 & 6. Alio l. 1. f. 2. & l. 67. princ. D. de furtis. (h) Lib. 16. t. 3. l. 12. princ. D. depoſiti.

C H A P. V.

Of Chargeable Contracts in particular; and, First, of Bartering, Buying and Selling.

OF Chargeable Contracts, Bartering is deservedly esteem'd the Chief; for in Days of Yore, before Money was found out, there was no other Method of maintaining Commerce (a) (1). Now Bartering may be made two ways; either the Commodities may be valued for Money, and then, instead of Money, exchang'd for one another; or the Commodities may be immediately compar'd together. The first sort is, in a manner, Buying and Selling, for here the things are rated according to their Prices on both sides; which sort of Bartering is at this day, very frequent.

And therefore there is no reason to conclude, that pure Bartering was in use, at the Time of the Trojan War, as most do from that Passage in Homer, Iliad. ii. v. 472.

Ἐνθεν ἄρ' οἰνίζοντο κρηνοκόμωυτες Ἀχαιοί,
Ἄλλοι μὲν χαλκῷ, ἄλλοι δ' αἰθωνί σιδήρῳ,
Ἄλλοι δὲ ῥινόισι, ἄλλοι δ' αὐτοῖσι βόωνιν,
Ἄλλοι δ' ἀνδραπόδοισι.

The Grecian Chiefs their cheerful Bowls prepare,
And barter Bras and Steel for sumptuous Fare.
Some truck with Slaves or Skins of slaughter'd Kine,
And some the Ox it self exchange for Wine.

For, says Pliny (b), *I wish we could quite lay aside the Use of Gold, which all Good Men speak against, and which was found out to the Destruction of Mankind. How much happier was it when one thing was exchang'd for another? As (if Homer may be believed) was done at the time of the Trojan War: For then, I suppose, Commerce was set on foot for the Conveniencies of Life. He tells us, That some purchas'd with Hides, some with Iron, others with Plunder: Tho' he himself was an Admirer of Gold, yet he so rated things, as to make Glaucus exchange his golden Arms of a hundred Oxen Price, for Diomedes's of Nine. Hence it is, that the Fines inflicted by the old Laws, consisted of Cattle, even at Rome. Indeed, at this day, nothing is more common, than for Souldiers to exchange their Booty for other Commodities, for their Booty does not always consist of Money, and they do not scruple to take other things that come in their way. And therefore it does not follow, that Money was not in Use at the Time of the Trojan War, because the Souldiers purchas'd Wine with their Plunder; nay there is mention made of Talents of Gold in Homer, for in Iliad. i. v. 122. Agamemnon promises to give Achilles, δῖος δὲ χρυσίου τάλαντα, Ten Talents of Gold. &*

Odyss. vi. v. 393. Each of the Phæacian Princes gives Ulysses, χρυσίον τάλαντον πμῆεντος, A Talent of venerable Gold. And altho' that Gold in Odyss. i. v. 11. is call'd χρυσόν πολυδαίδαλον, Yet it is not probable, that all Gold was then wrought; or us'd only for Cups and such sort of Vessels. Nor does it appear why Homer should give such a Veneration to Gold, if it had not been then the Standard-price of other Things. Besides, πολυδαίδαλον may signify any Materials, capable of being finely wrought upon. As for Homer's calling Glaucus's Golden Arms ἐξαπέμποια; or, worth an hundred Oxen, and Diomedes's Bras ones ἑννέαβοια; or, worth Nine Oxen, without doubt he did it because, in old time, the greatest Riches consisted in Cattle, of which Oxen being the Chief, because of the absolute Necessity of them in Husbandry, it was usual to refer the Price of other things to them; which common way of speaking did not immediately grow out of use, after Money had been made the Measure of all Things: And therefore it is observ'd (c), that Maidens, who by reason of their Beauty, received great Presents from their Gallants, were called παρθένους ἀλωροβοίας, Virgins who gain Oxen: but granting that coin'd Money was not then known among the Grecians, yet the use of Gold and Silver, by weight, might possibly have obtain'd in Commerce. Indeed that many Nations used Money before the Trojan War, is plain enough from holy Writ.

This place of Homer puts me in mind of the Controversy between Cassius and Sabinus (d), Whether, before Money was in use, or now since the use of it, it might be call'd Selling, if, v. g. I should give my Cloak for a Coat? Sabinus asserted that it was, from this Passage of Homer, as if the Grecian Army had bought Wine with Bras, Iron and Men; but οἰνίζουσι does not properly signify to buy Wine, but to procure it by any means whatsoever, as among the Latines, pabulari, lignari, frumentari signify to forrage, to get Wood and Corn by any method whatsoever. The other Opinion indeed seems more feasible, because it is one Thing to buy, another to sell: the Buyer one Man, the Seller another: the Price one thing, and the Commodity another, but for the same Man to be Buyer and Seller, and the same thing both the Commodity and Price, seems absurd. But to this we reply, what we just now said of the two sorts of Bartering, for if we suppose the things to be first rated by Money, the Buying

(a) The Dutch made use of the simple and ancient way of Bartering Commodities, Vid. Tacit. de morib. Germ. c. 5.
(1) See Gror. B. 2. c. 12. §. 3. n. 3. (b) L. 33. c. 1.
(c) As Dydimus remarks. ad Hom. II. 2. v. 236.
(d) Id. lib. 18. t. 1. l. 1. D. de contrah. empt.

will be reciprocal, and therefore not absurd for the same Person, in a different Respect, to be both Buyer and Seller.

Under the name of Bartering may be brought the reciprocal Donations which commonly pass between Friends ; which not being a Contract, does not require Equality. And to this may be refer'd the changing of Arms between Glaucus and Diomedes (a), which for the Inequality may perhaps be stil'd Foolishness on Glaucus's side, but cannot be call'd Injustice in Diomedes (b). Among the Russians there is a Market for holy Images, which they do not pretend to sell, but to exchange for Money (c).

II. But since Money has been introduc'd, the Contract of Buying and Selling has been most in Use, whereby the Property of a Thing, or some Right Equivalent to it, is acquired for a certain Summ of Money : And here the first Enquiry is, when the Contract is so compleated, that nothing remains, but that the Seller relinquish the thing, and the Buyer take Possession of it? According to the Roman Laws the Contract is compleated as soon as both Sides have agreed upon the Price ; and then the Buyer can force the Seller to deliver up the thing : and the Seller can oblige the Buyer to take it, and to pay down the Price immediately, or at the time appointed (d).

But the Contract may be incompleat, and not capable of bearing an Action, either upon a general or a particular Account. The First is when the Buyer and the Seller (1) are not agreed, but still endeavour to bring one another to their own Terms ; where they are both free to give back and break off the Bargain, having not yet contracted an Obligation, provided there be no Deceit, nor Design, in either Party, to illude the other ; which indeed obtains in all Contracts. The Latter is, when the Bargain turns upon some Conditions (2), either express, or understood ; as if the Ware is first to be seen, or tasted (3) ; for here the Bargain goes upon a Supposition, that the thing will not only appear as the Seller had represented it, but that it will then please too. For indeed the Knowledge of the thing is always Necessary for the determining the Price, and it is imprudent to buy without seeing it, where we cannot depend upon the word of the Seller.

The Determining of the Commodity, by Weight, Measure, or Number (4), is not properly a Condition of Sale, unless the thing be so, as not to serve my turn, but in such a Quantity. However, for putting the Contract in Execution, it is necessary to measure, number, or weigh, for we cannot otherwise specify the Thing, and set it apart from those of the same sort. Nor, without this Measuring, can the Goods be deliver'd, or Property transfer'd ; for I have no other way of determining what belongs to me, and what to the Seller. Sometimes indeed we buy at a Lump, and then measuring is only for Experiment, not for the rating of the Commodity : for, in that Case, the Measure does not precede the Delivery ; It being one thing to sell this Vessel of Wine that holds ten Gallons, and another to sell ten Gallons out of this Vessel.

Lastly, The Bargain is incompleat, if the Parties (5), particularly, agree to have one anothers Consent express in Writing, and the Writings be not yet finish'd. But 'tis another Thing, if this Writing is design'd only for a help of the Memory, or an Evidence of the Thing (e)

III. And here we must take special Care to distinguish between the Contract it self and the Execution of it. The Contract is compleated as soon as the Commodity and Price is agreed upon, provided there be no Condition added, that can suspend the Obligation, or any thing else, that can leave Room for either Party to recede from the Bargain : but the Execution of the Contract consists in the actual Delivery of the Money by the Buyer, and of the Commodity by the Seller. It is indeed most natural, that as soon as the Contract is compleated, it should be put in Execution ; or, that as soon as the Price is agreed upon, the Buyer should deliver the Money and receive the Commodity. Which they call Trucking with ready Money (f).

But when there is some time between the Completion of the Bargain and the Delivery of the Thing ; it may be demanded to whom the Damage, or the Profit of the Commodity belongs in the mean time, to the Buyer, or to the Seller ? 'Tis well known that the Roman Law, as soon as ever the Bargain is compleated, imputes the Risque of the Commodity to the Buyer, altho' it be not yet deliver'd, and altho' the Seller remains Master of it. By Risques they mean the Accidents 'tis liable to, from external Injuries, as Theft, &c. or internal Decay proceeding from Natural Causes (g). But how can the Damage belong to the Buyer, when he is not

(a) Vid. Hom. Il. d. l. (b) Maximus Tyr. Dissert. 23. says, 'Glaucus rated his Purchase from the Occasion, not according to the real Value. And again, Dissert. 24. 'Nor had he that receiv'd the golden Arms more than his due, nor he that receiv'd the brazen, less ; but both did generously ; the Inequality of the Matter being made up with the Equality of the Design, that each had of obliging the other. Add. Ifocr. ad Nicocl. in princip.

(c) Olearius itin. Perf. l. 1. c. 1. (d) Add. lib. 19. t. 5. D. de præscript. verbis, &c. Leg. 5. f. 1. Sine pretio nulla venditio est. Lib. 18. t. 1. & l. 19. l. 34. f. 5, 6. l. 35. f. 1, 5, 6, 7. D. de contrah. empt. &c.

(1) Vid. D. ibid. leg. 35. f. 1. (2) Vid. D. ibid. leg. 7. f. 1. See above in B. 3. Ch. 8. (3) Vid. D. ubi supra, leg. 34. f. 5. (4) Vid. D. ubi supra. (5) This not only respects Contracts of Selling, but likewise all other Contracts, Vid. G. lib. 4. t. 21. De fide instrumentor. &c. leg. 17. Vid. Instit. lib. 3. t. 24. De emptione & venditione princip.

(e) What the Hebrews observed, in Relation to this Contract, is curiously taken Notice of by Selden, De J. N. & G. secund. Heb. l. 6. c. 1 & 4. Add a Place of Theoph. in Stobæus, Serm. 42. (f) Vid. Plaut. Afin. Act. 1. Sc. 3. v. 47. As also Plato de Leg. l. 11. in his Common-wealth enacts, 'That whatsoever is bought and sold, be done in such a certain Place of the Forum, the Seller delivering the Commodity, and the Buyer paying down the Price immediately. (g) Vid. d. tit. de peric. & commod. rei venditæ.

yet the Owner, whereas the Loss of a Thing is to the Owner? To which some answer (1), that that Trite saying, The Loss is to the Owner, is true, when the Owner is oppos'd to those who have barely the Use and Custody of the Thing; and not to those who have Right in it and a Power to call for it as their own. Which Distinction is founded upon this Reason, that the Buyer might and ought to have immediately taken Possession of the Commodity, and to have paid down the Money; which if he had done, it had perish'd in his own keeping; and therefore his Delay and Negligence ought not to turn to the Loss of the Seller. Besides, the Risque belongs to the Buyer, not only because he is the Owner; but because the Seller, after the Completion of the Bargain, in respect of the Buyer, is not consider'd as Owner, but as Trustee of such a particular Commodity, for which, if it be lost without his Fault, he ought not to be responsible.

But after all, since it is the Seller's Business to give the Buyer Possession, if he has not discharged this Duty, I do not see why he, rather than the other, should not stand to the Loss of it. For the Answer, That a Person, having promis'd any certain thing, does not stand oblig'd in case the thing be lost, does not come up to our Case (a): For there the other Party was to have gain'd the thing gratis; and it would be hard and unjust for a Man that had promis'd a certain Species, upon the Loss of it, to be bound to make good the Value. But in such Dealings, as admit of no Latitude, the Case is altered; for why should the Buyer, who has not yet had the Delivery made him according to the Contract, be deprived of the Goods, and yet pay the Seller the Price of them (b).

The best way to discover natural Equity, in this Point, is to distinguish whether the Delay, was absolutely necessary, for the Delivery of the Commodity; or only occasion'd through the Default of one of the Parties; and if occasioned, Whether by the Buyer, or the Seller?

The first Case may be put thus, suppose I buy Cattle, which at present are at some distance, and the Seller in driving them to me, happens to have them intercepted by Robbers, Wolves, or some other Accident: in this case no doubt the Loss is the Sellers.

Where the Delay has not been necessary, but occasion'd by the Seller, then too the Loss lies at his door.

But if the Buyer be the Occasion of it, then he stands to the Loss of it. For the very Moment, that the Commodity was due, and the Seller ready to make Delivery of it, the Property pass'd to the Buyer, and the Thing then began to belong to him only (c). And therefore, if the Seller out of Kindness keeps in Custody the Goods, which the Buyer did not so much as commit to him in Trust, 'tis unreasonable to expect, that he should stand to the Casualties that may attend them. But in Case the Buyer had committed them to his Custody, then must they be look'd upon as a Charge, and consequently the Receiver must be free from whatever Casualties may happen to them. In which case, the Delivery of the Commodity ought to be made by a Fiction brevis manus (2), otherwise than is done in the Loan, or Letting of a Thing. For there, by the Delivery we alienate our own, but here the Alienation is made to us. What has been here said of the Damage may be apply'd to the Gain also (3).

IV. Moreover 'tis usual for this Contract to be qualified with the Addition of several other Pacts, according to the Pleasure of the Contractors, or the Law of the Land. In which, the Law of Nature is concern'd no farther than that each Party stands to his Agreement, provided nothing absurd, or unjust is contain'd in it, and that every Subject conform himself to the Law of his Country, as he expects to have his Contract Valid in it. Thus nothing is more common than to agree upon Payment of the Money sometime after the Delivery of the Thing; and also, that the Thing shall not be deliver'd till such a time; the Property, in the mean time, together with the Gain or Hazard attending it, lying in the Seller (4).

Besides, We frequently practise what the Civilians call Addictio in diem, which gives the Seller Leave to accept of any better Bargain, that shall offer it self by such a day. This may be done two ways. First, When the Bargain is compleated, but upon Condition that it shall be null, if better Terms offer themselves. Or Secondly, if it be only agreed de futuro, that it shall be a Bargain, if better Offers are not made (d). In the former case, the Property pass'es over to the Buyer; in the latter, it remains in the Seller, till the Completion of the Contract.

What they call Lex Commissoria makes void the Bargain, if the Price be not paid by such a Day. And in this case, either the Seller may immediately deliver the Goods, and in Default of the Payment, claim them again with the Emolument (e): or else the Goods may be kept in Possession, till Payment be actually made: which last seems to be the safest Way, for generally this Clause is design'd in Favour of the Seller, to save him from being put to any Trouble in quest of his Money: whereas, the Trouble would be the same, were he to recover his Goods out of the Hands of an ill Paymaster (f).

Sometimes too either the Laws of the Land,

(1) Vid. C. lib. 4. t. 24. De pignoratitia actione, leg. 9. (a) According to lib. 45. t. 1. leg. 33, l. 83. f. 7. D. de verb. oblig. & lib. 35. t. 2. l. 30. f. 4. D. ad L. Falcid. in fine, & lib. 4. t. 3. leg. 18. f. 5. D. de dolo malo.
 (b) Ziegler ad Grof. l. 2. c. 12. f. 15. (c) Vid. supra, l. 4. c. 9. f. 5. (2) See above in B. 4. c. 9. f. 9.
 (3) Commodum ejus esse debet cujus est periculum, Vid. Instit. l. 3. t. 24. f. 3. De empt. & vendit. (4) Vid. Instit. ibid. l. 1. d. Caton. de re rustica, c. 80. (d) Vid. lib. 18. t. 2. l. 2. D. de in diem addict. (e) Vid. lib. 18. t. 3. leg. 5. D. de lege Commissor. (f) Vid. l. 2, 3. D. d. t.

or the Parties themselves grant one another the Liberty of breaking off the Bargain (†), which is done several ways; for sometimes a Clause is added, that upon tender of the Price at any time, or by such a certain day, the Buyer shall be obliged to restore the Goods to the Seller, or his Heirs (1). And this certain day may be express'd with a different Design, either to signify the Term, after which the Seller may have Power to break off the Bargain: or the Term, to which, and not longer, such a Liberty shall be granted. Where 'tis observable, that as this Power of redeeming is design'd in Favour of the Seller, who sometimes upon urgent Occasions, is forc'd to part with that which he would not willingly lose for ever (a): So the fixing a Term to that Power, is in Favour of the Buyer; for it is to his Advantage, if he be not forc'd to quit the Possession of his Purchase in some short time, to be at length sure of the Perpetuity of it. Sometimes too, when the Sale is made in Favour of the Seller, the Buyer is allow'd the Liberty to bring back the Commodity whenever he pleases, or at such a certain time, and the Seller is oblig'd to refund the Money (b).

Another more easy sort of Redemption, is what they call jus œquidistans, or, the Privilege of the first Refusal, that is, if the Buyer be hereafter dispos'd to part with the Commodity, he must let the Seller have the first Refusal at the same Rate he would sell it to another. In many Places certain Persons pretend to this Privilege by Law; as the Landlord in the Sale of his Tenant's Stock, the Creditor in his Debtor's Goods, the Neighbour in the Purchase of a neighbouring Farm, any Member in a Thing that belongs to the Society, and the next a Kin, in the Goods of their Relations, which is peculiarly call'd Retractus Gentilitius, or the Family Privilege.

Usual too it is, at the selling of Land, to except one spot, and the Use of it; as Prodigals, when they sell their Estates, do sometimes reserve a Title to as much as may serve for their Grave, to which many think Virgil alludes, Ecl. 3. v. 104, 105.

Dic quibus in terris, & eris mihi magnus Apollo, Tres pateat Cœli spatium non amplius unas.

Tell where the Round of Heaven, which all contains,
To three short Ells on Earth our Sight restrains.
Tell that, and rise Apollo for thy Pains.

Thus Menius, when he sold his House to the Censors for a Basilicon, reserved the Right of one Pillar to build upon, that from thence he and his Posterity might see the Gladiators that then used to fight in the Forum (c).

What the Divine Law prescribes about Redemption, may be read in, Lev. XXV. 13, &c. (2). The Reason of which Injunctions was taken from the particular Constitution of that Commonwealth founded by Moses; for his Design was that an equal Degree of Liberty should flourish amongst them; to which End, it was necessary to hinder any from engrossing to themselves so much Land, as might make others divested of their Patrimony, dependent on them; for so by degrees, Lordship and Tyranny might be introduc'd (d). The same End did Lycurgus propose to himself, when he divided the Territories of Sparta into 39000 Parts: which he distributed among the People by Lot; and forbid them to encrease, diminish, subdivide, or sell (e).

Besides, there is another common way of Selling, which they call per averfionem, where Things of different Value are not rated separately, but sold altogether.

Lastly, Things are sometimes so sold, as to return again to the Seller after a certain Term of Years, without his being oblig'd to refund the Price. Thus, in England Gentlemen sell their Ground for 30, or 35 Years, upon Condition that the Buyer shall build upon it after such a particular manner; which sort of Contract is something like that of Renting.

V. As for any other Obligations between the Buyer and the Seller, they easily appear from the Nature of the Contract, and the additional Paets. The Buyer is oblig'd to pay the Price agreed for at the time appointed, and to give the Receiver a good Title to it, I mean, to pay him with his own, and not another Man's Money (3). And if he pays another Man's Money, and it happens to be challeng'd by the Owner, he is oblig'd to pay it over again, and as much more as the Receiver loses, by having it thus challeng'd. As for the Seller, he is oblig'd to deliver the Goods bargain'd for, with such Qualities as the common Nature of Contract, or the particular Agreement requires, and that too at the time appointed (f). And if, between the Completion of the Bargain, and the Delivery of the Goods, the Seller should repent, and be desirous to return the Money with Amends, the Buyer nevertheless is not oblig'd to accept it; but may force him to stand to his Bargain, unless in point of Good-nature he be otherwise perswaded; but if, through the Default and Knavery of the Seller, the Delivery cannot be made, the Money together with Damages is to be restored. What the Law is,

(†) Retractus. (1) Vid. C. lib. 4. t. 54. de pactis inter empt. & vendit. compositis, leg. 2. (a) 'The Emperor Marcus, in want of Money, having sold all his Imperial Furniture, afterwards gave leave to the Purchasers, for any of them, to bring back their Purchase, and receive their Money, Jul. Capitol. (b) Vid. Liv. l. 31. c. 13.

(c) Unde Menianorum nomen ejusmodi projectis adhasisse creditur. Alcon, Ped. in divin. Cicer. c. 16. p. 328. Ed. Grav.

(2) Upon which place, see Mr. Le Clerc. (d) For I cannot approve of the Reason that Grotius brings of this Law, viz. That 'tis much easier to find a dwelling Place any where than Food. Vid. Grot. ad d. l. v. 29.

(e) Among the Lacedemonians, it was held unlawful and dishonourable to sell Land that had been a long time in the Family, Herack, de Pol. (3) Vid. D. lib. 19. t. 1. leg. 11. f. 2. & C. lib. 49. leg. 7. & leg. 13. f. 19. D. ubi Sup.

(f) Vid. l. 11. f. 1, &c. D. de Act. emp.

when the Seller is not in the Fault, we have said above.

But if a Man sells the same thing to Two, and has as yet deliver'd it to neither, without doubt the first Bargain ought to take place; and much rather, if the thing has been already deliver'd to him. But yet, in this case, the knavish Seller ought to make Satisfaction to the last Purchaser, for whatsoever Loss he is at by being thus disappointed. But supposing the Delivery to have been made to the last, he, upon the Grounds of the Civil Law, will be prefer'd to the other: For he receiv'd the thing of the Owner, upon a just Title; and the first can have no Action against him: Not a real one, for he was not yet Master of the thing; nor a personal, for no Intercourse had passed between them: Neither can the Seller have any Pretence to revoke the Bargain (a) (1). Grotius (b) too, in this case, prefers the Title of the last, Because, by the Delivery of the thing, the Buyer makes over all his Right, which is not done by promising to sell it. But here Grotius does not seem to be consistent with himself; indeed the Promise to sell is not selling, but yet he had asserted, that the Property is made over at the very Moment of Contract, although the thing be not then delivered: and therefore after such a Sale, no Right can remain in the Seller, any further than what tends to the Delivery of the thing into the Hands of the Buyer; and consequently whatever Bargain the Seller concludes afterwards, it is null and cannot stand in Prejudice of him, who before has got a Right to it. And this being granted, I question whether the favourable Plea of Possession, thus unjustly acquired, can always hurt the Title of the first Purchaser. Moreover, since a Man does not lose his Right in a Thing by being deprived of the Possession of it, and since a Man may honestly come by the Possession of another's Goods; if therefore, such a Possessor sells a thing to a Third Person, he does not extinguish the Right of the Owner; nor can he transfer to another a better Title than he had himself. And therefore, although the Design of the Buyer be to acquire a Property in the thing, yet since the thing, which is thus sold, either ignorantly or designedly, is another Man's, it is as much as can be expected, if the Seller gives the Buyer free Possession, and puts him in Power of using it, and bears him harmless (2), if his Title be disputed (c).

VI. There is also a peculiar sort of Sale, where the Purchase is no certain thing, but Hope and Expectation only, on which, by Agreement of the Parties, a Price is laid. Nor is there any Default in this sort of Sale, altho' afterward the thing happens to be above, or below the Price. The same obtains at Auctions, and where things of different Prices are sold altogether at a Lump: for all such sort of Bargains have something of Chance in them (d): Such as was the Cast of a Net (e), bought of the Milesian (f) Fisher-men, which occasioned a famous Suit between the Fisher-men and the Buyer of the Cast; for they having drawn out a golden Table in their Net, the Buyer claim'd it as his, for that he had bought whatever should be taken, or the Fortune of the Cast: whereas the Fisher-men, on the other side, contended that the Bargain had regard only to what Fish should be caught. And indeed they seem to have been in the right, for in explaining any Contract we ought to consider the Intent of the Contractors; and here 'tis evident, they had no thoughts of Gold, but of Fish only: nor does it make for the Buyer that it was a Purchase of Chance; for that was only design'd to extend to the Quantity of Fish, and not to any Thing else, which by great Fortune might come to the Net. And therefore the Table ought to be look'd upon as a Treasure found by Chance.

As for the Decision of the Oracle, which adjudged it to the wisest, that plainly favour'd of the Crafty Covetousness of the Priests, who thereby bid fair for the procuring such a glorious Prey to themselves: For what Mortal would arrogate to himself the Title of the Wiseest Man (g).

VII. In this place something may be expected to be said concerning Monopolies, Whether any, or all of them be against the Law of Nature, or no? For 'tis an odious Name, and the Laws of many States brand it grievously. But here we must exempt several Things from the invidious Title of Monopolies, which indeed are not such. For sure 'tis prohibited by no Law, nor can it come under the Name of a Monopoly, if only one Man, in any Town, has got the way of making some sort of Manufacture, or if one Man only has got such a sort of Grain in his Ground, or if some certain Commodity be the Produce only of one particular Country (h). For Monopolies, as such, imply that others too would sell the same did not one Man ingross the whole Trade to himself. And therefore, he who alone brings a Commodity from a Foreign Country, cannot be said to set up a Monopoly, provided he does not hinder others from importing the same. Nor is it unlawful for

(a) Add. lib. 6. t. 2. l. 9. f. 4. D. de publicana in rem actione. (1) Add. C. lib. 3. t. 32. de rei vindic. leg. 15.
 (b) Add. d. l. f. 15. (2) Sive tota res evincatur, sive pars, habet regressum empt. in vendit. D. lib. 21. t. 2. de Evict. &c.
 (c) Add. Plaut. Perf. Act. 4. Sc. 4. (d) Vid. l. 39. t. 4. l. 9. princ. D. de publicanis. But yet add Plin. l. 8. Ep. 2.
See Sueton. in August. c. 75. (e) Concerning which see lib. 18. t. 1. l. 8. D. de contrah. empt. L. 11. f. 18. l. 12. D. de act. empt.
 (f) Plut. in Solon, p. 80. Edit. Wech. says between the Fisher-men of Cos, and a Milesian Stranger. Diog. Laert. lib. 1. f. 28. between some young Men of Ionia, and the Milesian Fishermen in Thalet. (g) According to that of Sophocl. Antigone, p. 257. Edit. H. Steph. All Priests are greedy of Gain. See Val. Max. l. 4. c. 1. f. 7. inter externa.
Mornac. ad. l. 12. D. de act. empt. &c. (h) Since there is no such Produce of Alum in any other Country, which yet is of great use, it is not to be wondred at, that the Lipareans have the Monopoly of it, and setting what Prices they please upon it, make vast Returns. Died. Sic. l. 5. c. 10. p. 293. Ed. Rhodom.

any Nation, that abounds in one particular Commodity, to bargain with another Nation to let them only have the Trade of it, for any one may sell his own when and to whom he pleases; indeed when we happen to have a Superfluity of what another cannot be without, then the Law of Humanity requires, that we should not make such a Bargain to the Prejudice of others. But if a Man, without contracting with the Owners, should of his own Head, aim at a Monopoly by hindring some by Force, and others by clandestine Contrivances from coming to the same Place, and by that means lay a Necessity upon all others to buy of him, it is plain that he offends against the Law of Humanity, and impudently breaks in upon the Liberty of the rest.

As for Monopolies among private Citizens, it cannot be accounted illegal, or oppressive that every one is not allowed to set up what Trade he pleases, but those only who have gain'd a right by the Charter of the Corporation; thus in most Cities of Europe no Man can open a Shop, or betake himself to any particular Trade, but he who has served some time an Apprenticeship at it, for it is not enough that he is expert in it.

Besides, the Magistrate may give one Man, or one Company of Men the sole Power of Importing certain Commodities from certain Places, exclusive of all others. And there may be several good Reasons for the granting such a Privilege. For it requires vast Charges to settle a Trade with a very remote Nation, and perhaps after great Expences it may not succeed at all; and therefore the Authors of such a Commerce ought, in reason, to have Security, that others may not intercept gratis what they have established at their great Risque and Charge; and besides such privileg'd Companies are better able to assist the Publick with their Riches, upon any Emergencies, than private Persons: By this means too a greater Trade may be carried on, and with better Credit: Nor is this Method liable to so many Tricks and Shifts, since the Gain comes into the common Bank to be divided proportionably amongst them all. But as for these Privileges, a prudent Government will not grant 'em, but where the Commodities are imported from remote Places, and with great Hazard; and which do not so much concern the Necessaries as the Superfluities of Life. Nor even then must the Merchants be allowed to enhance the Price of those things at their Pleasure; for it is against Reason to give a few an Opportunity of scraping up exorbitant Riches out of the Fortunes of the rest, when the Publick gets nothing by it.

Lastly, It seems unjust that Tradesmen, or Farmers should be forced to sell their Manufactures, or the Produce of their Ground to certain People only, who sell the same to others by Retail; for by this Means the Riches of the State may come into the hands of a few, to the Detriment and Oppression of the rest.

I cannot but take notice, by the way, that Grotius (a) brings the Example of Joseph, when he was Viceroy of Egypt, in Justification of Monopolies: Tho' that Example is not much to the Purpose, for neither did the King hinder others from buying up the Corn in the Years of Plenty, nor any from selling, who had too much: Neither had the Alexandrians in Strabo (b) the Monopoly of Indian and Aethiopicke Commodities from any Privilege, but from the Situation of the Place.

But a Monopoly, properly so call'd, as having the Force of a Privilege, cannot be set on foot by private Men: For how can a private Man justify his hindring others from meddling with such a sort of Commodity, when he has no Command over, nor can lawfully use Force against them; and therefore the Monopolies of private Men are spurious and illegal, and do not depend upon Rights and Privileges, but are generally carried on by clandestine Frauds and Combinations: As if some few by a Trick should debar others from Trading to those Places from whence they have their Commodities, or should hinder those that have them from bringing them to Market: Or, if they should enter into a Combination to buy up all such sort of Commodities, and then stiffe them, that so the Scarcity may enhance the Price (c). The Knavery of such ought as much to be corrected, as those who (d) enter into Compact to raise extravagantly the Prices of other things, by agreeing privately to sell nothing under such a Rate: Which piece of Roguery Labourers and Workmen are sometimes guilty of (e).

I cannot discommend the Sagacity of Thales, who rented all the Olive-yards, having foreseen by his Skill in Astrology, that there would be great Plenty of Olives that Year (f) (1).

(a) L. 2. c. 12. f. 16. (b) L. 17. p. 549. Ed. Gen. Casaub. (c) Against whom may be apply'd that of Apollonius Tyaneus in Philostr. l. 1. c. 12. in the Beginning. 'The Earth is the Mother of all, for she is Just; but you being Unjust have made her only a Mother to your selves. (d) Ut in Velabro Olearii de quo vide Erasmi. Adag. (e) Add. Plin. l. 8. c. 37. de erinaceo. L. un. C. de Monopol. L. 6. D. de extraord. crim. and Cujacius obs. X. 19. (f) Arist. Pol. l. 1. c. 7. (11.) Diog. Laert. l. 1. f. 26. (1) Vid. Cicer. de Divinat. l. 1. c. 49.

C H A P. VI.

Of Renting and Hiring.

Renting and Hiring (*), whereby the use of a Thing, or Labour is granted for a certain Rate, bears some Affinity to Buying and Selling, and may be brought under almost the same Rules (1). For the Rent or Wages answers the Price; and the Use of the Thing or the Labour answers the Property which is acquired by Buying; and as the Contract of Buying and Selling is completed when the Price is agreed upon, so is this of Renting and Hiring when the Parties are agreed about the Rent and Wages (a). And as a thing sells the cheaper, when sold in Favour of the Seller, and the dearer when in Favour of the Buyer; so in Renting and Hiring, if a Man is at a loss for a Tenant, or wants Work, he is contented with small Rent or Wages; but if his Land or Work is sought after, he may demand much greater. Lastly, as in Buying and Selling 'tis generally the Seller's Business to name the Price (b), and the Buyer ultimately resolves upon it; so is it also in Renting and Hiring (c). But as he who buys any Commodity, without agreeing upon the Price, is suppos'd to oblige himself to the common Price of it; so in this Contract if terms are not agreed upon, it is left to the Equity of the Person Renting or Hiring, who is nevertheless oblig'd to give as much as is usually given (d). That way of paying for a Work of Pleasure, which Aristotle (e) mentions, is a perfect Cavil. A certain Person promis'd a Musician the better he play'd, the more he should be rewarded. The next Day, when the Musician claim'd his Promise, he reply'd that he had repay'd Pleasure with Pleasure. But Aristotle was right in saying, He had as good received nothing, since he did not receive that which he expected (f). In this Contract also if any Damage happens to the Labourer, whilst he is about his Work, 'tis his own Loss, and not the Hirer's (g). Among the Ephesians there was a remarkable Law concerning Architects, that if the Charge in Building amounted to a fourth Part more than what the Architect had computed it, he was bound to make it good out of his own Pocket (h).

II. But if a Man rents a Thing, and any Accident intercepts the Use of it, or renders it worse, Ought the Loss to be the Landlords, or the Tenants? To which some answer in short, that if the Thing itself perishes, the Loss belongs to the Landlord: but as for Barrenness and other Mischances, which intercept only the Use of it, they are, unless provided against by Covenant, generally at the Loss of the Tenant: And the Landlord may justly demand the full Rent agreed upon, although perhaps the Tenant has not made so much of his Land as was expected. For, the Landlord gave the Tenant Power to make the best of it; and the Hopes of the Produce when they made the Bargain, was really worth so much; and therefore since he made good his Part, 'tis but fair that the other should also make good his.

But to canvas this Question more nicely, 'tis manifest, when the Thing perishes, without the Tenant's Fault, he is not oblig'd to make it good, but from that time his Rent ceases. For the Title to the whole Rent is founded upon Presumption that the Thing be in Being, during the Time included in the Contract; but if the Thing ceases to be, the Contract ceases also (i). And upon this, is founded the Law of Sesostris an Egyptian King: That if the Violence of the River should wash away any part of the Land, the Tenant should be proportionably abated in his Rent (k). Again, we must distinguish between those things, where the Landlord may and ought to assign a certain and determined Use: And those, whose Use, as to Quantity, is uncertain and depends upon Chance, and which, upon that Account, neither can, nor ought to be determined. To instance in the former sort; I hire a House to dwell in, which my Landlord is obliged to make habitable, and therefore if the Violence of a Storm, or my Neighbour's Fire should intercept the Use of it, I may fairly withhold in Proportion so (*) Locatio & Conductio. (1) V. Instit. l. 3. t. 25. princ. (a) V. Instit. ibid. § 1. 19. t. 2. D. locati. Which yet how it may be tacitly prolong'd, V. l. 13. § 11. l. 14. D. h. t. (b) Plaut. Perf. Act. 4. Sc. 4. v. 37. 'Tis your Ware, you ought to set the Price. (c) 'Whose Business is it to assign the Price? He who delivers the Thing, or he that receives it? He who delivers it seems to leave it to the other: As they say Protagoras used to do, for whatever he taught, he left it to the Scholar to set a Value upon what he learn'd, and was paid accordingly, Arist. Nic. l. 9. c. 1. Tho' concerning this Custom of Protagoras he himself thus speaks in Plato, in the Dialogue that bears his Name. 'My way is this, when I have taught any one, if he pleases, he gives me as much Money as I demand; if not, I bring him into the Temple, and make him declare upon Oath what he thinks my Teaching is worth, and so much I receive.

(d) See Mat. XX. 4, 7. (e) Nicom. l. 9. c. 1. Vid. & Plut. de auditione, p. 41. D. & de fortuna Alexandri, p. 333, 334. (f) Rectius similem cavillationem adhibuit Bochoris apud Plutarchum Demetrio, pag. 901. D. Quum quidam amaret Thonidem meretricem, poposcit illa ingentem pecunia summam. Adolescens inde, cum in somnis sibi visus esset cum illa concumbere, liberatus est libidine. Ob id mercedem ab illo institit Thonis judicio exigere. Cognita causa iussit Bocchoris illi quantum postulaverat Thonis argenti in vas numeratum huc atque illuc manu jactare, ac meretricem umbra frui. Quanquam Sententiam hanc arguit Lamiæ iniquitatis. Neque enim, inquit, ademit meretrici umbra pecuniæ cupiditatem, Somnium vero amore adolescentem expediit.

(g) Vid. lib. 14. t. 2. l. 2. f. 1. l. 6. D. de lege Rhodia. (h) Vid. Vitruv. l. 10. pref. (i) Vid. lib. 19. t. 2. leg. 15. f. 2. in fin. & ibid. l. 9. f. 4. D. locati.

(k) Vid. Herod. Euterpe, l. 4. c. 7. f. 12.

much of the Rent. For the Rent was determined for the Use, which the House, in the Condition it was in at the making of the Bargain, was capable of affording, during the whole Time I had hired it for; and the Use being lessened, without any Fault of mine, the Rent ought to be lessened also, unless it be immediately repaired without any considerable Inconvenience, or Loss to me (a). And so, if a Tenant, or a Farmer, by force of Arms, be drove out of his House, or Farm, 'tis manifest, the Rent from that time ought to cease; for, in this case, the Thing is morally lost to the Owner, till the Enemy be ejected. But if the Corn be gathered in, and then plundered by the Enemy, the case is altered; and the Tenant is then obliged to stand to the Loss.

As for Labour; if a Man be hired only for the Dispatch of some transient Business, and any Mischance hinders him from performing it, he can have no Title to his Wages: But if a Man takes another into his Service for a continued time, and such an Accident happens, in common Humanity he ought not to discard him, or to abate his Wages; especially if there be Hopes that he may make Amends by his future Diligence for the time he has lost; or if his former Behaviour has deserved such Favour.

III. But as for those Things, whose Produce is uncertain, as Fields, Orchards, Vineyards, Rivers for Fishing and such like; as a plentiful Produce is to the Benefit of the Tenant, so a bad one is to his Loss: Nor in Strictness of Justice can he desire any of the Rent to be abated by reason of a poor Harvest, especially since the Barrenness of one Year is made up by the Plenty of another; for a good Husband is not used to let or rent such Things for one Year only (b). Nor can that common Objection take place here, That no Body ought to grow rich at another's loss: For the Landlord might urge the same in a plentiful Year for the raising the Rent, whom in that Case the Tenant would have no Regard to. For, because the Produce is more one Year than another, the Landlord had rather be sure of such a Rent, than depend upon the Uncertainty of the Season: And, on the other side, the Tenant lays out a Certainty for the Hopes of an uncertain Gain, for which, if it fails him, he can blame no Body but himself. However that Medium proposed in the Digests (c) may be rightly applied here, If the Produce happen to perish by Floods, or by Birds of Prey, or by the Inroads of an Enemy, or by a Blight or Drought, the Landlord ought to make Allowance, and the Reason added is, lest the Tenant, besides the loss of what Corn he had sowed, should be forc'd to pay the Rent of the Ground too, and so bear a double Misfortune. But if the Corn proves bad, and nothing happens more than ordinary, the loss is then the Tenants. Where it appears that this Medium consists in a Division of the Mischances to which the Produce is liable, into ordinary and extraordinary (d), for if the Rent was to be abated for every little loss, it would give continual Occasion for impertinent Law-suits. And therefore the Rent of Land is determined according to the middle Produce, computing one Year with another, lest the Farmer upon every little loss should have Occasion to complain; and yet 'tis difficult to lay down precisely how great the loss ought to be for the Abatement of the Rent, which may better be left to the Discretion of an honest Man considering all Circumstances, than to the Determination of any general Rule.

Sometimes a Farmer takes Land upon Condition to pay his Landlord the whole Produce of it, deducting first the Value of his Labour. And here the Farmer is, as it were, an Hireling, and if the Year prove Barren, the loss is to the Landlord only.

If the Tenant should by any Accident have the Use of the Land intercepted, and the Landlord should, in the mean time, let it to another, or reap the Profit himself, which otherwise would be due to the Tenant; whatsoever Gain he makes of it, he ought to refund it to the first Tenant, or else to receive it in part of Payment for the Rent (e).

Hither may be referred the Law in Egypt, relating to Physicians; who, if they took Care of their Patient, according to the Direction of the publick Book, were not answerable, if he died under their Hands; but if they acted against those Directions, they were tried for their Lives (f). Alexander de Rhodes (g) relates that in the Kingdom of Tunquin, they agree with the Physician for a certain Rate at the Beginning of the Distemper, but which he does not receive till he makes his Cure; and if the Patient miscarries, he has nothing for his Pains; by this means they think to quicken the Diligence of the Physician. The same Author tells us of a Physician, who being consulted and bargaining for his Fee, said, That were the Patient a Young Man, he would not Cure him, under a 100 Scudi, but since he was Old, he would be contented with 20, because the Life he should restore was not likely to last long.

IV. But if my Labour, suppose in a Journey, can be serviceable to many, and I am hired by one Person, to the full Value, Can I exact the same Price from others also? Grotius (h) is of Opinion I may, if the Law of the Land does not interpose; for it has no Relation to the Contract which I made with the first: Nor is my Labour the less valuable to him by being serviceable to others also. However such a Contract as this, does not seem agreeable to Equity and Good-nature, tho' perhaps it is not strictly unjust. For when one Man alone has paid for the whole Labour, if it can do service to others also, without being the more painful to the Performer; in respect of them, it ought to be rankt among those Favours, which are of no Expence to the Doer, and are yet Beneficial to the Receiver. But yet since 'tis hard that the first Contractor shou'd bear the whole of the Burden, it is but reasonable, that the others shou'd contribute to him their Proportion. Thus if I hire a Ship to my self, the Owner cannot take in others without my leave; and if I am disposed to admit of it, the Advantage redounds to me only.

(a) Vid. l. 15. f. 1. l. 30. D. h. t. (b) Vid. D. ubi supra. (c) l. 15. f. 2. D. h. t. (d) Vid. l. 25. f. 6. D. h. t. Where it is well added, 'The Tenant ought to bear contentedly a moderate Loss, when an immoderate Gain is not taken from him. (e) The Duty of the Tenant and Landlord in respect of any Thing or Labour let out to hire, is shew'd in Instit. l. 3. t. 25. f. 5. & in D. ubi supra. l. 9. f. 2, 3, 5. l. 11. l. 12. l. 13. l. 25. f. 3, 4, 7, 8. l. 27. l. 30. f. 4. l. 38. l. 55. f. 1, 2. l. 60. f. 2. l. 61. princ. D. h. t. (f) Died. Sic. l. 1. c. 82. (g) Itin. Part II. c. 30. (h) l. 2. c. 12. f. 19.

But yet in Arts and Sciences, which receive a Value from the Scarcity of such as understand them, the whole Price may be fairly demanded of each, though the same Trouble would inform many; for such sort of Arts, the more common they are made, the Cheaper they grow: And therefore though my Labour be never the greater to me by being apply'd to many, yet I can demand a Price upon Consideration that my Knowledge will be less worth the more it is communicated. Some indeed are not willing that the Salary, which a Man receives for teaching the Liberal Sciences should come under the Denomination of Hiring, because Learning cannot be sold for Money; and so they are for making this, one of those Contracts which want a Name, reducible to the 4th General Head, Work for Goods (a). Be it as it will, it seems to have this in common with Hiring of Labour, that the Honesty and Industry of the Party only, and not the Event is to be regarded; so that although ones Labour happens to be in vain, yet the Salary agreed upon may be demanded (b).

Eschines acted directly counter to this sort of Contract, for he gave People Money to come and hear him (c): And so did the pompous and Ambitious Rhetoricians at Rome, who by Intreaties and Entertainments did what they could to get themselves Auditors. Socrates did not demand Money of his Auditors, but wondered, That a Man professing himself to be a Teacher of Vertue should insist upon so mean a Reward, and not rather look upon himself to be the greatest Gainer, in having procured a good Friend; that such a Man ought not to Fear, lest he, whom he had made Good and Honest, should forget to be Grateful to his Benefactor (d).

(a) Vid. L. 50. t. 13. l. 1. f. 4. D. de extraord. cogn. Vid. Sen. de Benef. l. 6. c. 11. How poor School-Masters are often cheated of their Wages is shew'd in Lucian. de mercede conduct.

(b) Mercedem appellas? Quid enim scio? Culpa docentis scilicet arguitur, quod larva in parte mamilla Nil salit Arcadico juveni. Juv. Sat. 7. v. 159, &c.

Pay, Sir, for what? The Scholar knows no more At Six Months end, than what he knew before. Taught or untaught, the Duncce is still the same, Yet still the wretched Master bears the Blame.

Sometimes that which Pliny mentions of the Tarandus or Buff, N. H. l. 8. c. 34. may be applied; When he appears in his own Genuine Complexion, he is like an Ass. 'Tis an excellent Master that can make a Fool wise, Eurip. Hipp. Coron. p. 921, 922. Nature is too violent and powerful for any Discipline, Lib. Decl. 29. Though sometimes that may be reply'd which Lucian mentions in Hermotim, Tom. 2. p. m. 293. The Speech which Aureng-Zebe the great Mogul made to his Tutor, is worth observing, Vid. Bernier de rebus in regno Mogoris gestis, Part. ult. p. m. 57. (c) Vid. Diog. Laert. l. 2. f. 62. (d) Vid. Xenoph. Apomnem. l. 2. p. 426. Ed. H. Steph. in fin.

CHAP. VII.

Of the Loan of a Consumable Commodity.

THE Loan of a (a) Consumable Commodity is founded upon this Condition, that the same Quantity and Quality be returned in kind (b). Things thus lent are call'd Consumable (c), because they are consumed and perish in the Use: And therefore 'tis enough if the same sort of Things, tho' not the self same Individuals be returned. The (d) Loan of a consumable Commodity differs from the (e) Loan of any other thing not consumable, and from the (f) Use of a thing let out to hire, in this respect. In the two latter, the self same numerical thing that was lent, or let out, is to be restored, and no other without the Consent of the Creditor: And that, not only because the Value of such sort of Things is not always capable of being exactly adjusted (1), but because it was expressly the Condition of the Loan, or Letting. Whereas in the Loan of a Consumable Commodity; if, for Example, my Neighbour borrows a Bushel of Wheat, and returns me another Bushel of the same Goodness, I am suppos'd to have received my own.

These Consumable Commodities are said to consist of Number, Weight and Measure, as being thereby determin'd and specified; whereas other Things have their Quantities determin'd by Nature. And therefore, Consumable Commodities are peculiarly termed Quantities: But other things which don't come under this sort of Loan are called Species. And here we must observe, that, v. g. Oxen are not therefore a Consumable Commodity because 50, or 100 of them may be sold by Tale; for the Number, in that case, does not specify them, but only denotes the Quantity of the Species (a).

(a) Res fungibilis. (b) Vid. Instit. l. 3. t. 15. princip. (c) Vocantur res, quæ mutuo dantur, fungibiles, seu quæ functionem in suo genere recipiunt, ideo, quia quodlibet ex isto genere vice alterius ita fungitur, seu alterius vicem subit, ut qui ex aliquo genere, eadem qualitate & quantitate receperit, idem recepisse censetur, D. L. 12. t. 1. l. 2. f. 1. quæ functionem, &c.

(d) Mutuum. (e) Commodatum. (f) Locatum. (1) Vid. D. ubi supr. de rebus creditis, leg. 2. f. 1.

II. The Use of these Consumable Commodities is either ordinary, or extraordinary. The latter is, when a Man borrows to make an Appearance of being better provided, than really he is; for sometimes 'tis of great Importance to be thought Rich; as if a Man, in order to gain upon the Affections of his Mistress, should borrow a Sum of Money and shew it for his own: in this case, the Money is not taken up as a Consumable Commodity, nor is the Borrower ever Owner of it; and therefore, he ought to return the very same in Specie. But the Ordinary Use of such Things consists in the loss of them; or, in other Words, I can't directly apply them to my Use, unless they be consum'd, and so become lost to me. This is plain in Corn, Wine, and other Things that turn to Nourishment; And Money it self I can't make use of in buying Necessaries, and paying Debts, unless I part with it: So that although the Substance of the Money remains, yet as to me it is utterly lost. And therefore, when such Things as these, to the end they may be put to their ordinary Use, are made over to another, not with a Design to barter, but with a Design to have the same return'd again; since the Species, that was delivered, must be consumed, the Restitution must necessarily be made in the same kind.

III. Money, (which commonly goes by Number, or Counting,) Gold and Silver in Bullion, Bread, &c. (which passes by Weight) Corn, Salt, Wine, Beer, Oil, &c. (which are specified by Measure) and, in general, all sorts of Provision; as Flesh, Eggs, Milk, and even entire Animals, considered as Provision, come under the Name of Consumable Commodities (b). For suppose I am to make an Entertainment, and have not Provision enough at Home, or Money to buy it; I may borrow of my Neighbour, not only Eggs and Flesh, but Fish, Lobsters, Hares, Hens, Geese, and even Sheep and Calves, upon Condition to repay him again in kind (c). Fair Paper may likewise be brought under the same Denomination, as being consum'd in the Use; for Paper, once scribed upon, is lost for any other Writing. In short, under this Denomination may be reduc'd any sort of Commodity, which can be determin'd by any certain Measure, and which, (if after it has been apply'd to its genuine and principal Use, it cannot be intirely restor'd again to its former Condition,) is capable of being repaid in kind. For such sort of things altho' they are generally the Matter of Sale, yet sometimes happen to be borrowed. As if v. g. I should procure a certain Quantity of Cloth for my own Use, and should let a Friend, who has immediate Occasion for some of the same sort, and has not wherewithal to buy it, make use of it, upon Condition to return me as much and as good of the same kind.

IV. And this Contract is perform'd not only expressly, but sometimes tacitly: As suppose I should pay a Man Money by Mistake, which I did not owe; or should give a Man Money for some Reason which afterwards does not appear; in this Case the Roman Law admits of an (d) Action for Money paid where not due, and for some Reason which does not appear. For since such Money was not paid as a Gift, but as a Debt, or for the procuring an Equivalent, and yet the Receiver became Master of it; it is the same Thing as if it had been borrowed, and may be demanded back as such. And therefore the Foundation of these Actions may not improperly be call'd a Tacit Borrowing (e). Thus Mauritius the Emperor having given Childebert the French King, Money to drive the Lombards out of Italy, after he had made Peace with them, demanded it back, Childebert indeed would not so much as vouchsafe him an Answer, but that was because he was more powerful than just (f).

V. Some Years ago Salmasius and some Civilians had a Dispute, Whether the Loan of a Consumable Commodity was an Alienation? Now it is plain, since the ordinary Use of such Things consists in the Consumption of them, they must be made over to the Receiver, with full Power to dispose of them as he pleases; which cannot be done without investing the Property in him. But because the Creditor gives in order to receive back, and the Debtor receives in order to refund; therefore neither is the Estate of the one lessen'd, or the Estate of the other increased by it. Unless the Creditor may be rather thought a Loser, having only an Action against the Debtor's Person in lieu of his Money, which, by Reason of the Trouble and Uncertainty attending it, may be reckon'd less worth than the Money it self. And hence it is, that as Debts, due to any Man, are look'd upon as Part of his Fortune: so a Man is supposed to be worth only so much as remains to him after his Debts are paid. And he that owes more than his Estate comes to, may fairly be said to be worth less than nothing (g). In a word, he

(a) Add. Jac. Godofredi dissert. de equalitate & functione in mutuo. (b) Vid. D. ubi supr. l. 2. f. 1. D. de reb. cred.

(c) Add. Plin. N. H. l. 9. c. 55. (d) Conditio indebiti, & conditio causa data causa non secuta. (e) Which is otherwise called by the Civilians Quasi-contractus. (f) Paul Warnesfrid. de gest. Longobard. 'By the way we may observe out of Plutarch, why the Gnostians used to take away forcibly the Money which they borrowed at Interest. Perhaps, that the Creditor might evade the Law against Usury. For should the Debtor refuse paying Use for what he thus took away, he would have an Action of Robbery against him. Quaest. Graec. p. 303. Edit. Ifsch.

(g) To this Purpose was that Saying of Caesar's, that he wanted 2500 H.S. to be worth nothing, App. de bell. civil. l. 2. p. 432. B. Ed. H. Steph. Hence Money borrowed is call'd as alienum, another Man's Money; not that the Person borrowing has not the Property of it, but because he receiv'd it upon Condition to return as much. On the other side, he who is out of Debt, may say meo sum dives in aere, The Money that I have is my own.

that lends Money does indeed alienate it, yet so as neither to lessen his own Estate, nor to add to that of his Debtor.

VI. It is a Question of greater Moment, Whether, if a Change happens in the Money, between the Borrowing and the Payment, regard must be had to the Value of Money, as it was at the time of Borrowing, or as it is now at the time of Payment? Here most think fit to distinguish between the intrinsic Goodness of Money and the extrinsic; whereof the former consists in the certain Quantity of such, or such a Metal: the latter in the publick Rate, or Value impos'd by the Magistrate. If the Change happen in the intrinsic Value, as suppose the Metal becomes baser or lighter (for the Change in Money is generally for the worse) then they think the Money ought to be reduc'd to the Value it bore at the time of Borrowing. For this Contract obliges not only to restore the same Thing in kind, but in Goodness also; indeed otherwise the same Quantity would not be restor'd. And therefore, if for Example, in Money newly coin'd a fourth Part of the intrinsic Goodness be wanting, for 100*l.* lent in old Money I ought to receive 125*l.* in the new. In like manner if I lend another 100*l.*, half of which is perfectly alloy, I ought to receive only 50*l.*, when the Baseness of the Coin is redress'd. For tho' it be in the Breast of the Government to Raise or Lower the Value of Money, yet if the extrinsic Valuation, differs very much from the intrinsic Goodness of the Coin, (since Regard must be had to Foreigners, unless we would reduce our Commerce with them to pure Bartering,) the Price of Commodities will be Determined rather by the intrinsic Goodness, than the extrinsic Value and Denomination of it. For supposing the Money diminish'd a 4*th* Part, we should give a 125*l.* for that which we us'd to pay but a 100*l.* And therefore if a Man should pay me an Old Debt of 100*l.* in so much new Money, he would really pay me a 4*th* Part too little.

VII. But if, without any Alteration in the intrinsic Goodness, the extrinsic Value should rise or fall; then Regard ought to be had to the Value of the Money, as it was at the time of Contract, and the increase or decrease of it ought to be at the Gain or Loss of the Debtor. For Example, if I should lend 100 Guineas in Specie, when they go for 26*s.*, and afterwards they should rise to 30*s.*, I can't demand more than 26*s.* the Guinea, if my Debt be paid in Silver, and if Payment be made in Guineas I must deduct 4*s.* from each, and so receive not much more than 86 Guineas in Specie.

And on the other hand, if they sink to 22*s.* and my Payment be made in Silver, I can demand 26*s.* for every Guinea. But if I be paid in Guineas, I ought to have an Addition of 4*s.* to each, and so to receive above 118 Guineas in Specie.

But yet this does not clear the Business, for against the former Determination, the Creditor may make his Exceptions, for had he kept his Guineas, the Increase had been to him; which if he be now forc'd to lose, another makes a Gain at his Loss: And the same Plea may the Debtor have in Bar of the latter.

And therefore we must enquire further, 1*st*, Whether any certain sort of Money was lent, v. g. Guineas in Specie, upon Condition that so many should be return'd in Specie, and in no other Money; or 2*dly*, Whether they were paid as common current Money; or 3*dly*, Whether all the Money of the Nation, or 4*thly*, Only that Particular Species has undergone a Change. In the 1*st* Case, without Dispute, the Number of Guineas is to be return'd. In the 2*d*, the former Decision takes place, and therefore the Value of Guineas in such a Loan must be referred to some other Species as a Standard; v. g. so many Guineas of 26*s.* The 3*d* Case, where the Change affects the whole Body of the Money, in Comparison of the Plenty or Scarcity of other Things, may be determin'd from what has been said in Chap. I. S. 16. although it hardly ever happens in Fact, that this General Change in the Money affects the Payment of an old Debt. As for the 4*th* Case, when the Value of any one Species rises without any Intrinsic Alteration, all the other Money must needs have been debas'd. Thus v. g. when Guineas rose from 26*s.* to 30*s.* It was a sign that the Silver Money in its Intrinsic Value was grown worse. And therefore in this Case, if Guineas were lent in Specie, and the Payment be made in Silver, Guineas ought not to be valued as lent at 26*s.* but at 30*s.* But if common Money was lent, the Debtor gets the Advantage of the Rise, unless the Largeness of the Sum, or the Enormity of the Change may plead for some Consideration in behalf of the Creditor.

As for other Consumable Commodities, provided they be return'd at the Time and Place appointed, 'tis little regarded whether their Price has Risen or Fallen; but the Advantage of the Rise, and the Loss of the Fall belongs to the Creditor, unless they had agreed about it otherwise.

But when the Debtor is backward in his Payment, and the Price, in the mean time, happens to be altered, the Roman Lawyers (a) are at a Loss to what Time or Place the Valuation ought to be assign'd; It seems most Reasonable that it be adjusted according to the Time and Place of Payment. But, if it be through the Debtor's Fault that the Payment is protracted; and the Price, in the mean time, alters, it ought to be to his Loss (b).

VIII. Whether Usury, which is generally given for the Loan of Money, be repugnant to the Natural and Divine Law? is a Question that has been warmly debated (a). How the old Hebrews explain the Divine Law (b), relating to Usury, Selden (c) gives a large Account; viz. they thought it was unlawful not only to receive but even to give Usury; and that the very Scrivners, Notaries, Witnesses, and Procurers of such Bargains contracted a Guilt. However, the Money of Orphans was allowed to be put out to Interest to a Rich Man, provided he gave the Gain to the Orphan, but bore the Loss himself.

(a) Instance in Wine, lib. 12. tit. 1. l. 22. D. de reb. cred. C. 4. D. de eo quod certo loco, &c.

(b) Add. lib. 13. t. 3. l. ult. D. de condict. Triticaria.

Now they had two sorts of Usury; the one was (d) Usury properly so called, which was covenanted for, and received at the Beginning, or during the Contract; And this was suppos'd forbidden by the Divine Law: The other was called (e) The Resemblance of Usury, and was forbidden only by the Decrees of the Elders.

A Man was Guilty of Usury properly so called, not only when he received back a Consumable Commodity with Increase, but if by Reason of such a Loan, he lived in another's House Gratis till he was paid; or gave less Rent for it, than otherwise he would have done; or if he received an Emolument from a Pawn left with him upon Account of the Debt. And yet a Man never suffered in their Courts for receiving Usury, as was usual for the Violation of other Divine Laws, but was obliged to Restitution only. But, if the Usurer himself was Dead, his Heirs were not so much as obliged to that; for they did not refund Money, or any other Consumable Commodity, but only Plate, Cloaths, Instruments, Cattle and such like, which had been received upon that score. And this was done in Honour of the Deceased, and out of Respect to his Memory, and that too only if it appear'd that he repented of it, and had Thoughts of making Restitution before he died; for otherwise the Heirs were not oblig'd to refund at all. Besides, Private Men were not permitted so much as to receive a small Present from their Debtor, while he continued such; the Lawyers indeed might, for they were presum'd by no means willing to Violate the Precept against Usury, but to receive it purely as a Gift and not as Interest.

By that which they called the Resemblance of Usury they were forbidden to receive any Profit or Acknowledgment of the Kindness, (altho' utterly beside the Contract, and after the Expiration of it,) except the Payment of the Principal before the time appointed. And this again they divided into two sorts; The One which related to the difference of the Time, in which something was perform'd, by the Debtor, to the Profit and Advantage of the Creditor: The Other, which related to the different manner of Contract.

The former they again divided into Antece- dent and Consequent. By That, they understood whatsoever a Man, designing to borrow, gave to the Person, upon whom he had this Design, in hopes to bring him to it the more easily. By This, whatsoever the Debtor after the Receipt of the Loan bestowed upon the Creditor in order to prolong the Time of Payment. Nay, they would not so much as allow the common Offices of Humanity to be perform'd by the Debtor to the Creditor, unless what was used to pass between them before the Loan.

The latter sort was thought to have  REGARD to such a Contract as this; Says the Seller, if you buy to day, you shall have it for 90*l.* but if you put it off till to morrow you shall pay 100*l.* Here the Delay, together with the Increase of the Price, seems to intimate, that 10*l.* is to be paid as Use. In this Case the Law did not oblige to a Restitution, nor did there lie an Action against the Party in the Civil Court: Yet, he who offended against these Decrees of the Elders, was liable to Corporal Punishment. He likewise, that received a Farm in Pledge, was not allowed to let the same to the Owner for Rent, for that lookt like Usury.

But, these obtain'd only between Hebrew and Hebrew; of a Gentile they might lawfully demand Usury, from Deut. XXIII. 20. Nay they thought themselves commanded to do it, in order to drain them of their Riches, and weaken those Nations, which God had otherwise destin'd to Destruction. Yet Leo of Modena (f) says, That Text is to be understood of the seven Nations only, that dwelt in Canaan: and not of the other Gentiles: of whom it was not lawful to receive Usury. But yet that many, by reason of the Miseries of a long Captivity, and their Lands being withholden from them, and for want of a better way of getting a Livelihood, had degenerated from the Integrity of their Forefathers. But he protests that to be false, which some spread abroad, That the Jews every Day take an Oath to do what they can to cheat the Christians, and, he says, it was invented to render them odious.

IX. Let us now consider, whether what has been thus punctually observ'd among the Jews, be the Dictate of the Law of Nature; or the positive Law of God; and that not peculiarly calculated for the Jews, but for all Nations. As for what has been added by the Jewish Elders, 'tis plain, that is altogether positive, and imposed only to prevent Cavils, which designing Men had found out to evade the Force of the Law. But in general our Opinion of Usury (1) is this; provided it does not oppress and grieve the Poor, but answers the Advantage which we our selves might have made, or which the Debtor does actually make of our Money, (especially if he borrows not out of Necessity, but in order to make a Gain of it,) the Law against it is neither that of Nature, nor that of God universally obliging all Nations; but a positive Law to the Jews only, founded upon Reasons in a manner purely Politick. And it was generally the Opinion of the Rabbins themselves (a), that Usury was neither Theft, nor against the Law of Nature, as being founded upon Consent and free Contract.

(a) Which ought to be Canvass more nicely, because most People are not of the Persian's Opinion, Who, as Plut. relates in his Book against Borrowing, among their Sins, give the second Place to Lying, but the first to Borrowing, because it often happens that they that Borrow, Lie. Tho' Herodotus, in Clio, in my Opinion better assigns the first to Lying, the next to Borrowing. (b) Which is extant, Exod. XXII. 25. Lev. XXV. 37. Deut. XXIII. 19. (c) De J. N. & G. sec. Heb. L. 6. c. 9. (d) רבית קצוצה i. e. Usury fixt and determined. (e) אַנְק רבוי i. e. The Dust of Usury. (f) De Ritibus Hebraicis, p. 2. c. 5. (1) See Mr. La Placette's Treatise upon Usury.

But the same may be evidently proved from Reason; for tho' the Jews were by the Divine Precept join'd together in a closer Tie of Amity than ordinary, yet they were oblig'd to exercise towards others all the common Duties of the Law of Nature (b). And therefore, if Usury be against the Law of Nature, I don't see how the God of Holiness could indulge that Nation which he had peculiarly sanctified, in the Practice of it, and in a manner charge them to violate a Precept of the Law of Nature, in Prejudice of those who had never injur'd them; if indeed that Passage in Deut. XXIII. 20. (1) ought to be expounded not of the Canaanites only, but of any other Nation.

There seem to be several good Reasons why such a Law against Usury should more especially obtain amongst the Jews. The first may be taken from the Genius of the People; for they were as much addicted to the scraping up of Riches then, as now; in which they thought their greatest Happiness to consist. And therefore, that their Thirst after Riches might not tend to the Oppression of the Poor, God seems to have provided by this Law. But yet least too great a Violence should be offer'd to their Inclinations, he permitted them to use greater Liberty among Strangers.

Besides, the Constitution of that Commonwealth required such a Law. For 'tis evident, Moses design'd to have it Democratical, (for such a State may admit of a Chief at the Head of it) and nothing contributes more to this than to preserve, as much as possible, an Equality of Riches amongst the Members; and to this end, were the Laws of Jubilee and Remission instituted, and those against alienating Land for ever (c).

And the very Condition of those Times furnishes us with another Reason for the Law against Usury. For that Nation had then a more plain way of Trading, which consisted in Pasture and Husbandry, or Manufactures; Merchandise was simple and moderate, the Secrets of Trade and Navigation being not known to them; and, in such a State, no one borrows but when he is prest with Necessity. And therefore Deut. XXVIII. 12. it is mention'd as an Argument of the greatest Happiness; Thou shalt lend unto many Nations, and thou shalt not borrow (d). Since the Gains, in such a case, could not but be very small, the least Usury imaginable must needs be very Burthensome. And where the Money borrowed is laid out upon the Necessaries of Life, it will be next to impossible ever to recover it; for how can your Labour be able to bring you out of Debt, when it was not sufficient to support you from Borrowing (e)?

Grotius (f) brings this as one Reason among others of the Law in Deut. XXIII. 19. That the Chief Riches of the Jews lay in Husbandry and Money, whereas most of the neighbouring Nations made vast Returns by Merchandise: And therefore Usury was allowed the Jews in their Dealings with them, which, with very good Reason, was forbid to be taken of one another; for Usury laid upon Husbandmen is every where oppressive. Besides, Moses endeavour'd by that Law to endear them to one another; and they had the more frequent Occasion to put it in Practice, because then only small Sums were borrowed, and those too by the meaner sort, and such as struggled with Want and Poverty. From hence Philo Judæus (g) inforces the Exercise of Charity and Liberality among Fellow-subjects: Which Vertue the great Legislator has indeed established by several other Laws (h).

But now Money is borrowed for other Ends, viz. in order to increase and improve ones Wealth. When a Man borrows for this Purpose, why should another lend for Nothing? Nay, 'tis an unreasonable Thing, when you vastly improve your Fortune with my Money, not to admit me into some Share of the Gain (2): For I, in the mean time, am debarr'd from making that Advantage which I might otherwise have expected by applying it to my own Use. Besides, I have parted with something Valuable, which ought therefore to be considered; for in lieu of my Money I have only (a) As Selden in the aforecited Place informs us. Sat. 14. v. 103, 104.

(b) And therefore they are deservedly censured by Juvenal,

*Non monstrare vias, eadem nisi sacra colenti;
Quæstrum ad fontem solos deducere verpos.*

Ask them the Road, and they shall point you wrong,
Because you do not to their Tribe belong:
They'll not betray a Spring to quench your Thirst, Unless you shew them Circumcision first.

Mr. Dryden.

(1) See Mr. Le Clerc upon the place above-cited. (c) Lev. XXV. 14, 31, 35, 36. Deut. XV. 2. Add Num. XXXVI. Which the Law of Solon resembles, That an Heire's should marry her next Kinsman by her Father's side.

(d) Add Deut. XV. 7, 8. (e) 'Upon this Account the State of Athens was involved in such Troubles, by means of Usury, that it could not be remedied otherwise than by Solon's σείρα ἀρχαία, i.e. Shaking off the Burthen. Vid. Plut. Solone, which Mischief Rome also felt in its Infancy. (f) Upon Luke VI. 35. (g) De Charitate.

(h) See Exod. XXI. 10, 11. XXII. 22, 23, 25, 26, 27. XXIII. 4, 5, 9, 11, 12. Lev. XIX. 9, 10, 13, 33. XXIII. 22. XXV. 6, 10, 11, 35, 36, 37, 39, &c. Deut. XIV. 28, 29. XV. 2, 4, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11. XXIII. 24, 25. XXIV. 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, 15, 19, 20, 21. XXVI. 12, 13. (2) Mr. Barbeyrac in his Third Note upon this Section illustrates this at large from Mr. La Placette's 5, 6, and 7th Chap. of his Treatise concerning Interest.

an Action against your Person, which can't be prosecuted without some Trouble (a). It may also happen by some Accident or other, that my Debt may be lost (b). Nay sometimes the Debtor must be courted and caress'd, that it be not lost. And some borrow on purpose to make their Creditors dependent on them. As the Mareschal de Rochelaure, when he was tax'd by Lewis XIII. with taking part with the Duke of Mayenne, pleaded in Excuse, That he did not follow the Duke, but his Money: For his Debt would be but in a desperate Condition if he did not stick close to his Debtor (c). Besides it is not feldom that we lend to Persons who are utterly unable to pay (d).

And therefore some are of Opinion, that it would be for the Advantage of the Publick, to allow none but Merchants to take up Money at Use; for this would make the Poor industrious and force them to Frugality, who some of them are not afraid to pay Interest for Money to maintain their Extravagancies. And Monied Men, rather than let their Money lie dead, would either take to Merchandise themselves, or would put out their Money to those that do; which would make Trade flourish, to the great Benefit of the Common-wealth (e). Grotius (f) is of Opinion, That the Legal Interest ought to be stated, not according to the Gains of the Borrower, but the Loss, that thereby accrues to the Lender; as in Buying and Selling, and other Contracts, no Regard is had to what the Receiver may make of the Commodity, but what goes away from the Seller. And, in this case, so much goes away as every Man, in his own Calling, might and usually does make of his Money; Allowance being made for Hazards, which in some Cases are more, in others less: with whom I so far agree that no Man can complain, if his Debtor makes a vast and unexpected Return of his Money: But yet there is no doubt but I may demand higher Interest of him that makes a very Gainful Trade, than I can of another who drives a Poor one.

X. The Arguments which are brought against Usury, are easily answer'd. It is urged that the Loan of a Consumable Commodity ought to be given Gratis, because the Loan of all other Things is so. But I answer, that as I have a Power of Granting the Use of my Goods, that are not Consumable, either Gratis or for Rent; whereof the one is a Loan, the other a Letting: so what should hinder me from granting the Use of my Money also either Gratis or for a certain Recompence? But, if you should insist, that that only is a Loan which is lent out Gratis; the Consequence would be, that Money lent upon Interest ought to be called by some other name, and not that it is unlawful.

Another Objection is, That Money is a Barren Thing (g), of no Use to Human Life, as are Cloaths, Buildings, Cattel, &c. And therefore nothing ought to be demanded for the Use of it. To which I answer, that tho' Money is so far Barren, as not to produce its like; yet after an Eminent Price has been set upon it, by the Industry of Man it gains a Faculty, which naturally it had not, and becomes Productive of those Things, which are both in a Natural and Civil Respe& Fruitful. And therefore Usury is not to be look'd upon as a Natural but as a Civil Increase (h). Besides, Money let out to Interest is not apply'd contrary to its proper Use; for he who borrows Money does it at least for the sake of Bartering. And Property it self was first settled, with a Design that every Man's Goods should be immediately Beneficial to himself; and yet it is not against Nature, to let out our Goods to another for Rent (2).

There is another Objection, which is somewhat nice; In Consumable Commodities, the Property cannot be distinguish'd from the Use, and therefore the Use can't be made over, but the Property must too, and vice versa. For as the Substance of Corn, Wine, and Flesh, perishes in the Use of them; so the Money that I expend perishes to me, as being remov'd out of my Estate. And therefore since the Use can't be distinguish'd from the Thing, nothing ought to be demanded for the Use; it being enough, if the Thing be restored in

(a) For every Body does not consider that of Martial, B. 2. Epig. 13.

Et Judex petit & petit Patronus: Solvas, censeo, Sexte, Creditori.

(b) 'My Slowness, in paying what I promised, has made me ashamed of my Debt; however, I may avoid the Censure of the World by paying it with Interest, Pind. Olymp. Od. 10. (c) Gramond. Hist. Gall. 1. 5. Diodor. Sic. 1. 19. c. 24. Plut. Eumene p. m. 591. C. Edit. Franc. 1620. (d) To whom that of Martial may be apply'd, L. 1. Epig. 76.

*Dimidium donare Lino quam credere totum
Qui mavult, mavult perdere dimidium.*

(e) Vid. Lud. Septatium, de ratione status, 1. 2. c. 15. (f) Ad Lucam VI. 35. (g) See Mat. XXV. 24.

(1) Mr. Barbeyrac in his First Note upon this Section explains the Text above cited. (h) Of which however Seneca speaks severely enough: I see, says he, Deeds and Bonds and Writings, the Emblems of Covetousness, which deceive our vain Minds. For what are Usury and Accounts, but Names unnaturally imposed upon Things for the Support of Human Avarice? What are these Bills of Contract, these Computations, these Prices set upon Time, this cruel Interest upon Interest? They are all Evils of our own making, and depend upon our selves, they have nothing in them of Solidity, that can be either seen or held, but are the empty Dreams of a covetous Mind, De Benef. 1. 7. c. 10. Aristotle too is severe enough upon Usury, The Art of Usury, says he, is deservedly odious, for it makes a Gain of Money it self, and not of that for the sake of which it was found out; for the Use of Money is to carry on Traffick. But Usury encreases it, and is therefore called τικον, for the thing Begotten is like the thing that Begets: But in Usury Money is both the thing Begetting and Begotten, and therefore this sort of Gain is Unnatural, Pol. 1. 7. (10.) towards the End. (2) See Mr. Barbeyrac's Second Note upon this Section.

kind. To this I answer, that indeed the Use of a Consumable Commodity does not properly differ from its Substance (a) (1), but yet it does not therefore follow, that the Power to make Use of it upon an Obligation to return the same in kind some time after is not worth something. Now 'tis a Condition in every Loan, that the Thing be not return'd 'till some time after; But if I Borrow Money for such a certain Time I may lay it out upon other fruitful Commodities, or make a Gain of it some other way. And thus suppose I Borrow Provisions, or other Necessaries, my Gain consists in this, that I am not necessitated to part with my Goods upon ill Terms to procure Bread: Or, my Money, which must otherwise have been thus expended may now be laid out to more Advantage.

And here we may observe by the way, what Aristotle (b) relates of Cypselus, Who having devoted all his Goods to the Gods of Corinth, the first Year paid the Tenth part of them, and so for ten Years together. But in strict Justice this did not satisfy his Vow, unless for the Relief of such a Rash one, any favourable Interpretation may be allow'd. That Saying of Cato in Cicero (c), who thought Usury as bad as Robbing and Murder, is to be understood only of Extortion; which reduces the Poorer sort to Extremities, and administers to the Covetousness of the Rich. Our Ancestors, says the same Cato (d), enacted in their Laws, that a Thief should be condemn'd to pay Double, but an Usurer Quadruple. And yet he himself, if we may believe Plutarch (e), did craftily enough exercise that sort of Usury, which we now call Bottomry. Augustus very justly Censur'd some Roman Gentlemen, for taking up Money at low Interest, and letting the same out at high (f). The Old Romans and Greeks (g) abhor'd Usury, as being Burthensome to the Poor, and the Foundation of Suits and Quarrels: The Persians, as being not very far removed from Deceit and Lying. And certainly 'tis unbecoming a Christian for a small Sum to accept of Interest from those, whom it is in a manner Charity to relieve (h). The Greeks took an excellent Method to support their Friends in Distress: For several entred into a Society, and had a Common Chest, to which each contributed a certain Sum every Month; and out of this they lent Money without Interest to any of the Society, that should happen to be reduc'd to Necessity; upon Condition to refund it, if his Circumstances should ever happen to grow better (i) (1).

XI. In Confirmation of what has been said for the Lawfulness of Usury, it is observable that those who are against it, allow of some Contracts, which in effect amount to the same Thing. Thus, suppose Caius is furnish'd with Money enough to Buy a Farm, which Seius has a Mind to, but wants Money for the Purchase; Caius at the Request of Seius, buys the Farm, and lets it to Seius, No Body can deny but that this Contract is Lawful. But if Caius should lend Seius the Money to buy it himself, and Seius should pay so much for Interest as he must otherwise have paid for Rent; I don't see but that the Contract would be very Just. Nay, this latter Contract is much more for the Advantage of Seius than the former, for here he purchases the Property of the Farm.

Again, should any one put his Money into an honest Man's hands, upon Condition to be admitted into an equal Share of the Gain, which he should make of it; no Man certainly would call this Contract Unlawful. But in Equity 'tis the same Thing, if instead of this uncertain Gain, he Bargains for a certain Sum, which will never be the less Lawful, for being called by the Name of Interest.

The Alcoran forbids Usury, and yet the Moors Borrow Money to carry on Trade, and allow the Creditor half the Gain; but if the Principal happen to be lost, the Debtor refunds that only; but if only part of the Principal perish, the Whole must be made up out of the Gain of the Remainder.

A Mortgage, whereby a Man receives the Produce of Land given in Pledge for the Loan of Money, is acknowledged to be Lawful (k) (2): But if no Pledge be given, why may not the Creditor receive something answerable to the Produce of it (1).

Grotius (m) rejects the Name of Usury, but allows the Thing. For, says he, there are some things which look like Usury, but are Parts of another Nature: as the Amends that ought to be made a Creditor for the Loss he is at being out of his Money, and the regard that ought to be had to the Gain he might have made of it; still Deductions being made for Uncertainties and Accidents, and the Pains he must have taken in the Management of it. Thus it is not properly Usury to demand a Consideration for the Charges he is at, who lends much Money, and provides it on purpose; and for the danger of losing the Principal, where good Security is not given. Now the Interest for Money lent, not to a poor Man, but to one that makes a Gain of it, we demand upon this very Account, because we are debarred from making that Gain of it, which otherwise we might; and because it is worth some Consideration to have, instead of our Money, only an Action against the Creditor; and certainly 'tis reasonable we should be admitted into Part of the Gain made of that Money, which we were not oblig'd to lend, either in Justice, or Charity. What Honest Man therefore will quarrel about words? And who would not laugh at those who pretend they don't take Usury for their Money, but only what they themselves might have made of it? Besides, this superstitious Nicety is not at all consistent with the Decrees of the Civil Law; for according to them the Usury is ascertain'd and agreed upon before-hand: And the Damages allowed the Creditor, for what he might have made of his Money, are among other Reasons demanded, for Failure of Payment at the time appointed, which ought to be stated according to the Loss sustained, be it what it will; but because it would be difficult to prove and adjust it exactly, it is therefore generally reduc'd to regular Interest (a) (1).

(a) Vid. lib. 7. t. 5. l. 1. and 2. D. de Usu. eor. quæ usu consumuntur. (1) See Mr. Barbeyrac's Third Note upon this Section. (b) Oeconom. l. 2. c. 1. (c) Off. 2. in fin. (d) De re rustica, princip. (e) Cato Major. (f) Suet. in August. c. 39. (g) Appian. l. 1. de Bello Civili, p. 382. B. Edit. H. Steph. (h) Vid. Siracid. XXIX. l. 2, &c. Psal. XV. (i) That Contribution-Money was called ἕραρον. (1) Vid. Cicer. de Offic. lib. 2. in fin. See Cassiodorus's Comment upon the 16th Chapter of Theophrastus's Characters. (k) Ad. lib. 20. t. 2. l. 8. D. in quibus caus. pignus tacite contrah. (2) See hereafter Chap. 10. Sect. 14. (1) Among the Persians Usury is forbidden, but Mortgages allowed even under the Lex commissoria, Olear. itin. Perf. l. 5. c. 36. (m) L. 2. c. 12.

Since therefore 'tis lawful to demand Damages for tardy Payment, or because we lose by not having our Money paid in at the time appointed; why may we not bargain for something certain before-hand, upon Consideration that our Money is in another Man's Power, whereas we were not oblig'd for his Benefit to venture the Loss, or to neglect the Gain that might be made of it (b).

XII. Lastly, It being evident, that Men could not be found who would lend as much Money gratis, as Human Necessities and Commerce, (as carried on now a-days, among most civiliz'd Nations) required; several Shifts were found out and allowed of to evade the Decrees of the Canon Law against Usury. Among which may be reckon'd the † Purchase of a Yearly Income (2); where for so much Money, I have such an immoveable thing made over to me for the Payment of it: Out of which I receive a certain Rent for ever, or for such a limited, or unlimited Time, or for Life. And this Income may, upon Payment of the Principal, sometimes be redeem'd, sometimes not. Nay, sometimes if the thing given for Security happens to be lost, the Person of the Debtor is Responsible for it. But that such a Purchase as this differs only in Name and Shew from Usury, no Man is so blind as not to see (c).

Nay, in Consideration of the Usefulness of moderate Usury, the Popes themselves permitted under a specious Title, Mountains, as they call them, of Piety; that is, they did not allow either Pledge, or Interest to be taken for three Sc. lent to a poor Man; but for larger Sums Pledges might be taken for Security, and every Month some small matter paid as Interest: and if the Pledge were not redeemed in a Year, it was to be sold by Auction, and the Remainder, after Payment of the Debt, restor'd to the Owner (d). After much Debate, Usury was allowed of in Holland, as a Thing beneficial to the State, and even those who took it were permitted to enter into Holy Orders.

How much the Laws against Usury are evaded by * dry Exchange (3) (as they call it) is well known among the Merchants. To which may be refer'd that sort of Contract, which is called in Spanish, Mohatra (e). When a Man takes up Goods upon Trust at a high Rate, and immediately sells them again to his Creditor at a low one. 'Tis more tolerable when Goods are bought dear, by reason that a long time is allowed for the Payment, and immediately sold to a Third something cheaper for ready Money: For hereby a Man may avoid the Necessity of taking up Money at unreasonable Interests: or, in the mean time, may make so much Gain as to be very able to pay the Debt at the time appointed. And this is common in Muscovy (f).

It is requisite indeed, that private Men should be hindred by Law from exacting what Interest they please, and that it should be fix'd at such a certain Rate: Yet a Man may fairly expect something more, when his Money is lent but for a short time (g) (4).

The Egyptian Law (h) did not permit the Principal to be more than doubled by Usury, and allowed the Debtor's Goods to be seized upon, but not his Person: Whatever they got by their Labour, or any other just Title, were look'd upon as their Goods; but as for their Persons, they belong'd only to the Publick, to be dispos'd of in its Service, according as they were best qualified for the Duties of War, or Peace.

(a) Vid. l. 17. f. 3. l. 22. t. 1. D. de Usuris. (1) Concerning this, Salmasius de Usuris, and Mr. Placette de l'Interet are worthy to be consulted. (b) Add. Baco. Serm. Fidel. c. 39. † Emptio sensus annui. (2) See Mr. Barbeyrac's First and Second Notes upon this Section. (c) Add. Fran. Hotoman. obs. l. 2. c. 1. & Jo. Labard. Hist. de rob. Gall. l. 6. p. 393. (d) Alex. Severus lent publicly at 4. per Cent. but gave many poor People Money without Interest to buy Land, and was contented to be paid out of the Produce. Vid. Lamprid. Something of the same Nature (but that they part with nothing gratis, or without Security) is still practis'd in Lombardy; so called because formerly most of the Usurers in France were Lombards and Jews, who afterwards were so odious as to be expelled the Kingdom. Vid. Hen. Steph. introduit. ad apolog. pro Herodoto, l. 1. c. 6. * Cambium Siccum. (3) Concerning this see Mr. La Placette's Last Chap. of Usury. (e) Vid. Montaltii, lit. provincial. 8. & ad eam Wendrok, not. 3. (f) Olear. itin. Perf. l. 3. c. 7. (g) Vid. Leonis Novell. 84. (4) See Mr. Barbeyrac's 4th Sect. of this Chapt. (h) Diodor. Sic. l. 1. c. 79.

C H A P. VIII.

Of Partnership.

Partnership is a Contract by which two, or more join together their Money, Goods, or Labour, upon Agreement, that the Gain, or Loss shall be divided proportionably between them (a). And here, if every Man contributes equally, each must receive an equal Share in the Gain, or Loss: but if they contribute unequally, their Shares must be adjusted according to the Laws of Geometrical Proportion (b). And the same obtains, if two, or more join Labour; or one Labour and the other Money (1); or each Party both Labour and Money.

II. Upon breaking of the Partnership, if each Party contributed only Money, 'tis plain upon a Division, each must receive according to his Contribution. But if both Money and Labour was contributed it must be consider'd after what manner the Collation was made: For when Labour is contributed on one side, and only the Use of Money on the other, he who contributed the Money does not admit the other to a Share in the Principal; but only to his Proportion of the Gain that might be made of the Money and Labour join'd together. And, in this case, as he that contributed only Labour has no Title to any Part of the Money, when they break off Partnership; so the other alone, as Owner, is concern'd in the Risque that the Money is expos'd to, and in such a Partnership as this, not the Money it self, but the Risque that it runs, and the Gain that may be probably expected from it, is compared with the Labour. And therefore when the Gain is to be proportion'd, we must not compare the Labour with the Principal (as if, one having contributed Work to the Value of 100*l.* and the other 1000*l.* in Money, the former were to receive only a tenth Part of the Gain) but to the Risque and Hazard that the Money is expos'd to, which if computed to be worth 100*l.* each Party shall gain equally.

The best way, in this Case, is to rate the Risque of the Principal, and the Hopes of the Gain, according to the Interest, that is generally given for Money. Supposing then this Interest to be 6*l. per Cent.* if one Party contributes Labour worth 60*l.* and the other 1000*l.* in Money, they shall share Equally of the Gain.

But sometimes the Labour and Money are fo interwoven together, as to give him, that contributed only his Labour, a Share even in the Principal; the Labour of the one, and the Money of the other, being in a manner united into one Mass. As when one lays out his Money upon unwrought Commodities, and another spends his Labour in working them up, and managing them. Thus, if I give a Weaver 100*l.* to buy Wool, and he makes Cloth of it, computing his Labour at 100*l.* 'tis manifest, that here both of us have an equal Interest in the Cloth; And, when it is sold, the Money must be equally divided: Nor, ought I to substract the Money, that I contributed at first, and then divide the Remainder with him (c).

III. Besides, 'tis not unjust to enter into such a Partnership, as that one Party may have a Share in the Gain, without being in danger of partaking of the Loss (d). But this is irregular, and a mixt Contract of Partnership and Insuring: and here an Equality will be observ'd, if the Insuring Party receives a greater Gain than the other, in Proportion to the Risque he runs in bearing the other harmless. But for one to partake of the Loss and not of the Gain, is repugnant to the very Nature of Partnership; for no Body ever enters into such a Contract, but upon the Prospect of some Advantage (e).

IV. Sometimes People enter into Partnership for all they are worth (2); in which Case each Party, according to his Condition and the Laws of good Husbandry, may take from the common Stock as much as is necessary for the handsome Maintenance of him and his (3). But since few Men's Circumstances will induce them to continue long in such a Partnership as this (f), it would be convenient to agree at first, what Share of the Gain each shall pretend to upon breaking off. Where Grotius (g) observes, that no Regard ought to be had to what has been actually gain'd by this, or that Man's Contributions; but to what might probably have been expected from them: For therefore it is that many join their Stocks together, that each may be admitted into a Share of what is gain'd by the Goods of others.

Now tho' no Man ought to have his Liberty so far intrenched upon, as to be confined to a Partnership longer than he desires; yet since a great Degree of Fidelity is required among Partners, he ought not to break off unseasonably and to the Detriment of others (h). Upon this Point Cicero (i) discourfes very seriously. It is

(a) Vid. lib. 17. t. 2. l. 73. and l. 52. f. 3, 4. L. 60. f. 1. D. pro Socio. (b) In Partnership the more a Man contributes the more does he receive. Arist. Nic. l. 8. c. 16. In the same Sense ought that in the Digests to be explained, l. 29. D. h. t. If it be not mentioned what Share each Party contributed, they must be presum'd to be all Equal.

(1) Vid. Infir. l. 3. t. 26. De Societate, f. 2. (c) Compare Grotius, l. 2. c. 12. f. 24. (d) Vid. l. 29. f. 1. D. h. t.

(e) Vid. l. 29. f. 2. L. h. t. (2) Ibid. f. 5. (3) Ibid. leg. 73. (f) Vid. l. 70. D. h. t. (g) D. L.

(h) Vid. l. 65. f. 5, &c. D. h. t. (i) Pro Sext. Roscio, c. 40. Add. Quintil. Decl. 320.

accounted, says he, a base thing to deceive a Partner in ever so small a matter, and with reason: For he who enters into Partnership does it in hopes of gaining to himself an Assistant. To whom therefore can he fly for Succour that suffers from him on whom he depended? Those Crimes are of the blackest hue, against which there is the least guard: We may defend our selves against the Malice of others, but to an Intimate Friend we lie open: For how can we provide against a Partner, whom we cannot so much as suspect without violating our Duty? Well therefore did our Ancestors judge him, who deceiv'd his Friend in this Point, fit to be reckoned amongst the worst of Villains.

C H A P. IX.

Of Contracts that depend upon Chance.

WE come now to such Contracts as depend upon Chance; where the Parties refer themselves to some uncertain Event, and give Security to stand to, and to be determin'd by it. Some of these indeed have no Relation to Price, yet most of them have; and therefore, we think fit to discourse of them all together in this place.

These Contracts may be either Publick or Private; The Publick, are such as concern either War or Peace. In Peace some Nations determine Themselves by Lot in choosing Judges, in assigning Provinces, and in disposing of Offices, when the Competitors, both in respect of their Right and their Abilities, are Equal; for otherwise should one have a better Right, his Right might be Prejudic'd: Or should another have greater Abilities, the Commonwealth might suffer by it (a). In such Cases the Parties are suppos'd to enter into Compact to acquiesce without Complaint in the Determination of the Lot, as having voluntarily submitted to it (b). And when a Superior uses Lots about that which he might enjoyn of his own Authority, he is suppos'd to depart from his Right, and of his own accord to submit himself to their Determination.

The Design of these Lots is not to search into the hidden Decrees of God, unless where he positively commands it (c), but to put an end to Streifs and Differences (d), or that a Person, who otherwise has Power to decide them by his own Authority may avoid the odium of the Party against whom he decrees; and leave no room for a Complaint of the Injustice of the Sentence.

But in a Controversy where the Party cast is Punishable by Law, 'tis absurd to apply any thing of Chance; for no Man ought to be punish'd, unless matter of Fact be evidently prov'd against him: Whereas a Lot, let it fall out how it will, can never be able to undo what has been done, & vice versa; and therefore Lots are not capable of adjusting such Matters. But when a Multitude are in fault, and 'tis inconvenient for them all to suffer, then indeed the Criminals may be punish'd by Lot.

In Private Affairs Lots are of great use, either in dividing of Inheritances, or conferring upon One a Benefit, or a Burthen which cannot be divided, and yet which many have an equal Title to (e).

III. Nor are such Paets as these of less use in War, either when the Issue of the whole is thrown upon the Event of a Battle between both Armies, or between two or more chosen out of each side (f): Or when some dangerous and honourable Post is to be assigned, for which many are equally qualified (g).

Indeed almost all solemn Wars, at least after all Terms of Peace have been rejected, seem to suppose an Agreement between both Parties, that which side soever shall have the good Fortune to be Conqueror shall have Right to give Laws to the vanquish'd: and this is the reason that no Party can ever urge as an Exception against any Treaty that he was forced to it by Fear; for he who takes the Field, when the Controversy may be decided otherwise, is suppos'd to commit the Decision of it to the Sword, and therefore cannot complain whatever Condition the Chance of it imposes upon him. And this too is the reason, that when they come to Articles, the Parties engaged are presumed to stand upon equal Grounds as to the Justice of their Cause, and whatever Mischief has been done on either side is forgiven, as suppos'd to have been done by Consent.

Such a Covenant as this do they enter into, who decide their Quarrel by a Duel, and therefore he that kills, is not oblig'd to make Satisfaction to the others Wife and Children for the Loss; for they join Battle by Agreement upon this Condition to Kill or to be Kill'd. But since these Duels when undertaken by private Men of their own Heads, directly thwart the end of Civil Judicature, they are deservedly restrained by severe Penalties. For

(a) For as Isocrates in Areopag. says, pag. 248. Ed. Paris. Fortune governs the Lot. And Callimachus in Hymn. Jovis. v. 63, 64. For a Thing that each has an equal Title to, 'tis convenient to cast Lots. And Philostr. in vita Apoll. Tyan. l. 3. c. 9. Fortune has no Prudence, so that the worst may be chosen by Lot. (b) Vid. Justin. l. 1. c. 10. & l. 18. c. 3.

(c) See Prov. XVI. 33. (d) See Prov. XVIII. 18.

(f) Vid. Grac. l. 2. c. 23. f. 10. & l. 3. c. 20. f. 42.

(e) Add Numb. XXXIV. 13. Jos. XIV. 2. Psal. XVI. 6. (g) Vid. Hom. J. 7. v. 171.

merly indeed they were allowed of, (but absurdly, and against the End of Civil Government) either to clear a Man of a Crime objected, or to demonstrate his Right in Contest (a). Thus heretofore in Germany a Point of Law whether the Uncle, or the Son of the Elder Brother deceas'd, should take place in the Father's Inheritance? was absurdly left to the Determination of a Duel (b).

IV. Among these Contracts of Chance we may reckon * Wagers (i), when two differ about some future or past Event, if not known to either Party, each laying down a certain Pledge to be his, who shall happen to be in the right. These Wagers seem to be Reciprocal Promises, and Conditional Bargains; which are so far mixt with Chance, as not having their Event depending on the Parties. The Riddle indeed propos'd by Sampson to his Friends, seems rather a Sport than a Wager (c), it being a Contest of Wit, whether he could propose a Thing with greater Obscurity than they should answer with Acumen. But his Friends play'd foul, in solving his Riddle, not by their own Ingenuity, but by the Treachery of his Wife. Though perhaps it was not so very fair in him, to make a private Fact, and not some common matter the Subject of his Riddle. For 'tis almost impossible to find out such particular private Facts as those, by guessing.

V. All sorts of Plays where the Parties contend for something, carry with them a Covenant, depending more or less upon Chance. And the more they admit of Ingenuity, Sleight, Cunning or Strength: the less are they concern'd in Chance; and indeed are only so far dubious, as the degree of Strength or Dexterity is not as yet manifest, or, as some unforeseen Accident may interpose (d), or as Human Wit and Industry does not exert it self so much at some times as it does at others. Many are dependent both upon Chance and Skill, as Gaming at Cards, and the like; others are entirely at the Mercy of Chance, as Dice. None of which are Naturally Unlawful, for it is by Consent that we engage in them, and each Party ventures Equal, and plays for Things that are in his own Disposal. But because the Publick is concern'd that no Man should mispend his Estate; and a Man may be easily undone by Gaming, if he plays high (e); at least much Time, which is a precious Thing, may be consumed in it (f), and because it is frequently the Occasion of Quarrels (g), and several other Inconveniencies; it is therefore the Business of the Government to consider, how far Gaming should be permitted, and how high (h); but generally speaking, those Plays seem most allowable, that admit least Chance, and most Ingenuity, and vice versa. Now in all sorts of Gaming 'tis a standing Rule that no foul Play be made use of, For they that run in a Race are suppos'd to contend by Swiftness, not by Tricks; to endeavour at the Victory by Speed, not by laying on of Hands, or tripping up the Heels of their Adversaries (i)

VI. Of the several sorts of Gaming, that which we call * Raffling is, when Many contribute towards the Purchase of a thing, and then leave it to Chance, which One shall have the whole. In this there are two sorts of Contracts; for in respect of him who exposes his Goods, it is Selling: in respect of them to whom they are expos'd it is casting Lots for them. For, by Agreement, he whom Fortune favours is to have the whole, and the rest are to be at the Loss of what they contributed. The Rule here is, that the whole of the Money contributed should equal, and not exceed the Value of the Commodity: And that every one of the Contributors should have an equal Chance for it, in Proportion to their Contributions.

VII. Another sort is, when a certain Number of Tickets, Benefits and Blanks are cast into a Glass, and several, at certain Rates, buy the Liberty of drawing them with this Condition, that he who draws a Benefit shall receive the Value inscrib'd upon it.

This something resembles our † Lotteries, and comes nearest to that Sort of Contract, which we call the Purchase of Hope, tho' there be Hazard enough with it. The Rule here is, That the Price of all the Tickets should not much exceed the Value of the Benefits; I say, not much, for Charges are to be consider'd, and the best Benefits may happen to be drawn first, and if so, People won't be so forward to venture upon the remaining Tickets.

Such Lotteries as these, are sometimes set up to collect Money for publick Buildings, or for the Relief of the Poor; in which Case, the Price of all the Tickets together, is generally much larger than the Value of the Benefits; which Overplus is in the Nature of Alms and Charity given after a free and chearful manner (k).

But, in fine, for an Equality in Gaming, it is not only requisite, that the Venture on each side should be equal; but also that the Danger of losing, and the Probability of winning should bear Proportion to the Thing contended for; v. g. in a Game that depends upon Skill or Ingenuity, if One Man is twice as Skilful as the Other, it is fit he should lay down a double Stake. So if Ten lay down each of them a Guinea for him that throws highest, it may seem unreasonable that he who ventures but one Guinea should gain Nine; but then we must consider that it is nine times more probable that he loses than that he wins. Upon which Ground some (1) think it a foolish thing to be afraid of Thunder, for of 2,000,000 Men perhaps not one may perish by it; and therefore not only the Greatness of the Evil, but the Probability of its not happening ought to be considered.

(a) Vid. Jur. Canon. tit. 10. De purgatione vulgari, & passim Cod. Legum antiquarum Lindenbrogii, ejusq; Glossarium in Vocabulo Campio & Duellum. (b) Apud Sigibertum Gemblacensem ad ann. 942. * Sponsores.

(i) See Mr. Barbeyrac's First Note upon this Section. (c) Judg. XIV. 12, &c. (d) Vid. Virg. Æn. l. 5. v. 328. (e) Juv. S. l. v. 88, &c. (f) Ovid Trist. l. 2. v. 483, 484. (g) 'The Alcoran together with Wine forbids those Plays which depend on Chance, because they administer frequent Occasions of Quarrelling. Cap. de Mensa.

(h) Vid. L. II. c. 5. D. de aleatoribus, & ibi juris Romani interpretet, Photius, Nomocan, Tit. 13. C. 29. Selden de Jure, N. & G. Sec. Hebr. l. 6. c. 11. (i) Ambr. Off. 3. c. 4. Which is taken from the Saying of Chryssippus in Cic. Off. 3. c. 10. Loteria. † Olla Fortuna. (k) Add. Martin Delrio Disquisit. Magic. l. 4. c. 4.

VIII. To these Contracts, that of Insuring bears some Affinity; when for a certain Sum a Man takes upon him the Risque that Goods are to run in Transportation from place to place, chiefly by Sea; which, if they happen to be lost, the Insurer is bound to make good. This Contract is null, if either the Insurer knows for certain that the Goods be already safe, or the Merchant that they be lost. For the matter of this Contract is suppos'd to be a Loss considered as uncertain. Whereas if the Insurer is certain that the Goods are arriv'd safe, he runs no Risque: and if the Owner knows that they are lost, he can't demand another to run the Risque of them; for what is not in Being can't be liable to Risque. As for the Price of such Insuring, it is to be stated by the common Rate, or by the Agreement of the Parties. Thus much is certain, that the more or greater the Dangers are, which the Commodity is expos'd to, the greater Rate may be demanded for Insuring it; as if the Seas be infested by Enemies and Pirates, more may be demanded than if only the Uncertainty of Tempests were apprehended. And in respect of them too, more in Winter than in Summer (a). This Contract I have mention'd here, because in respect of the Insurer it chiefly depends on Chance. There is mention made in Livy (b) of an Insuring which cost nothing, for they, who bought up Cloth and Corn to be transported to Spain, demanded, That what was on Board should be Insur'd by the Publick from the Danger of the Enemy and the Seas: But what Cheats were committed by this means we may read in the same Author (c) (2).

(1) This may be seen more at large in Mr. Bouhour's Art of Thinking, Part IV. Chap. 16. and the Last, whence our Author has taken most of this Section. (a) Add. Loccenius de Jure maritimo, l. 2. c. 5. (b) L. 23. c. 49. (c) L. 45. c. 3. (2) See Mr. La Placette's Treatise of Restitution, B. 4. c. 15.

C H A P. X.

Of Accessory Pacts.

HAVING done with principal Contracts that subsist by themselves, I come now to those that are only Accessory and have no Existence, but as they are added to others. These may be divided into two sorts; for Some are apply'd in order to add, or take away something from the principal Contract, and these the Civilians call Additional Pacts: Others are added only as a Confirmation and Security to Contracts already completed.

II. The Roman Lawyers (a) distinguish, between such Additional Pacts as are added before, or immediately upon the entire Completion of the principal Contract, so as in a Manner to be part of it, and such as are added sometime after; Then they examine whether the Contracts, to which they are added be such as admit of Equity, or such as are tyed up to the Rigour of the Law; And lastly, Whether they affect the Essentials of the Contracts, or such Things as naturally flow from them, or such only as are Accidental to them. Whereof the First are so Necessary, as that no Contract can be without them: The Second generally proceed from the Contract, altho' they be not express; yet so as that they may be varied by the Parties, without affecting the Essence of it: The Last have no Dependence at all upon the Essence of the Contract, but owe their Being purely to the Pleasure of the Parties. Moreover they think it ought to be considered, whether these Pacts be added to encrease, or to lessen the Obligation.

III. Concerning all which we may form these following Conclusions. I. A Pact so affecting the Essence of a Contract as to make it Unlawful, or against good Manners, is Null. For we have proved above that no such Covenant can stand Good; Thus if a Bride should add a Clause to her Contract of Marriage, by which She might be allowed the Use of other Men; or, if a Steward should add it as a Condition that he should be permitted to imbezil his Master's Goods, they would neither be Valid. So it would be absurd for a Man to make a Bargain, and at the same time to protest that he is forc'd or frightned into it: or, for a Man in any Contract whatsoever to confess that he does not design to deal honestly (b).

IV. II. When the Pact so affects the Essence of the Contract, as utterly to change the Form of it, Regard must be had to the Intent of the Contractors; For if they designed the Contract, according to the Import of the words in which it is express'd, 'tis plain that the Pact which is Repugnant to it must be Null; for they cannot be suppos'd to Will things, which are Inconsistent and Destructive of each other. Thus it would be Ridiculous, if a Man should pretend to Buy, and yet add such a Condition as would make it impossible for Him to receive the Commodity, and the other the Money; or, if he should so Let a House, as to make over the Property of it to the Tenant; or enter into Partnership, so as to have neither the Gain nor the Lots in Common.

(a) Add. D. lib. 2. t. 14. de pactis, L. 7. f. 5. (b) Vid. D. lib. 16. t. 3. Depos. vel contra, L. 1. f. 7. & f. 35.

But if the Parties did really intend the Change, and mistook only in the wording of it, or for some certain reasons chose to speak improperly, provided it be not against the Laws, it will stand Good, and not be quash'd for the Impropriety of a Term (a).

V. III. Pacts which are added immediately upon the Completion of the Contract, whether they concern the Essentials of it, or those Things which naturally flow from it, or those which are purely Accidental to it, are Valid if they be not Repugnant to Law. For since both Parties are here suppos'd to have Power to dispose of these Things, they must be obliged to what they Consent to (b); thus, although it be Natural in Buying and Selling, that the Buyer be put in Possession of the Commodity, yet the Parties by an Additional Pact may order it otherwise (1).

Thus the Obligation to make good a Defect may be augmented or diminish'd, beside what the Nature of the Contract would otherwise admit of; and the same obtains in Consensual Contracts, if between the Completion and the Execution of them a Pact be Added; for this is the same Thing, as if the Parties proceeded upon a new Contract (c).

The Purchase of an Annuity, seems to be such a sort of Borrowing, as may be referr'd hither. For I receive Money upon Condition to pay to such a certain Man, so much Interest as long as he lives, provided that after his Death, the Principal be my own; whereas otherwise the Nature of a Loan requires that the Principal be return'd to the Creditor or his Heirs.

VI. IV. A Pact added to a Contract some time after its Completion, if it be Negative and designed to take from the Obligation, and so made in Favour of the Debtor or Defendant, is Valid. Thus some time after a Debt has been contracted, the Creditor and Debtor may enter into Covenant concerning the putting off the Payment, the Changing the Place of it, the Species of Money, the Forgiving the Interest, &c. (d).

VII. V. By the Law of Nature, as far as bare Pact is capable of Action, a Pact added to a Contract some time after its Completion, although it encreases the Obligation, and so turns in Favour of the Creditor or Plaintiff, may be Valid. For the Reason why the Roman Law denies it, (viz. because a bare Affirmative Pact does not bear an Action,) is out of the Verge of the Law of Nature (e). Thus suppose I had bought a Commodity, which by the Bargain is to be delivered by such a Day, if afterwards we Covenant to have it deliver'd sooner, there is no Reason but that I should receive the Benefit of it. Or, suppose I Let you my House for two Years, and we afterwards by Consent limit the Time to one, at the End of the Year you ought to quit Possession: but then I can't demand the Rent that would be due for the other Year. And thus in Loan of Money, I don't see why the time of Payment may not be Anticipated as well as put off by an Additional Compact (f); nay altho' no Allowance be made to the Debtor for this Anticipation, yet he has no Injury done him, if he voluntarily submits to it. But 'tis manifest that his Obligation ought not to be encreas'd against his Will, and therefore naturally as much as is added to him by this Subsequent Pact, ought to be taken off somewhere else. Thus, if the Creditor will have me pay him at another place, than that which we agreed upon, I on the other Hand can fairly demand an Abatement of so much as it is my Interest to pay it in the former. But 'tis against the Nature of Bartering and Chargeable Contracts, that any Pact should be added to encrease the Obligation so much on one side, as to make an Inequality; as if the Buyer and Seller should agree upon such a Price, being the true Value of the Commodity; and yet afterwards should Covenant, that the Buyer should pay more than the Commodity is worth. Unless this be a mixt Contract of Buying and Giving, I can't see how the Additional Price can be demanded (g).

VIII. Hither I think may be referr'd what we call a * Trust, when we make over to another the Property of a Thing upon Condition to have it restor'd again: which I mention among the Additional Pacts, rather than the Principal Contracts, because it is always added upon the Delivery of the thing. And this seems to be call'd a Trust, because, whereas otherwise when the Property of a Thing is made over to another, he may dispose of it as he pleases, and either keep it himself for ever, or part with it to another; by this Additional Pact we seem to trust to his Honour and Honesty, that he will not use his Property otherwise than according to Agreement, and will be willing to part with it again upon Demand. And therefore the Solemn Form of this Contract among

(a) Vid. D. lib. 18. t. 1. de contrah. empt. &c. L. 80. f. 3. lib. 19. t. 5. de prescript. verb. &c. L. 4. & 6. & lib. 17. t. 2. pro Socio. L. 5. f. 2. (b) Contractus enim legem ex conventionione accipiunt, D. ubi supr. Leg. 1. f. 6. Vid. Leg. 24. & 26. f. 1.

(1) Vid. D. lib. 19. t. 1. de act. empt. & vendit. L. 11. f. 18. (c) See above in Chap. 2. f. 6. Vid. D. lib. 2. t. 14. de pactis, L. 7. f. 6. Vid. Leg. 58. & lib. 18. t. 1. de contrah. empt. L. 72. t. 4. de rescindenda vendit. L. 1, 2, & C. lib. 4. t. 45. Quando liceat ab emptione discedere, L. 1. (d) See above Chap. 2. f. 3. Vid. D. lib. 2. t. 14. de pactis, L. 7. f. 5. lib. 18. t. 1. de contrah. empt. L. 72. (e) In the Laws before cited. (f) Vid. lib. 13. t. 5. L. 3. f. 2.

D. de constit. pecun.

(g) Compare Arn. Vinnii tract. de pactis, c. 9, &c.

Fiducia.

the Romans ran, As honest Men ought to deal together without Deceit (a). And because the Trust was so very Extraordinary, the Breach of it was therefore branded with a particular Infamy by the Roman Laws (b). We have an Example of this sort of Trust in Livy (c). Philip, when he saw that he must fight, and raise Forces in all Parts, being solicitous for the City of Argos, thought it best to put it into the Hands of Nabis King of Lacedemon in Trust, to be restor'd again, if he return'd with Success: but if not, to be kept for himself.

Among the Turks, if a Man swears to put away his Wife, altho' he immediately repents of it, he is yet oblig'd to stand to his Oath: but in order to recover her again, he enters into a Trust with his Friend, and gets him to marry her, and immediately after, to part with her. For after a Divorce, unless the Woman be married again, she can't return to her first Husband (d).

But such a Trust as evades the Force of the Law, ought not to be contracted; as if I should give a Man, who is free from Taxes, my Estate in Trust, in order to cheat the Tax-gatherers.

IX. As for such Pacts as are added by way of Confirmation and Security to Contracts already compleated, the most usual is that, by which one Man gets another to be bound for him, so as to be Responsible in case he should fail. This Personal Security is required in these Three Cases.

First, Between Man and Man for the Performance of something Valuable, which is call'd Suretiship. Secondly, In Criminal Affairs, which is commonly call'd Bail. Thirdly, In Publick Concerns, where Security is given by Hostages.

For the right understanding the Nature of Suretiship, we must look back to the last Section of the second Chapter to this Book, to which we add, that being bound for another we make our selves so far liable, as that if he does not pay the Debt, we must. But then Recourse may be had to the Principal Debtor, and the whole with the Charges may be recover'd of him. Now since Suretiship is only an additional Confirmation to a Contract, the Surety cannot naturally be oblig'd to more than the Principal (1); So that if the Principal was oblig'd only conditionally, the Surety cannot be oblig'd, unless the Conditions be made good, nor can he be confin'd to such a Time or Place which the other was not oblig'd to. And whatsoever Exceptions the Debtor might make, the Surety can plead them to his Advantage (e). One that orders another to trust a third Person does the same thing as if he made himself a Surety; for by such an Order he is presumed to interpose his Credit. But if he gives Order for 1000*l.* and the Person takes up but 500*l.* he will stand responsible for no more than was taken up; for the meaning of the Order was that he should have Credit as far as 1000*l.* But tho' the Surety cannot be oblig'd to more than the Principal, yet he may sometimes be oblig'd to less; as when he undertakes for only Part of the Debt, or for the Whole, under certain Restrictions, or upon Condition that the time of Payment should be prolonged, or a more convenient Place assigned for it.

The End and Design of Suretiship makes it appear, that the Surety ought to be a Man of Substance and Credit, and able to answer the Creditor's Sute, which indeed is suppos'd by the Creditor's Acceptance of him (f).

X. But yet it is not impossible but the Surety may lie under a greater and a stricter Obligation than the Principal; for He interposes himself of his own Accord, the more to confirm the Principal Contract, without whom the Creditor had not enter'd into it. And indeed Necessity forces some People to contract a Debt, but nothing but Generosity, and an Ostentation of Kindness, and a Confidence in his Riches engages the Surety in another's Concern. And therefore the Creditor has, sometimes, more reason to blame the Sureties than the Principal; For it was upon their Account that he trusted at all, and they certainly are to be blam'd who without utmost Necessity derive a Burthen upon themselves, which they ought to have known

(a) Uti inter bonos bene agere oportet, & sine fraudatione; Vid. Cicero, de Offic. L. 3. c. 17. & in Topicis, c. 10. & ad Famil. L. 7. Ep. 12. (b) There are Three private Concerns, upon the honest Discharge of which, a Man's Reputation and almost his Life depends, A Trust, Guardianship and Partnership, Cic. pro Roscio, C. 6. If a Guardian ought to be Faithful, if a Partner, if one entrusted with a Commission, if one that has receiv'd a Trust, Id. Topicis.

He who by means of his Trust has defrauded any One is condemned immediately, Id. pro Cæcina, C. 3. But in what Matters the Romans interpos'd this Trust you may meet with every where amongst their Lawyers. De Fiduciario Patre. Vid. Caium, Instit. 1. 6. A Trust was contracted in Childrens succeeding to their Father's Goods. Vid. lib. 3. t. 2. f. ult. Inst. de legit. agnat. success. L. ult. lib. 8. t. 49. C. de emanc. liber. de fiduciaria possessioe. Vid. Budæum ad l. 2. lib. 1. t. 2. D. de orig. juris. Greg. Tholosan. Syntag. juris, l. 23. c. 5. f. 2. Vid. Inst. l. 1. t. 19. De tutela fiduciaria. Vid. Bachov. ad d. t. Instit. De fiducia circa pignus contracta. Vid. Idid. Etymol. l. 5. c. 25. Cujac. ad Pauli recept. sent. l. 2. t. 13. Sic & in fidei commissis instar fiducia intercedit. Vid. princ. l. 2. t. 23. Inst. de fidei commiss. & ibi Bachov. &c.

(c) L. 32. c. 38. So Alboinus delivered up Pannonia to his Friends the Hunns upon Condition that if the Longbards should ever have Occasion to return, they should restore it back. Vid. Paul. Warnfried. de gestis Longobard. L. 2. C. 7. Nabarzanes (in Curtius. l. 5. c. 9.) advises Darius to make over his Kingdom to Bessus for a Time, so as to receive it back again when Things should be settled. Hercules having subdued Sparta placed Tyndarus the Father of the Dioscuri in the Throne, which being his by Conquest, he entrusted with him, upon Condition that he would restore it safe and sound to Hercules's Sons. Diod. Sic. l. 4. t. 33. Boetius (in Topic. Cicero. ubi supr.) begins a Case with, If a Man fearing the Badness of the Times should make over in Trust a Farm to a Powerful Friend, to return it when Times should mend.

(d) Moncony's Itiner. Tom. 1. p. 465. compared with Olearius Itiner. Persic. l. 5. c. 23. (e) Fidejussores ita obligari non possunt, ut plus debeant, quam debet is, pro quo obligantur. &c. Instit. l. 3. t. 21. de Fidejussorib. (f) Vid. lib. 2. t. 11. D. si quis cautionibus & lib. 2. t. 14. L. 32. D. de pactis, lib. 3. t. 3. L. 51. D. de procurat. lib. 14. t. 6. L. 9. 3. de Scto Macedon. lib. 16. t. 2. l. 4. l. 5. D. de compensat. (f) And therefore Vulcan (in Homer. Odyss. θ. v. 352, 353) when Neptune offered to be a Surety for Mars, replies, That the Security was as bad as the Debt, for if Mars should run away, How should he be able to seize upon Neptune among the Gods?

they were not able to bear. And therefore Wife Men every where dissuade us from Suretiship, unless we would involve our selves in unnecessary Evils (a). The Romans kindly provided for the easiness of Women by the Velleian Decree (1); and by the Roman Law the Principal satisfied the whole Debt by giving up all he was worth, tho' not sufficient to discharge the Debt (2); which Favour was not indulg'd the Surety (3). For he was look'd upon as call'd in for the Relief of the Creditor, that in case the Principal should prove insolvent, the Debt might be recovered of him. Tho' indeed this way of satisfying a Debt, by parting with all a Man is worth, is altogether unknown to the Law of Nature; unless common Humanity may plead, that if a Man be brought to want by some fatal Calamity, and not by Luxury or Idleness, it ought to suffice if we strip him of his Patrimony, and not proceed any farther against his Person.

Besides, the Surety may be more strictly oblig'd than the Principal, in case he takes upon him by Oath, or under a Penalty, what the other barely promis'd. Thus it is the Custom in some Places, in default of Payment, at the time appointed, to oblige the Sureties to appear at such a certain Place, and not to depart thence 'till the Debt be satisfied, and this they call a Pledge. Tho' by reason of some Abuses, which proceeded from it, it is now generally disused.

XI. But because Suretiship is only an Addition to another Man's Debt, it is most natural for the Creditor to make his Demands first to the Principal, and upon Failure there, to apply to the Surety (b). And if the Surety pays the Debt, the Creditor must make over to him all the Right that he had against the Principal; if that can be of more Service to him towards the Recovery of the Debt, than if he sued in his own Name; especially if any Pawn had been given for Security in Part, it must be deliver'd up to the Surety. But if several had bound themselves for a Debt all jointly, and not each for the whole, in case of Failure in the Principal, the Burthen ought to be divided amongst them, and each obliged to pay his Proportion; unless one should prove insolvent, for then the Burthen must lie the Heavier upon the Rest. For a Number of Sureties were therefore provided, that if this or that should fail, the rest might be Security to the Creditor (c). Those who entirely take upon themselves in their own Name another's Obligation (*), so as to be esteem'd as Principals in the Eye of the Creditor, differ in some respect from Sureties. Whether such as these can recover of the Person for whom they engaged, what they laid out in his Service, and what method they ought to take to do it, is to be Determin'd according to the Nature of the Kindness; for this Act in them may be a Free Donation, or a Commission, or a Loan, or a Recompence, or such like.

'Tis usual also for a Surety to provide for himself by (†) Counter-Security, whereby he may recover what he lays out for the Principal, if the Principal himself proves deficient. The Person that gives this Security owes the same Obligation to the first Surety, as the first Surety owes the Creditor; and has the same Action against the Principal, as the first Surety himself had.

XII. As for Bail (*) or the Obligations, that those lie under who engage for Criminals, 'tis Observable that many of the Ancients were of Opinion, that a Man was so far Master of his own Life, as to have Power by his bare Consent to engage it for another, so far as even to forfeit it for another's Crime (d). But that a Surety should by his bare Consent make himself liable to a Punishment, which otherwise ought to be inflicted on a Criminal, does not seem agreeable to those Rules of Vindictive Justice, which ought to obtain in Human Societies; indeed if a Man knavishly interposes himself, that the Criminal may have an Opportunity of escaping Justice, he ought to suffer as much, as it is the Concern of the Magistrate that the other had not escaped his Hands; which may sometimes be Capital, especially if he who thus escap'd be like to do more Mischief (e).

Farther than this, such a substituted Death is not lawful in the Civil Court: For no Man has so much Power over his own Life, as to

(a) Prov. VI. 1. &c. XI. 15. XVII. 18. XXII. 26, 27. XXVII. 13. Ecclus XXIX. 24, 27. Be a Surety, but at your Peril, was the saying of Chilon. (1) D. Lib. 16. t. 7. L. 1. f. 1, 2. (2) V. C. Lib. 7. t. 71. L. 1. & Instit. L. 4. t. 6. De actionib. f. 40. (3) V. Instit. Lib. 4. t. 14. De Replicationib. f. 4. (b) 'This the Roman Law calls Beneficium excussionis & Ordinis. The Condition of a Surety deserves Pity, for his Kindness ruins him, and his good Nature breaks him. But the Creditor cannot with any Face apply to the Surety, but when he cannot recover his Debt of the Principal, Quint. Decl. 273. (c) Add. Phœd. l. 1. fab. 16. (*) Expromissores. (†) Fidejussor indemnitate. (*) Vades. (d) Andocides (orat. de myster.) relates, that Manthiteus and Apsephion sat by the Altar humbly praying that they might not be put to the Rack, but that their Bail might be taken, which was no sooner granted, but they mounted their Horses and fled to the Enemy; leaving their Bail, who were forced to undergo those Tortures which they themselves ought to have suffered. The Story of Damon and Pythias (whom Diod. Sic. in excerpt. Peiresc. calls Phintias) is well known as related by Cicero in libr. de Amicitia. Of whom Manil. Astr. 1. 2. v. 1. says,

Et duo qui potuere sequi vadimonia sponsi:
Optavitque reum sponfor non posse reverti,
Sponforemque reus timuit ne solveret ipsum.

Once Death was strove for, 'twas a generous strife;
Not who should keep, but who should lose a Life
Was their Dispute, contending to deny
Each other the great Privilege to die.
The Surety fear'd the guilty Friend's Return,
The guilty Friend did his own Absence mourn.

(e) 1 Kings, XX. 39.

Mr. Creech.

expose

expose it at Pleasure for no Publick Advantage, but only to hinder another from suffering what he deserves. Besides, the End of Punishments would be frustrated by this means, for the design of them is either to amend the Delinquent, or to deter Others; But the Surety is not the Delinquent, as having not by any Act of his, derived the Guilt upon himself: And as for Others, they will not be deterr'd from offending, by seeing an Innocent Man suffer, but will either be moved with Compassion, or struck with Admiration of such Love and Constancy, as does not refuse even Death, for the sake of a Friend (a). (1)

It appears therefore that Bail can be no farther admitted in Criminal cases, than as a security to the Magistrate, whose Duty it is to prosecute, that the Damages of the Delinquent shall be made Good, or his Fine paid, or if He be absent, that He shall make his Appearance, so that nothing in the mean-time may be Decreed against him, as if he were Convict, or if he be in Prison, that he may not be forc'd to Plead in Chains. And even in those Cases, the best way is for the Magistrate to let the Surety know before-hand, what security he expects from him, that so he may Consider whether his Circumstances will permit him to Venture so much upon the Honesty of his Friend.

The Obligation that Hostages lie under, hardly ever taking place but in Leagues and Civil Government, will be discuss'd more conveniently hereafter. B. 8. c. 8. s. 6.

XIII. Another usual way of Security, is to give the Creditor some certain Thing in Pawn, till the Debt be paid; the design of which is, not only that the Debtor may be incited to a more speedy Payment for want of his Goods (b), but that the Creditor (2) in Case of Failure may have something Equivalent, and being in Possession of the Pawn, need not be at the Trouble and Expence of going to Law. And therefore the Pawn ought to be as much or more Worth than the Debt it self. And since it is Design'd for the Security of Debts which bear either a Vulgar or Eminent Price, 'tis necessary that the Pawn shou'd have the same Faculty. So that we cannot approve of the Egyptian Custom (c) (3) of Pawning the dead Bodies of their Parents, altho' whoever refus'd or neglected to Redeem them was prosecuted with the utmost Ignominy, and deny'd Burial after Death. And for the same reason it seems inhuman to seize upon the dead Body of a Debtor, that so his Relations might be shamed into a Payment of that which otherwise they were not oblig'd to.

By the way, 'tis worth observing, that in the Kingdom of Pegu a Man may Pawn his Wife and Children to his Creditor; but if the Creditor lies with either the Wife or the Daughter thus pawn'd to him, he loses his Debt, and is liable to no other Punishment (d).

XIV. Things given in Pawn are either such as yield Increase, or such as do not; as for the former, 'tis usual to allow the Creditor the Profits, or a certain Proportion of them, in lieu of Interest. As for those which do not yield Increase; they generally bargain, that if they be not redeem'd by such a time, the Creditor shall have the Property of them: And this is not naturally unjust, especially if the Pawn does not exceed the Value of the Debt, and the Interest of it; or if, provided it exceeds it, the Overplus be return'd to the Owner. Tho' this the Roman Lawyers never allow of (4), for thus needy necessitous People might quickly be stript of all they were worth through the Avarice of their Creditors, being often forc'd to leave in Pawn much more than the Value of the Debt.

But it is reasonable, that, if the Pawn be not redeem'd by such a time, it should be look'd upon as sold at a fair rate stated then, or some time before, by some honest Man (5).

In short, as the Creditor ought to restore the Pawn upon Payment: so while he has it in his Custody, he ought to look after it as carefully as his own; and if it may be the worse for using, he ought not to put it to any Use, unless leave be expressly given him by the Bargain. And therefore if it receives any Damage, or happens to be lost through his Fraud, or want of, at least, common Diligence, he is obliged to make it good.

XV. It is a receiv'd Opinion, that a Pawn deposited can never become ones own by Prescription (6): and the reason is, because the Redemption of a Pawn is such an Action as cannot be exercis'd often, but once only. Besides Prescription was first introduc'd to put an end to Sutes, which would not otherwise be determined, and to settle Property which would otherwise be uncertain. But, in the case before us, there can be no Question in whom the Property of the Pawn is, when I possess it as another's, and it evidently appearing upon what account he left it with me, I cannot presume that he had ever relinquish'd it.

But yet the Case may so happen, as that the Debtor may fairly be debarred the Power of Redemption; as (e) if when he would have redeemed it, he had been hindred, and has now passed it over in Silence so long as to create a Presumption that he never designs it; or if it be very much to the Creditor's Disadvantage to have the Payment continually put off, it cannot be thought unjust in him to dispose of the Pawn as his own; especially if by length of time the Value of the Money has been changed, so that the Creditor would receive

(a) Add. Anth. Matth. de crimin. ad l. 48. D. d. tit. 14. c. 2. f. 13, &c. (1) V. Grot. L. 2. c. 21. l. 11. n. 2.
 (b) Vid. Lib. 13. t. 7. l. 35. f. 1. de action. pignorat, &c. (2) V. Instit. L. 3. t. 15. Quibus modis re contrahatur obligatio, f. 4. (c) V. Diodor. Sic. L. 1. C. 93. (3) V. Herodot. in Euterp. & Lucian. de Luctu. p. 306, 307. Ed. Amst.
 (d) Gaspar. Balb. itinera (4) V. C. L. 8. t. 35. De pactis pignorum, & de lege Commissor. in pignorib. r. scind.
 (5) V. D. L. 20. t. 1. De pignorib. & hypothefis, &c. l. 11. f. 1. & l. 16. f. 9. (6) V. C. L. 4. t. 24. de pignoratitia, Act. l. 10. (e) Grot. l. 3. c. 12. f. ult. puts this case.

less than he lent, should he admit of a Redemption. As suppose a Man had lent another 1000*l.* 100 Years ago, and had received in Mortgage a Farm, which was then worth the Money; in the mean-time the Value of Money has sunk half in half, and therefore now if the Creditor be forced to receive back his 1000*l.* he would receive only enough to purchase half the Farm, whereas, at the time of Contract, it would have purchased the whole.

XVI. The Roman Lawyers distinguish between a Pawn properly so called, and a Mortgage (1); the former is the actual Delivery of some Movable, the latter is the bare assignment of something Immovable for Security of the Debt: For barely to assign over Movables as Security, without putting them into the Custody of the Creditor, would be ridiculous; for they might be remov'd away, and so not answer the End for which they were assigned. This way of Mortgage is very useful among Subjects of the same State; for it being absolutely necessary that they should frequently borrow of one another, and as necessary that the Payment should sometimes be put off for a considerable time, there would not be Movables enough for sufficient Security; and it would be too hard to oblige the Borrowers immediately to part with their Immovables, as their Houses or Land (a). And therefore it suffices to assign such an Immovable for Security, as can't be taken away, and of which the Law at any time can give Possession.

In the State of Nature such Mortgages are needless; for if the Debtor refuses Payment, the Possession of the Mortgage assign'd in Security must be detain'd by force of Arms. Whereas in that State, without such a particular Assignment, it is lawful to seize on any thing that belongs to the Debtor.

(1) V. Instit. L. 4. t. 6. De actionib. f. 7. XXIV. 3. Prov. XX. 16. & D. L. 20. t. 1. l. 6, 7. D. de pignor. &c. Diodor. Sic. l. 1. c. 79. G. lib. 8. t. 17. L. 8. & authent. Agricultores quæ res pign. oblig. poss.

(a) Compare Exod. XXII. 26, 27. Deut. XXIV. 6. Job. XXII. 6.

(a) Compare Exod. XXII. 26, 27. Deut. XXIV. 6. Job. XXII. 6. XXIV. 3. Prov. XX. 16. & D. L. 20. t. 1. l. 6, 7. D. de pignor. &c. Diodor. Sic. l. 1. c. 79. G. lib. 8. t. 17. L. 8. & authent. Agricultores quæ res pign. oblig. poss.

CHAP. XI.

By what means Obligations founded upon Compact may be dissolved.

WE come now to see by what means Obligations thus founded upon Compact may be dissolv'd. The most natural way is the Performance of the Covenants (1): for that being done, the Obligation ceases of course. And here we may observe, that some Obligations are so inherent in a Person, that they cannot be perform'd by any other (2): Whereas some may be done by Proxy, it being all alike to the Party concerned by whom they be perform'd. Of such a Nature are all those Contracts which relate to common mercenary Work, such as may be done as well by one Man as by another; as also those which concern Consumable Commodities, which if we do but get our selves possess'd of, it is indifferent by what Hand they come to us. In such Cases, altho' it be most natural for the Debtor himself, or some other, by his Order, to pay and perform according to Agreement, yet the Creditor ought to acquiesce, if any other Man discharges for the Debtor; I say, for the Debtor, for whosoever pays upon his own account and not the Debtor's does not release him (3). But in case of Suretiship, if the Principal discharges the Obligation, he releases both himself and the Surety (4). Whereas if the Surety pays the Debt the Principal is indeed releas'd from the Creditor, but at the same Instant becomes indebted to the Surety, even altho' this Payment was made without his Knowledge.

II. But if a Man pays a Debt for another without either being his Surety, or having his Order for it, can he recover what he has thus paid of his own Head? In which Case we must distinguish whether he made this Payment against the other's Will, or only against his Knowledge. In the former Case 'tis plain he cannot recover it; For how can any one impose an Obligation upon me against my Will, which ought to be founded upon Consent? But because no Body is presum'd to throw his Money away, we ought to consider further, whether he design'd what he thus paid as a Gift to the Creditor, or not: If he did; the Debtor is not concern'd in it: But if he did not design it as a Gift; we ought to suppose, that he did it to transfer the Creditor's Right and Title against the Debtor upon himself. And altho' the Creditor, at the Payment, knew not of his Design, but receiv'd the Money as paid in the Name of the Debtor: yet if he who paid it cannot recover it of the Debtor, the Creditor ought in Equity either to refund what he thus receiv'd, and still preserve his Action against the Debtor, or else to give up his Title to the other; especially if he may be presum'd to have made his Payment in Hopes it would have been acceptable to the Debtor. Upon which account the Roman Law allows him an Action for Business done (a). But since the Debtor may put in his Exceptions, that it was not acceptable to him, and that he is not willing to owe this other Person such a Kindness, his best way would be to suppose that his Creditor has given up his Title to him, and to deal with him accordingly. But if a Man should lay out any Expence upon another's Goods without his Knowledge, he may keep the Goods as a Pledge till the Expences be repaid him, unless the Improvement is capable of being taken away from them.

(1) Tollitur omnis obligatio solutione ejus quod debetur, Instit. L. 3. t. 20. Quib. mod. tollitur oblig. princip. (2) See above in B. 1. c. 1. f. 19. (3) Nam quod quis suo nomine solvit, non debitoris, debitorem non liberat. D. L. 5. t. 3. l. 31. princip. (4) Item si reus solverit, etiam ii, qui pro eo intervenerunt, liberantur. Instit. ubi supr. (a) V. L. 3. t. 5. de negotiis gestis, l. 43. & ult.

III. No Payment, or Satisfaction of any Obligation ought to be made but to the Creditor himself, or whom he has order'd to receive it in his Name (1), and if I pay Another by mistake, the Creditor's Title nevertheless stands good; but then I may recover of the Other what I thus paid him (2). The Creditor is here presum'd to be capable of managing his own Concerns (3), and to have a perfect Understanding of the Affair in hand. For otherwise it would be to throw Money away, rather than to make Payment of it.

IV. Besides, the very thing must be paid that was bargain'd for, and not another in its stead (4); it must be paid entire, not mangled (5); not partially, nor piecemeal; at the Time and Place (6) appointed (7); especially if it be the Creditor's Interest to have it paid here rather than there, and at such a time rather than at another; for the Time is part of the Price (a). Yet any of these Conditions may be superseded by a new Agreement, which the Creditor is sometimes forc'd to comply with, through the Poverty or Knavery of the Debtor, being willing to receive part rather than nothing, at another Place rather than no where, and after the time expired rather than never. Tho' sometimes Equity requires that the Payment be put off and accepted in parcels, when it can't be perform'd immediately, or all at once. Thus the Athenians having made a Vow to sacrifice to Diana as many Goats as they should kill Enemies; when they could not procure so many in the whole Country, they decreed to sacrifice 500 every Year (b). Sometimes too there is no other way of ending the Sute than by forcing the Debtor to pay an Equivalent.

'Tis manifest that the Creditor only can remit the Debt, and not his Servant or Steward without his express Order. But if the Debtor's Steward transacts with the Creditor, and compounds for less than the whole, the Gain does not redound to the Steward but to his Master; and it would be Theft and Purloining in the Steward, if after having compounded with the Creditor, he should bring the whole Debt in his Accounts, and put what he got by Composition in his own Pocket.

The Creditor is suppos'd to be satisfied, if he accepts of a Pawn as Payment, or takes it in Trust till Payment be made, or if it be sold, and the Price receiv'd in lieu of the Debt. And if a Man owes Money by several different Bonds, and pays part, the Payment ought in favour to be apply'd to the most burthensome (c). The way which Vitellius (d) took to pay his Debts was very scandalous; when he went to Germany he was so intangled, that his Creditors would scarce dismiss his Person upon any Security; who a little after, when he was made Emperor and return'd to Rome, hid themselves. But he order'd them to be brought before him, and told them, That he had restor'd them Safety for their Money, and demanded back the Bonds and Instruments of Contract.

V. The Obligation is sometimes released by Compensation, which is by opposing Debt to Debt (e), or when a Man ceases to owe me, because I apparently owe him as much of the same kind. For since as much (especially in Consumable Commodities) is the same, and where the Debts are mutual, if I receive, I must immediately refund as much: therefore to a bridge such needless Payments 'tis most convenient for each Party to pay himself by retaining his own (8); especially since there is no Paying and Receiving without some trouble in it: And it would be very imprudent in me to pay first, when I need not do it, and so to put it in the other's Power to be behind hand in his Payment to me (f).

But this Compensation does not take place, but between those that are Creditors and Debtors to each other; for if I have so much due to me from a Third Person, I cannot obtrude that upon my Creditor for Payment, unless this Third and he be join'd in such a Partnership as to have all their Obligations and Rights in Common; for then their Goods may be look'd upon as one and the same Patrimony. Nay if they be Partners in one sort of Commodity only, Compensation will take Place, if one be my Debtor, and the other my Creditor for that Commodity; for so far they are to be esteem'd the same Person. So, if I owe Money to him who is my Debtor's Heir; or, if the Creditor of him, whose Heir I am, is indebted to me, Compensation may take place. And thus I may oppose Debt to Debt, altho' my Creditor is against it; For with what Face can he demand me to pay him, when he declines paying me?

Since this way of Compensation cannot be put in Practice, but between those who are mutually in Debt to one another, it follows, that I cannot oppose to my Creditor what he owes another, whose Agent I am, without his express Orders. For tho' a Man intrusts me with the entire Ma-

(1) V. D. L. 46. t. 3. De solutionib. &c. l. 49.

(2) V. D. L. 12. t. 6. De conditione indebiti, l. 65. f. 9.

(3) V. D. L. d. l. 1. 15. (4) V. D. L. 12. t. 1. De rebus creditis, l. 2. f. 1. (5) ibid. l. 21. (6) V. D. L. 13. t. 4. De eo quod certo loco dari oportet l. 9. (a) V. Martial. l. 6. ep. 30. (7) V. D. L. 46. t. 3. De solut. & liberat. l. 70.

(b) Xenophon de ἀνακ. ἢ Κόρυ. p. 178. Otherwise concerning the time of payment that of l. 105. of D. B. 46. t. 3. De solution, &c. us'd to be observ'd. (c) V. D. ubi supra, l. 1. 4. 97. (d) V. Xiphilin. ad ann. 69.

(e) V. D. L. 16. t. 2. De Compensation. l. 1. Compensatio, est debiti & crediti inter se contributio. (8) V. Grot. L. 3. c. 19. f. 15, &c. (f) L. 2. L. 3. D. d. l. Dolo facit qui petit quod redditurus est.

nagement of his Affairs, I am not therefore to reckon his Things as my own, and by that means make Compensation for my Debts; for perhaps he had rather have another Man his Debtor than me. Nor if I trust my Affairs to another, do I thereby take his Debts and Obligations upon my self; Thus v. g. should Caius enjoyn me to exact his Dues of Seius, whose Debtor I my self am; neither can Seius without Caius's leave compensate his Debt with mine, and under that Pretence refuse Payment, (for What has Caius to do with my Debt?) Neither can I take the Debt upon me instead of Seius. So one that is indebted to a Minor cannot make Compensation of that which the Guardian owes him: nor can the Guardian release his Debt by opposing to it that which his Creditor owes the Minor (a).

On the other Hand, if one that is bound for another, be call'd upon for the Debt, he may oppose by way of Compensation, not only what the Creditor owes to him, but also what he owes to the Principal Debtor; and this even against the Knowledge and Will of the Principal: For since the Creditor cannot refuse such a Compensation from the Principal himself, Why should not the Surety have the Advantage of it? And it would not be fair in the Principal to be against it, since he is oblig'd to repay what the Surety thus lays down for him.

VI. But in Consumable Commodities Compensation does not regularly take place, but in those of the same kind, and that too, not 'till the time of Payment is come or past (b); and therefore things of a different sort or quality can't be paid by Compensation, as a Bushel of Wheat for a Bushel of Oats, or a Hoghead of Rhenish for a Hoghead of Port Wine; nor things of a different Species, as this Horse for that Ox; nor of a different Kind, as a Sheep for a Goose; nor a Species for a thing indefinite of the same kind, or for an indeterminate Quantity, as Bucephalus for a Horse, or a Vessel of Oyl. Yet the Roman Lawyers admit of Compensation, where the Particulars are not assign'd, but the same sort and quality is owing on each side, as if I had promis'd you a Horse in general, and you happen to be Executor to one that leaves a Horse to me in Legacy. But, yet even in the former Cases, each Party may rate their Debt, and then pay them by Compensation. And yet, where Debts are thus reciprocal, the Obligation is rather suspended than taken away, by withholding what I owe another, till he pays what he owes me. But Work for Work, or Work for Goods will not admit of Compensation at the very Instant that it ought to be perform'd; for that would frustrate the very End and Design of such Contracts.

But if each Party release the other, the Obligation ceases upon another Principle, viz. Mutual Disagreement; so also if I cease to be oblig'd, because another, who ought first to perform his Part, omitted it, it is not by reason of Compensation, but because the Condition, upon which the Obligation was founded, does not appear. But if my Work has been neglected by the Party that had undertaken it, I may rate it and so bring it into Compensation. Nay I can oppose to a Debt an equivalent Damage, or a Fine adjudg'd to me for any Injury done by my Creditor. But if two Persons be at Law, and while the Cause is depending strike up a Bargain, neither can oppose the Law-sute, or the Charges of it to the other (c); v. g. suppose I am at Law with another for an Estate, and during the Sute, sell him a House, he can't impute to me as Payment the Estate, or the Expences he has been at about it; For the Estate does not as yet appear to be his, and the Nature of the thing shews, that the Bargain was made without any regard to the Cause depending.

As for that sort of Compensation which cancels former Favours by subsequent Injuries, Seneca discourses largely of it (d). So also equal Injuries may, by Compensation, be put up on both sides, provided the Right of the Magistrate be not infringed.

VII. The Obligation ceases also when the Creditor, or he who has a Title to it, forgives it; for 'tis evident any Man may recede from his own Right, and when the Right has been made over to another, there too the Obligation ceases upon that other's forgiving it. And as at first I cannot stand oblig'd, if the other Party refuses to accept of it: so neither can I continue bound, if he thinks fit to cancel the Bond. But this only in case no Third Person is injur'd by it, for otherwise he alone cannot release me, altho' I was immediately oblig'd to him only.

This Release is perform'd either expressly or tacitly; to the former belongs what the Roman Law calls Acceptilatio (1), an Acquittance or Discharge, by which the Person acknowledged himself to have receiv'd what indeed he had not; as also the Stipulatio Aquiliana (2), which by a sort of Novation, brought the Debtor to Articles of Agreement, and then releas'd him by a Discharge; all which tedious Forms and Circumstances the Law of Nature knows nothing of, but makes the Obligation to cease upon the bare Consent of the Party signified.

Besides, the Obligation is presum'd to be remitted, if I designedly deliver up, (not in Trust or such like) the Instruments or Deeds, without which the Debt cannot be made out (e); but if I have several Instruments, and each of them is capable of proving the Debt, then the Obligation is not suppos'd to be cancelled upon the Delivery of one only.

As for what the Roman Law observes, that by Delivery of the Deeds the Creditor is judg'd to enter tacitly into Compact not to demand the Debt; that Nicety is unknown to the Law of Nature, which supposes the Obligation cancell'd, not only by real Payment but by the bare Remission of it.

(a) V. D. ibid. L. 23. (b) V. l. 7. D. h. t. (c) As Grotius well observes, l. 3. c. 19. f. 19. (d) Epist. 81. & de Beneficis. l. 6. c. 4. &c. (1) Item per acceptilationem tollitur obligatio, Instit. L. 3. t. 30. f. 1. (2) ibid. f. 2.

(e) Lib. 2. t. 14. L. 2. D. de Pañis.

The Obligation is suppos'd to be tacitly forgiven, if the Creditor directly or indirectly hinders the Discharge of it: Thus if I bargain with a Man to do any certain Work, and am myself to call upon him when I would have him perform it, my not calling upon him is presum'd to be a Release, as is also my substituting another to do it for him.

VIII. But as the former Methods take place, where one Party only is oblig'd, so where both are concern'd, if nothing be yet perform'd, the Obligation may cease upon each Parties dissenting and receding from the Bargain (1); for 'tis natural that the contrary to that which causes the Obligation should be capable of making it void, provided it be not of such a Nature as, when once contracted, never to be rescinded; for no doubt a positive Law may, in certain Cases, forbid that what has been once agreed upon should be retracted, altho' nothing yet be perform'd in it. But if Part has been perform'd, and one Party done something of his Duty, then 'tis plain bare Dissent is not sufficient to take away the Obligation (a); which, in this Case, cannot be cancell'd, unless he who perform'd releases the other, or has amends made him some other way (b).

IX. Moreover an Obligation is released, or rather broke off by the Perfidiousness of either Party; so that if one does not perform his Part, neither is the other oblig'd to make good his (2): For when a Man takes upon him any Duty, not absolutely and gratis, but upon the Prospect of the other's doing something on his side, the Obligation to make good his Undertaking is only conditional, as if he had said, I'll do this, in case you will first do that. Now whatever is founded upon a Condition falls of Course, if the Condition does not appear (c). And therefore the superstitious Exactness of the Indian, if it be true, was more than he was oblig'd to; who when another had taken away his Wife against all Right and Reason, would not however break off with him, because he had taken a solemn Oath, that he would never, upon any account, do any Harm (d). But this holds only where the Non-performance lies on his side, who ought to perform first. How far, or whether the Fear left, after I have done my Part, the other should not perform his, frees me from the Obligation, has been discours'd of before (3).

But if one Party has performed in part, and the Contract happens to be broke off before Completion, How shall he have right done him? In this Case we must distinguish according to the variety of Circumstances. For if I have perform'd what I ought, and the other refuses to perform his part, I have a Right to force him to it by any lawful means: But if after having perform'd part, I begin to be tired and neglect to make an end of it, I cannot oblige that other to make any Allowance for my partial imperfect Performance, 'till I finish the whole according to the agreement; Nor can that Trite saying be objected here, that no one ought to grow rich at the loss of another, for no regard is to be had to the loss which a Man by his own fault brings upon himself. And if He whom it concerns to have my part of the Covenant fulfilled, is the occasion, why it is not, it is the same thing to me as if it was fulfilled. Nor if he should afterwards repent of his breach of Faith, and be willing to compleat his Contract, shall I be oblig'd to comply with it. For one violation entirely breaks off the Contract, and frees the other from his Obligation; thus should I hire a Servant for a Year, and pay him his Wages before-hand, and for no fault of his should turn him off before the End of the Year, I should not be able to oblige him to return me part of the Wages proportionable to the Remainder of the Time. Nay if each Party has perform'd equally, yet even then, neither can break off the Bargain before the Time appointed: And if one should give back, the other would have a right to force him to compleat it; or to make as much amends, as it was his Interest to have the Compact exactly perform'd.

X. Obligations also expire when the Person, in whom they were founded, changes. Thus the Magistrate, having promis'd Protection to the Subject, is no longer oblig'd to it, than he continues in his Office; and the Subject, having sworn Allegiance to the Magistrate, is freed from the Obligation, if either he ceases to be a Subject, or the other to be a Magistrate. But such an Alteration in the subject matter as would have prevented the Obligation, had it existed at the making of it, will not be sufficient to dissolve it afterwards, provided the Party be not thereby render'd incapable of performing it: For unless Provision has been made at first for such Accidents, the Right, which was irrecoverably given, shall continue firm, altho' perhaps the other be a little burthen'd by it. For he enter'd into Contract freely and of his own Accord, and may thank himself for not having foreseen those Inconveniencies, that might probably have been prevented. Thus when a People have given up their Liberties to an Arbitrary Power, altho' afterwards they change their Minds, and show a greater inclination for another Form of Government, yet they can not therefore shake off their Allegiance. And thus many, if they had known the Inconveniencies of a Married State, would never have embrac'd it; who yet having enter'd into the Bond, whatever happens, must endure it.

(1) Eæ obligationes quæ consensu contrahuntur, contraria voluntate dissolvuntur, Instit. ubi supr. §. 4.

(a) V. L. 18. 1. 5. 1. 2. 1. 3. D. de rescind. vendit. (b) V. 1. 58. D. de Pactis, ubi supr. (2) V. Grot L. 3. c. 19. §. 14. (c) Not those that defend themselves, but those who are the Aggressors break the Truce. Thucyd. l. 1. c. 123. Ed. Oxon.

(d) In Philostr. L. 3. c. 9. de vita Apollon. Tyanæi.

(3) B. 3. c. 6. §. 9.

XI. Time puts a Period to those Obligations which were limited to a Day; and if the Parties desire to have them continued, they must Covenant again de novo, which needs not always be done expressly, but may sometimes be tacitly perform'd (a). But such an Obligation as is void after such a time, and yet has no room to exert it self in before the time expired, is absurd: As if I should make my self indebted to you 100*l.* for three Years, yet so as that you shall have no right to demand it before the time be lapsed; for vain is the Obligation that has no Effect before it expires, nor leaves any behind it after.

But it is another Thing if I Covenant, that unless you demand it within the Compass of three Years, it shall not be due: For that will be a Condition annex'd to the Obligation, which not appearing the Obligation will cease. Thus 'tis usual for a Surety to bind himself for such a term only, to oblige the Creditor to demand his Money betimes, and while the Debtor is able to pay, lest otherwise he should remain bound for ever.

XII. By Death those Obligations expire which were founded in the Person of the Deceased; for the Subject being gone, the Accident must necessarily follow, and the Performance be render'd Impossible in Nature (b). But yet in Japan the Bonzy persuade Men, That those who give them Money here shall receive ten-fold in the other World: And upon this Account give their Creditors a Note under their hand, which they keep carefully, in order to be buried with them (c). But generally the Obligation that lay upon the Deceased is communicated and continued to the Survivors; and this, either when the Survivor takes it upon him, of his own accord, to preserve the Reputation of the Deceased, or for other Reasons; or when the Goods of the Deceased being made over to the Heir, the Incumbrance also goes along with them.

But if a Man dies, and leaves not enough to satisfy his Debt, the Creditor's Action seems to die with him; for what can any one do to a dead Carcass (d)? Tho' among the Egyptians, the Creditors used to bury the Bodies of their Debtors in their Houses, which afterwards the Heirs of the Deceased, if they were able, redeemed and interred Honourably. Among whom too, it was usual for the Children to pawn their Parents dead Bodies, but if they did not redeem them again, they were treated with the greatest Ignominy, and after Death were deny'd Burial (e).

XIII. By Delegation a Man substitutes his Debtor to his Creditor to make Payment for him (1); or I make over to my Creditor the Debt another owes me: And here the Creditor's Consent is necessary, but not the Consent of the third Debtor (2), whom, in this case, I can make over unknown to him, and against his Will: For 'tis the same thing to whom a Man pays, but not the same, from whom he is to demand a Debt.

XIV. There is no need to say much of Confusion; for since the same Man cannot be his own Creditor and Debtor, it follows, if a Man becomes Heir to his Debtor, his Action ceases, not finding an Object to exert it self upon.

XV. Novation seems to belong Peculiarly to the positive Civil Law (3), and not to the Law of Nature and Nations; for Old Obligations may be alter'd by Consent of Parties, as suppose that the Loss of a Thing, through the Delay of the Debtor, should not be imputed to him, that no Penalty or Usury be demanded for Delay, that Pledges be restored, Sureties releas'd, the Creditor, for the future, declaring himself willing to depend Entirely upon the Credit of the Debtor; but those, that deal according to the Simplicity of the Law of Nature, need not here suppose a new Obligation super-induc'd upon the former; for indeed nothing is here transacted, but only the Creditor gives up part of his Right, or several Pretensions are blended into one: But that one Action should enjoy one Privilege more than another, is entirely owing to some positive Law, for in the Law of Nature those Things that are equally due, may be equally demanded. But, as for what the Roman Law delivers concerning such a Novation as is got by a Contest at Law, (and which they call necessary, as they call the other voluntary;) may be apply'd in some Respects to the Law of Nature; for he that casts his Adversary, has an Action against him for what the Court adjudges, let the Merit of his former Cause be what it will: So when any Controversy is decided by War, let that be as it will, after the War is at an End, not only the first Pretensions may be demanded, but also that which was determined by the Peace.

(a) Vid. L. 19. t. 2. l. 13. f. ult. D. Locati, &c. (b) Vid. Val. Max. l. 2. c. 6. f. 10. & Pomp. Mel. l. 3. c. 2. says of the old Gauls, 'The Management of their Concerns, and the Demand of their Debts were put off to the other World.'
 (c) Vid. Bern. Baren. de relig. Japon. p. m. 35. (d) To which the Law of Solon has Regard, Which forbids the the Dead to be used contumeliously. Vid. Plut. Solone, p. 180. Vid. l. 47. t. 10. Add. l. 1. f. 4, 6. & l. 27. D. de injuriis, &c.
 (e) Vid. Diod. Sic. L. 1. c. 92, 93. Lucian. de luffu, p. 306, 307. Herod. Euterpe. (1) Vid. D. L. 46. t. 2. De Novationib. & Delegation. l. 11. (2) See Mr. Barbeyrac's Second Note upon this Section. (3) See Mr. Barbeyrac's First, Second, and Last Notes upon this Section.

C H A P. XII.

Of Interpretation.

SO much for Pacts in general and partly in particular: Let us now proceed to the Interpretation of them, for since in all Obligations certain Signs are made use of, to express the Minds of the Parties, and the Laws and Heads of the Contract; and since these Signs may sometimes be taken in different Senses, 'tis highly Necessary to have some Rule to find out that which is True and Genuine. Now altho' we design to treat hereafter of those Pacts which presuppose Civil Government; and most of what we have to say upon this Head has Relation to such an Establishment (r); yet since it would not be so convenient either to divide the Matter, or to reject the whole to the End of the Book; it will not, I hope, be thought so much against Method, to treat of all together in this place, as Grotius (a) has done before me, who has handled this Subject with the utmost Nicety.

II. If then we consider for what End Obligations are made, we shall find that every Man is bound to that which he intended, when he enter'd into the Obligation. It is here suppos'd that he enter'd into it freely and of his own Accord, and that the Matter is such as he lay under no Constraint to perform it otherwise: And therefore I don't see how a Man can possibly be obliged farther than he himself intended; in this Sense is that of Cicero (b) to be taken; In Obligations Regard is to be had not so much to the Expression as to the Intent of the Party.

Farther; such is the Nature of Man, that his internal Actions are not in themselves visible to another, and may differ from his external Signs and Actions: And yet we lie under a Necessity to distinguish clearly what every Man is obliged to, or what may lawfully be demanded of him; for there would be no such thing as Obligation, if any one might free himself, by affixing what Sense he pleased to his Signs, and by pretending that he meant different from what others went away with. And therefore right Reason dictates that he, to whom the Obligation is made, should have a right to compel him, from whom 'tis due to the Performance of it, in that Sense which the right Interpretation of the Signs made use of, importeth. For though the Man himself is chiefly concerned in what he meant, yet others must act by Signs; for else the Matter would be to no End or Purpose, which in Morality is absurd. Consonant to this was the old Form us'd in making Leagues (c), Sine dolo malo, utique ea hic hodie rectissime intellecta sunt; Without any Fraudulent Design, according to the Sense which the Words at present bear.

The true End and Design of Interpretation is, To gather the Intent of the Man from most probable Signs. These Signs are of two sorts; Words, and other Conjectures, which may be considered separately, or both together.

III. As for Words; the Rule is (2), Unless there be reasonable Objections against it, they are to be understood in their proper and most known Signification; not so much according to Grammar, as to the general Use of them (d).

When Tiberius (e) had us'd a Word, which was not Latin, Capito said, that, in Honour of the Emperor, it ought to pass current for the future, although no Body before him had made use of it: But one Marcellus reply'd, That Cæsar might, if he pleased, naturalize Men, but Words he could not. Procopius (f) having said, That the Emperor had rais'd an Army, partly among his own Subjects and partly among the Allies, subjoin'd, that formerly by the Name of Allies were meant only the Barbarians, who were not Slaves; for they were never conquered, but had obtain'd the Privilege of Citizens, with Arms in their hands, and were so called from the Alliances which they made. But now there is none but who may have a Title to this Name: The way of the World is not to keep Words strictly to that Sense which they did Originally bear; for Men change at Pleasure the Things themselves, little regarding by what Names they were first called (g). The Locrians (h) arriving at the extrem Part of Calabria, found that Country possess'd by the Sicilians, who alarm'd with their unexpected Arrival, receiv'd them and struck up a League in these Words; That the Locrians should preserve an Amity with the Sicilians, and permit them to enjoy the Country in Common with them, as long as they should tread upon that Earth, and wear those Heads upon their Shoulders. These Terms being agreed upon, the Locrians came to take the Oath, having first put Earth in their Shoes, and fastened the Heads of Garlick upon their Shoulders, so as not to be seen. But when they had taken the Oath, they threw the Earth out of their Shoes, and the Heads of the Garlick from their Shoulders, and watching their Opportunity fell upon the Sicilians, and drove them out of the Country. The Bæotians (i) made a League with the Spartans, and one of the Articles was, that they should deliver up Panaetum, which they did indeed deliver up, but first demolish'd it.

(1) See Mr. Barbeyrac's Note upon this Section (a) L. 2. c. 16. (b) Offic. l. 1. c. 13 (c) Leg. l. 1. c. 24

(2) See Mr. Barbeyrac's 1st Note upon this Sect. (d) Usus, quem penes arbitrium est & jus & norma loquendi, Hor. Quint. Instit. Orat. l. 1. c. 6. (e) Dio. Cassius, l. 59. (f) Hist. Vandal. l. 1. (g) The Signification of the Word Sophister, in Process of time, changed like Money, Themist. Orat. 23. p. 287. Edit. Paris.

(h) Polyb. l. 12. c. 4. (i) Thucyd. l. 5. c. 42. Edit. Oxon.

Leucippus (a) having borrowed of the Tarentines the Use of a Place for a Day and a Night, and not being willing to restore it, when they demanded it by Day, he put them off to the next Night; and when by Night, to the next Day.

When Mahomet took Eubœa he told a certain Person that his Head should be safe, but immediately cut him in two in the middle.

A Petit Prince of the Indies fled to the King of Persia for Protection, and when his Sovereign demanded him by his Ambassador, the Persian, during the Audience, order'd him to be put in a Basket and hung upon a Tree, and then deny'd that he was upon his Land (b). Thus a certain Person deny'd positively that he had laid Hands on a Priest, for he had only cudgell'd and kick'd him. Thus Temures having artied with the Garrison of Sebastia that no Blood should be shed, nevertheless ordered all the Prisoners to be buried alive. But these Quibbles, as they are too gross and frivolous, so, as Cicero observes, instead of taking it off, they rather bind the Perjury upon the Conscience (c).

IV. As for Terms of Art which are above the Reach of the common People; the Rule is; That they be taken according to the Definitions of the Learned in each Art. The Logicians, says Cicero (d), use not the same Words as other Men: they have Terms of their own, as indeed all other Arts have: v. g. the word Army; suppose it had been stipulated between two Crowns, that one should not pass through the other's Territories with an Army, what number of Soldiers would come under that Denomination? Grotius (1) defines an Army to be such a Number as dares invade a foreign Country, or face an Enemy in the Field; for we find in all Histories the open Actions of an Army oppos'd to what is done by Stealth in the manner of Robbers: yet it cannot be so universally defined, how great a Multitude constitutes an Army, as to hold good at all Times, and in all Places: For both the Enemy's Strength, and our own, must be considered. If we have to do with a poor State, a small Force may be esteem'd an Army, which yet against some flourishing Kingdoms would be deem'd little better than a handful of Foragers. And therefore when Vegetius (e) describes an Army to consist of Legions and Auxiliaries, and a competent Number of Horse to carry on a War, he does not describe an Army in general, but as it was then amongst the Romans; for an Army may be compos'd of only natural born Subjects, or of Allies and Foreigners only; or it may consist of only Foot, or only Horse. Cicero (f) tells us that Crasus denied any Man to be rich, who was not able to maintain an Army at his own Charge, which he (2) defines to consist of Six Legions and a great Number of Auxiliaries. Polybius (g) says, the Roman Army generally contain'd 16000 Romans, and 2000 Auxiliaries; tho' sometimes it did not amount to that Number. In the Digests (h), he who has one Legion under his Command, is said to be General of an Army. Besides, another Question might be mov'd upon this Word; As, whether the aforesaid Article be violated, if one marches a great Number of Souldiers through the other's Territories, not in a Body but in separate Parties? Now since a Man may be said to have an Army, either if he has all his Forces united together in one place, or has them so dispersed as to be able to draw them together upon short Warning, it ought to be farther considered for what End this Article was made; for if it was only for our own Security, 'tis plain the Article is not violated, by the Army's marching in small Bodies; but, if it was for the Security of a Neighbour, such a Passage as this breaks the Article. And the same may be applied to a Fleet; if in any Treaty it be provided that no Fleet shall be suffered to pass in such a part of the Sea; for here not only the Number of Ships, but their Bigness and the maritime Strength of the People concern'd is to be consider'd (i). And so in respect of a Fort prohibited to be rais'd within such a Distance; the Word may signify either a high and regular Fortification; or any fortified Place whatsoever, although consisting of low pitiful Buildings. And therefore, if the Design of the Article be to prevent any fortified Place from giving Umbrage to our Territories, 'tis plain that it is against the Treaty to throw up so much as a little Bulwark of Earth, with small Huts to lodge Souldiers in (k).

But if Terms of Art happen to be differently defined by different Persons, to avoid Quarrels, it will be convenient to express in common Words in what Signification the Word under Debate shall be taken.

V. When a single Word or Sentence is capable of several Significations, Conjectures are necessary to find out the true. Both of these Cases the Rhetoricians call Ambiguous. But the Logicians are more nice, who, if the Variety of Significations lies in a word, call it Equivocal, if in a Sentence, Ambiguous. An Example of the former we meet with in Tertullian (1), who tells us that the Word Woman in 1 Cor. XI.

(a) Strabo, l. 6. p. 183. Edit. Genev. (b) Olearius, itin. Perf. l. 4. c. 30. (c) Off. 3. c. 32. Fraus enim adstringit, non dissolvit perjuriam. (d) Qu. Acad. l. 1. c. 7. (e) Ubi supra. (f) De re militari, l. 3. c. 1. (g) Paradox. 6. (2) In the same place. (g) L. 6. (h) Lib. 3. t. 2. l. 2. f. 1. D. de his qui not. infam. &c. (i) To this belongs that of Florus, l. 1. c. 11. n. 10. Ed. Græv. The Spoils of Antium are in Being, which Mæmus fix'd in the Forum having taken the Enemies Fleet, if it may be called a Fleet. For there were six Ships with Sterns, and that Number then was enough to enter into an Engagement with. Add. Alber. Gent. de jure belli, l. 3. c. 20. (k) Add. Alber. Gent. d. l. 21. (1) De uelantibus Virginibus, c. 2.

s, &c. ought to be extended to Virgins also. Although sometimes it is oppos'd to Virgin, as in Cicero (1). To-morrow she will be a Woman. Cicero (a) gives this Example of the latter: A certain Man had bequeath'd a Legacy in these Words; Hæres meus vasorum argenteorum pondum centum novercæ, quæ volet, dato. Let my Heir give his Mother-in-law 100 weight of Plate at pleasure. Upon this the Lady demanded the finest and best wrought Plate: But the Heir interpos'd that the Choice was left to his Pleasure. The Ambiguity had been avoided by the Addition of the word His or Her. The Roman Law, in such a Case (2), gives the Legatee the Option, and indeed there is Reason for it. For had the Option been design'd to be left at the Discretion of the Heir, there had been no need of the Clause at Pleasure. For if a thing is enjoin'd me at large (3), and I have several ways of satisfying the Obligation, 'tis left to my self to choose which way to do it. But when a Clause is added concerning the Choice, 'tis designed in favour of the Party which is to receive, that the Other may not obtrude some pitiful, worthless Thing upon him (b).

As for the famous Decision of the Duke of Offona, Viceroy of Naples, who decreed the whole Inheritance to the Son against the Priests, who were left Heirs with a Clause To give the Son what they would, Strictness of Justice does not plead in behalf of it, so much as the odious Covetousness of that sort of People which are always hankering after other Mens Estates.

Another Instance we have in the Answer Charles V. gave the French Ambassador, when he demanded the Dukedom of Milan: That which pleases my Brother the French King, pleases me also. Which the Ambassador in great haste gave his Master Advice of, as if he had gain'd his Point (c).

VI. Besides, when we meet with a * seeming Repugnancy in the Terms, Conjectures are necessary to work out the genuine Sense by reconciling, if possible, those Terms that seem to be repugnant. But if there be a clear evident Repugnancy, the latter Contract vacates the former (d): For no Man can Will Contradictions, and it is the Nature of Acts, which depend upon the free Will of the Agent, or over which no Man has acquir'd a Right, to be disclaim'd by a contrary motion of the Will. And this Change of the Will, in order to annul an Act is sometimes requir'd on one side only, as in making Laws, Wills and Testaments, &c.

and sometimes on both sides, as in Contracts, which, unless the Law interposes, can't be dissolv'd without the Consent of both Parties. From hence, by the way, it appears how Lycortas might have excus'd his Neglect, in not mentioning, when he went to renew the League between the Acheans, and the King of Egypt, which, of the many Leagues that are between them, he would have renew'd: for he might have said, that those which were never broken needed not to be renewed, and in the renewing of those which had been broken, he ought to be presum'd to mean the last (e).

For an Instance of two Laws, that seem to thwart one another; One enacts, That a Statue be erected in the Gymnasium in honour of the Person that kills the Tyrant; Another says, That no Woman's Statue shall be plac'd in the Gymnasium: Now a Woman kills the Tyrant (4). In this case, I should judge in favour of the Woman. For the Reason of the first Law was, that the Youth, which is train'd up to Valour in the Gymnasium, should by such sort of Honour be stir'd up to imitate brave Actions: The Reason of the latter is because the Vertues proper to Women are not generally the Object of Men's Imitations. But, in this case, since a Woman has out-done her Sex, she deserves the rather to have her Statue put up in the Gymnasium; for such Bravery in a Woman would be a greater Incitement to Emulation in the Men (f).

But sometimes the same Law seems to clash with it self. As for Instance; the Law says, That a Woman, who has been debauch'd, may choose either to marry the Man who has injur'd her, or to have him put to Death. Here is a Man that has debauch'd Two, whereof one chooses his Death, the other demands him in Marriage. In this Case, the Reason of the Law will decide the Business: For here the Law by permitting the Woman to choose the Death of the Man, did not suppose that many such would desire it; but the Good of the poor Woman was herein consulted, lest she should for ever continue without a Husband; for the Man, after the Heat of his Love was over, might cast her off, as not likely to deny others those Favours, which she had so unlawfully granted him: nor would it be easy to find one who would willingly marry her that had been deflowred by another. And therefore she that demanded the Man in Marriage ought to be prefer'd: For this answers best the Design of the Law which had the Convenience of the Woman, rather than the Death of the Man in its Eye; and after this Rate one of them, at least, will be provided with a Husband, whereas otherwise both will be forced to remain single. Besides, when there is as much to be said on the one side as on the other, the more favourable Sentence ought to prevail (a).

(1) Apud Quintil. Instit. Orat. l. 6. c. 3. (a) De Invent. l. 2. c. 40. (2) Vid. D. l. 33. t. 5. De Electione vel Optione legata, l. 2. princ. & f. 1. (3) Vid. L. 23. t. 3. De jure dotium, l. 10. f. 6. (b) Add. Auth. ad Herren. l. 1. c. 13. Quint. Instit. Orat. l. 7. c. 9. (c) Marsaler Legato, l. 2. c. 39. * ἰβάρνοσφεία. (d) Lib. 1. t. 4. l. 4. D. de const. Princip. V. Jur. Canon. cap. 3. de rescriptis. Liv. l. 9. c. 34. 'Where Two Laws thwart one another the new one abrogates the old. (e) Vid. Polyb. excerpt. leg. 41. (4) Quint. Instit. Orat. l. 7. c. 7. (f) There is another Example in Cicero de Invent. l. 2. c. 49. One Law says, 'Whosoever kills the Tyrant let him be rewarded as a Conquerour at the Olympick Games, and let him demand what he pleases of the Magistrate, and let the Magistrate grant his Request. Another Law runs thus, 'Upon the Death of the Tyrant, let his Five nearest Relations be put to Death. Alexander, who had exercised Tyranny over the Phereans in Thessaly, being kill'd by his Wife Thebe, She, for her Reward, demands her Son whom she had by the Tyrant. Some were of Opinion that by the Law the Son ought to be put to Death.

But sometimes the words clash in some particular Case, as in this Instance: There is a Law (1), That a Man, who has behaved himself honourably in the War, shall have whatever he demands; here are Two such, who both demand the same Virgin; since both cannot be satisfied, which must be preferr'd? I answer, he that made the Demand first. But if both demanded together they must draw Lots; for tho' the Law gives an unlimited Liberty of demanding, yet it must be supposed to be restrain'd to those things which can conveniently be granted. Another Example is propos'd by Philostratus (b) in the Life of Secundus. He that raises a Sedition, is to be hang'd; he that quells it, to be rewarded: the same Man both raises a Sedition and quells it, and demands his Reward. In which Case Secundus with good Reason argues thus, Provided you first suffer Punishment for raising the Sedition, you shall then, if you please, receive the Reward for quelling it. In such Cases as these, where Words are evidently Obscure, we are forc'd to have recourse to Conjectures.

These Conjectures are sometimes built upon such good Grounds, as that the genuine Sense forces it self upon us even against the receiv'd common Signification of the Word. To this Purpose is that Distinction of the Rhetoricians between the * Letter and the Design. As for Instance; The Law makes it Capital for any Foreigner to presume to mount the Walls (2): But in a Siege a Foreigner mounted the Wall and beat down the Enemy that was ready to scale it. Now the Letter is against the Foreigner, the Design for him; according to which, no doubt, Judgment ought to be given; for the Design of the Law was to prevent any Foreigner from mounting the Walls as a Spy; which Reason in the present Case ceases (c).

But we must take notice that sometimes a Repugnancy is suppos'd, when indeed there is none, viz. when Words are taken in a larger Signification than the Speaker design'd them. A notable Instance of this we meet with in Josephus (d): where King Zedechias would believe neither Jeremiah nor Ezechiel, because he thought they contradicted one another; for the one asserted that he should be carried away into Babylon: the other, that he should never see Babylon with his Eyes. The two Prophets were very consistent with each other; for he was carried away to Babylon, but his Eyes were first put out.

VII. Grotius has assign'd three common places, from whence we may trace out the Design, where the Words are obscure or ambiguous, viz. The Subject-matter, the Effects, and the Circumstances.

As for the former 'tis in the Mouth of every Civilian, That Words ought to be understood according to the Subject-matter of them (3); as if a Man promises to defend you in the Possession of the Goods you buy of him, his Promise is not suppos'd to extend to any extrajudicial Violence (e). I fancy this Rule may be applied to the Vow of Jephtha in Judges XI. 31. and to that of Agamemnon in Cicero (f), who having vow'd to offer up to Diana the most Beautiful Creature that should be born that Year, sacrific'd Iphigenia, who indeed was the most beautiful which that Year produc'd: But he who talks of Sacrificing is presum'd to mean a Subject fit to be made a Sacrifice of (g).

So if a Truce be made for Thirty Days, it must be understood of natural Days consisting of Twenty four Hours: not of artificial, or the space of the Sun above the Horizon. And therefore it was a frivolous Quibble of Cleomenes, who had made a Truce with the Argives for so many Days, but the third Night finding them sleeping and unprovided by reason of the Truce, set upon them, and slew some, and took others: and when he was upbraided for his Perjury denied that the Nights were comprehended in the Treaty (h). In vain also did Mycerinus King of Egypt endeavour to convict the Oracle of Falshood; for the Oracle foretold that he should live no more than six Years: but he order'd Candles to be lighted up, and revell'd by Night as well as Day, as if by thus using the Night as Day he could make Twelve Years out of Six (i).

Thus the Word Arms denotes sometimes the Weapons of War, sometimes the Warriors themselves, according as the Subject-matter of the Discourse directs. For if it be an Article that neither Party shall use Arms against a Third, 'tis plain Souldiers or an Army, is meant by it: but if upon the Surrendry of a Garrison it be stipulated that they deliver up their Arms, not the Souldiers, but the Weapons are suppos'd by it (k).

The Plataenses having promis'd to restore the Theban Captives, ought to have restor'd them alive, not dead (l). For the Treaty was concerning living Men and not the Carcasses of them (m).

(a) Though most of the Declaimers in Seneca, l. 1. contr. 5. seem to be of a contrary Opinion.

(1) See Seneca's 31st Controversy. (b) De vitis Sophistarum, l. 1. in fin. * ὅτι πῶς ἂν διαβοῖται.

(2) Pergrinus, si murum ascenderit, capite puniatur, Quintil. l. 7. c. 6. (c) Add. l. 39. t. 4. l. 15. D. de Publicanis, &c.

(d) Archcol. Jud. l. 10. c. 10. (3) Vid. lib. 45. t. 1. l. 10. D. (e) L. 19. t. 2. l. 15. f. 4. D. locati, & l. 39. t. 2. l. 43. D. d. omni insecti, &c. L. 4. t. 49. c. l. 17. de act. empt. & vend. (f) Off. 3. c. 25. (g) Add. Everhard. loc. legal. 40. which is about the Subject-matter.

(h) Plut. Apophth. Lacon. pag. 223. * Such another Trick the Thracians used against the Dartians, Strab. l. 9. p. 277. (i) Herodotus, Euterpe. (k) Add. Alber. Gent. d. l. c. 20. (l) Thucyd. l. 2. init.

(m) Hector erat tunc cum bello certaret, at idem tractus ab Aemonio non erat Hector equo, Ovid. de Trist. l. 3. El. 11. v. 27. 28. Sic Pericles cum quibusdam hostium ita Pactus legitur ut ipsi ferrum deponerent; postea eosdem pacti violati insimularunt; argutus eos non deposuisse fibulas ferreas quas in laciniis vestimentorum gerebant. Lex est, qui nocte cum ferro deprehensus fuerit, alligetur; cum anulo ferreo inventum magistratus alligavit, Quint. Inst. Orat. l. 7. c. 6.

It was a wretched Fetch of Labeo's, who having by the League a Title to half of Antiochus's Fleet, cut every Ship in Two, and so depriv'd the King of his whole Navy (a). Thus the (b) Campanians struck up a League with their Enemies, and one Article was that they should have half their Arms restor'd them: but they cut each Weapon in Two, and so deliver'd them half.

Xiphilinus (c) tells us of two Souldiers, who having got a Hoghead of Wine amongst their Plunder, and being commanded to divide it, cut it in Two with their Swords. Rhadamistus swore to Mithridates that he would not either by Sword or Poyson do him any Harm; but presently after, he smother'd him in his Bed (d).

VIII. Secondly, The Effects and the Consequence do very often point out the genuine meaning of the Words: For where Words, if they be taken literally, are like to bear none, or at least, a very absurd Signification; to avoid such an Inconvenience we must a little deviate from the receiv'd Sense of them (e) (1). And therefore it was absurd in the Athenians (f), having promis'd to relinquish the Territories of the Bœotians, to deny the Ground that they had encamp'd upon to be the Bœotians. With the same Cavil did Alexander elude the Conditions that Darius propos'd to him. Darius had offer'd him all the Land that lay between the Euphrates and the Hellespont; to which Alexander reply'd, He offers very liberally all on that side the Euphrates, Where is it then that he speaks to me? I am already beyond the Euphrates: And therefore the whole of the Dowry he offers is less than what I am already Master of: drive me hence, that I may be assur'd that what you offer is your own (g). As if it was the same thing to possess a Place by Force of Arms, and to possess it peaceably, and with the Concession of the former Master.

Lewis XII. agreed with the Pope's Legat, that the Bishopricks, void by the Death of the Bishops in France, should be at the King's Disposal. But a French Bishop happening to die at Rome, the Pope immediately nominated a Successor, and the King as soon another; which occasioned great Differences. In this Case, were I Judge, I should not scruple to pronounce in favour of the King; for to render an Office vacant, 'tis no matter in what Place the Incumbent dies: and if such a Cavil had been admitted, the King's Right might have been invaded several ways (h).

At Bologna it was enacted, that Whosoever

drew Blood in the Streets, should be severely punish'd (i). Upon which Law a Barber was indicted for opening a Vein in the Street, and it had like to have gone hard with him, because it was added in the Statute, that the Words should be taken precisely, without any Interpretation. In Quintilian we have this Case; A poor Man and a rich Man were Friends: The rich Man in his Will made another Friend his Heir, but bequeath'd to the poor Man as much as he, in his Will, had bequeath'd to him. The poor Man's Will is produc'd; by which it appears that he had made the rich Man Heir of all; and therefore he demands the whole Inheritance. He that was the written Heir was for giving only so much as the poor Man was worth (k). And indeed this is to be said for the written Heir, that if he did not obtain the Cause, his being made Heir would have had no Effect. As for the Interpretation of the Laws of the Land, that of Cicero (l) must every where take place. All Laws, says he, ought to be referr'd to the Benefit of the Commonwealth, and ought to be interpreted according to the publick Advantage, not according to the Letter; for no one would have the Laws regard'd for the Sake of the Laws themselves, but for the Sake of the Common-wealth.

IX. Besides, Thirdly, It gives great light to the Interpretation of obscure Passages to compare them with others that have some Affinity with them; as to consider, what the same Author says in another Place, where he handles the same matter; or to compare them with what goes before and follows in the Context. For in a doubtful Point the Author must be suppos'd to be consonant to himself: And therefore, if in one Place he has express'd his Mind clearly, we ought to presume that he is still of the same Mind in another Place, unless it expressly appears, that he has chang'd it (m). Thus if two Men should bargain for Wheat without mentioning the Quantity, it would be an imperfect Bargain (n): But if by their former Dealings it appear'd, that such a sort and such a quantity was thought of and design'd, it is as good, as if it had been actually express'd (o). This may be Illustrated from Homer (p) in the Duel between Menelaus and Paris. They had agreed that the Conqueror should enjoy Helen; Paris being worsted provided for himself by flight, and Agamemnon proclaim'd Menelaus Conqueror, and that therefore Helen, according to Articles, ought to be his. And the Poet makes Jupiter of the same Opinion, who declares himself (q),

(a) Val. Max. l. 7. c. 3. tho' Livy l. 38. c. 38. says nothing of the cutting of the Ships. (b) Polyœn. l. 6. c. 15.

(c) Epit. Dion. in Caracalla, ad ann. 217. (d) Tac. Ann. XII. 47. (e) There is an Example of this in the League whereby Lewis XII. of France, took the City Bologna, and his petty Prince Bentivoglio, into his Protection;

which he afterwards cavilled at, in a manner very unbecoming a King. Guicciard. Hist. l. 5. p. m. 134. & p. m. 146.

(1) Cicero. dicit nullam esse Legem quæ aliquam rem inutilem, aut iniquam fieri velit, De Invent. L. 2. c. 47.

(f) Thucyd. l. 4. c. 98. (g) Q. Curtius, l. 4. c. 11. (h) V. Marsel. Legat. l. 1. c. 38. (i) Everhard loc. legal. 8.

ab absurdo. (k) Declam. 332. (l) De Invent. L. 2. c. 38. Which was the chief Reason why the Falcidian Law and Pegafian Decree assigned the Heir a Dodrans over and above; for so the Heir and Legatee were both provided for.

(2) In all the Editions of the Original, our Author has it dodrantem; 3 parts instead of one in 4, quartam partem.

See Mr. Barrbeyrac's 5th Note upon this Section. (m) The meaning of the Author is to be gathered from his other Writings, from his Practice, his Sayings, his Design, his Life. Cic. de Invent. l. 2. c. 40. (n) D. L. 45.

t. 1. De verb. oblig. l. 115. princip. (o) De verb. oblig. L. 94. D. eod. Ziegl. ad Grot. d. l. f. 7. (p) Iliad. r. & Δ.

(q) Iliad. Δ. v. 13.

ἄλλ' ἦτοι νίκη μὲν ἀρηϊφίλῳ Μενελάῳ.

Brave Menelaus gains the Victory.

Besides, he that imposes the Conditions must be the best Interpreter of them; for he on whom they are imposed, has no Power of adding to them. But the Conditions (as Hector express them) had no Relation to Slaughter or Death, but to Victory only; for Helen was to be adjudged to him that prov'd the better Man, but the Conqueror, and not he that slays the other is such; for a brave Man may fall by the Hands of a Coward. On the other side, it might be argued, that in Decrees, Laws, Leagues, and Pacts, a latter Condition takes place of a former; and that the last Condition, that Agamemnon had added, was καταπέφνη, expressing the Death of the Conquer'd (1), and so Priamus seems to have understood in saying,

*Jove and the Gods eternal only know
Which of the Two is doom'd to Shades below (2).*

Besides, the former Condition is included in the latter, for he that kills conquers, but not vice versa. And therefore the Condition which Hector propos'd, Agamemnon did not annul, but explain'd (3): did not change, but added to it that which was of the greatest Moment, that the Victory should consist in the Death of the Adversary; for that is undoubtedly Victory, whereas the other may bear a Dispute. As therefore where Laws are really repugnant, the Judges embrace that which is evidently clear in Preference to that which is obscure: So we look upon that Pact to be better and more valid, which is decisive of the Controversy, and liable to no Exception (a).

X. But that which helps us most in the Discovery of the true meaning of the Law, is, the Reason of it, or the Cause which moved the Legislator to enact it. This ought not to be confounded with the Mind of the Law; for that is nothing but the genuine Meaning of it, for the finding out of which, we call in the Reason of it to our Assistance. And this is of greatest force when it evidently appears that some one Reason was the only Motive that the Parties went upon, which is no less frequent in Laws than in Pacts. And here that common Saying takes place, that The Reason ceasing, the Law it self ceases: But if several Reasons concur together, and only one ceases, the others do not immediately expire, or become less able to support the Efficacy of the Law. Nay sometimes the general Reason of the Thing seems to draw one way, and the Absolute Will of the Legislator another, and, in such a Case, the Will of the Legislator must be deem'd by the Subjects a Reason, which if it be but clearly signified, altho' not altogether so congruous to the Laws of Prudence, yet suffices to create an Obligation. From these premises may be rightly infer'd, that a Present made in Prospect of Marriage (4) may be revoked and demanded back, if the Marriage does not succeed; especially if it sticks on that side to whom the Present was made. Tho' generally in such Presents as pass among the Living, the Reason of them has not the force of a Condition (unless it be expressly mention'd) so as to make the Fact null, where that does not appear. And therefore the Olynthii were not unjust in refusing to restore the Land which Amyntas King of Macedon had given them, when, being defeated by the Illyrians, he had lost all Hopes of defending his Kingdom (b).

Yet in some Cases, the Law it self may sustain the Place of a Condition (c). And therefore Cicero (d) to the interdict which (5), amongst others, had these Words in it, From whence you or your Family, or your Agent, &c. rightly argues: altho' one Servant be not a Family, yet if that one Servant dispossesses me, 'tis plain I ought to be restor'd from the Reason of the Edict (6). Nor is there any Difference whether my Agent, or any Body else in my Name, dispossesses another: He adds, the Reason is the same in this Case, whether your Agent (as the Word signifies one that manageth all your Concerns in your Absence with full Power, as your Attorney or Substitute) or your Neighbour, or Client, or Freed-man, or any other disturb me upon your Account and Intreaty (e).

Another Instance of a Case which may be decided from the Reason of the Law (f); The Law is, that those, who in a Storm, forsake the Ship, shall lose all; and the Ship and the Lading shall be theirs that stay in it. But in a very dismal Tempest all forsake the Ship, except one sick Man who is not able to get out and escape: the Ship by chance comes safe to Port; the sick Man seizes it as his: the Owner puts in his Plea against him. Now the Reason of the Law was, that those who had expos'd their Lives to save the Ship, should have some Encouragement; but this the sick Man can't pretend, who neither stay'd in the Ship upon that account, neither contributed any Thing to the saving of it.

XI. Besides, the same Word admits of sometimes a more loose, sometimes a more strict Interpretation, which may happen upon several accounts. Sometimes the Name of the Genus is peculiarly apply'd to one of the Species; as in the Words Adoption (7) and Cognition (8). In the Names of Animals, where the Word is not of the Common Gender, the Masculine includes the Feminine, and vice versa. Sometimes Art gives a Term a larger Signification than common

(1) Homer. Il. 3. v. 281. (2) Homer. Il. 3. v. 309. (3) Ibid. v. 91, 92. (a) Plut. Symp. l. 9. q. 13. p. 743. A.
 (4) See above in B. 4. c. 9. f. 4. towards the End. (b) V. Diod. Sic. l. 15. c. 9 (c) Vid. Cod. L. 8. Tit. 56. de revoc. donat. (d) Orat. pro A. Cæcina. 19. (5) V. Instit. L. 4. t. 15. & D. L. 43. t. 16. De vi & de vi armata l. 1. princip. (6) V. Cicero. ubi supr. c. 19. & 20. (e) Add. Lib. 8. t. 3. l. 12, 13. & L. 27. de legibus. (f) Which is put by the Aut. ad Herren. l. 1. c. 9. (7) V. Instit. L. 1. t. 11. (8) V. L. 1. t. 15. Instit. De legitima agnatorum inst. l. 1.

Use: As Death in the Roman Law is extended even to Banishment, which in popular Use signifies only the Separation of the Soul from the Body. Hither may be referr'd the Ambiguity in the Words, Mine, Thine, Yours, &c. which Martial (a) plays with;

Carmina Paulus emit, recitat sua Carmina Paulus Nam quod emis, possis dicere jure tuum.

You Verses buy, your Verses you recite,
For what you buy, that justly is your Right.

XII. Moreover, in Promises and Pacts, as also in Privileges, some things are Favourable, some Odious, and others of a middle or mixt Nature.

Those are Favourable which carry an Equality along with them, or which equally oblige each Party; and which tend to promote the common Advantage, and the greater and the more extensive the Advantage is, the better Title have they to Favour. Those also are favourable which make for the Preservation of Societies, and without which some Act would be to no End or Purpose. Besides, to avoid an Inconvenience is more favourable than to gain a Convenience (b); and greater Favour is allow'd to that which makes for Peace, than that which makes for War; and a defensive War is still more favourable than an offensive.

On the other side, those are Odious, which lay the Burthen on one Party only, or on one more than the other; that also which carries a Punishment along with it; or makes any Act of no Effect; or changes any Thing in former Constitutions; and such as tends to the Destruction of Friendship and Society.

Those that are of a mixt Nature (as suppose former Constitutions are changed, yet for the Sake of Peace) according to the Greatness of the Good, or the Change, are sometimes Odious, sometimes Favourable; yet, ceteris paribus. Favour ought to take place (i).

XIII. Upon these Distinctions Grotius builds the following Rules.

1. In Cases that are not Odious, Words are to be understood according to the full Propriety of popular Use; and if in popular Use there be several Significations of the same Word, the largest is to be taken. Thus sometimes the Masculine is to be taken for the Common Gender; as if leave be given to kill any Game in such a Forest, except Bucks, under that Name Does also ought to be comprehended (2). In such Cases too an indefinite Word is to be taken universally; as if it be stipulated in a Treaty, that the Captives shall be return'd on both sides, it must be understood of all and every one of them. So Cicero (c) argues in the aforefaid Interdict, that the Words, From whence a Man has been ejected, ought to be extended even to him who is hindered from coming to his own (d). For this Sense is not repugnant to the Nature of the Words; and in Favour a Man ought to be put in Possession of his own; for to dispossess is to hinder one from continuing in Possession (e), but a Man continues in Possession altho' he sometimes goes out upon necessary Occasions. And therefore it is the same thing whether a Man actually turns me out of my House, or, while I am out upon necessary Business, hinders me from coming in (f) (3). From the force of this Rule it is that, in a doubtful Case, if it be a Matter of Favour, the Year begun is look'd upon as compleat, where another's Right is not injured by it (g). And against this did Caligula (h) offend in denying those, whose Ancestors had obtain'd the Freedom of Rome for themselves and their Posterity, a Title to it, unless they were their Sons, affirming that Posterity ought not to be understood beyond that Degree (i). Yet I am afraid Dido made use of too favourable an Interpretation, who when she had purchased so much Ground, as she could cover with an Ox's Hide, cut the Hide into thin Pieces and so seiz'd upon more Ground than she had really bargain'd for (k). By the same Trick did Ivorus buy as much Land as he could encompass with the Hide of a Horse, which he afterwards cut into several small Thongs, and encompass'd Land enough to build a City upon (l).

2. In a Matter of Favour, if he that speaks be learned in the Law, or speaks by the Advice of those that are, his Words are to be taken in the most comprehensive Signification; so as not only to import as much as they do in common Use, but to include that Signification also which is used amongst the Lawyers, or which the Civil Law has impos'd upon them.

3. On the other hand; Words shall be taken in a stricter Sense than the Propriety requires, if otherwise Injustice or an Absurdity would follow.

4. Altho' it be not absolutely necessary for the avoiding Injustice to take the Words in a stricter Sense than their Propriety demands, yet if there be a manifest Advantage in such a Restriction, we ought to step at the narrowest Limits of their proper Signification, unless Circumstances persuade otherwise.

5. In an Odious Matter a figurative Speech may be admitted to avoid a Grievance; thus in a Donation, or when a Man recedes from his Right, Words, altho' deliver'd at large, are usually confin'd to those things only, which were suppos'd to be then thought of. And therefore Cicero (m) argues right, that tho' a Man bequeaths to his Wife all the Money he has, yet his Debts are not therefore bequeath'd unto her; for there is a great deal of Difference between ready Money, and such as is due upon Bonds. Thus Aurelian, when he set out on his Eastern Expedition, promis'd the People Crowns of two Pound Weight, if he return'd Conqueror: And when the People expected Crowns of Gold, which Aurelian (1) was neither able nor willing to bestow, he gave them only Crowns of Bread (a). Nay though a Man expresses himself univ'ersally, if afterwards a particular Enumeration follows, the Law won't allow any thing to be made over, but what was particularly express'd. And when one Nation has stipulated to send another Auxiliary Forces, it is suppos'd that they are to be sent at the Expence of him to whom they are promis'd, unless it was expressly otherwise agreed between them. And thus a League made for the Defence of a Dominion, when the Lord is in Possession of it, does not extend to the Recovery of it when he is ejected (b). Sometimes the Odium of the Person justifies a strict and almost quibbling Interpretation: Thus the Lady that betray'd the Capitol, and had bargain'd for her Pains to have what the Sabines carried upon their left Arms, meaning their Bracelets, was buried under their Shields (c).

(a) L. 2. Ep. 20. Id. l. 6. Ep. 12. Jurat capillos esse, quos emit, suos Fabulla; nunquid, Paule, pejerat? (b) Quint. Inst. Orat. l. 7. c. 4. p. 539. Ed. Lugd. Bat. (1) See Mr. Barbeyrac's 1st Note upon this Section. (2) See Mr. Barbeyrac's 1st and 2d Notes upon this Section. (c) Orat. pro Cæcina, &c. (d) Add. L. 43. t. 16. l. 3. f. 8. D. de vi & vi armata. (e) Add. l. 3. f. 7. D. h. t. (f) Add. L. 19. t. 2. l. 29. D. locati, &c. (3) V. D. ubi supra. Leg. l. f. 24. (g) V. Buffier's Hist. Franc. l. 19. p. 39. (h) Suet. c. 38. (i) Add. L. 1. t. 6. l. 4. D. de jure immunitatis. (k) Just. l. 18. c. 5. Virg. Æn. l. 1. v. 371. & Cerda ad h. l. (l) Apud Saxonem Gramin. l. 9. & Polyd. Virg. Hist. Angl. l. 5. (m) In Topicis, c. 3.

XIV. Grotius applies these Rules in a few Examples: As thus, It is demanded, if a Reward be propos'd for him that first gets to the Goal, and two come in together, whether it be due to both or to neither? Indeed the first, in this Case, may signify either him who out-runs all the rest, or him whom none out-runs: And therefore if the Reward was only a Wager between the Parties, and both come to the Goal together, they must draw Stakes. And the same holds, if two Spectators, as is usual, had laid a Wager on this or that Man's Head. But if the Reward was propos'd by a third Person to encourage their Industry, then those who come in together ought to divide it, if it be capable of Division; or else to enjoy it both together; or, if that cannot be, to draw Lots for it, or to run again; for 'tis hard that both should be deprived of the Reward, because neither was worse than the other: Besides, the Rewards of Vertue ought not to be confined to so strict an Interpretation; And therefore it would be generous in the Patron to give the whole Reward to each that perform equally (d). But what Augustus gave the Robber Coracotta, (who having heard that such a Sum of Money was laid upon his Head, surrender'd himself,) proceeded rather from the Greatness of the Emperor's Soul, than that it was due from him (e).

XV. In the Treaty which put an End to the second Punick War, there was a Clause, That the Carthaginians should not wage War, either in Africa, or out of Africa, without leave of the Roman People (f). Ought this to be understood of an offensive War only, or of a defensive also? Certainly only of an offensive War; for otherwise that Clause would be Odious, as inconsistent with the very Being of the State of Carthage. Besides, 'tis hard to retrench One's natural Liberty, so far as not to permit him to defend himself against an Injury (g). Nor was it the Design of the Romans by this Clause to expose the Carthaginians to the Insults of their Neighbours, or to render them entirely dependent upon their Arms for Protection, but only so to tie them up, as that they should not enlarge their Territories, or increase their Strength by War. Indeed when the Romans made such a League with Antiochus, they inserted this express Clause (h); That if any Nation, against whom Antiochus by these Articles is debarr'd from waging War, should set upon him first, he should then have liberty of Warring against them (i).

XVI. The Romans promis'd the Carthaginians, that Carthage should be a free City: and a little after demanded of them that they would Demolish it, and build another at a greater Distance from the Sea; pretending that the Spot of Ground, upon which the City stood, was not Carthage (k). Here tho' the Freedom, which the Romans promis'd, can't be understood of a full entire Liberty, that having already suffer'd no small Diminution; yet, at least, so much Liberty ought to be understood, as that they should not be oblig'd, at another's Command, to destroy their native Country, and betake themselves elsewhere. Indeed Liberty, or a Privilege of being govern'd by one's own Law, is the Attribute of a People, not of a City, as it consists of Walls and Houses (l); yet since it was said that Carthage should be free (not the Carthaginians, by which way of speaking the Romans might have colour'd over their Cheat) the natural meaning of the Words intimate, that the People should enjoy their Liberty in the City Carthage that then was, and also that the Buildings themselves should be secure. Polybius (m) relates, that the Senate had promis'd, that They should have their Liberty, their Laws, all their Lands, the full Possession of all their Goods both publick and private; and that the Carthaginians presently suspected why there was no mention made of the City. But indeed 'tis evident, that the Romans here were guilty of more than Punick Perfidiousness.

XVII. There are other Conjectures founded

(1) See above in B. 3. c. 5. f. 10. and Mr. Barbeyrac's 1st Note upon it. (a) Which were called Siligineæ. Panis Siligineus White Bread. V. Fl. Vopiscum in Aurel. c. 35. (b) V. Guicciard. Hist. l. 15. p. m. 433. b. (c) Tarpeia. V. Plut. Romulo, & Liv. l. 1. c. 11. (d) V. Liv. l. 26. c. 48. (e) Dio. Cass. l. 56. (f) Liv. l. 30. c. 37. Polyb. l. 15. c. 18. 'The like Article we find in the Peace which Flaminius gave to King Philip, Liv. l. 33. c. 30. (g) Add Livy, l. 42. c. 41. (h) Add Livy, l. 42. c. 23. (i) Polyb. Exc. Legat. 35. c. 4. Livy, l. 38. c. 38. has it thus; If any of the Allies of the Roman People set upon Antiochus, let him have Liberty to repel Force by Force: provided he takes no City either by the Right of War, or by Treaty. (k) V. Appian. de Bello Lybico. (l) As Nicias says in Thucyd. l. 1. 7. c. 14. 'Men make up the State, and not Walls and Ships without Men in them.' Add Just. l. 2. c. 12. n. 14. (m) Exc. Legat. 35.

upon something else than the Signification of the Words in which the Thing is express, which make it necessary sometimes to enlarge, sometimes to restrain the Meaning. Yet it is observable, that we have oftner Reason to restrain than to enlarge it. For the want of any one Cause is enough to hinder the Effect of a Thing, whereas all must necessarily concur to produce it: Thus, in such Acts as create an Obligation, the Meaning must be restrained, if it appears that any one of the Causes be absent, whereas to enlarge it, there must be a Concurrency of them all.

And this Enlargement is not so easily admitted here, as when I just now said, that in a Matter of Favour, the words may bear another, tho' less receiv'd Signification than usual: For there (since the only Use of words is to express ones Mind) such a Sense of the Words, not being entirely dissonant to common Use, might probably have been in the Mind of the Speaker. But, the Case before us supposes us to make use of Conjectures, to prove that the Mind of the Speaker is such as his words won't admit of, and therefore we ought to be very certain of it.

Nor can a Law extend to a Case, which proceeds upon a Reason only like that which the Law is founded upon, for the reason ought to be exactly the same. Nay even that is not always enough, for sometimes the bare Will of the Legislator determines it self at Pleasure, even against or without Reason, and yet is sufficient to produce an Obligation.

To justify then such an Enlargement, we ought to be sure that the Reason, under which the Case in Debate comes, was the only Cause and Motive that induc'd the Legislator to enact the Law; and that this Reason has been consider'd by him so generally, as that he would have apply'd it to the present Case, had he foreseen it, because otherwise the Law would have been useless or unjust.

Hither may be referr'd what the Rhetoricians say about Reasoning, when a Thing, for which there is no Provision made by any particular Law (1), is inferr'd, by a Parity of Reason, from a like Case which is provided for; or, as (a) Quintilian has it, When a Thing not written is gather'd from a Thing written: which he illustrates by these Examples: To take a Plow in Pawn is not lawful, he takes the Plowshare: the Exportation of Wool is prohibited, he exports Sheep. He that slays his Father must be sew'd up in a Leathern Bag, he has slain his Mother. A Man ought not to be drag'd out of his House to Justice, he drags him out of his Tent (b).

Hither too may be referr'd the Case defended by Lucian (c); the Law is, Whosoever kills the Tyrant shall be rewarded: A certain Man climbs into the Citadel to kill the Tyrant, but missing him kills his Son, and leaves the Sword in the Body: The Tyrant coming in and finding his Son slain, out of Grief falls upon the same Sword and dies: He that slew the Tyrant's Son demands the Reward, as the Slayer of the Tyrant. Erasmus (2) takes the other side, yet certainly the Reason of the Law is for having the Reward given, not only to him who slays the Tyrant with his own Hand, but to him also who is the immediate Occasion of it (d). Since there is no doubt but the Legislator would have decreed the Reward to him also, had such a Thing come into his Mind.

The Law says, that whosoever kills his Wife shall be put to Death; but a certain Man, being willing to get rid of his Wife, and at the same time to escape the Law, kept his Mule Three Days without Water, and the Fourth Day pretending to ride out for his Diversion, put his Wife upon the Back of the Mule; who as soon as he came to the River, ran eagerly into it, and threw the Woman, who perish'd in the Waters (e).

Thus the Brethren of Joseph vainly thought, that they should be guilty of a less Crime in throwing him into the Pit, where he must die of Hunger, than if they had actually cut his Throat (f).

It was stipulated between two Neighbouring Nations, when there was no other sort of Fortifications, that such a Place should not be Walled in; which therefore ought not to be enclos'd with so much as a Pile of Earth, if it evidently appear'd, that the Reason why Walls were prohibited, was to render it incapable of holding out against Force.

A Man leaves his Estate to Titius after the Death of the Child his Wife was then big with: He thought his Wife had been with Child, but it proves otherwise: And therefore Titius has a fair Title to the Estate; for 'tis evident, that the reason why the Deceas'd did not absolutely make Titius Heir was, because he thought he might have a Child; and therefore had he known that no Child would have been born, he would have made him such without any Condition (g).

It would have been too hard, says Lysias (h), for a Lawgiver to have crowded into his Law all the words of the same Signification, and there-

(1) V. D. L. 1. t. 3. De legib. 1. 12, 13, & 27. (a) Inst. Orat. 1. 7. c. 8. (b) V. D. 1. 9. t. 2. ad Leg. Aquil. 1. 7. f. 7. (c) In Declam. quæ inscribitur Tyrannicida, Tom. 1. p. 693, &c. Edit. Amst. (2) In the Answer which he has made to Lucian's Declamation, Tom. 1. p. 914, &c. (d) Is there any difference whether you kill him your self, or afford the Cause of his Death? ibid. (e) As Seneca expresses it, Herc. Oetæo, v. 859, 860. 'Whatsoever kills, is Weapon sufficient.' (f) Joseph. Archaeol. Jud. 1. 2. c. 3. Gen. XXXVIII. 21, 22. (g) Add. L. 5. t. 2. l. 28. D. de iust. test. 'In a Law many Things are excepted, though not express; the Letter is Narrow, but the Meaning Extensive; but some Things are so plain as to need no Exceptions, M. Senec. 1. 4. contr. 27. What? was this provided for by the Letter? by no Means? Upon what therefore do we proceed? the Design. Which could it be apprehended without Speaking, there would be no need of words, but because it cannot, Words were found out not to hinder, but to declare the Design, Cic. pro Cæcili. c. 18. Every thing is not express in Writing, but some are evidently supposed to be tacitly excepted, Id. de Invent. 1. 2. c. 42. Lysias, Orat. 10. c. 2. contr. Theomnest. (h) Orat. 1. contr. Theomnest.

fore what he has exprest of one, he is suppos'd to have understood of all the Rest. Thus, the Law in Exod. XXI. 33. is rightly extended to every tame Animal, and the Word Pit to every Ditch (a) XVIII. Besides, It is of great Use to enlarge the Meaning so as to leave no room for any sort of Cavils, and so to prevent the Quirks, that crafty designing Men have found out to evade the Law (b). Of these Cheats the Roman Lawyers make four sorts, One by a Comutation of Things (c), Another by a Comutation of Persons (d); a Third by Comutation of the Contract (e); the Last in the way of Contracting (f).

Licinius Stolo (g) having made a Law that no one should possess above 500 Acres, he himself, nevertheless, purchased a Thousand, and to palliate his Crime, made over half to his Son: For which Reason he was accus'd by Popilius Læna, and was the first that fell by his own Law: teaching us that no Man ought to prescribe to others but what himself is willing to perform. By the Voconian Law, no Man can bequeath above half his Goods to a Woman; and therefore when a certain Man had made Two Women joint Heirs, his Relations impleaded the Will (h).

The Rhodians had a Right to Tribute from the Isle of Pharos, but when the Receivers came to demand it, the Queen of the place detain'd them under some Pretence of Ceremony, 'till she had cast Moles into the Sea and join'd Pharos to the Continent; and then she drove them away, as having Commission to levy Taxes upon Islands, but not upon the Continent (i).

The Athenians, when a certain Harlot, by name Læna, i. e. Lioness, had slain the Tyrant; for fear of prophaning the Temple with the Statue of a Harlot, they erected the Effigies of the Animal whose name she bare (k).

The Rhodians because it was unlawful to pull down a Trophy, did therefore hide the Trophy, that Artemisia had erected to their Disgrace, by building a House over it (l).

When the Spartans demanded to have the Athenians Decree, which hindred the Megarenses from trading with them, abolish'd: and Pericles objected that the Law forbad any Decree of the People to be pull'd down; one of the Commissioners reply'd, We do not desire you to pull it down but to turn it out of Sight, and that none of your Laws forbid (m).

The King of Portugal, for certain Reasons, forbid the Clergy the Use of Mules, but they pleaded their Privileges; upon which the King commanded all the Smiths, upon pain of Death, not to shoe any Mule; and so the Clergy quitted them of their own accord (n).

Tiberius, because it was esteem'd unlawful to strangle Virgins, order'd them first to be defil'd by the Executioner, and then to be strangled (o). The Corinthians were forbidden by the Law to give away their Ships, and therefore they sold them to the Athenians for Five Drachms a Piece (p).

By a Decree of the Senate, no Slave could be Evidence against his Master, and therefore Tiberius, a crafty Evader of the Law, gave each of the Slaves their Liberty, that he might make use of them against Libo, without breaking the Decree of the Senate (q).

Tiridates refus'd to lay aside his Sword at Nero's Command, but put a Lock upon his Scabbard (r).

Robert Carncroffe a wealthy Scotchman, bought his Preferment of the King, who then wanted Money; and yet by a Trick eluded the Law against Simony; for he laid a great Wager with the King, that his Majesty would not give him such a Preferment (s).

In the Reign of Philip II. of France, the Bishop of Beauvais appear'd in the Field against Otho IV. but to avoid shedding Blood, he fought with a Club, not a Sword: But did such a Quibble excuse the Prelate, or rather aggravate his Guilt (t).

XIX. But sometimes the Meaning of the Words are to be restrained, and altho' General Terms be made use of, yet they ought to be taken with some Exception or Limitation (r);

(a) 'It was impossible for those that make Laws, to provide particularly against all sorts of Crimes: For, after all their Care, Knavery would find out Evasions; and the Law would be so voluminous and confus'd, that instead of Uncertainty we should lie in entire Ignorance. They therefore took care to have general Heads, and to have regard to Equity. And therefore we frequently find things, which are not exprest in the Letter of the Law, but yet come under the Force of it, Quint. Decl. 331. Add. Lib. Decl. 31. (b) As also to answer any Cavils whatsoever, V. l. 29. l. 30. D. de leg. ubi supr. & D. L. 10. t. 4. l. 19. ad exhibend. & Lib. 35. t. 1. l. 76. D. de condit. & demonstrat. & l. 48. t. 6. l. 33. f. 1. D. ad L. Jul. de adulr. (c) Lib. 14. t. 6. l. 3. f. 3. & l. 7. f. 3. D. de Scro Macedon. (d) Lib. 24. t. 1. l. 5. D. de donat. inter vir. & ux. Add. Liv. l. 35. c. 7. (e) L. 5. f. 5. D. cod. (f) L. 8. f. 14. D. ad Scrum Vellei. (g) Val. Max. l. 8. c. 6. f. 3. Idem refert Plin. L. 18. c. 3. (h) Quint. Decl. 264. Fraudes circa eludendam legem Papiam Poppæam memorat Suet. August. c. 34. & Tib. c. 35. in fin. & Tac. Ann. XV. 19. 'The Trick that the Romans used to let fall the private Sacrifices, which otherwise would pass over to the Heir, as an Incumbrance, with the Estate, Salmasius gives an Account of ad Plauti Bacchi, Act. 4. Sc. 9. voce coemptioalem senem. (i) Amm. Marcellinus, l. 22. c. 16. (k) Lastan. de falsa rel. c. 20. (l) Vitruv. de Architect. l. 2. c. 8. (m) Plut. Pericle. (n) 'Sulpitius who had been against the Law to restore the Banish'd Citizens, having afterwards changed his Mind was for it, but would not own that it was the same Law he was before against; for he was not for the Return of the Banish'd, but of Thaëses who were forced from their Country: As if the Controversy had been what Name they ought to have been call'd by, or as if all, who were forbidden the Use of Fire and Water, did not come under the Denomination of Banish'd, Auctor ad Herenn. l. 2. c. 28. (o) Vid. Tac. Ann. V. c. 9. & Suet. Tiberio, c. 61. (p) Herod. Erato, p. 230. Ed. H. Steph. Add. L. 44. t. 7. l. 54. D. de obligat. & action. (q) Tacitus Ann. II. cap. 30. Though Dio ascribes the Trick to Augustus, lib. 55. Critias used a more impudent Cavil against Thebanes. Xen. Gr. rer. l. 2. p. 275. Edit. H. Steph. 'It was a poor Trick to avoid the Name of Aleatōres, which was branded by the Laws, to call themselves Tesserarii; between which there is much the same Difference as between a Thief and a Robber; as Amm. Marcell. says, l. 28. c. 9. (r) Xiphilin. Epit. Dion. (s) Buchan. rer. Scot. l. 14. (t) Buffier's Hist. Franc. l. 8. (r) Cicer. de Inventione, l. 2. c. 47.

either, 1st, Because of some Original Defect in the Will of the Speaker; or, 2<sup>dly</sup>, Because of some Accident which happens inconsistent with his Design.

I. An Original Defect is in the Will; First, When an Absurdity proceeds from it: For no Man in his Wits can be supposed to Will Absurdities: And I am mistaken, if upon this Principle, that noted Dispute between Protagoras and Euathles (a) may not be decided; for altho' they agreed in general Terms, that the Master should have no Right to his Reward 'till the Scholar had gain'd a Cause: Yet when the Master had sued for his Reward, and the Judges had given Sentence in favour of him, the Scholar ought, by no means, to have defended himself by that Exception: For, when they enter'd into Contract, that was not thought of: And it is absurd for any one to make such a Pact as should cut him off from any Possibility of obtaining what might be Due to him by it. Something a Kin to this is that which they tell of Aristides, who had promis'd a Penny to him that should tell him the Truth: To whom, says a Sophist, You will not give me the Penny. What must Aristides do in this Case? If he gives it, he gives it to one that did not tell the Truth; but if he does not give it, he refuses it to one that did. In such Cases as these, that Rule of the Civilians ought to be apply'd; that In a general Discourse the Person of the Speaker is always excepted. And therefore Epimenides, the Cretan, cannot be prov'd a Liar from his own Saying, Κρητες ἀει ψεύσαι, the Cretans are always Liars (1): Nor can I approve of that of Lucretius (b).

*Denique, nil sciri si quis putat, id quoq; nescit
An sciri possit, cum se nil scire fatetur.*

He that says nothing can be known, o'rethrows His own Opinion, for he nothing knows, So knows not that. — Mr. Creech.

For he that says nothing can be known, professes himself to know this one Thing, That nothing can be known (c). In the Schools we have this Example of an Inconsistency (d), A Man dream'd that there was no Credit to be given to Dreams. Now whatever Genius had infus'd this Dream into him design'd so much Credit should be given to this, as that none should be given to any other (e).

Besides, Secondly, The Will is thought to be Originally defective, When the Reason ceases, which alone Fully and Efficaciously moved the Will; for if the Reason of the Law be added, or if we be sufficiently satisfy'd of it, the thing is no longer consider'd Simply, but as it comes under the Reason. An Example of this we have in the Law (f) that forbids Patrons to lay an Oath upon their Bond-men not to marry, or to breed up Children; where it is added, that Altho' in the Law no Person is excepted, yet it is to be understood of those only who are capable of having Children; and therefore if a Man should lay such an Obligation upon an Eunuch, he would not come under the Penalty of the Law. For the Reason of the Law was, lest the Patron, out of Covetousness (2), should put a Stop to Propagation; which Reason, in the case of an Eunuch, ceases.

But, Thirdly, The Will is originally Defective, If there be a Defect in the Matter: for the Matter which he is about, is always suppos'd to be in the Mind of the Speaker, although his words seem to be of a larger Extent. Thus, if an Estate be given to a Man and his Heirs Male, his Grandsons by his Daughter are not supposed to be meant by it; for the Nature of such a Settlement interposes, which plainly excludes Women, and the Descendants of them.

XX. Yet as to the second Head Grotius remarks (3), That under the Reason may be comprehended some things which do not actually exist, but are consider'd in a Moral Possibility only; and when this happens no Restriction must be admitted.

The Meaning is, that a Covenant where the Parties had a certain Reason in view, as suppose the avoiding Danger, or an Inconvenience, does not only hold good in those Cases where such Inconveniences would have follow'd, but in those also where they may probably be suspected: for Instance, should two Nations enter into a Treaty that no Army or Fleet should pass within such Limits, altho' the Reason of this Article be that one should not actually do the other any Harm, yet it won't be lawful to send an Army or a Fleet thither, although there be no Design of Injuring the other. And thus, if the Law forbids that any should walk the Streets with Torches; tho' the Reason of the Law be to prevent any Mischief from them, yet it would be no Excuse for a Man to say that he would use them so carefully as to do no Harm with them.

'Tis also a Question whether Promises carry this Tacit Condition along with them, That things continue in the same Posture as they are? Which in general is denied; for since this Condition is Odious, as being apt to render the Act null, it ought not easily to be presum'd, if it be not actually added; unless it appears plainly that the present Posture of Affairs was included in that one only Reason which we have been talking of. For thus, we frequently read in History, that Ambassadors have return'd Home without opening their Commission, upon such Revolutions, amongst those to whom they were sent, as may be presum'd to make void the whole Reason of their Embassy (a).

(a) Apud Gellium, l. 5. c. 10. Diog. Laert. l. 9. Apul. Florid. l. 3. Sext. Emp. adversus Math. l. 2. (1) See Titus l. 12. (b) L. 4. v. 471, 472. (c) 'He acts absurdly who says he is silent; for by saying he is silent, he is not silent; and so destroys his own Assertion, Apul. Apol. p. 529. Edit. in Usum Delph. (d) Laet. l. 3. c. 6. (e) So in the Example propos'd by Gellius, l. 9. c. 16. this Restriction ought to be made, That the Law may not deprive Brave Men of their Reward. (f) Lib. 37. t. 14. L. 6. f. 2. D. de jure patronat. (2) Vid. Instit. l. 3. t. 8. De Succession. Libertorum.

(3) L. 2. c. 16. f. 25.

XXI. 2. That an Accident is Inconsistent with the Design of the Person, may be made to appear; either First, From Natural Reason; or Secondly, From some Sign of the Will.

In order to make this Discovery from Natural Reason, Aristotle (b) thinks that the Understanding ought to be endued with a true sense of Equity, and the Will with an hearty Inclination to judge according to Equity (c). And he rightly defines (d) (1) Equity to be a Correction of the Law, where it is deficient, by reason of its being too universal; or, in other words, a Dextrous Interpretation of the Law, shewing that such a particular Case ought not to be brought under it, because an Absurdity would follow: Which may all be apply'd to Wills and Pacts, mutatis mutandis. And here Grotius (e) well observes, that Equity has no Place in the Law of Nature, since that Law does not speak more universally than the Nature of things requires. But yet that the Law of Nature, not as it is in it self, but as it is generally express'd by Men, may want the Assistance of an Equitable Interpretation: for Instance, when that Law says, that Every Man ought to have his own; we must in Equity qualify it with this Condition, that He be in his Senses, and that no superior Right interposes. For since, in Laws especially, all Cases cannot be foreseen, or by reason of their infinite Variety express'd (f) (2); it is therefore necessary for them, whose Duty it is to apply particular Cases to the general Decrees of the Law, to have a Liberty of excepting such as are so peculiarly circumstantiated, that the Legislator himself would have excepted them, had he been present, or had he foreseen such Cases (g).

There is an Example in Cicero (h); it was a Law among the Rhodians, that if any Ship of Strength should be found in the Haven, it should be confiscated. A great Storm, notwithstanding all the Seamen could do, drives a certain Ship into the Rhodians Haven; the Questor seizes upon it, and the Owner pleads from the Reason of the Thing that it ought not to be confiscated. Again,

The Law forbids the Gates to be opened at Night, in time of War; Nevertheless a Man opens them and receives in some Allies, who, if they had been kept out, would have been cut in Pieces by the Enemy, which was encamp'd hard by (i).

However this Liberty must not be indulg'd too far, lest any one should rashly make himself Judge of the Legislator's Design; for sometimes he Wills and Commands that the very Letter of the Law should be put in Execution (k). And therefore we ought to have Reason very evidently of our side, when we act Counter to it; as we certainly have, when we find that the precise adhering to the Letter is unlawful; i. e. repugnant to the Law of God, or Nature: For to such no Man can be oblig'd; indeed no Man in his Senses can be presum'd willing to oblige another to it (l).

Sometimes Equity is taken in another Sense, as when any Cause is said to have the Benefit of Equity, or the Rigour of the Law is allow'd to be softned in favour of the Criminal; for even private Men are said to have Recourse to Equity, when they don't so rigidly insist upon their Right against their Adversaries, but remit something of it.

Lastly, Causes are sometimes said to be left to Equity, when the Civil Law takes no Cognizance of them, or when the Nicety of the Law is not regarded, but the thing is left to the Arbitrage of honest Men.

XXII. Moreover a general Law ought to be restrain'd; if, although it be not absolutely unlawful to stick to the Letter, yet upon weighing the Thing in Candour and Prudence, it appears to be too grievous and burthensome, either in respect of the Condition of human Nature absolutely Consider'd, or in regard of the Person and Thing in Debate compar'd with the End of it. For some Things seem intolerable to Mankind in general, others to some certain Persons: some Business is such, as to take much Pains about it, would be Folly. And an Exception against those is still the more reasonable, if the Law be not only positive, and the matter of it such, as makes it probable, that the Legislator would not, at the great Inconvenience of the Party, demand the Observance of it; but also if the Neglect of it does not tend to the Dishonour and Contempt of the Authority that enacted it (m).

And therefore, without doubt, 'tis a foolish piece of Superstition in the Abyssines, so to weaken themselves by fasting in Lent, as, for want of Strength and Courage, not to be able to resist the Inroads of their Enemies; inasmuch that their Country has sometimes been over-run at that time without Resistance (n).

Thus a Man that lends a Thing for a certain Time may demand it back before the Time expired, if in the mean-while he happens to be in great want of it himself; for by the Nature of such a beneficial Act no Man can be presum'd willing to oblige himself to his great Inconvenience.

So if a Prince has promis'd to assist his Ally with Forces, he may be lawfully excus'd, as long as he is in danger at Home, and wants those Forces for his own Defence: For since every Prince is, in the first place, oblig'd to protect his own People, all the Promises, which he makes to Foreigners, are understood to extend no farther than the Safety of his own Kingdom admits.

(a) Vid. Tac. Hist. L. 2. ab init. Where Titus upon Galba's Death returns back. (b) Nicom. l. 5. c. 10. (c) V. D. L. 47. t. 2. de furtis Leg. 61. f. 5. (d) Nicom. L. 5. c. 14. Add. Id. Magn. Moral. l. 2. c. 1, 2. (1) See Grotius's Treatise de Equitate. (e) Ad Campanella Pol. (f) Xen. Hipparch. 'To commit to Writing every thing that ought to be done, is as difficult as to know all future things. (2) See above, Scit. 17. towards the End. (g) V. L. 1. t. 3. Leg. 3, 4, 5, 6, 10, 11, 12, 13. D. de leg. (h) De Invent. l. 2. c. 42. (i) Ibid. c. 32. (k) According to Leg. 12, f. 1. D. L. 40. t. 9. qui & a quibus manumissi, which is very hard, but so it is written. Add. lex. Wisigoth. l. 2. t. 1. c. 12. (l) Grot. ad Hest. c. 4, 16. 'Circumstances are such as render the observing of the Law a Breach against the chief Laws of Nature. Add. V. Max. l. 3. c. 7. n. 1. c. 8. n. 6. (m) Add. Grot. ad Mat. c. 12. v. 3. (n) Fr. Avarer. Desc. Ethio. c. 13.

And thus a Grant of Immunity from Taxes and Tribute ought to be understood of ordinary annual Taxes only, not of those extraordinary Subsidies, which the urgent Necessity of Affairs may require, and which the Publick can't subsist without. From hence it appears, that Cicero (a) is too free in saying, that such Promises are not to be kept, as are useless to the Persons to whom they are made; nor if they be less beneficial to him, than prejudicial to the Maker. For whether a Thing be useful or not to the Person to whom it is promised, it is not always for the Person promising to judge; unless he has Authority over him, or has him plac'd under his Care. Nor is any Prejudice or Burthen redounding to the Person promising, sufficient to release him from his Promise (for the Performance of every free Promise has some Burthen going along with it,) but such and so much as, according to the Nature of the Act, ought in reason to be presum'd, excepted. As in the Example brought by Cicero (b), If you had promised to appear immediately as Advocate for another, and in the mean-time your Son falls dangerously ill, it would not be a Breach of Duty not to perform what you have promis'd (c).

XXIII. But, Secondly, There are also some Signs of the Will from whence it may be certainly collected, that a Case ought to be excepted from the general Expressions of the Law; as when the Words of the Legislator in another place, though not directly opposite to the Law now supposed to be before us (for that would be a Contradiction) yet by some peculiar Incident and unexpected Event of Things, happen to oppose it in the present Case: or, which amounts to the same Thing, when there are two different Laws, which don't interfere, and which easily may and ought to be observed at different times, but can't both of them be satisfied, when by some Chance they call for our Obedience at the same Instant (d): In this Case, we must observe some Certain Rules to know which Law or Pact ought to give Place to the other, where both cannot be fulfilled. Grotius lays down these,

1. That which is only permitted gives Place to that which is commanded (e). For a Permission includes a Liberty, but a Command carries along with it a Necessity of Acting.

2. That which ought to be done at this present time, is preferable to that which may be done at any other time: Or when, at the same time, I lie under two Obligations, whereof one can't be satisfied but at this Instant, the other at any time hereafter; the former shall be perform'd, the latter put off to some other Opportunity. From whence it follows, that no Man can be enjoy'd two Things which cannot both be perform'd together, and which neither of them admit of Delay. From hence we may give an Answer to the Enquiry of Plutarch (f) why it was not lawful for the Flamines Diales to bear any other Magistracy? For since the Duties of the Priests were certain and settled, and the Duties of other Magistrates uncertain and not settled, the same Man being both Priest and Magistrate, would not have been able to provide for Business of so different a Nature, if they happened to interfere in the same nick of time: So that one must necessarily have been neglected for the Performance of the other. It seems that those Priests had not found out the Secret of making an Honour and a Gain of the Priesthood, and yet of throwing the Duty and Burthen of it upon their Curates.

2. An Affirmative Precept gives way to a Negative (g); or when an affirmative Precept can't be satisfied but at the Expence of a negative one, then the Performance of the affirmative shall be defer'd or put off, till it ceases to clash with that other which is negative. The reason of this is taken from the Nature of the affirmative and negative Precepts: For the Obligation of these is perpetual, uniform and equally binding; whereas those presuppose an Opportunity of being put in Execution; which is presum'd not to offer it self, if it can't be done without the Violation of some Law: And therefore things, in such a Posture of Affairs, are esteem'd morally impossible. Hence it is that no Man can injure another, or break his Word, to promote the Advantage of a Friend, or to get wherewithal to be grateful, or generous: For 'tis a strange sort of Piety to steal Leather, and then give the Shoes in Alms to the Poor. Mahomet in the Alcaron forbids any one to give Alms of Ill-gotten Goods. However, I can't say, that Schach Abas King of Persia was in the right in disposing of no Money so freely to charitable Uses, as that which he had raised from the Stews; for this, said he, was paid willingly, whereas the other Taxes were extorted with Sighs and Groans from the Subject: Yet, methinks, it was not so decent to pitch upon Money rais'd after that manner for such Uses (h). To this Head, in some respect, belongs what Leo of Modena (i) tells us of the Hebrews, that whatsoever was forbidden the Men, was also forbidden the Women; but as for the affirmative Precepts, the Rabbies declar'd, that none of those which were confined to a certain time, oblig'd the Women, by reason of the Weakness of their Sex, and their living under the Government of their Husbands.

(a) Off. 1. (b) d. l. (c) Add. Sen. de Benef. 1. 4. c. 35. (d) Char. de la Sageſſe, l. 1. c. 37. n. 5.

(e) A Command is of greater Force than a Permission; for that which is commanded, is necessary; that which is permitted, voluntary. Auth. ad Heren. L. 2. c. 10. & Idem de Invent. l. 2. c. 49. The Law which forbids is more powerful than that which permits. This is reserved in the Power of the Magistratè: and one who forbids can do more than all who allow: For that which permits leaves us to our Liberty, whereas that which forbids binds us under a Penalty (f) Quest. Rom. in fin. p. 291. C. (g) That Law which forbids, seems by some sort of Exception, to correct that which commands, Cic. de Invent. l. 2. d. l. (h) Olearius, Itin. Pers. l. 5. c. 31. The Law which forbids is of greater Authority than that which commands; for every Law that forbids is therefore stronger, because it corrects that which permits or commands, Mar. Victorin. in exp. in 2. Rhet. Cic. (i) De Rit. Hebr. p. 5. c. 5. f. 1.

4. In Covenants and Laws, which are in other respects equal, that which is particular and applicable to the present Case takes place of that which is general. For Generals must be reduc'd to Particulars before they can be apply'd (a). As for what Grotius subjoins, That a Prohibition, which has a Penalty annex'd, ought to take place of that which has none; and that which has a greater, of that which has a less (1), is not so clear. For a Prohibition, that has no Penalty, either fix'd or arbitrary, annex'd to it, is of no Force at all. And that Rule of two Evils to chuse the least, can't properly be apply'd to Moral Evils or Sins: For when it happens that one of two Prohibitions must needs be violated, then that whose Violation is of least Concern is suppos'd to be permitted; for Example, one Law is, That no Man shall appear abroad in Arms on a Holy-day: another That no Man shall stay at Home upon hearing the Signal of a Tumult. In this Case the latter is to be look'd upon as an Exception to the former: as if the Law had been, that no Man should appear abroad in Arms on a Holy-day, unless he be commanded by the Magistrate in Case of a Tumult.

5. When two Duties happen to interfere at the same Point of time, that which is the more honest and profitable is to be prefer'd (2). For the other Obligation is only upon Condition, that it can consist with an Obligation of greater Moment.

6. When two Covenants, One upon Oath, the Other not, can't be performed both together, the former ought to take place of the latter: unless the latter was added as an Exception and Limitation to the other; for an Oath added to a Covenant excludes all such Restrictions and tacit Exceptions, as are not necessary from the Nature of the thing, and which, if there be no Oath, may be more easily admitted (b).

7. An Obligation imperfectly mutual (3) gives place to one that is perfectly mutual, and binding on both sides: Thus what I owe upon Contract ought to be paid before what is due from me upon free Promise, or upon Gratitude, or any such respect, if both can't be perform'd together. And therefore Phocion, when he was ask'd a Large sum for a certain Sacrifice, reply'd: Ask the rich, for I should be asham'd to give to you, and not to pay this Man (pointing to Callides the Usurer) what I owe him (c).

8. The Law of Generosity gives place to the Law of Gratitude, ceteris paribus: altho' each implies an imperfect Obligation. For the Debt of Gratitude has more Favour to plead in its Behalf than that of Generosity; for that requires that we should give because we have receiv'd; whereas this is built upon no such Foundation. And therefore, in this Case, because the Necessity of Gratitude interferes, the Object of Generosity is suppos'd to be wanting. And this holds so far, that even Generosity towards our own Relations, unless it be due upon some closer Obligation, gives place to the Duty of Gratitude.

9. Where the Laws were made by subordinate Powers; that of the Inferiour, yields to that of the Superiour, if both can't be obey'd. Thus we ought to obey God rather than Man (d). And the Command of a King carries more weight with it, than that of the Master of a Family.

10. The more noble, useful, or necessary the Matter of one Law is, than that of another, the greater Weight ought the Law to have with us.

11. The closer Tie there is between any Person and us, the more ought Obligations due to him, outweigh those due to others, ceteris paribus (e) (4).

Cicero (f) has a Passage very pertinent to the Matter in hand: Contrary Laws, says he, admit of a Dispute when two or more seem to clash. As thus; one Law says, That whosoever kills the Tyrant, shall be rewarded as a Conqueror at the Olympick Games, and may demand what he pleases of the Magistrate, and the Magistrate shall grant his Request. Another Law enacts, That upon the Death of the Tyrant his five nearest Relations shall be put to Death. Alexander, who had exercis'd Tyranny over the Phereans, was slain in the Night by his Wife Thebe, and she, for her Reward, demanded her Son, whom she had by the Tyrant. Some were of Opinion, that the Son, by the Law, ought to be put to Death. The thing may bear a Dispute; Now, in such Cases, it ought to be consider'd which of the Laws conduce to greater, i. e. to more honest, more profitable, and more useful Ends. And that ought to be observed which has the greater Ends to support it. Then we ought to consider which Law was made last, for the last is of greatest Obligation. Then which of the Laws commands, which permits only; for that which is commanded is Necessary, that which is permitted, Voluntary. Then which Law is penal, and which is enforced with the greater Penalty; for that ought to be the most observed, which can be violated with least Impunity. Then which commands, which forbids; for that which forbids is often an Exception to that which commands. Then which seems design'd to bind in general, which in part only: Which to include in common several Things, which some particular one only; for that which binds in part, or some certain particular Thing only, seems most capable of being apply'd and brought into Court. Then by the Law what ought to be done immediately, and what admits of Delay; for that which can't be put off, ought to be obey'd first.

(a) 'The more particular a Law is, the more does it seem to make to the Case in hand, Cic. de Invent. l. 2. d. 1. (1) Cicero d. 1. (2) Cicero d. 1. (b) 'Medea in Euripides, v. 743.

having desired Ageus to entertain her, and not to deliver her up, when her Enemies should demand her, would needs have it confirm'd by Oath: which Ageus approved of, for so, says he, it will be the safer for me, if I can make such an Excuse to your Enemies. (3) This Distinction is explain'd in B. 3. c. 4. f. 9.

(c) Plut. Phocione, 745. C. D. (d) Aff. IV. 19. (e) Gal. VI. 10. 1 Cor. VIII. 13. 1 Tim. V. 8. Cic. Off. 1. c. 14. 15. Where he talks of the Degrees of Society. (4) These three last Rules are included in the Fifth, and are omitted by our Author in his Abridgment De Offic. Hom. & Civ. L. 1. c. 17. f. 13. (f) L. 2. de Invent.

C H A P. XIII.

Of the Way of deciding Controversies in the Liberty of Nature.

BY the Law of Nature every Man is oblig'd to perform, and to pay of his own accord, what by any Title is due from him; and if any one has designedly damag'd or offended another, the same Law moreover obliges that the Delinquent should seriously repent, and give Security to live in Peace and Friendship for the Future. And as this Repentance, where it is not extorted by Force, but proceeds from the Principle and Consideration of Justice, is a sufficient Indication of the Offender's Amendment: So on the other side, after such Satisfaction is made, and Security given, the Party injured, ought to forgive him, and to live peaceably with him for the time to come. And if a Man through Passion and a Desire of Revenge refuses it, he must be answerable for the Breach of the Peace and the Consequence of it (a). For it is inhuman and brutish, not to be satisfied with any thing less than the Blood of the Offender: And when a Misunderstanding is once begun to continue it on for ever. It was a cursed Speech of Cato's (b), who, when he met a young Man just flusht with the Ruin of his deceased Father's Enemy, took him by the hand; and Thus, said he, ought we to appease the Ghosts of our Parents; not with Kids or Goats, but with the Tears and Destruction of their Enemies.

2. But all Men are not of such a happy Temper, as to be willing, of their own accord, to perform their Duty: And, besides, several Controversies may arise concerning the Certainty and the Quantity of a Debt, and the rating of a Damage, the Competency and Exercise of certain Rights, the fixing Boundaries, the Interpretation of Pacts, and other Pretensions; and yet in the Liberty of Nature no Man can take Authority upon him to determine and compose such Controversies (c). Indeed Hobbes (1) makes every Man his own Judge in a State of Nature (2); by which he can mean nothing else, but that he, who has no Superior to govern him, may manage his Business as he pleases, and appoint means for his Preservation according to his own Discretion. For if another Man should take upon him to judge of my Affairs, yet, since he has no Authority to determine me by his Opinion, it will depend intirely upon my Will and Pleasure whether, or how far I shall be concluded by him; and so ultimately the Management of my Actions will lie in my own Breast; which yet I ought to govern according to the Rules of Nature.

As to what remains; tho' every Man may, in that State, either neglect or defend his own Right, either put up or return an Injury; yet he can't, in his own Cause, give Sentence to as to oblige him, with whom he has the Controversy, to stand to it. For tho' he designs never to justly, nay, though he protests upon Oath, that he decrees what seems to him to be right, yet since the other may have as great a respect for his own Opinion; if they happen to disagree, nothing can be done by reason of that Equality, which is Essential to the State of Nature (d).

3. But yet the Law of Nature by no means allows, that every Man should immediately fly to Arms, and put the Controversy to the Decision of the Sword, before milder Methods have been attempted (e). And therefore the Parties ought first to endeavour by some friendly Debate, between themselves or their Agents, to compose the Difference (f). Indeed even after Arms have been taken up, and each Party, by the Calamity of War, has been induced to hearken to gentler Accommodations, we generally find that the Difference is at last adjusted by Treaties and Negotiations. If the Thing and the Temper of the Parties admit of it, the Dispute may easily be decided by Lot (g). But if neither a Debate is able to put an End to the Controversy, nor either Party thinks fit to trust that to Chance which each, in Reason, thinks to be on his side; the only thing they can do, is to pitch upon an Arbitrator, and each bind himself to stand to his Award (3). And here Grotius (h) well observes, that in a doubtful Case, altho' each Party ought to come to Terms, rather than go to War, yet the Plaintiff is more oblig'd to it, than the Defendant; for the Defendant's Plea is the more favourable even in the Law of Nature.

4. From the Design of appealing to an Arbitrator, it appears how He ought to be qualified. For therefore Recourse is had to Him, because a Man's Judgment, by reason of that natural Affection which every Man bears to himself, is suspected to be partial in his own Cause (i). Upon which account, the Arbitrator must take care not to sacrifice Right to Affection, nor to be bias'd in Favour of one more than the other,

(a) C. Pontius in Livy, l. 9. c. 1. argues excellently to this Purpose. (b) V. Plutarch in the Life of Cato the Elder, p. 344. E. (c) In which Sense that of Thucydides, l. 1. may be admitted; They that may use Force have no need to go to Law. (1) De Civē, c. 1. s. 9. (2) How far this is true, may be seen in B. 2. c. 2. s. 3.

(d) 'Almost all wicked Men think fit to be Judges in their own Case, Arist. Pol. 3. c. 9. No Mortal ever thinks an Injury against himself small, most think them greater than really they are, Sallust. Catil.

(e) 'There being two ways of contesting, one by Argument, the other by Force, and that being proper to Men, this to Brutes, Recourse is to be had to the latter, when the former is refused, Cic. Off. l. 1. c. 11. Add. Justin. l. 8. c. 1. n. 4. &c. When, without trying to compose Matters amicably, Arms are taken up, then that of Ovid takes place: Injusto rigidum jus dicitur ense. Trist. L. 5. El. 10. v. 43. (f) Vid. Grot. l. 2. c. 23. s. 7.

(g) V. eund. d. l. s. 9. (3) V. Grot. d. l. s. 8. (h) D. l. s. 11. (i) V. L. 2. t. 1. l. 10. D. de jurisdict. Plut. de adulat. & amic. discern. Every one is the greatest Flatterer of himself.

any farther than the Merits of the Cause incline him. And if he behaves himself thus impartially, he ought not to regard the unjust Repentments of him that is cast. Bias (a) used to say, that He had rather judge between those that were his Enemies, than his Friends; for, in the latter Case, let him judge how he would, one of his Friends would turn his Enemy: whereas, if both were his Enemies, one probably would become a Friend. And therefore it is manifest, that a Man, who has any Interest in the Success of either Party, ought not to be an Arbitrator between them; for fear he should not be able to observe so exactly that Indifference and Impartiality which he ought (b).

From hence it follows, that there ought to be no Pact or Promise between the Arbitrator and the Parties, whereby he may be prejudiced in Favour of either of them (c). Nor ought he to expect any other Reward for his Sentence, than the Satisfaction of having judg'd Right (1). Absurd therefore was the Arbitrage which Maximilian, and the Venetians submitted to Leo X. whilst each of them privately tamper'd with him to declare of his side (d).

Now altho' the contending Parties enter into Compact with the Arbitrator, about taking upon him his Office, ( for as no Arbitrage can be exercised without the Consent of the Parties, so no one can be forced to be Arbitrator against his own Consent; ) yet it is not from the Force of that Compact, that he becomes obliged to judge according to what he thinks is agreeable to the Laws of Conscience and Equity: or they to stand to his Award. For the Law of Nature, which can receive no Enforcement from any Compact, obliges him to judge according to Justice; and they are obliged to submit, without any Reserve, to his Determination, because otherwise the Design of going to an Arbitrator would be frustrated, and there would be no End of such Appeals.

For suppose they should agree to submit themselves to his Arbitrage, not absolutely but upon Condition, that he should decree according to Justice, How would they ever be able to decide the Matter? For the Parties, being supposed to be in a perfect Liberty of Nature, are as yet, equal; and each has Power to enquire whether the Arbitrator has perform'd the Condition, in judging according to Justice. And therefore if, after the Sentence be given, it should seem unjust to either Party, or should really be so, another Controversy would arise about it; which, since neither this Arbitrator, nor the Parties could be able to determine, it would be render'd necessary to apply to another. And if with this other they enter into the same conditional Compact, and a Doubt should arise about the Justice of his Sentence also, they would be forced to apply to another for Relief, and so on in infinitum.

From hence it follows, that the Pact, which the Parties enter into when they consent to stand to the Award of an Arbitrator, ought to be conceiv'd simply, and not upon Condition that he pronounces Sentence according to Justice; for else, as was said before, there might be an Appeal from one Arbitrator to another, and from him to a Third, and so on without End. Besides (e), that there can lie no Appeal from the Arbitrator is plain, because there is no superior Judge to receive it, which obtains even in Civil States, where the Parties, by Consent, pitch upon an Arbitrator, provided the Cause be such as it does not concern the Government to intermeddle with: And if any Country admits of such an Appeal, it is by reason of some positive Law. Indeed, in some Places, those extraordinary Judges, who have Causes laid before them, to be examined and decided out of hand, without the tedious Forms of Law, come under the Name of Arbitrators. And from these nothing hinders but that an Appeal may lie to a Superior.

But when we say that the Parties ought, right or wrong, to stand to the Sentence of the Arbitrator, it must be understood with some Restrictions: For tho' I can't fly off, because he decrees otherwise than I expected: yet his Sentence shall not bind me, if it manifestly appears that he tamper'd with the other Party, and received Bribes of him, and concerted Matters with him to my Disadvantage. For he, who evidently takes part with either side, ceases to bear any longer the Person of an Arbitrator (f).

If it be thought fit to refer a Cause to more than one, 'tis best to have an uneven Number; for else they may divide into equal Votes, and to leave the Business undecided.

5. Moreover Grotius (g) would have it consider'd, whether the Arbitrator be chosen as a Judge, or as having Authority more at large of giving Sentence, not according to the Rigour of the Law, but according to Reason and Equity. For sometimes both Parties appeal to the Law; and there the Arbitrator, as if he were a Judge, ought to weigh the Merits of the Cause, and to determine according to Law. Sometimes one Party only insists upon the Rigour of the Law, and the other, in Favour and Compassion,

(a) Diog. Laert. l. 1. f. 87. Au. Gell. l. 1. c. 3. (b) Arist. Pol. l. 4. c. 12. 'An Arbitrator is every where to have a Trust reposed in him. Upon the same Principle depended the Answer that Amasis King of Egypt gave the Aleans, when they were to be Arbitrators in the Olympick Games, and had sent to him to advise them, how they might perform the Office with greatest Justice; Let none of the Aleans, said he, be concern'd in the Games. Hither may be refer'd that scandalous Decree of the Roman People, who in the Controversy between the Aricinians and the Ardeates, adjudged the Land to themselves. Livy, l. 3. c. 72. Add Just. l. 8. c. 3. n. 15. (c) Compare Hobbes de Cive, c. 3. f. 14. (1) Nec aliud tibi sententia tua pretium, quam bene judicavisse, Plin. Panegy. c. 80. n. 1. (d) Guicciard Hist. l. 11. about the End; and l. 12. p. m. 345. (e) V. L. 4. t. 8. l. 18. l. 32. f. 15, 16. D. de receptis. From hence may be brought a Reason of that in Quintil. Declam. 372. One Decree cannot make void another. If any one pitches upon those to be Judges in his Case, whose Opinion he was not otherwise obliged to stand by, after having made the Choice, he ought to submit to their Determinations. Lucian. Abdicat. t. 1. p. 715, &c. Ed. Amst. Every one makes him, whom he has chosen, the chief Judge of his Cause. Plin. No. Hist. Praef. f. 47. (f) V. L. 17. t. 2. l. 76, &c. D. pro Socio. (g) V. Grot. L. 3. c. 20. f. 46. n. 2. d. l. desires desires a Mitigation of it ; or, in other Words, appeals to Equity: Where by Equity I don't mean that dextrous Interpretation of the Law, mentioned in the foregoing Chapter, which even a subordinate Judge ought to make use of: but an Abatement of the Rigour of the Law, upon the Dictates of Humanity, Charity, Compassion, &c. which none but the supreme Judge, or an Arbitrator, chosen on purpose, has Authority to apply.

If it be doubtful under which of these two Qualifications the Arbitrator is chosen, he ought to suppose himself tyed up to those Rules, which a Judge would be oblig'd to follow; for it is for want of a Judge and Judicature that he is called in: And, in a doubtful Case, we ought to take that side which is clearest (1). Besides, an Arbitrator can't so easily act unjustly, if he has a limited, as if he has an absolute Power delegated to him. Indeed to persuade a Mitigation of the Rigour of the Law is properly their Business who voluntarily, without entering into any Engagements, interpose, as common Friends, between the contending Parties.

Now as he that judges between Fellow-subjects, judges according to the Municipal Laws of the Place: so he who judges between those who acknowledge no common Municipal Laws, ought to judge according to the Law of Nature; unless the Parties submit their Cause to the positive Laws of some particular State.

6. The same Grotius (a) observes also, that an Arbitrator, chosen by the supreme Authority, ought to take Cognizance of the Merits of the Cause, and not of the Possession; for it belongs to the Civil Law to determine that; whereas, by the Law of Nature, the Right of Possession follows the Property. Concerning which my Opinion is that, altho' by the Law of Nature and Nations, it does not seem necessary, that if a Man be turned out of Possession he should immediately be put in again, before the Merits of the Cause be heard, especially if can be immediately determined; yet, in many Cases, the Arbitrator ought to make Enquiry who was in Possession, that he may know whom it chiefly concerns to make out his Title. For the Plaintiff ought to have very clear Proofs to support his Pretensions, whereas it is enough for the Defendant to confute the Arguments of his Adversary, tho' sometimes it may be convenient, over and above, to show his own Title also. However it is not sufficient for the Arbitrator to give Judgment concerning the Possession only, for that is generally out of Dispute, and seldom brought before him; but his Business is to examine into the Merits of the Cause, and by a final Determination to put an End to the Sute. But while the Cause is depending no Innovations ought to be made; and, if the Plaintiff can't make out his Pretensions, Judgment ought to be given for the Party in Possession.

7. But Mediators, who interpose between contending Nations, either preparing or actually engaged in War, and endeavour, by their Authority and their Arguments and Intreaties, to bring them to Terms of Accommodation are not properly Arbitrators (b). These having so pious a Design in Hand cannot be obstinately Rejected, without the greatest Inhumanity, even altho' they should appear to be more intimately allied to either Party. For the other still has Liberty either to accept or refuse what they offer: And it is the chief Business of a Friend, where he cannot join in the Quarrel, to endeavour to bring it to an amicable Composition. Besides, it is frequently the Interest of a Prince to prevent War from breaking out between Nations; for some Sparks of the Fire, kindled in his Neighbourhood, may possibly reach him; and, besides, it may be dangerous for him to have both, or either of the Parties entirely ruined; and therefore, as he values his own Safety, he ought to endeavour might and main to hinder the Flame from coming to a Head. And the more earnestly ought Christians thus to labour in composing Differences, because even the Alcoran (c) (how senseless soever it be in other things) does wisely in commanding, that if Two Mahometan Nations go to War, the rest shall interpose, and force the Aggressor to make Satisfaction, and after that, oblige both to live in Friendship and Amity for the Future.

'Tis certain, that if it be the Interest of several to have the Quarrel made up, they may enter into Compact jointly to labour for Peace; and, if their Endeavours should prove unsuccessful, they may then mutually prescribe to one another how far each shall make himself a Party in the War. But this only, in case none of them has any Pre-engagement upon him to assist either of the Parties, in case of a War; for such an Obligation can't be limited by a Treaty made afterwards with a third Person.

Moreover, two or more, whom it concerns to have an End put to the War; after having weighed the Pretensions of each side, may lawfully agree upon what Terms a Peace ought to be concluded, and then offer them to the Parties with a Manifesto, that they will join Forces against him that refuses them. For a Prince does not, by this means, obtrude his Arbitrage upon another against his Will: nor decides another's Quarrel by his own Authority, (both which are Encroachments upon the Liberty of Nature;) Nor are those Terms offered to the Parties, so as if they were oblig'd to comply with them. But since, by the Law of Nature, a Man may join Forces with him who, he thinks, has receiv'd an Injury, especially if the Consequence of it is likely to redound to his Damage; by such a Method, as this, he openly declares for Equity and Peace, that he is desirous others would act fairly, and that he is not willing to enter into a War, before the adverse Party has ejected the Proposals of Peace (a).

(1) Semper in obscuris, quod minimum est, sequimur. D. L. 50. t. 16. l. 9. (a) D. l. f. 48. (b) F. Guicciardin. Hist. l. 4. where it is debated whether Hercules Duke of Ferrara, should perform the Part of an Arbitrator, or Mediator between the Venetians and the Florentines. (c) Cap. de Clausuris.

And this sort of Mediation is the more commendable, if it puts an End to a War, that would prove destructive to one or both Parties; yet he, who makes himself a Mediator, should take Care that he be able to compel by Force, that Party which refuses to stand to his Determination (b).

8. How the Form and Process of a Debate, before an Arbitrator, is to be manag'd, common Sense will best direct, according to the different Circumstances of the Thing; for it would be impertinent to give tedious Directions how each Party ought to open his Cause, how to state the Question, how, after the Arguments on both sides have been weighed, the Sentence ought to be pronounced: we need only observe, that if the Pretensions on one side cannot be made out but by Deeds, and they happen to be lost, the Arbitrator has nothing to do, but with the Consent of the other Party to give him his Oath; I say With the Consent of the other Party; for else, in the Liberty of Nature, no Man is obliged to put the Issue of his Cause upon another Man's Conscience. It is also in the Power of the Parties to refer themselves to the Decision of a Lot, or a Duel, as has formerly been practised among many Nations.

However, I do not see how the Loss of my Deeds can extinguish my Right; indeed I cannot have Justice done me in the Civil Court, being not able to produce sufficient Evidence; but, in the Liberty of Nature, 'tis enough to justify me in the Prosecution, if I be fully convinced of my Right, tho' I be not able to make out my Pretensions to another (c).

9. This Arbitrators have in Common with Judges, that, in the Examination of Matters of Fact, they ought to shew themselves equal to the bare Affelevation of each Party, i. e. when they contradict one another, to believe neither. But when Deeds (d), Arguments and undeniable Instruments can't be produced, they must then give Judgment according to the Testimony of Witnesses (e).

And these Witnesses ought to shew themselves indifferent towards either Party, and not to let Favour, or Hatred, or Revenge weigh more with them than their Conscience (f). Tbuanus (g) relates, that heretofore in Great Britain, an English Man could not be a Witness against a Scot, nor a Scot against an English Man, by reason of the Enmity between the two Nations: But Cambden (h) tells us, that this obtain'd only between the bordering Scots and English; so that if never so many English Men should, with their own Eyes, see a Scot commit Murder, their Testimony would signify nothing, unless some Scot or other testified the same Thing.

And therefore as my Adversary may refuse to admit of my near Relations as Witnesses (i); so may I except against my professed Enemies. Indeed sometimes Relations are excused upon a Principle of Humanity, for fear they should be forced to offer Violence, either to their Affections, or to their Conscience. And therefore the Roman Law never obliged the Client to be Evidence against his Patron, nor the Patron against his Client (i): But besides this, there was another very good Reason why Servants should not be allow'd to give Evidence against their Masters (2); for, as Cicero (k) says, If that which is done in our own House, and among our selves, were permitted to be publicly exposed and brought against us, the Master would be the Slave and the Slave Master. Indeed Theodoric (l) forbid the Abuse of this Law by an Edict; for some bought up other Peoples Servants, who were conscious of their Crimes, lest they should be brought as Evidence against them. Lastly, It is very reasonable, that no Cause should stand or fall by the Credit of any one single Witness (m), not only because one may more easily be deceived, or corrupted than many, and there is no Falshood so impudent, but may get the Assistance of one Witness (n), but also because an able understanding Judge may discover the Witnesses to be false, by opposing to one another the Examinations of several (o), whereas one may easily be consistent with himself; and altho', by this means,

(a) V. Livy, l. 44. c. 19. at the End. Justin. l. 6. c. 6. n. 1. (b) V. Vell. Paterc. l. 2. c. 50. Livy, l. 9. c. 14.
 (c) V. Conestag. de Unione Lusitan. l. 5. p. m. 222. To this Purpose is that of Quint. Decl. 312. The Condition of Man is Miserable, since it seems necessary to have a Witness for every thing we do: Truth has so little Power, and Faith so little Effect, it scarce seems sufficiently proved, which is attested by two. (d) V. Suet. Galb. c. 7. (e) For as Isa says, Orat. 7. Arguments are better than Witnesses. And in Orat. 3. he shows, that in Matter of Inheritances particularly, Deeds are preferable to Witnesses. Philo. Jud. de Decal. p. 764. 4. If Arguments and Writings be wanting, the Controversy must be decided by Witnesses. Add Lex. Wisigoth. l. 2. t. 4. c. 3.

(f) ——— cum sint premia falsi
 Nulla, ratam debet testis habere fidem. Ovid. Trist. l. 3. El. 10. v. 35, 36.

Add Lex. Wisigoth. l. 2. t. 4. c. 12. (g) Lib. 1. (h) Ad. ann. 1585. (i) V. Aristot. Pol. L. 2. c. 6. (j) Plut. Remulo. Lex. Wisigoth. l. 5. t. 7. c. 11. (2) Unless for Incest, as Cicero says, Orat. pro Milone, c. 22.
 (k) Pro Rege Dejotar. c. 11. Lucian. in Asino. t. 2. p. 80. Ed. Amst. Servants must needs know both the good and the ill things of their Masters. There is such another Passage in Lyfias, Orat. de sacro Olive trunco. Plaut. Bacch. Act. 4. Sc. 6. v. 20, 21. I know I am a Slave, and therefore I am ignorant of even that which I know. See a Passage in Isocrates Dupex, de fide questionum, p. 634, &c. And Aristot. Rhet. ad Alex. c. 17. Hither may be refer'd the History or rather the Fable of Avicenna in Gabril. Sionit. de urbibus & moribus Oriental. c. 3. Add Lex Wisigoth. l. 5. t. 4. c. 14 with which may be compared ibid. l. 3. t. 4. c. 10. and l. 6. t. 4. c. 3. and Capitalare Caroli, l. 7. c. 280. Editum Regis Theodor. c. 48, 49. (l) Edict. c. 101. And therefore Aristotle d. 1. does well call it a foolish Law, If the Accuser brings a Multitude of his Relations as Witnesses, the Accused shall be found guilty.
 (m) See Numb. XXXV. 30. Deut. XVII. 6, and XIX. 15. (n) Plin. Nat. Hist. l. 8. c. 22. (o) V. Susan Hist. v. 51. L. 4. t. 20. De Testib. l. 9. f. 1 & L. 28. l. 18. l. 20 D. de Quest.

some Crimes must remain unpunish'd in this World, and some must lose their just Right, who perhaps have but one Witness to support it, yet this Inconvenience is not so great, as if every one's Life and Fortune lay at the Mercy of any one Man's Impudence and Villany; for 'tis better that a few Guilty Persons should escape Punishment, than that many Innocent should suffer (a).

Yet Selden (b) observes, that against a Gentile the Jews admitted of one Witness as sufficient. And Grotius (c) takes notice that one Witness was enough, not to condemn, but to inform the Court, and, in pecuniary Matters, to put the Defendant to his Oath. At this Day, among the Moors, the Evidence of two honest Men is sufficient, but if the Witnesses be suspected, then twelve Persons are required; for they think as much Credit may be given to twelve, let them be ever so profligate, as to two, be they ever so honest (d) (1). The Hebrews admitted none to be Witnesses, but such as were of good Reputation; Madmen were excepted against, and Children, till they were thirteen Years of Age; and Thieves even after they had made Restitution; those too who lived by Gaming, and Publicans who exact more than their due, and such as deal in those things which deserve Stripes: Among the Turks, those who have made a Pilgrimage to Mecca are equivalent to three Witnesses (e). Add to this, that One Eye-witness is worth ten that has the Fact by Hear-say only (f). And therefore their Testimony is of no Weight which is built upon the Authority of others.

But though the Oath of a Witness creates a great Presumption of the Truth of what he asserts, yet, in the Law of Nature, nothing hinders but that a sworn Witness may be convicted of Perjury; and, if he be so convicted, the Sentence founded upon his Testimony comes to nothing (g): Yet it seems absurd, that the Party concern'd should be permitted to make void the Evidence by swearing on the other side; for this would not only lay open a great Gap for Perjury, but by reason of contradictory Oaths, the Controversy would remain as uncertain as before. And therefore it is according to its usual Silliness and Impiety, that the Alcoran (h) commands him who accuses his Wife of Adultery, and has no Witness to prove it, to swear four times, and the fifth time to imprecate the Curse of God upon himself, if what he affirms be not true: and on the other side, it allows the Woman to be clear, if she denies the Charge four times upon Oath, and the fifth time with an Invocation of the Curse of God.

10. As for putting the Sentence of the Judge in Execution, we need not say much; for in a State of Nature, if a Man does not, of his own accord, perform what is due to me, I may by all the Power that my self have, or my Friends can supply me with, force him to it. How far we may carry such violent Proceedings shall be shewed more fully hereafter when we come to discourse of War. Only here we may observe, that in such an Execution, I not only acquire the Property of the thing adjudged to me, when by any Method whatsoever I have got Possession of it: but moreover, if I cannot get Possession of the thing it self, I may seize upon any thing of the same Value, the very Charges of the Execution being reckon'd in, so as to become the rightful Owner of it (i). Indeed the Goods of a Debtor, who becomes such either by his own Contract, or by the thing it self, or by his Injustice, are look'd upon, in the Law of Nature, as tacitly mortgaged for the Debt; and, if it be not discharg'd, may be justly seized for it; nor is the bare Detention of the thing enough for the Creditor, for that frequently has more Trouble than Profit in it; but he must also have full Liberty to dispose of it as he pleases; for my Right is not satisfied, if instead of the thing, with the Property of which I ought to be invested, I receive nothing but the Custody of another Man's Goods; yet, in such a Case, I ought to signify with what Design I make such Seizure, whether in order to extort from the Debtor my Dues the sooner, or to take the Goods thus seized upon in part of Payment: Indeed it seems but reasonable to give the Debtor Liberty to receive his Goods, upon Payment of the Debt. But this way of Execution is proper to the State of Nature, and has no Place in a Civil Constitution (k).

(a) Val. Max. l. 4. c. 1. f. 10, 11. (b) De Jure N. & G. Sec. Heb. l. 7. c. 6. (c) Add Deut. XIX. 16.

(d) What Qualifications are necessary for Witnesses, may be seen in L. 22. t. 5. l. II. III. f. 1, 2, 3, 4. IV, V. IX. XIV. XXI. XXIII, XXIV. D. de Testibus. (1) See above in B. 3. c. 6. f. 16. (e) V. Chr. Richer. de moribus Turcarum.

(f) Plaut. Trucul. Act. 2. Sc. 6. v. 8. 'The Ears are less faithful than the Eyes. Lucian. de Domo. 'In a well regulated Common-wealth the Laws take Care, that what is given upon Hear-say shall not go for Evidence. For such a Testimony is naturally liable to Corruption. Philo Jud. de Corrupt. Linguarum, pag. 340. B. C. Edit. Paris. 'The Eye is apprised of the Things themselves, and in a manner intermeddles with Business, and perceives all by Light, by which every thing is illustrated and discovered: but the Ear has less Credit as having to do not with the Things themselves, but with Rumours which do not always mind the Truth, Id. de Judice.

(g) 'The Attick Laws allow, that, after the Sentence, an Action of Perjury may be brought against the Witness; as is plain from Demosth. Orat. in Evergum, in the Beginning. Add. Plat. de leg. l. 11. about the End.

(h) Cap. de Lumine. (i) For as Grotius observes, l. 2. c. 7. f. 2. 'Expletive Justice when it cannot get the thing it self, demands an Equivalent, which morally speaking is the same. (k) V. L. 41. t. 2. l. 5. D. de acquir. poss. l. 47. t. 8. l. 2. f. 18. D. de vi honorum raptorum, & L. 4. t. 2. l. 13. D. quod metus causa, & L. 48. t. 7. &c. L. 7, 8. D. ad l. Juliam de vi privata.

O F T H E
LAW of NATURE
A N D
N A T I O N S.

B O O K the S I X T H.

C H A P. I.

of MATRIMONY.

IT follows in course that we examine the Original and Nature of human Government, and that we observe what Precepts of the Law of Nature and of Nations do presuppose it. But in as much as Government cannot otherwise be conceiv'd than between several Persons, and since the Holy Scriptures inform us, that in the Beginning GOD Almighty created one only human Pair, the Original Parents of our Race; it may seem necessary, before we proceed in our Enquiry about Civil Power, to consider the Relation of Matrimony, which being the Source of Private Families, does by Consequence supply Matter for the composing of all Sovereignties and States. For as the Body of Man is made up of divers Members, each of which consider'd by it self, hath likewise in some sort the Appearance of a Body, so States are form'd out of lesser Societies, of which some are call'd Simple and Primary, others Compound, and as it were Collegiate. Of the first sort are three, according to the threefold Power of a Husband, of a Father, and of a Master. And these bear the Name of Simple, not because they consist of no more than two Persons, as some maintain (a), but because they are not compounded of inferior Societies. For why may not one Father have more Children, and one Master more Servants, and yet the Societies, thus constituted be as truly simple, as if each Father had but a single Child, each Master but a single Servant (b).

II. To go on then; so soon as Man was rendered obnoxious to Mortality, lest the Duration of so noble a Species should be confined to a single Age, or should require the constant Miracle of new Creations to preserve it in Succession, it pleas'd the most wise God to provide against these Inconveniencies, by enduing the two different Sexes with a Natural Power of Propagating their Kind (1). And lest they should forbear so necessary a Work, either out of Negligence, or upon Apprehension of the great Pain of Bearing, and the great Trouble of Educating their Off-spring, he implanted in each Sex a most passionate Love, a most ardent Propension towards the other; with a most deep and tender Affection for their Common Issue; that so they might not only willingly, but joyfully contribute their Service to the Preservation and the Continuance of Human Race (c).

III. The first Point of Enquiry concerning Matrimony must be, whether Men, in all respects fit for such a Condition, lie under any Obligation of entering upon it. For about this Action, as likewise about others, to which Men

(a) Vid. Joh. Frid. Horn. de Civitate, l. 1. c. 1. f. 2. (b) In beginning thus with Matrimony, Plato himself de Legib. l. 4. p. 835. Ed. Wech. is our Guide and Director. Let us hear his Managers of the Question. LL. l. 4. Athen. Come, tell me by all that's Good, what Point ought first to fall under the Legislator's Care? Will not Nature teach him to settle, before all things, by good Laws the Affair of Generation and the Origin of Mankind? Clin. Yes no doubt. A. But the Affair of Generation takes its Rise from the Union and Community of Wedlock. C. It doth so. A. Why then if Nuptial Laws be in the first place establish'd, they cannot but have a good Influence on all the future Regulations of the State. (1) See Mr. Barbeyrac's Note upon this Sect. (c) My Lord Bacon, De Augment. Scient. l. 7. c. 2. observes, that amongst Animals the Pleasure of Generation is greater than that of Feeding.

Men are inclined by a Natural Appetite, as Self-Preservation, and the Love and Education of Off-spring, many have rais'd a Scruple, as if they were not under the Care and Cognizance of the Law of Nature. For say these Authors, what need was there of a farther Engagement to such Performances, as the Sensitive Appetite, and Instinct did with sufficient Strength incite and drive us to before? But indeed their Dependance on natural Instinct, is so far from proving them to be uncommanded by the Law of Nature, that it rather argues a more peculiar and more earnest Care in Nature to have them observ'd, with the utmost Strictness, as the immediate Causes of the Safety and Welfare of Mankind: whilst distrusting, as it were, the bare Force of Reason, she assists and seconds it with so violent an Instinct, that Men cannot, without great Difficulty, bend the contrary way (a). Where should we find a Person who would venture the common Vexation of Children, were he not led to desire them, as well by a Natural Inclination (b), as by the sober Advice of Reason (c): especially since the means of obtaining them are such, as would appear both tedious and despicable to a wise Man, unless attended with some delightful Charm (c)? We acknowledge that there is a great Difference between Instinct and Reason, and that in most Cases those Powers take quite contrary Roads, and that therefore the Licentiousness of the former is to be bridled, and controll'd by the Authority of the latter; which to compass and effect is an Argument of a great and worthy Soul. But altho' Instinct hath not in it self the Force of an Obligation, yet it many times happens, that we may, by some superior Engagement, be obliged to undertake a Performance, which bare Instinct before inclined us to (2).

And hence we may infer the Falseness of that Position (d), which asserts that a Mother, who kills her Child to avoid publick Infamy, and so stifles her Instinct of Natural Affection by another Instinct of Aversion to Shame, is not guilty of a Sin against the Law of Nature. For the Infant's Life was guarded by that Law, as well as by the Instinct of the Mother; and it was her Duty to have known, that her Disgrace was an Evil which ought not to have been weigh'd against the Death of an Innocent, brought into the World by her free Consent. If the Care of her Reputation was dearer to her than the Pleasure of being a Mother, she ought to have consider'd this before she chang'd her pure and spotless Condition. But afterwards, it would be barbarous Injustice to conceal the Sin of the Parent by sacrificing the Child.

When Marriage is once contracted, in as much as the Gift of Fruitfulness is not conferr'd by human Power (e), a greater or a less Number of Children equally answers the Obligation of Nature. Nor should the Wife's Barrenness raise any Scruple in the Husband, as if he had been wanting in his Duty to the World (f).

IV. To carry on our Enquiries as clearly as may be, this in the first Place we take to be most evident, that all those impure Pleasures are repugnant to the Law of Nature, which aim at no other End than the Satisfaction of Brutal Lust (3). For the more warmly the Appetite of Love stirs in human Breasts, the more is Nature and Reason concern'd to provide, that the Irregularities of its Motions do not prejudice that comely Order, which is the very Life of Society; and that it be rather made to contribute to the Maintenance of Decency and Peace. Whence appears the most detestable Sinfulness of those Pollutions which we so justly call Unnatural.

But the Sin of Uncleaness is not confin'd to those gross Degrees; many grievous Violations of Chastity there may be in what we are wont to term the ordinary way of Nature; and these happen as often as we pursue our Pleasure, without regarding the only just End of it, the due Conservation of our Race. It hath indeed been asserted that many Nations of old thought it a Part of Natural Liberty, to prosecute an amorous Entertainment, without being (g) tied by the Rules of Matrimonial Strictness. But 'tis sufficiently manifest, that if all Men should

*Providit ille maximus mundi parens,
Cum tam rapaces cerneret fati manus,
Ut damna semper sobole repararet nova.*

————— *Calibem vitam probet
Sterilis juvenus; hoc erit quicquid videt
Unius ævi turba.*

Senec. Hypol. v. 465, &c.

The wise Creator knew the World was frail,
And order'd quick Succession to repair
Still with new Race the Breaches made by Fate.

————— Let our barren Youth Experience their mistaken Chastity,
And all you see must prove a short-liv'd Crowd,
A People of a single Age.

(a) Add. Oppian Cyneget. l. 3. v. 107, &c. Halieut. l. 1. v. 702, &c. (b) Vid. Euripid. Medea. v. 1090, &c. Hippol. coron. v. 616, &c. (1) See Mr. Locke's Essay of Human Understanding, B. 2. c. 21. s. 34. (c) Add. Val. Max. l. 7. c. 2. s. 1. Extern. Montaigne Essais, l. 3. c. 5. p. m. 137. Cartes de Passion. Art. XC. (2) See Mr. Barbeyrac's Second Note upon this Section. (d) Vid. Grafwinkel. ad Grot. l. 1. c. 1. s. 11. (e) Genes. XXX. 1, 2. (f) Senec. l. 2. Contr. 13. Fruitfulness doth not come at our Pleasure, nor at the time fix'd for it in our Account: Nature is absolutely at her own Disposal; and not tied up by human Laws: Sometimes she hastens and outruns our Wishes, sometimes she proceeds slowly, and disappoints them with her Delay. Nature doth not work by Form, nor is Chance confin'd to Rules and Prescriptions. The Law may appoint a set Day, but Nature takes no notice of the Limitation. (3) See Mr. Barbeyrac's 1st, 2d, and 3d Notes upon this Section. (g) Thus Mr. Selden, De J. N. & G. Sec. Heb. l. 5. c. 4. shews from the Jewish Rabbies, that before the Mosaical Law it was allowable for a Woman, not yet married nor betroth'd, to bestow herself, either gratis, or upon Consideration of a Reward, without the Confinement of Cohabitation. Whereas the succeeding Institution absolutely forbid circumcised Persons to use any Community of Bed, without entering on a married State: though if this were practis'd between a circumcised Person and a Heathen it was, in some Cases, adjudg'd lawful. To which Purpose they cite Deut. XXIII. 18. Lest.

should make a constant use of this irregular freedom, human Society could not long subsist, either in a graceful or in a quiet Condition. And therefore, according to Bp. Cumberland's most true Rule (1), That in which it is impossible for all Men to agree, cannot be according to right Reason.

Nor was the Command of Natural Law, as to this Point, so quite worn out amongst those very Nations, which allow'd a publick Security to such Practices, as that they really approv'd of what they permitted, or absolv'd the Actors from all Marks of Disgrace. 'Tis a famous Aphorism of Ulpian, that a Whore is Vile, or Wicked, by her Professon; and the Romans thought it a sufficient Punishment to these loose Ladies, to make them shew their License in Publick before the Magistrates, and thus to stand infamous on Record (a). The Principle, then, on which those States and People proceeded, who conniv'd at such youthful Disorders, was, by the means of these publick Traders in Lewdness, to preserve and guard the private Chastity of Virgins and of honest Matrons. In warmer Climates, the Extravagance of wild Gallants (b) might have injur'd the most sacred Modesty, had it not been diverted by a Tribe of forward Nymphs, who were proud of their Addressees, and met them in their irregular Designs. This, however, is manifest, that the same Nations which extenuated rather than defended these Immoralities, as no more than harmless Failings, and pardonable Slips of Youth, did yet, at the same time, assert in the highest Degree the just Honour of the Marriage-Bed, and esteem'd Faithfulness to it, as a Mark of singular Sanctity and Goodness.

V. A diligent Observer of Human Nature will easily discover how extravagantly Unreasonable it is, that Mankind should be propagated by Chance-Beds, without Confinement, and Rule. Such a Life, they tell us, the People of Attica led before the time of Cecrops, cohabiting like a Herd of Beasts, under no regard to Decency or Distinction. Whoever was made a Mother by so wide a Provision, presented her Medly-Off-spring to any one of the many Fathers who would be pleas'd to own and to accept it. When Cecrops, by the institution of Matrimonial Laws, had banish'd this barbarous Custom, he pass'd, in Fables with the Common People, for a kind of an Hermaprodite; either because he taught them to know their Fathers, as well as their Mothers; or because, by the conjugal Tie, he incorporated, as it were, Two into One (c). Who is there that can pretend to be insensible, how little Difference would be left between Beasts and Men, should the Ordinances of Marriage be universally cancell'd and repeal'd? Indeed the Beasts would then have the Advantage of the Comparison (d). They are frequently observ'd to use some sort of Constancy, in their way of Love, and some Semblance of Conjugal Fidelity. And if the fair Mistress raise a Quarrel in the Herd, 'tis only at certain Seasons of the Year, when they feel a Warmth beyond their ordinary Temper. But Men would be perpetual Rivals; and Human Race would be confounded and destroy'd by so wild a Method of its Preservation. Again, How miserably weak and helpless would be the Condition of the breeding Mothers? Or, if they weather'd out that Danger, How great would be the Trouble, how high the Charges of Education, above their single Strength or single Fortune? It is plain, the Men would not be over-forward to assist them under either of these Burthens; not in the First, unless they knew themselves to have been the Cause of their Pain; not in the Second, unless they could be assur'd, that the Child, to be provided for, was their own. And 'tis not likely, that they should be able to obtain any Certainty in these Points, without

Levit. XIX. 29. Genes. XXXVIII. 14. &c. Add. Grot. ad Genes. XX. 9. The Reason given by Maimonides for this Prohibition is, that the Contentions and other Evils, usually occasion'd by these irregular Liberties, might be avoided, and that Good of certain Notes and Distinctions of Families procur'd. 'Tis not necessary to appeal to the Testimony of Heathen Writers, yet see Epicet. Enchir. c. 47. Plaut. Curcul. Act. I. Sc. I. v. 33, &c.

PH. Quin leno hic habitat. PAL. Nemo hic prohibet nec vetat, Quin quod palam est venale, si argentum est, emas, Nemo ire quinquam publica prohibet via, Dum ne per fundum septum facias semitam. Dum te abstineas nupta, vidua, virgine, Juventute, & pueris liberis; ama quod lubet.

PH. 'As I take it, here lives my worthy Procurer. PAL. 'We have a fair Market; if you bring Money in your 'Pocket, you are free to buy any thing but prohibited 'Goods. No Body hinders you from travelling in the 'High-way, so long as you don't break Hedges and In- 'closures: and in the same manner so long as you re- 'frain from Wives, Widows, Virgins, Youth and Free- 'men's Sons, you may e'en love as you list.

(1) Of the Law of Nature, c. 5. s. 46. (a) Tacitus of Vistilia, Ann. L. 2. c. 85. That Youth in Quintilian (Decl. 14.) was arriv'd at the highest Pitch of Impudence, who forms a publick Accusation against his Miss, for giving him a Potion that suppress'd his Love. Amongst other of his Rants, this one, I had just enough to furnish my self with a moderate and sparing Measure of unforbidden Joys, sufficient for the Necessities of Life. Therefore instead of a Wife I was content with a Mistress, and with a single Mistress, which is a most certain Sign of Frugality and good Management in Pleasure. (b) V. Cicer. pro Caelio. c. 17, &c. Epicet. Enchir. c. 47. Add. Mufon. in Stobaeus, Serm. VI. Grot. in Math. V. 27. The Mahometans allow Fornication with their Maids; which the more Vertuous Indians do, in all Shapes and on all Accounts, detest. Plutarch (de Virtut. Mulier.) reports, that among the People of Cbios, for the Space of seven hundred Years together, there was no mention made of Adultery, or any other unchast Practice; though the Island was Famous for Beauties.

(c) Athenæus, l. 13. c. 1. (d) Quintil. Inst. Orat. l. 9. c. 2. 'Tho' Dido in Virgil, complains of her late unhappy Match, yet her real Thoughts could not but break out, and she declares in the midst of the Lamentation, that a Life absolutely without Marriage, was the proper Condition of Beasts not of Men.

Non licuit thalami expertem sine crimine vitam Degere more fera? Æneid. 4. 550.

K k k

the

the regular Restraints of Marriage. For what Aristotle (1) reports of a Nation in Africa (a), where the Wives are held in Common, but the Children distinguish'd and appropriated, by the Likeness of Features, is, at best, a very deceitful Method. Tho' indeed Theocritus (b) makes the Tokens of an Adulteress τίκτα ἑποφ' ἐοικότερα πατρὶ, Children unlike the Husband; and Horace's Wish for the Roman Chastity is Laudentur simili prole puerperæ, 'Let the Women 'deserve Commendation, for picturing the 'legal Father in the Child.

Lastly, since without Matrimonial Prescriptions, we cannot well suppose any such thing as Families, nor without Families any publick States; and since therefore the whole Order and Harmony of Civil Life is founded on these Regulations, it is most clear that were Men entirely releas'd from such Bonds, they must live in an unfociable, separate Condition, little better than Brutal. And therefore Horace shew'd his true Judgment in deriving the Calamities of his Country:

*Fœcunda culpæ secula nuptias
Primum inquinavere, & genus & domos:*

*Hoc fonte derivata clades
In patriam populumque fluxit. L. 3. Od. 6.
[V. 17. &c.]*

First those Flagitious Times
(Pregnant with unknown Crimes,) Conspired to violate the Nuptial Bed;
From which polluted Head
Infectious Streams of crowding Sins began,
And thro' the spurious Breed and guilty Nation ran.

My Ld. Roscommon.

To all which Considerations we may add, that without a Successor, in way of Marriage, no Man could be born to an Estate or Inheritance; and should we take away these Advantages, Human Life would be deprived of its chief Ornaments, if not of its necessary Supports. 'Tis remarkable what Justin (c) relates of the Partheniæ amongst the Spartans; they were born, as the Irony of their Name imports, from promiscuous and irregular Embraces, and being grown up to a Sense of their Shame and of their Poverty, fearing to starve at home thro' Defect of Paternal Fortunes, they were necessitated to leave their Country, and ramble abroad in a Body, to force a Maintenance and a Seat (d).

VI. In as much then as it appears evident, beyond Dispute, that in order to the keeping up a comely and a regular Society amongst Men, it is necessary, that the Propagation of Human Kind should be settled and limited by Matrimonial Constitutions, we are in the next place to enquire what Obligation particular Persons, of proper Years and Abilities, have, to engage in a married State. And here we may first take a View how the Matter before us hath been order'd, by the Laws of various People and Governments, and then how far it seems to be determin'd by the bare Law of Nature. It was the Doctrine of the ancient Jews, as Mr. Selden (e) informs us, that by the Divine Precept of Encrease and Multiply, all their Males were bound to Marry before they had compleated twenty Years; unless upon account of some Natural Defect; or because they had devoted themselves to a Life of Chastity, and constant Study of the Law. And this Command they said extended to all the Posterity of Noah. They added, that he who buried his Wife, without seeing a Son and a Daughter, (and those as Perfect by Nature as their Parents) had not yet fulfill'd the Precept. But that in case a Man's Son and Daughter were dead, and had left Children of both Sexes, the Grandfather was then free. That, otherwise, upon Defect of Issue of either Sex, Men were oblig'd to contract new Marriages, so long as their Age would give them leave. And therefore, that if a Man had either taken a barren Wife, or one that was not yet old enough to be a Mother, he did not answer the Law, unless he took another immediately capable of Bearing. Leo Muinensis (f) observes farther, that altho' the bringing of a Son and Daughter into the World, seem'd to be sufficient for the full Observance of that Divine Command, yet a Man, of convenient Age and Strength was still bound to seek a married Life, for the avoiding Fornication (g). But whether this Injunction extended to Women as well as to the Men, was a Point not very well settled and agreed amongst them. It is most probable, that their Judgment was to this Purpose, that the Women were not indeed oblig'd to any determinate Time, because it is not in their Power to marry when they will; but that upon the first fair Offer made them, they stood engag'd to contribute their Assistance to the World. 'Tis a Saying amongst the same Doctors, that He who neglects the Precept about the Multiplication of Mankind, ought to be look'd upon as a Murderer (h).

Many other Nations have, in their publick Institutions, declar'd themselves to the same Purpose (i). Plutarch recites a Law of Ly-

(1) Pol. B. 2. c. 2.

(a) Who perhaps are the same that Nicol. Damascen. (de Mor. Gent.) calls Limyrnii.
(b) Idyl. 17. (c) L. 3. c. 4. (d) Servius (ad 3. Æn. v. 551.) & Lactantius (de fals. relig. c. 20.) vary somewhat in the Relation of this Story. Hither may be refer'd most of the common Arguments urged against Plato's Community of Wives. Add Stob. Serm. LXV. 'Cabas, King of Persia, having by a Publick Ordinance, commanded the promiscuous Use of Wives and Women, his Subjects rose in Rebellion and expell'd him the Kingdom. Procop. Hist. Pers. l. 1. c. 5. Agath. l. 4. (e) De J. N. & G. Sec. Heb. lib. 5. c. 3. (f) De rit. Hebr. p. 4. c. 2.
(g) Plato (de LL. l. 11.) delivers the like Opinion, and adds, One of each Sex is the least Number of Children that ought to pass for sufficient. (h) Yet the Sect of the Essenes amongst them utterly forswore the Use of Women. Vid. Plin. N. H. l. V. c. 17. Solin. c. 38. (i) Varro, in Leg. Mænia apud Nonium in Eunuchare. He that destroys his Country, his greater Parent, is most inexcusably guilty: And this every one does, so far as in him lies, who either disables himself from being a Father, or defers to act as such. See the Sayings of Musonius, Hierocles and Antipater in Stob. Serm. LXV. Add. Arrian in Epictet. l. 3. c. 7. J. Pollux l. 3. cap. πρὸς ἀγαμύων, mentions Suits at Law carried on at Athens and Lacedæmon, against Celibacy and late Marriage.

curgus, by which it was Enacted, that Old Bachelors should be excluded from the solemn Sports and Dances of the Women; and that in the Winter Season, they should go naked up and down the Forum, singing a Song in Dishonour of themselves, the Burthen of which was, that They own'd themselves to be thus justly punish'd, for disobeying the Ordinances of their Country. And that, besides all this, they should have none of these Honourable Marks of Respect and Duty paid them, which the younger Spartans were otherwise oblig'd to pay to the elder. Upon this last account Dercyllidas, a Famous, but Unmarried General, desiring a younger Person, according to Custom, to resign his Seat to him at a publick Solemnity, the Youth refus'd, with this smart Reason, Because, says he, you have brought no Son into the World who might hereafter give place to me (a).

At Rome the Censors sometimes impos'd a Mulct (for that Reason call'd Uxorium) upon such Men as had grown old in a single Life (b). And good Metellus speaks home to the Business, in Gellius, Could we, my Country-men, says he, do altogether without Wives, we need not give our selves these unnecessary Troubles. But since Nature hath so order'd Matters, that Human Life can neither be very free and easy with them, nor possibly subsist without them, we ought rather to consult our perpetual Safety, than our present Conveniency (c).

It follows from the same Principles, that it is sinful and unjust to emasculate Persons; at least, without their Consent. Domitian forbid the Performance of this Operation by an express Law (d). After which, those who had so ridiculous a Design on themselves, or on others, were oblig'd to ask leave of the Emperor, or the President of the Province (e). Upon what Account the Eastern Monarchs were so fond of employing Eunuchs in their nearest Offices, may be seen in Xenophon (f). To whose Reasons, we may add this one farther, that the Prince could, without Envy or Offence, make himself Heir to these Childless Favourites, and so ingross all they had got in his Service (g). Amongst the Jews, an Eunuch was not permitted to be a Judge in any Case; upon the Opinion of their excessive Spitefulness and Cruelty. And, in the Indies, 'tis a common Saying, that To castrate Beasts makes them more Tame and Humble; but the same Experiment tried on Men makes them more Insolent and Intolerable (h) (1).

(a) Μὴ μάλιστα ἀγαπῶ, &c. Phocylides.

To live unmarried is to die unmourn'd:
Add to your Race; see Nature's Gift return'd.

Plato de LL. l. 4. p. 835. Every Man, who arrives at the Age of thirty Years, ought to chuse him out a Wife; considering with himself, that Mankind is by a kind of Natural Desire prompted to a Pursuit of Immortality; there being no Person who is not Ambitious of keeping a perpetual Name and Memory with succeeding Ages. Now the Way by which human Race obtains an endless Duration, is by leaving an uninterrupted Course and Series of Posterity. It cannot but be highly criminal, for a Man to rob himself of Immortality through his own Default: yet whoever neglects the Affairs of Marriage and Issue, voluntarily throws away his Title to this unvaluable Benefit. Cicero (de Finib. &c. l. 3. c. 20.) observes, that in order to a Man's living as his Nature directs and enjoins, it is convenient, that he apply his Mind to the Choice of a Partner, and the Desire of Posterity. Philip Baldæus (de Idolat. Ind. Gent. p. 2. c. 3.) reports of the People of Benjin, that they look on it as the basest Reproach to want Children: such a Person (they say) is not worthy to see a Man first in a Morning.

(b) Valer. Max. l. 2. c. 9. Festus in Uxorium, & ibid. Jos. Scal. Plutarch reports the same in his Life of Cæmilus. (c) Posidonius called the Myrians, who admitted no Women amongst them, & Cælius, Men without Life. Strabo, l. 7. p. 205. Of the Lex Papia Poppææ, see Lips. ad Tacit. l. 3. Ann. c. 25 & Jacob Godofred. Which Law the Christian Emperors repeal'd, probably by Advice of the Church-men. Vid. L. 8. t. 58. C. de infirmis. pen. calibat. & Sozomen l. 1. c. 9. The Speech of Augustus in Dion. Cassius, l. 56. is remarkable on this Subject. Ælian, (P. H. l. 6. c. 6.) recites a Law of the Spartans, enacting, that 'If a Man had increas'd the Common-wealth with three Children, he should be releas'd from keeping Watch; with five, from all publick Duties and Charges. See likewise a long Passage of Hierocles in Stobæus, Sermon. LXXIII. (d) Vid. Sueton. Domit. c. 7. Statius, IV. Sylv.

Qui fortem vetat interire Sexum. Forbids the nobler Sex to feel Decay.

Add Martial. l. 6. Ep. 2.

(e) Vid. Casaubon. ad Sueton. & Justin. Mart. Apol. 2. Add Deuteron. XXIII. 1. Joseph. Antiq. Jud. c. IV. 8. L. 9. t. 2. l. 27. f. 28. D. ad L. Aquil. Novell. 142. & ib. Dion. Godofred. l. 4. f. 2. l. 5. D. ad L. Cornel. de Sicariis. Euseb. Evangel. Præp. l. 6. c. 8. In Syria and Osroene many castrate themselves like the Priests of Cybele. But King Abgarus commanded the Hands of all those, who had abused themselves in this manner, to be cut off: after which Order, the infamous Practice ceased in that Country. Quintil. Instit. Orat. l. 5. c. 12. For my own Part, when I contemplate Nature, there is no Man who seems not more fair and comely to me than our Eunuchs; who are thus abused, purely to render them more Beautiful. Providence can never be so negligent of its Work, as to let Infirmary pass for Excellency: nor can that which would be Monstrous, if produced by Nature, be Handsome if procur'd by Art. Let this Cheat, this feigned Alteration of Sex, delight the Votaries of Lust; yet Vice and Immorality will never be able to gain such an Empire, as to make that Good, which they make Costly and in Request. How Hermotius revenged himself on Panionius, who had thus dismembred him, See Herodot. Uran. (f) Cyropæd. l. 7. p. 116. Ed. H. Steph.

(g) Heliodor. Æthiop. l. 8. in fin. The Eunuchs are the Ears and the Eyes of the Persian Courts; who having neither Children nor Kinsmen to engage their Minds, depend entirely on Him that employs them. Claudian. in Eutrop. l. 1.

Eunuchus nulla pietate movetur,
Nec generi nativæ carvet.

— An Eunuch feels no Tie
OF Duty, Nature, or Progeny.

(h) Heliodor. l. 9. Eunuchs have ever a great deal of Jealousy in their Temper; and therefore they make the best-keepers of Women: being then employed to hinder others from Pleasures, which they are themselves incapable of enjoying.

(1) See Grotius upon Deuteron. XVI. 18.

Some observe that Eunuchs were first made in those Countries, where Poligamy was permitted: the Number of Men being superior, or at least equal to the Number of Women. Others maintain that they owe their Original to the Right of War; when a Conqueror sparing the Lives of those he overcame, thought fit to put them into this unmanly Condition, that having lost the Springs of private Interests and Affections, they might, with the more Security be trusted in his Service.

VII. If we consider barely the Force of Natural Law, we shall conclude, that in as much as Matrimony is the great Source, and the main Foundation of a Social Life (1), Men are so far bound to enter upon it, as they stand engag'd to all Duties necessary for the attaining of that End: yet Nature lays this Injunction on us in the manner of an Affirmative, Indefinite, Unlimited Command; so as not to oblige necessarily all Men, and at all times; but requiring due Occasion before it exacts our Performance. Now in fixing the Occasion of Matrimony, we are not to rest in the Fitness of Age and of Ability, but are likewise to suppose that the Match offer'd us, is answerable to our Birth and Condition, and that we have both competent Wealth to maintain, and competent Prudence to govern a Family (a). The Laws of the Islanders prohibit Marriage to Persons of extreme Poverty (b). Sometimes too it happens, that the Condition of the present Times, or the strict Care of a Function incumbent on us, will not give us leave to think of changing our State of Life (c). And therefore it is not only unnecessary, but senseless and ridiculous, that those young Fools should run a Marriage-hunting, who have neither Means nor Wit to keep a Family from starving, and who, at the best, are only able to stock the Nation with a young Succession of Beggars. Those, again, deserve not only Excuse, but Commendation, who decline a married State, that they may with more Ease and Opportunity improve and cultivate their Minds, for the publick Service of the World. For since the two great Uses of Matrimony are the Preservation of Race, and the avoiding those fouler Lufts which would stain and disgrace Human Society; so long as neither of these Ends is like to be prejudic'd, we ought not to blame a Resolution of single Life in such Persons as probably foresee, that they shall be able thus to do more good to their Country and to Mankind, than in another Condition. If therefore a brave and generous Soul should either be insensible of the idle Strings of Love, or able easily to master and suppress them (d), and, at the same time, capable of benefiting the World otherwise than by advancing its Stock and Breed; we cannot, in reason, imagine, that Nature lays any Obligation upon him to let the Charms of the fair Sex hinder or divert his worthy Designs (e): Especially since there are so very few, who can pretend to this Gift of Chastity: so that the World is in no Danger of coming to an untimely End by their Resolution. Much less ought those Persons to fear Reproach and Censure, who having serv'd Mankind by a former Marriage, decline a second Engagement for the sake of their Children. Tho', on the other side, the Law of Charondas, in Diodorus Siculus, l. 12. c. 12. seems a little too hard, excluding all those Men from the publick Councils of the State, who had brought a Mother-in-law into their Family. The Reason he gave for so severe a Decree was this, He esteem'd it impossible, that a Man should be able to advise well for the Interest of his Country, who had been so far from consulting the Good of his own Children. If his first Marriage prov'd successful, he ought to rest satisfied with that Happiness; if unfortunate, he could not be reckon'd in his Wits, for running on a second Danger. But indeed, a second Marriage does not always prove injurious to the Children of a former Bed. And as to the other Part of the Objection, it may be easily retorted. We have something like it in the old Greek Epigram,

Ἐπις ἀποξ γήμας, πάλι δούτεα λέιτεα διώκει,
Ναυηρὸς πλωεὶ δὲ βυδὸν ἀργαλέον.

*He that escapes one Wife, and ventures on,
Courts a new Ship-wrack, when but half undone.*

To which Harry Stephens has given this Ingenious Answer,

Ὅστις ἀπαξ γήμας πάλι δούτεα λέιτεα διώκει,
Ὅυχ' ἔλος μομφῆς ἀξίος ἔδειμῆς.
Ἐὶ κακὴ ἢ πρῶτη, τάχα δούτερον ἢ κακὴ ἔσται,
Ἐὶ δ' ἀγαθὴ, ἀγαθὴν ἐλπίδα κ' ἴσ' ἔχει (f).

*When a stout Widower tries the second Hit,
'Tis hard to blame his Memory or Wit.
This may be Good, if one was Bad before;
If Good, kind Heav'n may have as Good in store.*

On the other hand, it sometimes falls out, that besides the general Ordinance of Nature, a Man may be oblig'd by a particular Reason to enter on a married State. As, for Instance, suppose a Royal Family should be reduc'd to one only Person, that Person is highly and peculiarly bound to seek an honest and lawful way of (1) Cicer. de fin. bonor. & mal. Lib. 3. c. 20. Add. Plat. de Leg. Lib. 4. p. 835.

(a) Plin. l. 1. ep. 14. When I reflect on the common Custom of the World, and the Laws of our State, which command us, in Marriage, to have a considerable regard to Wealth and Fortune, I think it is very proper to mention, that the young Lady's Father is Master of a very fair Possession. And besides this, the Hopes of a very fruitful Bed ought, in my judgment, to go a great way in determining our Choice, and to be reckon'd amongst the chief Conditions of a Bride. Add Orat. M. Hortali. Tacit. An. l. 2. c. 37.

(b) Arngrim. Jon. Descrip. Island. c. 8. (c) See 1 Corinth. VII. 26. (d) ἐξενήσῃ τῷ μὲν ἐξῆσθαι, as Philostratus speaks, Apoll. T. l. 8. c. 3. A Lover of Abstinence from Love. (e) Add Arrian in Epictet. l. 3. c. 22. p. 311, 312. Ed. Wolfii. Corn. Nep. Epamin. c. 10. (f) Add Charon. de la Sageffe, l. 1. c. 42, & 46. f. 2, 3. Bacon's Essay 8. encreasing encreasing his Race, to hinder the Confusion which must follow in the State, upon Default of Succession; and because, as Euripides (a) says, Male Children are the Pillars of great Families. And what we have thus settled, in regard to the Obligation of Matrimony, seems more agreeable to the Nature and Condition of Men, than the Rule which Bishop Cumberland (b) lays down, and so largely insists on, that Since the Earth is now well stock'd, Men are left at their liberty, to choose either a married, or a single Life.

VIII. From these Considerations, Judgment may be made, how far the Laws of particular States have Power to streighten or to loose the Natural Necessity of Marriage: And this, in the first Place, is evident beyond Dispute, that a Civil Legislator may, by Vertue of his Sovereign Authority, constrain all his Subjects, who are capable by Nature, and have means of procuring a sufficient Maintenance, to engage in Matrimony by such a time. But to compel a Man to marry for the Propagation of a Race of Beggars, is equally Impolitick and Inhuman. Yet it looks more mild, in this Case, to enforce an Ordinance rather by Rewards to the Compliers, and Subtraction of Benefits from the Recusants, than by direct and positive Punishments. Of this sort was the famous Jus trium liberorum (i) amongst the Romans; and that Spartan Law mentioned by Aristotle (c) enacting, that He who had increas'd the State with three Children, should be free from the Trouble of keeping Watch; and he that had one above that Number should stand farther exempted from all kinds of Burthens. After the same manner Strabo (d) informs us, that the Persian Kings propos'd a yearly Prize to those who had been Fathers of most Children.

It is no less evident, that a Prince or State would act most ridiculously, as well as most unjustly, should they in general forbid Matrimony to all their Subjects: Or should they allow this Privilege to the First born only of every Family, and enjoin strict Celibacy to all the rest (e). For it is impossible, that in so great a number, All should be able to lead a Life of Severity and Continnence. Nor would these Constitutions be a more merciful way of retrenching the exuberant Flood of Subjects, than the cruel practice of exposing Infants so common in ancient Greece, or the other of procuring Abortion, which Aristotle (f) himself adviseth.

But if it appear upon common Reason or Experience, that any particular Office in a State can be more conveniently discharg'd by an Unmarried, than a Married Person, the Civil Laws may fairly restrain such an Employment to men that are content to live singly, and may oblige them to quit the Honour, when they change their Condition. Provided still, that the Number of Men, privileg'd to forbear Matrimony by the Gift of Continnence, be sufficient to fill these Offices with a Constant Supply. For it must not be suppos'd that the design of such an Ordinance, is either to Licence Irregular Lusts, or to do Violence to any Man's Natural Temper; in as much as no Man is compell'd to act in this Capacity, who judgeth himself unfit for the Service. And it must be a farther Proviso, that as to the great Business of Posterity, due Care hath been taken of it another way, so that it may not suffer by these Restraints.

In the same manner, it is lawful to forbid an Ambassador, a General, or a Soldier, when sent on a Long or Dangerous Adventure, to carry his Wife with him, in the Expedition (g).

Farther, since the Natural Obligation to Matrimony is undeterminate, and admits of some Latitude, the Civil Legislator may fairly fix the Age of the Persons, who shall be thus join'd together; or assign a Period taken from some other Consideration. Thus in the Lex Papia Poppæa amongst the Romans it was order'd, that No Woman under Fifty, should marry a Man of Sixty, and no Man under Sixty, a Woman of Fifty: Which we find afterwards repealed by Justinian (h). So Plato (i) limits the time of a Man's being a Father, from Thirty to Fifty-five years of Age, and of a Woman's being a Mother, from Twenty to Forty (k). Amongst some People, it was unlawful for a Man to Marry, before he had given some signal Proof of his Valour upon the Enemy. As Strabo tells us of the Carmanians, no one of whom was permitted to have a Wife, till he had taken off the Head of an Enemy, and presented it to his Prince (l).

And, what is more, though Persons are Naturally free to Marry whom they please, yet a Government, if it seem for the Interest of the State, may in some Cases restrain and limit this Privilege: for instance, it may be order'd, that no Subject shall Marry a Foreigner, none of the Nobility a Plebeian. Arrian in his History of the Indians reports, that the several Orders of the People were forbid Marrying one into the other. A Husband-man could not give his Daughter to an Artificer, nor an Artificer return the Compliment in the same manner (m).

(a) Iphigen. in Taur. v. 57. (b) De Leg. Nat. c. 6. s. 9. (i) Vid. J. Lips. Excurs. in Tacit. Ann. III. 25.
 (c) Polit. l. 2. c. 7. Ælian. Var. Hist. Lib. VI. c. 6. (d) L. 15. p. 504. Ed. Cas. Herodot. L. 1. p. 36. Ed. H. Steph. (e) Vid. Dig. Lib. 23. t. 2. De ritu nupt. Leg. XIX. (f) Polit. VII. c. 16.
 (g) Vid. l. 1. t. 16. D. de Offic. Procons. Tacit. Ann. III. 33, 34. Pliny (l. 6. c. 22.) reports of the People of Taprobane, 'That, in their Choice of a King, they do not only require, that the Person be good and merciful, but likewise that he be advanced in Age, and without Children: and if after his Admission, he happens to obtain Issue, they depose him from the Government, lest the Kingdom should become Hereditary. Solin. c. 66.
 (h) Vid. Sueton. in Claud. c. 23. & Cod. Lib. V. t. 4. de nuptiis, Leg. 27. (i) Plato de Rep. Lib. V. p. 657. Ed. Wech. (k) Add Aristot. Polit. VII. c. 16. & Michael Piccart, ibid. Tacit. Germ. c. 20. (l) Strab. l. 15. p. 500. Add Abrah. Roger. de Bramin. p. 1. c. 11. (m) We find the same account in Hieron. Ofor. de Reb. Gest. Emmanu. l. 2. & Montagne, L. 3. c. 5. p. 630. Ed. Paris. 1657. Fol.

Lastly, it may be enacted by Civil Powers, that Marriages shall not be contracted but with the intervening Consent of Publick Authority; especially between Persons of considerable Figure and Importance in the State. The force of which, and of the like Laws may amount to this Effect, that all Matches contrary to such Injunctions, shall either be declar'd Void, or shall be divested of certain Privileges, with which they would be otherwise attended. Thus, in Livy (a), we find the Campanians petitioning, 'That they might have the Liberty of marrying Roman Dames, and that, if they had formerly been so happy, they might still keep them, unmolested; and that the Children, already born to them, might be acknowledged for their just and lawful Heirs. And, in Dionysius Halicarnassens (b), we meet with a Decree of the Senate, upon the Commencement of a War with the Latines, 'Giving leave, on both sides, to the Latine Women, that had married Romans, and to the Roman Women that had married Latines, either to tarry with their Husbands, if they thought fit, or else to return into their proper Country, leaving behind them their Male Issue, and carrying with them their unmarried Daughters. The Effect of which was, that almost all the Roman Dames quitted their Husbands, and return'd to the City: whereas all the other Women, two only excepted, prefer'd their Roman Husbands to their Latine Friends (c).

IX. We are, in the next Place, to enquire by what Heads of Conditions, with regard to the Law of Nature, the Matrimonial Covenant is compleated; and likewise what Right accrues to both the Persons from such an Union. And here we suppose before-hand, that all Human Persons, whether of one Sex or of the other, are naturally equal in Right; and that no one can claim the Sovereignty over another, unless it be obtain'd by the free Act of one of the Parties. For though, in Strength of Body and of Mind, we are allow'd to have the Advantage of the Fair Train, yet this Superiority is not, of it self, sufficient to justify us in setting up for their Masters and Governours. Therefore whatever Right a Man holds over a Woman, in as much as she is by Nature his Equal, he must acquire, either by her Consent, or by the Sword, in a just War. Yet since it is most natural, that Marriages should be founded on mutual Good-will; the former way seems more proper for the winning of Wives, the other for the procuring of Slaves. And therefore, in those Countries where it is usual to marry their fair Captives, the Men lay aside the severe Authority of Masters, for a more gentle and more agreeable Sway (d).

If then, we suppose all Mankind thus plac'd in a Condition of Natural Equality and Liberty, it may happen that a Woman as well as a Man, shall desire Issue peculiarly for herself, over which she may preside and command. Now to accomplish this End, it is necessary, that a Covenant pass between a Man and Woman, for their Mutual Assistance in serving Posterity. If this Covenant be Simple, not join'd with any Agreement about constant Cohabitation, but respecting barely the Procreation of Children, it conters on neither Party any Sovereignty or Right over the other, except they may challenge, on either side, the promised Assistance, with regard to Posterity. And, in this Case, if it was expressly intimated in the Covenant, that the Woman desir'd Issue properly for her self and her own Management, the Children shall be under the Government of the Mother. Such a kind of simple and irregular Marriage we may call Amazonian, if any Credit is to be given to the Stories of those warlike Dames (e). In the same manner, when Thalestris courted Alexander the Great (f), and (as some tell us) the Queen of Sheba King Solomon, the Off-spring could not fairly be reckon'd spurious, but, in their way, honest and legitimate. So Travellers report of the Inhabitants of the Kingdom of Congo, that their main Strength consists in Companies of Women, who live by themselves in certain Territories assign'd them by the Prince; and at set times chuse some that they like best among the Men, for the sake of continuing their Breed: If the Child prove a Boy, they send him back to his proper Father, if a Girl they keep her in their own Train, and educate her under the Severity of Martial Discipline (g).

Now though it must be confess'd, that this kind of Coupling is Barbarous, at least, if not Beastly; yet, amongst the most Civiliz'd Nations, there are often to be found Instances of Marriages, in which either both Parties are declar'd Equal, or else the Husband is oblig'd to submit to the Supreme Civil Authority of the Wife. As when a Queen, who enjoys a Crown in her own Right, takes a Husband,

(a) L. 38. c. 36. (b) L. 6. init. (c) Senec. de Benef. l. 4. c. 35. I promised you my Daughter in Marriage, afterwards you appear'd to be a Foreigner; under that Character I may not enter into such a Relation with you: The same Law which lays this Prohibition on me, protects me from the Censure. (d) Add Deuteron. XXI. c. 10. &c. (e) Vid. Arrian. de expedit. Alexand. l. 7. Procop. H. G. l. 4. Palæphat. de fab. narr. l. 1. c. 33. Jormand. de Reb. Getic. c. 8. Steph. Clerc. Quest. Acad. 2. Justin. l. 2. c. 4. Diodorus Siculus, l. 2. c. 45. reports, 'That the Sovereign Dames oblig'd their Husbands to perform all the Servile Employments, even those which, in other Places, belong particularly to the Maids: He tells us the same of a People in Lybia, whom Hercules utterly destroyed, thinking it a Reproach to Mankind, That a Nation should be suffered to continue where the Government was in the weaker Sex, l. 3. c. 53 & 55. (f) Vid. Curtium, l. 6. c. 5. (g) Vid. Edvard. Lopez de Regno Congo, l. 2. c. 9. Add. Franc. Alvarez. Descrip. Æthiop. c. 133. Isaac Voss. de Nilo, c. 19. Michael Glycas, Ann. pag. 11. tells of the Agileans, 'That amongst them the Women bear Rule over the Men, and are very Communicative of themselves, without any Danger of their Husband's Jealousy: that they Till the Ground, build the Houses and perform all the nobler Labours of the other Sex.

and yet retains her Superiority in the Government (a).

X. But we may take our leave of these irregular Matches, and proceed to examine those, which appear more suitable to the Condition of Human Nature. This then we take for granted, that the Matrimonial Covenant ought to begin at the Man, not at the Woman, that the Courtship should be us'd not on her side, but on his: this method agreeing best with the Genius and Character of both Sexes. For tho' it be in many Places usual, for the Relations of the Woman, to make the first Offer to the Man, yet this is only to direct his Aim in the Attack, and to fix a particular Mark for his Addressees.

This Principle being suppos'd, it is clear, that the Man, when he makes his Suit, is desirous of such Issue as shall be true and genuine, not spurious or adulterous. And therefore we ought to abhor, as contrary to Reason and Nature, the licentious Practice of many Nations in this Point. Travellers tell us, that the King of Calecut hath Two Wives, each of whom is constantly waited upon, with all Familiarity, by Ten of the Idolatrous Priests; and that the King esteems it an Honour to be thus abus'd; though he hath the Prudence, not to let his own Illegitimate Race succeed to the Crown, that Dignity being reserv'd for his Nephews (b). Indeed the Women are in that Country, for the most part, held in common (c); whence it comes to pass, that the Fathers neglect the Care of their Children, and all Inheritances descend by the Mother's side (d). Buchanan (e), to the Discredit of his own Country, reports a Law of Evenus, or Ewen, the Third King of Scotland, by which it was order'd, that the first Night of a Nobleman's Marriage should be the King's Fee; and that the Noblemen, besides taking the same Liberty with the Commoners Wives, should again command their Company whenever they pleas'd.

Till Milcolomb the Third, at the Intreaty of his Queen Margarite, chang'd this scandalous Indulgence, into a Fine of half a Mark, to be paid by the Husband, in lieu of parting with his Bed the first Night (f). At this time of Day, in the Kingdoms of Pegu and Arraca, at the Nuptial-feast, one of the Guests prevents the Bridegroom in his Addressees to the Bride; yet it is Capital for him to be catch'd a second time, using the same Freedom (g).

We may conclude farther, that nothing is more repugnant to that Decency and good Order which ought to be kept up in the World, than to lead a wandring desultory Life, without any fix'd Abode, without any certain Seat of one's Fortunes and Concerns (h). The Education of the common Off-spring is then certainly carried on with most Convenience, when the Parents unite their Assistances to so good a Design; and their Minds are by these sweet Pledges knit together in a stronger Band of Affection (i). Besides a constant Cohabitation, cannot but afford vast Delight and Satisfaction to an agreeable Couple: and then the Husband is by this means much more secure of his Wife's Chastity, than if they dwelt at a distance. Such Matrimony, then, as is regular and perfect, conformable to Natural Reason and to Ends of Civil Life, besides the Covenant of Fidelity to the Bed, doth imply an Agreement on the Woman's side, that she will constantly dwell with the Man, and unite in the strict Society of a Family; as well for the Education of the Children, as for mutual Aid and Pleasure (k). The Custom amongst the Chinese, for the Women to bind their Feet so very streightly, that they cannot go without great pain, seems to have been first introduc'd on this politick Account, that being disabled from gadding abroad, they might be oblig'd to fix with the greater Application on the Care of Domestick Affairs (l).

From what hath been observ'd before, it appears

(a) See the Articles of Marriage between Philip and Mary in Thuan. l. 13. ad ann. 1553 & 1554. Those of Mary Queen of Scots, ibid. l. 20. ad ann. 1558. & l. 37. ab init. Add. Marian. Hist. Hispan. l. 24. c. 5. Diodor. Sic. l. 1. c. 27. mentions a Decree that pass'd among the Egyptians in Honour of Isis, importing, 'That the Queen should enjoy a greater Degree of Power and Dignity than the King; and that, amongst private Persons, in the Nuptial Writings, the Wife should be invested with the Command, and the Husband be obliged to obey.' Add. Guicardini. l. 6. p. 178. where he speaks of the Government of Castile administr'd with joint Authority by Ferdinand and Isabella. (b) Vid. Aloyf. Cadamust. Navig. c. 75. we meet with the like Account in Ludov. Rom. Navig. V. c. 7. (c) Vid. Pet. de Valle, Itiner. P. 3. Ep. 7. (d) The Practices of the Colchians, reported by Basbequius, in his third Epistle, are very filthy. (e) Rer. Scotic. l. 4. (f) Id. l. 7. Polydor. Virg. Hist. Angl. l. 10. Comp. Sueton. Caligul. c. 40. & Boxhorn. Not. (g) Ludovic. de Bartheima, Itiner. p. 2. c. 11. Of the Inhabitants of Camictu, see Paul. Venet. l. 2. c. 38. (h) Xenophon had reason to call a Man's Home or his Fire-side the sweetest and the most sacred Possession that he enjoys. Cyropæd. l. 7. p. 116. Ed. H. Steph. Add. Aristot. Oecon. l. 1. c. 3.

(i) Genes. XXIX. 32. Lyfias, Orat. 1. c. 2. 'So soon as she bore me a Child, I admitted her into the full Trust and Care of all my Affairs; judging this the firmest Band that could unite and engage us to each other.'

Conciliat animos conjugum partus fore.

Senec. Herc. Oet. ver. 407.

'Children are, commonly, the means of uniting and endearing a married Pair.'

(k) Demosthen. in Near. 'The Reason of our taking Wives is to obtain Issue, and to see our Family Affairs under a faithful Directress.' Add. Xenoph. Oeconom. & Columell. de R. R. l. 12. prefat. (l) Comp. Martin. Hist. Sin. l. 3. c. 28. Plutarch. Præcept. Conjugal. 'As Physical Humours and Qualities are said to diffuse themselves whole through the entire Mass, so ought the Bodies, the Wealth, the Friends and Acquaintance of a married Couple, to be thoroughly mixt and blended together. When the Roman Lawgiver forbade either of the Pair to give any thing to the other, the meaning was not to exclude them from a Participation of Benefits, but to shew that they ought to hold all things Common between them. Quintil. Declam. 249. 'Ye know that Marriages are the things which hold a Common-wealth together, which preserve Race and Issue, and confirm and regulate the Descent of Patrimonies and Inheritances, and maintain Domestick Safety and Peace. Without this Security at Home, pears why the Husband, and not the Wife, ought to have the Priviledge of chusing their seat of Residence; for it is He that admits her into his Family, of which he himself is the Head and the Director. Though no Man, commonly speaking, will be so hard as not to ask his Wife's Consent in this Point; especially if she brought him a considerable Fortune.

It is farther evident, that without a Breach of the Matrimonial Contract, the Wife cannot, against the Husband's Consent, ramble abroad, lodge a-part, or deny him reasonable Favours, unless upon extraordinary Occasion.

Upon the same Principles is founded that Presumption in Civil Law, that Children born in Lawful Wedlock, are really the Husband's, unless there appear some very strong Argument to the contrary, sufficient to overthrow the Favour of the Presumption (a). The English Laws are particularly complaisant to the Fair Sex, obliging the Husband to own a Child, born after he hath been absent many Years, provided he hath been all the while within the Bounds of the Island (b). And they ground this Indulgence on two Reasons, first, Because the Wife hath solemnly given her Faith, that she will be True, which she is presum'd not to have broken; and, secondly, because it is in the Husband's power to secure his Wife's Honesty; and what Right, or Power, any Person enjoys, he is always suppos'd duly to exercise (c).

And hence, the Opinion of the Vulgar is not altogether unreasonable, when they fancy, that the Wife's Dishonesty casts some kind of ignominious Blemish on the Husband: as if, either out of Folly or Meanness of Spirit, he had neglected to use his Authority (d). Domitian struck a Gentleman's Name out of the List of Judges, for receiving his Wife again, after he had put her away upon an Accusation of Adultery (e). Some give another reason why a Mark of Shame should be fix'd on this Misfortune; and that is, because it looks disgraceful in a Husband not to be Master of those good Qualities which might engage his Wife's Affection, and secure her Fidelity. A Man that lies under this unhappy Censure, and cannot conveniently redress the Wrong which he suffers, would do well to consider Euripides's wife Aphorism, that

Εν σοφείᾳ τὰ δ' ἐστὶ θνητῶν
 Λαυθόνειν τὰ μὴ καλὰ.

It is a great Part of Human Wisdom, to cover those things with Secrecy, which look ill if they come abroad (f).

Charron's (g) Remark will not, in all Cases, hold strictly good, that 'tis a vulgar Error and Folly to upbraid a Man with his Wife's Dishonesty; as if this were to make him suffer for the Crime of another, which 'tis not in his Power to prevent.

It may not be amiss, on this Subject, to throw in an Occasional Observation, that those Marks of Reproach, which the Common People fix on the Heads of such unfortunate Husbands, are no new Invention, nor confin'd to the Customs of our Western World: For we read that the Emperor Andronicus caus'd the largest of the Stag's Horns, he met with, to be fastened on the Gate of the Market-place, on Pretence to shew the Vastness of the Beasts he had kill'd in Hunting, but really as a silent Rebuke to the Immorality of the City, and the Lightness of the Dames (h). But as She cannot properly be call'd an Adulteress who suffers in her Honour by Compulsion and Force (i), so to keep a Wife who hath been thus injur'd doth not, in it self, appear any way foul or reproachful (k).

XI. We are farther to examine, whether by the mere Law of Nature, from the Principal Contract of true and perfect Matrimony, there ariseth any proper Sovereignty or Dominion of the Husband over the Wife. Indeed in holy Scripture it is expressly said, that the Will or Desire of the Wife shall be to her Husband, and ' Home, who would venture to travel into foreign Parts, or so much as take a Journey to a distant Estate; to go on publick Embassies, or to engage in military Expeditions? See Montagne's Essays, lib. 3. c. 5. p. 630, 631, 632. Edit. Paris. fol.

*Juvenilis ardor impetu primo furit;
 Languescit idem facile, nec durat diu
 In Venere turpi, seu levis flammæ vapor:
 Amor perennis Conjugis castæ manet.*

Senec. Octav. v. 186, &c.

' The Fire of Youth in Love's dishonest Joys,
 ' At the first Blaze is Fury, Flash and Noise;
 ' But spends in Smoak, and what it gave destroys.
 ' Whilst the chaste Passion of a lawful Dame
 ' Burns with a gentle, but an endless Flame.

(a) See above, lib. 4. c. 11. f. 10. & vid. Gell. l. 3. c. 16. Plin. Hist. Nat. l. 7. c. 5. (b) See Chamberl. present State of England, P. 1. c. 16. (c) 'Tis a Saying of Gyges in Herodot. (Clio p. 3. Ed. H. Steph.) Every one ought to keep an Eye on his own Concerns. Plato observes (in Alcibad. l. 1. p. 441. Ed. Weck.) 'That the Wives of the Spartan Kings are publicly watched and overseen by the Ephori, least any Heir should be obruded upon the Crown, who is not truly of the Race of Hercules. Whereas in Persia the King seems, in Excellency of Nature, so much above his Subjects, that there is no Danger of counterfeiting his Strain: And therefore his Wives are under no Guard, but that of their own Reputation. (d) Add. Cartes. Pass. Art. 169. (e) Sueton. Dom. c. 8. So by the Attic Law, 'A Man was reckon'd base and scandalous who kept his Wife, after he had discovered her Dishonesty, Demosthen. in Nær. Add. Dig. lib. 48. t. 5. ad Leg. Jul. de Adulter. leg. 2. f. 6. & leg. 29. princ. In Tacitus, (Ann. lib. 2. c. 85.) 'Labeo the Husband of Vistilia was cited to give an Account why he had forborn to see the Law executed upon his Wife, after she had been openly convicted: and he could not otherwise excuse himself than by pretending that the Sixty Days, which the Law allow'd him for considering time, were not yet expired. (f) Eurip. Hippol. Corn. Add. Plutarch. de Anim. Tranquil. p. 467. E.F. (g) L. 1. c. 39. n. 11. (h) Nicer. Acominat. de Imper. Andronic. l. 2. (i) Vid. Gartian. Cauf. 32. Qu. 5. c. 2, &c. (k) Yet we are to commend the Proceeding of David in the 2 Samuel XX. 3.

that He shall rule over her (a). But this being enjoind the Woman by way of Punishment, seems to bear the Face of a Positive Institution. To discover, then, how the Law purely Natural directs in this Point, we may first observe, that to be bound to follow the Will of another in some certain Business, is not altogether the same thing as to be subjected to his Dominion; because the former may result from a simple Pact. For there are many Pacts, especially of this kind, I give you this to do such, or such a thing; I do this, provided you will do so, or so for me; in which it was at first in the Power of either Party to chuse, whether he would enter into the Agreement or not. Yet the Covenant being once consented to on both sides, one Party must follow the Will of the other, (as to this particular Business;) and not vice versa. Whence it appears, that how far soever the Wife may be oblig'd to submit to the Husband's Will in the Affairs proper to Matrimony, yet it doth not presently follow, that he must needs have the sovereign Command over her, in other Actions and Concerns.

Again, the End of Marriage is not like that of Common-wealths, the Defence and Security of Men; (for how weak an Union, as to any mutual Safety, is that which consists only of two Persons?) but is directed wholly to the Propagation of Human Race. Therefore as a Common-wealth cannot be understood without a sovereign Ruler, so it should seem that Marriage, without any Superiority of Government, might subsist well enough under the common Force of Contracts, assisted with the Engagements of Friendship and the Charms of Love. It must be confess'd, that a separate Family hath somewhat in it much like a State or Community, which not regularly allowing of more than one Head, the Wife when she is admitted into it, ought, one would think, to yield a full Submission to the Lord and Director of the Society. But it may be urg'd, in answer to this Objection, that a Family, if increas'd with a numerous Train of Servants, hath two Ends and Designs, one common, the other proper. The common End consists in mutual Defence and Security, arising from the united Strength of so many Persons. In this respect, tho' some supreme Sway be necessary, yet, in as much as the Wife is but little concern'd in that Affair, the Unity of the Family may be very well kept up, altho' she be join'd to her Husband by no severer Bands than those of Affection and the Matrimonial Covenant. Thus we find the Patriarch Abraham exercising a Sovereignty over his Domesticks, and yet treating Sarah with the kind Equality of a Sister (b). Tho', at the same time, her dutiful Behaviour towards him is highly commended in the holy Scriptures; and it is said particularly, that she call'd him Lord (c). The proper or peculiar End of Marriage seems likewise attainable, without any Inconvenience, although neither of the Parties should bear any such absolute Authority over the other, as must include the Power of Life and Death, and of the most vigorous Restraints; but the Ties of Friendship and the Obligation of the free Contract, may very well serve to hold Man and Woman together. Yet this Contract, (the Husband having the better Part in the Terms and Conditions, and the additional Advantage of his Sex,) seems to be form'd in the manner of those Leagues and Covenants which we call Unequal; so that the Wife is bound to Obedience, and the Husband rather to Protection (d). Not that it is repugnant to the Law of Nature, for a Wife to be subjected to her Husband in the way of strict Political Government. For the fear of supreme Authority, and the Endearments of Conjugal Affection are really no more destructive of each other, than the Sovereignty of the Prince extinguisheth the Love of the Subject. And this full Political Authority, as it may be acquired by any Husband, by means of a new Covenant annex'd to the Matrimonial Agreement, so we find it in some Nations, allow'd to all Husbands in general, by Virtue of a publick Custom or Constitution. Cæsar (e) tells of the Ancient Gauls, that they had the Power of Life and Death, as well over their Wives as over their Children. Amongst the Germans, the Husbands were impower'd to execute the Punishment of Adultery; not as an Indulgence to their Rage and Resentment, but as an Effect of their just Power and Command (f). How the Case stood at Rome, Gellius thus informs us from a Speech of old Cato's. A Husband (except after a Divorce,) is a Judge, a Censor, and a kind of Sovereign Prince over his Wife: if she acts any thing perversly, or scandalously, he sets a Mult upon her; if she drink Wine to Excess, if she commit any Dishonesty with another Man, he condemns her to a suitable Punishment. Again, says that grave Senator, should you apprehend your Wife in the Act of Adultery, you might kill her without farther Process or Trial; on the contrary, should she find you guilty of the same Crime, she hath no Right to touch you with a Finger. Tacitus (g) hath recorded a later Instance of this ancient Custom. He reports that Pomponia Græcina (Wife to the famous

(a) Genes. III. 16. Ephes. V. 22, &c.(b) See Genes. XVI. 2, 5, 6. XXI. 10, 11, 12.(c) 1 Pet. III. 6.(d) Martial, L. 8. Ep. 12. v. 3, 4.• *Inferior matrona suo sit, Prisce, marito,
Non aliter fuerint femina virque pares.*Should Manly Empire not controul the Fair, Husband and Wife were an unequal Pair.Plin. Paneg. c. 83. Many worth by Men have been hindred from being Chief in the State, by their not being Chief in their own Families. (e) De B. G. l. 6. c. 19. (f) Tacit. Germ. c. 19. What he says of their Power over their Servants see afterwards, cap. 3. f. 4. (g) Ann. XIII. 32. Add. Euripid. Medea, v. 230, &c. Varen. Descrip. Japon. lib. 13. Lex Wisigothorum, L. 4. t. 4. c. 3.

Plautius, who triumph'd for his Victories in Britain, being accus'd as a Favourer of foreign Superstition, was remitted to the Judgment of her Husband: And he, according to the old Institution, calling an Assembly of her Relations, took supreme Cognizance of her Life and Honour. We must not omit the most remarkable Practice of the Sacca, a People of Scythia, among whom, as Ælian (a) tells us the Story; 'When a Young Man seeks him out a Wife, he is oblig'd, in the first place, to engage her in single Combat; and if he gets the better, he leads off his Captive in Triumph, and ever after acts the Sovereign over her: if the Victory fall on her side she is the Queen, and he the Slave. And this Contention is not design'd to endanger the Lives of the Combatants, but only to determine the Mastery between them.

What Power the Husband hath over the Goods of the Wife, is likewise to be adjusted, either by the Contract and Agreement of the Parties, or by the Decision of the Civil Laws. These Engagements are to be strictly obey'd in the several Points which they have settled; as for Instance, Whether the Woman shall bring a Portion at Marriage; Whether or no the Couple shall join Purfes, and mix their Effects in the Common Stock, Whether the Husband shall have an absolute, or a limited Disposal of his Wife's Fortune; and the like Questions.

Amongst the Japoneſe the Women marry without Portions: indeed, the Maids Parents, if of the wealthy Sort, send a Sum of Money as a formal Present to the Bridegroom on his Wedding-day, but he presently returns it in the same ceremonious manner; the reason they alledge for their Custom is, that they may not give the Women an Occasion of Insolence and Pride. And there they have this mortifying Proverb, That a Woman, so long as she lives, hath not so much as a House that she can call her own: Before Marriage she is a Dependant on her Father's Family, in Marriage on her Husband's, in Widow-hood on that of her Children (b). It was a Custom with the old Thracians, that the fairest of the Maids should be expos'd to publick Sale, and be given in Marriage to the highest Bidder: on the other side, that those whom Nature had been less kind to, should expend their Fortunes to buy themselves Husbands (c). The Assyrians likewise dispos'd of their Virgins in the way of Sale (d).

Where the Civil Laws have not defined these Matters, or where the Parties live in a State of Natural Liberty, the Husband and Wife may settle any such Point as they please, by particular Contract.

XII. For the further Illustration of this Subject, it will not be amiss to examine the Doctrine laid down by Hornius in his first Book de Civitate (e): First of all, he rejects the Opinion of those who assert, that the Husband hath, by Nature, a Sovereignty over the Wife. And thus far we approve his Censure, if the Persons, against whom he disputes, did maintain the Husband's Sovereignty to be the free Gift of bare Nature, without any intervening Contract, or without the Wife's voluntary Submission. For this indeed would be repugnant to the Natural Equality of Mankind; and a Fitness or Ability to govern cannot, of it self, confer a Right of Government.

Hence he proceeds to affirm, That there can be no Sovereignty, publick or private, of one Person over another, but that which ariseth from the exprefs Appointment and the most solemn Intervention of Almighty GOD. Now as to this Position, we cannot but observe, that when Enquiries are thus made into the Origine and Fountain of Dominion, what we search for is the nearest, the immediate and the second Cause; the first and universal Cause of all things being ever presuppos'd. And therefore, though it appear most evidently, that God hath commanded such an Order to be introduc'd among Men, yet the main Question will be still behind, what Contracts are required to put Men in a way of conforming to the divine Precept. For he must have little Knowledge of Letters, who can imagine, that when we say God is the Author of such or such a Moral Institution, we mean that he produceth it, as He did at first the Heaven and the Earth, without the Intervention of any thing formerly created. That God expressly order'd the making of the Jewish Tabernacle, is no manner of Reason why we should not say, that the Workmen were the next and the immediate Cause of the Fabrick. Thus although it be enjoin'd by the Divine Oracle, that the Woman shall be in Subjection to the Man, yet to make him actually and immediately her Sovereign, it is necessary, that she promise Obedience to him by her own free Covenant. To say the contrary would not be less ridiculous, than to pretend, when God bids us Have Dominion over the Beasts of the Earth; there is no need of our using any outward means to obtain it, as by Hunting, &c.

The Argument, this Author afterwards makes use of, is certainly most trifling and childish. The Wife, says he, hath no such thing as Conjugal Sovereignty, and therefore she can confer no such thing on the Husband. As if, by the Agreement of several Persons, a new Moral Quality could not be produc'd, which did not actually exist before. To constitute a Dominion, it is by no means necessary, that it must be first really possess'd by one Party, and then translated on another; (as Physical Substances cannot be given away, unless they had before a full and formal Being: ) but this Superiority then ariseth, when any Person divests himself of that Power of resisting Another, which his Natural Liberty gives him, and engageth his Faith, that he will submit, in all things, to the Will of him whom he thus chuseth for his Governour.

(a) V. H. l. 12. c. 38. (b) Bern. Varen. Descrip. Japon. c. 12. (c) Solin. c. 15. Thus Scythians in Xenoph. Exp. Cyr. Lib. 7. f. 20. Edit. Wells, Oxon. If you have a Daughter, I'll fairly buy her after the Custom of Thrace. Add. Heraclid. de Polit. Mela, lib. 2. c. 2. (d) Ælian. V. H. l. 4. c. 1. Herodot. Clio. Add what the Roman Laws deliver concerning the Prohibition of Donations between Husband and Wife, Lib. 24. t. 1. D. de donat. inter Vir. & Uxor. (e) Cap. 1.

Farther, although, in Holy Scripture, the Subjection of Eve be said to have been enjoin'd her as a Punishment for seducing her Husband; yet it doth not hence appear, that the Husband's Sovereignty, after the Fall, hath not for its nearest and immediate second Cause the Agreement between Man and Woman. For, since a necessity of Obedience, doth not always include an unhappiness of Condition, (as the most blessed State of the Holy Angels is not impair'd by their yielding the strictest Service to God,) the Punishment attending the Woman's Inferiority seems to be this, that she bears the Yoak unwillingly, with inward Grudgings at her Station, and a Natural Desire of Command. And therefore it is no Contradiction to say, that the Superiority of the Husband naturally springs from the Consent of the Wife; and that GOD Almighty in way of Punishment to the Woman, hath made her Subjection troublesome and uneasy.

The following Distinction looks but like an impertinent Niceness, Whatever Will, or whatever Voluntary Pact we can now conceive in the Woman, belongs purely to the Act of contracting Marriage; and consequently is to be understood of that Consent and Approbation by which she acquiesceth in the future Government of such a particular Husband. This is no more than to say, that the Husband's Sovereignty is not produc'd by the Consent of the Wife, but being before establish'd by GOD's Command, the Wife voluntary enters under it. As a Traveller doth not build his Inn, but freely makes use of it when he findeth it built to his hands.

It is sufficient in the whole to observe, that the Dominion of one Person over another, consider'd as a Moral Entity, doth not exist without the Concurrence of some human Act, and cannot be understood without Subjection and Obedience: And that the Woman, for this reason, lies under no Obligation to obey, before she hath by her own Consent, submitted to the Rule and Authority of an Husband. And though that she should thus submit herself, be indeed agreeable to the Divine Will, yet this doth not hinder, but that her own Covenant and her Subjection consequent upon it, are the immediate and nearest Cause productive of the Husband's Power.

XIII. Nor can we grant what the same Author maintains, that the Husband, besides the Command of the Family, and of Conjugal Affairs, is invested with an absolute Power of Life and Death, in which Right the Summ of his Authority consists. For though this Power be meant as it is unrestrain'd by Civil Constitutions, and as it amounts not to a licentious Excuse of Murther and Parricide, but to a lawful Authority of inflicting condign Punishment on Capital Crimes: yet, that every Sovereignty as it is seated in a proper Person, not precariously obtain'd, nor circumscribed by a Superiour, doth import the Power of Life and Death, is an Assertion that we should not be inclin'd to assent to, without very good Proof. Certainly the End of Matrimony requires no such absolute Authority. And if it be objected, that all grievous Enormities ought to be brought under Human Cognifance, we will only ask, who shall punish a Sovereign Prince, or who the Father of a Family, living separate from all Civil Government? We confess, that if the Wife prove guilty of Intolerable Wickedness, she may (in this Natural State,) be expell'd the House as an Enemy, and may be kill'd by the Right of War. And we have already (a) granted, that even this most strict Political Power, is not repugnant to the Nature of Marriage, though we are very far from allowing it to be essentially necessary.

XIV. We are oblig'd here to explain that common Maxim of the Lawyers, that Consenting and not Bedding, makes a Marriage (b). Which will bear these two Senses, that a Couple, whatever Freedom or Familiarity they may use, cannot be Husband and Wife, unless they have pass'd their mutual Consent to live in Wedlock (c): or, that so soon as both Parties are come to an Agreement, the Matrimonial Contract ought to be esteem'd perfect, even before the Ceremony of the Bed. Our Judgment on the Point is this, that as it is requisite to the full transferring of Propriety, that the Thing be plac'd under the power of Another, in such manner, that he may dispose of it at his pleasure; so to make a Wife it seems necessary, that the Woman deliver her self as it were into the Possession of the Man, for the common Ends of Matrimony: but it is by no means essential to this Agreement, that the Bed begin it. It is said Rebecca became Isaac's Wife after he had brought her into his Mother Sarah's Tent (d). And I question whether we ought to call it Adultery, when a Woman betroth'd to a Man in his Absence, but not led home to his House, nor given into his Possession, is Bedded by another Person: altho' we suppose, that the former

(a) Sect. 11. (b) Lib. 35. t. 1. l. 15. D. de Condir. & Demonstrat. & de Regul. Jur. l. 30. Or, as Quintilian, Decl. 247. expresseth it, Familiarities and Meetings without proper Rights can never make a Wife, Vid. Can. 5. caus. 27. quæst. 2. & Cod. Lib. 5. t. 5. l. 8. de incest. & inutil. nupt. (c) And therefore Aeneas pleads for himself in Virgil.

*nec Conjugis unquam
Prætendi tædas aut hæc in fœdera vini.* Æn. 4. v. 338, 339.

(d) Genes. XXIV. ver. ult.

Engagement, as made by Proxy, had, in the Eye of the Law, the full Force of consummated Marriage. On the other side, it would be absurd to say, that Tobias's Wife had not a Title to that name the three first Nights (a). Or that our Women are not Wives when the Priest hath perform'd the solemn Office, 'till the Evening Diversions of the Bride-Chamber.

According to the Opinion of the Jews (b), Consummation, as well as Consent, was, before the Law, required to the completing of Matrimony. Yet, by their Law, Consent alone render'd a Marriage Valid (c). Grotius (d) observes, that no Proceeding was made in the Nuptial Affairs, 'till the Solemnity had been usher'd in by the hearing of Divine Service in a publick Assembly: which most religious and most decent Institution, the Jews probably receiv'd from ancient Tradition, and do still observe; and from them, it was admitted into the Christian Church. For this Reason, tho' at the settling of the Contract, they obliged the Man to swear to preserve the Virgin's Honour, till the Day of Marriage; yet, for the greater Security, they shut her up from him in the Apartment of the Women, till the time of that finishing Ceremony (e).

XV. We are in the next place to enquire, whether by the Law of Nature, the Matrimonial Bond be limited to a single Man, and a single Woman? or, which is the same thing, whether Polygamy be naturally allow'd? Polygamy is of two sorts; either when one Woman promiscuously admits of many Men, or when one Man is at the same time join'd in Marriage to many Women. To the former kind belongs the famous Platonical Communion of Wives: a Custom propos'd by Plato in Idea (f); but really practis'd by many Nations. Diodorus Siculus (g) reports, of the Taprobanians in India; 'That the Men did not confine themselves to strict Wedlock, but possess'd the fair Sex in Common, and educated the Children, (in whom they reckon'd themselves All concern'd,) with Care and Love. Nay, the Nurses often chang'd their little Infants, so as to hinder them from knowing their own Mothers (h). Cæsar (i) tells us of the Ancient Britains, Ten or Twelve of them together have Wives in common amongst them; especially Brothers with Brothers, Fathers with their Sons. But, every Woman's Children are attributed to him, who first married her, when a Virgin. Where it is plain, that great Author cannot mean, that one Woman had, at the same time, Ten or Twelve Husbands, as Mr. Selden (k), amongst others, imagines; but that so many Men having each of them married his proper Wife, afterwards agreed upon that friendly way of possessing them (l). Lycurgus, as Plutarch delivers, 'Endeavouring to prevent the Vain Womanish Passion of Jealousie, thought this the best Expedient, to allow Honest Men the Freedom of each other's Bed: laughing at those who resent, in so high a manner, these petty Injuries, as to pursue their Revenge by Murthers and War. He look'd on it as no indecent Custom for a Man, step'd into Years before his Wife, to recommend her to the Arms of a Young and Virtuous Friend, and when there appear'd Hopes of having a Child, by so good a Father, to challenge the Blessing to himself. On the other side, a good and upright Man, who esteem'd a Married Woman for her own Virtue, and for the Comeliness of her Children, was encouraged to beg of her Husband, without Ceremony, the Favour of a Night's Lodging; That he might transplant into his own Garden some Slip of so Goodly a Tree. Indeed Lycurgus was of Perswasion, that Children were not so much the Propriety of the Parents, as of the whole Commonwealth: and therefore he would not have them begotten by the first Comers, but by the best Men that could be found. He censur'd the Lawgivers of other States, who whilst they spent no Pains or Charge in promoting and improving the Breed of their Dogs, and of their Horses; yet, being themselves Old and Infirm, shut up their Wives from other Men. Whereas a little Reflection would have taught them, that the Virtues and Vices of Children, their Success or Mis-carriage do chiefly redound to those who have the Care of their Education. And this Institution of the Spartan Founder, the Historian judgeth to have been set on foot, φρασεως

(a) See Tob. VIII. 10. (b) Vid. Selden de J. N. & G. l. 5. c. 4. (c) Deuteron. XXII. 23, 24. Add. l. 8. C. de Incest. & inutil. Nuptiis. (d) Add Matth. I. 18. (e) Comp. Genes. XXIV. 67. Deuteron. XXI. 13. (f) Vid. l. 5. de Repub. & Marci. Ficin. in Prefat. (g) L. 2. c. 58. (h) Add. Diod. Sic. l. 2. c. 58. Of the Ithyophagi, l. 3. c. 15. Of the Hyllophagi, l. 3. c. 24. Of the Nomades, c. 32. which are likewise mentioned by Strabo, l. 7. Of the Garamantes, vid. Plin. l. 5. c. 8. Solin. c. 43. Of the Troglodyte Agatharbid. c. 30. Pompon. Mel. l. 1. c. 8. Of the Agathyrse, Herodot. Melpom. p. 161. Ed. H. Steph. Of the Gindani and Nomades, ibid. Of the Inhabitants of Thule, Solinus reports, (I know not with what Credit) that They hold their Women in common, and are Strangers to fixt Matrimony, c. 35. (i) De B. G. l. 5. c. 14. (k) Lib. 5. cap. 11. (l) The same Custom is mention'd, though not so distinctly, by Xiphilin. Epit. Dion. in Ner. in Bonduica's Speech; and again in Sever. Strabo reports somewhat like this of the Sabaens: 'Their Possessions (says he) lie in common to all of the same Blood and Family, but the Eldest bears the chief Sway. One Wife serves them All: he that comes first hath Admission to her Bed, placing his Staff before the Chamber-door: But the Nights she passeth with the Eldest. They punish Adulterers with Death, and such they esteem every Intruder into another Family, lib. 16. pag. 538. Vid. l. 11. p. 353, 354. de Messaget. & Tapyr. Of some Inhabitants of the Kingdom of Calecut, Ludovicus Romanus (Navig. l. 5. c. 8.) informs us, 'That every Woman is at the same time married to Seven Husbands, who lodge with her by turns. When she is brought to Bed, she presents the Child to which of the Seven Fathers she pleaseth, and no Appeal lies from her Determination, Vid. & Pet. de Valle Itiner. p. 3. Ep. 7. Joan. Boem. de Mor. Gent. l. 3. c. 7. reports of the Lithuanians, from Aeneas Sylvius, 'That the Women, by Consent of their Husbands, have their Sparks, whom they call Assistants of their Bed; whereas on the other side, for the Husbands to use the like Liberty, would be accounted highly Infamous.

καὶ πολιτικῶς, Agreeable to Nature and to Policy (a).

The Stoicks (b) too were of Opinion, that Wife Men ought to communicate their Beds, as well as their other Possessions: because by this means All esteeming the Children their own, would love them with equal Tenderness; and there would be left no room for Jealous Fears, no Suspicion of Adultery or Dishonesty (c). The borrowing and lending of Wives, amongst the Romans, is a Practice much talk'd of by Authors (d). Solon, in his Laws, permitted an Heiress, whose Husband prov'd impotent, to call in the Assistance of his nearest Kinsman (e).

Yet we are not to make the least Doubt but that all these Licentious Indulgences are repugnant to the Law of Nature (f). For the Natural and Regular End of Marriage is, the obtaining of Children, whom we may, with Certainty, call our own. But what room can there be for Distinction in this wild and confus'd Mixture? Again, the Business of Nature not requiring so numerous a Concurrence, all these additional Helps and Services proceeded, not from Necessity, but from Lust. Besides, a most material Objection against these Irregularities is, that the kind and endearing Titles of Relation are sunk and extinguish'd in them. Plato proposeth by way of Remedy to this grand Inconvenience, that the Civil Laws shall supply the Defect of Natural Kindred; that all Persons shall esteem their Seniors in Age, as their Parents; their Juniors, as their Children; their Equals, as their Brothers and Sisters. But this is a most idle and vain Expedient; for to have no certain Father, no certain Child, &c. is, with regard to mutual Affection, the same thing as to have none at all. 'Tis well urg'd by Lactantius (h): If all, says he, are concern'd in every Child, who can love a Child as his own, when he must needs be Ignorant, or at least Doubtful, whether it be his own, or no? On the other side, Who would reverence a Man as his Father, when indeed, he is uncertain to whom he owes his Being? Whence it comes to pass, that he must take a Stranger for his Father, and his Father for a Stranger. And, it was a good Answer to one, admiring there should be no such thing as Adultery heard of in Sparta, That their very Matrimony was Adultery. Farther still; The main Difference betwixt the Conjugal Union of Mankind, and the wild Freedom of coupling amongst the Beasts is, that the Wife engageth her Faith to be true to the Husband's Bed. Which Engagement, if he voluntarily release, and madly betray his own Honour to new Rivals, he is unworthy the Name, not only of a Husband, but of a Man; and is to be look'd upon as a most vile Disturber of Human Decency and Society. As for the Excuse of Lycurgus, and others of those Ancient Lawgivers, that so fair a Soil as a Young Wife ought not to lie fallow, under the Neglect of an unactive Husband, their most ready and most Honest way of preventing such Mishaps, had been to prohibit Marriage between Persons of improper Years. And then for the Point of Jealousy, by it they must mean, either that senseless Passion, which torments a Man's Head without good Suspicion or Reason, or else a due and proper Vigilance and Caution, in order to the preserving a spotless Bed: the former kind of Jealousy, the most foolish, and the most miserable Disease of human Minds (i), their Community of Wives could not cure; and the other being the just Effect of Reason and Prudence, it ought by no means to have taken away (k). Nor shall I ever be perswaded, that to lay all Possessions in common, and to give each Man the Privilege of calling every Thing his own, is the surest Method of preserving Peace and Friendship in the World. Every one must indeed acknowledge, that it is much more for the Publick Benefit to have a State fill'd with healthy and vigorous, than with diseas'd and weakly Subjects; and at the same time, that the Parent's Constitution hath a considerable Influence on the Child's. Yet did this Rule hold true more generally then it doth, it were by no means worthy of so high regard, as that in consideration of it, we should dissolve the sacred Ties of Marriage, and shake the main Foundation of all good Order amongst Men (l).

XVI. The other kind of Polygamy (1), and that which more properly claims the Name, being the joint Relation of many Wives to one Husband, hath been the Practice of many Nations, in ancient and in modern Time. The Mosaical Law was so far from forbidding this Custom, that it seems in several places to suppose it (m). And GOD, by the Prophet Nathan, reckons amongst the peculiar Favours and Blessings, he had bestow'd on David, that He had given him his Master's Wives into his Bosom (n). Mr. Selden (o) assures us that the Jews esteem'd it lawful for a Man to marry as many Wives as he pleas'd, provided he could maintain them, and yield a Supply in all things answerable to their Relation. Yet it was the

(a) The same Law is mention'd by Xenophon. de Reb. & Leg. Lacedamon. (b) In Diog. Laert. Zen.
 (c) Add. Thom. Campanell. de Civit. Solis. (d) Vid. Plutarch. Num. & Cat. Min. So Cato is commonly said to have lent his Wife Marcia to Q. Hortensius. Vid. & Lucan. l. 2. v. 328. (e) Plutarchi Solon.
 (f) Comp. Matt. XXII. 25, &c. (g) L. 5. de Repub. p. 658. A. Ed. Wech. (h) Div. Instit. l. 3. c. 20.
 (i) Vid. Oppian. Cynaget. l. 3. v. 237, &c. (k) Vid. Senec. Herc. Oet. v. 233, &c. Vid. Bayle Nowwell. Lettres contre Maimbourg. Lett. 17. f. 2, 4, 5. (l) The Argument which some are not asham'd to bring from our ways of promoting the Breed in Horses, is too filthy and scandalous to deserve a Refutation. Add Aristotle's Discourse against Plato on this Subject, Polit. 2. c. 2. It is a worthy Saying of his in the same Work, l. 7. c. 16. For Persons, who are truly and properly Man and Wife, to seek another Partner, and another Bed, ought to be reckon'd amongst the vilest and most infamous of Offences. (m) Vid. Grot. lib. 2. c. 5. f. 9. (n) See Deuteron. XXI. 15. XVII. 16, 17. & sic. Ambrosii, apud Gratian. Caus. 32. quest. 4. c. 3, 7. (o) 2 Sam. XII. 8. (p) De Uxore Hebr. c. l. 1. c. 9.

Advice of their Sageſt Rabbies, that for the avoiding the Inconveniencies of Number, no Perſon ſhould exceed four, except the King. He that acted contrary to this Rule, was adjudg'd Guilty of notorious Impudence, and of Diſobedeince to the Inſtitutions of his Anceſtors. The High-Prieſt was allow'd one only Wife at a time, tho' he was not hindred from marrying another, in caſe of the Death, or Divorce of his firſt. By the Prohibition of Deuteron. XVII. 17. They were perſwaded, that their King ought not to go beyond Eighteen. If the Men of their Nation liv'd in a Country, where Polygamy was not tolerated, they thought them oblig'd to conform: as particularly in the Roman Empire, the Laws of which expreſly reſtrain'd them from the uſe of ſuch a Liberty (a). As for the modern Jews, we are inform'd by Leo Mutinenſis (b), That thoſe of them who live in the Eaſt, ſtill keep up their ancient praſtice of Polygamy, whereas in Germany, they are not allow'd this Privilege, and in Italy very rarely; and only in Caſe a Man hath liv'd with his preſent Wife many Years without Iſſue (c).

Tacitus (i) obſerves of the ancient Germans; They are almoſt the only People amongſt the Barbarians, who are contented with ſingle Marriages. Indeed ſome few Perſons of extraordinary Merit, are advanc'd to the Favour of more Ladies than one; but then they are courted to this Liberty, not out of Luſt, but upon account of their ſingular Virtues and Worth. Thus Cæſar (d) tells us of Arviſtus's two Wives, choſen out of different Nations.

The Grecians, according to their regular Frame and Conſtitution, admitted but of one Wife; yet we find in one of the Athenian Decrees, an Exception to this purpoſe, That to encrease the number of Men, at preſent deficient, it ſhall be lawful for any Perſon to have Children by another Woman, beſides her that is, in a more ſtrict ſenſe, his Wife (e). And hence Athenaus (f) urging the Improbability of the common Story, that Socrates had two Wives, inasmuch as this was contrary to the primitive Ordinance of Cecrops, and was not objected to him by the Comedians, who handled him ſo reproachfully on other Occaſions; at laſt concludes, that if the matter of Fact were really true, it muſt proceed from a particular Order of State, diſpenſing with the ancient Strictneſs, by reaſon of the preſent Scarcity of Subjects. In Gellius (g), among the ſeveral Cauſes alleged, why Euripides ſhould get the Title of the Woman-Hater, this is brought as one, that he had two Wives together, (The Athenian Government at that time allowing it,) who made him quite weary of Matrimony, and quite out of Love with the Sex. Amongſt the Spartans, we find in Herodotus (h), that when their King Anaxandrides refus'd to put away his Wife, on the account of Barrenneſs, he was compell'd by the Authority of the Ephori, to admit another to his Bed, who did not lie under the ſame Imperfection. Every Body knows, that the Romans were content, each Man with his ſingle Wife (i). Yet Sueton (k) reports, that it was once in Julius Cæſar's Head, to introduce a Law, to give Men Licence to marry what Sort, and what Number of Wives they thought fit, for the better ſtocking the Common-wealth. Socrates, the Eccleſiaſtical Hiſtorian (l), reports of the Emperor Valentinian, that whiſt his Wife Severa was living, he admitted to the ſame Honour the moſt beautiful Lady Juſtina; and publiſh'd an Order through his whole Dominions, permitting every Man to follow his Example; To have two lawful Wives. Paulus Diaconus (m) gives the ſame Relation; and Zonaras mentions the Emperor's Two Wives, though he ſays nothing of the Law enacted on the Occaſion. But in as much as the other Hiſtorians, Ammianus, Zozimus, and Oroſius, together with the Chriſtian Fathers, who ſo often diſcuſs the Queſtions concerning Matrimony, are abſolute ſilent in this Point, Baronius (n) concludes the Double Marriage of Valentinian, and the Law in Juſtification of it, to be perfect Forgeries.

Mahomet, in his new Inſtitution, allow'd of Polygamy; Craftily accommodating his Doctrines to the Temper of the People, whom he intended to deceive. For as the Force of Love is ſtronger in the Men of thoſe Eaſtern-Parts, ſo the Women, either by their Natural Genius, or by the Power of Education, live in ſuch perfect Subjection to their Huſbands, that their Jealouſies and Quarrels are ſeldom conſiderable enough to diſturb the Peace and Union of the Family. Yet the wealthier Men ſhut up their Wives in ſeparate Houſes, or confine them to diſtinct Towns, to prevent Diſſention (o). Boccaline (p) will have this Indulgence to have been a Device, to diſpoſe Men the better for a Life of Slavery; whiſt dividing their Riches amongſt ſo large a Progeny, they muſt continually grow weaker, and more abſolutely at the Command of the Government. A Thought very ingenious indeed, and of refin'd Policy; and ſuch as probably never enter'd into Mahomet's Head, who died ſo long a time before the Eſtabliſhment of the Turkiſh Tyranny and Empire. As for the Indians, Travellers inform us,

(a) L. 8. C. de Jud. &c. Add. Selden. de J. N. & G. l. 5. c. 6. (b) De Rit. Hebra. p. 4. c. 2. f. 2. (c) Here Mr. Selden obſerves, that in the firſt Edition was added, Indulſu tamen Romani Pontificis impetrato, 'Yet not without procuring the Indulgence or Diſpenſation of the Pope; which words are omitted in the Paris Edit. 1637-

(1) Tacit. de Mor. German. c. 18. (d) De B. G. l. 1. c. 53. n. 4. (e) Diog. Laert. Socrat. (f) L. 13. c. 1.

(g) L. 15. c. 20. (h) Terpſichore, p. 190. Ed. H. Steph. Vid. Potter. Archæol. Græc. l. 4. c. 11. p. 599.

(i) Vid. Cod. lib. 5. t. 5. l. 2. de Inceſt. Nupt. & lib. 9. t. 9. l. 18. C. ad L. Jul. de Adult. (k) C. 52.

(l) L. 4. c. 26. (m) L. 11. (n) Tom. 4. ad A. Chr. 370. 3. 125. (o) Richer. de Morib. Turc.

(p) Ragg. di Parnaff. Cent. 2. c. 63.

that the chief Reason why several of their Princes have refused to imbrace the Christian Faith, hath been because, amongst other Conditions, it was required of them, to admit no more than one Woman to their Bed (a).

XVII. Whether or no this Practice be repugnant to the Law of Nature, is a Point not fully settled amongst the Learn'd. It shall be our Business to propose fairly the Arguments on both sides, leaving the decisive Judgment to be pass'd by the Reader. Those then, who maintain Polygamy, as we now understand it, to be in itself agreeable to Natural Law, argue in this manner. 'The regular end of Matrimony, that is the Certainty of Off-spring, and the Benefit of mutual Assistance, is as well answer'd under these Allowances, as under the strictest Confinement. It is an Idle Objection, which some make, That at this rate the Conjugal Faith will not be reciprocal, a Condition which Reason it self requires essentially necessary to every Covenant. For Mutual Faith doth by no means suppose, that the Performances on each side must needs be equal. Nor doth the true Intent of Matrimony demand, that the Man should confine his Desires so straightly as the Woman. The Reason why one Woman ought to take up with one Man, being the great Danger of the Uncertainty of Issue; which Hindrance doth not lie in the way of the other Sex. Yet is not the Husband less oblig'd to make good his Faith to every Wife; which Performance consists in the yielding her all due Conjugal Help, Kindness, and Support. As for the main End of Marriage, the obtaining of Children, one Man is, in this respect, equal to many Women; at least to such as are Moderate and Virtuous (1). And therefore it is chiefly Lust and Intemperance which makes Women so averse to Polygamy. Indeed, if a Wife, at her first Contract with her Husband, binds him under an Engagement to admit no Partners with her of his Bed; (as Laban (2) bound Jacob in Behalf of his Daughters:) such a Covenant is faithfully to be perform'd (b). Where no such Condition is made, there the Wife ought to rest satisfied with a competent Share in the Husband (c). Nor doth she in this Case suffer any Injury; for she can have no more Right over her Husband's Body, than what she obtain'd by the Matrimonial Compact: But in that Compact she receiv'd a right only to a part of the Man, and voluntarily agreed to this imperfect Possession. And therefore she hath only Reason to complain of her Husband, when, as Plautus (d) says, he lets his own Field lie fallow, to plough another Man's. Nor doth this Allowance of Polygamy, as some Object, reduce the Women into the Condition of Slaves. Nor is it any Crime, to place the weaker Sex in an inferior Degree to the stronger, to whom they owe their defence and support (e). The Reasons alledg'd on the other side, taken from the fatal Effects of Jealousie, the danger of Domestick Quarrels, the Hatred of the Rival Mothers, transmitted to their various Race; do not amount to a Proof, that Polygamy is Naturally Unlawful; but then the same Inconveniencies appear, as in all, so especially in second, Marriages, which no one will upon this account term unlawful. Nor are the Troubles and Misfortunes of this kind equal in all Places, but they are chiefly to be discovered in those Countries, where either the Women have too high and commanding Spirits, or the Men too low and servile. In many Nations the Wives, either by their Natural Disposition, or by Custom and Education, pay a more strict and quiet Obedience (f). And besides, it is no difficult Task, for a Man of tolerable Prudence and Discretion, to keep the Family-peace amongst several Women (g).

XVIII. Those, who deny Polygamy to be agreeable to the Law of Nature, chiefly insist on the Seventh Commandment in the Decalogue, Thou shalt not commit Adultery; which must be acknowledg'd to affect the Man, as well as the Woman. And therefore, say they, if the Prohibition lies on both Parties, the Husband must be guilty of Adultery, whenever he receives into the Covenant of Marriage, or into the Possession of his Bed, another Woman, against the Consent of Her to whom he first plighted his Faith, and gave the power over his Body (h).

In return to this Argument, Antonius Matthæus (i), the Civilian, affirms, that Adultery cannot be committed, either by Polygamy, or between a married Man and an unmarried

(a) Add. Abrab. Roger. de Bramin. p. 1. c. 13. & Alex. de Rhodes Itinerar. p. 2. c. 11. Add. Nouv. Memoires de la Chine, Tom. 2. l. 4. & Will. Bosman's Voyage to Guinea, Lett. 19. & Mr. Bayle's Nouvelles d'Auril. 1685.

(1) Especially if they imitate Zenobia Queen of the Palmyrenes, who would not admit the Embraces of her Husband upon any other Account, than the obtaining of Children. Trebell. Poll. in XXX. Tyran. cap. 30.

(2) Gen. XXXI. 59. (b) Add. Lib. 45. t. 1. l. 121. f. 1. D. de Verb. Obligat. (c) See Genes. XXX. 15, 16. Herodot. Thalia, pag. 120. Ed. H. Steph. 'The Persian Wives take their Turns and Courses with their Husbands.

(d) Afinar. Act. 5. Sc. 2. Add. lib. 48. t. 5. l. 13. f. 5. D. ad L. Jul. de Adult. & ad eam Grot. in Flor. Sparf. ad Jus Justinian. Women are seldom so very ambitious of Honour, as to be satisfied with the Excuse which Ælius Verus (in Spartian) gave his Lady, when she complain'd of his Mistresses: Give me leave, says he, to satisfy my Inclinations by some other means: A Wife is a Name of Dignity, not of Pleasure. Add. Plaut. Mercat. Act. 4. Sc. ult. Gratian. Caus. 32. Qu. 6. c. 2, &c. (e) 'Tis a Saying of Euripides in Supplic. That Women who are Wise, will transact every Thing by Men. (f) Vid. Benzo. Hist. Nov. Orb. p. 1. c. 37. (g) The Reasons urg'd by Dionys. Gouffred. (ad Lib. 1. t. 9. l. 7. C. de Judeis, &c.) will be found, upon Examination, very slight and trivial.

(h) Gratian. Caus. 32. quæst. 5. cap. 15, 16, 23. Vid. Bacler. ad Grot. l. 2. c. 5. f. 9. Hobbes hath made some kind of Reply to this, in his Sixth Chapter de Civæ, f. 16. and in his 14th Chapter, f. 9. which we shall elsewhere take occasion to examine in lib. 7. c. 1. (i) De Crimin. ad L. Jul. de Adult. c. 1. f. 13.

Woman (a), but only with another Man's Wife (b). Nor will he allow every Violation of the Marriage Covenant to be the Sin of Adultery: for we never call him an Adulterer, who maliciously forsakes his Wife, who refuseth to give her Maintenance and the like; yet such a Man, without doubt, breaks his matrimonial Faith. 'He adds, altho' it be unjust in the Husband, to require a stricter Chastity of his Wife, than he practiseth himself (1); yet this by no means proves the Sin on both sides to be equal. For every one knows, that the Wife is, upon many Accounts, oblig'd to a much severer Degree of Moderation and Purity; in regard, as well to the Modesty of the Sex, as to the Danger of confus'd Amours, and of a supposititious Breed; as likewise to prevent the Scandal her Lightness would bring, not only on her own Family, but on the Government, under which she lives. For if it be reckon'd so very Disgraceful to be born of Parents, one of whom is a Native, the other a Foreigner, in so much that in most Countries a name of Reproach is fix'd on Persons of this motly Race; how much fouler an Infamy would it prove, as well to the whole State, as to particular Men, should it be left uncertain, whether the Subjects are born in Adultery, or in Lawful Marriage. In Leviticus (c) Adultery is defined, The coming to another Man's Wife, the polluting another Man's Bed. Nor can it on any account appear probable, that a Law against Adultery, directed to a People, who actually used Polygamy, should forbid this Practice, without declaring as much in exprefs words. Those Expressions of Holy Scripture (2), and of the Primitive Fathers (d), which seem to make the coveting, or desiring another Man's Wife, to be Adultery, are to be understood in the same sense, as when he that hates his Brother (3), is stil'd a Murderer.

Others chuse to answer thus, 'The Commandment alleg'd doth indeed bind Men, as well as Women: and therefore for one Husband to dishonour another's Bed, is no less sinful, than for a Wife to defile the Bed of her proper Husband. But then Polygamy doth not make the Husband Guilty of this Trespas against his Neighbour. It is true, if in the Original Contract between the Parties it was expressly provided, that the Man should transfer the whole power over his Body to the Woman, then in case he brings an Usurper to her Bed, whether under the Name of an Harlot, or of a Wife, he certainly violates his Faith given in the former Matrimony. But we have no such Charge of Perjury to lay against him, if at the first Marriage he reserv'd to himself the Liberty of adding a second Consort, as a Partner to her whom he then receiv'd. Nor can he be said to defraud her, in as much as he bargain'd to allow her only a Share in himself. To this it is reply'd, That we must not suppose the Woman would thus consent to her own Loss and Injury, unless either compell'd by Force, or Fear, or moved by Weakness and Defect of Judgment; neither of which Causes are able to found a Right in the Man. But the Assertors of the other Opinion will not grant, that there is any Injury in the present Case. 'All the Right and Title, say they, that one Person can have to the Body of another, must arise from Covenant, and from the Consent of that other Party. And consequently, if so much be perform'd, as was fairly covenanted for, there ought to be no Complaint of injurious dealing. It is no good consequence, to say, that because, in just and true Matrimony, the Husband receives the full and perfect Possession of the Wife, therefore the Wife obtains the same absolute Title to the Husband. Nor will such an unequal Covenant prejudice the Natural Equality of Mankind. For to salve this, it is not necessary, that the mutual Performances amongst all Persons should be exactly alike: if so, it would be repugnant to the Law of Nature, that one Man should be born a Prince, another a Subject, and both by Virtue of an antecedent human Covenant, not made by themselves, but by others. Will any one be so extravagant as to maintain, that 'tis a Breach of Natural Equality, unless the Wife be allow'd her turn of Governing, as well as the Husband? And there is the same Difference observable in the Care of the common Off-spring: how little trouble doth this bring to the Father, in comparison to the Grievous Pains undergone by the Mother. Would it not be a most ridiculous Proposal, for the Women of State to desire a part in the supreme Administration? and yet we must not say, that the Men are guilty of Injury and Tyranny for excluding the fair Sex from this honourable Privilege. Should any People be of such a Temper, as to desire the Establishment of a Stricter Government, (which the bolder Patrons of Liberty are wont to call, the Treatment of Slaves,) if they too freely indulge the Reins, to the new Power, they act foolishly and transgress that Ruling Prudence, which is the best-lov'd Sister of Natural Law. So that to commiserate the Condition of the Wives in Turkey, &c. is as absurd and impertinent, as to bestow our pity on Husband-men and Artificers, condoling with them, that they should be so unfortunate, as to live in more uneasy Circumstances, than the Nobility. The Reason why a Husband cannot honestly admit another Man to partake of his Bed, is built upon a different Bottom. On the whole it may be concluded, that a

(a) S. 12. (b) L. 6. f. 2. D. h. t. (1) D. lib. 48. t. 5. l. 13. f. 5. ad Leg. Jul. de Adulter. coer. (c) Levit. XVIII. 20. XX. 10. (2) Matr. V. 28. (d) Produced by Gratian, cap. 3, 4, & 1. quæst. 4. caus. 32. & c. 5. quæst. 6. caus. eadem. C. 4. X. De eo qui cognov. Consanguin. Uxor. sue. (3) 1 John III. 15.

'Woman lies under no restraint of Conscience, 'from agreeing to this Kind of Matrimony, in 'a Country where the Practice is publickly 'receiv'd. Especially, since if it were in any 'degree Vicious, yet the bare Force of the 'weaker Sex could never prevail to the beat- 'ing down a publick Custom: nor would all of 'them join in the Attempt: some being ever 'more kind and friendly than others, and more 'unwilling to engage against the Men (a). The 'Example of the Heathens, and of the Ma- 'bometans (who are allow'd Four Wives, and 'as many Concubines as they can maintain,) 'may indeed be of no great Force in the Ar- 'gument, because it appears, that those People 'are guilty of many Violations of the Law of 'Nature; but the Polygamy of the Fathers, 'under the Old Covenant, is a Reason, that 'Ingenuous Men must confess to be unanswer- 'able. As to the Saying of the Apottle, 1 Cor. 'VII. 4. it doth not seem to reach the pri- 'mary design and use of Matrimony, but only 'the secondary and indiret End, the avoiding 'Fornication: which End belonging in the 'same degree to the Man and to the Woman, 'Humanity and Equity enjoin, that the same 'Provision should, in this respect, be made for 'both Parties; and, then it follows, that 'the Husband ought not to deny his Wife 'Conjugal Favours. But the communicating 'his Favours to Others besides Her, doth not 'here seem to be Forbidden.

XIX. However it be, this is very clear and cer- 'tain, that the most decent, the most proper, and 'the most peaceable way of Wedding is, for One 'to live contented with One. This then is, without all doubt, to be esteem'd the highest, and the 'most perfect kind of Matrimony; and the Laws 'and Conditions of it are most religiously to be 'observ'd, as well by the Husband, as the Wife '(b). It is worth remarking, that where several 'Wives are allow'd to one Man, he seldom fails 'to single out a Beloved, whom in all respects 'he prefers to the rest (c). Thus Nature it self 'seems out of Multitude, to lead us into Unity. 'Tis a wise Observation that of Salust (d), The 'Relation, says he, of a Son-in-law, is but slightly 'esteem'd amongst the Numidians, and the Moors: 'and the Reason is, because they marry each as 'many Wives, as they think agreeable to their 'Fortune and Grandeur; some Ten, some more, 'and their Princes with a far wider Liberty. 'Thus the Mind is divided and distracted with 'Number, and All are despis'd because All cannot 'be lov'd (e).

Grotius (f) assigns these Reasons for the Re- 'ception of single Marriage amongst Christians; 'that the Wife, bestowing herself entirely on the 'Husband, may receive the equal Return of his 'whole Heart and Affection: that the Family- 'Affairs may be carried on with more Regularity 'under a single Mistress; and that many Mothers 'may not create Feuds and Quarrels amongst the 'Children. To which we may add, that after 'the Sufficient Multiplication of Mankind, 'Polygamy ought, amongst all Nations of tole- 'rable Civility, to be restrain'd on this politick 'Account, that by too great a number of Chil- 'dren the nobler Family must in time be re- 'duc'd to Poverty, the meaner to Beggary, and 'the State oppress'd with an Idle Swarm of the 'baser Populacy; which if not vented and

(a) Isaiah IV. 1. (b) Euripid. Andromach. v. 464, &c.

————— Ne'er will I commend
More Beds, more Wives than one; nor Children curs'd
With Double Mothers, Banes and Plagues of Life.
Let each Good Man possess his Single Bride,
And check the Intrusion of a Rival Dame.

Isocrates Nicocl. p. 59, 60. Edit. Paris. I cannot but greatly condemn those, who having entred upon a Married State for their whole Life, neglect afterwards to stand to the Agreement; but giving a loose to their Pleasures, injure those dear Partners, from whom they expect nothing but Kindness and Comfort. In other Bargains, they are wont to practise Justice and Honesty, and yet make no scruple to violate the Nuptial Contract, which ought to be so much more strictly observ'd, than all others, as it is of more sacred Obligation, and of nearer and more important Concern, Plaut. Mercat. Act. 5. Sc. 1. v. 81. Plutarch. de Præcept. Conjugal. They say, that a Cat upon smelling certain Essences or Perfumes is driven to Madness. Did the same Effect hold in Women, ought not Men to abstain from using such Perfumes, rather than cause so great Misfortunes for the sake of a worthless Pleasure? Why, the Dishonesty of a Husband is as likely a mean to throw his Wife into Distraction, as the most offensive Smell could be: and consequently, it is most unjust, on the account of an idle Satisfaction, to bring so grievous Affliction on an innocent Person; and not rather to preserve the Nuptial-Bed uncommunicate and unstain'd. Clytemnestra in Eurip. Electra, v. 1035, &c.

Women are Fools: 'tis own'd; and by a Woman:
But when Men take Advantage of the Folly,
Slight Home, and scout Abroad for lawless Love;
No wonder if the Dames return the Wrong,
Seek out new Mates, and practise as they're taught.

(c) Genes. XXIX. 29. Deuter. XXI. 15. Esther II. 17. Cant. VI. 7, 8. (d) In B. Jugurth. (e) To the same purpose Amm. Marcellinus (l. 23. c. 12.) speaks of the Parthians, Their Affection grows cool and languid, by the unbounded Variety they make use of in their Pleasures. (f) De Verit. Rel. Christ. Procop. Hist. Vandal. l. 2. Be Ye concern'd for your Children, say the Barbarians, who are chain'd to the Necessity of a single Bed: As for Us who, if we please, can have Fifty Brides together, we are in no Fear of wanting Posterity, Eurip. Androm. ver. 177, &c. Claudian de Bello Gildon.

————— Connubia mille:
Non illis generis nexus, non pignora cura;
Sed numero languet Pietas.

————— A Thousand Nuptial Bands they wear, Blood is no Union, nor their Race their Care;
But Love expires in Number. ————— thrown off, (as it cannot always be) will at length overturn all Order and Government, and sink the Common-wealth under its own weight (a). We are told that the Turks themselves, in the Point of Marriage, do not now take the same Liberty as they formerly us'd, and as their Law allows: the Cause of which Alteration is not, perhaps, so much the Increase of bestial Lust amongst them, as their Experiences of the Inconveniencies and Mischiefs attending Polygamy.

XX. Another Controversy, no less warmly managed is, whether Matrimony, by the Law of Nature, be a Society, or Partnership, capable of being dissolv'd, and consequently, whether Divorces be, by the same Law, allowable? And here we shall take the same Course as before, to lay down the Strefs of what both Parties urge upon the Point, leaving the considerate Reader to pass Judgment for himself. First of all, it is taken for granted, that according to the common Nature of Covenants, one Party cannot recede, unless the other hath either broken the Agreement, or else yielded his Consent to this Release. It will therefore be repugnant to the Law of Nature, for either of the married Couple, to depart from the other unconsenting, only for the Improvement of Condition, or Satisfaction of Humour, without being able to alledge any Breach of the matrimonial Pact on the other's side. Nor, can the Indulgence of the Roman Law (b), in some Cases of Partnership, be brought to justify a Desertion of this kind. For, besides that, the relinquish'd Party is most certainly endamaged; an Union enter'd into upon account of Gain, may much more easily admit of separation, than this most strict and sacred Tie between Man and Wife. For, in Marriage the Parties acquire a Right over the Bodies of each other, which ought not on either side, to be taken from them against their Will. And indeed, tho' there should be a mutual Consent of the Parties, yet it would be both indecent and unsafe to allow the dissolving of Marriage, without very weighty Cause: in as much as this Liberty of frequent Divorces most exceedingly shock the Strength, and Credit of Families; and the Grace and good Order of the whole Common-wealth (c) (1). And the same reason will hold in Esponsals, which although no farther Progress hath been made in order to their Consummation, yet ought not to be broken-off by the Act and Motion of the Parties contracted, unless some extraordinary Occasion fall out; or some of those Conditions are found defective, on the supposal of which the Validity of the Covenant dependeth (d).

Dionysius Halicarnassens (e) exceedingly commends the Institution of Romulus, by which he order'd one sort of Marriage, solemnized with the greatest Ceremony, to be incapable of Divorces. This Law (says the Historian) engaged the Wives (who had no Refuge, nothing to trust to in Case of a Rupture,) to yield a ready Compliance to the Temper of their Husbands: and it obliged the Husbands, on the other side, to use their Wives as a necessary Possession, which they could not, on any Account, throw-up, or desert. And one may reckon among the chief Causes of the Decay and Corruption of the Roman State, their too frequent Practice of Divorces, either upon so slight Pretences, or upon none at all (f). Ammianus Marcellinus reports of the Saracens what seems very agreeable to their barbarous Customs. They give Wives, says he (g), to serve a present Turn: and to make some Shew and Semblance of Matrimony, the Woman presents her Mock-husband with a Spear and a Tent; at the fix'd Day, she may if she pleaseth break up and seek a new Mate. Varenius (h) informs us, that the Dutch, now and then, contract this Kind of Marriage in Japan; having liberty to release themselves at their leaving the Island. The like is practis'd in many other Parts of the Indies, and the Kingdom of Persia (i). How vile doth the Roman Liberty appear in Juvenal (2)?

*Cur desiderio Bibulæ Sertorius ardet?
Si verum excutias, facies non uxor amatur.
Tres rugæ subeant, & se cutis arida laxet,
Fiant obscuri dentes, oculique minores;
Collige sarcinulas, dicet libertus; & exi;
Jam gravis es nobis, & sæpe emungeris; exi
Ocius, & propera; sicco venit altera naso.*

These Truths with his Example you disprove,
Who with his Wife is monstrously in love:
But know him better: for I heard him swear,
'Tis not that she's his Wife but that she's fair.
Let her but have three Wrinkles in her Face,
Let her Eyes lessen, and her Skin unbrace;
Soon you will hear the saucy Steward say,
Pack up, with all your Trinkets, and away;
You grow Offensive both at Bed and Board;
Your Betters must be had to please my Lord.
Mr. Dryden.

For really, as Claudian (k) observes,

*Fœmina cum senuit, retinet connubia partu;
Uxorisque decus matris reverentia pensat.*

A Matron for her fruitful Bed we praise:
And the Wife's Charms the Mother's Awe repays.

(a) It is a most barbarous Way which the People of Angola in Africk use, to get rid of their vast Stock of Men, occasion'd by Polygamy, when they sell their superfluous Numbers to the Americans for Slaves. (b) Lib. 17. t. 2. l. 14 pro Socio. (c) Vid. Val. Max. l. 2. c. 9. f. 2. (1) See Mr. Lock's Treatise of Civil Govern. p. 2. c. 6. f. 2, &c. and Algern. Sidney's Discourse upon Government, Ch. 2. f. 4. (d) Add. Gell. l. 4. c. 4. (e) L. 2. p. 95. Ed. Lipsi. Vid. Lipsii Comm. in Tacit. Annal. lib. 4. c. 16. (f) Senec. de Benef. l. 3. c. 16. Who is now ashamed of breaking the Nuptial Union, when so many Ladies, of Eminence and Quality, reckon their Years not by the Number of Consuls but of Husbands; and are Divorc'd in Hopes of marrying, and marry in Hopes of being divorc'd? (g) L. 19. c. 3. (h) Japon. c. 13. (i) Olear. Itin. Pers. l. 5. c. 22. Petrus de Valle Itin. P. 2. Ep. 17. (2) Sat. 6. v. 142, &c. (k) In Europ. l. 1. v. 72, 73. Add. Martial. Lib. 10. Epig. 41.

And how scandalous was that Law of Charondas, mentioned by Diodorus Siculus (a), giving Liberty to Husband, or Wife, after a Divorce, to chuse a new Partner, provided they did not pitch on a younger than the former?

Besides all this, to put away a Wife looks Heinous in the Eyes of all the World, and loads the Woman with so much Reproach, that it would appear most Base and Unworthy to proceed in so severe a manner, unless upon some extraordinary Grounds and Provocation. And this may extend it self as well to the Business of Contracts, as of the more solemn and perfect Marriage. Thus when Radigis, in Procopius (b), having espous'd the celebrated Brittia, broke off the Match without being able to alledge any Crime on her side, the Historian tells us, She, unable to bear the Scandal, bent all her thoughts and resolutions on Revenge. For Modesty and Chastity are so highly priz'd and so nicely regarded by these Barbarians, that a Woman turn'd off and deserted, most infallibly loseth her Reputation, though her Virtue be really safe and unstain'd. It was a wise and rational Choice, when the Daughters of Pollio and Agrippa standing for the place of Governess over the Vestal Virgins, the former Lady was prefer'd on this account, because her Father and Mother had liv'd in a long and peaceable Marriage, without Separation; whereas Agrippa on the other side, had filled his Family with Jealousies and Dissentions (c).

XXI. We are further to examine, whether we may apply that to Matrimony, which holds good in all other Covenants, that in case the Heads and Conditions, especially the chief of them, are broken on either side, the injur'd Party hath the power of receding from the Agreement. And here we may venture to take the Affirmative part, if the Question be put concerning the Necessary and Essential Terms of the Contract. Thus the principal Design of Marriage is the procuring of Children, in order to the effecting which, it is requisite, that there be the nearest and the most familiar Communication between Husband and Wife. And therefore if we regard barely the Law of Nature, either Person may quit and renounce the Relation, in case the other prove guilty of base Desertion, or of Voluntary and Obstinate (1) Unkindness, as to the Affair of the Bed. This last Omision would bear an Action of Law amongst the Ancient Jews (d); and the Conjugal Debt as well as others might be recover'd by Procces in open Court.

Again, the Intent of Marriage is not only that we may obtain Children, but that we obtain such as shall indeed be our own. 'On this account, says Josephus, Moses absolutely forbade Adultery; thinking it would be every way more happy, that the Husband should keep the Possession of his Bed secure and undisturbed, and that the Production of genuine Issue would be alike advantageous to private Families, and to the publick State. (Antiqu. III. 10.)

Nay, and after this End hath been provided for, every honest Man is willing to keep his Bed to himself, and doth not think it either decent or safe, to take Passengers a-board, tho' the Vessel be first laden to his Desire. Very few Husbands have so high Notions of Courtlines and Complaisance, as to be concern'd at Ovid's Censure, that,

Rusticus est nimium quem ledit adultera Conjux, Et notos mores non satis Urbis habet (e).

He that won't lend his Bed's a stinging Clown, Unpractis'd in the freedom of the Town.

It is therefore to be esteem'd a just Cause of Divorce, if a Wife voluntarily expose her Honour to another Man. As on the other side, if she be overcome by the Usurper, in the way of Force and Violence, we can on no pretence call her Virtue in Question (f). And though it be commonly reckoned a more Heinous Crime, to assault her Chastity thus, by main Strength and Power, than to ensnare or betray it by Flattery and Charm; yet the Truth is, the former indeed offers the more grievous Injury to the Wife, but the latter to the Husband (g).

It appears then, that the Reason why Adultery, and wilful Desertion, are accounted sufficient Causes of Divorce, doth not arise from any particular Positive Law of God, (as if these two Exceptions were added to that Ordinance which makes the Bond of Marriage perpetual,) but from the common Nature of Covenants, which is such, that when one Party hath broken the Agreement, the other is no longer oblig'd to keep it. And the force of these Causes is so extensive, as to justify the injur'd Person, not only in refusing to cohabit with the perfidious Wretch, but likewise in passing to a second Marriage; whatever the Canonists urge to the contrary. Indeed those grave Professors, when they are to gratify a Friend in this point, do not

(a) L. 12. c. 18. p. 83. Ed. Rhodom. (b) Hist. Goth. l. 4. (c) Tacit. Ann. 11. c. 86. Publius Syrus, Many Marriages are next to many Curses. A Woman that marries often, displeaseth often. (1) Vid. Plutarch Amator. p. 769. & in Solon. p. 89. Aristot. Oecon. Lib. 1. c. 4. Diog. Laert. in Pythag. Lactant. lib. 5. c. 23. Gratian. Caus. 3. Quæst. 5. c. 1. &c. & 1 Cor. VII. 15. (d) Vid. Selden. de Uxore Hebraica, l. 3. c. 6, 7. Montaigne's Essays, L. 3. c. 5. (e) Amor. 3 & 4 v. 37, 38. Martial, L. 6. Ep. 90.

Machum Gellia non habet nisi unum, Turpe est hoc magis, uxor est duorum.

One Spark serves honest Gellia at a time;
But her two Husbands are a fouler Crime.

Add. Abbr. Roger de Bramin. p. 1. c. 13. (f) Add. Valer. Max. l. 6. c. 1. f. 2. extern. Liv. l. 38. c. 24. Xenophon in Hieron. p. 578. L. 48. t. 5. l. 13. f. 7 & 39. princ. D. ad L. Juliam. de Adult. Ælian. V. H. l. 12. c. 47. (g) Lib. 11. t. 3. l. 1. f. 3. D. de Servo Corrupto. To inveigle and perfwade is more than to force and compel.

scruple to find out a way of eluding their own Decrees, by declaring the former Marriage to have been originally null and void; an Evasion which they can ground on many plausible Scruples.

But altho' Marriage be chiefly enter'd into upon the Design and Hopes of Children, yet the bare Inability of either Party (otherwise fit for a Conjugal State) towards promoting this End, doth not seem a sufficient Ground of Separation; in as much as it is a thing surpassing all human Power to bestow the Blessing of Increase. Yet Carvilius Ruga, the first Man of the Romans, that put away his Wife, (523 Years after the Building of the City) is reported to have taken his principal Motive from the Oath, which the Censors required of every married Man, in this Form, Se habere Uxorem liberorum quærendorum causa, That he engaged in that Condition on the account of Issue (a).

XXII. But the chief Point of the Controversy on this Head is still behind, and may be thus stated. According to the true and regular way of contracting Marriage, the Wife consents to a constant Cohabitation with the Husband, promising, according to her best strength, to assist and comfort him, as well with Sweetness of Converse, as with the Participation of Business and Cares; and engaging farther to be guided and directed by him, as the Lord and Governour of the Family. In requital for which, the Husband, on the other side, is obliged to protect and defend his Wife, to treat her with Honesty and Civility, and to pay her many other friendly Regards of the same kind (b). Now the Question is, whether the signal and enormous Violation of these inferior Duties gives a full and fair Reason for a Divorce. And here, if we regard barely the Law of Nature, many venture to hold the Affirmative. For since a Father hath the Power of discarding an undutiful Son, who, at least in natural Consideration, seems more nearly related to him than a Wife; why may not he banish his Wife, as a Rebellious Member of the Family, when her Manners are intolerable, and her Amendment desperate? Especially if we reflect on the Remark of Fulgentius, that a Wife, the nearer she is join'd to a Man by the Law, the more certainly she proves to him, either Honey, by the sweetness of her Temper, or Poyson, by her froward and malicious Disposition; being really, either a continual Comfort and Refuge, or a perpetual Plague and Torment. An honest Man, says old Simonides, can have nothing in this World better than a Good Wife, nothing worse than a Bad one (c). On the other hand, in case the Husband treats his Wife with unreasonable Severity, and denies her the Respect due to her Sex and her Relation, so as to shew himself, not so much a kind Partner, as a troublesome and vexatious Enemy, it should seem very Equitable, that she might be reliev'd by a Divorce (d).

Another Scruple immediately ariseth upon this, whether it be allowable, by the Law of Nature, on the account of Intolerable Manners, or of Barbarous Treatment, entirely to dissolve the matrimonial Bond? Or, whether the other Conjugal Duties, as the Propagation of Race, &c. may not still be continued, tho' the cohabiting in the same Family be broken off? In as much as the former Covenant bearing a regard to Children, seems to be Essential to Matrimony, the latter only Additional. Thus much then is certain, that several Pacts may be made between the same Parties, under this Condition, that in case one of them should be violated, the others shall nevertheless stand Good. Nay one and the same Pact may be divided into many Heads, and Provision may be made, that although one of the Heads be transgress'd, yet the Parties shall proceed in performing the rest. If the Marriage was contracted under such a Form, it seems reasonable, that the Wife, although she hath by her unpeaceable Carriage forfeited her Title to a continual Cohabitation, yet may still lie under the Force of that part of the Covenant, which obligeth her to consult Succession. But, because it is by no means probable, that she, who is unfit for the first of these Privileges and Duties, should with any Convenience be admitted to the other; that a Man should desire Issue by the same Woman, whom he is constrain'd to hate; and not rather entertain an absolute Aversion to the Body, which lodgeth so froward a Guest: it is the common and regular Practice for the Parties to contract, by one and the same Agreement, for their living together and for their mutual Care of Posterity: and thus the two Conditions are, in so close a manner, united and interwoven one with the other, that in case either be broke, both Naturally fall asunder. It is therefore contrary to the Law of Nature, that the Reason before alledg'd should cause a separation

(a) Vid. Gell. l. 4. c. 3. Valer. Maxim. lib. 2. c. 1. f. 4. (b) Homer. Il. 9. v. 340, &c.

The Wife and Good will cherish and defend
The Partner of their Bed, their nearest Friend;
Their second Self

(c) V. Fulgent. Mythol. lib. 1. Simoniden inter Poet. Lyric. Edit. H. Steph. p. 227. Euripid. Orest. v. 602, &c.

Bless'd is the Man, and sweetly runs his Life.
Where smiling Fortune ties the Nuptial Band;
But he whom inauspicious Hymen joins,
Wretched abroad must prove and curs'd at home.

(d) Add. L. Theod. lib. 5. t. 17. l. 8. C. de Repud.

from Bed and Board, and yet continue some part of the Marriage-Obligation, so as to hinder the Parties from disposing of themselves another way. Unless such a separation be enjoin'd, only for a time, as a Punishment to obstinate Perverseness, and to try, whether there is any probability of Reforming. For it is absurd to say, that the Tie of a Covenant remains in Force, whilst no part of the Debt, arising from that Covenant can, or ought to be discharged. And though we should acknowledge, that the Party, who gave Occasion to this Mischief, is justly enough punished, yet the Innocent Party is in the mean-while injured, suffering thus for the Fault of another, and being oblig'd to live in a State of Celibacy, probably inconvenient, perhaps intolerable.

Thus far then, in the Consideration of Natural Law, the Man and the Woman are upon the same Ground. And for this Reason Plutarch (1) calls that Order of Romulus, σφοδρὸν, very hard and severe, which forbid a Woman to desert and turn-off her Husband, yet gave the Husband leave to discard his Wife, either upon her poisoning the Children, counterfeiting the Keys, or committing Adultery (2). Amongst the Athenians we find either Party might upon sufficient Cause, separate (2) from the other: though they distinguish'd these two kind of Divorces by different Names. For a Man to put away his Wife was term'd, σπέρμασιν; for a Woman to quit her Husband, was ἀπολείπειν. The Reason of this Variation in Terms is manifest; the Woman was receiv'd into the Man's Family, and therefore she could not properly, ἀποπέμψαι, send him away, move him out of the House, tho' she might, ἀπολείπειν forsake him, and retire to a place of Ease and Security.

We have only this to observe farther, that upon whatever Reasons Divorces are tolerated in a Common-wealth, it is highly expedient, that the Cause be heard and approv'd by the proper Magistrate; and that a Point of so very great weight and moment be not left to be decided by the private Conscience and Discretion of the married Pair. For, the Reason which Bodinus (b) offers to the contrary, Because this publick way of proceeding must ne- cessarily impair the Credit and Character of one of the Persons, doth not seem to conclude with any Force to the purpose (c).

XXIII. With Regard to the Divine Law, either as Originally declar'd, or as renew'd by our Saviour, the Difficulty is much greater. This is evident, the Jews thought Divorces, not only permitted, but commanded, (in case the Wife displeas'd her Husband,) by the 24th Chapter of Deuteronomy. And farther, there is a place in Philo Judæus (d), which seems to imply, that Barrenness was judg'd a sufficient Cause for the like Separation. Nor are we to doubt but that the thing was frequently practis'd in that Nation, although their sacred and profane History, for more than 700 Years, have recorded none, or very few Instances of this kind. For it is not indeed the Custom to register, in publick Annals, Matters which are done according to general Use, but such only as appear singular and extraordinary. In Isaiab (e), and Jeremiab (f), amongst the many ways of representing and reproving the People's Sins, we find Similitudes taken from a Divorce, as an Action very well understood by the Vulgar. Josephus (g) takes notice of it, as a thing very unusual, and differing from the ordinary Law and Practice, that Salomé, Wife to Costobar, Præfect of Idumea and Gaza, should send a Bill of Divorce to her Husband; whereas, regularly, it was not allowable for the Woman to leave the Man, unless he put her away: excepting only one Case, when the Husband falsely reported, that his Wife did not prove a Virgin at their first Familiarity; here the Woman had her Choice, whether she would stay, or depart; and the Husband, if she chose the former, was oblig'd to keep her (h). Josephus (i) reports the same of Herodias, Aristobulus's Daughter, the Lady who was the Subject of St. John Baptist's Reproof (k).

But, that our Saviour absolutely took away this ancient Liberty of Divorce, is the Judgment of most Divines; grounded on Matth. V. 32. XIX. 8, 9, &c. Mark X. 4, 6, 12. Grotius (l) is of Opinion, that it was, from the Beginning most pleasing to God, that the Bond of Marriage should be perpetual; but, whereas the Old-Covenant-Men were not oblig'd to this

(1) In the Life of Rom. p. 89. See Mr. Dacier's Note upon the place. (a) Euripid. Andromache, v. 672, &c.

Whether the Man from a Disloyal Dame,
Or the Chast Dame from an Injurious Man
Suffers Reproach; each finds a just Relief.
Him his own Strength can vindicate; and Her Parents and Friends combin'd protect from Wrong.

(2) Potter. Archeol. Græc. lib. 4. c. 12. (b) De Repub. l. 1. c. 3. (c) Add. Plat. de LL. l. 11. p. 974. Ed. Wech. Charon de la Sageffe, l. 1. c. 46. n. 12. Selden de J. N. & G. l. 5. c. 7. (d) De Leg. Special. p. 782. B. Ed. Paris. Herodot. lib. 5. p. 190. Ed. H. Steph. the whole Passage runs thus. Men who take Wives, being uncertain of their Fruitfulness, if, finding them afterwards to be Barren, they do not dismiss them and force them to lead a separate Life, are very excusable; in as much as being won by a long Familiarity and a Course of mutual Love, they cannot easily do Violence to those Affections which are so deeply rooted in their Minds. But they who chuse Women of known Barrenness, seeking only like Beasts to satisfy their lustful Inclinations, are to be reckon'd amongst the most impious Offenders, as contradicting and opposing GOD Himself, who hath established the Laws of Human Succession. (e) Ch. 1. (f) III. 1. 6. (g) Antiq. L. 15. c. 9. (h) Vid. Phil. Jud. de Special. Leg. p. 789. D. Ed. Paris. (i) Ant. Jud. L. 18. c. 7. (k) Matth. XIV. Mar. VI. (l) L. 2. c. 5. f. 9.

Strictness, our Saviour under the New Covenant, ratified by an express Law what was before most Agreeable to the Divine Will. Mr. Selden's Explication (a) of the same places of Scripture is to this purpose. 'There were amongst the Jews two Sects, the Sammeans, and the Hillelians, who maintain'd contrary Notions on the Point before us. The former asserted, that a Man ought not to quit his Wife, unless upon some discovery of Baseness and Dishonesty; The latter, that any Dislike taken of the Woman, was enough to justify a Divorce. Our Saviour then, as an Arbitrator, between the two disputing Parties, declares in Favour of the Sammeans; that it was not Lawful upon slight Pretences, to dissolve an Union instituted by GOD himself; but only upon the Commission of foul and scandalous Crimes, comprehended, according to the Genius of the Hebrew Language, under the General Term of Fornication (b). He adds, that amongst the most ancient Christians, Adultery was not esteem'd the only lawful Cause of Divorce: as appears from L. 8. C. de Repudiis, enacted by the most Religious of all the Emperours. 'Till by the Superstition and the Corruption of the Papal See, the Bond of Matrimony was declar'd Indissoluble during the Life of the Parties. Buxtorf (c) hath endeavour'd to make out, contrary to the Current of the Jewish Writers, that in the Words of Moses, Deuteron. XXIV. 1, 2, 3, 4. this one Prohibition only is contain'd, 'That a Man shall not receive again to his Bed a Wife which he hath once put away: But that the Custom it self, of putting away Wives, is in that place, neither approv'd by Moses, nor plainly condemn'd; but left as it were indifferent. And (says he) the Observation of our Saviour, that this Permission was given by Moses, Because of the hardness of their Hearts, sufficiently makes it appear, that the Mosaical Indulgence doth not amount to an Approbation, but signifies only a bare Toleration, or Connivance, exempting from Civil Punishment (d).

XXIV. Mr. John Milton (e), provoked, as it should seem, by the Misfortune of his own Family, hath, with great Pains, endeavour'd to make out, that even, by the Principles of the Christian Religion, an intolerable Disposition, a Disparity, or Contrariety of Mind, is a sufficient Reason for Divorce: Nay, that Persons, so unhappily pair'd, are indeed under an Obligation to separate. We hope we shall not seem tedious, if we venture to run over his chief Arguments. In the first place, then, he lays down this Assertion to build upon; God, in the first Ordaining of Marriage, taught for what End he did it, in Words expressly implying, the apt and chearful Conversation of Man with Woman, to comfort and refresh him against the Evils of solitary Life: not mentioning the Purpose of Generation till afterwards; as being but a secondary End in Dignity, though not in Necessity. Now this Bottom we take to be False. When God was pleas'd to give Man a Help-meet for Him (1), and afterwards commanded the Primitive Couple to increase and multiply (2), He did not hereby ordain two different Ends of Marriage; but the latter words seem design'd to describe the chief Fruit arising (through the Divine Benediction) from the Mutual Assistance first mention'd. And indeed, if the bare Delight of Conversation, had been the principal Intent of the Creator, what need was there of a Difference in Sex? For take away the Procreation of Offspring, together with the Pleasures, which by the Appointment of Nature, sweeten and recommend it, and Men alone would have been more agreeable Companions, and more able Assistants to each other. And thus we see, that Boys and old Men, those who have not felt the Passion of Love, and those who are past it, agree in preferring the Converse of their own Sex, to all the Charms and all the Entertainments of the Fair. But Mr. Milton seems to dream of some more delicate and more refin'd Pleasures; and frames the Idea of a Wife suitable only to the Genius of a Wife and Learned Husband: he would have her able to be the Companion of his Studies, or to refresh him with her Wit, when he comes from severer Meditations, to compose his Cares with sweet Discourse, and charm away a melancholy Fit. Whereas although there is no considering Man, who would not infinitely prefer the Pleasure of the Mind, to the short and empty Gratifications of Sense: yet, it is so very difficult, to find a Woman of this Philosophical and Elevated Temper, that there is scarce any Man Eminent for Wisdom and Learning, who might not sue for a Divorce, on this pretence. And therefore, if there be any Person of so mortified a Spirit, as to think the continuing of his Name and Race, so mean and worthless a Design, and who feels no Pains, that the Fair only can cure, he should on all Accounts be advis'd to lead a single Life: For, 'tis no wonder, if Coldness and Gravity prove so ill Companions for Charms and Beauty. Lastly, whatever the Assertors of these Opinions pretend, 'tis impossible they should give any other Reason, why the Conversation of Women was rather instituted as a Help for us, than that of Men like our selves; except, that Nature hath wisely fix'd in the difference of Sex, sweeter Engagements, and more peculiar Propensions. It may then, on the whole matter, be the safer way not to endeavour the bringing this high and Platonical Strain of Notions into practice: (but, considering the ordinary Temper and Capacity of the Female Sex,) to judge Her a very convenient and proper Partner, who is able to sustain a Share in the Concern of Children, both as to their Birth and Education, and in the Care of directing the Family; altho' she be able to afford little Assistance in deep Speculations and in studious Enquiries. Juvenal's Advice hath something in it besides Satyr.

(a) De Uxore Ebraea, l. 3. c. 22. (b) Vid. Val. Max. l. 9. c. 2. (c) De Sponsal. & Divort. (d) Add the excellent Dissertation of Grotius on this Point, on Matr. V. 31, 32. (e) In his Book of the Doctrine and Discipline of Divorces. (1) Genes. II. 18. (2) Ibid. I. 28.

*Non habeat matrona, tibi quæ juncta recumbit,
Dicendi genus, aut curtam sermone rotato
Torqueat enthymema, nec historias sciat omnes,
Sed quedam ex libris, & non intelligat: odi
Hanc ego, quæ repetit volvitq; Palæmonis artem, Servatâ semper lege & ratione loquendi,
Ignotosque mihi tenet, antiquaria, versus,
Nec curanda viris Opicæ castigat amicæ
Verba: solacisimum liceat dixisse marito.*

Sat. 6. v. 488, &c.

O! what a Mid-night Curse has he, whose side
Is pester'd with a Mood-and-Figure Bride!
Let mine, ye Gods! (if such must be my Fate;)
No Logick learn, nor History translate;
But rather be a quiet, humble Fool:
I hate a Wife, to whom I go to School.
Who climbs the Grammar-tree, distinctly knows Where Noun, and Verb, and Participle grows;
Corrects her Country-neighbour, and a Bed,
For breaking Priscians, breaks her Husband's head.

Mr. Dryden.

Strabo (a) reports of the Brachmans, that they never communicate their Philosophy to their Wives: least, if they prove wicked, they should divulge some Secrets which ought to have been conceal'd from the Profane; or, if they happen to be good, they should desert their Husbands. For the equal Contempt of Pleasure and Pain of Life and Death, is no good Principle to fit a Person for a State of Subjection (b).

This Remark will hold good in General of Mr. Milton's Arguments, that they prove just nothing at all, in case it be apparent, that our Saviour declar'd Adultery, to be only the sufficient Cause of Divorce (1). To seem hard in some particular Instance, is no Objection against the express words of a Law. We are not presently for repealing those Human Constitutions, which appearing Useful and Beneficial to the Common-wealth in General, do yet turn to the Prejudice of one, or two, private Persons: because these are look'd upon as Inconveniencies which 'tis impossible to avoid.

The only Point he gains is this, that if the Saying of Christ will bear another Interpretation, it should seem more agreeable to the Gospel Clemency and Goodness, to follow a milder

Sense, than that which is at present receiv'd. The whole Strength of his Reasons may be thus represented in short. 'Incorrigible Disability of Mind, or Stubbornness of Temper, rendering a Woman unfit to live in Society with such a particular Man, and hindering the chief Benefit of Matrimony, mutual Help and Refreshment, is a much weightier Cause of Divorce, than any Natural Defect, any Distemper, any Uncleanliness of Body, which yet were allow'd as lawful Pleas by the Jewish Dispensation (c). No Partnership can oblige Persons concern'd, in Contradiction either to the chief End of its Institution, or to the Intentions and Hopes of both, or of either Member. Now it was the Design of the wife Creator, not to give Man a Domestick Torment, but a kind Help to join with him, not only in the bringing of Children into the World, but in the Education of them, and in the whole Business of Life; which End intolerable Sowreness of Temper doth plainly pervert and destroy. It looks absurd and unreasonable, that the Canon-Law should without Scruple, declare Impotency a sufficient Cause of dissolving Matrimony, and yet allow no Regard to the Manners and Dispositions of the Parties: especially since the former may immediately be discover'd, whereas 'tis usual craftily to disguise and conceal the latter, 'till the poor Man runs ignorantly into the Snare, whence he can never be releas'd. It is against the Law of Charity, nay, it is most barbarous and inhuman to confine and chain down a Man to such Miseries as are not to end 'till his Death; and which would admit of an easy Cure, did not the Severity of this positive Ordinance stand in the way: in as much as God Almighty, in his Laws and Commands, seems to have mercifully accommodated himself to the Infirmity of human Nature. The Holy Scriptures prescribe Matrimony, among other Reasons, for the avoiding of Temptations to Incontinence. But now the Man who can find in Marriage no Rest or Comfort to his Mind, who is perpetually teiz'd and disturb'd, by an untoward Partner, must needs be assaulted with stronger Temptations, than if he liv'd in Celibacy. For his Heart will be ever full of Discontent; and because his Wife is so unpleasing an Object, he will seek to bestow his Love and himself elsewhere. Maimonides, amongst the Reasons of the Law about Divorce, assigns this for one, that the Peace and Tranquillity of particular Families might, by this means, be the more surely preserv'd (d). Which Reason affecting Christians as much as Jews, it cannot seem probable that

(a) L. 15. p. 490. Ed. Gen. Casaub. (b) Euripid. Hyppol. Coron. v. 640, 641.

— From a Woman wife above her Measure Protect me Heaven. —

(1) Vid. lib. 5. c. 12. f. 21. (c) Deuteron. XXIV. 1. (d) So Bodinus, De Repub. l. 1. c. 3. affirms, Never was any Law more just and holy than the Divine Ordinance of Divorces, either to curb the Pride of Women, or to restrain the Anger and Violence of Men.

'GOD design'd to lay a heavier Yoak on the former than on the latter (a). We are commanded in Holy Scripture to remove from us all Obstacles of Piety: amongst the chief of which we may fairly reckon the Forwardness of an incorrigible and inseparable Companion. It is repugnant to Nature, that two Minds directly opposite, and admitting of no Possibility of Union, should be tied together in a Bond never to be broken. The Christian Emperours (1) have declar'd it as their Judgment, that the Plotting of either Party against the Life of the other, is a good Reason of Divorce: and how many Men's Lives have been unhappily shortned by these continual Grievs and Discomforts? Marriage is a Society: But human Societies, inasmuch as they are held together in a Moral Bond, consist rather in the Union of Souls than of Bodies. Should we say otherwise of Marriage, we should degrade it below the coupling of Beasts, in which we frequently observe some sort of Affection and Good-will in the Mates to each other. When, therefore, the Soul doth not find in Matrimony that sweet Agreement which it sought, so ill-match'd a Pair live rather in the Misery and Hardship of a Prison, than in the Comfort of Society. Solemn Oaths, if either in themselves improper, or tending to the Prejudice of a Third Party, are capable of a Dispensation; and hath not the Marriage-Covenant as good a Right to the same Favour? Nor will it signify any thing to answer here, that unhappy Matches are laid on Men by Divine Providence, for the Tryal and Exercise of their Patience. For Diseases and other Calamities are most certainly sent from Heaven; and yet the Application of human Remedies was never forbidden in such Cases.

After this, he holds a long Dispute, concerning the Permission of Divorce among the Jews. For, says he, if it be in the Nature of the Fact Adultery for either Party after a Divorce to marry again, it follows that Moses establish'd Adultery by a solemn Law. But to imagine this of Institutions which had God for their Author, would not only be absurd, but most profane and impious.

He likewise reprehends those Authors who affirm, that the Jews had not a Law of Divorce but rather a Dispensation. A Dispensation, he observes, is of two Kinds, either properly so called or improperly. The latter is rather a particular and exceptive Law, absolving and disengaging from a more general Command, for some just and reasonable Cause: as that mention'd Numb. IX. 6, &c. and Deut. XXV. v. 5. and that in Leviticus, of marrying the 'Brother's Wife, upon his Decease without Issue. A Dispensation, properly so called, obtains only in particular Cases rarely happening, and therefore not specified in the Law, but left to the Decision of Charity, and to the Prudence of the Judges: As upon extreme Hunger, it was lawful for David and his Followers to eat the Shew-bread (2): so that this sort of Dispensation, is nothing else but the interpreting a Law according to Equity.

Here 'tis worth our Notice that he confounds Dispensation and Equity with each other; whereas there is really a wide Difference between them. But, as to the Argument, this is certain, whoever will maintain the Jewish Divorces to have proceeded in the way of Dispensations, it lies on him to prove, that there was then extant some general Law, declaring Matrimony not to be reverfible upon account of Manners and Temper; which Law must either have been a Branch of Nature's Ordinances, or a Divine Positive Institution. As for those words in Genesis II. 24. (3) and those two shall be one Flesh, some are of Perswasion, that they express indeed a most strict Partnership, and such as to break off on a slight account, could neither be decorous nor advantageous to Mankind. But it doth not hence follow, that the Knot cannot be untied upon Reasons which subvert the very End and Design of Matrimony: As it would be ridiculous thus to argue, GOD joins Man and Wife together, therefore it is not in the Power of Man to join himself to whom he pleaseth; or, therefore no human Covenant ought to intervene. But what ought to be infer'd is rather this; God joins the Parties by the Mediation of their Deed and Covenant; therefore it is his Will they should not be separated, unless that Covenant be on one side or the other transgress'd.

Mr. Milton proceeds to enquire into the Opinion of those who assert, that Divorces were by the Divine Law permitted only, and not approved. This he takes to be an irreverent Reflection on Almighty God; in as much as it betokens Infirmity in a Governour, to allow his Subjects in any Practice, to which he does not really give his Approbation. And why must the Jews alone have been so notorious for Hardness of Heart, as not to be able to comply with the suppos'd Primitive and General Ordinance, when so many Christian Nations and Ages have yielded a ready Obedience to it?

On those Words of our Saviour, from the Beginning it was not so, some thus descant: 'In the State of Innocence Human Manners were more perfect and excellent, than to give occasion to any signal Trouble and Disagreement: and therefore the necessity of applying Divorce as a Remedy to unhappy Marriages, is a remarkable Evidence of the impair'd Condition of our Nature.

(a) Varenus Descript. Japon. cap. 12. reports of the Japonese, Divorces are very frequent in this Nation, though the nobler Persons still keep the rejected Wife in their Family, and take care of her Maintenance and Support. On this account, the Women apply their Endeavours to discover their Husbands Temper and Humour, by which means they may in all things gratify and please them, and be ever laying new Engagements on their Minds. And being once thrown off, they dissemble the Injury, and make not the least Complaint, that by the Sweetness of their Conversation, and Readiness of performing all kind Services, they may recover themselves in their Affections. (1) See the Law already quoted in Sect. 22.

(2) 1 Sam. XXI. 6. Matt. XII. 3, &c.

(3) See Mr. Le Clerc's Comment upon the place.

To conclude; Mr. Milton farther censures those who alledge, that this liberty of Divorce was therefore granted to the Jews by Moses, because they had been accusom'd to it in Egypt. For now, when the weight of the Egyptian Yoak was still upon their Shoulders, must needs have been the most proper time of teaching them to forget the Customs of that Country. As we see so many strict and excellent Laws given them against Idolatry, which they had seen practis'd every Day, during their Servitude and Confinement.

But these Matters we leave undetermin'd, as not tending directly to our main Purpose.

XXV. The necessary Qualifications required by the Law of Nature, in Persons rightly contracting Matrimony, are a Fitness or Ability, both Physical and Moral. By the former we understand such a Constitution of Body as is capable of attaining the chief End of Marriage, the Procreation of Issue (a). Therefore such Persons as labour under a perpetual and incurable Impotency, such as Eunuchs and the like, ought not to aspire to the Conjugal Honour. It was certainly an Unnatural Custom in Egypt, to allow the Eunuchs Wives, because they laid claim to some inferior Degree of useless Pleasure (b). And here a Doubt may arise, whether we can properly call it Matrimony, when an ancient Couple are link'd together without any Prospect of a Blessing from the Bed. Dionysius, in Plutarch (c), when his aged Mother desired him to bestow a Husband upon her, replied, It was in his Power to do Violence to the Laws of his Country, but not to the Laws of Nature (d). Yet in most Common-wealths these sort of Matches are tolerated; in as much as the other End of Matrimony, mutual Assistance and Comfort, will hold as strongly here as in any other Case (e). Perhaps we shall not speak improperly if we call these Honorary Marriages, as we term those Offices Honorary, in which a Title only is conferr'd, without Action or Business. Nero, when he deserted his Wife Octavia's Bed, excused himself with saying, Sufficere sibi Uxoriam Ornamenta (f), He was contented with the bare Ornaments and Badges of Marriage; in Allusion to the Triumphalia Ornamenta (g), sometimes bestow'd on Persons without the real Solemnity of a Triumph.

The Case of David and Abisag (g) seems to fall under this imperfect Matrimony. Tho' Solomon, in all Appearance, esteem'd the Marriage good and valid; in as much as he gave Capital Judgment on Adonijah, for begging her for his Wife; because this Attempt of marrying the King's Widow (which in the Jewish Constitution was accounted unlawful,) shew'd he was driving on some Design against the publick Peace and Establishment (h).

XXVI. It is farther supposed in Matrimony, as in all other Covenants, that the Parties contracting it, have sufficient Use of Reason; that there is no Error, no Flaw (2) in the Essentials, and that no unjust Fear is on either side occasion'd. In this last Point, the Jewish Civil Laws were very particular; by them, if the Woman was compell'd by Force or Fear, the Espousals were revers'd, but not on the other side, if the Man alleg'd Compulsion; because there could not be the same Presumption of any Violence or Fright offer'd him: And if the Conditions had displeas'd him, he might afterwards have rejected her (i). In like manner, if there were a Mistake, either as to the Person, the Object of Consent, or in any Quality, either relating to Matrimony it self, or serving as a Condition on which the Consent was built, (especially in case of Guile or Deceit used on either side) the Contract is manifestly void. Thus a Wife pretending Virginitie, and afterwards discover'd defective, was by the Divine Law, not only turn'd away from her Husband, but made liable to severe Punishments. Tho' the barbarous Nations appear not to have been over-curious in this Point of Purity (k). Thus, again, if a Man, in the Covenant of Marriage, expressly inserted a Clause, importing that he took such a Woman for his Wife only in case she were of Noble Blood, of such a Fortune or the like; he shall not be oblig'd to Consummate the Match till the supposed Condition be made appear. But if, neglecting to enquire into the Truth, he shall have proceeded to Consummation, he shall by this Act be judged to have tacitly renounced the conditional Clause; and therefore if things do not afterwards come up to his Hopes, he hath no good Reason for Divorce. For the Contract did not run in these Terms, If you do not bring me such a Fortune I'll Divorce you, but, if you do not bring me such a Fortune, I'll not Marry you; which are manifestly different. He, then, who, in the Affair of Matrimony, thus feels the Charms of the Portion more than of the Lady, is very ridiculously Senseless, if he let the Business be finish'd before he hath good Security for that which was his chief Aim (a). Much less shall it be lawful to break off a Match, or to forbear consummating, when a Man hath caught at the Bait of a supposed Fortune, without bargaining for any particular Summ. And therefore the Ephori in Sparta, did very justly in fining the Gentleman, who having been contracted to Lysander's Daughter, in her Father's Life-time, refused her, when that Great General was found to Dye in so Poor a Condition (b).

(a) Zozim. l. V. To put a Virgin in the Marriage-Bed before the proper Age, is no less than to do an Injury and Violation to Nature. (b) Gro. ad Deuter. c. XXIII. v. 1. Genes. c. XXXIX. v. 1. (c) In Apothegm. p. 175. E. Ed. Wech. (d) Quintil. Declam. 306. p. 464. Ed. Lugd. Bat. There may be some kind of Unchastity even in Marrying. Idem Declam. 2 p. 23. in fin. An old Husband is (often) the most humble instance of Slavery; and is the more charm'd and overcome with the Magick of the Fair Sex, the colder his own Powers are in the Reception of it. Comp. Val. Max. l. 7. c. 7. s. 4. (e) V. Lib. V. t. 4. l. 27. C. de Nuptiis. (f) Sueton. Ner. c. 35. (g) Sueton. August. c. 38. (h) Kings I. (i) Gro. ad Reg. d.l. v. 11, 17. (2) See above in L. 3. c. 6. f. 11. (i) Selden. de Uxore Ebræa, l. 2. c. 4. (k) See the Customs of the Barbarians, Diod. Sic. l. 5. c. 18. of the Armenians and Lydians, Strab. l. 11. of the Babylonians, Herodotus Clio, of the Thracians, Idem Terpsich, of the Adrimachide and the Nasomones, Idem Melpomen. See Aristippus's fowl Fancy in Diog. Laert. l. 2. Add Boxborn's Notes on Sueton. Calig. c. 40. towards the End. Justin. l. 18. c. 5. n. 4. Paul. Venet. l. 2. c. 37. of the Inhabitants of Tebeth and Cathay. Constantine the Great abolish'd the like Immodesty amongst the Phanicians; as we are told by Sozomon, Hist. Eccles. l. I. c. 2. l. V. c. 9.

What we have been offering, holds good only in Natural Law. For it is in the power of Civil States to Enact, that no such Clause, belonging indirectly to Matrimony, shall hinder or defer the due Consummation of it.

XXVII. A Moral Ability of contracting Matrimony is wanting in Women, already dispos'd of to other Men. For the Right of the Husband over his Wife continues so long as he doth not actually renounce it. Therefore to marry an other Man's Wife, not duely loos'd and separated from him, is not only unlawful, but void and ineffectual: because it was not in the Woman's power to make this second Engagement, whilst the first continu'd in force; and to cohabit with this new Husband, is to live in constant Adultery. For the same reason, in Countries where Polygamy is prohibited, a Man cannot without Sin proceed to another Marriage, whilst he is held by the Bonds of a former.

By the Jewish Law, it was Criminal for a Man to take his Wife again whom he had put away (c). The reason of which Institution no doubt was to prevent the frequency of Divorces on slight and petit Occasions, by cutting off all Hopes of Re-union, when Passion should grow cool (d). Yet some, from Jerem. III. 12. collect, that it was lawful to receive again the dismiss'd Woman, provided she had not contracted a new Marriage.

It is remarkable in the Turkish Alcoran, that a Man is allow'd to take home his Wife, even after he hath three times dismiss'd her, but not unless she has been, in the mean-time, married to Another, and been discarded by him likewise. The Mahometans esteem this as the Highest Infamy and Reproach; and therefore the famous Bajazet thought he could not bestow a heavier Curse upon Tamerlane, who sent to defie him to War, than by replying, if he doth not come as he threatens, may he fetch his Wife back after he hath three times sent her off (e). It is another Precept of the Alcoran, that a Man who puts away his Wife; shall fix a certain Time, during which, it shall be unlawful for her to chuse a new Husband: that he may thus use Deliberation in determining whether or no to take her again into Favour.

Josephus (f) mentions a Jewish Ordinance forbidding a Man to marry Her whom he hath perswaded to leave her former Husband; since this Irregularity could not but breed high Discontents and Troubles. On the same good Reason are those Christian Canons founded, which deny an Adulterer, the liberty of marrying the Woman whom he thus defiled (g). In this Point Euripides's (h) Observation seldom fails, — *The Wretch that stains Another's Bed,

And takes the Vile Adulteress to his own,
Condemn'd to wed her for his Punishment;
Is wildly vain, if he expects she'll prove
In her new Vows more Chast than in her old.*

XXVIII. Persons allied within such a Degree of Blood or Affinity, are likewise under a Moral Incapacity of contracting Marriage (i); in so much that it is not only from the Beginning unlawful to strike such a Match, but this Engagement tho' actually concluded, is never esteem'd Vicious and Defective. This is an Opinion generally receiv'd by all Nations of Manners and Civility; yet to assign a solid reason for it, such as shall flow, like other Precepts, from the Social Nature of Man, seems at first sight, a Point of no ordinary difficulty. Some Enquirers are content to fly to the Abhorrence of Human Affections in this Case. 'All Persons, say they, who are not Corrupted by Ill Education or Wicked Habits, do find in their very Senses, a Repugnancy and Aversion to such Impurities; which is a plain Argument that those things are prohibited by the Law of Nature. But indeed this Repugnancy of Affections is not equally to be discover'd amongst all People, nor always, even amongst those who pretend to the Art of Culture and Refinement: and when Authors urge it for a Reason, it would not be altogether absurd to answer them, that the Abhorrence may perhaps arise not so much from any in-bred Principle, as from long Use and Custom, which often counterfeit Nature. Nor in our Searches after Natural Law, is it very safe to rely upon the bare Judgment of our Senses and Affections; since at this rate we might conclude, that those things are by the same Law Commanded towards which our Senses and Affections are carried on with a vigorous Inclination; whereas, on the contrary, it is manifest that those Acts

(a) Especially since the Managers of Matches usually answer the Character which we find in Libanius (Progymn. p. 6.) They come arm'd with a great many studied Flourishes and fine Sayings, and by lessening what's present, and magnifying what's absent, easily prevail on the kind and credulous.

(b) Vid. Elian. V. H. l. VI. c. 4. (c) Deuteron. XXIV. 4.

(d) Grotius (ad. d. l.) gives this Reason, Because such a Practice looks like lending One's Wife to another Man, and might yield Shelter and Countenance to the most scandalous Debaucheries. (e) V. Laonic. Chalcondil. l. 3.

(f) Jud. Antiqu. l. IV. c. 8. (g) Gratian. Caus. 31. qu. 1. c. 1, 2, &c. (h) Electra. v. 921, &c.

(i) Vid. L. 38. t. 10. l. 4. s. 3, 4, 5. D. de gradibus & affinitibus.

to which we are so violently prone, Reason and Nature do really disallow.

Plutarch (a) enquiring why the Romans did not take Wives from amongst their near Relations, thus proposeth his Reasons after his doubting manner. Was it that they might spread their Kindred more widely, and encrease the number of their Alliances; giving Wives to some, and taking them from others? Or did they it, to avoid Conjugal Discords; which, should they arise between Persons allied by Blood, would destroy, not only the Love between Husband and Wife, but the very principles of Natural Affections (b)? Or because, they knew the weaker Sex, to stand in need of many Defenders, were they therefore unwilling to marry their Kinswomen, that they might be ready to Assist and Protect them, if injur'd by other Husbands (c)? The first of these Reasons, The spreading and improving of Alliances, is confirm'd by the Approbation of St. Augustin, and of Bp. Cumberland (d). But on this way of arguing we may observe, that as an Act less Useful or Profitable, is not always unlawful, so the Profit here alledg'd is not attainable by this only Method: in as much as a far greater Advantage may result from the quite contrary Practice; that is, if the nearest Relations would still Match themselves to each other, their Estate and Wealth would be hindered from passing out of the Family. And on this account in the Divine Law, Numb. XXXVI. 3. Women possess'd of an Inheritance in immovable Goods, are commanded to take Husbands only from amongst their Kindred; lest the Land should run out of one Tribe into another. Yet in case they would quit their Title to the Inheritance, they were allow'd to marry any Persons, of their own Nation. The Women of the Tribe of Levi were not concern'd in this Injunction, as being incapable of holding Land (e). In Peru, during the Command of the Incas, it was provided by Law, that every Man should chuse his Wife out of his own City, and his own Family: after the Marriage was concluded, a House was built for the new Couple, at the Common Charge, and the nearest Relations presented them with Furniture (f). It was one of the Attic Laws (i), that Heiresses should be taken in Marriage by their nearest Kinsmen, to preserve the Riches of their Ancestors in the same Line (g). But the seeming Hardship of this Ordinance was sufficiently made amends for by another, which commanded that if the Circumstances of such a young Woman were but very mean and inconsiderable, the next of her Kindred should nevertheless be obliged to wed her, or else to give her a Fortune suitable to her Birth and Quality (h).

XXIX. In order to the settling of these Questions, it is, in the first Place necessary, we examine how it comes to pass, that altho' the Propagation of so noble a Creature as Man, be in it self a Work of Honour and Credit, yet amongst all civiliz'd Nations, as well the Instruments, as the Act of this good Service, should be garded with so tender a Sense of Modesty, as nothing but a Face harden'd by Habitual Wickedness can Conquer or Suppress? To which Purpose we have a most Remarkable Story, recorded by Plutarch (i) and Polyænus (k), of the Miletian Virgins, who being, by some strange and unknown Cause, driven to a mad Desire of Hanging themselves; and their Distemper admitting of no Stop nor Remedy; it was at length Decreed by a solemn Law, that the Bodies of those who dispatch'd themselves, in this desperate way, should be carried naked through the Common Market. And by this means, whilst the Fear of Death could make no Impression on the Frenzy, the Sense of Shame restor'd them to their Wits. It is farther Remarkable, that whatever Nations, in Ancient or Modern Times, have entertain'd a Custom of going naked, or of performing in open View, the secret Affairs of Marriage, have been censur'd and condemn'd by the rest of the World, as Wild and Barbarous (l). Now the reason of all this, is not so easy to come at. For as to the immediate Instruments of this Work of Nature, they lie under no scandal of Deformity, and they serve to a Great and Worthy Design: And therefore, the Egyptians and Athenians paid religious Regards to them,

(a) Quæst. Roman. 108. p. 289. D. (b) For Instance, because there often happen Quarrels between the Husband's Mother and his Wife, therefore a Man (according to this Argument) ought not to marry one that ow'd a Natural Reverence to his Mother; that is, his Sister. (c) V. Augustin De Civitate Dei, l. XV. c. 16. cited by Gratian. Caus. 35. qu. 1. c. 1. (d) De Leg. Nat. c. 8. f. 9. (e) Vid. Grot. ad Matth. I. 16.

(f) Garcilasso de la Vega Comment. Reg. l. IV. c. 8. (i) V. Sam. Petit. in Leg. Attic. L. 6. T. 1. (g) Many Suits of Law falling out amongst the Pretenders to these Heiresses, the young Women got the Title of Ἐπίδαμοι. (h) We find a Law of Charondas much to the same Purpose, in Diod. Sic. l. 12. c. 8.

(i) De Virtute Mulier. p. 249. C. (k) Strategem. l. 8. c. 63. (l) Thus Pompon. Mela reports of the Mossynians, that their Love-Affairs are promiscuous and open. And Apollonius Rhodius in Argonaut. l. 2. has left this Character of the same People;

The Manners and the Notions they pursue,
Are the Reverse of ours; in publick View
What we perform, or at the crowded Barr,
They act by Stealth, and make a silent Care:
But what our Modesty at Home conceals,
Their Tribes proclaim, and every Street reveals.
Like Beasts, beyond the Power of Shame to move, Stretch'd on the Ground they pursue their Common Love.

Vid. Diod. Sic. l. XIV. c. 31. & Xenophon. Exped. Cyr. l. V. Of the Massagetsans Herodot. in Clio, towards the End; of the Nesomones in Melpomen.

in their mysterious Worship (a). The Act it self as it is agreeable to Nature, so is it of absolute Necessity, and every way proper for the producing of so brave and generous an Effect. And therefore, Why should the Exercise of it before Others, create more Shame in a Man, than Eating and Drinking, since the Human Species can no more be preserv'd without the former Means, than the Individuals without the latter? Nor will Plutarch's Distinction satisfy the Doubt. There is no Pleasure (says he (b),) which we can more innocently enjoy, than that which we receive from Food and Nourishment. All Men are agreed on this Truth, as they shew by their Daily Practice. For they Eat in full Company, and in open View; whereas in their Love-Affairs, they seek the shelter of the Night: Because in these latter Ceremonies, to be Publick and Communicative, is esteem'd as Brutish and Unnatural, as to be Private and Secret in the former. As to this Point of Openness and Secrecy, it was a severe Return which a Scotch Lady, in the Emperour Severus's time, gave Julia Augusta when reproach'd by her for the Custom of holding Wives in Common amongst the Britains, We (said she) obey the Necessities of Nature much better than You Roman Dames: for we do that openly with the Best of Our Men, which You do privately with the Worst of Yours (c).

Neither do they throughly clear up the Matter, who have recourse to the Holy Scriptures, where the Natural Shame is Recorded to have been the immediate Consequence of the Fall. For the chief Question still returns, Why the Passion of Shame, should fix on these Parts, for its peculiar Residence, when our Hands, and our Tongues are as readily dispos'd to aid our Sinful Lust, and Disorderly Desires? Nay in as much as the Primitive Transgression came by the Act of Eating, one might imagine that this Opinion of Impurity should rather fasten upon the Mouth as its Original and proper Seat.

XXX. The Author of the Treatise de Principiis justis & decori touching on this Subject now before us, in the first Place lays down this for a Principle; Every thing which causeth Shame is not a Sin, nor forbidden by the Dictates of Natural Law (d). He instanceth in Poverty, mean Cloaths, innocent Mistakes, Deformity, and the like; which frequently put us to the Blush, tho' we can by no means lay any Moral Turpitude to their Charge. He proceeds to observe, that the reason why we would avoid such things, is because they are the ' Tokens of some Infirmity or Imperfection; from which Censures every Man desires to keep himself at as great a distance as possible. In the same manner, altho' to discover the Secrets of the Body be not, in it self, Sinful, yet a Man ought not certainly to use such a freedom in open view, whensoever it would prove an Offence and Blemish to Natural Honesty; which is very often the Case. A Man hath then only good Reason to be ashamed, when he possesseth or discloseth such Imperfections, as may make Others justly despise him, whilst appearing thus below the Character which he sustains. To be Ignorant of a Point of Learning is no Blemish in him who hath wanted the Benefit of Education; but one who hath made a long pretence to study, and yet can shew no Fruits of his proficiency, may well be ashamed of the Neglect. Plain Behaviour fits decently enough on a Countryman, but would be a faulty Stiffness in a Person of Breeding. Thus then, he who uncovers in Publick Sight those parts of the Body which the Custom of the Nation bids him conceal, is an Offender against Natural Honesty and Decorum (e). But he may take the same Liberty in a Country where the Men go Naked, as suppose in the Caribbes, without the Imputation of Obscenity or of Sin (f). Thus it is accounted Impudence to do some things in the Presence of Strangers, without desiring particular leave, which we make no scruple of practising before our Equals and our Acquaintance (g). Thus, a Teacher of Anatomy lays open such Objects to our View, as it would not be Decent for him so much as to Name, were he not engag'd in his proper Business and Exercise. The same judgment we are to make of the Point before us. For altho' a Nation, which doth not censure these unseemly Freedoms, must needs have cast off all Modesty (h), and this not without a grievous Sin in their Fore-fathers, from whom the loose Opinion is deriv'd; yet the Custom being once firmly establish'd, and such a way of living exempted, by Universal Consent, from all Marks of Disgrace, the whole People may then openly appear in the same manner, and yet contract not the least Guilt. In as much as they do not apprehend, or acknowledge in this Practice, any Imperfection or Infirmity deserving Shame; more than we do in the Custom of our Women to go with their Faces Unveil'd, which in some Countries would be reckon'd a scandalous breach of Modesty (i). We may farther observe, that even in those Nations where the appearing Naked is prohibited, the most secret Parts are sometimes disclosed without Sin, as when they are recommended to the Care of Physicians, or when Surprise, or Necessity, in regard of Time, or of Want, hinders their Concealment; or when Children are wrapt in their Swadling-Cloaths. Because, in all these Cases, the Mark of Impudence ceaseth; the Discovery being made without any lascivious Design (a).

(a) Vid. Diodor. Sic. l. 1. c. 88. (b) Conviv. Sapient. p. 158. F. (c) Xiphilin. Epir. Dion. in Sever. Add. Montaign's Essays, l. 2. c. 12. & Charron de la Sageffe, l. 1. c. 22. (d) P. 59. &c. (e) A Woman in this Case, as Herodotus expresseth it, L. 1. p. 3. Ed. H. Steph. when she throws off her Garments, lays aside her Modesty with them. (f) In some Parts of Abyssinia, the Women go quite naked, without having any irregular Influence on the Men. Franc. Alvarez. Descript. Ethiop. c. 32. Add. J. Leri. Hist. Amer. c. 8. & Rochefort Descript. Inf. Antill. p. 2. c. 9. If I mistake not, amongst some of the Indians, to go with the Waist cover'd, fell under the same Penalty as Adultery. (g) And since Claudius did not put out the wise Edict, which was so long under his grave Deliberation, (Suet. Claud. c. 32.) we still make a Scruple of offending the Company with some kind of sounds, which we reckon not quite so improper Musick when we are alone. Add. Diogen. Laert. in vitam Metrol. l. VI. (h) Since amongst all civiliz'd People, it hath been, even in Death, a Care εὐχόμενος καθεῖν to fall in a decent and modest Posture. (i) Plato, (in Diog. Laert. 3.) speaking of unwritten Laws, proceeding from Custom, instanceth in Τὸ μὴ γυμνὸν πορεύεσθαι εἰς τὴν ἀγορὰν, not to appear naked in Publick Places.

In another part of his Work he repeats the same Argument; 'the uncovering of the secret Parts, (says he) is not in it self, foul or indecent, but is only rendred such by means of the Circumstances; which Circumstances are taken, either from the Lust of others, or from their Honour or Worth, or from our own Reputation, which we are oblig'd to support and preserve. But in as much as the external Tokens of Reverence and Respect are capable of great Variation, many Actions are, (by the same People,) construed as an Affront to our Neighbour, or a Discredit to our Selves, which upon the Change of Circumstances, would appear Harmless and Inoffensive. Upon the Approach of our Saviour, we find St. Peter (b) hastning to gird on his Fisher's Coat, whereas he was not asham'd to work Naked with the Companions of his Business. Because the Dignity of Christ, and the Honour St. Peter ow'd Him, required a grave and modest Appearance and Carriage; which, in the Opinion of civiliz'd Nations, are inconsistent with Nakedness (c). We transact many things in secret with Decency and Convenience, which if perform'd openly would be reproach'd as Infamous; neither do we reckon it Dishonourable, to let the Company know on what account we retire. Lastly, many Actions pass unblamed in Men, which would look inexcusably Impudent in the other Sex.

From St. Paul's manner of Speech 2 Corinth. XI. 17. he infers, 'That when upon the Formality of begging Pardon, or desiring leave of Others, we say, or do a thing fairly and civilly, which would otherwise be rude and indecent; the Impropriety here doth not affect the thing absolutely consider'd in it self, but depends wholly on the Circumstances, which if taken away, leave no Ground for Censure:

for all that is here done, is that the other Party waves and remits the Reverence, which was owing to him. He judiciously inserts this Caution, provided, that by the general Custom of the Nation, all Men are allow'd to indulge each other in these petit Liberties. For otherwise particular Persons do by no means wipe off the Blemish, when they give themselves a mutual Dispensation in such Points: As a Company of Wild Sparks could not avoid Shame and Reproof, should they, by joint Consent, go naked in a Place of Manners and Civility. Lastly, He makes no Doubt but that our first Parents, before they sinn'd, had, in respect of Shame, the innocent Insensibility of Children: but that immediately after their Offence, this guilty Passion seiz'd upon their Mind, by which they apprehended their Nakedness to be Indecent, as we, when we grow up to Years of Reason, make the same Judgment (1). His Inference from the whole is this, 'That no Degrees of Marriage are forbidden by the Law of Nature; tho' to abstain from some is most agreeable to Natural Honesty (d).

XXXI. For our part, tho' we do not think this way of arguing ought altogether to be condemn'd, yet we chuse to fix the Shame, now under our Examination, principally on these two Reasons. First, because Man is a Creature of high and proud Conceits, fondly desirous of Honour and Grace, and abhorring any thing that seems to lessen him in these respects. Now, through those Out-lets of our Body, Nature casts off the useless Relicks of what we Eat or Drink; and these Relicks we have a great Aversion to, not only upon account of that Uncomeliness, but in as much as they seem to upbraid us with our mean Condition, whilst the greatest Delicacies of Taste, by being once receiv'd within us, are so vilely chang'd and corrupted. And hence our lofty Imagination engageth us to be very industrious in concealing so manifest Tokens of our Infirmary (e). Nature (says Tully (f)) seems to have had a most kind regard to the Dignity of our Body, by exposing only those Parts to sight, which appear beautiful, comely and agreeable; and by covering and concealing those which would be foul and offensive, if laid open to view, and serve us only for the meer Necessities of our Being. This exquisite Diligence, which Nature hath shown in the Human Fabrick, Men have imitated

(a) A Pigmy might well be asham'd of his Size amongst a People of larger Dimensions; yet in his own Quarters he is not affected with the Disgrace, — Ubi tota Cohors pede non est amplior uno, Where the whole Troop make but a Foot in height.

Sr. Tho Herbert (Travels p. 21) reports of Women amongst the Casars, that if you give them any thing, they uncover All, in way of Civility. (b) John XXI. 7. (c) Hence amongst the Romans, Sons grown up to the Condition of Men, never bath'd with their Parents, nor Sons-in-Law with their Fathers-in-Law. Val. Max. l. 2. c. 1. f. 7. So in Livy L. 3. c. 26. The Deputies command L. Quintius, whom they found stripp'd at his Country Work, to hear the Orders of the Senate in his Gown. In the same manner, within our own Houses and in private, we are not asham'd of the meanest Apparel, which yet we could not appear in at a Wedding, or solemn Meeting, without great Indecency and Offence. See Matth. XXII. 12.

(1) See Mr. Le Clerc upon Genes. III. 7. See Mr. Barbeyrac's Note upon this Section. (d) Compare Montaign's Essays l. 1. c. 35. & Charron de la Sageffe, l. 1. c. 6. & 14. (e) See Corinth. XII. 23, 24.

(f) Offic. l. 1. c. 35.

in their modest Customs and Manners (a).

Our second Reason is, since our Affections being depraved and corrupted by the Fall, our irregular Lusts endeavour violently to make a Sally through those Passages; and since the due Restraints, and the legal Methods of Propagation, are the very Hinges on which Human Order and Society seem to turn; Nature to preserve her own Dignity, and to cut off, as much as possible, all Occasion of loose Desires, hath invented this Passion of Shame, engaging Men carefully to cover and to guard those weak Places, least lying continually open, they should tempt and invite the Enemy; and restraining the Pursuit of unlawful Pleasures, whilst Modesty confines the Exercise of those which are lawful, to the Privacy of Darkeness and Retirement. Hence our first Parents, after the perfect Harmony of their Affections was disorder'd and impair'd, when they found the unreasonable Inclination of Sense, vigorously striving to force a way through those defenceless Parts of the Body, could not but conceive the deepest Shame at this wretched Discovery of their own Imperfection; which, in some measure, to disguise and conceal, they had recourse to the Shelter of Apparel (1). That this Original Shame of Nakedness should, amongst many Nations, seem to have been quite subdu'd and effaced, was probably the Effect of Necessity; when Men being driven on uninhabited Coasts, and having worn out their present Garments, found no Supply of new ones, nor yet wanted them, by reason of the kind Temper of the Climate. Thus their Shame dropt off by Degrees with their Cloaths; or perhaps they express'd, for a little time, some Marks of it in wearing a thin Covering round their Middle, which soon left them quite Naked.

It's farther observable, that our Shame is ever encreas'd to a high Degree, by the Presence of those Persons to whom we naturally owe a Reverence, or towards whom we ought to carry our selves with Gravity and Caution: such as are especially our Parents and our Children. So that he who cannot be hereby deterr'd from daring to offer, under these awful Restraints, the open Freedom and Familiarity of the Conjugal State, is fairly judg'd to have an invincible Forehead, and to be well prepar'd for the Commission of the greatest Villa-nies, being possess'd with harden'd Impudence, The most violent Distemper of Human Minds, as it is term'd by the wise Tragedian (b).

XXXII. This Shame or Modesty may be assign'd as one of the principal Causes, why we esteem Marriages between Kindred, in a direct Line, to be forbidden by the Law of Nature: especially since there never did, and probably never will any such Case happen, as shall render these Matches necessary for the Preservation of Human Race (c) (2). And with regard to this restraint, we are to expound the Reason urg'd against those Marriages by Grotius (3): The Son, (says he,) being Superior by the Law of Matrimony, could not pay to his Mother, if at the same time his Wife, that Reverence which Nature requires; no more could the Daughter, in the like Case, to her Father; because, altho' the Conjugal Pact would keep her still his Inferior, yet so near a Familiarity must needs prejudice her Natural Duty (4). For take away the force of this Original Modesty, and it will not appear so very absurd, for a Mother to marry her own Son: since it is agreeable enough, that a Husband should pay Respect and Honour to his Wife on account of her extraordinary Virtue, Wisdom or Birth. Tacitus observes of his Father and Mother-in-Law, (Agricola and his Lady;) vixerunt mirâ concordia per mutuum charitatem & invicem se anteponendo: They liv'd in wonderful Agreement; thro' the Engagements of Mutual Affection, and by their kind Care of giving each the Preference to the other. Much less inconsistent would it be, for a Woman to pay to the same Man the Duty of a Daughter, and of a Wife, did she not find a restraint from the above-mentioned Principle.

The Reason alledg'd by Socrates in Xenophon (d), appears very Poor and Insipid, as if nothing deserv'd blame in these Matches but the great difference of Age, the effect of which must either be Barrenness, or suspicious and unressembling Issue: For are there not many Marriages in which the Years of the Couple stand at as wide a distance as those of Parents and their Children?

We cannot on this Head, but recommend the Chast and Pious Regard of the Roman Laws, which out of Reverenc to the bare Name of a Father, allow'd no Man to marry his Adopted Daughter, tho' all the Right of Adoption had

(a) This seems to be taken out of Xenophon. Apomnem. l. 1. Add Ambros. Offic. l. 1. c. 18. Herodotus (Interp. p. 64. towards the End.) reports of the Egyptians, that They eat their Food in the publick Streets; but retire Home when they have Occasion to get rid of it; upon this Principle, that whatever was foul and indecent, yet necessary, was to be perform'd at Home in secret, and every thing which was not foul, abroad. Yet we may remark (by the by) that the same People were jested upon, for tempering their Clay with their Hands, and their Bread with their Feet.

In Sadus's Persick Rosary (c. 8.) this Reason is given why the Ring shoul be worn on the Left-Hand, though less Honourable than the Right; Because the Right-Hand is a sufficient Ornament to it self. Aloys Cadamust (Navig. c. 10.) tells us of the Azenagians the Inhabitants of Senega, that They are as much ashamed of their Mouth, as of any other Part of the Body; and therefore they ordinarily go with a Cover upon it, which they only take off on the account of Eating. They take it for a kind of Sink, always sending out Stench and Nastiness. Leo Africanus (l. 1.) gives much the same Relation, and by him the People are called Senegates.

(1) See Mr. Barbeyrac's above-cited Note.

(b) Media, v. 471, 472. Huart (Trial of Wits, C. 1.) gives another Reason for this Modesty, which we have not leisure now to examine. (c) And therefore the Daughters of Lot (Genes. XIX. 31.) were too forward in their Conclusion: Though Grotius is of Opinion, that they thought their Practice absolutely blameless, having heard that it was usual with their Neighbours the Arabians, as it was likewise with the Persians.

(2) See Mr. Le Clerc's Note upon Genes. XIX. 31.

(3) B. 2. c. 5. l. 12. n. 2.

(4) See Mr. Barbeyrac's 2d Note upon this Section.

(d) Apomnem. l. 1.

been formally taken off and revers'd (a). And the Emperour Claudius acted much beyond his ordinary Capacity, when a Woman refusing to acknowledge her Son, and the Arguments appearing dubious on both sides of the Cause, he obliged her to a Confession of the Truth, by ordering the Young Man to demand her in Marriage (b).

Some have attempted to shew the high Indecency of such a practice from the strange Confusion it would cause in the quite contrary Names and Titles of Relation. Thus Mirra argues with her self in Ovid,

*Nec, quot confundas & jura & nomina sentis?
Tunc eris & matris pellex & adultera patris?
Tunc soror nati, genetrixq; vocabere fratris* (c)?

Canst thou be call'd (to save thy wretched Life)
Thy Mother's Rival, and thy Father's Wife?
Confound so many sacred Names in one;
Thy Brother's Mother, Sister to thy Son.

Mr. Dryden.

And Philo Judæus (d) inveighing against the Persians, who allow'd the Marriages between Mother and Son, thus expresseth himself. Nothing could have been invented more grossly Impious; to abuse the Bed of the Deceased Father, which claim'd a most Religious respect; to pay no Reverence to the Mother; to have the same Man become her Husband and her Son; on the other hand, to see the Mother assume the Name of a Wife; to hear their Common Children call'd the Brothers of their Father, and the Grandsons of their Mother.

No less Unnatural and Detestable is the Custom of the Isle of Ceylon, where a Father, when he hath provided a Match for his Daughter, forestalls the Husband in the Office of the Bed; giving this ridiculous Reason, that 'tis but just he should gather the first Fruits from a Tree of his own Planting (e).

XXXIII. The Jews, in this Point, had recourse, not so much to Natural Reason, as to the Original Prohibition of GOD. They taught, that from the Beginning of the World, six Kinds of Conjunctions were Divinely forbidden: with a Mother, or Mother-in-Law, with another Man's Wife, with a Sister by the same Venter, with a Male, and with a Beast. And all this (except the Case of a Sister) they deduce from those Words in Gen. II. 24. Therefore shall a Man leave his Father, (that is, say they, the Bed of his Father, and consequently shall abstain from his Mother-in-Law,) and his Mother, (that is, he shall observe decency and distance towards his proper Mother;) and shall cleave to his Wife, (thus both Males are excluded, and Women married to other Men;) and they two shall be one Flesh; (therefore unnatural Desires towards Beasts are here likewise forbidden; in as much as 'tis impossible for Man and Beast to make one Flesh.) This is Mr. Selden's account of their Doctrine (f). It was a very strange and singular Fancy of theirs, which the same Author reports (g), that a Gentile, becoming a Profelyte of Justice, immediately lost all Relation to his Gentile Friends, of what nearness and degree soever. Thus, if several Persons of the same Family, as suppose a Mother with her Daughter, were admitted together into the Jewish Communion, they imagined that their Right of Kindred straight expired, and that they ought to live as Persons entirely disengaged from each other. For by this Act of Embracing and Acknowledging their Religion, they conceiv'd Persons to be absolutely Regenerated, and put into the Condition of Infants (h). Thus their New-man having extinguish'd all the Ties that were upon him from his first Nativity, lay, in

(a) Vid. L. 23. t. 2. l. 55. princip. D. de ritu nuptiarum. v. 346, &c. So Oedipus in Seneca (Phæniss) v. 134, &c.

(b) Sueton. Claud. c. 15.

(c) Metam. X.

*Avi gener patrisque rivalis sui,
Frater suorum liberorum & fratrum parens.*

Thyestes in the Agamemnon of the same Poet, v. 34, &c.

————— *Verfa est natura retro
Avo parentem ——— patri virum, Natis nepotes misui.*

Ibid. Per scelera natus, nomen ambiguum suis, Idem sororis natus & patris nepos.

We meet with what follows amongst the Ancient Epi- [taphs;

*Herfilius hic jaceo, mecum Marulla quiescit,
Quæ soror & genetrix, quæ mihi sponsa fuit.
Vera negas, frontem trahis, hæc, enigmata Sphingis Credis? Sunt Pythio vera magis Tripode.
Me pater e nata genuit, mihi jungitur illa;
Sic soror & conjux, sic fuit illa parens.*

Son-in-Law to his Grandfather, Rival to his Father, Brother to his Children, and Father to his Brothers.

————— I've turn'd the Course of Nature back,
Confounded all Relations, wildly mixt
The Names of Father, Grandfather and Son, Husband and Grandson.

Conceiv'd in sinful Love, and born a Riddle;
Puzzling his Friends to fix his doubtful Name,
Son to his Sister, Grandson to his Father.

Here Herfilius, and next in deep repose
Marulla lies, his Mother, Sister, Spouse.
Start not, or frown to see the Sphinx renew;
The Pythian Tripod never told so true.
Shamed by her Sire, she weds their Common Son,
And blends the three Relations into one.

(d) Philo. Jud. de Leg. Special. p. 778. C. Ed. Par.

(e) And the same vile Excuse is alledged for his Incest by Chac-gehan in Bernier's Description of the Empire of the Mogul. (f) L. V. c. 1, 2. (g) C. 16.

(h) Tacitus seems to have obscurely hinted at this Opinion, when, in his Character of the Jews, he says, Those, who pass over to their Profession, use the same Customs; and one of the first Lessons which they are taught, is to despise the GODS, to lay aside all Duty and Regard to their Country, utterly to neglect and undervalue their Parents, Children and Brothers. Hist. l. V.

that respect, under no Restraint or Limitation as to Marriage. And this Notion they pretended to found on the Divine Law. Yet, by the Traditions of their Wise-men, a Profelyte was forbidden to marry his Mother, his Daughter, or his Sister, tho' a Profelyte as well as himself. And if any Person, during his Continuance in Paganism, had wedded into such Degrees, at his Conversion he was oblig'd to release himself by Divorce. The Case was not the same with a Slave, when receiv'd into their Worship under that Condition. For as they imagin'd him likewise to have no remaining Alliance of Kindred or Blood; so farther, they judg'd it no Sin for him to pass beyond the above-mentioned Bounds of Marriage, which confin'd all Free-men, as well Gentiles, as Jews. The Reason of this Difference was, because they esteem'd a Servant as No-Body, in Civil Consideration: And thus the State was not concern'd in regulating such inferior Marriages, but they were confirm'd, or dissolv'd, at the Master's Pleasure. Yet the Roman Laws enjoin the same decent regard to Kindred (a) in the Marriages of Slaves, as of Free-Subjects.

'Tis remarkable what Travellers report of the Chinese, that they decline marrying Women of the same Name with themselves, tho' not allied to them by Blood. And that on the other hand, provided their Names be different, they never regard any Nearness of Birth between Husband and Wife; so that a Niece and an Uncle is a very allowable Match (b).

XXXIV. We are now to examine the other Degrees of Consanguinity, those in a transverse Line; and afterwards to pass on to the Case of Affinity. To begin with Brothers and Sisters; there is commonly so very remarkable a Modesty between them, that they are unwilling to be, at the same time present in a Place, where the Endearments of Love and Courtship are carrying on: Nay it may be observ'd, that Brothers themselves, are usually averse to talking with each other on these Points of Pleasure, tho' only in Sport and Jest (c). Yet the reason why we cannot positively affirm that Marriages, in the first Degree, are, of themselves, repugnant to the Law of Nature, is this; because as the Origine of Mankind is recorded in the Holy Scriptures, such Matches must necessarily have been made between the first Children of our first Parents. For it is by no means to be suppos'd that G O D would appoint such a Case in which the Law of Nature could not but be violated; and yet we see Him commanding the Propagation of Kind, and at the same time providing no other way of performing that Duty, besides these Contracts between Brothers and Sisters. Nor can we say that the Creator lay under any Obligation of forming one only Human Pair. Some have express'd great Contempt of this Argument, as rash and impertinent, but their Censure will be of little force, 'till their Reasons are more considerable. They tell us, G O D was pleas'd Mankind should draw their Descent from one Head, that He might establish a firm Alliance amongst them on the Score of their Kindred. But would not the Alliance have been sufficient, should several Pairs have been at first produced, all having the same Nature, and the same immediate Author of it? And would not they have been able, by Inter-marriages, to keep up the near Relation amongst their Posterity? They urge farther, that if the Beginning of Human Race had been otherwise settled, Wars must have immediately followed, and the World have perish'd in its Infancy. But of what Consequence is this Objection, when even according to the Establish'd Method, we see one of the first Brothers falling by the Hands of the other? Therefore the Prohibition of these Marriages seems to have taken its Rise from some positive Ordinance (d): The Ground and Occasion of which might be, First, the great Modesty discoverable between Parties thus related; and, Secondly, this Consideration, that in as much as their Circumstances engage them to live together in a free and unobserv'd manner, were they farther allow'd to unite in a wedded State, too frequent Opportunities would be offer'd of Adultery, and other shameful Disorders (e).

It may contribute to the Illustration of this Point, to reflect again on the Opinion of the ancient Jews, as collected by Mr. Selden (f) (1). They, therefore, amongst the six Kinds of Conjunctions, originally forbidden by G O D, reckon the Marriage of a Brother with his Sister by the Mother's side. But they add, that this Command did not exercise its force 'till Mankind being sufficiently multiplied, Plenty of other Women might be had, and there was no need of breaking in upon this Degree. 'Tis an old Tradition with the Eastern People, that all Adam's Children, except Seth, were Twins; and that it being necessary amongst them for a Brother still to marry his Sister; yet they carefully abstain'd from Sisters of the same Birth. Farther, the Jews believ'd a Sister, by the Mother's side, to be more closely allied to her

(a) Vid. l. 2. §. 1. D. unde cognati. l. 8. l. 14. l. 2, 3. D. de ritu nuptiar. l. 22. de reg. juris. Selden. l. V. c. 16.

(b) Vid. Martin. Hist. Sinic. l. 1. (c) For which Plato assigns this Reason, (de LL. l. 8. p. 912. A. Ed. Wech.) That all the Talk of the World lies that way; Persons, in their very early Age, hearing these Doctrines ever insinuated, sometimes in jest, sometimes in more serious Application: and particularly in the Tragedies on the Stage, where Narrations are commonly made, that such vile Wretches, as Thyestes, Oedipus or Macareus, who have committed Incest with their Sisters, were seen in a Terrible manner to be their own Executioners. Simplicius on Epicet. c. 47. speaks to the same Purpose; Since Law and Custom have forbidden the Familiarity of Brothers and Sisters, the Inclinations are no less powerfully suppressed, than if the Command of Nature it self, had laid this Restraint upon them: except when Persons are transported with Frenzy, and tortured by the Furies of a Wicked Conscience. Comp. Charron. de la Sageffe, l. 2. c. 8. f. 6.

(d) Add. Cumberland de L. N. c. 8. f. 9. Selden de J. N. & G. l. 5. c. 1. & 8. (e) Vid. Ovid. Metamorph. IX. v. 458. 535. 558, &c. (f) L. V. c. 11. (1) See Mr. Barbeyrac's 1st, 2d and 3d Notes upon this Section.

Brother, than if by the Father's only. (And thus Deuteronomy XIII. 6. Thy Brother the Son of thy Mother, is Emphatically spoken, as a nearer Degree of Relation.) They thought the primitive Command affected only Sisters in the former Sense, not in the latter: for these they judg'd might be taken for Wives by the purest of the Gentiles, those who observ'd the Precepts of Noah, and govern'd themselves by the Law of Nature and of Nations. And hence, they say, it came to pass that Abraham married his Sister Sarah; no Restraint being yet laid, in that particular, from the positive Law. For least any should imagine, that the Term of Sister is there put for any Kinswoman, the Patriarch himself explains his own meaning, Truly, says he, she is my Sister, for she is the Daughter of my Father, but not the Daughter of my Mother (a). Yet that such Matches were not usual, in those Countries, is evident from this, that Abraham imagin'd He should avoid being taken for Sarah's Husband, if she pretended to be his Sister. Unless we are rather inclin'd to say, that He hoped they would take the Word in the fullest and most vulgar Sense, for the Sister by both sides.

A Difficulty ariseth on this Subject, from 2 Sam. XIII. 13. where Tamar Answers her Half-Brother Amnon, soliciting her to his Bed, Speak to the King, for he will not withhold me from thee. Here on the one side, it is not probable that Tamar was Ignorant of the Divine Law, which expressly forbids the Marriage of a Brother and Sister by the same Father, as well as by the same Mother. And on the other side, it would have been in vain for Her to think of finally escaping the Violence of her Brother's Passion, by depending on this Reserve, that whatever she might seem to promise Him, He could not, at last, wed Her, without a manifest Violation of the Divine Command: which yet is Josephus's Opinion (b). The Jewish Doctors therefore give this Answer to the Case before us. They suppose Maacab, the Mother of Tamar and Absalom, to have been taken Captive by David, in the War against the King of Gesur, and to have born him Tamar whilst she continued a Gentile, and Absalom, after she was made a Profelyte. Since then they were perswaded that Persons, by embracing their Religion, were releas'd from all former Kindreds; and because the Child of an Israelite, by a Gentile Wife, follow'd the Mother, not the Father, and was likewise reckon'd a Gentile; they concluded that Tamar, when she became a Profelyte, lost all the Relation she had to Amnon, during her Gentile Condition: and that accordingly she believ'd she might be given in Marriage to Him, without transgressing the Divine Ordinance; Her Nearness of Blood being extinguish'd in Her Regeneration.

To touch on the Customs of other Nations in this Affair; we find Byblis, in Ovid, complaining that the Laws of Marriage should be stricter amongst Men than amongst the Gods;

Dii nempe suas habuere sorores.
Sic Saturnus Opim junctam sibi sanguine duxit
Oceanus Tethyn, Junonem rector Olympi.
Metam. IX. v. 496, &c.

In Homer (c) the Daughters of Aeolus are represented as married to his Sons. Theocritus (d) commends King Ptolomy and his Queen, for resembling the Matches of the Gods, in being Brother and Sister. Lucian (e) reports the same of Mausolus and Artemisia; in Avrian (f), Hidreus, the Carian, is said to have married Ada his Sister. Amongst the old Peruvians the Incas alone were permitted to marry their Sisters, and all other Men forbidden to take the same Liberty (g). On the other hand, the Romans abhor'd this Practice as most odious and unnatural. Plutarch (h), giving the reason why the Women, in that Nation, saluted their Relations with a Kiss, hath left this Remark, When the Laws had Prohibited the Marriage of near Relations, they yet allow'd them to proceed to this innocent expression of Love; and this became a mutual Pledge and Mark of their Alliance. For in ancient times, the Romans abstain'd from wedding their Kinswomen, in any Degree of Blood; as they at present forbore their Aunts and their Sisters. It was late before the Marriage of Cousin-Germans was dispens'd with (i).

The Athenians, by the Constitution of Solon, might marry their Sisters, by the Father's side, not by the Mother's. Thus Plutarch (k) relates a Match between Themistocles's Son and his Daughter by another Wife. Demosthenes (l) reports the same of his Grandfather. Cornelius Nepos, in his Life of Cimon (1), observes that General to have made the like Marriage, which, he says, Was agreeable to the Athenian Customs (m). Yet there is a Passage, in the Oration of Andocides against Alcibiades, which seems to overthrow all this: Reflect, says he, upon the Examples of our Ancestors; with what Bravery and what Wisdom they proceeded, when they sent so great a Man as Cimon into Banishment, for violating the Laws, in taking his own Sister to his Bed (n). Plutarch, in Cimon's Story, delivers himself with no Certainty on this Point; he tells us, Some censur'd Him for using too much Liberty with his Sister, tho' only in Sport: Others affirm'd, that the Matrimonial Contract had really pass'd between them, and that the reason was, because the young Lady, on

(a) Genes. XX. 12. Vid. Grot. ad loc. dist. (b) Antiqu. Jud. VII. 7. (c) Odyss. 10. (d) Ibyl. 17.
towards the End. (e) Dial. Diogen. & Mausol. (f) De Expedit. Alexand. l. 1. (g) Garcilasso de la Vega, l. 4. c. 9. (h) In Qu. Rom. p. 265. C. (i) See the Reason, ibid. (k) In Themistocl. in fin.
(l) Contra Eubulid. (1) C. 1. (m) See Baeler's Notes on this Place. (n) To this agrees Athenaus, account of the Poverty of the Family, could not find a Husband abroad.
l. XIII. c. 21.

The Lacedemonians, on the contrary, married their Sisters, by the Mother's side, not by the Father's; as Philo Judæus (a) informs us.

It appears from Plato (b), that he esteem'd Matrimony between Brothers and Sisters lawful; in as much as he forbids it only in the ascending or descending Line of Kindred.

Amongst the Egyptians, Diodorus Siculus (c) observes, this kind of Marriage was establish'd by an express Law, and was grounded on a superstitious Conceit, that the same Practice had succeeded fortunately with Isis. Achilles Tatius (d) reports the same Custom of the Phœnicians.

Others of the Ancients declar'd an absolute Dislike of this Freedom. It is one of Phœnylides's Precepts (1), Μηδὲ κασιγνήτης ἐς ἀπόστονον ἐλθέμεν ἐυνήν.

Nor climb thy Sister's interdicted Bed.

And indeed that these Matches were very unusual through all Greece, may be gather'd from Hermione's Speech in Euripides, where she thus upbraids Andromache, Τούτων πᾶν τὸ βέλγεσεν γυνῶ, &c. v. 103. &c.

Thus the Barbarians with incestuous Love, Fathers their Daughters, Sons their Mothers wed, Brothers their Sisters; and no Law restrains Their sinful Passion. —————

Or if they were once permitted in Greece, it is certain they grew entirely out of use with Posterity; as that Passage of Sextus Empiricus (e) sufficiently proves; The Egyptians contracted Marriage with their Sisters, which amongst us is disallow'd by Law. The same Author says in another Place (f); In our Country we esteem it contrary to all Right and Decency, to make a Wife of a Mother or of a Sister (g). Yet he chargeth both those Practices on the Persians; as do likewise Strabo (h), Laertius (i), Curtius (k), and Lucian (l). Tho' the Answer given by the Judges to Cambyses, in Herodotus (m), plainly shews, that the wiser Men, even in the Persian Nation, were of a very different Opinion.

It may not be improper to conclude our Search into the present Controversy, by returning to the Jews. They, then, in their Prohibition of Marriage between Brothers and Sisters, thought it made no difference whether the Sister, in such a Case, came by Adultery, or by a Lawful Bed: Nay, if she was born of a Mother-in-Law, in a dishonest way, the Rule held against Her, in this respect (n): Tho', otherwise, as to the Crime of Incest, they held it could only be committed by Matrimony, not by Adultery, nor by Unmarried Pollution. Thus, amongst them, he did not pass for an Incestuous Person who had defil'd a Mother and her Daughter, but he only who had actually wedded both. Thus too a Man might marry her whom his Father, Brother or Uncle, had been too Familiar with, tho' he could not wed his Mother-in-Law, nor his Uncle's Widow, nor so much as his Brother's Relict, unless in the extraordinary Case of his dying without Issue (o). And so on the other hand, a Man might take her to Wife whose Mother, Sister, Grandmother, Aunt, Daughter or Niece he had corrupted. It is true, by the Traditions of their Rabbins, these Marriages were judg'd unlawful: yet the contracting Party was only corporally punish'd, and the Contract still allow'd to stand good. From all which we may infer, that the Jews, in stating the Notion of Affinity, held it to proceed not from a bare Nearness of Blood, unless caus'd in a Regular and Matrimonial way (p).

Nicetas Acominatus reports, that the Emperour Andronicus Comnenus having a Design of joining in Marriage Alexius and Irene, both incestuously Begotten on Theodora, and consulting his Judges on this Point, one of them gave his Opinion, that The Parties being illegitimately born, were not to be esteem'd of Kin to each other, but had lost all Right and Alliance of Blood; and were in the Condition and Distance of Strangers. But the Historian censures these Judges, as Men of greedy and fordid Tempers, who made a Gain of dispensing with GOD's Commands, and would sell their Voices for the Feasts and Favour of great Persons.

XXXV. As for the other Degrees, forbidden (2) in Levit. XVIII. it will be still more difficult to find a Reason why they should hinder Marriage, on the bare Consideration of the Law of Nature. Tho' it must be own'd, that such Matches have been condemn'd and detested by many Heathens. St. Paul (q) calls it Such Fornication as is not so much as named amongst the Gentiles, that a Man should have his Father's Wife. Phœnylides (3) sets it down as one of his Moral Lessons.

μητρῆς μὴ πατρὸς γὰρ δευτέρᾳ λέκτεσσι γυνῶ, μητέρας δ' ὡς πᾶσα τὴν μητέρας ἵχθια βᾶσαν.

Make not thy Father's injur'd Bed disgrace
Thy Step-dame's Vows; but with Respect confess
A Mother Her, that fills thy Mother's Place.

(a) De leg. Special. p. 779. E. Ed. Paris. (b) De LL. l. 5. (c) L. 1. c. 27. (d) L. 1. (1) V. 170.
(e) Pyrrhon. Hypotyp. l. 1. c. 14. p. 31. (f) L. 3. c. 24. (g) Add. Selden. de F. N. & G. l. 5. c. 11.
(h) L. 15. p. 505. Ed. Gen. Cafaub. (i) In Proœm. (k) L. 8. c. 2. f. 19. (l) De Sacrific. p. 364. Edit. Amst.
(m) Thalia. Add. what is related of the Thracians, the Inhabitants of Mount Libanus, I know not with what Credit, by Leon. Rachwolf, Itin. Oriental. l. 2. c. 15. in fin. (n) Add. l. 54. D. de ritu Nupt. (o) Comp. l. 1. f. 3. D. de Concubin. l. 4. f. 8. D. de Gradib. & Affin. (p) Selden. ibid. (2) V. Grot. L. 2. c. 5. f. 13, 14.
(q) 1 Corinth. V. 1. (3) V. 168, 169.

The Story of Stratonice is well known, whom Seleucus her Husband gave away to his Son Antiochus, when the young Prince was fallen in Love with her beyond Cure. It was a remarkable Saying of Seleucus on this Occasion, that If his Wife express'd an Abhorrence of so unusual a Practice, he begg'd his Friends to inform her, that whatever Action was pleasing to the King and beneficial to the Publick, she ought to esteem right and just (a). Yet Appian (b) doth not stick to call this Love of Antiochus, ἀδελφικὴ παθὼν, A sinful Extravagant Passion. It is said to be the ordinary Custom amongst the Tartars, for a Son to marry his Mother-in-law, when left a Widow by his Father (c).

The ancient Jews, as Grotius observes (1), founded the Prohibition of these Degrees chiefly on two Reasons. First, on that Natural Modesty which hinders Parents from holding Familiarity with their Issue, either by themselves, or by such Persons as are, in Blood or Affinity, nearest to them. Which Argument, as it is of good Force in the ascending and descending Line, so, in as much as the Shame there alledg'd is exceedingly weakened, and almost brought to nothing in the Collateral Kindred, especially beyond the second Degree, it can here by no means amount to a Precept of the Law of Nature. Yet are we to esteem those Civil Constitutions most just and well grounded, which extend the Prohibition to a wider Compass; on purpose, as it were, to fence in and secure those Degrees which, the Dictate of Nature, or the Positive Ordinance of GOD had before forbidden. Their second Reason was, Leſt too great Occasion should be offer'd to Fornications and Adulteries between Persons thus related, and constantly converſing with Freedom together, if ſuch Pieces of Wantonneſs might be made good by the Remedy of Marriage. This Argument, like the former, is sufficient to give Occasion to a Positive Law, not to evince any Precept of Nature. The Jews apply it well, to account for that seeming Difficulty in the 18 of Levit. where the marrying an Aunt is forbidden, and not the marrying a Brother's Daughter, though both seem equally distant in Degree. For they observe, that young Men frequenting the Houses of their Grandfather and Grandmother, and sometimes dwelling with them, are very much in the Company of their Aunts, whereas they come not so often to their Brother's Houses, nor have there the same Privileges and Freedoms. Yet the latter of these Degrees was esteem'd unlawful by the Romans, as appears from the Case of Claudius, when designing to marry Agrippina (d).

Many there are notwithstanding who assert, that in the place of Scripture but now mention'd, not such particular Persons are forbidden, but in general all such nearness of Degrees: whose Arguments, were there Occasion, might perhaps find an Answer.

Those who maintain that all the Degrees, mention'd in the 18th Chap. of Leviticus, are likewise repugnant to the Law of Nature, urge the words of the 24th Verse, For all these Abominations have the Men of the Land done which were before you, and the Land is defiled. 'For,' say they, in as much as every Transgression 'presupposeth a Law, those Gentiles in contracting such Marriages must needs have violated, either some Natural Law, or some Divine Positive Ordinance universally binding 'Mankind: The latter is hardly to be made 'out, and the former must therefore be admitted. To this Mr. Selden (e) answers, that the word these (2) is to be restrain'd to those Sins which the Heathens were capable of committing. And as an Argument that it doth not extend to every Particular there mention'd, he observes, that one Case there prohibited (3) is the marrying of two Sisters together, which could not be before vicious, having been practis'd by so righteous a Man as Jacob. (Though to this Remark of Mr. Selden it might well be added, that the Quarrels and Emulations between those Sisters, Jacob's Wives, was probably the Reason of this positive Prohibition.) In the same manner Amram, Moses's Father, married Jochabad his Aunt; another of the Degrees here forbidden (f).

By the Turkish Alcoran (g), a Mussulman is restrain'd from wedding his Mother, his Stepdame, his Daughter, his Sister, his Aunt, his Niece, his Nurse, his Foster-Sister, his Wife's Mother, his Wife's Daughter by a former Husband, his Son's Wife, two Sisters, a Daughter to a Woman whom he hath abused, and, Lastly, another Man's Wife, unless taken for a Slave in War (h).

It may not be from the Purpose to observe, that many have imagined the Force of Affinity to cease, on the Death of the Person in whom it was founded. It is a Saying of Euripides (4), —New Affinities efface the old.

Isocrates (i), speaking of a Gentleman who had married his Aunt, says, He took so much Delight and Satisfaction in my Father's Friendship, that losing my Aunt without Issue by her, he took my Father's Cousin-German for his second Wife, to keep up the Affinity between our Fa-

(a) Plutarch in Demetr. p. 907. Ed. Wech. (b) In Syriacis, p. 127. Ed. H. Steph. Add. Senec. Controvers. l. 6. Decl. 7. Valer. Max. l. 5. c. 7. §. 1. Ext. Cicero, pro-Cluent. c. 6. expresseth a grievous Abhorrence of Marriage between a young Man and his Wife's Mother, O incredible Villany of a Woman, says he, and never heard of 'till this time in the World! Add. D. L. 23. t. 2. l. 12, 15, &c. De ritu nupt. (c) Haythou. de Tartar. c. 48. Paul. Venet. l. 1. c. 15: (1) In the Places above cited. (d) V. Tacit. Ann. XII. (e) L. 5. c. 11. (2) See Mr. Barbeyrac's Second Note upon this Section. (3) Levit. XVIII. 18. Upon which place consult Grotius. (f) We meet with some remarkable Things concerning the Degrees of Consanguinity amongst the Indians, in Abr. Roger. de Bramin. p. 1. c. 12. (g) Chapt. of Wives. (h) Add. Selden. de J. N. & G. &c. l. 6. c. 11. (4) Med. v. 76. & in Orest. 1083. (i) In Æginetic.

milies (a). Florus (b) tracing out the Cause of the Quarrel between Cæsar and Pompey observes, that upon the Death of Julia, Daughter to the former and Wife to the latter, the Band being broken asunder which had so long held them together, they soon discover'd their mutual Jealousy, and appear'd the most violent of Rivals. Marriages, says Philo the Jew (c), are the Ties and Engagements which unite the Families of Strangers; and when they are dissolv'd, the Affinity breaks off with them.

XXXVI. It will be convenient to add a word or two about those Inferiour, or Secondary Wives in use amongst some Nations: such as do truly plight their Faith to their Husband, and are united to him in the strictest manner of Society; yet so as that upon account of their unequal Condition or Birth, or for other Reasons they are not admitted to the full Honours, of their Character, nor acquire the same Rights for their Children, as other lawful Mothers (d). Of these Mr. Selden (i) hath treated at large; and from him it appears, that their Difference from just and proper Wives, is introduc'd purely by positive Law, or by the particular Covenant of the Parties, who to the principal Matrimonial Pa& may add any thing at their Pleasure, which doth not contradict and overthrow it. The chief Reasons on which this Practice seems to have been founded are these, the Preservation of noble Families, the Fear of injuring former Children (e), and lastly, the avoiding of those great Expences, which a Wife, in the higher and more perfect Degree, might challenge by the Custom of the State. In order to the keeping up of great Families, it is convenient that they marry into equal Fortunes and Honours: for the better procuring of which, it hath been enacted, in many Common-wealths, that in case a Man take a Wife beneath himself, the Marriage shall not have all those Effects and Priviledges, which it would otherwise, in Course, enjoy. And then again, nothing more weakens a Family than the dismembering of an Estate into too many Parts; wherefore to prevent this Misfortune, some have thought it proper to take up with these Secondary Wives, whose Children, if their Portions are not over large, have yet no Reason to complain. And as to the third Point, He is a notorious Fool who makes himself a Beggar to maintain the Pride and Grandeur of a Wife.

On the whole, it is clear how injuriously

we deal with these inferior Wives, if we allow them no better a Title than the vile Name of Concubines. For Concubines are properly such, as exercise Conjugal Freedom without Conjugal Faith, and differ only in Degree from common Strumpets: nor do they exempt themselves from the Scandal by entering into a private Engagement, and confining their dishonest Service to a single Person (f). But the Faith of the Marriage-Bed is infinitely more sacred and solemn than to be brought into Comparison with the strictest of these illegal Compacts, founded on the base Prospects of Lucre or of Lust (g).

Busbequius (h) remarks somewhat very particular of the Turkish Emperours, that after Bajazet, none of them enter'd into just and proper Matrimony. For he, after his Defeat by Tamerlane, falling together with his Wife into the hands of the Victor, took no part of the barbarous Treatment more to heart, than the Affronts and Dishonours put upon the Sultaness before his Eyes. In regard to this Accident, his Successors abstain from Conjugal Engagements, and as to the Affair of Issue make use of Women in the Condition of Slaves, who are not capable of suffering so much Injury and Disgrace. But indeed the Turks, in general, pay no less Affection and Kindness to their Sons by Concubines or Harlots, than to those who are born of their legal Wives; nor have the former any less Degree of Right to the Goods and Estate of their Father.

Abbas, King of Persia, took another way of preventing these Indignities: for, carrying with him into the Field all his Female Train, he commanded the Eunuchs, that had the Custody of them, to cut off the Heads of all his Wives, in case he lost the Battle (i).

The Chinese, when they despair of obtaining Issue in just Marriage, have recourse to the Remedy of Concubines; esteeming it the most miserable thing that can befall a Man to be at a loss for Children, who might mourn at his Decease, and perform the decent Honours of his Burial (k).

We have only this Observation to add, that as the publick Laws of Common-wealths are wont to invest other Contracts with certain Rites and Solemnities, upon want of which they pass for Invalid in Civil Cognizance; so in some States there are such Ceremonies, annex'd to Matrimony, as if omitted make it illegal, or at least deprive it of some Effects

(a) Cicero pro Quint. c. 6. The Affinity could by no means be broke off, whilst the Children were alive. Idem Philipp. XI. c. 4. concerning Dolabella, who had formerly married his Daughters; And this Gentleman, O ye heavenly Powers, was once my Friend! (b) L. 4. c. 2. n. 13. (c) De Legat. ad Caium. On the other side we are told of the Tartars, that amongst them 'tis an usual thing for different Parents to make Matches between their deceas'd Sons and Daughters; fancying that by this posthumous way of Marriage, a Relation is no less contracted between their surviving Friends, than if they had actually celebrated their Nuptials in their Life-time. (d) Vid. Selden. de J. N. & G. l. 5. c. 7. (e) V. Grot. l. 2. c. 5. f. 15. (f) So in Julius Capitolinus towards the end, the Emperor Marcus, upon the Death of his Lady Faustina, took the Wife of his Procurator for a Concubine. Ne tot liberis superinduceret novercam, That he might not bring so numerous a Family of Children under the Power of a Mother-in-law. (g) Vid. Ælian. V. H. l. 10. c. 18. (h) Yet sometimes we meet with the word Concubina in no disgraceful Sence. Vid. L. 32. t. 3. l. 49. f. 4. D. de Legat. and L. 5. t. 27. l. 3. C. de natural. liberis, Concubinage is call'd unequal Marriage. Add. Godofred. ad loc. diff. (i) Epist. 1. (k) Petrus della Valle Itin. P. 2. Epist. 5.

(k) Martin. Hist. Sin. l. 6. c. 1. p. 201.

which would otherwise have sprung from it, according to the local Customs and Constitutions (a). Now altho' the Law of Nature be a Stranger to these Formalities, yet inasmuch as it commands all Subjects to obey the Ordinanances of the Government, under which they live, it would be idle and ridiculous for such Persons, as have not the Power of making or of reversing Civil Laws, to plead the Indifference of Natural Law in the present Case.

(a) V. Constitut. Sicul. l. 3. t. 20.

CHAP. II.

Of Paternal Power.

Children are the proper Fruit of Matrimony; as they are likewise the proper Subjects of Paternal Dominion, that most ancient, and, at the same time, most sacred Kind of Government; by Vertue of which the Children are engaged to acknowledge the Superiority, and to reverence and obey the Commands of their Parents. The Origine of this Power, Grotius (a), and most Writers refer to the Act of Generation, by which the Parents do, in some measure, resemble the Divine Creator, whilst they make a Person really exist, who before had no Being. But in as much as both the Parents equally contribute to this signal Benefit, they say that both originally acquire a Right over their Issue; but that, in case they contend for the Sovereignty, and by reason of their contrary Commands cannot both be obey'd together (1), the Father's Authority is to carry the Precedence; not only on the account of the Advantage he hath in Sex, but likewise because the Mother her self is placed under his Direction and Sway.

II. Mr. Hobbes (b) takes another Road in tracing out this Paternal Rule: 'Tho', says he, 'this be a true Consequence, A Man is the Father of another, and therefore hath the Dominion over him, yet it is not so clear and manifest as to shew its own Necessity, as those do where one of the Terms is included in the Definition of the other; but must be made out by other Arguments and Proofs. Besides, since all Sovereign Power, if regularly established, is indivisible, so that no one can, at the same time, serve two Masters, unless in Subordination, and since two Persons concur to the Act of Begetting, that Act should seem an improper Foundation for Sovereignty: which may therefore be more conveniently

'deduc'd from a State of Nature, in the following Method. During such a State every Man hath a Liberty of practising against every Man, what he thinks may conduce to his own Preservation; and consequently the Conquerour is the Lord and Master of the conquer'd (2). Whence we may infer, that by the Law of Nature the Right of governing an Infant is first in the Power of the Mother; who, if she resolve to nourish and breed him up, as she is in Duty oblig'd to do, is suppos'd to do it upon this Condition, that he shall not prove her Enemy when grown up, i. e. that he shall pay Subjection and Obedience to her. (According to his Hypothesis, those are mutual Enemies, who are neither subject one to the other, nor own a common Master.) For it is by no means to be presum'd that I would give a Person Life, on purpose to put him in a Capacity of growing up to my Prejudice, and of gaining strength in time to repay my Kindness with Hostility. Thus therefore a Woman becomes, at the same Minute, a Mother and a Sovereign Mistress. Nor is the Excellency of Sex a sufficient Argument why we should attribute this Right of Governing to the Husband rather than to the Wife: For the Inequality is not so great between them, as that the Man can immediately establish his Rule over the Woman without Opposition; but, in a State of Nature, he must fairly win her by a Course of War. Farther, the Woman, by carrying the Child so long about her, and nourishing it with her Substance, doth certainly contribute, if not the most noble, yet the most laborious and troublesome Share to the Production of Issue (c). Lastly, in as much as in a State of meer Nature, where no Common-wealths and no Families are sup-

(a) L. 2. c. 5. f. 1. (1) See a Passage to this purpose in Quintilian's Sixth Declam. p. 86. Ed. Lug. Bat.

(b) De Civ. c. 9. (2) Our Author elsewhere has confuted this Principle of Mr. Hobbes, See B. 1. c. 6. f. 10. and B. 2. c. 2. f. 5, &c. (c) Quintil. Declam. 338. It is otherwise in the Case of the Men, who are made Parents by a short and transient Pleasure, and are endear'd to their Children only by that outward Satisfaction. But the Mother's love with a much stronger Passion, remembering their ten Months Trouble, their long Course of Cares and Dangers.

It is a Saying of Medea, in Ennius, (or rather in Euripides, v. 250, 251. from whence it was borrowed;) I had rather be Three times under the Sword, than Once under the Hands of the Midwife. Yet they tell us of the Women of Paria in America, that they bring forth without any Pain or Weakness, and immediately after their Delivery return to their ordinary Work and Employment. Much the same is reported of the Women of Chili; and 'tis added, that the Spanish Dames if they live there any considerable time, contract the same Hardiness.

Orestes in Eurip. v. 552, &c. when it mkes for his Cause, gives his Father much the Advantage of his Mother.

My Father plant'd me, and his Fair Dame
Was but the Soil that bred and brought me forth.
More tied I judg'd my self to succour Him
That gave me Life, than Her that lent me Food posed, 'tis impossible to know who is the Father of the Child, but by the Mother's Affection; it follows that the Child belongs to whom she pleaseth, and therefore primarily to her self. On which account it was enacted by the Roman Constitution that Issue, brought forth without Matrimony (1), should follow the Venter, or the Mother (a).

'posed,

III. From the Mother this Dominion, according to Mr. Hobbes, may pass to other Persons several ways. First, if the Mother renounce her Right by exposing the Child; the Person who finds, and breeds him up, shall enjoy the same Right which the Mother had over him before. For the Life which the Mother at the first gave him, she, as far as she is able, takes away again by this Act of exposing him: and consequently the Obligation he had to her, for her former Kindness, is entirely cancell'd by this Injury. On the other side, to the Person who sav'd and educated him, he owes all possible Returns, and ought to acknowledge him, both for his Parent and his Master (b). Here, though we should grant that such a Child ought still to preserve an Inclination of paying Duty to his Mother, and, upon her Sorrow and Repentance, to return in some measure, under his old Relation and Subjection; yet he cannot do this otherwise than with the Consent and upon the Resignation of his Educator, to whom all his Charges, &c. are to be refunded. And this seems to be the only Case in which it is possible to acquire Rule over a Man by Seizure or Occupancy.

Secondly, 'If the Mother were made a Captive in War, the Issue born to her belongs to the Person who took her; as her other Goods and Possessions. But here it must be observ'd, that the Right and Power of the Conqueror, over the Issue of his Female Captive, is quite of another kind than that which she, as a Mother, before enjoy'd.

Thirdly, 'If the Mother be her self a Subject in any Common-wealth, the supreme Governour there hath Dominion likewise over her Child. Where we are again to remark, that the Power of the Civil Governour is very different from that of the Parents: and that it doth not presently follow, that the Mother's Authority must be extinct, and as it were swallowed up in the chief Ruler's; but in some States 'tis only limited and restrain'd, in others 'tis left almost perfect and entire.

Fourthly, 'If a Woman enter into an Agreement of living with a Man, under this express Condition, that the Man shall be Lord and Sovereign, then the Children born to them both shall belong to the Man, upon the Score of his Sovereignty over the Mother. But, if the Father be the Mother's Subject, the Children likewise fall under her Command; otherwise the bearing Issue would be a Prejudice to her Supremacy. And in general, if the Society between the Man and the Woman be such a regular Union, as gives one the Dominion over the other, the Children owe Subjection to the Ruling Parent. But, if in a State of Nature, a Man and Woman contract to cohabit in such a manner as to be independent on each other's Rule, the Children shall fall to the Mother, unless it was expressly ordered otherwise in the Bargain. For the Mother may, by Covenant, dispose of her Right as she pleaseth. Thus they tell us of the ancient Amazons, that they agreed with the Men of the neighbouring Countries, to whom they had Recourse for Issue, to send back the Males, and only to preserve the Female to themselves. But in Common-wealths, if a Man and a Woman engage by Contract to cohabit, the Children are the Subjects of the Man: because in Civil States, all the Domestic Sovereignty belongs to the Fathers of Families, by whom the States were founded and establish'd, and who, we may be sure, were willing to settle the Point in Favour of themselves. Such a Contract between a Man and Woman in a Common-wealth, if it be made in solemn Form, and according to the Laws of the Place, is call'd Matrimony. But in Case the Parties bargain only for Concubinage, or for a less solemn kind of Cohabitation, the Children shall then fall either to the Father or to the Mother, according as the Civil Constitutions have determin'd.

IV. We in this, as in other of the like Points, have recourse, in the first place, to Almighty GOD, the universal Cause and Author of Things. And yet we think it a very lawful Attempt, to search farther into the second Causes and immediate Instruments. For as to that which some pretend, that All Sovereignty, which one Man obtains over another, is communicated to him by God, as it were in the manner of a Divine Commission, and that all Human Power is purely by Delegation; We take it to detract from the Honour of God, although the Persons, who have such Sentences commonly

(1) See hereafter Section the Fifth. (a) By the Law of the Lycians, if a Free-woman married a Slave, the Children were adjudg'd Free: but if the greatest Man in the State wedded a Foreigner or a Strumpet, the Issue was accounted base and servile. The same People took their Names from the Mother, not from the Father, Herodot. Clia, p. 44. Ed. H. Steph. (b) Thus Admetus speaks in Euripides (Alcest.) v. 666. &c.

So far I died as Death was in Your Power:
And if a kind Deliverer hath restor'd me
To Light and Life, I own him for my Father;
And boast to be the Comfort of his Age.

Liban. Orat. 13. A Man who takes another out of the Water, where he was ready to perish, may well be esteem'd a Father by the Person he hath preserv'd.

in their Mouths, speak with a great Appearance of Piety. For he who exerciseth a delegated Power, hath the same Power altogether with him from whom he receives it; only with this Difference, that the former possesseth it only as borrow'd, the latter as his own. But it would betray very low and unworthy Thoughts of the Infinite Majesty of Heaven, to conceive that the same Species of Sovereignty is enjoy'd by God and Man (a).

Having premised this Caution, we go on to the main Business before us. And, first of all, we think it may be settled as an undoubted Truth, that the Act of Generation doth yield an Occasion to the acquiring a Right over the Child, which shall hold good, not only against other Persons, who have not the same Claim of Parentage (b), but likewise against any Pretension that can be made in behalf of the Child it self. We say an Occasion; because we are not perswaded that Generation alone (1) is sufficient to give a full Dominion over Human Issue. For altho' our Children be indeed made of our Substance, yet in as much as they become Persons like our selves, and our Equals, as to all those Rights which naturally accrue to Men; before we can render them unequal to us, or subject them to our Dominion, it seems necessary for us to seek out some other Title. Especially since, in the Method of bringing a Child into the World, the Parents have no little regard to their own Pleasure and Satisfaction; and therefore cannot rate the Kindness at so vast a Price, and set it so highly on the Child's Score, as to demand back, in Consideration, a full Subjection and Obedience, whether the Child be willing or no. It is a Saying of Lactantius (c), He that begets a Son hath no Power to make him be Conceived, to make him be Born, to make him Live: whence it appears, that he is not so properly the Author of his Sons Being, as the Instrument.

The Right then of Parents over their Children, seems to be founded on these two Titles or Claims. First, it ariseth from that Duty which Nature (in enjoining Man to be a sociable Creature,) lays on them to take care of their Off-spring; she having, at the same time, to stir up their Diligence, wisely implanted in them a most tender Affection towards these little Pictures of themselves. For take away from the Parents all Care and Concern for their Children's Education, and you make a social Life an impossible and unintelligible Notion. But this Care cannot duly be exercis'd, unless the Parents have Power to direct and govern the Actions of the Child, in order to the procuring his Benefit and Safety, which he himself, through Defect of Years and Judgment, is incapable of apprehending and of providing for (d): and consequently Nature doth hereby enjoyn Parents actually to make use of such a Power and Dominion, so far as it is necessary to the Accomplishment of so important a Work. For whoever obligeth a Person to the Prosecution of an End, is, at the same time, suppos'd to have given him Authority to apply all Means that shall appear requisite for its Attainment. And this Power of the Parents, resulting from the Duty lying on them to provide for their Issue, doth necessarily create, in the Children, an Obligation to submit themselves to their Parent's Direction, without which Act of Submission, the former Benefit cannot be obtain'd, and the Authority is to no purpose.

Secondly, The Sovereignty of the Parents seems, likewise, to be built on the presumed Consent of the Children, and consequently on a Tacit Pact. For, as the Parent, by the very Act of breeding up the Infant, doth declare himself ready to fulfil the Obligation of Nature, and to consult, so far as in him lies, the well educating of his Charge; so the Infant, on the other side, tho', on account of the imperfect Force of Reason, he cannot expressly promise those reciprocal Duties, which answer to the Parent's Obligation, yet by Vertue of this Care, employ'd by the Parents about him, he contracts as firm an Engagement towards them as if he gave his full and express Consent (e). And this Engagement begins to exert its Power, so soon as he arrives at the Knowledge and Apprehension of any thing, that his Parents have done for him. It being fairly presumed, that had he, at his coming into the World, been furnish'd with the Use of Reason, and made capable of understanding that his Life could not be preserv'd, without the kind Provision of his Parents, join'd with their Command over him, he would gladly have yielded Obedience on so commodious Terms. Which Consent of his, being Rationally supposed, hath the same Validity as if it had been openly declar'd (f). In the same manner, as a Person, who hath had any Business perform'd for him by another, in his Absence and without his Knowledge, is supposed by a kind of silent Covenant to contract an Obligation of refunding the Charges. It is clear therefore that the Power, which Parents have over a Child, is then actually constituted, when they apply themselves to nourishing and educating him, and rendring him, so far as they are able, a useful Member of Human Society.

Some indeed have maintain'd, that the Obligation between Parents and Children can by no means be deriv'd from tacit Consent and Covenant, upon this Argument: Consent, whatever the Subject or Occasion of it be, doth not take place, except in Actions that were free before the Consent pass'd; but now it is not a matter of Freedom in the present Case, for the Parties to perform the mutual Duties, of Education on the one side, and of Obedience on the other. But this way of reasoning cannot weaken what we here assert. For it doth not imply the least Contradiction, for a Duty to arise, at the same time, from a Precept of the Law of Nature, and from Tacit Consent and Pact. It is not certainly free for a Man not to obey GOD; yet GOD hath been pleas'd to enter into Covenant with his faithful Servants. A Subject is no doubt oblig'd to perform all due Offices, in the State under which he lives; and yet, when he is to be Listed in the Military Order, not only his Consent is required, but his Oath. And thus why may we not as well affirm, that whilst the Parent actually undertakes the Education of the Child, the Child's Tacit Consent is to be understood; the Effect of which Consent amounts to this, that he shall not afterwards have reason to complain, that the Parent's Authority was obtruded upon him against his Will, and without sufficient Grounds and Title?

(a) See Matth. X. 28. (b) That as he who is Master of a Thing, is likewise Master of the Fruits or Profits of it; so he who is Master of the Body whence the Child proceeds, should have the first Step or Title towards obtaining a Sovereignty over the Child it self. (1) See Mr. Barbeyrac's First Note upon this Section. See above in B. 4. c. 11. f. 4. (c) Divin. Instit. 1. 5. c. 18. (d) See Sirac. VII. 25. XXX. 1. &c. (e) Add. L. 3. t. 5. l. 2. D. de negot. gestis. (f) Comp. Senec. Consol. ad Marciam. C. 18. in fin.

V. When the Question is carried farther, and it is demanded to which of the Parents this Right over their Issue, doth most properly belong, a Distinction or two will decide the Point: For the Persons concern'd, either live under some Common-wealth or not; and again the Parents either are, or are not engaged to each other by Covenant. Without the Bounds of a Common-wealth, or in a State of Natural Liberty, if the Parents were not united by any lasting Contract, the Child is under the Care and Command of the Mother. Because, in such a Condition of Life, it being as probable that one Man should be the Father as another, the Mother can only determine the Controversy: at least, the thing cannot be otherwise known, with so much Truth and Certainty, as Matters of Fact demand (a). On this Principle, the Roman Laws (1) award to the Mother, Issue begotten in Common (b). But if a Covenant hath pass'd between the Parents, by which they settled these Affairs, it will appear thence, which, of the two, is to bear Rule over the Children: for that two Persons should both hold the supreme Authority over a third, without Subordination or Division, is no regular Practice. This Covenant then between the Parties, either terminates in the bare Procurement of Issue, or it includes farther the Sovereignty of the Man over the Woman, and so falls in with Just Matrimony; where no doubt the Command over the Children is lodg'd in the hands of the Father. But in Covenants of the former kind, though they usually take their Beginning from the Man, who seeks Children for himself not for her, and consequently bargains to have the Rule and Disposal of them; yet it may so happen, that quite contrary to this Order, the Woman calls in the Man for an Assistant to her design of Issue; not the Man the Woman. This was the Case with the ancient Amazons; and is still with any Sovereign Princess, that marries without quitting her Rights; the Man being here not so properly a King, as the Husband of a Queen. Nor ought we to think that Pacts, of this sort, are therefore repugnant to the Law of Nature, because in them, one of the Couple seems to renounce that Care of the Children, which Nature hath equally laid on both the Parents: For the Precept of Nature, in this Point, doth not precisely require that both Father and Mother shall apply themselves in the same strict Degree, to the Work of Education; but is satisfied if by Compact, the main Charge be committed to either. In the same manner, as the Mother is not so necessarily oblig'd to give her Infant Suck, but that she may make use of a Nurse (c): and as the Father acts upon good Prudence, when he delivers his Children into the hands of able Instructors, for the forming of his Mind and Manners.

But, in Civil States which for the most part have been erected by the stronger Sex, as the Men in common Course, are the Heads of the respective Families, so the private Dominion over the Children belongs to the Father; so that here, the Mother's Commands are in themselves, little better than Counsels, and borrow their full Force of obliging, from that share of Power imparted by the Husband to his Wife. For, as it is generally found convenient to admit the Woman to a part, in the Government and Direction of the Family; so the Father's Power, over the Children, doth by no means exclude the Mother's inferior Authority and Care. Not but that the Constitutions of particular Common-wealths may settle this Matter otherwise, as shall be judg'd expedient. Peter della Valle, in his Travels (d), informs us, that amongst the Inhabitants of Babylon or Bagdet, the supreme Power over the Sons is held by the Father, and over the Daughters by the Mother.

If, upon the Father's Decease, the Government of the Family remain with the Mother, it is but just that she exercise the same Authority over the Children which the Father formerly enjoy'd (e). And in Case she marry a second time, and the new Husband be intrusted with the Care of his Predecessor's Children, they are to pay him the like Reverence and Duty as was challeng'd by their proper Father. Yet we are told a very odd Custom of the Chinese in this particular; that if a Wife, after she hath buried one Husband, proceed to a second Match, her Children send her off, covered only with a single Garment, as an ignominious Mark of her light Disposition: and the reason of the Custom is, that according to the Inclination of that People, the Children cannot bear a Father-in-Law, much less respect and obey him (a).

(a) Comp. L. 3. t. 1. f. 31, 32. Institut. de verum divis. & L. 41. t. 1. l. 7. f. 13. D. de acqui. rer. dom.

(1) V. D. l. 1. t. 1. De statu hominum, l. 23, 24. (b) The Egyptians follow'd a contrary Opinion. They accounted none of their Sons spurious, although born of a Slave; imagining that the Father alone was the Author of the Generation, and that the Mother contributed no more than Place and Nourishment. Diodor. Sic. l. 1. c. 80. p. 72. Ed. Rhodom. To the same Purpose speaks Theages, the Pythagorean, in his Treatise of Vertues, The Father produceth the Form, and the Mother only supplies the Matter. (c) The contrary Opinion is maintain'd by Plutarch, de Educat. &c. and by Phavorinus in Gell. l. 12. c. 1. Add Ferdinand Pinto's Travels, chap. 54. where he tells us how Strict and Religious a Point the Japones esteem it, for a Mother to give her Infant Suck. In the Alcoran, the Women are commanded to perform this Office to their Children for the two first Years. (d) P. 1. Epist. 17. (e) Comp. Genes. XXI. 21. with XXIV. 4.

VI. The next step we take must be to enquire how far this Power of Parents over their Children extends; or what are the proper Bounds and Measures of it. And here it is necessary to distinguish, first between those Fathers of Families, who live under no publick Government, and those, who are the Subjects of a Common-wealth; and again, between that Power, which the Father holds, as he is a Father; and that which he bears, as he is the Head of a separate Family. The Power which a Father enjoys, on the bare score of his being a Father, inasmuch as it accrues to him as a necessary Means of discharging the Obligation towards his Issue, which Nature lays upon him, must consequently be so great, as sufficiently to answer and effect that Design. Now the Obligation, or Duty of a Father, as such, chiefly turns on this general Performance, that he duly educate his Children; that is, nourish, protect, inform and govern them, in order to the rendring them useful to themselves and others, till they are able to consult their proper Benefit, and are grown Masters of their own Wills and Actions. (For, as to the Act of Begetting, that is not so properly a Part of the Paternal Duty, as the Occasion of it.) Parents ought to apply more Diligence and Caution in fulfilling this Obligation, the more Truth there is in that saying of Plutarch (1), Good Institution is the Fountain and Root of all Honesty and Virtue. Especially if they take this Observation of Plato (b) along with it, which commonly holds true; Persons (says he) who are naturally endued with the most excellent Wits, if they happen to be spoilt in the Breeding up, commonly prove the very worst of Mankind. Can you think that all those barbarous Villanies, all that horrid Wickedness, which we see in the World, proceed from mean and lazy Dispositions, and not rather from brave and generous Spirits perverted by ill Education? Or do you suppose, that a natural Weakness and Feebleness of Temper, does ever prove the Cause of any very great Good, or very great Mischief (c).

It is plain then, that the Power of the Father doth by no means reach to so extravagant a Degree, as that he may destroy the Child whilst in the Mother's Belly (d), unless the Mother must otherwise infallibly perish (e); or after the Birth expose or make away with it, much less after the Increase of Growth and Years. For although it be very true, that the Infant hath his Rise and Original from the very Substance of the Parents, yet he is immediately plac'd by Nature, in a Condition of Equality with them (2); at least so far as to be Capable of receiving Hurt and Injury (f). Therefore the Opinion deliver'd by Aristotle in his Politicks (g) is to be exploded as unjust and inhuman. As to the exposing and the preserving of Children, says he, let it be order'd by Law, that nothing Lame or Defective be suffer'd to grow up. If any Nation think it not allowable to expose their Infants, there, certain Bounds are to be set to the Number of Births: and if the Business of Generation happen to exceed the due Limits, it will be convenient to procure Abortion, before the Foetus is arriv'd at Life and Sense, for such a Period of its Growth is to determine, whether the Act of destroying it be harmless or sinful. Lycurgus did not express more Mercy in his Spartan Discipline. We learn from Plutarch that, when a Child was born, it was not left to the Parents Choice to preserve and nourish him. But he was carried immediately before an Assembly of the Seniors, who considered and surveyed him. If they found his Limbs strong and well set together, they order'd he should be bred up. But the weakly and misshapen Infants they adjudg'd to be carried away and thrown into a kind of Whirl-pool near the Mountain Taygetus: as if to live, when Nature had provided them so infirm or so unsightly a Body, could neither be for their own Good and Credit, nor for the Advantage of the Common-wealth (h). Indeed this Unnatural Practice of exposing Infants was so fre-

(a) Neuhof. in Legat. p. 281. (1) De Liberor. Educat. p. 4. B. Ed. Wech. (b) De Republ. l. 6. p. 676. Ed. Wech.

(c) Idem de LL. l. 7. calls a Child, A Creature more intractable than a Beast. Liban. Declam. 20. Education is one of the highest Goods of Human Life. Horat. L. 4. Ode 4. v. 33.

Doctrina sed vim promovet institam,

Rectique cultus peiora roborant:

Utcunque defecere mores,

Dedecorant bene nata culpa.

(d) Vid. L. 47. t. 11. l. 4. D. de extraordin. crim. & L. 48. t. 8. l. 8. D. ad L. Cornel. de Sicariis, & tit. 19. l. 38.

f. 5. D. de penis. (e) Vid. Ant. Matth. de crimin. ad l. 47. D. t. 5. f. 5. Grot. in Flor. Spars. ad l. 39. D. de penis.

(2) See B. 1. c. 1. f. 7. (f) Plin. L. 9. Ep. 12. So use your Fatherly Power as to remember that You are Your self a Man, and the Father of a Man. Vid. Philo Jud. de Special. Leg. p. 794, 795. Ed. Paris. Lactant. Div. Instit. l. 6. c. 20. Diod. Sic.

l. 1. c. 77. Add. Grot. ad Exod. XXI. 22. Leg. Wisogoth. l. 6. t. 3. c. 7. Selden. de J. N. & G. l. 4. c. 1. It is a most absurd and most barbarous Custom which they practise in Formosa, where it is reckon'd scandalous for the Women to conceive before their thirty fifth or thirty sixth Year. And if they breed sooner than that time, by miserable

Pains and Beatings they procure Abortion. (g) L. 7. c. 16. (21.) (h) I know not whether we may venture to credit the Account given by Diodor. Sic. l. 1. c. 80. of the Method taken by the Tartarians, to make Experiment of the Temper of their Children.

quent and almost so Universal a Custom with the Ancients, that Strabo (a) mentions it as something very particular in the Egyptians, that they breed up all their Children (b). So Dionysius Halicarnasæus (c) sets it down as a remarkable Opinion of the Aborigines; They refuse to make away with any of their Infants; thinking this one of the highest and most execrable Villanies. And Tacitus, in his Account of the Jews (d), makes their Abhorrence of this Cruelty one part of their Character (e).

Nor doth it appear reasonable to extend the Paternal Authority, as such, to the Power of Life and Death, even in the Case of Faults committed; but rather to fix its Bounds within the Exercise of moderate Correction. Because its whole Care and Business is taken up about so tender an Age, as can scarce be imagin'd capable of such grievous and incurable Offences, as demand Capital Punishment (f). It seems the more proper way of proceeding, when a Child of obstinate and incorrigible Perverseness rejects and despiseth his Father's kind Labours on his account, to cast him off, as unworthy of all Care and Notice. And thus to abdicate, or disinherit a Son, may pass for the severest Penalty that a Father, by virtue of his being a Father, can inflict (1).

VII. Of this Paternal Power strictly taken, we must understand that place of Grotius (g), where he divides the Age of Children into three Periods; First, 'Of imperfect Judgment and Choice; Secondly, When they have attain'd to Maturity of Judgment, but still remain as Members of their Father's Family, and have not undertaken the separate Management of their own Affairs; Thirdly, When they have left their Father's Family, either to join themselves to some other, or to erect one of their own. Which Distinction Ziegler seems to have condemn'd on no very good Reason. For though, as he observes, the Holy Scriptures (h) press the Duty of Obedience on Children, without making any such Difference, yet they do by no means forbid that grown Persons should be treated in another way of Management than Infants; nor do they require that a Son, when arriv'd at a State of Discretion and Maturity, should ever remove out of his Father's House. 'During the first Period of Age, then, (says Grotius) all the Actions of the Children ought to be regulated and directed by their Parents; for he who cannot govern himself, falls of course under the Government of Another; and the Parent, according to Nature, is the most proper Person to exercise this Authority over the Child.

VIII. It is here made a Question, whether a Child, under this imperfect Period of Reason, be, by the Law of Nature, capable of Propriety, or of being the Master of any Goods or Possessions, in such manner as to exclude the Claim of his Parents? On which Point it may be proper to distinguish between Goods gotten by private Industry, and those which are left or made over by the Liberality of others, as in Legacies, Donations, &c. In that tender Age, what can a Child be suppos'd to get by his own Industry? Certainly not so much as his Parents has laid out on his Education. This therefore the Father may fairly challenge, in requital of his Pains and Charges. For tho' he were oblig'd indeed, by the Law of Nature, to support and maintain his Offspring, yet he was not, in the least, prohibited to make what Fruit and Advantage he could of his Labour. One might as well say, that Parents are forbidden to take any Delight or Comfort in their Children; a Satisfaction so very great, that most, who are so happy as to enjoy it, esteem it invaluable, and beyond all Compensation or Equivalent (i). For the same Reason, it would be a high degree of Impudence, for a Son, in this State of Minority, to require a Reward for the Service he does his Father. 'Tis a wise Saying of Sophocles (2),

*Good Children should forget the Toils they bear
To help their Parents.*

In Peru the Children were oblig'd to assist their Parents with their Labour, till the Age of five and twenty (k).

In the other case, when any thing is to be transferr'd on the Child, in way of Gift or Legacy, at first view, such a Donation may seem invalid, because Acceptance is a necessary Condition required in the Receiver, which cannot be perform'd without deliberate Consent, and therefore not without the full Use of Reason. But because it would be an intolerable Hardship to make Children incapable of these Advantages, on account of their Immaturity, when, for that very reason, they have more need of the Assistance of Others; it is most agreeable to Equity, that another Person should accept this Bounty in their Name, and should likewise have the Goods in Charge till the Children are capable of being their own

(a) L. 15. (b) Add. Diodor. Sic. l. 1. c. 80. (c) L. 1. p. 13. (d) Hist. l. 5. (e) Yet Curtius, l. 9. c. 1. reports that the Spartan Custom was practis'd by some of the Indians. They bring up their Infants, says he, not at the Pleasure of the Parents, but according to the Order and Direction of Officers appointed to supervise this Affair; who command all such Children to be kill'd, as they find either extremely slow and heavy, or useless and defective in any Part of the Body. Strabo, l. 15. gives the like Account of the Cathæans. It is common, amongst the Chinese, for the Parents to kill their Children, especially the Females, without falling under Censure or Punishment. And, holding the Transmigration of Souls, as most other People of the East do, they think they do them a Kindness, by preparing their way to a happier Birth and a more advantageous Condition. (f) Thus the Roman Youths, whilst they wore the Prætexta, were not liable to Fines and Amercements, but receiv'd corporal Correction. Plin. N. H. l. 9. c. 23.

(1) See above in B. 4. c. 11. f. 7. & 11.

(g) L. 2. c. 5. f. 2. (h) Ephes. VI. 1. Col. III. 20.

(i) Vid. Senec. Consol. ad Marciam, c. 12.

(2) In Oedip. Colan. p. 289. Ed. H. Steph.

(k) Garcilasso de la Vega, l. 4. c. 19.

Managers. And for this Trust no Man is so fit as the Father. Whence it appears, that it is by no means natural for the Father to acquire a Property over Possession of this kind, tho' it be very Equitable, that he take not only the Care, but the Profits of them, as Helps towards maintaining the Child, till arriv'd at proper Years of Inheritance. And hence too, we may discover the just and solid Grounds of those Distinctions, in the Roman Law, between the Peculium Profectitium, Adventitium and Castrense of Children; the Stock or Wealth they get, by labouring under their Parents, by the Bounty of others, and by the Military Pay (1).

IX. Another Enquiry that may be rais'd on this Subject is, Whether the Paternal Power and Duty can be made over by the Father to a Substitute? On which Point we are to know, that altho' the Father's Authority and Obligation took their Occasion and Rise from a Personal Act, which is incapable of being transferr'd (a), yet this doth not hinder him from recommending his Office to a Deputy, the Advantage or Necessity of the Child so requiring. But then he would do well to keep Plutarch's Advice always in mind: Those Parents (says that wise Author,) do justly deserve Censure, who having committed their Sons to the Care of Masters and Instructors, never trouble themselves to make Trial of their Proficiency. This is a very scandalous Mistake in Education. They ought, at proper Distances of Time, to enquire into the Boy's Parts and Improvement, and not to place all their Hopes in the Faith of a mercenary Teacher. Besides, the Master himself will, by this means, be engaged to use more Diligence and Application, when he finds that so frequent a Judgment will be pass'd on his Pains.

Farther, it is not, in the least, repugnant to the Law of Nature, for a Father to resign his Child to be Adopted by some other honest Person, when 'tis likely to prove to the Child's Advantage (b). But that he should pawn, or sell his Child, Nature seems not to allow, in any Case; except when he cannot otherwise feed and support him. For then, he ought rather to sell him into some easy Servitude, whence there is Hope of being releas'd, than to let him perish with Hunger. Ælian (c) hath recorded a memorable Constitution of the Thebans to this Purpose: No Man, under Pain of Death, shall expose an Infant or cast him out into an uninhabited Place. But if the Father be reduced to extreme Poverty, the Law directs him to carry the Child, immediately after the Birth, to the Magistrate, who upon receiving an easy Price shall deliver it, whether Male or Female, to another Person, taking Security of the Buyer that he shall honestly breed up the Infant, and for his Pains shall take its Service when grown to Man or Womans Estate. The Defence of which Law is grounded on this Rule, that Nature is suppos'd to give us a Right to every thing, which appears absolutely necessary to our fulfilling her Commands. In the same manner the Emperour Constantine (d) permits a Father, in the Case of extreme Want (2), to sell his Son or Daughter, so soon as they come into the World, lest they should otherwise starve: yet ordering, at the same time, that whoever would repay their Price to the first Buyer, should have the Power of redeeming them into Freedom (e). And when, in an Edict of Theodorick, and a Law of the Wiso-Goths, we find a Prohibition against Selling Children for the sake of Food (3); it is meant of Food for the Occasions of the Parents, not for the Necessary Sustainance of the Children. Yet Romulus granted Parents a very unreasonable Privilege, when, as Dionysius Halicarnassens (f) informs us, He allow'd a Father to make Money, by selling his Son Three times; thus giving him more Authority over his Son, than over his Slave. For a Slave once sold, and then obtaining Liberty, is ever after at his own Command and Disposal. But a Son, tho' twice sold, and twice recovering his Freedom, return'd under his Father's Dominion, and was not exempted from it till he had pass'd the third Sale. Numa, in some measure, softned the Rigour of this Law, by excepting from Sale those Sons who had contracted Marriage, provided they had done it by their Father's Orders, or with his Consent. The Decemviri durst not quite take it away, but left it to wear off by gradual Disuse, till it was at length expressly revers'd in the Code. Yet the old Custom was still kept up of selling a Son three times, tho' only in way of Fiction and Formality, at the Ceremony of giving him his Freedom. Tho' this too was afterwards taken off by Justinian (g). It appears from Plutarch (h), that amongst the Athenians, at least before Solon's time, a Father was allow'd to sell his Son for the Payment of his own Debts (i). And we are lately told of the Muscovites, that a Father makes this Advantage four Times, after which the Son is releas'd from his Authority (k). The Chinese make a frequent Practice of selling those Children, whom they think they

(1) See Mr. Barbeyrac's Second Note upon this Section. (a) Liban. Declam. 20. p. 523. Edit. Morell. No Law can recall the Act of a Father, and cause him not to have begotten. (b) Add. Gell. lib. 5. cap. 19. Euripides, (Ion.) v. 1535, 1536.

If that Friend want a Fortune, 'tis but fair
He give his Son to this who wants an Heir.

(c) V. H. l. 2. c. 7. (d) V. C. l. 4. t. 2. Si quis propter nimiam paupertatem, &c. (2) V. Grot. l. 2. c. 5. f. 5.
(e) Cap. 94, 95. in Edict. Theodoric. & leg. Wisigoth. l. 5. t. 4. c. 12. (3) V. C. l. 4. t. 2. (f) L. 2.
(g) L. 8. t. 48. l. ult. C. de Adoption. (h) In vit. Solon. (i) Comp. Matth. XVIII. 25. 2 Kings IV. 1.
Philostratus, in vit. Apoll. Thyan. l. 8. c. 3. p. 401. Ed. Morell. reports of the Phrygians, That 'twas an ordinary thing with them to sell their own Sons; and not to regard them, if they happened to be led Captives into Slavery. Add. Plutar. Lucull.
(k) Sigism Baro in Herberstein. Add. Olear. Itin. Persic. l. 3. c. 6.

shall not be able to maintain; but with this good Condition; that any of them shall have the Privilege of buying themselves into Freedom, at the same Rate at which they were first fold.

X. (1) In order to our understanding what Power the Father hath over the Son, during the second Period, in our Division of Age, we must remind our selves of what was before slightly hinted, that Fathers are invested with another kind of Sovereignty, as they are the Heads of their respective Families. Now this Authority is different, according as the Persons live either within, or without the Limits of a Common-wealth. Separate Families, as they very much resemble States and Kingdoms, so they are govern'd by their Heads, in a way bearing some Proportion to Regal Power. For we are not willing to give them absolutely the name of Civitates, as Mr. Hobbes hath done (2); because Families and publick States are instituted on different Ends and Designs, and consequently many Parts of Civil Sovereignty are excluded from this private Dominion (3). And indeed Mr. Hobbes himself elsewhere confesseth (4), that A Family is not properly a Commonwealth, unless it be of that Power, by its own Number or other Opportunities, as not to be subdued without the Hazard of War. Yet Family-Rule in this separate Condition, so nearly approacheth to the Legislative Authority, as to have the Power of Life and Death in Criminal Cases, as likewise the Management of Arms, and the Care of Leagues and Alliances. This Dominion of the Father over the Children, now grown up, is establish'd by tacit Compact; the Father extending his Commands beyond the Affair of Education, and the Children freely putting themselves into a State of farther Obedience. For the Laws of Equity and Gratitude direct, that a Son should yield his Strength and Service chiefly to Him, to whom he owes all that he now is or enjoys; till such time as, with his Father's Consent, he be releas'd from the Subjection.

XI. But after the erecting of Common-wealths, of these Rights which before belong'd to Fathers of Families, some were contracted, others quite taken away. Yet so much Authority was almost in all places allow'd, as appear'd sufficient for Educating the Children: except that even this was much retrench'd under Plato's National Government; and in the Persian Constitution, if we admit Xenophon for a true Historian (5). In many Nations the Privileges of Family-Rule were little impair'd. Thus at Rome the Fathers had the Power of Life and Death over their Children, which they exercis'd in a kind of Judiciary manner, calling a Council of their Relations and Friends, and causing Sentence to be executed according to their Determination (a). Justinian (b) calls this Right Proprium Civium Romanorum, Particular to the Roman Citizens, and not pretended to by other Men; for which Position Bodinus (c) hath fallen heavily upon him; alledging that the Persians and ancient Gauls (d) made use of the same: and that, the Abrogation of it in the Roman State was the Cause of many Troubles and Mischiefs. Connanus (e) is of the same Judgment; and Dionysius Halicarnasseus (f) is produced as an able Patron of the Custom. Some, on the other hand, engage chiefly in the Defence of the Emperour's words, confidently affirming, that no other Nations allowed the Fathers so extended a Power over their Children as the Romans; amongst whom it had indeed no Measure or Restraint. And in this Sense they interpret the Discourse of Dionysius, which was before alledged on the other side. Others say the Emperour's Meaning was this, that the Paternal Power in Rome was attended with certain Attributes and Properties, which it had not in other Parts of the World: as for Instance, if a Roman suffer'd either the Minima capitis Diminutio, or the Deportatio, The lowest Degree of forfeiting Liberty, or the being transported, he lost his Fatherly Rule; whereas it was never the Custom to deprive a Man, by those Punishments, of any Privilege he possess'd by the Law of Nature and of Nations. And they farther argue, that since all Just Matrimony is founded on Civil Constitutions; this Power of the Father being the Consequent of that Union, must derive its Force from the same Principle (g). But perhaps the easiess way of clearing that Passage in Justinian, is to keep to the Terms of Civium Romanorum, and to expound them strictly, in Opposition to all other Persons who were not free Subjects, and who had not the same Authority over their Children.

Those Founders of Common-wealths, who left the Fathers in Possession of their old Natural Rights in so wide an extent, seem to have proceeded on these Considerations: that the Respect, paid by the Children, might be thus

(1) The Three following Paragraphs are otherwise plac'd in the Original, This is the Eleventh, the Next the Twelfth, and the Third the Tenth. Our Author without any Reason, as appears from his Abridgment, De Officio Hom. & Civ. speaks of the Third Age of Children before he treats of the Second. (2) De Civ. c. 5. f. 12.

(3) See Mr. Barbeyrac's Second Note upon this Section. (4) Leviath. c. 20. (5) De Educat. Cyri, l. 1.

(a) Vid. Val. Max. l. 5. c. 8. f. 2, 3, 5. Senec. de Clement. l. 1. c. 15. 'Tis a Saying of Turnus in Livy, l. 1. c. 50. That there can be no shorter way of deciding a Point, than between the Father and the Son; because, if the latter oppose or disobey the former, he is to expect the Plagues of Divine Vengeance. (b) Instit. L. 1. c. 9. f. 2. De Patria Potestate rais'd to the highest Degree of Awe and Veneration; that the Fathers were the most likely Persons to know their Children's Faults, keeping them generally under their Eye; and, that at the same time, their Natural Affection would probably restrain them from abusing this Power to unjust Violence; the Exercise of it falling on an Age which requires Clemency rather than Cruelty. Thus Phineus observes in Diodorus Siculus (a), No Father will ever shew an Example of very severe Punishment on his Son, unless his Natural Tenderness be overcome by the Greatness of the Crime. And Sopater speaking of the same unlimited Authority, The Law, says he, thus order'd, well knowing how upright a Judge a Father must needs prove over his Children (b).

(c) De Repub. l. 1. c. 4. (d) So Cæsar Comm. de B. G. l. 6. c. 19. And some Footsteps of that ancient Custom remain'd till the Year of Christ 1301. amongst the People of Bourdeaux, by whose Laws, Fathers and Husbands had supreme Power of Life and Death over their Children and over their Wives: And if a Husband happened to kill his Wife in any Violence of Anger or Grief, upon declaring his Repentance by a solemn Oath, he was discharg'd without Punishment. (e) Comment. Jur. Civil. l. 2. c. 13. (f) L. 2. p. 96, 97. Ed. Lips. (g) This is the Judgment of Mæstertius de Justitia Rom. LL. c. 27.

On the other side, those Legislators who took off this Rigour of Paternal Sovereignty, probably did not want their Due Motives. They might have observ'd some Fathers making a very ill Use of their Power, when transported by the Extravagance of Passion beyond all Nature and Justice (c). Again, they thought this Privilege altogether needless, since the Magistrates were sufficient for the Punishment of Capital Offenders. They might likewise esteem it a great Hardship, that a Father should be compell'd, in Contradiction to his own Wishes and Affection, to pronounce Sentence of Death on his Son, tho' justly convicted (d).

By the Jewish Law (1), it was one part of the Father's Power to cancel and make void the Vows of his Son, or of his Daughter. The reason of which Constitution, was not only for fear the Children, in their imprudent Age, should ruine their own Fortunes by rash Donations, moved by a false Appearance of inconsiderate Piety: but likewise lest they should imbezel their Father's Goods on the same Score, or hinder themselves from doing him the Service they ought. So that the restraining Authority, in this particular, did not arise purely from the positive Ordinance, but had a Foundation in Natural Reason; it being a known Principle, that no Person, under the Subjection of another, can, with any Force or Effect, dispose of those things with regard to which, he is under Government. As for that Law in Deut. XXI. 18, &c. (2) about stoning the rebellious Son, which in it self appears so rigid, Care was taken to soften it, as far as possible, in the Interpretation. Thus they held that it did not extend at all to the other Sex; and that the Males, in two Periods of their Age, stood excused from its Force; when they were not arrived to the Maturity of Reason, and when they had left their Father's Family, and set up for Directors of their own Affairs. And then, the Words of the Accusation running, This our Son is rebellious, he is a Glutton or a Drunkard, there was a great difference of Opinion how much the Young Man must have wasted in these Excesses, before he could be proceeded against in this severe Method. They farther observ'd it to be requisite, that both the Parents, at the time of the Charge, should be alive; otherwise, the Son might have had some Fortune left him, sufficient to make Compensation for the Expence of his Vices (e).

Amongst the present Japonesse, the Father hath the most absolute Power of Life and Death over his Children.

From these and other Considerations it appears, how we are to understand that Rule laid down by Grotius (3): In the second Period, says he, when the Children's Judgment is ripe and perfect, those Actions only of theirs are subject to the Command of the Parents, which immediately contribute to the well ordering of the Father's or Mother's Family: it being but equitable that every Part should conform in promoting the Benefit of the Whole. In other respects, the Children have a Moral Liberty of doing whatever their own Judgment recommends; yet so that they are still bound to take all possible Care to please their Parents; tho' should they take contrary Measures, the Force of this Duty will not reach so far as to render their Actions invalid. These words, then, are to be restrain'd to the Power of Fathers of Families, as now establish'd in most Christian States: where the chief Business of it is taken up in Matters relating to Education. And 'tis indeed but just, that if the Children desire to be supported at present by their Father's Wealth, and to succeed to it hereafter, they should freely obey his Pleasure, while enjoining nothing absurd or indecent. If, without sufficient Cause, they refuse thus to comply, it cannot be expected but that the Parents should withdraw all farther Care and Expence on their account, and declare them Disinherited. Yet here too, it hath been the Care of Civil Laws to provide that Parents shall not inhumanly discard their Children, upon every Fit of Humour and Passion, without solid Reason. Thus Plato (a) allows not a Father to cast off his Son without the Consent of the other Relations (b). And, in general, as it belongs to the Wisdom of publick Governments to settle the Rights of private Persons, in Subordination to the common Benefit and Honour; so it hath been usual, with most Legislators, to prevent all Abuses of this Power, whether tending to the publick Damage, or to the unjust Oppression of the Children. For Instance, a Father is oblig'd, as far as his Abilities will reach, to render his Children useful Members of Civil Society (c): And since there is such a Variety of Callings, so many different ways of Living, it is very reasonable that the Children, in chusing their Profession, should be sway'd by their Father's Judgment and Authority, provided he propose nothing contrary to Honesty and Decorum; especially in case he supply them with Money for carrying on of such Designs. Yet it would be, at the same time, a Breach of Wisdom and of Justice, to compel Children to a Method of Life, to which their Genius is utterly averse; and a horrid Villany, to drive them on such a Profession as is either base and sinful, as the waiting on the Stews; or intolerable to the common Temper of Mankind; as Celibacy without the Gift of Continnence, and the Confinement of a Monastick Vow.

(a) L. 4. c. 45. p. 247. Ed. Rhod. (b) Add. Ælian. V. H. l. 1. c. 47. (c) Liban. Declam. 33. p. 762. Ed. Morell. Do not imagine that the Bond of Nature hath, of it self, sufficient Force and Strength: indeed for the most part it holds firm and good; but any more violent Disorder of Mind is able to break it asunder; and a Father transported with Passion, lays aside that Name and Relation, and acts quite another Part. (d) Add. Ælian. V. H. l. 1. c. 34. Val. Max. l. 5. c. 9. l. 4. Add. Charron de la Sagesse, l. 1. c. 43, 47. Libanius Declam. 35. To do any thing against one's Children is the same as to undergo it one's self. The Sentence which the Men on this side bring from L. 48. t. 9. l. 5. D. ad. L. Pompeiani de Parricid. The Power of a Father consists in Affection not in Rigour, contributes nothing to their Purpose. For Adrian had then banish'd a Father for killing his Son as they were Hunting, on account of Adultery with his Mother-in-Law. And the Father is there justly censur'd for taking off the Offender in a villainous and treacherous Manner, when he might have call'd a Council of Friends, and sentenc'd him to Capital Punishment by Vertue of his Domestical Jurisdiction. Or it is enough to say, as to that Passage, that it is an Emblem of the good Trebonianus's merciful Temper, who was the Author of it. (1) See Numb. XXX. 4, &c. with Grotius and Le Clerc's Notes thereon. (2) See Mr. Le Clerc upon the place. (3) L. 2. c. 5. l. 3.

XII. In the third Period of Age, when the Children have left their Father's Family, and are releas'd from his Command, they are perfectly at their own Disposal, yet still retaining the Debt of Reverence and Duty, which is of perpetual Obligation, arising from those antecedent Merits of their Parents, which can never be cancell'd or repaid. Plato (d) is admirable on this Argument. Justice requires, says he, that we endeavour to satisfy our greatest and oldest Debt, our Debt to our Parents. Every one ought to be fix'd in this Perswasion, that whatever he possesseth belongs to those from whom he receiv'd his Birth and Education, and ought, so far as is necessary, to be spent in their Service. To them therefore he is freely to afford his Goods of Fortune, of Body, and of Mind; as if he had only borrowed them from their Kindness, and was now to restore them in their Age, when they had the greatest Occasion for them; gratefully remembering the Cares and Pains they long since underwent on his account. Nor ought we to express our Reverence to our Parents in Actions only, but in all our Words and Conversation. We are obliged to yield to their Passions, and to the common Effects of them; ever considering what just Reason a Parent hath to resent the least Injury or Disrespect from a Child (e). He proceeds with the same Wisdom, in advising what Honours and Services should be paid to Parents after their Decease; that we ought to grace their Reliques with a Decent Monument, and to pursue all Methods and all Occasions of making their Memory Sacred. The Chinese are remarkable in this point of Duty; a Person engag'd in the greatest Affairs of the Court, upon the Loss of a Parent leaves his Office, if not Military, and retires Home to spend three Years in Privacy and Mourning. The reason of their fixing this Period of Grief, was, because the first three Years of our Life, we give our Parents the greatest Trouble (f). Amongst the same People the Son ever makes use of a lower Seat than his Father, and placeth himself at his side, not over against him. And indeed, that Children can never requite the Kindness of their Parents is a Truth in every Body's Mouth (g). Tho' Seneca (h) hath, for Opposition's sake, endeavour'd, in a long Dispute, to prove that a Son may sometimes even outdo a Father in Benefits: And Alexander, provoked once with some Complaints against his Mother, could not forbear saying, that She made him pay very dear for his nine Months Lodgings (i). But how vast soever the Merits of our Parents be acknowledg'd, this is certain, that it will not bear them out in imposing an unlawful Command; and therefore it was a brave Reply of the same Prince to the same Mother, urging him to put an innocent Person to Death, and reminding him of the Pains she had undergone for his Sake, My good Mother, says he, demand some other Reward for your Trouble; the Life of a Man is too precious to admit of any Equivalent (k). Mr. Hobbes (l) is of Opinion, that this Debt of Filial Reverence ariseth not only from the Law of Gratitude, but likewise from the Force of a Tacit Compact; it not being presumed, that he who releaseth another from his Rule and Dominion, intends so far to make him his Equal, as not to reckon it to him as a Favour: But a Person, thus dismiss'd from Subjection, is ever suppos'd to promise, that he will constantly pay his Benefactor all those external Marks, at least of Honour and Esteem, which

(a) De LL. l. 11. p. 973. (b) Add. Quintil. Declam. 9. Senec. Contr. 1. 9. (c) And therefore it was one of Solon's Laws, that a Child should not be bound to maintain a Father, who had bred him up to no Art or Profession, Plutarch in Solon. (d) De LL. l. 4. p. 832, 833. Ed. Wech. (e) Vid. de LL. XI. p. 975. Arrian Epictet. l. 2. c. 10. Remember you are a Son; and that it belongs to Your Duty to think your Father's Good, in all respects, Your own: to yield Obedience to all his Commands; never to defame him to others; nor to do or say any thing that may turn to his Prejudice or Inconvenience; to yield and give place to him on all Occasions, and to assist him with Your utmost Power. Oppian. Halieut. l. 5. v. 89.

Πατέρι δὲ ἰσχυροτέρῳ πάλιν ἰσχυρὸν υἱόν.

Sons are new Strength to a decaying Sire.

(f) Neuhof. in Legat. More Signs of their Mourning may be found in Martinus's Hist. Sim. l. 1. in Imp. 8. (g) *Aristot. Ethic. ad Nicom. VIII. 16. No Person can fully return the Benefits of his Parents; but he who serves and respects them to his utmost Ability, may be pronounced Honest and Just. Vid. Xenoph. Apomn. l. 2. p. 431, 432. Ed. Steph. Stobæ. Serm. 77. (h) De Beneficiis, l. 3. c. 29, 30, &c. (i) *Arrian. de reb. gest. Alex. l. 7. (k) Amm. Marcellin. l. 14. c. 10. Add. Gell. l. 2. c. 7. (l) De Civæ, c. 9. f. 8.

Superiors are wont to receive from their Inferiors.

Yet it was, no doubt, a Strain of Superstition in the Jews, when they would not allow a Son to let his Father Blood, to open a Sore for him, or to draw a Thorn out of his Flesh (a).

Amongst those who live in a Commonwealth, it may happen, that upon account of some Office or Dignity born by the Son, the Father shall be oblig'd to do him Reverence, yet not so as to quit his Prerogative of private Respect (1). Thus Fabius Maximus commended the Action of his Son the Consul, who, as Fabius came riding towards him at a publick Meeting, ordered him to alight and make his Approaches to him on Foot (b).

Whether this perpetual Duty and Obligation of Children, remaining after their Father's Power is expired, arise from the Act of Generation or from the faithful Care and Labour of Breeding them up, is a Controversy that hath divided learned Men. Those who contend for the former, are wont to tell us, that the Kindness of giving Life is not only, in its self, the greatest good that can be bestow'd, but is likewise the Occasion of all others; and that, by this Action of conferring a Being, the Parents do, in some measure, resemble the Almighty Creator. Some, again, give their Judgment in favour of Education; as that which properly makes a Man deserve his name, and which is not perform'd without a long and difficult Course of Application and Expence. They illustrate their Opinion by this Observation in Nature, that amongst Brute Creatures the Male is not discover'd to have the least Regard for the Young which he begets, and the Dam's Tenderness ceaseth with her Care, when they are able to provide for themselves: whereas the Affection between human Parents and Children is perpetual: which must needs be a Token that the great Dearness on the one side, and the Obligation to Duty on the other, do not chiefly result from that Act of the Parents which they exercise in common with Beasts, but from their peculiar Diligence in forming and managing their Off-spring, in order to a Life of Decency and Society. Aristotle is cited in Defence of the former Notion, A Father, says he (c), is the Cause of the Son's Existence, (which seems the greatest of Benefits,) and of his Nature and Institution. And again (d), Men stand engaged in the highest Degrees of Friendship and Piety towards the Gods, and towards their Parents. For, from these they re- ceiv'd, the noblest of all imaginable Goods, their Being and Education. On the latter of which Passages we may remark, that altho' the conferring of Life be first named, yet it is not expressly compared with the other Benefit. Philo Judæus (e) is produc'd on the same side; it is a Saying of his, We can never return our Parents equal Favours; since we can't repay, in the same manner, their Kindness of first bringing us into the World. And thus too, the Father in the Declamation (f); We first produced You out of our own Life and Substance, and opened to Your Prospect this Vast Scene of Divine and Human things. We made You capable of seeing and of enjoying the Sea, the Earth, the unwearied Course of the Stars, the Heavens with all their sacred and shining Glories.

Yet we cannot but deliver it as our Persuasion, that the Benefit of Educating is a much stronger Ground and Spring of Filial Obligation, than the other of Begetting. Plato (g) seems to countenance this Opinion, Parents, says he, ought either not to have brought their Children into the World, or not to refuse any Pains in training and instructing them. In another place (h), he introduceth Demodocus thus speaking of his Son; The Act (of planting shall I call it, or) of begetting my Son, was the easiest imaginable; but the breeding him up was a Task of Difficulty and Trouble; ever filling me with Fears on his account. And Socrates, in the same Dialogue, declares it as his Judgment, I know not any Business in which a prudent Man ought to show more Caution and Diligence, than in forming his Son's Mind to Goodness and Virtue (i). So the Father pleads in Quintilian (k), I do not now, says he to his Son, set to Your Score those vulgar Favours of lending You Life, and Light, and Liberty; but whatever Bravery You have shew'd, whatever gallant Action You have perform'd, this I charge upon You as my Merit; 'tis my Strength with which you have conquer'd. That Soul of Yours, so unshaken, so undaunted under the greatest Dangers, had its Rise and Original from mine. It hath been my long Employment to render You a Man of Abilities and Courage; in your early Tears by my Precepts, and since, by my Example (l). It is not indeed easy to imagine or allow, that a Parent hath conferr'd any considerable Benefit on his Child, should he cast him away when he first comes into the World (2); or afterwards, entirely neglecting his Culture and Education, should let him grow up like a Beast, to lead a Life useless to others, and shameful to himself (m).

(a) Constant. L'Empereur in Babakama, c. 8. f. 3. Add. Selden. de J. N. & G. l. 7. c. 2. (1) Nam, quod ad jus publicum attinet, non sequitur [Pater] jus potestatis. V. D. L. 36. t. 1. Ad Senatus Consultum Trebell. l. 4. princip.

(b) Plutarch. Fab. & in Apothegm. Valer. Max. l. 2. c. 2. f. 4. Add. Bœcler in Grot. l. 2. c. 5. f. 6.

(c) Ethic. VIII. 13. (d) Ibid. c. 14. (e) Allegor. l. 1. p. 58. in fin. & l. 2. p. 62. D. Ed. Paris. (f) Quintil. V.

(g) In Crito. p. 34. B. (h) Theag. init. (i) Euripid. Hecub. Good Institution is the Spring of Virtue.

(k) Declam. 258. (1) Add. Declam. 278. & Phædr. Fab. l. 3. fab. 5. (2) Vid. Senec. de Benef. l. 3. c. 31.

(m) Si res nullæ minoris constat patri, quam filius; If his Son stands him in the least Charge of any thing he possesseth. By the Law of Solon in Plutarch, Children lawfully born were not obliged to maintain their Parents. The Reason of which Exception was grounded on this Consideration, that who forsakes the honest way of Marriage, plainly shews that he seeks a new Partner, not on the account of Issue, but of Pleasure; and therefore his Vice is his Reward; and he can by no means complain of any Ingratitude in such Children, because he hath Injured and disgraced them by making their very Nativity a Reproach. Add. Vitruv. l. 6. Prefas

Juvenal's (1) Reasoning is very Just and True,

*Gratum est quod patriæ civem, populoque dedisti,
Si facis, ut patriæ sit idoneus, utilis agris,
Utilis & bellorum & pacis rebus agendis.
Plurimum enim intererit, quibus artibus & qui-Moribus instituas.—— (bus hunc tu*

The State and People will your Zeal commend,
In giving that a Man, and these a Friend;
If fit to aid the publick Good: if Skill'd
In Rural Labours, or the Martial Field,
Or grave Debates of Peace. Th' important Stake,
Now waits your Care, what early steps you take;
What Scheme of Arts or Manners is design'd,
To fix his Pains, or cultivate his Mind.

Aristotle himself, (who was cited to countenance the other side of the Question) hath left this Saying on Record (a), that Parents, who take Care to see their Children duly inform'd and instructed, deserve much higher Honours, than those who barely lend them a Being: the latter make them capable of Living, the former of living honestly and happily.

Nor doth that Consequence, on which the other Opinion is built, seem to hold; Life is the greatest Good; therefore the Act of the Parent in giving that, is the most fit and proper to raise an Obligation in the Child. For before I can charge any Action of mine on Another, as a considerable piece of Merit, it is necessary that I know to what Person I do the Kindness, and whether it will certainly reach him. Again, it will be convenient for me to reflect and consider, whether I really intended the thing as a Favour; how much it stood me in; whether I undertook it more for the sake of doing Good to the other Party than for my own Pleasure or Use; whether I was engaged in the Performance, upon Reason and Deliberation, or was drawn to it by the Force of Passion, or Allurements of Sense: Lastly, whether the Action be capable of benefiting the other Person, without the Addition of some farther Services. Whoever diligently weighs these several Points of Enquiry, will be easily inclin'd to acknowledge, that the Kindness of Educating, is much more proper to found an Obligation, than the vulgar Office of Begetting.

Yet we do by no means approve of all that Seneca hath urged on this Head, in his Discourse of Benefits (b). For he is not to be born with, when he calls the Life of a Man, whom GOD hath endued with an Immortal Soul, a Thing common to us with the wild Beasts, with the smallest, and with some of the foulest of Creatures; and, the Happiness of Flies and of Worms. But some Parts of his Argument may be admitted without Censure. Look, says he, upon my Nativity, as it appears barely in it self, and You will find it to be a short and uncertain Favour, a Subject lying equally open to Good and Evil. No doubt it was my first Step to all the Benefits I enjoy, but it was not therefore the greatest, because the first; nor, because the greatest without it could never have been. And again, Barely to live is the least Degree towards living well. I would thus talk with my Father: Suppose, as You first gave me my Life, so I had saved Yours: in this I should certainly exceed Your Kindness, for I conferr'd my Favour when You was sensible from whom you receiv'd it, and I to whom I did it: and, then, I did not consult my own Pleasure, at least not my Pleasure alone, in the Performance. Would You conceive how small a Boon You bestow'd on me in my Birth? Fancy Your self to have immediately cast me out to perish naked and helpless; in this Case Your Act of Begetting me had been a manifest Injury. From all which I infer, that the Acquaintance of my Father and Mother, had proved but a slender Kindness to me, had it not been follow'd with other good Offices which ratified and confirm'd it (c).

XIII. Lastly, As the Father ought not, without weighty Reasons, to expel the Children his House; so they, on the other hand, shall not, according to the regular Course, pass into another Family without his good Leave. Yet in case they have just Grounds for their Departure, and yet cannot prevail on their Father's Perverseness to give Consent, I should be of Opinion, that their Duty doth not hinder them from removing, so as to concert their own Affairs, contrary to his Humour; especially when they freely resign all future Dependence on him, for their Fortune and Inheritance. For as Civil Constitutions do wisely countenance and strengthen the Authority of Parents, so they are not wont to encourage impertinent Obstinacy and Moroseness. Nor doth it seem to be in the Power of those who are Heads of Separate Families, to retain their Children, when they have reasonable Occasion to remove: inasmuch as, in regular Commonwealths, it is not usual to deny a Free-Subject the Liberty of transplanting himself, when tied to Residence by no particular Obligation.

XIV. To the same Head belongs that common Question, Whether Children may dispose of themselves in Marriage against the Consent of their Parents (2)? For the Solution of which we ought carefully and distinctly to consider what is incumbent on Children, by Vertue of their Natural Duty; and what on account of the Obedience which attends their State of Subjection: and again, what Rights belong to Father's strictly, as such; what as they are the Heads of Families. Paternal Power, as such, we have already observ'd to be just so great as is sufficient to the Government of the Children, till able to be their own Managers. This therefore doth not seem to extend it self so far as to the reverſing of a Matrimonial Contract: an Affair ſuppos'd to be carried on by Persons of mature Age and Reason. Indeed the Duty of Filial Piety and Reverence requires, not only that the Children apply themselves to their Parents for Advice in these Proceedings, but likewise that they make a Conscience of opposing so awful Directions (a). Yet if they happen to break their Duty, in this Point, it doth not follow that the Act must be null and void. For an Obligation to hear and to respect Another's Advice, doth not presently divest a Man of the Power to govern his own Concerns. The Liberty of a Son, as Quintilian (b) observes, if it be at all allowable, is so in the Matrimonial Affair: For who can love by the Eyes, or by the Rules of another?

(1) Sat. 14. v. 70, &c. Vid. etiam Sat. 7. v. 184, &c. (a) In Diog. Laert. It is worth observing in Martinius, Hist. Sin. l. 4. c. 2. what mighty Respect and Veneration the Chinese pay to their Masters; who, as Juvenal says, ought to be Parentis loco, to be honour'd and obey'd like second Parents. The same Historian, l. 6. c. 1. reports, that the Son, in China, never riseth to a higher Degree of Honour than what hath been formerly born by the Father; And if, for his signal Services to the State, he be advanced farther, the Dignity, with which he is to be invested, is first to be prefer'd, by a kind of Posthumous Promotion, on his deceas'd Father: That People esteeming Duty and Reverence to Parents, the first and chiefest of Vertues. (b) L. 3. c. 30, &c. (c) A little after he styles Generation a Vulgar Benefit; the Office of a Father, Easy, slight, and of little value; regarding any thing else rather than the future Person to be produced. (2) V. Gros. l. 2. c. 5. l. 10.

But what shall we say of that other Power, which the Fathers hold as they are the Heads of Families? It's true, in many Commonwealths, the Laws have variously restrain'd the Liberty of Marriage. Thus, in some Places, no Person of the Royal Family can Contract, without the King's Approbation; such Matches often proving of very considerable Consequence to the Publick. In Japan the Prince chuseth Wives for his Nobles (c). In several Countries Marriage Contracted between a Subject and a Foreigner, between a Noble Person and a Commoner, are declared void. But as in all States and Governments, a Liberty of marrying and of removing is ever suppos'd, except where there is either an express Law to the contrary, or a Custom equivalent to a Law; so in Separate Families, where most of the Reasons fail, on which the Civil Constitutions,

(a) Non equum est pugnare, pater cui tradidit ipse, Ipse pater cum matre, quibus parere necesse est: Virginitas non tota tua est: ex parte parentum est, Tertia pars matri data, pars data tertia patri; Tertia sola tua est: noli pugnare duobus, Qui genero sua jura simul cum dote dederunt. Catullus.

Thus Hermione most dutifully speaks in Euripides (Andromach.) v. 987, 988.

— My Marriage is my Father's Care,
His Judgment guides my Choice. —

And Xenophon Cyrop. L. 8. tells us, that Cyrus would by no means engage in Nuptial Affairs without the Consent of his Parents. (b) Declam. 257. (c) Varen. Descript. Japon. c. 12. Add. Constit. Sicul. l. 3. t. 21. (d) Genes. XXVI. 34, 35. (e) Vid. L. 23. t. 1. l. 12. f. 1. D. De Sponſal. (f) Vid. Leg. Wisigoth. l. 3. t. 2. c. 8. Leg. Burgundion, t. 12. c. 5. (g) Varen. Descript. Japon. c. 12. (h) Garcilasso De la Vega, l. 6. c. 36. (i) Vid. L. 23. s. 2. l. 2. D. De Ritu Nuptiarum. & L. 48. t. 5. l. 7. D. ad L. Jul. De Adulter. (k) Add. Eccles. & Ziegler. ad Grot. l. 2. c. 5. f. 10.

about this Affair, are built; the Father of the Family doth not seem to have a Right of prohibiting or of reverſing his Childrens Marriage, when not defective in any thing but his Consent: provided still, that they are willing immediately to leave his House; for it would be unreasonable to bring a Person to live under his Eye whom he professeth to dislike (d). Yet if a Father see his Authority slighted by his Children, without very sufficient Grounds for their Non-compliance (e), he may, as a Punishment of that Neglect, exclude them from all present Benefits and all future Expectations (f).

What Rights those Fathers of Families, who live not in a separate Condition, but under some Common-wealth, do in this respect enjoy, must be discover'd by the Customs and Constitutions of different Nations. Amongst the Japoneſe, Marriages are entirely directed by the Parents, or, if they are Dead, by the next Relations (g). And in Peru, under the ancient Government of the Incas, all Matrimony engaged in, without the Parents Approbation, was declared Null, and the Children Illegitimate (h). This, in general, is certain, that as the Laws of a particular Country may pronounce a Contract invalid, either because defective in Form, or because transacted between Persons to whom such particular Agreements are prohibited; they may, in like manner, suspend the Validity of Marriage without the Consent of the Parents; so that if destitute of this necessary Condition, it shall pass in Civil Estimation for Null and Insignificant (i). For the Agreement of the Parties to cohabit like Man and Wife, can no more render Matrimony good, when contrary to Law, than the Bargain of a Minor and the Delivery Consequent upon it, both undertaken without his Guardian's Influence, can effectually and irrevocably pass away his Estate. Tho' Parents are to be Admonish'd, that when the Government allows them so high a Prerogative, they should be very cautious, and very merciful in putting it in Execution (k).

'T would be Rebellion to resist those Arms
On which Your Parents have bestow'd Your Charms.
Your Virgin-Jewel is not all Your own,
A third each Parent claims, a third alone
Remains to You; forbear with Two to fight,
Who, in their Portion, give the Son the Right.

CHAP. III.

Of Despotical Power, or the Authority of the Master over his Servant.

AS the Husband and Wife (whence proceeds the common Off-spring) make the principal Parts of a Family, so Servants come in for inferior, secondary Members, to bear the Burthen of common Labour and Business. Now these being usually treated in a way of severer Discipline, give Occasion to the forming of a new Species of Government on their account; different from that which is exercis'd over Children, who demand a milder and more indulgent Sway. Yet we are perswaded, that neither this Society, between Master and Servant, can claim the Name of a Common-wealth or Civil State, as Mr. Hobbes (1) is inclin'd to call it: not only because it generally consists of fewer Persons than are necessary for mutual Preservation, in a Condition of Natural Liberty; but likewise because a Master furnisheth himself with Servants, not so much for the Sake of Reciprocal Defence, as that by means of their Labour, he may, in a more ample and more convenient manner discharge his Domestick Affairs.

II. As to the Original of this kind of Society, we must, in the first Place, discard that old Opinion, which makes Nature her self to have actually establish'd the Relation of Master and Servant amongst Men. It is true, we discover a strange Variety of Parts and Capacities. To give one Instance for all; we observe some Persons of so quick and piercing Sagacity, as to be able always to apprehend their own Interest and Benefit, and, at the same time, of such Vigilancy as to prosecute their Affairs, by their own free Motion, without the Admonition or Compulsion of others. Some, again, are of so heavy Dispositions, as not to see their own Advantage, any farther than they are guided; being much fitter for the Labours of the Body, than the Employments of the Brain; and farther, so given over to Supineness and Sloth, as unless they are forced and dragg'd to Application, they can manage no Concern with tolerable Care; nor so much as Save or Spend, by the Direction of their own Judgment. The latter Kind, are those whom Aristotle calls Slaves by Nature; not that Nature by her own immediate Act, sets them in such a Condition of Bondage, without any Human Deed or Covenant intervening; but because by forming them with so much Disadvantage in their Frame, she hath rendred it more convenient for them to live under absolute Subjection and Controul, than to undertake the Government of their own Proceedings (2). It was a Saying of Agessilaus, that The Asiaticks were the worst of Free-men, and the best of Slaves: which Passienus turn'd upon the Emperour Domitian, when he observ'd, that There was never a better Servant, and never a worse Master (a).

III. Hornius, in his first Book De Civitate (3), jars upon the old String, in contradicting the general Opinion of the Lawyers (4), who derive the Origine of Servitude from the Law of Nations. He says, 'The Manner only of this Institution is to be referr'd to the Practice of Mankind; a Custom having prevail'd amongst most People, to impose such a Condition upon their Captives in War. But we should always ' distinguish the Cause of the Society, from the Cause of the Sovereignty; the latter not being deducible from Custom, nor from the Law of Nations, but being establish'd by GOD himself. For since all Victory is from GOD, and by his Providence the Conquerour gets into his Hands the Person of the Enemy, it follows, that the Life of the Captive might immediately be taken away: But since Humanity would scarce have suffer'd, that the Victor should always exercise this Rigour on an unarm'd and suppliant Person, it was thought convenient to forbear Execution, and to retain his Power over the Prisoner, who might thus be of good Use in the Affairs of Life. But indeed, as the Occasion of Men's engaging in War, was ever partly their own Defence, and partly the Vindication of their Rights; so upon their obtaining the Victory, when they thought good to spare the Lives of the Conquer'd, it was at their Pleasure, either to put them in a State of Slavery, or only to keep them in Hold till such time, as by Ransom or Compact they shall be deliver'd. All which Privileges and Proceedings, together with the Authority over Persons thus brought into Subjection, were not immediately appointed by GOD himself, but were approv'd by Him upon Human Institution. Nor is that Assertion true, 'The Victor still retains that Power of Life and Death over the Captive, which he once procur'd; and consequently, his Right is the same, before he receives him into Fealty and Service, and after he governs him as a Part of his Family. For these are quite different things. The conquering Party, may by the Right of War, dispose how he pleaseth of his Prisoner, either kill him or save him; but this was never before term'd the Power of Life and Death; which denotes a lawful Authority of inflicting Capital Punishment, in case of an antecedent Crime. Lastly; what the same Author lays down. 'That all Sovereignty, of what kind soever, imports a Power over the Life of the Subject, and therefore we must not seek for Distinctions in the Power it self, but in the Exercise of the Power; and by Consequence, the Authority of the Husband over the Wife, of the Father over the Children, of the Prince over the People, is one and the same with that of the Master over the Servant; except that the ways of Treatment are more kind, and gentle in the former Instances, than in the last: is an Argument, that we can by no means prevail with our selves to allow.

IV. In our Judgment, the Origine of Servitude ought thus to be traced out. In the early Ages of the World, when Men began to quit their primitive Plainness and Simplicity, to cultivate the Method of Living, and to enlarge their Fortunes and Possessions, it is very likely the Wiser and Richer Sort, invited those

(1) De Cive, c. 5. f. 1, 2.

(2) V. supra L. 3. c. 2. f. 3.

(a) Tacit. Ann. VI. c. 20.

(3) L. 1. c. 3.

(4) V. Instit. L. 1. t. 3. De Jure Personarum. f. 2, 3, 4.

of less Parts, and less Wealth, to assist them in their Business, for Hire. Afterwards, when both Parties found their Benefit in this way of proceeding, the meaner Tribe were, by Degrees, persuaded to join themselves perpetual Members to the Families of the Greater; under these Conditions, that the latter should engage to supply Food and all conveniencies of Living, and the former should bind themselves to undertake all proper Labours and Employments, as their Patrons should direct. So that the first Rise of Servitude, is owing to the voluntary Consent of the poorer and more helpless Persons, and is founded upon that common Form of Contract, Do, ut facias; I promise to give You constant Sustenance, upon Condition You assist me with Your constant Work. What Power Nature allows a Master over Servants, of this kind, may be easily discover'd from the Ends of forming such a Society (1). He may enjoin them what Task he pleaseth, in Proportion to their Strength and Skill (2). He may likewise correct (3) their Sluggishness, by such Methods of Severity as are most likely to prevail on their particular Dispositions; tho' he cannot, on this Score, proceed to Capital Punishments: so that the highest Degree of Penalty he can inflict on their Idleness, is, to expel the lazy Drones from his Family, and leave them to their own Beggarly Condition. Nor doth it appear, that he can transmit them to another Master, without their Consent: they being really in the Capacity of Perpetual Mercenaries, or Hirelings, working for the Advantage of Him that employs them, whilst continuing in that State, but not at his Disposal when obliged to leave it. Lastly, If Persons, in this limited Order of Servitude, commit any grievous Offence against the Members of another Family, their Master cannot, even on this account, proceed to take away their Life. Yet least he should engage himself in Quarrels, by defending their Injuries and Crimes, he is allow'd, or rather he is oblig'd to expel them his House; which is a kind of delivering them up to Punishment. But if they prove guilty of any heinous Practice against the Master himself, and his Family, he may then justly kill them: yet not by Vertue of his Sovereignty, but as Enemies, by the Right of War (a).

And according to these Measures, the Condition of Servants, and the Power of Masters are, for the most part, described in the Old Testament (b).

V. The Convenience of discharging inferior

Offices and Labours, by the Hands of Others (c), being thus found out: in succeeding times, when Wars grew frequent in the World, it pass'd by Degrees, into a Custom, to indulge Captives with Life and Corporal Liberty, upon Condition that they should yield perpetual Service to the Conquerour (d). Thus Diodorus Siculus (e) reports of the ancient Egyptian King Sesostris, that he perform'd all his publick Works by the Help of Captives; fixing this Inscription on the Temples which he built, None of the Natives have here employ'd their Labour. Now these Slaves of War were, of Course, treated with severer Discipline, being supposed still to retain some Sparks of Hostile Hatred. Besides, an Act of Cruelty was judg'd somewhat excusable, when practis'd upon those who had formerly made an open Attempt on the Life and Fortune of their present Master; and the License in this Point improv'd so far, that it was esteem'd a harmless Matter to kill them, either in Violence of Passion, or upon committing any Offence (f). This Privilege being once introduced, was extended, tho' upon less Pretence, to the Children of the Vassals; and to their Slaves, if they happen'd themselves to be Inferior Masters. Yet, in some Common-wealths, it was quite taken off by publick Decrees, and in others very much abridg'd and restrain'd. The primitive Institution therefore, of Servitude, was not founded on War, but on voluntary Consent; tho' the Chance of War supplied Occasion, not only to the increasing the Number of Slaves, but to the rendring their Condition more hard and grievous (g).

VI. Let us see how Mr. Hobbes (h) derives the Sovereignty of Masters, and the Subjection of Servants, from his State of War. And, first, we must discard that fundamental Error of his, that from the Condition of Nature, which he calls a War of every Man upon every Man, there can result to any Person a Right of invading Another, and of reducing him into Servitude upon gaining the Victory. Yet thus much is Sense; that as, by the Right of War, an Enemy may fairly be kill'd; so the Conquerour may, if he pleaseth, give him his Life, upon his Promise of perpetual Service. In which Contract and Composition, the Good which the Vanquish'd receives, is the Security of his Life, which, by the Right of War, might have been taken away; and the Good which he engages to bring to the Victor, is his Service and Obedience, and those, as far as possible, Ab-

(1) Vid. Grot. L. 2. c. 5. f. 30. and Mr. Barbeyrac's First Note upon this Section. (2) Vid. Grot. L. 3. c. 14. f. 5. See Mr. Barbeyrac's 2d Note upon this Section. (3) Vid. Grot. d. l. f. 4. (a) Yet after another Manner than the Old Germans, who kill'd their Slaves, as Tacitus says, Not out of Discipline and Severity, but pure Heat of Passion.

(b) Exod. XXI. 21. &c. Levit. XXV. 39, &c. Deuteron. XV. 17, 43, 53, &c. Sirac. XXIII. 25, &c. (c) Hence Aristotle (Polit. 3.) calls a Servant, ἑταῖρος ἢ ἐργάτης. (d) As to the Original of this Custom, 'tis an Assertion of Pliny's, that The Lacedemonians invented Servitude; (l. 7. c. 56.) which cannot be admitted, except in one of these two Senses, either that they were the first in Greece who introduced this Practice, or that they made Slaves of their Country-men the Grecians, as well as of the Barbarians, when taken in War. The former Sense is favour'd by that Place of Herodotus (Erato, towards the End) where speaking of the Island Lemnos, its being seiz'd by the Pelagians, he adds, Neither they nor any other of the Grecians had then Slaves.

(e) L. 1. c. 56. p. 52. Ed. Rhodom. Add. Busbeq. Epist. 3. p. 120. Christoph. Richer De Moribus Orient. p. 101. (f) Add. Grot. l. 3. c. 7. f. 3. (g) Add. Bœcler. ad Grot. l. 2. c. 5. f. 27. (h) Dé Cive, c. 8. f. 1.

solute. For he that obligeth himself to perform the Commands of Another, before he knows the Particulars, is bound, without any Limitation or Exception, to do all that the other Party shall enjoin. Tho' the Law of Humanity affords some Relief and Temper to this rigorous Justice (a).

Farther, Mr. Hobbes (1) rightly observes, that not every Captive, in War, is thus supposed to covenant with the Conquerour. For some do not obtain an absolute Grant of Life, but a temporary Reprieve to cease at the Conquerour's Pleasure: which was the Case of those whom the Romans preserv'd to adorn their Triumphs, and to entertain their Amphitheatres. Nor is so much Trust and Credit given to every Captive, as that his Master should venture to leave him such a Degree of Natural Liberty as might enable him, were he so inclined, either to run away, or to refuse working, or to attempt any Mischief or Damage against the Family. Such a One therefore performs Service, not upon account of mutual Faith and Contract, or by Virtue of a Moral Tye, but upon meer Force, like Brute Creatures; being kept in Fetters or under close Confinement. The Obligation therefore of a Slave of War, towards his Master, doth not spring from the bare saving his Life, or deferring his Death; but is built on his Exemption from Chains and Imprisonment. By this Act, the Master expresseth so much Confidence in him, as to leave him possess'd of Corporal Liberty; by which means, if no Moral Bonds and Engagements had pass'd between them, the State of War would still continue; and the Slave might not only make his Escape, but might fairly slay his Preserver (2). From all which, it is clear, that there's a great Difference between those Slaves who are secured in Prisons, Work-houses, and the like, and those who are tied by Covenant to their Master: the former serving not out of Duty, but to avoid Punishment; and consequently, not acting against the Law of Nature, should they either run off, or assault their Master's Life. For to hold a Person in Chains, or Durance, is a Sign, that we do not think him sufficiently ensured to us by any Obligation, or Moral Restraint.

Yet that Assertion of Mr. Hobbes cannot pass for Truth, that The Master hath altogether the same Right over the Slave, whom he thus keeps in Bonds, and him whom he holds only by Articles; in as much as his Right over both is supreme. For that kind of Hostile Privilege which the Victor reserves to himself over his Prisoner, is a different thing from his proper Sovereignty: since, by means of the former, the Captive may, at any time, be deprived of his Life, under Pretence of the State of War, from which he seems to be not yet perfectly exempted. Whereas the highest Degree of Sovereign Rule or Dominion, doth not directly include a Right over the Life of the Subject, except on a criminal Account.

VII. But altho' Dominion, which is properly the Right of governing Another's Person, when establish'd with the free Consent of the Subject, cannot, regularly, be transferr'd without his good liking; Men having usually peculiar reasons why they chuse to submit to this Person rather than to any besides; yet in those kinds of Dominion which are grounded upon Force, it hath been ever judg'd allowable for the Sovereign to alienate them by his own sole Will and Act. Yet so long as the Subjects enjoy any Remains of Liberty, we cannot in strictness say, that the Men themselves are thus alienated or made over, but only the Right of governing them, as being join'd with some Use or Advantage. Every Sovereign may indeed, as Mr. Hobbes (3) remarks, say of his Subject hic, meus est, this Man is my Property; yet 'tis in a quite different Sense that we call a Thing our own. For, by the former Expression, I mean no more, than that I and none else have the Right of governing such a Person; yet so as to be my self under some kind of Obligation to him, and not impower'd to exercise that Right upon him, in an unlimited absolute manner. But, on the other side, the Property I claim over a Thing, implies a Right of using, spoiling, and consuming it, to procure my Advantage, or to satisfy my Pleasure; so that what way soever I dispose of it, to say it was my own, shall be a sufficient Excuse. It must be confess'd, that altho' the Law of Humanity doth by no means allow us to extinguish all Marks of primitive Equality in a Slave, who, whatever he may have formerly design'd, is now in a Condition of Peace and Kindness with us, so as to use him in the same manner as a Beast or Inanimate Creature, towards which we cannot stand under any Engagement; yet the barbarous Cruelty of many Nations hath proceeded so far, as to reckon their Slaves in the Number of their Goods and Possessions, and to treat them not in a way of Sovereignty, but of arbitrary Violence; calling them their own in the same Sense as their Cattle (b). Amongst these People, if a Master perform'd the least Good towards his Vassal, he did it purely for his own sake, lest he should suffer by losing him: and the poor Wretch was Pitied only upon account of his Price (c). But all this is not enough to prove what Mr. Hobbes affirms, that Whatsoever the Slave possess'd before his entering on that Condition, doth then fall to his Master: which can be admitted only in this qualified Sense, that as much as the Slave was, before his Captivity, able to get by his Work, so much his Master may now claim, and oblige him

(a) Vid. Grot. l. 3. c. 14.

(1) Ubi Supr. f. 2, 3, 4.

(2) See Lock's Treatise of Civil Government, c. 3. f. 2.

(3) Ubi supra, f. 4.

(b) Thus in Quintilian (Declam. 6.) the poor Man, that by the Chance of War had been made a Captive and Slave, had reason to say, Meipsum perdidit, I have lost my self. And, in the Roman Law, Runagate Slaves are said furtum sui facere, to steal away themselves. L. 47. t. 2. l. 60. D. De Furtis, & L. 6. t. 1. l. 1. C. De Serv. Fugitiv.

(c) Add. Dio. Chrysof. Orat. 15. De Servitute, p. 241. Ed. Morell.

to make good. When a Man voluntarily engageth in Servitude, he may, indeed, deliver up his little Possessions, as well as himself into his Master's Power. But there is no constant Necessity of thus proceeding. And as for those Persons, who in ancient times, sold themselves into Slavery, it is probable, that they retain'd not only the Price given, but likewise their former Goods, at least, in the manner of their Peculium; so as to have themselves the Propriety and Management of them, tho' their Masters had the chief Advantage; or else, that they surrendred them up to their Children, or Aged Parents, whom before they were obliged to maintain. Tho' indeed, the Jewish Doctors held it unlawful for a Man to sell himself, except under Danger of Starving (a). Amongst the Romans, it was a known Trick with Sharpers, to suffer themselves to be Sold, for the sake of going Sharers in the Price: and for their Punishment they were condemn'd to real Servitude. The Sham was this; Caius, suppose, pretended Seius to be his Slave, and accordingly offer'd him to Sale, tho' indeed a Freeman: Seius, being, upon Bargain, to receive a good part of the Gain, consented to the Proceeding. But the Man being once pass'd off to the Customer, and the Price deliver'd; a third Person was suborn'd to claim Seius in the Court as a Freeman, by preferring an Action against the Purchaser; who, (Caius being, in the mean time, slipt out of the way,) was thus doubly gull'd of his Money, and of his Man (b).

If a Man be compell'd to Servitude, by the Right and Course of War, the Goods which are taken with him shall be the Victor's. But those which are not taken with him shall be as if he were naturally Dead: at least till such time as he recovers his Liberty. Thus much is most certain, that what the Slave gets, during his Servitude, he gets for his Master. For to whom any Person fully belongs, to him shall belong whatever that Person can procure or produce. And in this Sense Mr. Hobbes says truly enough, that The Slave hath nothing which he can retain as his own, in Prejudice to his Master's Title. Yet what his Master peculiarly assigns or allows him for Management or Use, he may keep and defend, against his Fellow-Servants; as Victuals, Cloaths, Lodgings, Vails, and the like (r).

VIII. When the same Author (2) adds, that A Slave cannot be injur'd, the Words are not fit to be receiv'd without much favourable allowance, large Abatements and Limitations. The Argument which he makes use of, The Slave having subjected his Will to the Will of his Master, whatever the latter does, is done with the Will of the former, and therefore can be no Injury to him; only proves thus much, that the Slave ought not to complain, whatever Work is enjoin'd him by his Master, provided it lie within the Compass of his Strength, tho' never so contrary to his Inclination: No more than a Subject can pretend he is unjustly dealt with, when an absolute Prince doth not manage things to his good liking. That this Subjection of Will amounts to nothing more, we will elsewhere fully evince. In other Matters, Who will deny but that it is an Injury to a Slave, to set him a Labour above his Ability, to beat him for not performing such an impossible Task, or to deny him necessary Food (c)? The Jews were so Inhuman, as to think themselves not obliged to furnish a Gentile Slave with Cloaths, or Vi&uals, tho', at the same time, they exacted from him the hardest Services, with all imaginable Cruelty (d). The reason of this barbarous Rigour might probably be, because they had themselves suffer'd the like Treatment in Egypt (e). And as for that Command in Leviticus XXV. 43. prohibiting Severity, they confined it to Persons of their own Nation. The Romans in their Customs and Laws, as to the Point of Food, express'd more Kindness (f). It was a noted Saying of Cato's, that To quarrel with Servants about their Bellies, looks scandalously mean (g). Yet, in other respects, the Roman Masters were remarkably Unmerciful. As in selling their Slaves, when grown Aged and unfit to Work; a Practice which Plutarch (h) justly censures, upon this Argument, that It is Natural for Men to express some kind of Clemency and Beneficence, even to Brute Creatures, which have undergone Labours for our Advantage (i). On the whole, Aristotle's reasoning will ever hold good: We owe, says he, some Friendship even to a Slave; not as he stands in that Relation, but on the account of his being a Man. Since there is a common Right, which each Person may claim in regard to every other Person, with whom he is capable of partaking in Laws, or Covenants (k).

As the other Rights of Fathers of Families, hath been moderated and restrain'd by Na-

(a) Vid. Selden. De J. N. & G. Sec. Hebr. l. 6. c. 7. (b) We have an Instance of this Trick in Plautus. Perf. Act. IV. Sc. 4. & 9. (1) V. Plin. L. 5. Epist. 16. (2) Ubi Supr. f. 7. (c) Theano (Epist. 3. in Opusc. Mythol. &c. p. 746.) makes it necessary to the just Use of Servants, that They be neither broken by Labour, nor by Want.

(d) Vid. Selden. de J. N. & G. Sec. Hebr. l. VI. c. 8. (e) Exod. V. 13, 14. (f) Vid. L. 1. t. 6. l. 1. f. 2. D. De his qui sui vel alien. Jur. sunt. & L. 7. t. 6. l. 1. f. 3. C. De Latin. Lib. Toll. (g) Plus. in Cat. M. (h) ibid. (i) Plaut. (Menæchm.) If you are desirous of keeping a Slave securely, You must tie him to You with large Commons. You may easily pin down a Fellow's Nose to a full Table. Juvenal (Sat. 14. v. 125) censures the Miser, that,

Servorum ventres modio castigat iniquo,

With scanty Measure shrinks his Servants Guts.

It was a commendable Decree of Claudius, which Sueton mentions (c. 25.) When certain Persons had exposed their sickly and crazy Slaves, in the Island of Æsculapius, being weary of providing for their Cure; he ordered all those who had been thus exposed, to be declared free, and not to return to their old Masters, if they happened to recover: at the same time Enacting, that such Persons as chose rather to kill their Slaves, than thus to dispose of them, should be held guilty of Murther. We meet with the same Account in Dion. Cassius, l. 60. (k) Ethic. ad Nicom. VIII. 13. Add. Oeconom. l. 1. c. 5: Senec. De Ira, l. 3. c. 4. De Clement. l. 1. c. 18. & Epist. 47. Arrian. Epictet. l. 1. c. 13.

tional Constitutions, so it hath happened to this Authority over their Slaves, which, in different Countries, we find more or less restrain'd. But where it remains absolute and unlimited, we must suppose it not to have been thus appointed by Civil Ordinances, but to have been pass'd by, and left as it formerly stood, before the Erection of Common-wealths. Yet it is observable, that the Laws of some States do encourage the Cruelty of Masters, and impose greater Hardships, on the Slaves, than the Law of Nature permits, under the most absolute Command. We have a famous Instance of this, in the Roman Custom, of dragging the whole Family to Punishment, when the Master happened to be killed: Which Cassius in Tacitus (a) endeavours to Defend, by Arguments drawn from Use and Convenience. The Emperour Adrian, in some Measure, lessen'd this Severity, by Decreeing, that upon such a Misfortune, not all the Slaves should be arraign'd for Murther, but those only who were so near in the House, as to be able to hear and apprehend the Mischiefe (b).

IX. About the Offspring of Slaves, there are two Points of Enquiry, Whether it necessarily follows the Mother? And whether it assumes the same Condition of Servitude? As to the former Question, it is a Rule in the Roman Laws, which holds of Slaves as well as of Beasts, that Partus sequitur ventrem (1), The Birth goes along with the Bearer. This Grotius (c) judgeth not to be altogether consonant to the Law of Nature, in case the Father can, by sufficient Tokens be discovered. 'For, says he, since we may observe, even in some Brute Creatures, that the Sire, as well as the Dam, expresseth a Care for the Young; we may hence infer, that both have an equal Interest in their common Issue: and therefore if the Municipal Laws are silent in this Point, the Father's Claim is as good as the Mother's (d). But we do not think this Argument of any Force; having before made out, that the original Right over the Child, is in the Mother; and only transferr'd to the Father, according to the Tenour of the Matrimonial Covenant.

As for the other Difficulty; since, in a Condition of perfect Slavery, not only the Works but the Persons belong to the Master, their Children will likewise fall under his Dominion, as every thing else which they produce. (e). Now why the Maid's Master should have a better Title, in the Case, than the Man's, there are several Reasons to be given. As first, considering the Life and Familiarity of Slaves, to point out the true Father, might prove a Matter of Difficulty (f). Again, the Mother is, on account of her Burthen, render'd for some time, unfit to perform her usual Work; and consequently brings a Loss and Prejudice to her Master, which ought thus to be repair'd. To which we may add the common Maxim, that Things planted belong to the Proprietor of the Soil (2). If the Master himself have Issue by his Female Slave, the Condition of it shall be such, as either his Pleasure, or the Laws of the Country shall determine. And by them likewise Judgment is to be pass'd on a Child, which was Conceived by the Mother, whilst in a State of Servility, but Born after she had obtain'd her Freedom; or vice versa. Tho' Humanity ever inclines to the favourable side, and declares for the Child's Liberty (g).

It is easy to shew, that the Master doth no Injury to his Slaves Offspring, by dooming it to the same Subjection. For since the Mother hath nothing of her own, 'tis impossible she should maintain the Child, but with her Master's Goods. And in as much as the Master is obliged to furnish such an Infant with Food, and other Necessaries, long before he is capable of making any Requital for his Labour, and since, when he first begins to Work, his Pains are scarce equivalent to his daily Maintenance, he cannot escape Servitude, unless by the Master's particular Dispensation. And this Reason will hold, not only whilst he is supposed to continue, as it were, in the Master's Debt, but ever after; because the Condition, on which the Master first undertook to keep him, was, that he should perform perpetual Service: and to this Condition, he is presumed to have yielded a tacit Consent; especially if it be consider'd, that his very Birth is owing to his Master's Favour; who, by the Right of War, might have put his Parents to death. And as for that Natural Freedom, with which all Men are in Common invested, it then only takes place, when no Act or Agreement, of our selves or others, hath render'd us obnoxious to a State of Inferiority.

And thus we seem to have clearly stated the Case of Children, born to perfect Slaves, such as were Captives in War, and thence reduced to this Condition. As for those of the other Kind, who engage themselves in Servitude by their own free Motion; if there be no express Law or Covenant to the contrary, Equity and common Favour incline to this Resolution concerning them; that the Food of their future Issue is contain'd, or implied in their own Maintenance, which their Master owes them as a just Debt: and consequently their Children are not involv'd in a Necessity of Slavery (a).

(a) Ann. XIV. (b) In Spartian. Add. L. 29. s. 5. D. De SCulto Silaniano Conf. s. Sam. XXVI. i6. The Scythians put out the Eyes of their Slaves, as we are told by Herodotus (Melpom. in the Beginning.) (1) V. C. L. 3. t. 32. l. 7. De rei vindicat. Concerning that of Beasts, see above in B. 4. c. 7. f. 4. (c) L. 2. c. 5. f. 29.

(d) Vid. Edict. Reg. Theodoric. c. 67. (e) Add. Grot ad Exod. XXI. 4. where he shews, that the Marriages of Slaves were disannull'd at the Pleasure of their Masters. Xenophon (Oeconom.) laying it down for one Rule, that Servants should not wed without their Master's Consent, gives this Reason for it; because As those who are Good, do by this means grow more Loving and Faithful, so those who are Bad, improve in Knavery. (f) Vid. Plaut. Casin.

(2) See above in B. 4. c. 7. f. 5. Vid. Instit. L. 1. t. 4. De Ingeniis. (g) Plato thus disposeth of Servile Issue, (LL. l. 11. p. 975. A.) If a Female Slave bear a Child to another Slave, or to a proper Free-man, or to one that hath been set at Liberty, the Child shall belong to her Master. If a Man Slave have Issue by a Free-woman, it shall likewise fall to his Master. If a Master, or a Mistress, be convicted of having a Child by their proper Slave, the Father and the Child shall, in the former Case, be driven to another Country by the Woman; in the latter Case, the Mother and the Child shall be Banish'd by the Magistrates.

X. Let us, in the next place, examine what Inconveniencies do really attend a State of Servitude, which, in the Opinion of most People, passeth for the greatest Misery incident to Mankind, and such, as one ought rather to dye than endure (b). The full Sum and Notion, then, of Personal Servitude, amounts to this; that a Man, for the sake of Food, and the other Necessaries of Life, shall lie under an Obligation to perpetual Labour: which if taken in its true Natural Extent, abstracted from the barbarous Cruelty of some Masters, and the unreasonable Rigour of some Laws, doth not imply any extravagant Degree of Hardship and Severity. For that perpetual Obligation is well requited by a perpetual Certainty of Maintenance, for which those, who work by the Hire, are often at a Loss, either through want of Business, or willful Idleness (c). Some have thought, and not altogether without reason, that the Prohibition of Slavery, amongst Christians, hath chiefly occasion'd that Flood of thieving Vagrants, and sturdy Beggars, which is usually complain'd of. Tho' there are States which have, in a great measure, put a Stop to this Nuisance, by Erecting publick Work-houses, and compelling lazy Rascals to a Life of Honesty and Industry (d).

Mr. Hobbes, in his Book De Cive (e), stating the Difference between Liberty and Servitude, expresseth himself to this Purpose. 'Liberty is nothing else but the Absence of all Impediments of Motion. Those Impediments may be either Natural and External, or Moral and Arbitrary. With regard to the former Kind, Things are said to be more or less Free, as they have more or less Space to move in; as a Man in a wide Prison, is more at Liberty, than Another under close Confinement. And thus a Person may be Free to proceed one way, and not Free to proceed another: as when a Traveller is hindred, by Hedges and Mounds, from diverting out of the Road, into the Corn-fields or Vineyards. This Species of Liberty may be term'd Physical, or Corporal; in which Sense, all Servants and Subjects are Free, who do not suffer Bonds or Imprisonment. Moral Impediments do not absolutely hinder Motion but by Accident; that is, by 'our intervening Choice, whilst we judge it better for us to abstain from such a Motion, than to perform it. Thus a Passenger in a Ship, is not restrain'd from throwing himself headlong into the Sea; yet, if he be in his Senses, he'll think a safe Cabin preferable to a Leap amongst the Waves. In like manner, whatever Penalties are denounc'd against any Action, a Man, that fears not the Danger, sticks not to break the Command. And this is that intrinsic Liberty of the Will, inseparable from it, which Slaves no less than all other kind of Subjects enjoy. We must search therefore, elsewhere to discover a Difference. And first, altho' scarce any Master is so severe, as to hinder his Servant from doing those things, which are necessary for the Preservation of his Life and Health, which are the chief Objects and Pursuits of Human Care; yet Free-men are, for the most part, allow'd to provide for themselves, in these respects, with more Plenty and more Ease, than Persons of that low precarious Condition, whose Constitution often suffers by their hard Fare, and unreasonable Labour (f). Again, Free-men do in this shew their eminent Advantage above Slaves, that they are admitted to the more Honourable Offices in Families and Common-wealths; and that they possess Superfluities in a far Larger Measure. Both which Privileges are wonderfully pleasing, to Men of lofty Spirits and Designs. For the Trouble of Business is soften'd and sweeten'd by the Honour and Credit of an Employment; and to swim in Affluence, is ever esteem'd a most valuable Happiness; as well, because we seem by this means, to be well provided for, against all future Accidents and Occasions; as because our Life will thus pass the more smoothly, and we shall have larger Ability of doing Kindnesses, and gaining a numerous Party by our Benefactions. But the main Distinction of all, is this, that Free Subjects are only engaged to obey the Supreme Power, and the general Laws of the State, and fearing no Punishment, but what is by them particularly denounced, in all other things they follow their own Fancy with full Delight and Satisfaction. But Slaves are obnoxious to the private Commands, and to the coercive Power of their Fellow-Subjects, and are compell'd to bear his Humour, tho' the most froward or imperious; which is the greatest Hardship, by reason of their near Abode, and frequent Intercourse with their Master. And to render their Bondage still more grievous, the publick Laws do seldom afford them Relief against their Master,

(a) Comp. Boecler. ad Grot. l. 2. c. 5. f. 29. (b) Rosar. Persic. Sadi. Cap. 1. It is better to sit down feeding on one's own Bread, than to stand waiting at another's Table in a Golden Girdle (c) Vid. Arrian. Epictet. l. 3. c. 26. p. 257. Lucan Pharf. l. 3. v. 152.

Non tibi, sed domino gravis est, quae servit egestas.

Want in a Slave turns to the Master's loss.

Add. Grot. l. 2. c. 5. f. 27. (d) Add. Bodin. De Repub. l. 1. c. 4. Busbeq. Epist. 3. p. 118. (e) C. IX. f. 9. (f) It is a Saying of Tully (De Orator. l. 2. c. 6.) Mihi liber esse non videtur qui non aliquando nihil agit. I don't look upon him as properly Free, who hath not sometimes the Privilege of doing nothing.

unless in Cases of most barbarous Severity and Cruelty. The more Soft and Gentle a Man's Nature is, the more must he be afflicted under these uneasy Circumstances (a). - We may add, that the Yoak of Servitude, is much the more galling on account of Human Pride; which encourages every Man to think himself worthy of Command; and thus when the Slave esteems himself altogether as fit, if not fitter, to bear Rule than his Master, he fancies that Fortune hath done him a mighty Injury, and desires on any Terms to change his Condition (b).

XI. A Slave may obtain Freedom several ways. As first, if his Master formally Release him; for what Right the Slave before transferr'd on his Master, the Master may restore to him again. Tho' it be customary, in many States, that the Slave, thus Releas'd, shall still yield some kind of Duty and Reverence to his Master (c). In case the Master own'd a Superior, he cannot otherwise bestow Liberty, than in a way consistent with the Rights of that Superior, and with the publick Laws. Secondly, if his Master Renounce and Discard him: which, in Common-wealths, is reckon'd a kind of Punishment; and differs not from Manumission or formal conferring of Liberty, in the effect, but only in the Manner and Design. In both Cases, the Master resigns his Right; but in the former by way of Reward, in the latter by way of Punishment: for that it is a real Grievance and Affliction to lose a Wealthy and Convenient Master, even Free Servants are often sensible. Thirdly, In case a Slave be made a Captive, whether alone or together with his Master, his new Servitude extinguisheth his old. But if the Master be only made a Captive, the Slave falls into the same State and Condition as he would do, were his Master naturally Dead, at least till such time as the Master be restored to Liberty. Fourthly, a Slave may be releas'd Upon Uncertainty of a succeeding Possessor (1); as suppose his Master dies without making over his Right to any Other; because then he is under no Engagement of performing Service.

For no Man is supposed to stand Obliged, unless he can know the Person to whom the Debt is to be paid. But whether a Man, thus releas'd, can claim the Privilege of a Free-Subject, in a Common-wealth, is a Question that the particular Laws and Customs must Determine. Some tell us, that amongst the Turks, the Act of setting a Slave at Liberty will hold good only against his old Master, but that any other Person may again compel him into Service. Another Case, when a Slave may be releas'd, Upon the Uncertainty of a succeeding Possessor; is if his Master dye, either in a Natural or Civil Sense, without an Heir. For tho' the Goods of such a Man are adjudg'd Derelict, and pass to the first Seizer, yet his Slave cannot be forced into a new Service by the same Claim. Things may be laid hold on by any Man, if no other hath already a Right over them: but Persons cannot be challeng'd by any other Title, than what ariseth from their own Consent, or from some antecedent Deed, in which they are concern'd. And therefore, that Right being now extinct, which the Victor by War obtain'd over his Slave, Natural Liberty returns: And this, altho' the Disposition of the Person should make it more proper for him to continue in Servitude; for the Fitness of a Man's Temper, or Inclination can by no means give Another a Right of dragging him into Bondage, nor is it, always, lawful for me to force a Person upon that which is really for his Interest and Advantage. Fifthly, when a Slave, not by way of Punishment (2) or on account of any preceding Offence, is thrown into Irons, or otherwise deprived of Corporal Liberty, he is by this Act releas'd from his former Obligation by Compact; for his Master is supposed to take off his Moral Bonds, by thus imposing Natural. It is inconsistent with a Covenant, not to believe the Party Covenanting, and that Faith cannot be violated which was not given. And hence a Slave under this Treatment may, if Opportunity favour him, without incurring the least Guilt, make his Escape.

(a) Yet there is a great Difference in Masters. In Terence (Eunuch. Act. 3. Scen. 2. v. 33.) a Guest is made from the Slave, that his Master is poor and miserable. But on the other side, as Juvenal observes (Sat. 5. v. 66.)

Maxima quaque domus servis est plena superbis;

Great Families are plagued with haughty Slaves.

(b) In Xenophon (Cyropæd. 1. 8.) Chrysantas seems to establish some such kind of Difference. In the same manner, says he, as we think it reasonable to be obeyed by those under our Command; let us yield a ready Obedience where it is our Duty. Yet there should be this Difference between Subjects (as we are) and Slaves, that whereas these are compelled to their Labour and Service, we ought to perform our Devoirs with Readiness and willing Compliance. Add Dion. Chrysoft. Orat. 14. De Servitude. (c) Lex Wisigoth. l. 5. c. 6. c. 17, & 21. (1) V. Grot. L. 2. c. 9. f. 1. (2) See Dr. Cumberland's De Legib. Naturæ, c. 9. f. 14. See above in B. 3. c. 6. f. 9. and C. 7. f. 5. Our Author has taken this whole Paragraph from Hobbes.

O F T H E

LAW of NATURE

A N D

NATIONS.

B O O K the S E V E N T H.

C H A P. I.

Of the Causes and Motives inducing Men to establish Civil Societies.

AFTER those which are term'd Primary Societies (1), we come now to treat of a Common-wealth †, which is the last and most perfect Form of Society, and that whereby the best Provision is made for the Safety of Mankind, since their Increase. What induced Men to quit their primitive way of living, in separate Families, will be evident, upon our Enquiry into the Nature of Civil Society, and the Disposition of those who compose it. For the better Illustration of which, it will be of great Use to examine the Accounts that are commonly given of this Matter.

II. And here the Generality have recourse to the peculiar Frame of human Nature, by which Man is supposed to be so strongly inclined to a Civil State, that he would neither be willing nor able to live without it. This they confirm by Arguments drawn chiefly from the Miseries of a separate Life; the wearisom Condition of Solitude; the Ends of Speech, which would be lost without Company; the Natural Desire of Conversation; the Advantage of uniting together; and the like: which we have before (a) alledg'd, to prove Man a Sociable Creature. Mr. Hobbes (2), on the contrary, represents Man as a selfish Animal, whose Kindness chiefly terminates in his own Person and Interest (b), and whose Love for Society and other Men is only Secondary, being entertain'd with a View of serving his own Pleasure or Profit by their Assistance (3). For no one (as he argues) was ever determin'd in the Choice he made of another's Company, by the bare Consideration of his being a Man, but by some Prospect of Honour or Advantage from his Acquaintance; preferable to what he could expect from the Acquaintance of any besides. This he endeavours to illustrate, by Deduction from particular Societies. 'They who unite in a Body for the promoting of Traffick, are led to it purely by the Hopes of advancing their Goods more in Conjunction with others, than they could by their private Industry: and whatever disappoints, or puts an end to these Hopes, prevails with all, but Fools or Madmen, to put an end likewise to the Society. So where any are Joint-Commissioners in a publick Office, they contract a sort of Law-Friendship, implying in it more of mutual Fear than Love; and consisting

(1) See above in B. 6. c. 1. f. 1. † Civitas. (a) B. 2. c. 3. f. 15. (2) De Cive, c. 1. f. 2. (b) Isæus, Orat. 2. No Man values others more than himself. Euripides (Medea.) v. 85, 86.

All agree
In this first Maxim of Philofophy,
That Love begins at Home

Isocrates, de Pace, p. 285. Ed. Paris. In my Opinion, 'tis the common Desire of Mankind to advance their own Profit; and their common Labour to possess more than those about them. (3) Here we may observe, as well as in other Places, that our Author agrees with the Sentiments of Mr. Hobbes.

rather in Forms and Ceremonies, than in any sincere Union of Minds, and Combination of Affections. So that such Men may sometimes bandy together in a Party or Faction, for the sake of carrying on some private Ends; but to a generous and dis-interested Friendship they are commonly utter Strangers. Nor will any one of these, if he dare rely on his own single Strength for accomplishing his Aims, ever trouble himself about Associates. Again, when Persons meet upon the common Design of passing the Time away pleasantly, 'tis a mighty Satisfaction that each takes in making himself and the Company merry: in which he cannot succeed without exposing the Faults or Follies of other Men, in Cases suppos'd not to reach himself. (For Prudence would never allow him to censure that in Another, of which he was not himself acquitted in his own Conscience: according to Juvenal's Rule;

Loripidem, rectus derideat, Æthiopem albus (1).

Let him cry filthy Black whose Skin is white;
And Bandy-legs, who treads, himself, upright.)
Mr. Tate.

Therefore, for any one to deride Others is, in effect to declare his Contempt of them in respect of himself, and a certain malicious Design of setting off his own Lustre by their Blemishes. Even with them who keep within the Bounds of innocent Mirth and inoffensive Raillery, there is none but aims more at his own Satisfaction, than that of other Men: nay, such as make a Profession of diverting those about them, mean nothing more than, by shewing their Wit, to recommend themselves to the Company. Besides, most Men have naturally an itching Desire to be examining, censuring and exposing the Words and Actions of others; which, if they have frequent Occasion of gratifying, they look upon it, as a notable Ingredient in the Pleasure and Happiness of Life. And this Humour 'tis a difficult thing to suppress, or keep within Compass, by the Provision made against it by Laws and Penalties (a). Lastly, Suppose some, that pretend to more Knowledge and Wisdom than ordinary, met together to confer about Matters of Learning; each Man is for prescribing his own Opinion to the rest, and finding his Abilities or Authority disputed, resents it as the most Heinous Affront. Whence it plainly appears, that all Society or Intercourse, between such Men, is founded on the Design either of supplying their Wants, or of gratifying their Vanity, or of finding Diversion and Entertainment. The same is asserted upon another Argument, taken from the Definition of the Will, and of what is Good, Honourable and Profitable. Societies are introduced among Men by their Voluntary Consent. Now where there is an Act of the Will, there is of Necessity an Object of that Act; which Object is always some supposed Good to the Agent. For be a thing never so good in it self, yet if it be not so likewise with respect to us, it loses all its Influence on our Powers of acting. Thus, for Instance, did Matters go never so well with the King of Persia, I should not look upon my self as having any Share in his good Fortune. All Good is attended with some Pleasure, either of the Mind alone, or of the Body in Conjunction with it. That of the Mind is either the Passion of Glory, or what may ultimately be resolv'd into such a Principle. That which affects the Body is Profit: which proves all Society to have first commenced upon the Score, either of Profit or Glory: that is, upon account of Love to our selves, exclusive of all Others. However 'tis certain, that Glory cannot be a lasting Foundation of Society for any number of Men; because, in Glory, as in Honour, where the Title to it is General, there is in effect no Title at all: the very Nature of Glory consisting in the Opinion of some Advantage (2), which, upon Comparison, we appear to have above the rest of the World. Neither does our joining in Society with Others give us any farther Occasion of Glory, than our Alliance with Men of great and extraordinary Virtues, may seem to argue a Parity of Worth in our selves. For, otherwise, a Man is valued in Proportion to that Ability he has of supplying his own Wants, without depending on the Aid of his Fellows (3). It must be confessed, that by mutual Assistance the Good of Human Life is highly promoted. Yet to have the Service of other Men, at our Command, would seem much more easy and agreeable: As amongst the other Conveniences and Helps of Living, that is still prized above the rest, which serves to more Purposes, and is purchas'd, or preserv'd with less Cost and Trouble. Whence we may conclude, for certain, that Man would be more inclin'd to Empire than to Society; that is, would much rather command absolutely, being himself exempted from all Obedience, than be oblig'd to any such Exchange of good Offices, as seems to be required in a sociable Life: were it not,

(1) Sat. 2. v. 23. (a) Arrian. Epictet. l. 3. c. 2. 'Suppose in a Dispute who was the chief Philosopher? One should tell You, he heard a judicious Friend say, that You were certainly the Man: Would not Your Heart swell with the ample Testimony, and enlarge its Dimensions at the Blast of Fame? But what if another Ill-natured Critick should give such Instructions as these; Why do You lose Your Time in hearing this Pretender to Wisdom? What does he know? Perhaps he has learnt his first Principles, but I will venture him for getting a Step farther: Why, You'd be Thunder-struck with this mortifying Sound; You'd be put to't to keep Your Colour; and would have only Spirit enough to say, I'll shew him what a Man he has affronted, and what a Philosopher he has under-rated. Add Charron. de la Sageſſe, l. 1. c. 36. f. 6. (2) See B. 8. c. 4. f. 11. (3) See the History of Calvisius Sabinus in Seneca's Epist. 27.

that he is restrain'd from acting after such an arbitrary manner, by the Danger which he apprehends from so violent Resolutions (a).

III. But altho' it cannot from hence be concluded, (as we have before observ'd (1),) that Man is not by Nature a sociable Creature; yet allowing him a Natural Desire of Society, since this may be gratified by the primary Societies, already described, this infers not his Desire of Civil Society, any more than his general Love of Employment bespeaks his Affection for that of a Scholar, in particular (b). This is what Mr. Hobbes proves in the following manner. Civil Society consists not in a bare Assembly of Men; but in an Assembly combined together by mutual Leagues and Covenants. The Force of these Covenants, ignorant People and Infants do not at all apprehend; nor is their Use discover'd by those, who never felt the Mischief of living without them. So that the former are utterly incapable of Instituting a Civil State, as being ignorant of its Nature: the latter are wholly regardless of it, as not being any way sensible of its Benefit; or at best they live under it in a manner, that testifies no Esteem of its Excellence and Worth. And therefore all Men, being born Infants, are, by Birth, unqualified for Civil Society, and so a great Number of them remain, to their dying Day: and the rest are formed and adapted to it, by the Force of Discipline, not of Nature. Neither is the Credit of this Doctrine shaken by that known Maxim of Aristotle, that Man is Born, or is by Nature, a Political Creature. For, sometimes, affirming a thing to be such or such by Nature, we denote it to be actually endow'd with some Quality, without any antecedent Act of his own, or of any One else, by which the Quality might be introduced. In which Sense; a Fish is endued with a Natural Faculty of Swimming, a Bird of Flying, and an Oak of Bearing Acorns. Sometimes, the same Expression signifies a Fitness in the Thing, to receive some Perfection by Culture and Discipline; the Reception of which Nature seems to intend, or at least to approve, as agreeable, or, however, no ways repugnant to its Temper and Frame. Thus a Horse has the Natural Faculty of prancing, which an Ass has not; a Parrot of prating; a Field of bearing Corn, and a Hill Vines; a Man of discouraging, and of learning divers Arts and Sciences:

In which Sense, also, we shall hereafter demonstrate Him to be a Political Creature, notwithstanding his being born an Infant: since we are wont to take our Measure of what does, or does not, agree to Man by Nature, from what he appears to be in his grown Estate, and under his full Use of Reason (c) (2). As to Aristotle's Expression, we must note, that he useth the Words, ζῷον πολιτικόν, in the larger sense, for a Sociable Creature, not strictly for such an one as is immediately bent upon Civil Society, and exactly disposed and fitted for it. Thus he says in the same Work (d), that a Man is by Nature a Political Creature, and therefore would desire the Company of Others, though he did not stand in need of their Assistance. But now his Affection, for Civil Government, can never be inferr'd from the bare Desire of Company; since this, as was observ'd, may be equally gratified by Primary Societies, such as may well be suppos'd without admitting a Common-wealth. So again, the Philosopher (e) proves Man to be a Political Creature from the Reasons of Speech, which else had been assign'd him to no Purpose: whereas, the Use of Speech is not confined to a Common-wealth; Men having lived and conversed together, long before the Institution of Government. In like manner, is to be understood that Passage in his first Book of Ethics to Nicomachus (f): That Good may deserve the Name of Perfect, which appears to be Sufficient; and that we call Sufficient, which answers not only to the Wants of a single Man in a solitary Life, but those of our Parents, our Wife, our Children, our Friends and Fellow-subjects: Ἐπειδὴ οὐσιν πολιτικῶς ἐπιθεωρεῖται, Because Man is by Nature a Political Creature. And yet, there is room for the several Relations of Parents, Children, Wife and Friends, without supposing a Common-wealth.

IV. For the clearing up of this whole Matter, we ought to consider, what that Condition is which Men enter into, upon their erecting a Civil State; what Qualities they are which may entitle them to the Name of Political Creatures; and, Lastly, what there is in their Frame and Constitution which seems (if we may so speak,) to indispose them for a Civil Life. First then, whoever enters into a Community, divests himself of his natural Freedom, and puts himself under Government, which,

(a) Arrian. Epictet. l. 3 c. 21. 'No Creature is engaged with so deep an Affection to another's Person, as to his own Profit: whatever stands in the way of this, whether Father, or Brother, or Son, or Lover or Beloved, he hates and rejects with Curfes and Scorn. For so has Nature appointed, that the strongest Charm should be our own Interest. This is our Father, our Brother, our Kinsman, our GOD. Wherefore if we refer to one and the same End our Profit, our Piety, our Honesty, our Country, our Parents and our Friends; all are secured. But if we measure our Profit by one Standard; and our Friends, our Country, our Relations, and our Justice it self by another; in this Case, Profit turns the Scale, and all other Considerations sink and are out-weighed. For I and Mine, are words which never fail to draw the Animal Nature after their Charm. Did you never observe (says he a little before) Whelps playing and fawning upon each other as the very Patterns of Love and Affection? But would you know how long-lived this Endearment is? The Experiment will cost you no more than a Bone. Tully, Off. 3. That every Man should procure the Necessities of Life, for himself rather than any besides, is an allow'd Privilege, and such as Nature inclineth does by no Means oppose. (1) B. 2. c. 2. f. 7, &c. and C. 3. f. 16, &c. (b) Aristotle, ad Nicom. l. 8. c. 14. Man may be rather term'd a Conjugal Animal, than a Civil: as a Family, in Necessity as well as in Time, is antecedent to a Common-wealth; and as the Propagation of Race, is the most common Labour of Animate Beings. Vid. Digby de Origine Mundi, c. 9. f. 8, &c. (c) Vid. Cumberland de LL. Nat. c. 2. f. 2. (2) See Mr. Barbeyrac's Third Note upon this Section. (d) L. 3. c. 8. p. 345 (e) Polit. l. 1. c. 2. (f) C. 5.

amongst other things, comprehends the Power of Life and Death over him; together, with Authority to enjoyn him some things, to which he has an utter Aversion, and to prohibit others, for which he may have as strong an Inclination: so that 'tis possible he may often, in Obedience to this Authority, be oblig'd to sacrifice his private Good to that of the publick (1). Whereas, were Man to follow his Natural Inclinations, he would be subject to no Body, but live wholly at his Discretion, and make his own private Satisfaction and Interest the Scope of all his Actions. Some weighty Motives there must needs have been, and such as amounted almost to Necessity, that could persuade him to overcome these so very footing Desires. Man, therefore, first embraced Civil Society, not as led to it by the Biass of Nature, but as driven by the Fear of greater Evils. The name of Political Creatures, or good Members of a State, may be truly applied to those who promote the Common Welfare to the utmost of their Power, and freely prefer it to any private Consideration, nay and even measure their private Good by the Relation it bears to that of the Publick; and, lastly, at all times demean themselves, with Kindness and Courtesy to their Fellow-subjects (a). But no one, now, is so little acquainted with Human Nature, as not to know how ill-qualified the Generality are for discharging such a Part: it being evident, that very few do acquit themselves in all Points of their Duty; that Nothing, besides the Fear of Punishment, could keep the greater Number in any tolerable Order; and that very many continue all their Life long, Impolitick Animals, or, which is the same thing, Evil Subjects. Nay, it may be affirm'd, that no Creature is more fierce and unruly than Man, or expos'd to more Failings, which tend to the Disturbance of Society. Beasts sometimes contend about their Food; and then 'tis only in the Case of Scarcity: sometimes, again, they enter the Lists, at the Instigation of their Lust, which yet has only its Seasons of returning. But be they of never so savage a Disposition, they seldom express it against their own Kind. Whereas Men quarrel with Men; not only as excited by the Stings of Hunger, and by a Lust so vigorous as never to be out of Season; but by other Vices and Passions, unknown to Beasts, and often repugnant in Nature one to the other. Of these, the chief are an endless Thirst after Things superfluous (b), and Ambition, the most pernicious of all Evils; of which, as no Creature seems to have any Sense, excepting Man; so He has the most lively and tender Sense imaginable: while, in the mean time, 'tis the Privilege of Brutes to be moved at nothing, but bodily Sufferings. Add to this, that quick Resentment of Injuries, and eager Desire of Revenge; an Evil less common and less active in Brutes. And, what is worst of all; Men pursue the Ruine of each other, with so much Industry, that of all the Mischiefs to which Human Condition lies open, the most Part are owing to their own Malice. Nor may it unreasonably be ascribed to the peculiar Care of Divine Providence, that Men advance to Maturity so much slower than Beasts; to the End that they may, by length of time, be in some measure broken of their fierceness and haughtiness of Temper, and brought to an Accommodation with different Dispositions. Otherwise, supposing Man to be put immediately in Possession of his Full Strength, the Forest could shew nothing so untractable (c). What Mr. Hobbes (d) observes, concerning the Genius of Mankind, is not impertinent to our present Argument: that All have a restless Desire after Power; not because they really wish to be advancing still to higher Degrees of Command, or that they may not, in their own Temper, be satisfied with a moderate Portion of it; but because they have no way of being secured in the Possession of what they already enjoy, but by farther Acquisitions: the old Stock being ever spending, and therefore ever requiring new Supplies. And this End being accomplish'd, there again succeeds a fresh Desire, either of Fame by new Conquests, or of Ease and sensual Pleasure. Moreover, Competition for Riches, Honour, Command, or any Prerogative and Power above Others, inclines to Contention, Enmity and War: the way by which any one Competitor may arrive at his Hopes, lying through the Death or Defeat of his Rival. It may farther be urged, that whereas in Brutes of all Kinds, there appears visibly a great Affinity of Desires and Propensions; with us, there is not more Diversity of Men, than there is of Opinions and ways of living; each of which is cry'd up, with a wonderful Perverseness, by the several Patrons of them, in Preference to all besides: a Thing sufficient, of it self, to make Disturbances in any Multitude, who are to unite in a

(1) Potest autem, quod inutile Reipublicæ sit, id cuiquam Civis utile esse? Can a good Citizen think that advantageous to Himself, which is prejudicial to the State? (a) Arrian. Epictet. 1. 2. c. 10. What then is the Duty of a good Citizen? That he measure nothing with respect to his own private Advantage; that he consult about nothing, as if released and disfranchis'd from the rest of his Kind. But, that he so behave himself, as the Hand or Foot, if they were endued with Reason, and understood the Order of Nature, would never entertain any other Motion or Desire, than what was directed to the Good of the whole Body. Herodotus observes of the Persians (Clio.) That those who Sacrificed, amongst them, did not put up Petitions for themselves, and their own private Happiness; but in behalf of the whole Nation, and of the King, in chief. (b) Salust (Catalin.) 'The Love of Money, and, afterwards, that of Empire were the Source of all our Mischiefs. Covetousness subverted Fidelity, Probity, and other worthy Endowments of Soul; introducing, in their stead, Pride, Cruelty, Profaneness, together with a common Sale and Market of all things. Ambition engaged its numerous Votaries to put up false Colours; to have one thing in their Mouth, and another in their Mind; to measure Friendships and Enmities, not by Reality, but by Advantage; and to endeavour more the keeping a good Face, than an honest Heart. (c) See Proverbs XIII. 24. XXIII. 13, 14. Eccclus. XXX. 1, &c. 12. (d) Leviath. C. XI

Society (a). So far it is therefore from true, that Man is by Nature a Political Creature, or by Birth is fitted for the Discharge of Civil Duties; that 'tis as much as can be done, to train up some few, by long Discipline, to a tolerable Behaviour in this Respect (b). Not to mention the Vices of the vulgar Sort, (who are the greater Part of Mankind,) so often enlarged upon by other Authors (c). So that a thorough Knowledge of Human Malice and Fraud, in order to the avoiding and disappointing them, makes up a very considerable Part of Civil Prudence (d). From what has been said, may be sufficiently gather'd the Sense and Import of this Expression, that Man is by Nature a Political Creature: by which is meant, not that all and each of us are fitted, by Nature, for sustaining the Part of good Citizens; but that some, at least, by the Force of Instruction and Discipline, may be so formed as to acquit themselves well, under that Character; and that since Men have increas'd and multiplied, Civil Societies are absolutely necessary to their Safety; for which as they are, by a Natural Principle, engaged to provide, so they have the same Natural Obligation to enter into Regular States and Governments, the chief Benefit of which Institutions is, the Habitual Exercise of an Orderly, Decent and Friendly Life.

V. Hornius (e) calls a Common-wealth the Work of Nature, and accounts for its Rise in a Natural way: As, that the first Pair, from whom descended the whole Race of Mankind, were united by the Bonds of Conjugal Love, and their Children by those of Natural Affection, to them and to each other: that these Engagements founded a Family, which by constant Increase from new Births, with that Love of Society, implanted in Men by Nature, and improved by Neighbourhood and Alliance, at length furnish'd out a Civil State: it being absurd and senseless to imagine, that Men were once dispers'd in Woods and Deserts, and there led a Vagabond Life like the Brutes about them. But admitting the Origine of Common-wealths, according to this Natural Account;

yet to exclude all Compacts, and all other Motives from a Share in their Institution, is no less irrational than to say, that because a Seed grows up to a Tree, and because a Tree is cut out into Planks and Beams, and these, rightly framed and compacted together, compose a Ship, therefore a Ship is the Work and Product of Nature; without allowing the Labour of the Artificer, or any other particular Cause, to conspire in erecting that sort of Fabrick. We, therefore readily acknowledge it for false and fabulous, whatever is fancied of a great Number of Men first assembled together, then dispers'd abroad into Woods and Deserts, and after that reunited into one Common-wealth. But then their Opinion is no better grounded, who suppose Mankind, from the primitive Couple, or from four Families after the Deluge, to have fallen immediately into the Order of Civil State. For, however a Father might keep his Children under his Care, and the same common Roof, till such time as they came to Years of Maturity; yet since, in those first Ages of the World, they lived altogether on Tillage and Pasturage, when Children were married, the Father had no Reason to detain them longer. On the contrary, we are inform'd by Scripture, that it was usual for them, when arrived at an Age proper for taking the Care of a Family upon them, to separate and chuse out new Habitations: especially while the World was yet unstock'd, and while the Pleasantry of the Scene invited them to distant Quarters (f). Nor was it peculiar to Sicily of Old, to have such Inhabitants as Homer (g) describes;

Τῶσιν δ' ἔτ' ἀρχαί, &c.——

*No Councils they, nor Courts of Justice hold;
But on some Mountain's Top in Caves grow old.
Each o'er his Wife and Children Empire bears;
And none beyond his Cave extends his Cares.*

There is, it is granted, a Natural Affection between Brethren; yet not such as excludes their Desire of living rather upon the Level, than

(a) Euripid. (Phœnis. v. 502, &c.)

If what is Good, or Beauteous always bore
The same conspicuous Marks, to Mortal Eyes, Men would be Friends, the World a peaceful Scene.
But Name and Species only join us now;
Differing in things, and clashing in Desires.

(b) Plato de LL. l. 6. p. 864. Ed. Weck. We affirm Man to be a mild and tractable Creature. And indeed, if, besides the Happiness of Nature and Birth, He obtains the Benefit of Good Institution, He becomes most Gentle, Lowly and Divine. But upon ill insufficient Education, he grows the fiercest Animal of all that the Earth breeds. Arist. Pol. l. 1. c. 2. in fin. As Man, if rightly perfected, is the best and noblest of living Creatures, so, if estranged from Law and Justice and Virtue, he is the worst and most contemptible. Idem, ad Nicom. l. 2. c. 1. in fin. 'Tis not an indifferent Matter whether a Person has been thus or thus accusom'd from his Youth: but rather 'tis a Point of the greatest Consequence, and upon which all depends. Ibid. l. 7. c. 7. in fin. A Man, left to himself, would do a thousand times more Mischief than a Beast. Add. Senec. Epist. 103. Polyb. l. 17. c. 13. As Men exceed other Creatures in Craft and Cunning, so they may, many ways render themselves the vilest of all that breath. Other Animals being govern'd wholly by bodily Pleasure, are by that alone led into Failings and Disorders: but Mankind, who are distracted with Variety of Opinions, offend as often through Perverseness of Judgment, or Rashness of Thought, as through Frailty and Imperfection of Nature. Lactantius de Ira Dei, c. 12. What could be more fierce and cruel than Man, if living under no Restraint of a Superior, he might evade or despise the Authority of Laws? Plutarch in Cicer. p. 884. D. Ed. Weck. Were Power added to Passion and Inclination, Man would be the wildest thing living.

(c) Add. Mornay de Vir. Relig. Christiana, c. 16. (d) See Bacon's Adv. of Learning, B. 8. c. 2. (e) De Civitate, l. 1. c. 4. f. 6. (f) See Genes. XIII. 5, 6, 9. (g) Odyss. L. 9. v. 113, &c.

with

with any Distinctions of Superiority amongst them: Neither such as does convince us, that their Friendship could not be Long-lived enough, supposing their Effects to be distinct and separate. So that, according to this Account, the Propagation of Mankind must rather tend to the increasing their Division, than to the uniting them in Society. But when the wiser Part began to consider, that, by their assembling into one Body, the Inconveniencies attending separate Families might be removed, they hereupon thought it not sufficient to agree together upon entering upon the same Covenant, and submitting to the same common Power, unless, for their better Convenience and Security, they likewise agreed to contract their Dwellings, and, for the future, confine them to the same Place. And, in this Sense, are we to interpret those Authors, who suppose Men, from being dispers'd about in the Woods, to have been afterwards assembled and united together by the first Founders of Civil Government.

VI. Some make the Wants and Necessities of Men to be the principal Cause of their framing Political Societies; upon a Prospect of living in better Fashion and greater Plenty, when united together, than they could possibly do in a Condition of Solitude. In which Account, thus much is certain, that were Men left alone, each to shift for himself, destitute of all Help from others, no Creatures could be more exquisitely miserable. On the other side, 'tis undeniable, that upon the Institution of Common-wealths, Human Life grew refined to a Degree of Luxury and Delicacy (a). But notwithstanding this, it seems evident to us, that Necessity was not the sole, or the principal Cause of Common-wealths, howsoever Plato (b) may favour that Opinion: Since the Arts of making Wine, of providing Cloaths, and of turning the Ground to Pasture and Tillage, being even then known, while Men lived as yet in separate independent Families; there seems already to have been a sufficient Provision made for all the Necessaries of Life (c). For let us suppose a Father of a Family possess'd of a large Portion of Land, and well stock'd with Servants and Cattel, what could such an one want for his Support? What, at least, that might not be supplied by the means of Commerce (d)? In like manner, as it is now usual, for different Nations, to import from each other any sort of Commodities, for Use and Pleasure; without thinking it necessary, for that Purpose, to unite together under the same Government and Constitution. And Instances may be given of People, living for many Ages, under Civil Establishments, in a Condition no way superior, for Plenty and Abundance to that of the Fathers of Families in ancient Time (e). So that all that mighty Plenty and Luxury, which now reigns in some Parts of the World, seems to derive its Origine from great Cities, rather than from Common-wealths. Because, in the Cities, the meaner People, having no Income from Cattel or Land, are forced, (for a Livelihood,) upon improving divers Arts and Inventions. Which, likewise, are not a little promoted by a Sort of Vanity, common to great Towns, of vying one with the other in Dress and Finery, and thereby of running out into Extravagance; for the Support of which more Trades are intended, than for the Relief of Man's real Necessities: which yet Civil Life could very contentedly be without (1).

VII. Therefore the true and leading Cause, why the Fathers of Families would consent to resign up their Natural Liberty, and to form a Common-wealth, was thereby to guard themselves against those Injuries, which one Man was in Danger of sustaining from another (2). For, as nothing, next to Almighty God, can be more beneficial to Man than Man himself: so nothing is able to work him greater Mischief; as Cicero shews at large in his second Book of Offices, C. 5. &c. Now Man being infested with various Evils, has found out for each, a proper Remedy. Sickness and Disease, he prevents or removes by the Succours of Physick; Hunger, by tilling and manuring the Ground; against the Severities of Weather he is defended by Houses, Cloaths and Fire; and by Weapons or Stratagems, against the Fury of Wild-Beasts. But for redress of those Evils, which Men, at the Suggestion of depraved Nature, delight to bring upon each other, they had recourse to themselves, as the surest Defence, by joining together in one

(a) Lactantius, de Opif. Dei, c. 4. n. 20, 21. If each Man alone had sufficient Strength to ward off all Dangers, and stood in need of no Assistant; what Society would there be in the World? What mutual Reverence or Respect? What Order? What Reason? What Humanity? What would be more vile than Man? What more extravagant? What more fierce and cruel? But now while each single Person is poor and indigent, and cannot subsist without the Help of his Fellows, All desire Society for Ornament and Defence of common Life. (b) De Repub. l. 2. p. 598, &c. Ed. Wech. (c) See Genes. XIII. 2. XXIV. 35. (d) Vid. Cornel. Nep. Attic. c. 13. (e) Who therefore might make the same Boast with him in Valerius Flaccus, l. 5.

Nec mania nobis
Vestra placent, feror Arctois nam liber in arvis, Cuncta tenens mecum: omnis amor jaciturag; plaustri
Sola; nec hac longum victor potiere rapina:
At epule quodcumque pecus, quodcumque ferarum.

I your Imprisonment of Walls disdain,
Who live a Free-man on our Northern Plain.
Of little Wealth I boast, but what I wear;
And if the Plough goes well, shall never die with Care.
No other Prize can tempt a Victor's Toil;
Nor shall this long remain an envied Spoil.
Nature purveys for me; the fiercest Beast
True Venison yields, and every Flock a Feast.

(1) See our Author's Dissertation, De Statu Hominum Naturali, §. 6. upon this Section.

(2) See Mr. Barbryns's First Note Body,

Body, and erecting a Civil Society (a). And when they were once reduced to such Order, as to be secure from mutual Injury, they must, of course, enjoy a greater Share of those Benefits, which it was in their Power to confer upon each other (1). And this Account is seconded, by those who deduce the Original of Commonwealths from Fear. By which we are not to understand the violent Disorder of one in a Fright and Consternation; but only a wary Provision against future Evils. Of which Aristophanes (b) rightly observes; ἡ ἐπιφοβία πάντα, Caution preserves all things. And by this Exposition of the word Fear, we avoid all the Force of what is objected, that, had Men been really afraid of each other, they would have been so far from uniting together in a Civil State, that they would not have endured each other's Sight, but, One flying this way and Another that, would hereby have remain'd in a perpetual Separation. As if Fear, implied in it nothing but Flight, and not also, Diffidence, Suspicion, and Caution. Nay, this is one Property of being afraid, the providing against the probable Grounds of Fear. Thus, going to sleep we shut the Doors, for fear of Thieves; when they are shut, our Apprehension is over. We go armed in a Journey for fear of Robbers; and, being well armed, fear no more. To which Purpose Thucydides (c) observes, that the Custom of wearing Swords, which was generally receiv'd in the barbarous Nations, continued likewise among some People of Greece, by the Necessity of ancient Times, when, as yet, they had no Walls to defend them from Enemies abroad, and could not meet together without some Fears and Jealousies at Home. Remarkable likewise is that Speech of Pyrrhus to the Athenians, recorded by Plutarch in his Life; when being permitted to enter the City, and offer Sacrifice to Minerva, upon his returning thence, He said, 'That for his part, He retain'd a grateful Sense of their Kindness and the Confidence they reposed in Him; but advised them, Not to open their Gates, if they were wise, to any King for the future. Civil Communities, even in the times of profoundest Peace, do yet fortify their Towns, guard their Frontiers with Troops, and fill their Grainaries with Warlike Stores; all which would be an unnecessary Expence, did not they apprehend some Danger from their Neighbours: of whom, after these Precautions, they are no longer afraid. So that 'tis the Natural Effect of Fear, to find out Remedies against it self. And, in like manner, because Men were afraid of each other, they supplied each other with Relief, by joining in a Civil State. Of the Force and Efficacy of which, those Authors seem to have a deep Sense, who affirm, that, In Case there were no Courts of Justice in the World, Men would destroy and devour each other (d). And indeed, that Men have abundant reason to apprehend and fence against mutual Danger, we have, in another place (e)(2), fully made out: Which is no less true for what Hornius objects, That the Fathers of Families, for many Ages, lived together on Terms of Equality; without the fear of any such pretended Invasion on their Rights: and that Ambition was but of a late Growth amongst Men; coming in after the Institution of Commonwealths, and then giving occasion to the Distinctions of Honour and Dignity. As if it were not Ambition which occasioned the first Murther in the World; when Cain was enraged, that his Brother's Offering should find more Acceptance with God than his own (3)! Besides, Ambition is but one Root of those Evils, which spring, in like manner, from Perverseness of Temper, and Competition of Desires. Of which, even in those plain and primitive Ages, the former produced that savage and brutish Fierceness in the Race of the Giants; the latter occasioned Strife and Dissention betwixt the nearest Relations (f). In the Breasts of Kings, Ambition ('tis true) reigns with greater Violence, and transports them to Actions more bloody and cruel: yet we may trace some Footsteps of the same Passion in Shepherds and Rusticks, Hornius (g) proceeds to observe, That, in those early times, to provoke others with Words or Blows, would have proclaim'd a Man's Folly as well as his Malice: because, this would have given a Right to the Party, thus provoked, to take the first Opportunity of killing him. Again, there could be no Hopes of Booty amongst People, as yet unacquainted with Wealth, and possessing no other Stores but those of Fruits, plenty of which was to be had in other places, with little Pains and no Danger. As if the Prospect but of moderate Gains were not, with bad Men, Temptation enough to do wickedly! Or as if Thefts and Robberies were not as common of Old, as they are at this Day, amongst People living wholly on Grasing and Tillage! Not to say, that the Occasion of founding Commonwealths, was not only to protect Men from Robberies, but also from any Injuries, which they might be capable of offering or receiving. What he afterwards affirms is very true; That, Let the Suspicions of Another's mischievous Design be never so well grounded; this will not justify an Attempt upon him, by

(a) The Persians took the true way of demonstrating this; who had a Custom, upon the Death of their King, to live the five ensuing Days without any Law; to the end, That finding, by Experience, the miserable Effects of Anarchy, the Slaughter, the Rapine, and if there be any thing worse, that accompanied such a Condition, they might be engaged in a firmer Allegiance to their Sovereign for the future, Sext. Empir. adv. Mathem. l. 2. p. 70. Ed. Genev. To the same Purpose may be applied some of the Reasons which, according to the Account of Herodotus, B. 1. induced the Medes, living before in independent Villages, to invest Deiox with the Regal Authority over them. (1) The Remainder of this Sect. is taken from our Author's Abridg. de Off. Hom. & Civ. l. 2. c. 5. f. 7. (b) In Avibus, p. 532. Ed. Lug. Bar.

(c) L. 1. (d) Comp. Hobbes de Cive, l. 1. f. 2. (e) B. 2. c. 2. f. 6, 12. (2) V. Grot. l. 1. c. 4. f. 4. n. 2.

(3) Genes. IV. 4, &c. (f) See Genes. XIII. 7. XXVI. 15, 20, 21. (g) Vid. Virg. Eclog. 3. v. 25, &c. Eclog. 7. Theocrit. Idyll. 5. & 8.

way of Prevention. And that Right and Power of All over All, with which Mr. Hobbes invests Mankind in his State of Nature, ought to be extended no farther than right Reason allows of; amounting only to this Sense, that Man, in a State of Natural Liberty, has a Right to employ against all Persons, all such means for his Preservation, as Reason judges necessary for him to use, and dangerous to let alone. Wherefore to carry our Caution farther than right Reason shall prescribe, is, doubtless, a Breach of the Law of Nature. So that he, who on any uncertain Fears, kills the Person he is afraid of, when he might, as conveniently, have escaped from him, must be adjudged guilty by the said Law. Whence they appear to be certainly in the wrong, who imagine that this Principle justifies Rapines and Robberies, upon such as are not open and profess'd Enemies. For Robbery and Rapine plainly denote such Means, as sound Reason can never judge necessary to a Man's Preservation; but such as are rather made use of to serve the Ends of Avarice and Cruelty: it being never alledg'd, in Plea for Robbers, that they spoil Men of their Goods, in their own Defence. That other Expression seems very ridiculous; Supposing Hatred and Diffidence to have reign'd never so much amongst Men; yet this could never be said to have happen'd purely for the sake of Common-wealths: for Men did not therefore hate or distrust one another, purposely that they might constitute a Civil State; but they therefore constituted a Civil State, because they distrusted or hated one another. And tho' we should allow as fully as can be desired, that while the Hatred of one Person extended only to some few, who were disagreeable to him, he might, at the same time, love and favour all Others, or, at least, not be enraged against them; yet if each Man had but his single Foe, this alone were enough to fill the World with Hatred and Dissention. 'Tis therefore a vain Attempt, to ascribe the Original of Communities, to The Accidents of Neighbourhood, and the Natural Increase of Mankind by Generation. This last, indeed, affords a constant Supply, whence Civil Bodies are stock'd and maintain'd: in like manner, the former might perhaps give Occasion for Neighbours to join themselves to the same Community, rather than to divide. But the Cause which first moved Men to establish Societies, is, by no means, deducible from these Grounds.

VIII. Nor has any One reason to imagine, that a bare Reverence of the Law of Nature, which prohibits indifferently all sorts of Injuries, could ever have been able to secure the whole Body of Mankind, (as consider'd in a State of Natural Independency,) from mutual Prejudice. Some there are (it must be confess'd,) with whom Honour, Justice, Faith and Innocence are so much in esteem, that they would not violate these Rules, tho' sure of Impunity. Many also may be well represented by that Character which we find in Aristotle (a); Who refrain from Injury upon a Principle of Fear; (it being difficult to wrong others, without being likewise wrong'd by others:) and who are therefore unwilling either to do Wrong or to receive it (1). Now, were all Men of this Temper, the Establishment of Civil Communities might not appear so very necessary a Work. But, on the contrary, what Numbers are there, who make light of breaking through the most sacred Ties of Duty, whenever invited to injure Others by the Prospect of some Gain to themselves, and the Hopes of escaping, by Force or Fraud, from the Hands of the injured Parties? Not to distrust such Men as these, would be Voluntarily to expose our selves to their Wickedness and Insolence. Parum tuta per se ipsa probitas est, says Sallust (b): Unguarded Honesty is but an undefensible Hold. But as it is the part of Prudence, to keep a watchful Eye on bad Men, and to make an early Provision against their Attempts; so is that Assertion of Mr. Hobbes (c) unreasonably harsh, wherein he affirms, That the Hope of any Man's Security and Preservation consists in his being able, by his own Strength and Cunning, either openly or secretly, to be before-hand with his Neighbour in Mischief. Indeed the Generality of Men are so far corrupted, that wheresoever there is Appearance of greater Advantage from the Transgression of Laws, than from the Observation of them, they make no Scruple to transgress them: According to that of Plato (d); Whoever conceives it in his Power to do unjustly, readily does so: each Person concluding Injustice to make much more for his private Interest, than Justice could do. Yet to reproach all Mankind with this perverse Disposition, is carrying the Point and the Censure too far. Nay, by the Confession of Mr. Hobbes himself (2), some modest Natures there are in the World, that do not assume to themselves more than they leave to others; always having their Eye on that Rule, To do as they would be done by. How any one, upon Pretence of providing for his own Security, could rush upon the Oppression and Ruine of such innocent and excellent Persons, I must, for my part, own my self at a loss to understand. Nor can it ever be, that right Reason should warrant my going to kill or oppress another, of whose Designs to do me hurt I have not had very particular Indications: there being, till then, many better ways left open of composing Matters amicably. For, as to that Pravity of Nature and Disposition, which is common to the whole Race of Men, and which therefore admits of various Degrees, we cannot, on the account of it alone, conclude a Man an open and profess'd Enemy.

(a) Ad Nicomach. l. 4. c. 3. p. 46. C. Ed. Paris.

(b) Adherbal. in Bell. Jugurth.

(c) De Civ. c. 5. f. 27.

(1) This Passage is not to the purpose, respecting only Covetousness; Our Author has express'd himself more to the point, in his Abridgment De Officio Hom. c. 1. 2. c. 5. f. 8.

(2) De Civ. c. 5. f. 1.

(d) De Repub. l. 2. p. 593. Ed. Wash.

'Tis own'd, therefore, that as to the Discharge of Natural Duties from Others to me, I cannot have it, in a State of Nature, so well secured, as under Civil Government: yet neither is it left in so miserable an Uncertainty, as that hereby I must be oblig'd, or may be permitted, to treat All Men in a hostile Manner. For, while I find my own Strength to be equal or superior to another Man's, and while that Man, by Word or Deed, testifies a Desire of living peaceably with me, and by real Proofs confirms the Truth and Sincerity of that Desire; What reason have I to account him my Enemy? Or, How can the bare Suspicion, that all this Friendship is but Counterfeit, or, that, in time, he may come to alter his Mind, give me Authority to assault him by way of Prevention? And the Truth of this will appear more evidently, if we look upon the Practice of entire and independent States and Governments, which are, with regard to each other, in a State of Nature. Here all Men agree in judging it a Crime for one Nation, by secret Stratagem or open Force, to Attack another, (as yet not known by any Exchange of good or bad Offices, nor engaged in Friendship and Alliance by Covenant or overt Act,) only because there is no common Power presiding over both, by which the other State, if attempting any injurious Designs, might be restrain'd and punish'd. Which clearly proves against Mr. Hobbes (1), that the Law of Nature is not altogether dumb even in a State of Nature: tho' indeed there is much greater Security of having this Law obey'd, under Civil Government; where the Power of the Magistrate is at hand, to compel those who are wanting in returns of Kindness and Peace. But, notwithstanding all this, thus much Prudence suggests to us, that we should not only provide, by a timely Defence, against the open and profess'd Malice of Wicked Men; but that we should likewise esteem the Goodness of Others, not infallible and immutable. And, to answer all these Ends, no such universal Safe-guard, as Civil Society, could be invented or conceiv'd.

IX. Moreover, altho' the Law of Nature direct us, in case any Difference arise, to adjust it amicably amongst our selves, or refer it to the Arbitration of Others; yet neither thus would the common Peace be sufficiently secured. For with the same Ease, that we dispensed with our selves, in breaking the other Natural Rules, we might also slight this of appealing to Arbitrators, and so have immediate recourse to Arms. Besides, supposing two Men, had by Consent, referr'd their Differences to a third Person; yet were either of the Parties dissatisfied with the Decision, it were no hard Matter for him to renounce and reject it; in case he found his own Strength sufficient to shelter him from Human Punishment: especially since the Arbitrator is not endued with any Authority and Command, by Virtue of which, he might oblige the Parties to stand to his Sentence. Therefore, in a State of Natural Liberty, Prudence will advise us, that we rely not too much on the bare Faith of others; but that we believe the Observation of all Compacts to be then best ascertain'd, when either they are grounded on the mutual Advantage of the Parties, or when 'tis in our Power to force those with whom we treat, to be just and honest. But where Perfidiousness is encouraged by Hopes of Profit, and not restrain'd by Fear of Punishment, there it were Madness to think, that bare Covenants should be able to warrant our Safety. This appears from the Practice of all Nations; who when they break off their Alliance with one State, strengthen themselves with the Friendship of another: by which Act they do not presently Condemn themselves of Treachery, in thus seeking for Protection to the Faith of Others; but, in as much as Communities are chiefly guided by Interest, in fixing their Alliances, they do but substitute an advantageous League in the room of one which was, either unprofitable, or dangerous. And 'tis under these Restrictions and Mitigations only, that we can any ways admit of Mr. Hobbes's (a) Position, that Covenants founded upon mutual Faith, in a State of Nature, are invalid. For tho' it be plausibly enough said by Livy (b), that All Men are ambitious of being credited; and that, to repose Faith in them, is, with most Men, a Tye upon their Fidelity; yet 'tis the safer Course, in a State of Nature, to think upon that vulgar Saying;

[v. 830.
Πίστις χρημάτων ἄπιστοι, ἀπιστίη δ' ἐπίπιστοι. Theogn.

Undone by Trust; and by Distrust preserv'd.

X. Again, there is another reason why the Law of Nature cannot be able, of it self, to ensure the Peace of Mankind. For this, is the Case of Natural Liberty, that each Man, as he places his Defence and Safety in his own proper Strength, so as to the means of obtaining that End, and the whole Management of his Actions, he purely consults and follows his own private Judgment. And what a wide Difference there is between Men in this respect, no one can be so ignorant, as not to have made part of his Observation (2). Few there are of so happy and noble a Temper, as to have, at the same time, that piercing Sagacity, which may discern what is for the lasting Advantage of all Men in general, and of each in particular; and that Strength and Firmness of Soul, which may constantly pursue what has been prudently foreseen. The greater Number are, on account of their Natural Dulness, imposed upon by gross Error, in the likeness of Reason. Others are hurried by the Violence of their Passions, wheresoever the Gratifications of Lust, or the false Appearance of Advantage shall draw them. Now in so endless a Diversity of Opinions and Desires, What Hopes can there be of Peace and Agreement: whilst every Fool is as strongly conceited of his own way, as the Wisest Man is convinced of his; and the former will no more submit to the latter, than the latter will condescend to be instructed by the former? Since therefore Reason alone, according to the Tenour which we find it to hold in particular Persons, is insufficient to compose these Differences in Judgment; other Means are to be used, by which an agreeable Union and Harmony of Mind may, in some Degree, be obtain'd (1).

(1) De Civitate, c. 5. f. 2. (a) De Civitate, c. 2. f. 11. (b) L. XXII. 22. (2) Mr. Bruyere in His Character of Man, has this, 'If a Man ask why the whole World does not make one single Nation, nor speak the same Language, nor live under the same Laws, nor agree in the same Usages and Worship, I answer, that, considering the variety of Mens Humours, the difference of their Tastes, and the contrariety of their Judgments, 'tis strange that even seven or eight Persons can live Amicably under the same Roof, within the same Compass, and compose one single Family.'

XI. In fine; altho' it be evident to all Men, that by breaking the Law of Nature, they exceedingly obstruct their own Happiness (the Promotion of which, depends on the Assistance of Others,) and bring many grievous Evils and Dangers on themselves; tho' Nature has likewise imprinted it on the Minds and Consciences of Men, that such as act contrary to her Decrees, by lightly invading and harming their Neighbours, shall not, in the last Event, go unpunish'd (a): lastly, tho' the Benefits that would redound to them, from their observing Natural Precepts, and the Evils which they incur by transgressing them, are a manifest Argument, that it is better for Men to live kindly and sociably than otherwise: yet would not all this be enough to procure the settled Peace of Mankind. And that, because the Multitude act not by rational Motives, but by wild Impulse, mistaking Passion for Reason; chiefly thro' the Fault of Custom or Education, which stifle and suppress the Force of inward Reflection. As also, because the greatest Part of Mankind are wholly intent upon the present, without any Care or Thought of the future; and are commonly moved by these Objects, which thrust themselves upon their Senses, while those of a higher and nobler Nature are too Refined for their Affections, and too Remote for their Desires. Whence it comes to pass, that the dread of Human Punishment, is, with too many, more prevalent than that of Divine Vengeance; which yet ought to hold the Sovereign Place in our Fears. Because, the Justice of Providence is, for the most part, slow, and the Methods of it Secret and Retired (b): Which, with bad Men, is an Argument, that the Calamities, which sometimes attend Impiety, arise from other Causes (c); especially, when they find, that the worst amongst them often abound in those things, which the Vulgar take for the Measure and Standard of Happiness, while the Good are oppress'd with many Afflictions, sufficient to persuade the Wicked and Foolish, that Virtue has little Power, unless in making Men miserable. Thus Plutarch (d) observes: When Judgment is immediately executed on a Crime, it stops those Men in the Course of their Wickedness, whom Success would have encouraged to proceed. For nothing does so much enfeeble the Hopes and deject the Mind of the Oppressed, as the Respite and Delay of Divine Vengeance; and nothing more increases the Cruelty and Insolence of their Oppressors. And with this very Prospect it is, that the Wicked encourage and hearten themselves in Villany; that the Fruit of their Crimes they shall receive in Hand, but the Punishment in Reversion, and at a great Distance from Enjoyment. It may farther be added, that the Stings of Conscience, preceding a villainous Act, are not so fierce and raging as those which follow after, when what is once done, we find past our Skill to undo (e): and that the Voice of Reason, which could not be heard in the Hurry and Tumult of our Passions, when these once begin to cool and settle, will sound most forcibly in our Breast (f). In like manner (says the Wise Author but now cited (g),) as Malefactors, when led to Execution carry each their Cross, so does Sin, out of every Offence, frame its own Torments: that most ingenious Artist of a miserable Life! such as is not only confounded with Shame, but distracted with Horrors, Convulsions, Remorse; and all the Tumults of a troubled Mind. But because these inward Tor-

(1) The latter part of this Period is taken out of our Author's Abridgment, De Officio Hom. & Civ. B. 2. c. 5. f. 8. (a) Claudian. De IV. Consulatu. Honor. v. 204.

Exstruite immanes scopulos, attollite turre,
Cingite vos fluvios, vastas opponite sylvas;
Non dabitis murum sceleris. —

Heap Rocks and Towers the vast Ascent to win;
Let Floods surround, or Forests hem You in;
All Nature is too weak a Fence for Sin.

(b) 'Tis an Observation of Cæsar, that Divine Providence, to strike Men with a deeper Sense of Affliction, by a sudden Change from prosperous Affairs, sometimes grants to those, whom it intends exemplarily to punish for their Wickedness, the more fortunate Success, and the longer Enjoyment of Impunity. De B. G. l. 1. c. 14. n. 5. (c) Add. Ecclesiast. VIII. 11.

(d) De Sera Numinis Vindicta, p. 548. D. E. (e) Curtius VIII. 2. Nature seems unkind in leaving Men under this great Weakness and Disadvantage, that generally they consider things less before they do them, than after they have done them.

(f) Plutarch De Ser. Num. Vindicta. p. 555. E. When a Man, out of Avarice, Envy, Ambition or sensual Delight, has committed some heinous Wickedness, and after the violent Thirst of his Desire is cool'd and appeas'd, takes time to reflect, that what he propos'd of Profit, Convenience, or Satisfaction in any kind, has left him utterly disappointed, while the base Impressions and horrid Tyranny of Sin remain in full Force; must necessarily be brought to this Persuasion, that when for the sake of empty Glory, or unworthy Pleasure, he broke through the most sacred, most beautiful and excellent Rules of Mankind, he, at the same time, fill'd his miserable Life with Shame and Disquiet.

(g) Ibid.

ments make no Impression on Sense, they have so much the less Efficacy towards restraining the Growth of Wickedness in Others. Mr. Hobbes (a) is in the right, when he tells us, that Scarce any Human Action can be assign'd, which is not the Beginning of so long a Chain of Consequences, as our foresight seldom reaches to the End of. The pleasant and painful Accidents of Life, are so firmly link'd together, that he who receives the Pleasure, is, at the same time, oblig'd, (whether he apprehends it or not,) to accept of the attending Pain. Thus the Abuse of Power is punish'd by the Power and Violence of Others; Intemperance by Diseases, &c. and these are what I call Natural Punishments. Yet the Generality of Men, either through Defect of Judgment, or Vehemence of Passion, are commonly hindred from giving these Considerations their due weight. Wherefore there remain'd no way of laying so powerful a Restraint on Human Corruption, as what is now afforded, since the Institution of Civil States. Plutarch (b) seems to have forgotten himself, when he censures Colotes for the following Assertion: They who first regulated Life, composed Laws, set up Governments and Magistrates over Cities, and enforced Obedience to their Directions, were certainly the Persons who deliver'd us from Trouble and Tumult, and establish'd Peace and Safety in the World. Take away these Engagements; and we should live like wild Beasts, and hardly forbear to devour the next we meet. For, that grave Writer, who reprehends this way of speaking, could have no very deep Insight into Human Nature and Disposition, if he imagin'd, that, upon reversing the Laws of all Civil Communities, the Honour and Safety of Mankind could be preserv'd by the Wise Rules of Parmenides, Socrates, Plato, or Heraclitus. And, tho' we should never so freely subscribe to Aristippus's Boast (c), who, when ask'd, What Advantage Philosophers had above other Men? Replied, Were there a general Repeal of all Laws, we should continue to live as regularly and peaceably as we do at present: yet, What would become of the far greater Number; who, if left to themselves, would fancy Lust and Passion the best Reason and Philosophy? Rather, therefore, let this be the final Decision of the Case; Qui ratione traduci ad meliora non possunt, metu contineantur (*): 'Tis fit, that they whom Reason cannot persuade to do Better, Fear should restrain from doing Worse.

(a) Leviath. c. 31. towards the End.
 (*) Quintil. Instit. Orat. l. XII. c. 7.

(b) Against Colotes, p. 1124. D.

(c) In Hesych. De Vir. Illustr.

CHAP. II.

Of the inward Structure and Constitution of Civil States.

IT follows now, that we enquire more exactly into the inward Structure and Constitution of Civil States. That Men, therefore, might render themselves secure against the Wickedness of Others, so far as the Condition of their Nature will admit, no other Expedient could have been invented but this, that each Person should provide a sufficient Guard about him; by means of which, the Designs of others might appear so dangerous in the Execution, that they would think it their safest Course, rather to refrain than to engage, rather to keep the Peace, than to be the Challengers and Aggressors in a War. For the malicious Inclinations of Men, and their ready Disposition to their Neighbour's Hurt, cannot any way be more effectually kept under, than by setting before their Eyes some present Danger, which must certainly fall on him that shall dare to Assault another; and by taking away all Hope and Prospect of Impunity. Now such a Defence, or Assistance as this, can by no means be afforded by any fortified Place, whether it derives its Strength from Nature or from Art: For to lie thus continually in Hold, is to be a perpetual Prisoner: nor would it be easy, for a single Man to Defend his Post. But if he let in others to help him, there will be a Danger from them likewise, and he will stand in need of a new Protection. Some kind of Aid might indeed be expected from Arms; but not to such a Degree, as that one Person alone, should be able to promise himself any long Security from hence, against numerous Oppressors. So too, the Defence, which might be made by Brute Creatures, is very slender and uncertain, and by no means capable of shielding us from Dangers of this Nature. For tho' we meet with a Story of two Dogs, that performed Military Service against the Americans (a) (1); and tho' the Emperour of Ceylon in his Royal City of Candy, is reported to have a Life-Guard (as it were) of an hundred Elephants, which go their rounds upon the nightly Watch, and are the publick Executioners of Criminals: Yet many Men must join in teaching and training them, e'er they can be made fit for these Employments. It remains therefore, that against the Dangers, which might be apprehended from Men, Men alone could afford an agreeable Remedy, by joining their Forces together, by interweaving their Interests and Safety, and by forming a general Confederacy for their mutual Succour (a).

(a) Gomara, Hist. Gener. Ind. Occid. c. 44. & 65.

(1) See Montaigne's Essays, B. 2. c. 12. p. 336.

II. But it is manifest, that the joining together of two or three, or of a few Persons, must necessarily prove insufficient for this Defence; because, then, the least Addition, on the side of the Invaders, would turn the Scales, and carry them on to certain Victory; and therefore would encourage and embolden them to begin the Assault, by promising not only Impunity, but Success. So that to obtain the Security, of which we are now in search, it is requisite, that the Number of the Confederates be so great, as that the Advantage of a small odds, on the Enemy's side, shall not visibly determine the Issue of the War; and consequently, that this League and Union be made by a considerable Multitude. Hence Plato (b) demands such a Number of Subjects in his Commonwealth, as shall be able to repel their Neighbours, when they prove Injurious, and to succour them when they are Oppress'd. From what has been offer'd, this farther Remark may be drawn, that the just Measure of any State, ought to be taken from the Proportion it bears to the Strength of those about it. And therefore those Communities, which were heretofore look'd on as sufficiently large, when Mankind was divided into a prodigious Variety of distinct Governments, are too little since the forming of Mighty Empires. For, as Pliny (c) observes, Bodies, however high and towering, sensibly diminish, when set in Comparison with those that overtop them.

III. To proceed; 'tis no less necessary, that the Multitude united on this account, do agree about applying the means, for the Attainment of the desired End. For otherwise, how numerous soever they may be, yet, if they consent not in using the best Methods for effecting the common Security, but resolve to manage each his own Strength according to his own Fancy, the Design will come to nothing. Because, being divided in Opinions, and moving contrary ways, they will not help, but hinder, one another. Or, to suppose the best, if they should once happen to agree well enough about the Undertaking of a single Action, either upon sudden Impulse, or upon Counsel and Deliberation, led on by the Hope of Victory, of Booty, or of Revenge; (as may sometimes be observed, in the mad Disorders of popular Tumults (d): yet afterwards, either by the Differences of their Tempers and Judgments, or by that Envy and Emulation, which is natural to most Men; or through Lightness and Inconstancy, they will be so torn asunder, as that, for the future, they will have no manner of Inclination, either to afford their mutual Succour, or so much as to keep the Peace amongst themselves (e). And consequently these united Bodies, which are form'd of a great Number of Persons, are, of all, the most unlikely to hold for any long time; unless they are kept together by some general Fear, restraining them from quitting a Resolution, at their Pleasure, which they have once, by Agreement, taken up. Whence it follows, that the bare Consent of a Multitude, tho' confirm'd by Covenant, cannot give us that Security, which we now seek after; or, that 'tis not enough, for many Persons to enter into a Confederacy of mutual Assistance, and to promise on both sides, that they will direct their Strength, and all their Actions towards this End, and towards the common Good. But 'tis still necessary, that some farther Tye be laid upon them, that they who have once consented, for their general Benefit, to be peaceful and helpful to each other, may be hindred by some Fear, from drawing back and disagreeing, when they find their private Advantage clashing with the publick.

IV. For the Illustration of this Point, Hobbes (1) examines strictly the Nature of some inferior Animals, which (after a sort) do appear likewise to maintain Society among themselves; of which kind, the most Remarkable are the Ants and the Bees (2). For these Creatures, tho' void of Reason, by which they might engage in Compact, and submit to Government; yet by joining Consent, that is, by desiring and declining all the very same things, do to direct their Actions towards the common Good, as that their petit Confederacies are liable to no Differences or Dissentions. Why it should happen otherwise with Mankind, and why a considerable Multitude should not be able to live amicably together for any time, without the Restraint of Civil Authority, is a Question not unworthy our Debate. The Reason, then, for which the wise Appointment of Nature hath join'd these little Creatures, rather than others, in publick Bodies, seems to be this; that they continue all the Winter, and are still nourish'd after their ordinary manner, whereas most other Insects, during that Season, either perish, or are preserv'd without any external supply of Food. Now these Winter-Stores may be much more conveniently brought together and laid up, if many join their Service, than if each Labours apart from all the rest. Whence 'tis evident, that the Communities, form'd by these Creatures, have a quite different End from that of Human and Political Societies: tho' we may discover in them, some Resemblance of a Communion of Goods, whilst they labour all for the same general Stock, and afterwards do all receive their Maintenance from it. Hobbes offers this farther reason of the Difference, that all the Government of these Animals, is nothing but an universal Consent, or, many Wills directed to the same Object, not one arbitrary Will, as in Civil States:

(a) Comp. Hobbes De Civitate, c. 6.

(b) De Legibus, l. V. p. 845. E. Ed. Wech.

(c) Panegyric, c. 61. n. 2.

(d) Vid. Tacit. Annal, l. c. 32.

(e) Compare the Discourse of Polybius, on the Vices of the Athenian Commonwealth, l. 6. c. 45.

(1) De Civitate, c. 5. f. 5.

(2) V. Virgil. Georg. 4.

he means, that each of them, in particular, conspires with the rest, to work together, and to treasure up their Provision in the same Heap; and that all their Wills are not reduced into one Sovereign Will, as in Politick Bodies; so that what a single Ruler, or a governing Council determine, should pass for the Will of All in general. The main Causes why, in these Creatures, which live by the Guidance of no Superior Faculty than Appetite and Sense, the bare Agreement of Inclinations should be so lasting, and so effectual, as to stand in need of no other Assistance, seems to be these that follow. 1. Men are continually in Competition for Honour and Dignity, whereas these Creatures are not: And consequently, that Envy, Hatred and Emulation, which flows from this Spring amongst the former, is not to be discover'd amongst the latter. 2. The Natural Appetite of the Bees, and that Faculty, which we may call the Judgment of their Senses, are exactly uniform, and are carried on toward the publick Good, which in them, differs not from the private. Whatever is not good for the Hive, (as Antoninus (a) observes) is not good for the Bee: To see their Hives full and flourishing, is their whole Wish and Desire. But amongst Men, So many Heads so many Wits: and scarce any thing is look'd on as truly Good, which doth not afford the Possessor somewhat singular and extraordinary above his Neighbours. 3. Creatures, which have not the Use of Reason, neither see nor fancy that they see any Defect in the Administration of their common Societies (1); in as much as they Erected them not with the Guidance of Judgment, but by the bare Instinct of Nature, and have not the Art of comparing them with others. Again, not one of the Bees ever entertains a Design of forming her Comb in any other, than the Common hexangular Figure: whereas, in Human Politicks, there are very many, who, thinking themselves Wiser than their Fellows, are Disgusted with the present Condition, and are for introducing a Change in the Government. And according to the Difference of Judgments, several of those Projectors are for setting up several Models, or for reforming things each in his own way, the Consequence of which, must be the Distracted of the State, and, in the Issue, a Civil War. 4. These Creatures, tho' they have some Use of Voice, in making known to one another their Desires, at least, when their Affections are more warmly rais'd; yet they want that Art of disguising things, in the false Colours of Speech, which is necessarily required to the disturbing the Minds and Passions of a Society: This being the Instrument by which, what is Good, is Represented, either under a greater or a less Degree of Goodness than it really hath, and, what is Evil, is, in the same manner, either Aggravated or Extenuated: or, perhaps, both are painted with a quite different Face from what they truly bear. But now, the Tongue of Man is often us'd for a kind of Trumpet of War and Sedition; which is able, not only to propose false Rules of living and of acting, but also, with fair Glosses and much insinuating Language, to recommend them to Others, and thereby to render their Minds utterly averse to the Genius of a peaceful and social Life. On which account, it was not without Justice said by the Comedian (2), of the eloquent Pericles, that He-thunder'd, and lighten'd, and confounded all Greece. 5. Irrational Creatures cannot distinguish between Contumely, or Contempt, and real Damage; or rather, they have no Sense at all of Contempt. Therefore, whilst they find the Necessities of their own Bodies supplied, they commence no Quarrel with their Fellows. But of Men, those are the greatest Disturbers of the Commonwealth, who enjoy the greatest Opportunities of being easy. Nor do they engage in Contentions, about their Honour or their Reputation, till after they gain'd an absolute Victory, over the Force of Hunger, or the Injuries of Weather. Lastly, the Agreement of these Creatures is Natural; but that of Men only Federal; that is, Artificial, or rather Moral; held together by no other than Moral Ties, which do not, in the least, extinguish the Natural Difference of Men's Inclinations, the Roughness of their Tempers, and the Power which they have of taking quite contrary Measures. To all which, we may add this farther Consideration, that, in the Kingdom of the Bees, there is no Sovereign Authority properly so call'd (3), (tho' this be the very Life and Soul of a Community;) for which reason their Monarch is not Arm'd with a Sting. And therefore 'tis the greater Miracle of Nature, that — Rege insolubili, mens omnibus una;

Amisso rupere fidem. —

Their Prince secure, one common Mind they bear;
 But, Him once lost, with wild Distracted jar (b).

Yet here it ought to be well observ'd, that the Comparison, thus pursued, between the two Multitudes, one of Men, the other of Bees, hath been alledg'd to no other End, but to shew why, in a great Body of Men, destitute of the Advantages of Civil Government, no long Agreement or good Understanding can reasonably be expected. But we would by no means be thought to insinuate, as if these Inclinations, in which the Seeds of Discord are contain'd, were found to be of equal Force and Efficacy in each particular Man; or, as if sound Reason did not, from the bare Consideration of Human Nature, suggest such Arguments, as

(a) L. 6. f. 54. (1) The Government among such Creatures is but pretended and Chimerical. See Algernon Sidney's Discourse of Government, c. 2. f. 8. (2) Aristoph. Acharn. V. Plin. L. 1. Ep. 20. n. 17, &c. Ed. Cellar.

(3) Tho' by a kind of Miracle in Nature, the whole Hive disperse themselves, as soon as their King leaves them. V. Senec. De Clementia, L. 1. c. 4. & 19. (b) V. Virgil. Georg. L. 4. v. 212, &c. Add. Xenophon. Cyropad. 1. V.

must engage and command Men, rather than any other Animals, to follow Concord and mutual Kindness. And therefore our Design, in this Matter, is not, in the least, thwarted by a Learned Author (a), who hath undertaken to retort these six Reasons of Mr. Hobbes by shewing, That as Man naturally loves Honour, so Honour is the Natural Result of good Actions: That he more perfectly understands the Force of the publick Good, in securing his own private Interest: That he enjoys the Gift of Reason, which equally disposeth him, as his Lot shall fall, to Govern or to Obey: That he hath the Art of enlivening and adorning his Rational Faculty, by setting an Edge and a Grace upon it, with the most proper Expressions: That he apprehends himself to be under the Guidance of a Law, by the Power of which he distinguisheth a down-right Injury, from a Damage offer'd without Injury: Lastly, That Agreements, made amongst Men, are not only strengthen'd and confirm'd by Nature for a long Continuance, but do likewise receive from Art, as the Assistance of Nature, many Defences against less uncertain Dangers, and, by means of Writing, a Duration beyond the Age of Man. The Argument doth not at all affect us, unless it could make out, that a numerous Body of Men, united under no common Government, might not be disturb'd by a very few: As likewise, that all Men are Judicious and Wise, and do, after the clearest manner, apprehend the Dictates of sober Reason, and have utterly disabled all their evil Affections and Desires. He, certainly, erects a Civil State upon no better than a ruinous Bottom, who makes too large Allowances to the Modesty and Ingenuity of Mankind; and measures the Integrity of Others, especially of the lowest Rabble, by his own.

V. But what that is which we may depend upon, as sufficient for the long keeping together the Consents and Inclinations of an united Multitude, will easily appear, to one that thoroughly examines the common Bent and Genius of Mankind. Now in this there are two Vices to be discover'd, which especially hinder any Number of Persons, from long continuing in the same general Design. One is, the great Variety of Inclinations and Judgments, about discerning what is most expedient for the common End: to which there is join'd, in many Men, a Dullness of apprehending which of several Means propos'd, is more advantageous than the rest; as likewise, the obstinate Stubbornness in defending what they have once, right or wrong, happened to embrace. The other general Vice, is a sluggish Coldness in Business, and an Aversion to doing willingly, what we know to be for our Interest: when we are under no necessary Force, which might drive us on, if we hung back, and oblige us, whether we will or no, to the Performance of our Duty. The former of these Evils may be remedied, by uniting in a perpetual Bond the Wills of all the Parties, or by so ordering things, that in all Affairs, relating to the common Good of the Society, there should be but one Will to govern their Proceedings. The latter, by constituting some Power which shall be able to inflict a present and sensible Punishment, on those who oppose or hinder the publick Benefit. Tully (b) hath a remarkable Saying to this Purpose: They observe (speaking of the Aristotelians,) that even the Passion of Grief was not constituted by Nature, without our great Use and Advantage: that Men, taken in Offences, might be heartily troubled at the Correction, the Reproof, the Ignominy which they undergo. For they, who can bear Infamy and Reproach, without Concern, seem to have obtain'd the Privilege of sinning with Impunity.

Now the Union of Wills, could not possibly be compass'd in any of the following ways: Either that, by a Natural Conjunction, the Wills of all the Parties should be amass'd into one; or that one Person only, should exert his Will, and all the rest suppress theirs; or that the Natural Disagreement of Inclinations and Contrariety of Desires, should, by any means whatsoever, be absolutely taken away, and combined in perpetual Harmony and Concord. The only Method then, by which many Wills may be conceiv'd as join'd together, is, at least, this; that each Member, of the Society, submit his Will to the Will of one Person, or of one Council; so that whatever this Person or this Council shall resolve, in Matters which necessarily concern the common Safety, shall be deem'd the Will of All in general, and of Each in particular. For when I have made over my Power to Another, his Act and Choice is interpreted as mine (c).

So again, as to the other Remedy propos'd, 'tis impossible to constitute such a Power as shall be formidable to the whole Multitude, by Natural Means; that is, by transfusing the real Strength of All and Each of them into one Person, so as to leave all the rest utterly weak and impotent. But one Man can thus only be supposed to possess the Strength of All, when the whole Body, and every particular Member, have oblig'd themselves to use and apply their Strength, as He shall judge expedient. When this Union of Wills and of Forces, is once compleated, thence, at last, ariseth what we call a Common wealth, or Civil State, the strongest of all Moral Persons, or Societies.

What hath been offer'd may, perhaps, be more distinctly understood, if we consider, that by the Submission of their Wills, made on the part of the Subjects, their Natural Liberty of Choice is not extinguish'd; by virtue of which they are still able, de facto, to resume what they once gave, and to deny and withdraw their Obedience which they promis'd: as likewise, that the Strength and Power of the Subjects are not, by any Natural Conveyance, transferr'd really on the Sovereign, as if, for Instance, the Strength, which lay in the Shoulders of all the Subjects, should be removed to the Prince's Shoulders; and, consequently, that both the Wills and the Strength, of those who are govern'd, are, as we may say, turn'd in the Scales, and render'd conformable to the Governour's Pleasure, only by these two Moral Weights, which we come now to examine. The first is taken from their own Act and Covenant, by which they engage their Allegiance: and this receives all possible Force from the Command of G. O. D, and from the sacred Authority of an Oath; both which are so much the more effectual, in over-ruling Men's Minds, the more carefully the Parties have, from their Childhood, been Educated with good Discipline and Instruction, and the more Knowledge they have obtain'd of the Necessity and Usefulness of Civil Government. But they who, through the extreme Pravity of their Mind, resist the Force of this Weight, whilst they, either foolishly imagine Government to be a Stratagem found out for the vexing and oppressing of all others, to satisfy the Tyrannical Pleasure of a few; or else are overcome with a heavy Listlessness, rendering them averse to the voluntary Performance of what their Duty requires; these, we say, are drawn to obey their Superiors, by that other Weight which we have still in reserve; that is, by the Fear of Punishment, and by external Compulsion. Farther, since he who compels Another, ought to surpass him in Strength, and since that Strength, by which Governours exceed the Force of private Persons, ariseth from hence, that the Subjects are ever ready to apply their united Power, as they shall be commanded; hence 'tis evident, that the Ability, which Rulers have to compel and restrain Evil and Disobedient Subjects, is owing to the Obedience of the Good. Now, that the greater Part of a Nation's Strength, shall always be in the Hands of the Sovereign, 'tis easy for him to effect (1); provided that he first obtain'd his Crown by Lawful Means, and that he expresseth any tolerable Care and Endeavour towards the Discharge of his Trust. For as he may ever reasonably hope, that the Majority of the Subjects will be mindful of the Divine Command, and of their Oath of Allegiance and Fealty; so 'tis, indeed, ever the Interest of the larger and better Part of the People, that the State should remain Secure and Undisturb'd, and that the Lawful Government should be maintain'd in its due Privileges and Authority. But besides all this, Governours have ready at Hand certain useful Engines, which afford a vast Addition to their Power: such as are, good Fortresses, and a standing Force, engaged to the Prince by more than ordinary Ties; by means of which Assistances, a Multitude, how numerous soever, may be reduced to Obedience, especially if they want Arms, and are scatter'd at a wide Distance, through the several Parts of the Country; and in case the Sovereign useth due Caution, to hinder his People from bandying into Factions.

(a) Bp. Cumberland De L. N. c. 2. f. 22. (b) Tusc. Quæst. l. IV. c. 20. (c) A good Man submits his own Judgment and Choice to the Governour of the Universe, as good Subjects do to the Laws of the State. Arrian Epictet. l. I. c. 12. p. 118.

VI. That the Union, which we have been thus explaining; may be more thoroughly apprehended, we are to know, that many Natural Persons, before they close into one Moral Person, whatever they Act, and whatever Obligations they take upon themselves, they Act and Undertake in their single Capacities, so that the Number of the Actions and Obligations is equal to the Number of the Natural Persons. And tho' often, when we would denote many independent Men, we use the Word Multitude, which seems to imply some kind of Unity; yet if we consider more exactly, this Term is not one of those which we call Collective Words, or such as signify an united Body, compos'd of many Individuals, as those other Names of an Army, a Navy, an Assembly, a Senate, and the like; but really imports no more than a bare Number of things in general, without specifying whether they be of the same or different kinds, whether they be united or dispers'd. And therefore, properly speaking, a Multitude of Men is not one compound Body, but many separate Persons, each of which hath his own Judgment, and his own Will to Determine him in all Matters that shall be Propos'd. For which reason, if we thus consider a Multitude, and then abstract it from the particular Men of whom it consists, we cannot ascribe to it, in this general Notion, any one Action distinct from those of the private Persons, or any peculiar Privilege or Right. Hence suppose a Man to be in a Multitude, or to have many other Men about him, not join'd in a common Society, should most, or should all the rest of these perform any Act, or engage in any Compact, whilst he alone enters his Dissent to the Business, or, negatively, doth not any way approve or partake of it, the said Act or Compact shall on no account affect his Person. So that, on the whole, to join a Multitude, or many Men, into one Compound Person, to which one general Act may be ascribed, and to which certain Rights belong, as 'tis oppos'd to particular Members, and such Rights as no particular Member can claim separately from the rest; 'tis necessary, that they shall have first united their Wills and Powers by the Intervention of Covenants: without which, how a Number of Men, who are all naturally equal, should be link'd together, is impossible to be understood.

VII. The Nature and the Number of those

(1) Mr. Le Clerc (in His Additions to Morery's Dictionary, at the bottom of the Article of Calvin.) says, That Princes who have but a moderate share of Integrity, may be almost Ador'd by their Subjects.

Covenants, by the Mediation of which, a Civil State is compacted, may be discover'd by the following Method of Enquiry. Let us conceive in our Mind a Multitude of Men, all naturally Free, and naturally Equal, going about voluntarily to Erect themselves into a new Common-wealth: here it will be necessary, first of all, that they covenant each with each in particular, to join into one lasting Society, and to concert the Measures of their Welfare and Safety, by the publick Vote. (Tho', in a Compact of this Nature, 'tis the most usual way, for particular Persons, to reserve to themselves the Liberty of departing, if they shall see fit (1).) This Covenant may be made either Absolutely or Conditionally. The first is done, when a Man engageth himself to stick to this Society, whatever Form of Government shall afterwards be approved of by the major Part. The latter, when the Person engaging adds this Clause, provided such a Form shall be introduced, as is agreeable to his private Judgment. Farther, when this Covenant is to be transacted, 'tis requisite that all and each of them give their Consent. He that shall disagree, tho' he may happen, for some time, to continue in the same Place with the rest, yet stands without the Bounds of the rising State, nor is obliged by the Vote of his Fellows, tho' the greater Number, so as to be under any Necessity of joining himself to the new Establishment: but he remains under his Natural Liberty, in which it shall be lawful for him to provide for his private Security, according to his own Measures. But after such a Society, representing the first Rudiments and Beginnings of a State, hath been united in the manner described, it is then farther necessary, that a Decree be made, specifying what Form of Government shall be settled amongst them. For before this Point is adjusted, 'tis impossible they should take any regular Step towards maintaining the Safety of the Publick. Now when Matters are come to this Issue, they who join'd themselves in the Society, upon absolute Terms, shall, if they design to continue longer in the Place where the Society is fix'd, be bound, by the Agreement of the Majority, to acquiesce in the Form establish'd, tho' their own Opinion more incline to some other Model. For, by adding no Exceptions to the Covenant, they are presum'd to have, in this respect at least, submitted to the Will of the greater Number; from whom it can, with no manner of reason be expected, that they should quit their own Judgment, to comply with a few that obstinately stand out. But on the other-hand, they who entred themselves in the Society upon Conditions, unless they expressly consent to the Government resolv'd upon, shall not become Members of the new State, nor be concluded by the Vote of the Majority.

VIII. After the Decree hath pass'd, to settle the particular Form of Government, there will again be Occasion for a new Covenant, when the Person or Persons, on whom the Sovereignty is conferr'd, shall be actually constituted; by which the Rulers, on the one hand, engage themselves to take care of the common Peace and Security, and the Subjects, on the other hand, to yield them faithful Obedience; in which likewise, is included that Submission and Union of Wills, by which we conceive a State to be but one Person. And, from this Covenant, the State receives its final Completion and Perfection. But now, if the Form establish'd, should happen to be a Democracy, this latter Covenant doth not so manifestly appear; because the same Persons are, in different respects, Sovereigns and Subjects: whereas every Covenant requires two distinct Parties. Nor doth the different respect seem a sufficient Distinction; as, for Instance, when the same Titius is said to be a Father, a Son, a Husband, a Son-in-Law, a Father-in-Law, a Merchant, &c. for here if this Titius, as a Merchant, shall promise any thing to the same Titius, as a Father, there is no Covenant in the Case. We are therefore to understand, that, in a popular Government, the particular Members and the Sovereign Assembly, are not only distinguish'd by different respects, but are really different Persons, (tho' not of the same kind,) who have distinct Wills, distinct Acts, and distinct Rights from each other. For the Will of particular Men is not, immediately, the Will of the People: nor can, what particular Men shall happen to do, be construed as the People's Act, or vice versa. Again, particular Men neither enjoy the Sovereignty, nor any Part of it, but 'tis lodg'd in the Body of the People. For to have a Part of the Sovereignty, and to have a Vote in that Assembly in which the Sovereignty resides, are two different things. So that, hitherto, there seems to be no reason why we may suppose a Covenant to pass between the general Assembly, and the private Members of the State. One thing indeed there is which may be urged, with some Colour to the contrary: 'tis that such a Covenant would be of no manner of Use; because, each Man, by giving his Consent to the setting up of a Democracy, is, at the same time, presumed to have submitted his Will to the Will of the major Part; and besides, the Love that he hath for his own Person and Fortunes, seems to lay a sufficient Necessity on any Man to labour with his utmost Ability for the publick Good, with which his own private Welfare is inseparately United. However, altho' it may not, perhaps, be altogether so necessary in Democracies, as in other Governments, that this Covenant, or mutual Engagement for performing the respective Duties of Sovereign and Subject, should be openly and expressly made; yet 'tis absolutely requisite, that we suppose it to have pass'd by tacit Agreement. For whether we look on that first

(1) See hereafter in B. 8. c. 11. f. 2.

Decree, for the Establishment of the Democracy, as the bare Act of many Wills conspiring in one Desire, or as the Covenant of each Man with each, to this Purpose, I will submit my Will to a general Assembly of us all, upon Condition You will do the like: yet from all this, thus strictly consider'd, there can no other Obligation arise but what follows, that every Person shall be bound to acquiesce, in this particular Form of Government, so long as 'tis not alter'd by universal Consent. But now the Subjects, in a popular State, are certainly under a farther Obligation. For first, each Member is bound to stand to such Decrees, and Commands as shall proceed from the general Assembly; and then again, they are engaged, every one in particular, to contribute each his utmost Service to the State, and to prefer the publick Good to his own private advantage (a). Otherwise, on what Pretence should any Man be punish'd, for not giving Attendance at the publick Councils? Since then such an Obligation is evidently discover'd, there must, of Necessity, be some Principle whence its Origine is derived; and this can be nothing else but the Covenant, of which we have been now discoursing.

But, if the Society agree to erect an Aristocracy, or a Monarchy, then this latter Covenant is far more visible. For upon creating the Senate, or the Prince, both Parties interchange their mutual Faith, and mutual Performances thence arise, as their necessary Duty. In as much as, after the Sovereignty hath been once conferr'd and receiv'd, the Prince or the Senate, no less than the Subjects, stand bound to discharge certain Offices, with which they were not before concern'd: The People, before the passing of this Covenant, being no more engaged to obey one Man, or one Council of Men; than that Man, or that Council of Men were engaged to undertake the Care of the Publick. But now, from what Principle could this mutual Faith and Obligation to Duties, which were not required before, take their Rise, but from Covenant?

What we have hitherto deliver'd, concerning the two Covenants, and the one Ordinance or Decree, may be illustrated by that Account, which Dionysius Halicarnassens (1) gives us of the first Settlement of the Monarchy in Rome. For here, first of all, a Number of Men flock together, with Design to fix themselves in a new Seat; in order to which Resolution, a tacit Covenant, at least, must be supposed to have pass'd amongst them. After this, they deliberate about the Form of Government, and that by Kings being prefer'd, they agree to invest

Romulus with the Sovereign Authority. And this holds too, in the Case of an Inter-regnum, during which the Society being held together only by the prime Compact, it is frequent to enter the Debate about the Frame and Model of the Common-wealth (b).

We ought carefully to observe, that this Method of Producing and Constituting a Civil State, by the means of two Covenants and one Decree, is the most Natural, and what agrees in general to every kind of Government (2). Yet a Monarchy, may sometimes happen to be Constituted by one Covenant alone; as suppose many Persons, without any antecedent Agreement, amongst themselves, should, at the same or a different time, each Man for his own Person only, subject themselves to a single Master, almost, in the same manner as an Army, which is form'd out of Strangers and Mercenaries, who come from all Parts to offer their Service. So again, they who join themselves to a Community already Establish'd, have need of one Agreement only, by which they, on their own part, petition to be admitted into the State; and, on the other part, they who represent the State, upon Security given for their Obedience, admit and receive them.

It would be an unjust Suspicion, in any Person, to imagine that what we have offer'd about these Covenants, in making them the Cause and Foundation of a Civil State, is purely our own arbitrary Fiction, because the first Rise of most Governments is unknown, or, at least, we do not certainly apprehend them to have been compos'd and cemented after the manner here described. For 'tis certain every State once had its Beginning (3). But now, before the fixing of any State, the Persons, of whom it was to consist, could not be united to each other by the same Ties, as they are after the State is actually set up; nor could they yet be subject to those to whom afterwards they owe Subjection. And since we cannot understand, how either this Union, or this Subjection could be made, without the Covenants or Agreements before mentioned, it is necessary, that the said Agreements must, tacitly at least, have pass'd in the Institution of Common-wealths. Nor is there any thing to hinder, but that the Original of some things, not committed to the Monuments of Time and History, may be traced out by the Disquisitions of Reason.

IX. It may be worth our while, on this Occasion, to examine with particular Strictness the Opinion of Mr. Hobbes, who, in the Generation of States, acknowledgeth no more than one Covenant of each Man to each Man;

(a) In Thucydides, a Member of a Democratical State, unacquainted with publick Affairs, is styl'd an useless Citizen. l. 2. c. 40. Ed. Oxon. Socrates's Dispute with Charmides in Xenophon, Memorab. l. 3. p. 486.

(1) B. II. in the Beginning. (b) See the Debate of the Persian Nobles in Herodot. Thalia, p. 121, &c. and of Brutus and his Associates, in Dionys. Halicarn. l. 4. (2) Mr. Budde (in his Practical Philosophy, p. 2. c. 4. f. 13, 14.) says, that Philosophy reaches us the same concerning the Origine of States: but, if we consult History, we shall scarce find one Example of any State that has been form'd by such Express Compacts. See Mr. Barbeyrac's Second Note upon this Section. (3) See Mr. Lock upon Civil Government, C. 8. f. 7, &c. and Algernon Sidney upon the same Subject. C. 3. f. 25 and 33. See Mr. Barbeyrac's Third Note upon this Section.

frequently representing and declaring, that there passeth no Covenant between the Prince, or the Senate, and the Subjects. Indeed, we may easily gather from the Design of his Books of Policy, which is clearly discover'd in the Leviathan, the reason that put him upon this Assertion. His principal Aim was to oppose those seditious and turbulent Spirits, who, in his time, labour'd to bring down the Regal Power to their own Model, and either utterly to extinguish, or to render it inferior to the Subjects. To cut off from these Men their ordinary Plea for Rebellion, which was, that there is a reciprocal Faith between the Prince and the People, and that when the former departs from what he engaged by Promise, the latter are releas'd from their Obedience, as also to hinder restless and factious Persons from interpreting every Action of their Prince, which suited not with their own Humour, as a Breach of his Faith; he resolves to deny that there is any such thing, as a Covenant, between Subjects and their Sovereign. And having undertaken to maintain, that every Monarch, properly and truly such, hath an absolute and unlimited Power; it follow'd, of Course, that he should exclude all Covenants or Compacts from this Affair, because these seem to be the chief Instruments, of reducing Authority to Bounds and Rules. But now, although it highly concerns the Interest of Mankind, that the Regal Power should be kept sacred and inviolable, and be secured from the impertinent Cavils of those busy Designers, who are always plucking at it; yet this Consideration doth by no means make it necessary, for us to deny what is as clear as the Light, and to acknowledge no Covenant, in a Case where there is certainly a mutual Promise for the Performance of Duties not before required. Whilst I voluntarily subject my self to a Prince, I promise Obedience, and engage his Protection: on the other hand, the Prince, when he receives me as his Subject, promiseth his Protection, and engageth my Obedience. Before this reciprocal Promise, neither was he bound to protect me, nor I to obey him, at least by any perfect Obligation. And who will pretend to say, that an Act of this kind doth not fall under the Head of Covenants? Nor is this Covenant therefore useless because they, who by their own free Choice, appoint a King over themselves, seem before-hand to have entred into an Agreement for the advancing such a particular Person to the Throne. For as the bare Election, without the Acceptance of the Party Elected, confers on him no Power over the rest; so 'tis plain enough, from the Nature of the Business, that they who freely put themselves under the Power of Another, desire he should, in the Exercise of that Power, pursue the End for which it was given him: and that he receiv'd the Power on this Condition, that those who conferr'd it on him should not, by his means, miss of their Aim. They who create a Sovereign, therefore, as they, at the same time, promise whatever the Nature of Subjection requires; so, on the other part, engage him to endeavour the procuring of all those Benefits, for the sake of which Civil Governments are introduced. And what can we call this but the entering into Covenant?

X. Nor, upon admitting this Covenant between Prince and People, do those Inconveniencies, to which Mr. Hobbes seems to have had an Eye, necessarily follow. This indeed is common to all Covenants, that they lay upon Men an Obligation to some certain Performance. But then, there is the greatest Difference imaginable, between those Covenants in which one of the Parties doth, at the same time, put himself under Subjection to the other, and those in which neither Party requires, with respect to the other, any Superiority or Command. Thus the Right of a Master over his Servant, at least over such an one as freely enters into that Condition, depends upon Covenant; and in the same manner the Authority of a Father over him that offers himself to be Adopted, and the Command of a General over his mercenary Troops. And yet this doth not hinder, in the least, but that in all these Cases there is a Right of Governing on the one side, and an Obligation to Obedience on the other: nor may the Party, in Subjection, throw off the Yoak, when his Superior's Command proves disagreeable to his own Humour (a). For, in all these Covenants which do not include a Submission of Will and of Strength, some certain Duties are specified, to be mutually perform'd on the inward Principle of Conscience; and when either Party refuseth voluntarily to fulfil his Engagement, there remains no Redress but either from War and Violence, or from the Compulsion of their common Lord. But in Covenants, where one of the Parties is made subject to the other, the latter may, as he thinks fit, prescribe what shall be done by the former; and hath likewise a Power of forcing his Compliance, in case of Refusal; whereas the former Party cannot, on any account, be said to hold the like reciprocal Power over him. Wherefore a Governour cannot be tax'd with Breach of Covenant, unless he either utterly abandon all Care of the Publick, or take up the Mind and Carriage of an Enemy towards his own People, or manifestly, and with evil Design, recede from those Rules of Government, the Observation of which was, by the Subjects, made the necessary Condition of their Obedience. And 'tis very easy for one in Authority to avoid and escape all those Imputations, provided he will but consider, that the highest of Mortal Men are not exempt from the common Laws which attend their Fortune and

(a) Xiphilin. Epit. Dion. in Neron. All Sovereign Force and Authority, when conferr'd by a private Person, passeth immediately from the Giver, and holds good against him in the Hands of the Receiver.

Condition, and that, as Pliny (a) observes, No Prince was ever himself deceiv'd, who had not before deceiv'd others. Lastly, that Prince must either be extremely vicious, or extremely weak and impolitick, who cannot so order Matters as that it shall be always the Interest of the greater, or the stronger Part of the People to see Him preserv'd in his Person and Government. And it may be a strong Motive to him, to apply his best Endeavours towards the compassing this good End, if he barely reflect on that Saying in Livy (b); Is it to be imagin'd that any People, or so much as any single Man, will continue longer than they needs must, in a Condition which is grievous and uneasy to their Mind? If then the Majority of the People find it their Interest to stand by their Prince, and to defend the publick Administration as lodg'd in his Hands; as they cannot but do, if he guide his Councils with Justice and with Wisdom, then his Fortune rests upon a safe Bottom. He that cannot compass thus much, is fitter for any other Employment, than for Sovereignty and Command.

XI. Let us proceed to weigh more particularly the Reasons urg'd by Mr. Hobbes in favour of his Opinion. And here, first of all, we think it very inconvenient, that he should go about to derive the Obligation of Subjects, towards their Sovereign, from Such a Covenant by which each Man obligeth himself to each of his Fellows, that he will not resist the Will of that Person, to whom he hath yielded himself to be govern'd (c). Indeed, they who have agreed amongst themselves, to confer the Sovereignty on a certain Man, are presumed to have agreed likewise, that they should all submit their own Wills to his Will; or, that, in the Management of the Common-wealth, his Will should represent the Will of them All. Nor is it unusual to ratify such a Consent, about conferring the Sovereignty, as also the Terms under which it is confer'd, by the mutual Covenants and Oaths of the People. Yet to agree about investing such a Person with the Government, and to confirm their Investiture, by interchanging their Faith one with another, are two different things. But to go farther, there's no Absurdity in supposing, that Subjects should mutually engage their Faith to yield Obedience to their common Prince: as we know, there are such Covenants in which All engage for each, and each for All. Yet there is no Necessity, but that this may entirely be omitted, and in Fact 'tis seldom practis'd. When a Stranger is incorporated into a State, he swears Allegiance to the Sovereign: but he is now here required, so far as we can discover, to contract with the other Subjects about paying this Allegiance. Lastly, it would be a thing of very dangerous Consequence, to build our Obligation to our Prince on a Covenant with each of our Fellow-subjects, which should import as, follows, I transfer my Right upon the King for your sake, that You, for my sake, may transfer your Right upon him also. For at this rate, every Subject will seem to make the Obedience of every other Fellow-subject the necessary Condition of his own: and consequently, if any one happens to violate his Engagement, all the rest stand releas'd from theirs. And this Reason alone shews what Necessity there is, that each Subject should be bound to his Sovereign, in his own Person, without any Dependence on the Obedience of others; to the end, that how uneasy soever one, or two may perhaps appear under their Confinement, the Sovereign may make use of the united Strength of all the rest, in reducing the Rebellious to their Duty.

No less incongruous is that Assertion of Mr. Hobbes to this Purpose; That the Obligation to obey the Supreme Civil Power, doth not arise immediately from that Covenant by which particular Persons give up all their Right to the State; but only mediately, from hence, that, without Obedience, the Right of Sovereignty would have been vain and insignificant, and, by Consequence, no Common-wealth would have been form'd (d). What need of this winding and turning, when he might have gone on in the streight Road? The Reason, which moved him to this Position is certainly idle and frivolous. He proceeds upon a tacit Supposal, that things, agreed to by Covenant, cannot lawfully be refused; whereas a Prince may lawfully command his Subject, what the Subject may as lawfully disobey; as if the King should order me to kill my self, or himself, or my Father, though judicially condemn'd: wherefore, in his Opinion, the Obedience of Subjects is to be drawn from some other Principle, than from any Compact with the Sovereign. But now, we maintain, that the lawful Power of the Prince, and the Duty of the Subjects do exactly and compleatly answer one to the other: and therefore we deny that, in any Case, the Subject can lawfully refuse what the Prince lawfully enjoins. For he can lawfully enjoin no more, than what really is, or, at least, is judg'd to be agreeable to the End for which Civil Communities were first established. If either, through evil Design, or through unwise Councils, he attempts any thing contrary to this End, the Act shall on no account be esteem'd lawful. But whether the Subjects may resist all such unreasonable Injunctions, is properly another Question, and shall be discuss'd in another place. Mr. Hobbes's Instances are of no weight in this Point. For, if the Prince might lawfully command any of those Actions which he mentions; that is, if the Performance of such a thing, by a Subject, should seem Conducive to the Good of the Common-wealth, the Subject could not lawfully refuse to comply (a). And, on the other side, if the Commands were void of all Justice and Reason, and the Subject slain for not performing them; no Man in his Wits, will say that such an one was lawfully put to Death. *

(a) P. mag. c. 66. in fin.(b) L. 8. c. 21.(c) De Civ. c. 5. f. 7.(d) Ibid. c. 6. f. 13.

As to what he affirms in the same Chapter (b). That the Right of a Sovereign is confer'd on him by the People, in the way of Donation; this is not so much as consistent with his own Notions. Donation he himself allows (c) to be the transferring of Right from one Party to another, without the like Return. But now when a Prince is invest'd with the Sovereignty, there is a mutual transferring of Right; or a reciprocal Promise. The Subjects engage to be obedient, the Prince to take care of the Common-wealth, to which Duties neither of them stood bound, before this Act pass'd between them. For, as before the Government was confer'd on such a Person, the rest of the Society might have oppos'd or resist'd his Command, though they afterwards appoint him for their Sovereign; so he on his part, if they had demanded his Care or Protection, might likewise have resist'd them; that is, might have denied those Performances, as things which they had no Right to require of him (d).

XII. The other Set of Reasons, which He makes use of (e), to overthrow all Compacts between Prince and People, will appear to be no less weak than the former. In the first place, he undertakes to prove that Democratical States are constituted not by Covenants between each Man and the whole People, but between each Man and each Man. His Argument is; 'Because, in every Covenant, the Parties covenanting must exist antecedently to the Covenant it self. Whereas before the Settlement of the State, the People cannot be said to exist, as being not one Compound Moral Person, but only a Multitude of Individuals. And then again, after the State is settled, to enter into such a Covenant would be to no Purpose; because the Will of the People includes in it the Will of any private Subject, to whom the People must be supposed, in this Case, to engage their Faith; so that they may release themselves when they please, and, by Consequence, are actually free. But now 'tis Manifest, that there's a Medium between these Suppositions. Before the Settlement of the State, many Men are not indeed a People, that is, a Democratical Community: therefore no Covenant can be made with them as such. And so too, after the State is settled, a Covenant of this Nature would in one Sense be in vain; that is, 'twould be in vain, for one or two particular Subjects, to make a private Compact with the People about the publick Administration: for he that hath once given his Consent to the introducing a Democracy, is presumed to have thereby oblig'd himself to obey such Degrees, as shall proceed from the Majority of the People; which Obligation must needs suffer Prejudice from any particular Covenant. But, still in the very Act of constituting a popular State, a mutual Covenant may, and really doth, pass between the People and the private Members: the Nature of which we have already explain'd. A Man might argue, with just as much Reason and Consequence, that a Husband cannot possibly have entred into any Covenant with his Wife: because, before Marriage, she was not his Wife; and, after Marriage, 'twould be in vain to come to a Covenant; the Woman's Will being then put under Subjection to the Man's. Whereas in the very Act of taking or choosing such a Woman for a Wife, a Covenant might pass between the Parties. Epicurus's Fallacy about Death was a piece of Sophistry much of the same Strain, as 'tis recited and confuted by Lactantius (f). When we are in Being, Death is not; and when Death is in Being, we are not: therefore Death signifies nothing to us; or, Death and We have nothing to do with each other. What a nice Cheat was this upon our Understanding? As if we fear'd Death when 'twas once over, and had taken away our Senses with it; and not rather fear'd to Die, by which Act our Senses are thus taken from us! For there is a certain Point of time, when We seem to be gone, and yet Death is not quite arriv'd. And here's the miserable Moment, when Death begins its Being, and We conclude ours.

But farther, should a Man contend with never so much Earnestness, that he cannot, in Democratical Governments, conceive such a Compact in his Mind, or that he judgeth it utterly useles; yet he cannot fairly take Occasion thence to exclude it from other Forms, where, those who command, and those who obey, are really and naturally different Persons. For here certainly a mutual Covenant is required, by which the former engage to undertake the Care of the Publick, and to make the Safety and Welfare of the People

(a) See Judges IX. 54. 1 Sam. XXXI. 4. Zonaras, Part III. reports, that when Theophilus the Emperour upon the Loss of a Battle, stood almost benumm'd with Fear, and would not stir out of the Field; Manuel, with his Sword drawn, accosted him to this Purpose, Unless you follow me, I am resolv'd to kill you on the spot; for 'tis better you should lose your Life, than that you should fix a Mark of the highest Disgrace on the Roman State, by falling into the Hands of the Enemy. At which Threats the Emperour with some Unwillingness, awaken'd from this Lethargy, and following his Guide, got off safe. The Poet observes, Quint. Colab. l. 13.

A Prince should rather fall amongst the Brave,
Than wear the Badges of a Royal Slave.

(b) Self. ult. in fin.

(c) Ibid.

(d) Comp. Luke XII. 13, 14.

(e) C. 7. l. 7. &c.

(f) Institut. Divin. l. 3. c. 17.

the chief Law of their Actions; and the latter, again, engage to yield Obedience. Hence 'tis evident, what Judgment we ought to make of that other Assertion laid down by Mr. Hobbes (a), that, Because the particular Members of the Society, not by any Compact with the People, but by private Covenants between themselves, are bound to acquiesce in every Act of the People; they are, by the same Covenants, bound to acquiesce in that Act of the People, which transfers the Sovereign Right of the State upon a Senate, or upon a Monarch. For 'tis no good Consequence to say; if the General Assembly of the People agree to transfer the Supreme Command on a Senate, or on a King, particular Persons are bound to stand to their Resolution; therefore there passeth no Covenant between the People, who transfer the Right, and the Nobles, or the King, on whom it is transfer'd.

He has still an Argument behind, of as much Strength and Weight as the rest. He tells us, that a King, though elected by the People, cannot by the same People be obliged to any Performance; because immediately, upon his Election, the People are dissolv'd, and lose the Existence they had as one Person; for which Reason the Obligation directed towards them, as one Person, doth likewise perish and is dissolv'd. Now, what he fixeth here for the Basis of his Opinion, that the Obligation towards any Person ceaseth, the Person himself being taken away; is to be understood of those Cases only in which, either the Person is extinct by a Natural Death, or that Quality expires in which alone the Obligation was founded. But when a Free People transfer the Government on a King, neither do they themselves die in a Natural Sense, nor is the King's Obligation founded in that Quality of the People, which denominated them a Free State; but in that by which they resolve to be, for the future, a Society of Men under a single Governour. As a Suitor, who is engaged by Covenant to a Young Woman, cannot, after the Marriage hath been consummated, except against the Contract, on pretence that his Obligation is expired, because she is not a Virgin now, as she was when the Covenant was made. For the Obligation of the Suitor was not founded in the Quality of Virginity; but he contracted with a Virgin in order to her changing her Condition to that of a Wife. Upon the constituting a Monarch, the People are dissolv'd in this respect only, that the Supreme Authority doth no longer reside in a General Assembly; but they are by no means dissolv'd into a loose Multitude, not united by any mutual Bands: for they still continue one Society, held together by one Government, and by their original Covenant amongst themselves. The whole of the Matter therefore is this; Mr. Hobbes imposeth upon less intelligent Readers, by the ambiguous Signification of the word People. In Democracies, the People denotes the whole Body of Men who, in different respects, govern and are govern'd (b). But who will venture to affirm, that an Obligation towards a People in this latter Sense, or as they are subject to a Monarch, or to a Senate, may not continue and subsist, tho' contracted whilst they were yet Free, but in order to their future Subjection, and in certain prospect of it? To conclude, Mr. Hobbes himself elsewhere (c) expressly asserts, that God was made the King of the Jewish People by virtue of a Covenant between Him and them (1). And how then can he pretend, that there is no Covenant between a mortal King and his Subjects? A little before he delivers the direct contrary: When a Man, says he, submits himself to his Conquerour, he is bound by as Necessary an Obligation as the truest Subject: for a Contract, lawfully entered into, cannot fairly be broken or transgress'd (2).

XIII. By the Means of these Covenants then, a Multitude of Men are so united and incorporated as to form a Civil State; which is conceiv'd to exist like one Person (d), endued with Understanding and Will, and performing other particular Acts, distinct from those of the private Members. Again, as 'tis distinguish'd and known from the same Members by one general Name (e), so it hath peculiar Rights and separate Properties, which neither particular Men, nor many in Conjunction, nor All together, without him in whom the Supreme Authority resides, can make any Claim or Pretences to: and, lastly, it hath peculiar Actions proceeding from it, which private Persons can, on no account, assume or challenge to themselves. So that the most proper Definition of a Civil State seems to be this, 'It is a Compound Moral Person, whose Will, united and tied together by those Covenants which before pass'd amongst the Multitude, is deem'd the Will of All; to the End, that it may use and apply the Strength and Riches of private Persons towards maintaining the common Peace and

(a) De Cive, c. 7. f. 9.(b) Vid. Hobbes de Cive, c. 13. f. 3.(c) Leviath. de Interregnis, f. 7. Conclus.(1) Vid. Hobbes Ibid. c. 35, 40.(2) Vid. Hobbes Ibid. c. 20.(d) Statius Achil. l. 1. v. 437, 438.

Sparsa ac diffusa motes
In Corpus vultumque coit, & rege sub uno Disposita est.

A wild and shapeless Mass
Assumes a Figure and a comely Grace,
Under a Monarch's Reign.

(e) Vid. L. 1. t. 8. l. 6. f. 1. D. De Divis. Rerum, & L. 2. t. 4. l. 10. f. 4. D. De in Jus vocando, & L. 3. t. 4. l. 7. f. 1. D. Quod cujuscunque Univers. Non. & L. 47. t. 18. l. 1. f. 7. D. De Question. Add. Senec. de Beneficiis, l. 6. c. 19, 20.

Security (a). Mr. Hobbes hath given us a very ingenious Draught of a Civil State, conceiv'd as an Artificial Man: 'In which the Sovereign is the Soul, as giving Life and Motion to the whole Body; the Magistrates and the other Officers, Artificial Joints; Rewards and Punishments, fastened to the Seat of Sovereignty, and by which every Member is moved to the Performance of its particular Duty, the Nerves, which do the same in the Body Natural; the Wealth and Riches of particular Members are the Strength; Salus Populi (the People's Safety), its Business; Counsellors, by whom all things needful for it to know are suggested to it, are the Memory; Equity and Laws an Artificial Reason; Concord is Health, Sedition Sickness, and, Civil War, Death. Lastly, the Pacts or Covenants, by which the Parts of this Body Politick are cemented together, resemble the Divine Fiat, or the Let us make Man, pronounced by GOD in the Creation (b). Whence we may gather, by the way, that Isocrates (c) was in the wrong when he affirm'd the Form of Government to be the Soul of the State, having the same Force and Power as the Mind hath in the Body. Whereas the Form of Government is rather the same in the State, as in a human Body the Structure and Disposition of the several Parts and Members.

XIV. The State in exerting and exercising its Will, make use either of a single Person, or of a Council, according as the Supreme Command hath been confer'd, either on the former or on the latter. Where the Sovereignty is lodg'd in one Man, there the State is supposed to chuse and desire whatever that one Man (who is presumed to be Master of perfect Reason,) shall judge convenient (1); in every Business or Affair, which regards the End of Civil Government, but not in others. For Instance, if a Prince declare War, if he make Peace, or enter into an Alliance, this is interpreted as the Will and Act of the State (d): but not, if he eat, or drink, or sleep, if he marry a Wife, or if he be guilty of any Vice or Disorder. So that we may form a Distinction between the publick Will of the Monarch, representing the Will of the State, and the private Will of the same Monarch, which he useth, like any other Man, in the Prosecution of his personal Affairs. Hence there naturally ariseth this Question, Whether if He in whom the publick Will resides, wills otherwise than He ought to do, and consequently sins in the Exercise of this publick Will, the Action which proceeds from a Will, thus depraved, is to be look'd on as the Action of the State? For every Person, who submitted his own private Will to that of the Prince, is supposed to have done it with this Intention, that the Prince should will nothing, but what should be just in it self and advantageous to the Publick. Here it seems reasonable to pronounce, that an Action, proceeding from the Abuse and Corruption of the publick Will, is in it self a publick Action, or the Action of the State; because perform'd by the Sovereign, as consider'd in that Capacity. Thus if a King or a Senate ordain evil Laws, execute wrong Judgment, appoint unfit Magistrates, or undertake unjust Wars, the Act, in all these Instances, is certainly publick. As when a Coach-man overturns, the Action is his as a Coach-man, tho' as one unskilful or negligent in his Art. But then, in the Court of Conscience, no Man is accountable for such an Act, unless he contributed positively and effectually towards its Production. Therefore Subjects are not charged with the Faults of the Government, nor they, in a Senate or Ruling Council, who dissent from any such Proposal, and are out-voted by the rest. But the Inconveniences, which innocent Subjects suffer on account of these publick Crimes, are to be rank'd amongst those general Evils to which Human Nature, in this Condition of Mortality, lies necessarily expos'd; and which we must therefore endure with the same Patience as we do extreme Drought, or immoderate Rain, and those other Misfortunes which we style naturally Evil. Though there are several Things, which Experience shews to have a very great Virtue and Efficacy towards the preventing of these Inconveniences; as Fundamental Laws, Good Education and Discipline, and, above all, the Precepts of Religion.

It follows, on the other hand, that whatever any particular Person, or many together, or All, without the King, shall will or do, beside or contrary to his Authority or Command, not only in Business of the latter, but also of the former kind, shall not, in the least, be look'd on as the Will or the Action of the State, but as a private Will, or a private Action: nay, there shall be so many distinct Wills, and so many distinct Actions as there are particular Men concern'd in the willing, or the doing

(a) For that Definition of Dion. Pruseus (in Borysthenic.) A State is a Multitude of Men living together, in the same Place, under the same Laws, we may perhaps hereafter find Occasion to examine; it being founded on the Maxims of Grecian Policy. Nor hath Apuleius much better Success when he defines the Platonic Common-wealth, as the most perfect Model of Government, in the following manner; from the Authority of Plato himself; A State is a Union or Conjunction of many Men, amongst whom some govern and some are govern'd, but All agree and mutually assist each other, guide themselves in their Duty by the same Laws, (such as are good and just,) and have accustom'd themselves to live within the same Walls, and to have the same Inclinations and Aversions in all things. (b) Leviath. Proem.

(c) Areopagit. p. 245. & Panathenaic. p. 450. (1) Provided, First, that he act with Knowledge, and not thro' Error, nor thro' any rash Motion, which for a time deprives him of the Use of his Reason; and, Secondly, that he don't violate the Fundamental Laws of the State. Titius Observ. 559.

(d) Euripid. Supplic. v. 1188, &c.

'Tis fit Adrastus swear;
The King and Lord of Greece shall swear for All.

thus

thus or thus. And the same Judgment is to be pass'd on that which single Men, or a Number of Men shall attempt, by their own private Motion, without Authority or Order from that Governing Council, in which the Sovereign Power resides. Therefore amongst the Opinions which encourage Sedition, and which tend to the dissolving the inward Frame and Structure of any State, especially of a Monarchy, Mr. Hobbes (a) reckons this for one, that the Vulgar are not able rightly to distinguish between a State, or People, and a Multitude. A People or a State makes but one Person, having one Will, and performing only one and the same Action. Neither of which can be said of the Multitude of Subjects, opposed to the Prince or Sovereign Council. But what he affirms afterwards, that The People Rule in every State, comes to nothing through his idle Affectation of over-much Nicety. For the Word People must import one of these two things, either the whole State, or the Body of the Subjects. In the former Sense, 'tis ridiculous Tautology, the People, that is the State, rules in every State: in the latter Sense 'tis absolutely false, the People as distinct from the Prince, rules in every State. As for that which follows, In Monarchies the People govern; because the People, by the Will of one Man, exert their own; he ought rather to have said more plainly thus, in a Monarchical Government, the Will of the Prince is supposed to be the Will of the State. Nor can that Paradox, Rex est Populus, The King is the People, be explain'd in any other Sense than this. His other Remarks are true enough; as, that the Vulgar always speak of a great Number of Men, as of the People, or the State, and are wont, upon Occasion, to say, the State hath Rebell'd against the King, which is impossible; and that the People or the State, desire and refuse what is desired or refused, by some troublesome discontented Mutineers; under the Name and Colour of the People, animating the Members of the State against the State, the Subjects against the Sovereign.

XV. But where the Supreme Authority is conferr'd on a Council, made up of many Persons, each of whom retains his own Will: the Question first to be determin'd is, What Number of these Persons, agreeing in the same Resolution, shall represent the Will of the Council, and by Consequence, of the State? For otherwise, as no Man is bound to follow Another's Judgment rather than his own, unless he hath subjected his Will to the Will of the other Party; so thio' a Man enter into Society with others, in order to the directing their Business by the common Vote, yet, if by express Condition, he reserve to himself this Privilege, that he will not be obliged to any thing to which he doth not give his Consent, the Decrees of the Majority shall not, in the least, affect him, or force his Compliance. Thus there are Bodies Incorporate, in which each Member hath a Negative, and by it can render the Consent of all the rest void and ineffectual. Yet, if a Person absolutely refuseth to hearken to Reason, and out of mere Stubbornness opposeth those who are in the right Opinion, he may be expell'd the Society, as a Nuisance, or, in some Cases, may be brought to farther Punishment. For tho' here, he is not bound to follow the Act of the greater Part, by his own precedent Covenant; yet he is under the Obligation of a general Law, which commands him to shew himself Friendly and Easy to others, and, as a Part, to conform himself to the Good of the whole (b). It must be confess'd, that in Meetings of this kind, especially when consisting of a great Number of Persons, Business is never Dispatch'd without much Difficulty, and, many times, falls and comes to nothing, by reason of the Difference of Mens Judgments, and the impregnable Obstinacy of some Tempers. And, according to the ordinary Course, if any Person hath once absolutely, and, without Terms of Exceptions, united himself to any Society or Assembly, in as much as he cannot require, that all the rest should be govern'd by his Vote, or that they shall omit what seems necessary or profitable for them, in Deference to one dissenting Member; he is, at the same time, presumed to have obliged himself to the acknowledging and ratifying all Resolutions, which the major Part shall have settled. For if he looks on this as any Hardship, he should have put in his Exception to it, when he first treated about his Admission into the Society. But it would now betray a Spirit, unreasonably proud and troublesome, to think himself Wiser than all his Fellows. If a Man so far persist in his Opinion, as to be uneasy, because he cannot force it upon the whole Company, he is at his liberty to quit the Union in which he was before engaged. But 'twould be high Injustice for a Person, when he hath been out-voted, to follow the Example of those we find described in the Historian (c). Every one of them, (says he) taking it heinously that his own Opinion was not followed, applied himself more negligently and heavily to the common Business; nay, rejoiced upon any ill Success or Miscarriage, that he might have Occasion

(a) De Cive, c. XII. f. 8. (b) On which Subject, we may add the Argument in Father Paul's History of the Council of Trent, (l. 4. p. 788.) that the French were not bound by the Decrees of the Council, having protested against it. Where the Judgment of the Parliament of Paris is also produced, and runs to this effect: 'That the Authority of the whole Body is then, indeed, transferr'd on the major Part, when the Cause affects All in common, but toucheth none in particular: but when the whole Cause so belongs to All, as that each are to be allow'd their respective Shares; in this Case, the Consent of every one in particular is necessary, and the Negative is the more favourable side: nor are the Absent in the least obliged: unless they confirm the Resolutions by their own Vote. That, Ecclesiastical Assemblies are of this kind; in which, how frequently soever Councils may be held, the absent Churches are not at all bound by their Decrees, except they please to receive them.

(c) Agathias, l. 4. c. 5.

thence to boast amongst those of his own Party, and Demonstrate, that there could be no other Cause of the Disappointment, but the slighting his particular Advice. Hence, according to the regular Course, the Votes of the Majority in Assemblies, have the Force and Virtue of a general Decree: not because there is any Necessity of this, by the Appointment of Nature, but because there is hardly any other possible means of transacting Business amongst Numbers (a) (1): Tho' it sometimes happens, that a Proposal, more for the Benefit, or the Honour of the State, may be rejected, when the Authors cannot form a Party strong enough to carry it: For, in these general Establishments, for the ordering of Human Affairs, which often admit of so great Variety, since 'twas not possible for Men to invent such a Method, as should be free from all manner of Inconvenience, that must be follow'd which holds good for the most part (b). And therefore, 'tis idle to pretend, that since it seems agreeable to Nature, that what proceeds from more Wisdom should take place, against what proceeds from less; it is therefore repugnant to Nature, that the weaker Opinion of many, should out-weigh the wiser Opinion of a few, and consequently, that the former should compel the latter to an imprudent Undertaking. Indeed, in determining speculative Truths, Opinions are not pass'd by Number, but by Weight: And the Multitude of Patrons is it self look'd on as a Mark of Error (c). But this Rule can by no means be applied to the Management of Business in an Assembly, the Members of which have all an equal Right to influence the Proceedings. For who shall be the Judge here which Opinion is the Wiser? Certainly not the Parties themselves, which are thus divided. For neither side will allow the other thus to over-rule a Point, in which their Credit, as well as their Interest, is so nearly concern'd. And where's the Man, who doth not think his own Parts and Wisdom more considerable than his Neighbours? Nay, How many are there who take a Delight in disparaging an Opinion or a Project, tho' the best that could have been advanced, only because they were not themselves the Authors and Contrivers of it? Nor would it be easy, for the two dissenting Parties to refer such Controversy as this, to the Decision of a common Arbitrator; for again, the Arbitrator's Wisdom or Integrity might be call'd into Dispute, and might require a new Judge to determine the new Question. Not to say, that most of the Points, debated in these Assemblies, relate to such Matters as cannot conveniently be committed to the Judgment of those who do not belong to the Society. It hath been therefore thought most proper, to enter upon such a Method as should be the least expos'd, either to Difficulty or Uncertainty; and none can be invented which should answer this Character better, than the counting of Voices (d). Besides, whoever is allow'd the Privilege to Vote in a Council, is presumed of sufficient Ability to penetrate and comprehend all Affairs, that shall fall under their Deliberation. Which must be allow'd to be true of those Councils, at least, into which Persons are not admitted, without some kind of Choice and Approbation of Others. Neither would it be always expedient, to give any one Man in the Council, as suppose the President or chief Director, the Power of controlling the whole Matter by his Vote, and declaring which of the Opinions is the better. For, if the Prerogative should be granted to him, he might prefer the Judgment of the smaller Party to that of the greater; nay, he might reject both Proposals, on Pretence that neither was Good; and thus he would, to all Intents and Purposes, be the sole and arbitrary Governour of the State. As absolute Princes may follow that Advice which

(a) Vid. L. 50. t. 1. l. 19. D. Ad Municipalem. Flin. Lib. 2. Epist. 13. n. 5. The Votes pass by Number, not by Weight; nor is it possible, that in a publick Assembly it should be otherwise, where nothing is so unequal as the very Equality it self; whilst All have not the same Wisdom, and yet All have the same Right. Idem. Lib. 6. Epist. 13. n. 4. Whilst the Point is unresolv'd, every Man hath the Privilege of dissenting; but when 'tis once determin'd, All are bound to maintain what the Majority have Decreed. And of this regular Course of proceeding, we are to understand that of Aristotle, Polit. IV. c. 8. That which most agree in, is receiv'd under all manner of Governments. For in Oligarchy, in Aristocracy, and in Popular States, the Resolution of the greater part of those concern'd in the Supreme Management, is confirm'd and ratified as a publick Decree. (1) See Mr. Barbeyrac's second Note upon this Section.

(b) Bodin. De Republ. l. III. c. 4, p. 456. (c) Senec. De Beat. Vit. c. 2. Whilst I am treating of a Happy Life, You are not to answer me, as upon a Division in the Senate House, The greater Number is on this side; for the greater part is, for that very reason the worst. Mankind are not so Happy, as that the best things shall have the most Patrons and Defenders. And therefore a Multitude, is generally an Argument of the Wrong. Phocion, when a certain Proposal of his was receiv'd with general Applause, turn'd to his Friends, and ask'd them, Whether he had unadvisedly let drop somewhat that was amiss. Plutarch in Apothegm. 188. A. Idem. De Educat. p. 6. A. Ed. Wech. To please the Vulgar is to displease the Wise; Euripides will bear Testimony to this Observation, whom we find speaking to the same Purpose.

I've not the Art of tickling vulgar Ears,
But yet my Vote weighs somewhat with my Peers.
When Asses judge, 'tis Musick to be loud;
And that which Shocks the Thinking, charms the Crowd.

Hence, as Quintilian observes, ( Institut. Orat. l. X. c. 7. ) They who are ambitious of appearing Wise to the Fools, appear Fools to the Wise. Plato Conviv. p. 1188. C. Ed. Wech. A few Men of Understanding are more to be feared, than a whole Multitude composed of Ignorance and Weakness. Add. Valer. Max. l. 3. c. 7. s. 1. Ext. Dio. Chrysost. De Illo non capto, p. 190. D. Ed. Paris. Morel. For a thing to have been believed a long time by Fools, is no Authority or Argument for its Truth. (d) Plin. Panegy. c. 62. in fin. 'Tis better to trust the whole Company, than any private Member: particular Persons may deceive and may be deceived; no Man ever cheated All, no Man was ever cheated by All.

is offer'd by the fewest of their Counsellors; or may take such Measures as are contrary to the Opinion of them All.

XVI. But as to this Point of the Plurality of Votes, it is needful to observe, that in some Councils 'tis not enough for an Opinion proposed to have the Advantage of one Vote, or of some few more than the contrary, but, e'er it can be carried, it must have a Majority to such a certain Number (1). Thus the Law about the Election of the Pope (a), requires two Thirds (2) of the Cardinals (3) to agree in their Nomination. And the same Rule appears to have been follow'd in the Election, and in the Orders of the Decuriones under the Roman Emperours (b). In the Venetian Historian (c), we find this Clause, added to the Decree of the Senate for Banishing the Jesuites, that nothing should be determin'd in Prejudice of the said Decree, unless eighteen Senators were present, and unless five Parts out of six consented to the Resolution. Yet, where there is no such particular Appointment, that side which exceeds the other, tho' by a single Vote, shall be accounted a true Majority, and equivalent to the Consent of the whole Body (d). 'Tis to no Purpose, that some urge against this Judgment, the Maxim of the Civil Law (e), Quod omnes tangit, id ab omnibus approbari, æquum est, Equity requires, that what Affects or Concerns All, should have the Approbation of All: for we cannot hence conclude, therefore 'tis Injustice, that, for the more convenient Dispatch of Affairs, a few dissenting Members should yield to the stronger side. But farther, the Maxim produced, doth not relate to those Assemblies or Councils, which are constituted for the Regulation of publick Affairs, but to private Partnerships and Confederacies, form'd by bare Compact, or by the Agreement of several Men, to be joint-possessors of some one thing. Now such an Agreement, or Confederacy as this, doth not give the Persons concern'd, a Right to determine any thing about the common Affair, if so much as one of the Partners disagrees to the Proposal, thinking it prejudicial to his own Interest (f). As for that Clause, which is added to the Law before mention'd, about the Papal Election, that 'What is there particularly order'd, about the two Thirds, shall not abridge the Liberty of their Churches, in which the Opinion of the greater and founder Part ought always to prevail; the reason of it seems to be this; because according to their Hypothesis, the Supreme Judge, the Pope, may declare which Opinion is the founder, in case a Dispute should arise on that Point. Wherefore the founder side, unless it be the stronger likewise, shall not be consider'd, except in Cases where there lies an Appeal to some Superior (g).

XVII. If the Parties divided are equal, no Resolution shall pass; but Matters shall continue as they stood before: because there is not ground enough for any Alteration either way; but, the Weight on both sides being the same, the Balance hangs even, and the Business naturally stops. Hence, even in Criminal Cases, upon an Equality of Votes the Party is acquitted: Tho' the Penalties, Enacted against false Accusation or litigious Suits, seem not to take place on these Occasions (h). Amongst the Jews, the Criminal was not condemn'd (4), tho' there happen'd to be one more Vote against him than for him. Which Custom was no doubt, founded on this Principle, that since there is no less Religion and Conscience to be observ'd in what is pronounced by a Judge, than in what is deposed by a Witness; as a single Witness is not sufficient to Convict (5), so a single Judge is not sufficient to Condemn. For the rest of the Judges, by declaring directly contrary to each other, seem'd mutually to evacuate the Force of their own Authority. We ought to add one more Remark on this Subject; and it is, that where Suffrages are given by Companies or Tribes, the particular dissenting Members in one Tribe, who were out-voted by the Majority of their Fellows, shall not be allow'd to encrease the Number of dissenting Suffragans in any other Tribe.

XVIII. Lastly, when more than two Opinions are started, the Question is, Whether they are all to be reckon'd separately from each other, so as to give the Preference to that which, taken apart, hath more Favourers than any one besides; or whether two or more Sen-

(1) V. Grot. L. 2. c. 5. f. 17. ibiq. Bæcler. (a) Jus. Canon. C. 6. De Elect. & Electi Potestate.
 (2) V. Gratian. Can. 36. Distinct. 63. See Mr. Barbeyrac's First Note upon this Section. (3) See Mr. Barbeyrac's Second Note upon this Section. (b) L. 3. t. 4. l. 3, 4. D. Quod cujuscunque univers. Nom. &c. C. L. 10. t. 31. l. 45. De Decurion. Prudent. l. 1. Contra Symmach. v. 604. &c.

*Sic consulta patrum subsistere conscriptorum.
 Non aliter licitum prisco sub tempore, quam si
 Tercentum sensisse senes legerentur in unum.
 Servemus leges patrias; infirma minoris
 Vox cedat numeri, parvaque in parte fiescat.*

Whilst ancient Honesty possess'd the Throne,
 To acts of Senate just Respect was shown,
 Because three hundred Heads had join'd in one.
 Still let the Laws prevail; the Weaker Few Yield up their False Belief, a Captive to the True.

(c) Maurocen. l. 17. (d) Vid. L. 4. t. 8. l. 17. f. 6. D. De Receptis. Vid. Grot. d. l. (e) Cap. Quod omnes de Reg. Jur. in Decretal Lib. VI. (f) By which we are to explain l. 11. of B. 8. t. 3. D. De Serv. Præd. Rust. & L. 10. t. 3. l. 28. De Communi dividundo. (g) Add. Gratian. c. 36. Distinct. 63.
 (h) Quintilian. Declam. 254. Equal Votes favour the Person in Danger. Antiphon. Orat. XIV. When things are equal, they make for the Prisoner, not for the Accuser: as an Equality of Votes, assists the former, not the latter. Add. Aristot. Probl. f. 29. c. 13. Vid. L. 42. t. 1. l. 39. D. De Re Judicat. M. Senec. l. 1. Controv. V. One Judge Condemns, the other Acquits; of two different Sentences, the Milder ought to take place. The Greeks called this favourable Case, Minerva's Vote: On which Subject the Reader may consult a whole Dissertation of Bæcler's. (4) See Grot. B. 2. c. 5. f. 18. Note the last. (5) See above in B. 5. c. 13. f. 9.

U u u

tences,

tences, tho' different between themselves, may be first join'd together to cast out a Third, and then play'd against each other, so that the Motion, which upon the last Result hath most Voices, shall prevail? Here, if we consider things barely according to their Natural Equity, without any special Compacts or Constitutions to the contrary, it seems proper to distinguish between those Opinions which really and totally differ one from the other, and those of which one is included in the other as a Part, or which differ only in Quantity; so that the latter may be allow'd to unite in that common Point where they agree, but the former may not be join'd, being absolutely Inconsistent. Thus they who adjudge a Delinquent to pay twenty Pounds, and they who adjudge him to pay ten Pounds, may unite in the ten Pounds, against those who would entirely acquit him; and he shall stand guilty, to the Value of the said Sum, as that in which the Majority, of those that are to try him, agree: The Fine of ten Pounds being contain'd under that of twenty (a). Hence arose that Custom in the Roman Senate, of ordering a Member Sententiam dividere (b), to divide his Opinion, when he had not deliver'd himself distinctly, but had advanced two Motions at once, one of which was approved by the Company, the other not. But if some Vote a Criminal to Death, Others to Banishment, and a third Part are for clearing him; neither can they who propos'd Banishment join with those who declared for his Death, against the acquitting Party, nor the Acquitters and the Banishers against those who condemned him to Capital Punishment. For these Sentences are altogether incompatible; Death being neither a Part of Banishment, nor Banishment of Death. And tho' the acquitting and the banishing Parties, thus far agree, that both are for saving the Man's Life; yet their Opinions do not directly produce this Agreement, but only by way of Consequence: the Opinions being in themselves really different. For they who would absolve the Criminal, do thereby release him from all manner of Suffering; whereas they who sentence him to Banishment insist positively upon having him punish'd, tho' in such a particular Manner and Degree (c). Polybius (d) reports a remarkable Cause of this Nature. Certain Grecians were held Captives at Rome, and a Motion made in the Senate after what manner they should be disposed of. Upon the Debate, three Opinions were propos'd, one that they should be releas'd, another that they should be condemn'd, and a third that they should be detain'd Prisoners for some time longer; the first, in the Number of Votes, exceeding both the other, if separately taken. Here Posthumius the Prætor, who then presid'd in the Senate, having a Grudge against the Captives, made use of the following Stratagem to the great Prejudice of their Cause. When the Members were to divide, he omitted one of the Opinions and propos'd two only, ordering those who were for releasing the Men, to go to one part of the House, and those who were for disposing of them any other way, to go to the other part. By which means, they who would have confin'd them for a time, united themselves with those who would have condemn'd them; and so both together outvoted those who would have granted them their Liberty. In Gellius (e) we find the following Controversy propos'd: Seven Judges were to sit upon a Criminal, and that Opinion was to stand, in which the greatest Part of that Number should agree: Upon hearing the Case, two of the Judges declar'd for the Prisoner's Banishment, two more would have him Fined, and the other three voted him to suffer Death: Being demanded, in order to his Execution, he demurs to the Sentence. This Case was then offer'd for such an one as they term'd ἀποεῖς, or unexplicable. Cnemon in Heliodorus's History (f), is Condemn'd by seventeen Hundred Voices to Death, and by a Thousand to Banishment: Yet, in as much as the former Party was divided, some requiring that he should be Stoned, others that he should be thrown Alive into a vast Cavern of the Earth: the Thousand who decreed to Banish him made the greater Number (g).

It is farther observ'd by Grotius (h), that when several Persons, join'd together, do not form a Society, or general Body, properly so call'd, but are only tied to each other with regard to some certain thing which they all partake of, yet, by unequal Shares; then not only the Order and Precedency shall be fix'd according to their different manners of partaking, but the Votes, in stead of being Numbered, shall be Measured by that Proportion which each Suffragan holds in the common Possession (i). On which Rule we may add this Remark; that since a Society or Combination of this Nature, is founded only upon somewhat,

(a) To this Purpose see l. 38. f. 1. d. l. D. De Re Judicat. & l. 27. D. De Receptis, d. l. & cap. 1. Jur. Can. De Arbitris in VI. 'Tis but lost Labour in Grotius (Flor. Spars.) when, as to the Case propos'd in one of these Laws (l. 27.) he opposeth the Determination there made, and says, the Criminal ought to be condemn'd in ten, because the greater Part agreed to this Sum, and that what they disagreed in, ought to be rejected. For in five they All agreed, but the Majority only then prevails, when the whole Body do not unite in any single Resolution.

(b) Vid. Cicer. Epist. Fam. l. 1. Ep. 2. Senec. Epist. XXI. What is customary in the Senate, ought likewise, I think, to be the Practice in Philosophy: when any Man delivers an Opinion, which I like in part, I bid him divide, and I follow accordingly. (c) Vid. Plin. l. VIII. Epist. 14. (d) Excerpt. Legat. 129.

(e) L. IX. c. 15. The same Case is the Subject of Quintilian's 356th Declamation, where, among other things, there is this good Remark. Non idem sentientes non potes jungere, idem sentientes compara. You can't join those that disagree; therefore compare those that agree. See likewise the Argument of the 30th Declamation in Liban.

(f) L. 1. (g) Add. Cujac. Observ. XII. Cap. 16. & Ziegler ad Grot. l. 2. c. 5. f. 17. (h) Ibid. f. 22.

(i) On this Subject, Vid. L. 2. t. 14. l. 8. D. De Pactis, & L. 16. t. 3. l. 14. D. depositi, & L. 42. t. 5. l. 16. D. De Reb. autor. judic. possid.

which All have a common Title to enjoy, and not upon such a Covenant as is requisite to the Establishment of a just and regular Community, and by which each Member submits his private Will to the Will of the Majority; therefore when 'tis affirm'd, that the Vote of him, who holds a larger Share in the Possession shall have the Advantage of Another's Vote who holds a smaller Share; we are to understand it with this Limitation; that the former shall not be allow'd, by Virtue of his Superior Vote, to divest the latter of his Right, or any way to procure his Prejudice. And thus we may apprehend what is to be look'd on as the Will of the State, where the Sovereignty is lodg'd in many Hands.

XIX. As to the Number of Men who may compose a Council or Assembly, in which publick Affairs are to be debated and determin'd, 'tis manifest that three, at least, are absolutely required (a). For should there be but two, if they happen to be divided in Judgment, there is none else to turn the Scale on either side, and so no Business can be concluded (b). Nor is it any Objection against this Rule, that sometimes two Persons only are term'd Colleagues, as for Instance, the Roman Consuls. For that Word often imports no more than the Equality of Office and Dignity (c). In Latin we meet with Collegium Tribunorum, the College of the Tribunes; and yet any one of those Magistrates, by entering his particular Dissent, could evacuate any Resolution agreed on by the rest. So that they who are united to each other by such a Relation, and bear such a common Title of Honour, do not always form a regular Assembly, in which the Wills of all the Members are, by Virtue of some Covenant, compacted into one Will. But Men may happen to compose a Body or Society, and yet retain each his particular Will, distinct from the Will of his Fellows. Therefore to urge, that a Contract of Fellowship may be made between two Persons only (d), is of no Consequence in the Point before us. As for what may be alledg'd to the contrary out of the Digests; the meaning of the Law in that place is, not that a College or Company may be originally constituted by a single Person; but that upon Failure of the other Members, by any extraordinary Accident, one Man shall be sufficient to preserve and represent the Body already establish'd, till such time as new Members may be substituted in the room of the former.

According to regular Course, the absent Members are not consider'd in these Assemblies, provided they have receiv'd lawful Notice (e), but their Right devolves (as it were) upon those that are present. When two (says Seneca (f)) act by a common Commission, he that is present hath the Power of both. Yet, in our Judgment, this Maxim ought to be restrain'd to Business of daily Occurrence, and such as will admit of no Delay. It is likewise an Exception to the same Rule, if the Laws require such a precise Number of the Members to concur in every Business (g). In some places, the absent Members are allow'd to exercise their Power by delegating some others who appear in Person, and thus to give their Suffrage amongst the rest, either in Writing, or by the Mouth of their Proxy (h).

XX. The Civil State being thus framed and settled, the Person or Persons, on whom the Supreme Authority is conferr'd, whether one Man, or a Council, either Particular or General, obtain the Name of a Monarch, a Senate, or a People; and private Men, as oppos'd to these, are styl'd Subjects. Here we must observe, that a Man may become Member of a State two ways, by express, or by tacit, Covenant. For they who were the Original Founders of Common-wealths, are not supposed to have Acted with this Design, that the State should Fall and be Dissolv'd upon the Decease of all those particular Men, who, at first, compos'd it; but they rather proceeded upon the Hope and Prospect of lasting and perpetual Advantages, to be derived from the present Establishment, upon their Children and their whole Posterity. We must therefore presume them to have had this in their Aim, that their Children and all their future Race should, as soon as they came into the World, enjoy the Benefits and Blessings of the Publick Constitution. Which since it is impossible to obtain without Government, the very Life and Soul of a State, therefore All who are born within such Dominions, are hereby supposed to have submitted themselves to the standing Government. Hence there is no Necessity, that they who have been once invest'd with the Supreme Command, should require the express Homage and Allegiance of their new Race of Subjects, tho' all the Persons, who first conferr'd their Authority upon them, may possibly be extinct. Farther, since every Civil Community is fix'd in such a particular Scene, where the Members have placed themselves and their Fortunes in Security, which could not but be endanger'd, were all Men allow'd promiscuously the Privilege of coming thither without acknowledging the Government; therefore 'tis to be look'd on as a general Law in all States, that he who comes within the proper Limits of a State, and much more if he desire to reap the Benefit of it, shall be presumed to have abandon'd his Natural Liberty, and to have subjected himself to the Government there establish'd; at least for so long as he thinks fit to reside in those parts. If he deny to make this acknowledgment, he is to be reputed as an Enemy; so far however, as that he may lawfully be expell'd the Borders. So it is manifest, that they are no less subjected to the Civil Authority, who join themselves to a State already settled, than they, who, by assembling and uniting themselves together, form'd it at the Beginning.

(a) Vid. L. 50. t. 16. l. 85. D. De Verb. signif. (b) Vid. Cap. 1. Jur. Can. De Arbitris. (c) Vid. l. 173. D. d. l. De Verb. signif. & L. 26. t. 7. l. 14. D. De Admin. tut. & L. 46. t. 3. l. 101. D. De Solutione, &c. (d) L. 3. t. 4. l. 7. f. 2. D. Quod cujuscunque Universit. Nomine, &c. (e) Vid. C. 36. Jur. Can. De Electione & Electi Potest. & l. 45. D. d. l. De Decurion. (f) Controv. VII. 4. (g) Vid. L. 3. D. d. l. Quod cujuscunque Universit. Nomine, &c. & l. 45. D. d. l. De Decurion. (h) Vid. Cap. 46. De Electione & Electi Potestate, in Ultimo.

It may not be improper to Remark on this Occasion, that there is some Disagreement amongst Learned Men, about the true Notion of Civis, a Member of a Civil State. Mr. Hobbes (a) seems to make Civis an equivalent Term with Subditus, a Subject. According to which way of speaking, Women, Children and Servants, will be made proper Denisons. Our Judgment on the Point is, that since every State is constituted by Mens submitting their Wills to a single Person, or to an Assembly, they principally have a Title to the Name of Members, by whose Covenants the Society was first incorporated, and they who regularly succeed into the place of these primitive Founders. And since these Acts belong to the Masters of Families, they should seem to merit this Name by an especial Right: but Women, Children and Servants, whose Wills were before included in the Wills of their Domestical Governour and Director, can challenge it only by way of Consequence, and by Virtue of their Dependence upon him; in as much as they likewise enjoy the common Protection of the State, and hold several Rights and Privileges on the Score of that Relation. But Inmates, Strangers, and other Temporary Inhabitants, are not Members of the Common-wealth, because they propose only to tarry for a certain Space, but not to settle their Persons and Fortunes on the publick Bottom. Aristotle's Definition fram'd to express a Member of a State, and taken from his holding a Share in the Magistracy, and in the judicial Proceedings, agrees only to a Democratical Government, as he himself observes (b).

XXI. To proceed; in most Common-wealths, the Members are found especially disposed to two subordinate Bonds or Engagements, by one of which they unite in certain Numbers, to form a particular Body, yet still under the Direction of the Publick; and by the other, the Ruling Power calls them to some Inferior Share in the Administration. These Bodies of Men, form'd in Subordination to the State, or General Body, whether they are term'd Companies, Corporations, Colleges, or pass under any other Title, may first be divided into those which were fram'd before the Settlement of Civil States, and those which have been erected since. The Bodies or Systems, preceding Civil States in point of Antiquity, are Families; in which the Authority and the Right, held by the Father and the Master, have been already explain'd. Of which Right, so much remains in their Possession, as hath not been cut off, either by the Nature and Frame of the publick Society, or by civil Ordinances, or lastly, by general Custom. Such Bodies as have been form'd since the Establishment of the Civil Society to which they belong, may be distinguish'd by the Names of Publick and Private. The Publick are those, which have been set up by Authority from the Sovereign Power in the Common-wealth. The Private are, either those which have been compos'd by the sole Act of the Subjects amongst themselves, or such as depend upon some Foreign Power, which, within the Dominions of Another, is to be look'd upon only as a private Right and a private Act. Private Bodies may again be divided into Lawful and Unlawful; of which the former are, or ought to be, approved of and allow'd by the State, the latter not. We say ought to be allow'd: For suppose under a State where the Divine Worship is corrupted, some endued with Sense and Knowledge of the true Religion, should hold private Assemblies, without either open Tumults, or secret Conspiracies against the Government Establish'd, how much soever the Persons in Authority may dislike what differs from their own Perswasion; yet no one will presume to term these Assemblies Unlawful, since the Supreme Governours themselves lie under an Obligation to Acknowledge, Approve and Maintain the same Truths that are there Profess'd. So likewise, if in a Barbarous State, where all Improvements of Learning are publickly discouraged, some Persons should meet together, to join in the Pursuit and Enquiry of Wisdom; such a Body of Men cannot be pronounced an Unlawful Society. Both are again divided into Regular and Irregular. The former are those, in which, by Virtue of certain Covenants, there is an Union of Wills amongst all the Members: The latter those, in which we do not so much apprehend any Union of Wills, as a Consent and Conspiracy, without any mutual Bond or Engagement, such as may proceed from some common Affection, as, suppose, from Hope, from Desire of Gain, or of Revenge; from Ambition, Anger, and the like.

XXII. With Regard to all Lawful Bodies, 'tis to be observ'd, that whatever Right they possess, and whatever Power they hold over their Members, is all under the Determination of the Supreme Authority, which it ought on no account to oppose or to over-balance. For, otherwise, if there could be a Body of Men not subject to the Regulations of the Civil Government, there would be a State within a State. Therefore, if any Common-wealth was at first fram'd by the Union of several absolute and independent Bodies, 'twas altogether requisite, that the respective Bodies should give up so much of their former Power and Right, as was necessary for the forming a Civil Community: Because else they could not but fall short of the End which they propos'd. But, if we look on these Bodies or Systems in a State already settled, we are then to consider, what was the Intention of the Supreme Governour, in founding or in confirming such a Company. For if he hath given and ascertain'd to them, in express Words, an absolute and independent Right, with regard to some particular Affairs which concern the publick Administration; then he hath plainly abdicated part of his Authority, and by admitting two Heads in the Constitution, hath rendered it irregular and monstrous: which no one in his Wits will do, unless upon extreme Necessity. But if the Sovereign is desirous to preserve the Power whole and unimpair'd, it is necessary that the subordinate Body should so restrain and moderate its Rights, as not to prejudice the Supreme Authority, nor to put any such Extent upon their Privileges, or to draw any such Consequence from them, as shall tend to the releasing the said Body from their inferior and subordinate Condition. Now after what manner the Power of these Bodies is limited, we are to learn from the particular Charters of their Foundation, or Confirmation; as likewise from the Common Laws of the State, which are supposed to bind all and each of the Members, unless where they have been expressly abridg'd or repeal'd. From all which it follows, that, if the Administration of such a Body be committed to a single Man, whatever he acts according to the Rules of their Foundation, or according to the general Constitutions of the State, shall be look'd on as the Act of the whole Body. But what he doth contrary to, or beyond either of these, shall be his own proper personal Act, which shall not affect the rest, and for which he alone shall be accountable. If the Government of such a Body be lodg'd in a Council of several Persons; when any thing is done by them contrary to Law, or to their Foundation, those only shall be liable to Punishment, on this account, who agreed to the Proceeding; but they who either dissented, or were absent from the Assembly, shall be judg'd innocent: whom therefore it concerns, for the sake of their own Security, to protest against the Decree of the rest, and to register their Protestation in the publick Acts and Memorials, lest they should happen to be involv'd in the Punishment of their Fellows Crime. Whereas on the other side, in an Independent Assembly, no particular Member hath the Liberty of protesting against a Decree; because this would be to deny the Supreme Power of the said Assembly.

(a) De Cive, c. V. f. 11. (b) Polit. l. 3. c. 1. Thus he goes on, According to different States, the Members are different. Wherefore the Description we have given, belongs especially to the Members of a Democracy; to those of other Governments it may accidentally, but doth not necessarily, agree. Idem Polit. l. 3. c. 2. There being many Forms of Civil Bodies, there must, by Consequence, be many kinds of Members, who compose them.

As to the Debts of these Bodies or Companies, the first thing to be consider'd is, in whose Name they were contracted. For what any Member owes on his own private account, is not a Debt of the Company. Only in this respect, that when the Sentence of the Court obligeth him to Payment, Execution may be taken, not only upon the rest of his Goods, but upon those likewise which belong to him as a Partner in that Society. But such Debts as are contracted by the Governours of the Company, (whether this Power be lodg'd in the Hands of one, or of more Persons;) according to their Charter of Foundation, and those Rules which are to guide their Proceedings, oblige the whole Body, as such; and unless they have a common Stock, each Member is to answer for his Quota. Yet here again there is this Difference, that such Creditors as do not belong to the same Common-wealth, upon Denial of Payment, may treat the Members no otherwise than if each had engaged for the whole. As in all other Cases, any Person under a foreign Jurisdiction, stands liable to suffer Repritals for the Debts of his Country-men. Debts contracted otherwise than the Rules of the Company allow, bind those only who gave their express Consent to the contracting them; and not those who dissented, except to the Value of what they have been Gainers by them. And such a Debt, when the common Stock, so far as 'tis affected by it, will not hold out, is to be discharg'd by Contribution of the dissenting Members, according to their respective Proportions. But if a particular Member lend Money to the Company, as such, he can only charge the Goods of the Company; and if they fall short, he must thank himself for the Loss (a). If a Controversy arise between any Member and the Company, the Company shall not be Judge, but the State to which the Company is in Subordination. For 'twould be very inconvenient, that they should be allow'd to give Sentence in their own Cause, when the Matter may be thus refer'd to a Common Power.

XXIII. Unlawful Bodies are, not only those which unite on the account of some manifest Villany, or some Design contrary to express Law; as the Companies of Thieves, Beggars, Strowlers, Pirates, High-way-men, &c. but likewise any Confederacies between Subjects built on a private Compact, without the Consent of the Government, and repugnant to the End of Civil Communities: which are usually term'd Conspiracies or Factions. The Design of these is various. Sometimes, the Persons thus Associating, aim at the chief Command, and would seize the Government into their own Hands: sometimes they propose, by this means, to bring the Management of publick Business to their own Humour or Advantage. Some are for increasing their private Fortunes by plundering the Publick; others bandy into Factions, only to secure themselves from Punishment. Nay those Confederacies which carry a plausible Pretence, as suppose, Protection from Danger, Redress of Grievancies, Removal of Evil Counsellors, and those likewise, the Cause of which is kept secret, are suspicious and dangerous. For in the first place, this is to invade the Office of the Sovereign, by entering upon those Affairs which belong solely to his Care and Direction; and then farther, when the Mutineers are grown confident of their own Strength, they may easily be encouraged to turn it upon the State (a). Hence many Actions not otherwise culpable, in their own Nature, become unlawful when perform'd in a tumultuous or factious manner. Thus to petition the Government, or to Accuse any Person of a supposed Crime, are Proceedings which the Law allows; but to do either of these, with a numerous Body of Men gather'd for that purpose, bears the Appearance of Riot and Sedition. And so in Martial Laws, it is usually made a Capital Offence, for Soldiers to petition for Pay, in a large Company, drawn together on that Design (b).

(a) Comp. Hobbes. Leviath. c. 21.

XXIV. Besides that common Bond, which engageth all Subjects to their respective Sovereigns, there lies a particular Obligation on those who are entrusted by the Higher Powers with the Exercise of some part of the Government, in their Name and by their Authority; and who pass under the general Style of Magistrates and Publick Ministers. Distinct from these are the private Ministers or Servants of the Prince, who perform Common Offices for him, as they would for any other Master. Amongst the former kind, or those who serve the Prince in his Politick Capacity, there is this Difference observable, that some of them Exercise a part of the Government and Princely Office, and do therefore, in such a particular Measure, represent the Person of the Sovereign; who are, properly and strictly term'd Publick Ministers: Others barely assist in the Dispatch and Execution of Publick Business. To the first Class belong the Regents, or Protectors of the Kingdom, during either the Minority, or Captivity, or Delirium of the Prince; then the Governours of Provinces, Cities, and Districts; the chief Commanders of the Militia, by Land, or Sea; the Directors of the Treasury; the Judges and others concern'd in pronouncing or executing Justice; the publick Censors of Doctrines, Ambassadors to foreign States, and the like. In the other Class, we are to reckon the Counsellors, who do not themselves Exercise any part of the Sovereignty, but only declare to the Sovereign their Opinion about Affairs; those likewise who are any other way serviceable to the publick Management; as the Secretaries, the Gatherers, Keepers or Dispensers of the Revenue, the Souldiery, those who lend an inferior Assistance in the Proceedings of Justice, and if there be any Others of the like Characters; the Order and Distinction of which, in every particular State, easily may be understood (c).

(a) Thus Otho speaks in Tacitus. (Hist. L. 1. c. 84. in the Beginning.) At present indeed, and in the Post You now hold, You are for me; but whilst You run up and down in the dark, and All are in Confusion round You, Chance or Opportunity may engage You against me.

(b) Add Acts XIX. 39, 40. Vid. Hobbes, De Cive, c. 13. f. 12, 13. & Leviath. c. 22. where he compares lawful Bodies to the Muscles, and unlawful to Wens, Boils, and Imposthumes, Engendred by the unnatural Conflux of Evil Humours.

(c) Comp. Hobbes Leviath. c. 23. & Bodin. De Republ. l. 3. c. 7.

C H A P. III.

Of the Generation of Civil Sovereignty or Majesty.

LET us proceed to examine, whence that Sovereignty or Supreme Command, which appears in every State, and which, as a kind of Soul, informs, enlivens and wields the Publick Body, is immediately produced. In order to which Enquiry, we suppose first of all, that Civil Authority, for the obtaining of its just Effect, requires as well Natural Strength, by means of which the Subject, if he presumes to decline Obedience, may be terrified into his Duty, through the Fear of Punishment; as also a Title, by Virtue of which, as by just Right, the Performance, or the Omission of any Action, may be imposed on Others: to which Title there answers in the Subject an Obligation to comply with what is thus enjoin'd. Now both these Requisites do immediately flow from those Acts by which the State is united and subsists. For tho' no Person can transfer his Strength to another by any real and natural Conveyance, yet He is supposed to be Master of other Men's Strength, according to whose Pleasure, they are bound to exert and apply it, not having any Power to resist or to refuse his Commands: In as much as there can be no other way of transferring Strength, amongst Men. And since all the Members of the State, in submitting their Wills to the Will of a single Director, did, at the same time, thereby oblige themselves to Non-resistance, or to obey him in all his Desires, and Endeavours of applying their Strength and Wealth to the Good of the Publick; it appears, that He who holds the Sovereign Rule, is possess'd of sufficient Force to compel any Persons to a Discharge of the several Injunctions, which he lays upon them (a). So likewise, the same Covenant affords a full and easy Title, by which the aforesaid Sovereignty appears to be Establish'd, not upon Violence, but in a Lawful manner, upon the voluntary Consent and Subjection of the respective Members. This then is the nearest and immediate Cause, from which Sovereign Authority, as a Moral Quality, doth result. For if we suppose Submission in one Party, and in another the Acceptance of that Submission, there accrues presently to the latter a Right of imposing Commands on the former; which is what we term Sovereignty or Rule. And as by private Contract, the Right of any thing which we possess, so by Submission the Right to dispose of our Strength and our Liberty of acting, may be convey'd to another. Whence, if any Person should, for Instance, voluntarily and upon Covenant, deliver himself to me in Servitude, he thereby really confers on me the Power of a Master. Against which way of arguing, to object the vulgar Maxim of Quod quis non habet, non potest in alterum transferre, No one can transmit to Another what he doth not possess himself; is but a Piece of trifling Ignorance. Yet still to procure to the Supreme Command an especial Efficacy and a Sacred Respect, there is need of another additional Principle besides the Submission of the Subjects. And therefore, he who affirms Sovereignty to result, immediately, from Compact, doth not in the least detract from the Sacred Character of Civil Government, or maintain that Princes bear Rule by Human Right only, not by Divine.

(a) Liv. l. 2. c. 59. The Force of the Supreme Command is built on the Consent of those who Obey.

II. Yet this is beyond Dispute, that sound Reason sufficiently intimated to Mankind, how that upon their Multiplication in the World, their Honour, Peace and Safety could not subsist without the Establishment of Civil States, which cannot be understood without a supreme Authority. And thus both the States themselves, and the chief Government erected in them, are suppos'd to proceed from God, as the Author of the Law of Nature. For not those things alone are from God, which He institutes and ordains by his own immediate Act, without the Concurrence or Interposition of Men; but those likewise which Men themselves, by the Guidance of good Reason, according as the different Circumstances of Times and Places required, have taken up in order to the fulfilling of some Obligation, laid upon them by God's Command (a). And, in as much as the Law of Nature cannot, amongst a great Multitude, be conveniently exercis'd, without the Assistance of Civil Government; 'tis manifest, that God, who imposed the said Law on Human Race, did command likewise the establishing of Civil Societies, so far as they serve for Instruments and Means of improving and enforcing the Law of Nature. And hence likewise it is, that God, in the Holy Scriptures, expressly approves of such Government, acknowledging and confirming it, as his own Appointment, and guarding by the severest Penalties the sacred Awe and Veneration of it. But whether or no God expressly commanded the instituting of States, as to particular Times and Places, is a Point in which we have no certain Information. For the Precept of the Sons of Noah, concerning Judicatures (1), which may perhaps be urged to this Purpose, doth not specify the particular Time and Place of erecting them. So that we may understand it in this Sense, that the Methods of judicial Processes, when once settled, ought diligently to be exercis'd and administer'd. Bæcler (b) explains the Origine of Civil Government with very little difference from what hath been here deliver'd on the same Head. The Supreme Authority, says he, is not to be derived from the bare Act of Men, but from the Command of God, and from the Law of Nature: or from such an Act of Men by which the Law of Nature is follow'd and obey'd. For He that enjoins Society, enjoins likewise the Order and Method to be observ'd in it: but now the very Soul of Society, is Government; and of all the Societies the most perfect is a Civil State. Which is right enough; provided we add, that the Divine Command concerning the Erection of Civil States, exerted and discover'd it self through the Suggestion of Reason, by which Men came to understand, that the Honour, Gracefulness and Peace, which the Law of Nature proposeth as its Aim, could not possibly subsist without Civil Society; especially after Mankind was considerably multiplied. And, in this very Point consists the Difference between Civil Communities and other Human Institutions: the latter also being introduced through the Perswasion of sound Reason, yet not after such a manner, as if the Honour, Safety and Welfare of Human Race could not be preserv'd without it. As to the Fifth Commandment in the Decalogue (2), which enjoins Obedience to the Civil Magistrates (urg'd by Bæcler;) we are to observe, that this doth not exclude the next and immediate Cause of Government; as the Commandment against Theft doth not, in the least, exclude or supersede the Origine of Property. And then for the Title of God's Vicegerents upon Earth, ascribed to Governours, we think it may very fairly and conveniently be explain'd in this Sense; that whereas the Peace and good Order of Mankind, was not sufficiently procured by a bare Reverence towards the Law of Nature, and towards the Author of it, that End is now happily produced, by the Virtue and Efficacy of Civil Dominion. In which Sense, the following Positions of the same Writer are plain and intelligible: therefore, That a State might properly be a State, and might obtain its End, God, by the Law of Nature, instituted a certain Order and Method of Commanding and Obeying, in which Order, by the Will of God, and by the

(a) Comp. 1 Tim. II. 2. (1) Vid. Selden. de Jur. N. & G. Sec. Heb. 1. 7. c. 4. &c. & Le Clerc in Deut. I. 17.

(b) Ad Grot. l. 1. c. 3. f. 6. (2) See hereafter in B. 8. c. 1. f. 4. towards the end. See Mr. Le Clerc upon this Commandment, and upon Gen. XXVII. 33.

*Dictate of Natural Reason, there must be somewhat Supreme and Independent, controllable by no human Pleasure, which as it is subject to God alone, so it is the Second or the Deputy of His Power; and this is nothing else, but the Supreme Civil Authority. But it is purely the Act and Disposal of Men, whether they will intrust the Supreme Authority with one or with many Persons, and what particular Methods they will follow in establishing distinct Forms of Commonwealths. Grotius's Opinion concerning the Original of Government is not so profane, but that it may be born with, if assisted by a dexterous Interpretation. He says (a) that Men, not influenced by the express Command of God, (and no such express Command doth indeed appear;) but of their own accord, (yet not without the Dictate of Right Reason, and the Will and Pleasure of God,) having experienc'd the weak Defence of separate Families against the Assaults of Violence, (after Mankind had considerably spread and increased,) united themselves in Civil Society; the Effect of which was Civil Power, styled on this Account by St. Peter (b), the Ordinance of Man, as establish'd, immediately, by Human Appointment. But as for the other Assertion of Grotius, That the Civil Authority is therefore term'd Divine or said to be of God, because God approved of what Men wholsomly instituted; we can on no account admit it in this Sense, as if God approved of the Establishment of Civil Government, (as 'twere) ex post facto, or after it had been actually settled; as He hath been pleas'd in many Places of Scripture (c), to confirm and ratify the Condition of Servants, which no doubt is an Human Invention. But 'twas absolutely requisite to add, that Men were able antecedently to apprehend the Divine Will, by duely weighing the Condition of Mankind upon its Multiplication; which as it could not be preserv'd without Civil Societies, or in a solitary Life; so Men, whilst in this Matter they followed the Guidance of Reason, Agreeably to the Scope and Design of the Law of Nature, must be supposed to have fulfill'd the Divine Pleasure.*

III. Tho' we think what hath been here deliver'd, sufficient as well to sanctify the Original of Civil Government, as to engage the Veneration of Subjects towards their Rulers; yet it may be worth our while to consider, what Solidity there is in the Arguments of a late Author (d), who maintains that we ought to go much higher in this Point. He supposeth then, that what is the Cause of Civil States is not likewise the Cause of the Publick Government and Supreme Authority in them. And therefore he allows the States themselves to be establish'd by Covenants; but asserts on the other side, that the Sovereignty is confer'd on Princes immediately by GOD himself, and that nothing which proceeds from Men, doth at all contribute to its Production. And, consequently, that a Free People, when they Voluntarily choose to themselves a King, do not confer the Majesty upon him, but only mark out the particular Person on whom that Character is, by the Divine Gift, bestow'd: As in many Boroughs or Towns Incorporate, the Election of Magistrates belongs to such an Order of Men; and yet the Magistrates receive their Power of acting, not from that Order of Men, but from the Supreme Ruler in the State. Which Position, tho' it may possibly take with some Persons, through a specious Appearance of more than ordinary Piety; yet 'tis manifest, that it tends to the breaking in sunder of all those Compacts and Fundamental Laws which pass between Princes and Subjects, with regard to the publick Administration. And in the first place, we cannot admit, that he should ascribe Majesty to Kings alone, and utterly deny it to Free States and Democracies. It's true, the Custom of Speech, during these last Ages, seems to have appropriated the Term of Majesty to Kings, by placing it amongst their Royal Titles. Yet this doth not hinder but that the same Word may be used to denote the Supreme Authority, under any Form of Government. And thus too, that Definition of Majesty, poor and dry as it is, in which he calls it, The chief Power, every where, over the State, agrees as well to a Senate, or to a Popular Assembly. Tho' in this respect Kings have the Pre-eminence, that each particular Member of the Senate, or of the general Assembly, is subject to the Supreme Power of the People; whereas the Person of a King acknowledgeth no Superior upon Earth. Yet as to the Force and Efficacy of Command over Subjects, 'tis the very same under all sorts of Constitutions. To proceed, the sole Cause of this Majesty he makes God himself, Who, upon the People's Election, immediately transfuseth it on the Prince. Here I am mistaken, if he did not conceive Majesty under the Notion of a real and physical Quality; as they manifestly do, who affirm Civil Government to be the Creature, or the Act and the Work, of God, so that no other Creature, either in an equal or in a superior kind of Causation, or by any innate Principles, doth at all contribute to its Institution. By which Discourse their gross Ignorance of Moral Things is sufficiently betray'd. The Argument which sets forth, how that Persons, exalted to the Throne from an inferior Station, have suddenly been surrounded with an unusual Glory or Splendor, which could not shine from any other place than Heaven; may serve for a Declamation before such an Audience, as are unable to distinguish empty Flourishes, from solid Truth. That Kings are the peculiar Care of GOD Almighty, serves not in the least towards the Proof of his Opinion. And besides, the Divine Providence hath been pleas'd to shew no less Evidences, as it were of a particular Favour, to other Persons preserv'd to be hereafter in an eminent manner useful to the World. At the same time, we read of no inconsiderable Number of Kings, who have drunk Poyson out of their precious Cups, or have fallen by the Treachery of their own People. As to that Temper and Constitution of Body in some Princes (1), which is observ'd to produce Effects not unlike to Miracles, the Physicians are to be consulted on the Point. Nor doth he prove what he aims at, by alledging the Punishment, either of Tyrannical Kings, or of Stubborn and Rebellious Subjects; or by heaping up Testimonies in so plentiful a Store; (which too acknowledge God no less for the Author of Aristocratical than of Monarchical Government;) or by reciting those Divine Predictions concerning some Kings, the like to which have not been wanting in popular States. And as to what pass'd in the Nation of the Jews, this can carry no Evidence as to the Original of Kingly Government in general (2); there having been many other Kingdoms establish'd long before: but it belongs rather to the manner of conferring the supreme Command on a particular Person; according to particular People.

(a) L. 1. c. 4. f. 7. n. 3. (b) Epist. 1. c. 2. v. 13. (c) Ephes. VI. 5, 6, 7, 8. Coloss. III. 22. 1 Tim. VI. 1. Tit. II. 9. (d) Joh. Fred. Hornius de Civitate, l. 2. c. 1.

IV. Let us consider the Arguments by which he labours to make out, that all Human Causes are of a far more inferior Power, than to be capable of producing Majesty or Sovereignty, the most August thing upon Earth. Amongst which, that which carries the Prize from all the rest is this; That since neither particular Men, nor a loose and ungovern'd Multitude, are themselves-endued with Majesty, therefore neither can they confer it on the Prince. But now it may and often does happen, that a Moral Quality, (in which Class, Government ought to be reckon'd,) shall be produc'd in another Person, by the Concurrence of those who had it not, truly and properly, in themselves before: so as that they may be rightly deem'd the productive Cause of the said Quality (a). As many Voices, joining in Consort, produce a Harmony, which no single Person could pretend to, by himself. And on this account, it must be censured as very false Reasoning in Socrates, when he encouraged Alcibiades not to fear the venturing himself in an Assembly of the People, by telling him, If You despise them Man by Man, You ought likewise to despise them when gather'd into a Multitude (b). Farther, since Sovereignty results from the Non-resistance of the Subjects, and from their Concession that the Sovereign shall dispose of their Wealth and Strength; 'tis easily seen that some scatter'd Seeds (as it were) of Government lie hid in particular Persons, which, by Means of concurrent Compacts, being excited into Motion, do grow and shoot forth. So that 'tis grossly absurd to infer, that Sovereignty is not, immediately, of Human Original, because it is not discoverable in the Natural Powers, or Faculties of Men: as if we were all this while speaking of a physical Quality; or as if there were no moral Qualities, distinct from the physical! I know not what Relish Wise and Christian Princes can have for such flattering Titles as these; that God transcribes in the Person of the King that Right of governing Mankind, which He held alone by virtue of Creation: Yet so as that GOD still retains His ancient Right, and therefore reacheth out this Power to Kings by Accumulation, and not by an absolute Abdication: together with the like Insinuations, by which base and wicked Parasites delight in raising the Glory of their Prince to the Dishonour of their God. You would think 'twas a moot Point with them, whether, after the constituting of Monarchs, God reserv'd to Himself any Power or Command over Mortal Race; and whether these who govern below, ought to own his Superior Authority? Certainly nothing can be more manifest, than that Civil Government is quite different in kind from that Command of God, which He holds by Right of Creation: and therefore 'tis not only absurd, but blasphemous to affirm, that the Sovereignty which God alone is invested with, as the Maker of All Things, He, out of his singular Benevolence, doth communicate to Men.

Endeavouring to give us another Proof that God is the immediate Cause of Sovereignty, he distinguisheth between the immediate efficient Cause, and the immediate constituting, or appointing Cause. The Sovereignty only is, he says, immediately produced by God; the Crown and Scepter being commonly receiv'd from other Hands. 'Hence he observes, that we 'ought to separate these two ways of speaking, 'God is the immediate Cause of Sovereignty; 'and God immediately constitutes the Prince, 'or God immediately confers the Sovereignty. 'It being somewhat tolerable to affirm, that 'God confers the Sovereignty, by the Mediation or Interposition, either of the popular 'Vote, or of Succession, or of Occupancy (c). 'But that, in every Act of producing Sovereignty, God cannot bear, or permit any, 'proximate or secondary Cause. Now whoever looks more nicely into things, will perceive, that these Men apprehend Sovereignty under the Idea of some physical Being, which after the Production of it by God, wanders up and down in the World, without any certain Seat or Subject, till the Prince being at length design'd by the People, it falls upon him and

(1) See Mr. Montaign's Essays, B. 2. c. 12. p. 343. Edit. Paris. in fol.

(2) See Algern. Sidney's Discourse upon Government, C. 2. s. 9.

(a) Vid. L. 41. t. 1. l. 46. D. de Acquir. Rer. Dom.

(b) In Ælian, V. H. 1. 2. c. 1.

(c) In this Sense are we to understand that Passage of Themistius, Orat. 6. Ed. Harduin, p. 73. C. Do not imagine the Senators to have been the main Causes and Authors of this Election. The Concurrence of their Votes was the Act of Heaven: the Vacancy of the Throne was the Appointment of the Gods, and Human Assistance was only the Instrument of completing and executing the Divine Counsels.

cloaths him with August Majesty and Splendor. Where they must certainly be at a Loss, if a Man should be so importunate as to demand, Whether this Sovereignty, before it finds a place of Rest in the Person of some Prince, be a Substance or an Accident; and if the latter, how it can exist without a Subject? Farther, at what time it was created; at the Beginning of the World, or afterwards? As likewise, Whether there be but one Sovereignty only, diffused through the whole World; or, Whether particular Princes have each a peculiar and entire Sovereignty of their own? Whether upon the Death of the Prince the Sovereignty dies with him; or, Whether it survives, like the Soul in Separation from the Body, or finds Reception, by a kind of Metempsychosis in the new King (a)? But in truth, to enquire after the Cause of Majesty or Sovereignty, taken in a separate Sense, is no better than Impertinence; in as much as it never exists, but in the Subject. 'Tis just the same as if I should make a particular Search into the Cause of Human Nature, separately considered; when as to the Cause of Men, as they exist, I have sufficient Information. And since this Author, before any hath obtain'd a Right to the Sovereignty, leaves it in the Power of the People, to elect what Person, and at what time they please, or to introduce any Form of Government (b); I would desire to know what would become of his Sovereignty, should all the People agree in preferring an Aristocratical or Democratical State to it. We acknowledge indeed, that Election properly and strictly speaking, is no more than the Manner of acquiring Empire. But there seems to be no reason which should hinder, why by one and the same Act the Person may not be mark'd out, and likewise the Sovereignty confer'd as then first commencing its Existence. For 'tis very Childish to imagine, that in Moral Things, when any Right, or any Moral Quality is confer'd on Another, it must of Necessity have somewhere existed separately before. On the contrary, it is evident, that Rights and all other Moral Qualities do rather arise from the Concurrence of Men's Minds in mutual Compacts (c). Nor will there be any Difficulty in removing that other Scruple; If the People be the secondary Cause of Sovereignty, then the Power by which they produce it, must have been receiv'd from God; which doth not appear to be true in Fact. For, since God hath implanted in Men a Care of their own Safety, hath commanded them to maintain a peaceable and well-order'd Conversation, and hath likewise endued them with Reason, whence they are enabled to find out Means conducing to this End, amongst which the Establishment of Civil Government justly challengeth the first place; who will make any farther question, whether or no the Power of setting this Constitution on foot, was a Privilege vouchsafed to them by God Himself? Those Maxims of Philosophy, which our Author so frequently lets fly against us, are partly but of slender Credit, and partly through Ignorance and Mistake, are unskilfully transfer'd from Natural to Moral Things; which we are not now at leisure to discuss in particular. And then, as for the Account which Ovid gives of the Origin of Sovereignty in the Fifth Book of his Fasts, 'tis meer Poetical Fiction.

V. No less Pains hath He taken in confuting the Opinions of those, who derive the supreme Authority from any other Head. Upon which Argument, as he hath deliver'd a great deal of Truth, so are there some things which are justly liable to Censure. He is so far in the right, when he denies that Wars, occasion'd by the Ambition or the Lust of Tyrants, could give Rise to the Sovereign Power. For Wars, occasion'd by Tyrants, do certainly presuppose Civil Communities. Yet still, the notorious Violence of Many Persons, and their Desire of oppressing others, might possibly give Occasion to the Fathers of Families, living independent and scatter'd up and down, to unite in Political Bodies (1). It is moreover evident, that most Empires, which have made a Noise and Figure in the World, if not all in general, have owed their Growth and Progress, to War. And yet this is no reason why we should pitch upon War for the Original and Fountain of Government. For at least, that Band of Men, which first conspired to invade their Neighbours, voluntarily engaged in Subjection to a common Leader. And as for those who were invaded, no lawful Sovereignty could be establish'd over them, till by giving their Covenant and Faith, they had promis'd Obedience to the Conquerour.

VI. Yet it is not so utter an Impossibility, that Civil Empire might arise from Paternal Government (2); such we mean as extended it self to some Breadth, taking many petty Villages under its Direction. 'Tis true, the Command of Fathers, belongs properly to the Care of educating Children, as that of Masters, doth to the Management and Improvement of Estates; nor can either be alter'd by the bare Number of Children, or of Servants. Yet there is not so wide a Distance between Paternal and Civil Government, but that Men might pass from one to the other, without the Production of any new Sovereignty by the immediate Power of God. For suppose a Father of a Family, bless'd with a plentiful Issue and with a numerous servile Train, to allow both

(a) Add the Dispute in Father Paul's History of the Council of Trent, l. 2. p. 213. concerning the Nature of the Sacramental Symbols, where the Managers are put to great Shifts, by Reason of their Unskilfulness in Moral Things.

(b) See Deuterom. XVII. 14. (c) Comp. Hobbes de Civie, l. 2. c. 4. See also above in B. 3. c. 5. f. 2, 3, 4.

(1) See Mr. Barbeyrac's First Note upon the Seventh Section of the First Chapter of this Book.

(2) See Mr. Barbeyrac's Second Note upon the Tenth Section of the Second Chapter of the Sixth Book, and Mr. Lock's Second Treatise of Civil Government, C. 8. s. 11, &c.

the Children and the Servants, by way of Emancipation or Infranchisement, the Privilege of managing their own Concerns, and of constituting particular Families, upon this Condition, that in order to the common Security, they shall still be subject to his Government; I know not what such a Person wants to make him a compleat Prince, provided he be Master of so much Strength, as is sufficient to compass the End of a Civil State. Upon his Decease, if he left any Appointment with regard to a Successor, especially if his Sons consented to the Disposal, that Settlement shall be followed. If he did not, then the People, as if they were to frame the whole Constitution anew, shall resolve what Government or what Governour they will hereafter receive. In which Case there will be no Breach of the Law of Nature, tho' the Younger Son should by the free Votes of the Assembly, be elected in his Father's room (a).

VII. He farther endeavours to evince, that neither can such a Person be term'd the Cause of Sovereignty, who first possessing it himself, confers the Regal Dignity on some one who is at present his Subject, releasing him from all future Dependence: as if a King remits to his Vassal his former Engagement, and allows him to hold as a Sovereign Prince, what he before enjoy'd only as a Feudatary Tenant: or if he makes a Grant to any of his Subjects of some Province in his Dominions, exempting it, for the future, from his own Jurisdiction. For a Cession of this kind is (he says,) no more than the Manner of obtaining Sovereignty, and may be reduced to the Head of Elections. Now whoever thoroughly considers the Matter, will easily find out, how the Supreme Authority is produced in this Case. And 'tis plainly thus; the King by quitting his Right, both over the Vassal and over the Feud, at the same time makes one Person capable of Sovereign Power, and others capable of submitting to the Exercise of it. For that Feudal Territory cannot hereafter belong to the Vassal, as an Absolute and Independent Prince, unless it be first utterly disengaged from the Authority of the Lord. And by this Means, the Government, thus establish'd, really and truly proceeds from the Consent of the People. For if the Lord hath Power, by his own sole Act, to bestow such a Province on whom he pleaseth, he certainly, at the Beginning, receiv'd this Power from the Consent of the People, either Voluntarily given, or obtain'd by the Issue of a just War. But if the Lord cannot do this by his own bare Authority, then 'tis evident, that the express Consent of the People must concur in the Disposal.

VIII. To conclude this Dispute; the same Author in the last place maintains, that even then the People are not the Cause of Sovereignty in the Prince, when having before liv'd under a Democratical Form, they choose a single Governour. For, says he, the Sovereignty cannot here be confer'd on the Monarch till such time as the People have first renounced their Right; but the People, in that very Moment, in which they renounce their Right, have no longer any thing to do with the Sovereignty: therefore all that they do, is to elect a Person, who having receiv'd his Power from GOD, shall, for the future, rule over them. But now upon the same Argument, it may be denied, that Property can pass from one Man to another. For, just in this manner, another cannot become Proprietor of my Possession, till I have first resign'd my Property. But after my Resignation, I have lost my Property, and consequently cannot transfer that on Another which I have not my self: and therefore all that I do, is to choose a certain Person, into whom the Property, (sprouting up a-new, I know not where,) is afterwards to be infused.

As to the voluntary Abdication of Monarchs, his Opinion runs in the following Sense; That the Government being first abdicated, and the People loos'd from their Allegiance; the Sovereignty doth afterwards return to its Original Author, in order to its being again brought back, and communicated to the appointed Heir. This is manifestly a Metempsychosis or Transmigration of the Sovereign Power; which a wise Man will not require us to be at the Trouble of confuting. In Reality, he who abdicates a Crown, gives his Successor an Occasion, and a Capacity of receiving it from the Hands of the People, upon their Submission; or, of actually entering upon the Government, to which the Decree of the People, settling the Order of the Succession, had before given him a Right.

IX. It may not be improper, before we leave our present Subject, to enquire in short, to whose Power it belongs, to confer the Regal Titles and the Ensigns of Majesty, or any Denomination by which the Supreme and Independent Authority in a State, inhering in a single Person, is wont to be express'd. And here it's manifest, that to bestow the Name and Title, belongs to the same Persons, who have a Right to bestow the thing it self, that is, the Supreme Command. And by Consequence, a People, that either now first unite themselves in a Civil Body, or else, laying aside their former Frame of Government, resolve on a Monarchical Constitution for the future, whilst they confer on one Man the Authority over themselves, they, by this very Act, gave him a Right to bear the Title and Style of King, and to signify his High Station by decent Badges of Honour. Such a King, as he owes his Dignity and Empire to no Foreign Power; so he need not wait for the Consent and Approbation of other Princes or States, in order to the assuming the Actions or the Character proper to his Office. But as a

(a) See Genes. XXVII. 29, 37.

Foreigner could not dispute his Right to the Government, without a manifest Injury, so would it be injurious likewise to deny him the Appellation of King. Nor can any Pretence to the contrary be drawn from the small Extent of his Dominions. For a Kingdom doth not denote any certain Measure of Territory or of Power, but a particular Form of Civil State, which may happen to be greater or less. But to make him a King, who before own'd the Command of some Superior, 'tis necessary, that he obtain the Consent of his Superior, to release Himself and his Dominions from the Bond, by which they stood engaged to their former Lord. Thus he who is under a Feudal Obligation, cannot, without his Lord's Consent, take up the Character of a Sovereign Prince. And unless he be releas'd from this Obligation, tho' his Lord should grant him the Title, yet he will hold the Dignity it self after an imperfect and subordinate manner. So we find that the Successors of Alexander the Great, durst not assume the Regal Style, till Alexander's own Family was extinct, to which the Sovereignty did of Right belong. And even after this, 'twas necessary for them to have the Consent of the People under their Command, which the numerous Forces kept in Pay about them, secured beyond the Possibility of a Denial (a). In the same manner, he who subdues a Territory by Arms, as he may, by the Right of War, acquire the Power and Authority, so may he likewise obtain the Title and Character of a King (b). If a Prince would erect any particular Province of his Empire into a distinct Kingdom, the way of compassing this Design, is to separate it from the rest of the Body, and to govern it by a peculiar Jurisdiction, independent from his other Dominions. That the Roman Senate frequently bestow'd the Title of Friend and King, as Marks of Esteem and Honour, is a piece of History, vulgarly known. And this they might justly do with regard, either to those Princes on whom they themselves had confer'd the respective Dominions, or to those, over whose Kingdoms they still held some Superior and Transcendent Right. But to have offer'd the same Title, as purely a Matter of Favour, to other Monarchs, over whom they could not pretend to the least Authority, had been a most insolent piece of Usurpation. And yet such a presuming Prerogative, the Popes have not been ashamed to challenge over the most Free and Independent States of Europe (c).

(a) Vid. Cornel. Nep. Eumen. Plutarch Demet. Justin. l. 15. c. 2. Appian Alexand. in Syriac. Diodor. Sic. l. 29. c. 54, 55. (b) Vid. Justin. l. 41. c. 4, 5. (c) See Father Paul's History of the Council of Trent, l. 5. p. 354. where he reports, how Paul IV. advanced Ireland to the Honour of a Kingdom: and Thuanus's Hist. l. 46. about the Title of Great Duke confer'd on Cosmo of Florence.

CHAP. IV.

Of the Parts of Sovereignty, and their Natural Connexion.

THE Supreme Civil Authority, tho' in its own Nature it be one indivisible thing (1), yet because it exerts its self in different Acts, according as it is employ'd about different Means, necessary to the Preservation of the State, is generally conceiv'd as consisting of many Parts; with Resemblance to those Parts which are term'd Potential (2), in Natural Philosophy. For the Sovereign Command is, by no means, such an entire Compound Being as is made up of Heterogeneous Parts, which as they are join'd and knit together, by some common Band, compose one Body, yet so as that each Part is capable of subsisting separately by its self. But as the Soul is one single Substance, dispensing Life and Vigour through the whole Body, and yet as it exerciseth different Operations, in Proportion to the Difference of the Objects presented to it, or of the Organs through which it works, is conceiv'd as having Potential Parts; so, in like manner, the Supreme Authority, as it is busied in prescribing general Rules of Action, is term'd the Legislative Power; as it determines the Controversies of the Subjects by the Standard of these Rules, 'tis the Judiciary Power; as it either arms the Subjects against Foreigners, or commands them to lay down their Hostility, 'tis the Power of War and Peace; as it takes in the Assistance of Ministers in the Discharge of publick Business, it is called the Right or Power of appointing Magistrates; and so with regard to its other Offices and Functions.

II. What therefore these Parts of Sovereignty are, may plainly be discover'd from the Nature and End of Civil States. A State, then, is a Moral Body conceiv'd to act by one Will. But in as much as it is made up of many Natural Persons, each of whom hath his particular Will and Inclination; and since these several Wills cannot, by any Natural Union, be join'd together, or temper'd and dispos'd into a lasting Harmony, therefore that one Will, which we attribute to the State, must be produced by the Agreement of all Persons, to submit their own private Wills to the Will of one Man, or one Assembly of Men, on whom the Government hath been confer'd. Farther, since the respective Members ought, in Duty, to conform themselves to the Will of the State, 'tis necessary, that this Will be made known to them by clear and evident Signs. Hence we apprehend it to be one of the chief Offices of Sovereignty, to prescribe and declare to others what they ought to perform, or to omit. And because 'twould be impossible, in so great a Multitude, to give Injunctions to every particular Man, on Occasion of every particular Action; therefore general Rules are establish'd, for the perpetual Information and Direction of all Persons in all Points, either of Positive or of Negative Duty. Besides, since we easily discover amongst Men, an immense Variety of Judgments and of Appetites, whence an infinite Field of Controversy might arise; it is on this Score highly conducive to the common Peace, that publick Determinations should settle what each Man ought to look on as his own, what as another's; what is to be esteem'd Lawful or Unlawful (1) in the State, what Honest or Dishonest: As likewise, what Degree every Man retains of his Natural Liberty, or after what Manner each Person is to moderate the Use and Exercise of his own private Rights, in order to the publick Tranquillity (2).

(1) This is Grotius's Term, in B. I. c. 3. f. 17. n. 1. 'Tis founded upon a false Hypothesis, which our Author has confuted in the preceding Chapter. See Mr. Barbeyrac's First Note upon this Section. (2) This Term is explain'd in Mr. Barbeyrac's Second Note upon this Section.

III. To proceed; The chief End of Civil Communities is, that Men, by conspiring mutually to aid and assist each other, may be secured against those Damages and Injuries, which they might otherwise suffer from their own Kind; and, by this means, may either enjoy Peace, or have sufficient Defence against any Assaults or Molestations. Now in order to the procuring of Peace, 'tis, in an especial manner, necessary, that each Person be so far guarded against the Violence of his Fellows, as that he may be able to live securely; that is, without having any just Cause to fear Injury from Others, whilst he himself is not injurious to Others. Indeed, that Men should be absolutely protected from mutual Hurt, or that all Injuries should be impossible, the Condition of human Things will not allow. Yet such Care may be taken, such Provision made, as that there shall be no probable Grounds for the Apprehension of Danger. And this Security, is the Aim which Men propose, when they submit themselves to the Direction of Others. Of which, if no greater Degree could be obtain'd by joining Strength, than each private Man could give himself by standing singly upon his own Guard, 'twould be Folly to renounce our Natural Liberty, in which every Person is his own Protector. But to compass this Security, 'tis not enough, that each of those who are about to form a Civil Body, do covenant with the rest, by Word or Writing, that he will not kill, or steal, or offer any other Harm or Prejudice: For 'tis manifest how far Human Nature is, in most Persons, corrupted; and Experience sadly informs us, how little Force the Reverence of verbal Engagements, or the Authority of Oaths hath, with the Generality of Mankind, towards the keeping them in their Duty, should the Fear of Punishment be once remov'd. For which reason likewise, 'tis not enough to have one who shall prescribe Rules of Acting, if he be invested with no farther Power. Therefore, to engage Men to an Observance, both of the common Precepts of Nature, and of those particular Laws, which are ena'd for the Good of the State, there must be added the Fear of Punishment, and the Power of inflicting what is fear'd. And, that Punishment may produce the proper End of its Institution, it ought to rise to such a Measure and Proportion, as that there shall be manifestly a greater Evil in transgressing the Laws, than in obeying them; so that the Severity, of what is to be suffer'd, may over-balance any Pleasure or Profit, which may now, or hereafter, be obtain'd by the Offence: It being impossible for Men, out of Two Evils, not to choose that which, to their Judgment, appears the least. And thus the Regard which Men have to their own Lives and Safeties, secures mine. And altho' it may sometimes happen, that Persons shall be so transported, either through Rashness and Precipitancy, or some other extravagant Commotion of Mind, as to prefer the Satisfaction of the Crime, to the Bitterness of the Penalty; yet this is to be reckon'd amongst those uncommon and extraordinary Accidents, which the Condition of our Nature, and the Circumstances of our Affairs will not suffer us to prevent. This Power of inflicting Punishment, on those who transgress the Commands of the Sovereign, is presumed to be then confer'd, when particular Men yield up the Use of their own Strength to the Service of the Community. By which Act, they oblige themselves to execute Justice on Delinquents, when the Sovereign demands their Assistance in this Particular; or, at least, not to aid and defend those who are to suffer. But, for a Man to oblige himself to undergo Punishment, without Reluctancy or Resistance, is a vain Engagement, and such as cannot hold good, on account of that Natural Aversion, which we bear to all things, destructive of our Safety and our Life. It is, truly enough, affirm'd by Mr. Hobbes (a), that this is the highest Degree of Power, which Man can hold over Man, to be able to prescribe to others, in whatever he thinks beneficial to the State; and, by denouncing just Penalties, to terrify the Stubborn and Disobedient into a Compliance with what he thus enjoins. But then, as for what the same Author farther asserts, That he who hath a Right of inflicting Punishment, as he shall see fit, hath a Right of compelling all Persons to all Things, at his Pleasure; it ought to have a Limitation affix'd to it, taken from the End of Civil Government: in as much as we are to presume, that he in whom the Supreme Authority resides, hath no other Will or Pleasure, but such as, upon good Principles of Reason, appears to have some Tendency towards the said End.

(1) Tho' here our Author uses the Terms of Hobbes, (De Cive, c. 6. f. 9.) yet he means always, that the Laws of a Sovereign include nothing contrary to the Divine Laws, whether Natural or Reveal'd, as he will prove in the first Chapter of the next Book. (2) The latter Part of this Section is taken from our Author's Abridgment, De Offic. Hom. & Civ. B. 2. c. 7. f. 2.

(a) De Cive, c. 6. f. 6.

IV. Moreover, since under the exactest Systems of Laws, there arise frequent Disputes, about the right Application of them to particular Cases, and many Circumstances are to be consider'd, before a Fact can be pronounced Illegal, or the Author of it convicted: On this account, the Judiciary Power is supposed to come in to the Assistance, and Support of the Two Powers already mentioned. The Office of the Judiciary Power, is to hear and decide the Causes of the Subjects, to examine the Actions of particular Men, which are represented as Breaches of the Law; and to pronounce Sentence according to the Legal Penalties. Mr. Hobbes (a) seems to have had an improper Notion of this Power: since the Right of Judging, as to the Use and Exercise of any Part of the Sovereignty, is understood to be implied or included in the respective Part.

V. But tho' the Means, hitherto prescribed, may afford the Subjects full Security against those of their own Body; yet this is not enough to answer the End of Civil Establishments. For 'tis to little Purpose, for Men to be at peace amongst themselves, if they are not able to defend themselves against Strangers; and this they cannot effect, unless they are united in their Strength. Because it's purely owing to Conjunction, that Many are stronger than One: in as much as, otherwise, a thousand separate Men are not superior, in Force, to a single Person. In order therefore to the General Safety and Welfare, 'tis Necessary, that there be such a Power in the State, as may assemble, unite and arm so many Subjects, (or hire Mercenaries in their room,) as shall be thought sufficient for the Common Defence, with Proportion to the uncertain Number and Strength of the Enemy; and may likewise, when it shall be afterwards expedient, embrace Conditions of Peace. And since both the Seasons of Peace and of War receive a considerable Advantage from Leagues, for the better communicating the Benefits of different States, and for repelling and reducing to Reason some stronger Enemy, by a confederate Force: there must be inherent, in the Sovereignty, a Power to enter into such Alliances as shall be serviceable in either Condition, and to engage all the Subjects to a just observance of them; and, at the same time, to derive upon the Publick such Fruits and Advantages as shall accrue by their Means.

VI. Again, since the Affairs of the Community, occurring as well in Peace as in War, cannot be administr'd and executed without Officers and subordinate Magistrates, there is need of such a Power as may appoint Men, to enquire into the Controversies arising between Subjects (b), to dive into the Policies of neighbouring States, to gather in and give out the publick Revenues, and lastly, in every respect, to consult and promote the Common Benefit. And then, it must be another part of the same Power to compel these Officers, when once constituted, to the Performance of their Duty, and to call them to account, upon proper Occasions (c).

VII. Farther, in as much as publick Business in the time of War, or of Peace (1), cannot proceed without Expence, such a Power is likewise requisite, as may set aside, for these Uses, some part of the Goods, or Products, of the Country; or may compel private Men to contribute so much out of what they separately possess, as is judg'd necessary to support the common Charges; as likewise to command and require the Hands of the Subjects, upon Occasion of any needful Work. To the same Power belongs the Invention of other lawful Ways and Means of increasing the Riches of the State. The Principal of which, is the Right of imposing Duties on Goods imported or exported; and also of paring off some moderate Proportion from the Price of Commodities, consumed by the Subject.

VIII. Lastly, Tho' to take away the intrinsic Liberty of the Will, and, at the same time, to unite and compose Men's Judgments of things in a perpetual Harmony, by an inward Principle, be above Human Ability to effect; yet to provide that these Sentiments and Persuasions, however different, may not disturb the publick Peace, is a Business absolutely necessary. For since all voluntary Actions take their Rise from the Will, and have a Natural Dependence upon it; and since the Inclination of the Will, to the doing or the not doing of any thing, is built on the Opinion of that Good or Evil, of that Reward or Punishment, which the Party conceives will follow from the Performance or the Omission; and consequently, since Men's Actions are ever guided by their Opinions; some outward Means must needs be found out, by which these Opinions and Judgments shall be brought, as near as possible, to conspire and agree; at least shall be hindred from giving the State any Disturbance by their Opposition. To this End it is expedient, that the State do publickly own and profess such Doctrines, as are agreeable to the End and Design of Civil Government, and the Minds of the Subjects be, from their Childhood, grounded in them. In as much as the Generality of Mankind judge of things, according as they have been accusom'd, and according to the common Notions, which they see obtain in the World: very few being able, by the Strength of their own Parts, to discern what is good and solid in the Conduct of Human Life. There is, indeed, scarce any one Opinion, either relating to the Worship of God, or concerning those Things, the Knowledge of which is strictly term'd Human, but may be made the Occasion of Dissention, Discord, Reviling; and, in the final Issue, of Blood and War. And this doth not happen, on account of the Falsity of the Opinion, or because to admit the contrary, would bring heavy Inconveniences on Mankind, or on Civil Communities; but by reason of Men's unhappy Dispositions, who always imagining themselves to be wise, would gladly appear so to all others, and are violently enraged against those who presume to be of the contrary Perswasion. This any one will readily confess, who hath but chanced to cast his Eye on those Quarrels of the Learned, about meer Trifles, carried on with no less Heat and Fury, than if their Lives and Religions lay at Stake. Now such Differences and Disputes, tho' they cannot be absolutely prevented, yet they may be hindred from interrupting the publick Peace and Tranquillity, by due Penalties enacted against those who shall maintain and foment them (a). Yet what we would observe on this Subject, is not properly level'd against those Opinions concerning indifferent Points, but against such, as being obtruded upon Mankind, either under the Colour of Religion, or with some other fair Pretence, shock and confound the Laws of Nature, and the Principles of sound Policy, and tend to the breeding of Mortal Diseases in a State. Nor will any true and just Opinions be in Danger of suffering by this Censure. For, no true Doctrine is opposite to the common Peace; and that which doth contradict Peace cannot be true; unless we may, at the same time, affirm that Peace and Concord are repugnant to the Laws of Nature. Wherefore the Power of examining the aforesaid pernicious Doctrines, and of banishing them from Civil Societies, is justly attributed to the Supreme ruling Authority (b).

(a) Ibid. f. 8.(b) See Exod. XVIII. 15. Philo Jud. de Creatione, init. Joseph. Archaeolog. III. 3.(c) Add. Bœcler ad Grot. l. 1. c. 3. s. 6. p. 218.(1) See St. Paul's XIII. Chapter to the Romans, Vers. 6.

IX. Our next Business is to shew, that these Parts of the Sovereign Power are naturally so united, and, as it were, interwoven with one another, that should we suppose some of them to inhere in one Person, some in others, the regular Frame of the State must absolutely be destroy'd. Which Truth that we may thoroughly apprehend, it ought to be observ'd, that there are, above all others, two Bands especially, by which the Wills of many Men, or of whole Assemblies, are closed and made to conspire into one; Covenant and Command: of which, nevertheless, the latter adds a much stronger Tie than the former. They who are held together by bare Covenant, stand obliged, by the Law of Nature, voluntarily to perform the Terms of Agreement; their Natural Equality, in other respects, remaining as before. Now so long as the Articles are on both sides observ'd, a fair Union and Concord may continue amongst them. And when any one Party, with a wicked Design, flies from the Engagement, he is guilty of a Breach of the Law of Nature: but then the rest, whose Interest it was that the Covenant should remain inviolable, have no means left of reducing the false Brother to Reason, but meer Force of Arms, in which he who offer'd the Injury, is frequently not inferior to him that receiv'd it. After the same manner, they, who upon equal Terms, stand bound to each other by virtue of some League or Confederacy, are at Peace and Agreement, so long as each Party makes good what he promis'd; but when either proves perfidious, the Band of Union is dissolv'd, and an Occasion of Hostility ensues. Whence it appears, that bare Covenants are not Bonds sufficient, at least, for the long holding together many Persons in a Moral Body: especially since it doth not always so happen, that the smaller and weaker Party recede from their Obligation, to the Prejudice of the more numerous and the

(a) Plato de LL. l. 11. p. 977. D. Ed. Wech. Let no Man revile another: but in Cases of Doubt and Controversy, let the Parties behave themselves towards each other, and towards the Company, after the manner of Learners, as well as of Teachers; so as utterly to refrain from Reproach. For, to abuse each other in a Dispute with foul and scandalous Language, is to scold like Women: and, very frequently, Words, which in themselves are trifling Matters, give Occasion to the deepest Hatred and Enmity amongst Men. (b) Diogenes Laert. (in Theophrast. l. 38.) reports a Law of Sophocles Son of Amphiclidus, to this Purpose, That no Philosopher should keep a School, unless by the Decree of the Senate and Commons; and that to do the contrary should be a Capital Crime.

Plato de LL. l. 7. p. 888. C. Ed. Wech. Let no Poet presume to feign any thing, but what is consistent with the Laws of the State, and is just, honest and good. Nor shall he be allow'd to shew his Compositions to any private Persons, before the Guardians of the Laws, and the Judges appointed for this Service, have revised and approved of the Performance. To this Purpose see Casaubon Exercit. in Baron. and his Epistle to Fronto Duceus, n. 624. Ed. Grev. Nor is it a despicable Remark of Mr. Hobbes, which he gives us in his Book de Homine, c. 13. l. 8. Many Books, says he, we have, compil'd by Romans, either under the Common-wealth, or soon after its Extinction, and by Grecians, during the flourishing Condition of the Athenian State, replenish'd as well with Precepts as Examples, by which the Minds of the Vulgar are render'd averse to Regal Power; and this for no other reason, but because they find these Authors making Panegyrics on the Villanies of base and perfidious Men, that is, on the Murthers of Kings, when they have before branded them with the Name of Tyrants. But still the Genius and Disposition of the Multitude is much more corrupted by the reading of those Books, and the hearing of those Preachers, who would have a Kingdom within a Kingdom, an Ecclesiastical within a Civil Supremacy. Hence instead of the Old Bruti and Cassii, we have our Modern Clements and Ravalliacs, who whilst in assassinating their Princes, they were only the wicked Instruments of other Men's Ambition, thought they did God Service.

Add the Preface of the same Author to his Book de Cive; as also Leviath. cap. 21. where he reckons up the Mischiefs, that have arisen from the Aristotelian Doctrine of Liberty. Corp. de Cive, c. 6. Leviath. c. 29, 46, 47.

more powerful, but very often the direct contrary. And tho' we should suppose, in the Principal Compact, a Clause to this Purpose, that whoever presumed to break the Articles, should be prosecuted with the united Strength of all the rest, yet (not to say, that this Clause would be of no effect, in case many Persons should join in such a Breach,) unless a Democratical Government were establish'd amongst the Members, or, unless they, who before compos'd a Society, do unite more closely in a Formal State, there will be need of another Covenant, to determine what Method shall be observ'd in proceeding against him who shall refuse to stand to this additional Engagement; and so on, in infinitum. But now Sovereignty or Command, is a much stronger Tie, for the keeping an united Body of Men in firm Agreement. For they who are bound to each other under the same Government, do not continue equal to the Government it self; but whilst the Power of prescribing Rules to, and of inflicting certain Evils, by way of Punishment, upon such as transgress the Rules prescrib'd, is confer'd either on a single Person, or upon an Assembly; all Persons lie under a far greater Necessity to remain obedient, than if they were united by Compact only; which could not take away the Equality of the Members, or their Right of administering their private Affairs, according to their own Judgment.

X. It ought farther to be consider'd, that if any will maintain the Potential Parts of the Sovereignty (as they are term'd,) to be, within the same State, seated in distinct Persons or Councils, they must, at the same time, necessarily allow, that he, to whom any Part belongs, must be furnish'd with sufficient Power, as well to compel the Subjects to the Observance of what he ordains, by virtue of that Part, as to defend this his Right, when attack'd or disturb'd; tho' that particular Limb of the Prerogative, which contains the Power of War and Peace, may possibly reside in another Person: and lastly, that he have a Right of determining, by his own Judgment, at what time and in what manner, the Part of the Government which he holds shall be exercis'd and employ'd. For to possess a Right of declaring to Others what You would have them do, and yet to be destitute of Power, for the obliging those to a just Compliance who refuse Your Injunctions, deserves any other Name rather than that of Authority or Command. And we hold that by a very precarious Title, which we cannot defend against Others. Nor is he any better than Another's Officer or Minister, who exerciseth any kind of Right at the Pleasure and Disposal of that other Party.

XI. From what we have laid down, it will be evident, that there is so near and so necessary a Connexion between all the parts of the Sovereignty, as that not one of them can be separated from any other, but the regular Frame of the Common-wealth must be destroy'd, and instead of it, an irregular Body must start up, held together only by an infirm and ineffectual Covenant. For if we appropriate the Legislative Power to one, and to another, the Judiciary, each primarily and independently, it will of Necessity follow, that either the former is null and void, or that the latter only ministers to the former. Because, to make Laws which You can't put in Execution is vain and insignificant: and on the other side, to have Strength whereby You may compel and controul, and yet such as You must not use or apply but at the Pleasure of another, is to be an Officer barely executive. Again, should we grant the latter the Privilege of applying his Strength according to his own Discretion, without being accountable to Others, then we utterly overthrow the Legislative Power, as before. It is necessary therefore, that both these Powers should depend upon one and the same Will. Nor can the Power of Peace and War, or that of exacting Tribute be separated from this vindicative or judiciary Right. In as much as no one can fairly compel the Subjects to bring in Contributions, towards the Expences of the State, on either account, but he who hath a Right to punish the disobedient. Farther, it would be absurd to give the Right of making Leagues, for the Service either of Peace or War, to any other Person, besides him who hath also the Right of decreeing Peace or War, as he judgeth convenient. For otherwise, either the former will be only a bare Minister, or the latter will depend upon Another's Pleasure, in acquiring Means for the Exercise of his own Right. So likewise, if You constitute any Person for the chief Management of Business, and do not, at the same time, empower him to appoint inferior Assistants, and to require their Service in their respective Posts, (without which Assistants the Business cannot be perform'd,) You really make him as meer a Servant as the rest. For which reason, neither can the Power of appointing Magistrates, be divided from the other parts of the Supreme Authority. Lastly, to the same Authority it must belong, to take Cognizance of Doctrines and Opinions, of such especially, as bear any Relation to the End of Civil Government, and which are of Force and Efficacy either in promoting or in hindring Obedience to the Sovereign Ruler. For if one should command the Subjects to do a thing, under Pain of Temporal Death, and another perswade them that to do it would be to incur Eternal Death, and each by his own Right, separately and independently enjoy'd (1); the Consequence must be, not only that the Subjects, tho' innocent, may be justly punish'd, but also that the State must sink into an irregular System, a Monster with two Heads. For neither can any Man serve two Masters, nor, in the Case before us, is he whom we think we ought to follow, upon Pain of Eternal Damnation, less our Master, than he whom we obey upon the Fear of temporal Destruction. And were the Right of controlling and regulating Doctrines once taken away, the more superstitious Subjects would be drawn into Rebellion by their own Fancies (a). What farther Power the Sovereign hath, as to Sacred Matters under Christian Governments, is a Point which we leave to be more distinctly stated by Others (b) (1). Nor are we here at leisure, to discuss the Opinion of Philo the Jew (c), who having shewn, that Moses was a King, a Law-giver, a Priest, and a Prophet, adds, Since all these Offices are reducible to one and the same Head, they ought by mutual Ties, to be united and enclosed one within the other; and they are all requisite in the same Person, so that he who wants any one of the four, is to be look'd on as a lame Ruler of an imperfect Common-wealth.

(1) See a Discourse of our Author's, intituled, De Concordia vera Politicæ, cum Religione Christianæ, s. 11.

XII. This will be more clearly discern'd, if we examine those several Divisions of the Sovereignty, which might be propos'd. Let, therefore, the Power of Peace and War be in the Prince; the Power of making Laws and executing Justice in the Senate; the Right of levying Tribute, in an Assembly of the People. Here, if the King commands the Subjects to Arms, and they refuse to obey his Orders, either the King may compel them by Punishments, which he himself has a Right of inflicting, or he ought to deliver them up to take their Tryal before the Senate. Now should we admit the former of these, it doth not appear, how he, whom we suppose not to have the Power of putting the Laws in Execution, can punish the Subjects before they are actually list'd, and brought under Martial Discipline. If You say, that, in this particular Case, the King hath a Right to punish the Disobedient, tho' not in other Cases; You, at the same time, give Him the Privilege of oppressing and grieving his People as he thinks fit, and so You cancel the Rights of All beside. For when he orders them to take up Arms, he'll punish them if they dare to refuse; and when he hath once led them out on an Expedition, then the Nature of Military Discipline gives him the Power of Life and Death over them: and nothing is easier than for a General to cut off any Soldier, who hath the Misfortune to fall under his Hatred or Displeasure (d). On the other hand, if the King must be oblig'd to have recourse to the Senate for Justice, when any Persons refuse to list themselves under his Command; in this Case, either the Senators must pronounce the Sentence of their Condemnation, and give Orders for the Execution of it, barely by the King's Commission and Authority; which is contrary to the Supposition: or they must judge whether the Act alledg'd be Criminal or not; and this Proceeding will certainly be vain and fruitless, unless the same Judges may likewise take upon them to examine, whether or no the War now engaged in by the Prince, be for the Advantage of the Common-wealth: And thus the King's Right will, again, be destroyed. We shall discover the same Inconveniences, if we compare the Right of the Prince with that of the People, under such a Constitution, as we did before with that of the Senate. For as the Measures of War are now settled in most Countries, Tacitus's Observation (e) holds true; that, Armies cannot be had without Pay, and Pay cannot be had without Taxes. If therefore the Prince have not a Power of compelling the Subjects, by virtue of his Sovereign Command, to bring in their Shares of the Publick Contributions, his Right over the Affair of War, will be no more than a bare Power of perswading and advising the People, that, in such or such a particular Juncture, to engage in a War, would be for the Advantage of the Common-wealth. On the other hand, if the People are not empower'd to judge whether the War, towards which these Subsidies are levied, be for their Interest or not; then what have they to boast of, but the laborious and servile Office of Assessors and Collectors? Nor will things be in a better Posture, should we separate the Branches of Sovereignty, according to any other Division that could be invented (f). So just was that Remark of Asinius Gallus, in Tacitus (g), that As a Government hath but one Body, so it must be directed but by one Mind: (whether of a single Person, or of a Council or Assembly.) This may be well illustrated by the Example of the Human Soul, to which the Sovereign Authority in a State, seems to bear some Resemblance. Now should we suppose the Potential Parts of the Rational Soul, the Understanding and the Will, to exist separately, in two different Subjects or Suppositums, one of which should have only the Faculty of the Understanding, the other only the Faculty of the Will; neither of these Suppositums could be call'd a Man, nor could Human Actions be expected from either; whilst one lay unactive and immoveable, the other blind and insensible. To which purpose the Epigram in the Anthologia (h) seems proper to be applied:

Παρεδ ὁ μὲν γυφοῖς, &c.

The Blind Man bears the Lame: what Fate denies
The Wretched Pair, their mutual Help supplies;
One lends his Feet, the other lends his Eyes.

Here the two unfortunate Persons were able,

(a) Comp. Hobbes ibid. & Horn. l. 3. c. 11. f. 3. (b) See especially Grotius De Imperio Summarum Potestatum circa sacra, c. 1. (1) See Mr. Barbeyrac's Second Note upon this Section. (c) De Præm. & Pam. p. 919. A. Edit. Paris. (d) Vid. Liv. l. II. c. 23, 32, 58. l. III. c. 10, 20, 24. l. IV. c. 1, 5, 58. l. V. c. 2, 10. and in many other places. (e) Diodor. Sic. l. XIV. c. 73. Quintus Curtius, l. VII. c. 2. Pelys l. 1. c. 9. (f) Hist. l. IV. c. 74. (g) Annal. l. I. c. 12. (h) L. 1. (f) Add. Bodin. De Republ. l. 2. c. 1. p. 287. with the Observation made on that Author, by Arniseus, De Republ. l. 2. c. 6. f. 1. par. 56.

in some sort, to make up the Defects of Nature, so long as they agreed to afford their mutual Assistance. But should this Agreement have been once broken, and a Quarrel have happen'd between them, each Party would have been alike at a loss about their Way. In the same manner, should any persist in dividing the Parts of the Sovereignty, he will by no means compose a regular State, but a disorderly Body, the Members of which, holding these separate Limbs of the Government, shall be kept together, not by any common Authority, but by bare Compact or Agreement. Now in such a Society, some kind of Peace and Concord might be maintain'd, so long as particular Persons kindly conspir'd in their Opinions, with regard to the Publick Good, and were each of them ready, voluntarily to perform what was requisite towards this End. But should any Dissention arise, no means of Redress would be left, but either to seek abroad for an Arbitrator, or to decide the Controversy by the Sword.

XIII. Tho' the Case be manifestly thus, as we have represented it, yet there is no inconsiderable Number of Men, who stand up resolutely for the Division of the Sovereign Power, that hereby they may frame I know not what Mixtures of Common-wealths, which being rightly temper'd and qualified must needs, forthwith produce the most happy System of Government. They would gladly engage Aristotle to be of their Party, but without effect; he, in the place of his Works which they alledge (a), speaking of a Mixture far different from any that can be applied to the parts of the Sovereignty. Which makes it seem the more strange, that some Interpreters (and Mich. Piccart amongst the rest) when they come to treat of this Mixture, put such things together as, probably, never entred into the Philosopher's Head. The Temperature, which He so much adviseth and recommends, runs in the following manner; That the King shall have the Power of making War, of Coining Money, of engaging in Leagues, of conferring Publick Rewards: that the Senate shall possess such Rights as demand Experience and Deliberation; the framing and the executing of Laws, and the administering of Publick Justice: lastly, that the Populacy shall manage such Affairs, as their Knowledge chiefly directs them to; the Examination of the Revenue, the Division of Lands, the Creation of Magistrates, the Inspection of Buildings, High-ways, Aqueducts, Corn, and other Helps and Assurances of the State. In like manner, it would not argue any Division in the Sovereignty, should we, for instance, suppose, that the Senate had the Power of condemning, but the Prince, or the People of pardoning and acquitting. For here the Prince might, by his Prerogative, absolve any Person against whom the Judges had pronounced Sentence; and consequently the latter would be only an inferior Court, whose Decisions must borrow their Force and Ratification from the Authority of the former. Whence it sufficiently appears, that if in any State, the Judgment of Capital Causes belongs to the Senate, the King still retaining the Right of Grace, or Pardon; the Senate doth really hold, by Deputation from the King, this Power of presiding in Criminal Processes, and of pronouncing Sentence as the Law directs; and this, as well for the Banishing all Partiality from the Methods of Justice, as to divert the Odium from the King: yet so as that the Power of Life and Death are radically or originally inherent in the King's Person. Some would frame a Division in the Judiciary Power it self; so that the Prince should have the Power of Life and Death over Strangers only, but the People over the Natives. But now, if the People exercise this Power over the Natives, only as an inferior Court, then they do not in the least intrench upon the Prerogative of the Prince. On the contrary, if they hold it originally and independently, then the King will have nothing left him but an empty Title, and will only perform the Office of a Prætor peregrinus, a Judge of Foreign Causes. As for what they add, about dividing the Right of Coinage, it is too impertinent to deserve a Repetition.

Arnisæus (b) is very large on this Point, and amongst many accurate Remarks, justly rejects some spurious kind of Mixtures in Government. And, at last, the fairest Model he could invent, was, that the King should have the Power of War and Peace, of levying Tribute, of Coining Money, of distributing Publick Rewards; that the Senate should be employ'd in judging Causes, and in receiving Appeals; as likewise in the Reformation of Manners by good Laws, and in exercising the Power of Life and Death: And lastly, that the People should be allow'd the Care of the Revenue, and the Creation of Magistrates. Of which Model, a Judgment may be form'd, by what we have before observ'd.

XIV. Grotius himself (c) hath attempted somewhat towards dividing the Parts of the Sovereignty. Where he is so far in the right, when he denies that any such Partition of Power, between the Prince and the People can be made, as that the prime Compact shall be thus loosely express'd, If the King Govern Well, then the People shall Obey; if he Govern Ill, then the People shall Compel him to his Duty: Observing, that certain Bounds and Limits ought rather to be assign'd to the Power of either Party; such as may easily be apprehended from the Difference of Places, Persons, and Affairs; but that the bare Good or Evil of an Action, consisting in the Application of fit Means to the publick Safety, which often admits of very great and obscure Debates, cannot be a proper Bottom to ground a Partition upon; in regard to that extreme Confusion which must follow, whilst the King, on the one hand, would inlist upon the Management of an Affair, alledging that he order'd it Well, and the People, on the other hand, would challenge the Direction of it, pretending that it had been Ill Managed before. His other Remark is no less true, that for a Prince to promise the People, by Oath, that he will perform, in such a particular manner, things which belong to the Administration of the Government, doth not argue a Partition of Power. But through all the rest of his Discourse, he falls into the Common Error. One way then, by which he thinks the Sovereignty may be divided, is when a Partition shall be made by express Agreement. A Precedent of this kind he alledgeth from the Roman State, in the time of Probus, when the Senate confirm'd the Prince's Laws, heard Appeals, created Proconsuls, and supplied the Consuls with Lieutenants. As if any Person could be ignorant, how that, amongst the Emperours, those who affected to seem more Modest than others, exercis'd the Sovereignty under the Mask and Disguise of the ancient Common-wealth; leaving to the Senate some inferior and petit Affairs, such as had little Influence on the main Government; but reserving strictly to themselves the chief Force and Command, which consisted, for the most part, in the Souldiery. Another Project of dividing the Sovereignty, he expresseth in this manner; If the People, being as yet Free, shall require thus much of him whom they choose to be their King; and shall lay it upon him after the manner of a standing Rule or Command. Now here, 'tis not easy to apprehend what kind of thing a standing Command is, when supposed to continue after that the Party hath lost the Power of Commanding. For every Command presupposeth a compulsive Force, to be exerted so often as the Command shall be transgress'd. Wherefore, the People who appoint themselves a King on such Terms, shall either keep this compulsive Power over him, or they shall not keep it. If the former, the King is only so in Name; the Force and Efficacy of the Government residing in the People: If the latter, the Command will be insignificant. He ought therefore to have said, that a People, as yet continuing in a State of Liberty, may oblige the future King to follow certain Rules in the Discharge of the Government. But that such a Compact doth not imply or infer a Division of the Sovereign Power, we shall hereafter make appear. His last Instance of dividing Sovereignty is, When in conferring the Government, some Clause was added, importing that the King might be compell'd or punish'd, upon Default. But indeed, the Sovereignty can by no means be said here to be divided, but the People really possess it entire, only allowing the King, under a great and specious Title, the Office of an extraordinary Magistrate; in case the People have a Right, on any account, to compel or to punish their Prince. For Punishment ever proceeds from a Superior, consider'd in that Capacity. And as for Compulsion, this may be used two ways, either Morally or Physically; that is, either by way of Authority and Command, or by way of Force and Violence. Authority over an Equal, as such, is impossible. Therefore when Grotius argues, that the People, at least, are equal to the Prince, because in some particular Cases they may compel him; he must at the same time allow, that neither Prince nor People have Authority or Sovereignty over the other: which is repugnant to the Nature of a Civil State. The other kind of Compulsion, by Arms and Hostile Violence, takes place only between Equals, or such as are not properly subject one to the other. And of this Compulsion must we understand the Case urged by Grotius; That a Creditor hath naturally a Right of compelling his Debtor. For certainly he hath no such Natural Right, by way of Command or Sovereignty inherent in his Person: for then it must necessarily follow, that every one who commenceth a Debtor, must fall under Subjection to his Creditor. But still the Creditor hath the full Privilege of compelling his Debtor to Payment, either by the Assistance of the Judge, (such as cannot be had between Prince and People;) or else, if he live in a Condition of Natural Liberty, by Hostile Force. If then, we would assign this way of compelling to the People, we must withal allow, that both Prince and People live in a State of Natural Freedom; that is, that the Civil Government is utterly dissolv'd. To conclude, we readily acknowledge the Truth of Grotius's Observation, that, In Civil Institutions, there is nothing absolutely free from all Inconvenience; and that therefore we ought not, on account of the Inconveniences attending a divided Power, to conclude it impossible: in as much as every Right is to be measur'd not by the Opinion of one or two particular Persons, but by the Will of him from whom the Right proceeds. But then, it must be granted us in requital, that if any please themselves with framing such a Partition, they will hereby constitute, not a regular State, but an ill-jointed and distemper'd Body.

(a) Polit. l. IV. c. 8, 9.

(b) Rel. Polit, l. 1. c. 6. f. 1.

(c) L. 1. c. 3. f. 9, 17.

C H A P. V.

Of the Different Forms of Government.

THE Sovereign Authority, besides that it inheres in each State, as in a Common or General Subject; so, farther, according as it resides either in one Person, or in a Council (consisting of some, or of all the Members,) as in a proper or particular Subject, it produceth different Forms of Common-wealths. And here, e're we proceed to enquire into this Variety, we take it for granted, that we may have free leave to retain the Word Form, when we would express that Constitution or Model of State, which ariseth from the Difference of the Subject, in which the Supreme Power is primarily and originally seated. That the actual Administration of the Government recedes, in many Cases, from the particular Form, is a thing vulgarly known: as in Democracy, for instance, some Affairs are managed in the way of Monarchy, others in the way of Polyarchy; according as Business is committed to the Care of one Person, or to such a Number of Commissioners. And because it is a Matter of great Consequence, whether the Power any Person exerciseth be his own, or whether it be Another's, of which he may at any time be deprived, holding it only by a precarious Title; therefore 'tis great want of Accuracy in a certain Author to affirm, that 'When a King suffers himself to be led by the Nose, by some few Counsellors, who abuse the easiness of his Temper, or a People by some powerful Demagogue, or when, in a ruling Senate, one Member leads the rest, by his Wisdom or Eloquence, or over-awes them by his Interest and Strength; a Polyarchy is really introduced in the first of these Cases, and a Monarchy in the two latter: and that in the first Case, there is nothing but an empty Name, and outward Semblance of Monarchy, in the second, of Democracy, in the third, of Polyarchy or Aristocracy. Thus also, no intelligent Person will imagine the Form of a Common-wealth to be alter'd, upon a Change either in the Persons or in the Number of Ministers; no more than he will think, that when a new Successor banisheth from his Councils and Presence, one who was chief Minister under the former Prince, and had the Management of all Affairs, an Inter-regnum must hereupon ensue. The Capacity and Inclinations of him or them, who, either by their own Right, or by Delegation from Others, exercise the Sovereign Power, do indeed affect and vary their Administration, but do by no means touch the Form of Government. In the same manner, supposing the chief Authority to be exercis'd well in one Place, and ill in another; yet a new Model of State doth by no means result from the different Exercise of the same Power. Wherefore, as a Person in sound Health, doth not differ in Specie from one that is Sick, and as the unnatural Distortion of the Body, doth not produce Men of a new Kind; so neither do the Vices of those who Command, or of those who Obey, nor the Corruption of Laws, make the least Step towards Constituting another Species of a Common-wealth.

II. It may be useful farther to observe, that most Authors, who have treated of Civil Knowledge, have employ'd themselves in explaining the regular Forms of Government; as for the irregular Forms, many have not so much as thought of them, some few have very slightly touch'd upon them. Hence it came to pass, that if they happen'd to meet with a Civil Body, which did not exactly come up to one of those usually term'd Simple Forms, they had scarce any Word left to express it by, besides the Name of a Mixt Government. But now, not to urge how very ill this Mixture is applied to some Common-wealths; it is weak to imagine, that besides these three Regular Forms, there are none other, which may be term'd Irregular. For all Men don't build their Houses just according to that Model which the Rules of Architecture prescribe. The Regularity of a State we conceive to consist in this, that all, and each of the Members seem to be govern'd, as it were, by one Soul: Or that the Supreme Authority is exercis'd through all the parts of the State, by one Will, without Division or Convulsion. And hence the Nature of an Irregular State, may without much Difficulty be Collected. Farther, there are some Political Systems, compos'd of several perfect States in Conjunction; which, with unskilful Judges, pass for single States, and these two may have their use in our Enquiries, concerning the several Forms of Common-wealths.

III. The Forms of a regular State are three only, arising from the proper or particular Subject, in which the Supreme Power resides; which is either a single Person; or a Council, Select or General. For the Sovereignty is committed, either to one Man, or to a Council of several Men. And this Council is made up, either of all the Members, or of the smaller indeed, but the better and more select, Part. One Species or Form therefore is, when the Sovereignty is lodg'd in a Council, consisting of all the Members, and where every Member hath the Privilege of a Vote; and this is call'd a Democracy. Another is, when the Sovereignty resides in a Council, compos'd of select Members, term'd an Aristocracy. A third, when the Sovereignty is in the Hands of one Man; call'd a Monarchy or a Kingdom. In the first, the Sovereign is styl'd a People; in the second, Optimates or Senators, nators; and a Monarch in the third. Pindar (a) hath express'd all the three together:

————— When Choice or Fate
Puts to the Reins a single Master's Hand;
Or when th' impetuous Multitude Command;
Or when wise Patriots guard the thriving State.

IV. In the first place, we will examine the Nature of a Democratical Government; not that we think it to excel the other Forms, either in Dignity, or Splendor, or in real Usefulness and Advantage (b); but because in the greatest part of the World it appears to have been the most Ancient; and because Reason shews it to be more probable, that many Men, being in a Condition of Natural Freedom and Equality, when they resolv'd to join in one Body, should at first be inclined to administer their Common Affairs by their Common Judgment, and so to constitute a Democracy. Nor is it to be supposed that a Father of a Family, as yet Free and Independent, who upon weighing the Inconveniences of a separate Life, voluntarily join'd himself to those of his own Condition, in order to the forming a Civil Community, should, in a Moment, have so far forgot his former State, under which he dispos'd of all things, relating to his own Safety, merely as he pleas'd, as to be willing to submit himself immediately to a single Director, with regard to the Common Interest, with which his own private Security had a necessary Connexion. But at the Beginning, it seems rather to have been thought more equitable, that what belong'd to All, ought to be managed by All; 'till in Progress of time, most receded from this Model, either Voluntarily, or by Necessity; whether this Necessity was brought upon them by some of their own Members, or by Strangers. What Plato (c) discourseth concerning the Athenian Common-wealth, seems to be of weight on this Subject; The Original (says he) of our Government (under which the chief Authority was in the People, and the Magistracies were conferr'd on Persons of the greatest Ability and Merit,) was taken from the Equality of our Race. Other States there are, compos'd of different Blood, and of unequal Lines; the Consequences of which are, disproportionable Sovereignty, Tyrannical, or Oligarchical Sway. Under which Men live in such a manner, as to esteem themselves partly Lords, and partly Slaves to each other. But we, and our Countrymen, being all born Brethren of the same Mother, do not look upon our selves to stand under so hard a Relation, as that of Lords and

Slaves. But the Parity of our Descent inclines us to keep up the like Parity by our Laws; and to yield the Precedency to nothing, but to superior Virtue and Wisdom. Now it is manifest, that most Civil Communities arose, at first, from the Union of such Families as were allied in Race and Blood (d). Nor is this Judgment oppos'd by the Authority of ancient Story, which, tho' it makes frequent mention of Kings, yet at the same time informs us, that most of them were such, as had rather an Influence in perswading, than any Power of commanding. So Justin (1), in the entrance of his Work, describes that kind of Government as the most primitive, which Aristotle (2) styles an Heroical Kingdom; such as is by no means inconsistent with a Democratical State. To the same purpose Thucydides (e) observes, that The most ancient Kingdoms, pass'd by Inheritance, and were confin'd within settled Honours, and tied to certain Terms and Conditions. Thus in most Nations, Liberty and popular Sway were at first establish'd; 'till, by Degrees, that vast Multitude of petit Common-wealths was reduced, chiefly by War and Violence, into some few great Empires. What Aristotle (f) urgeth for the Antiquity of Regal Government is as follows; Wherefore Cities were at first under Kings, as the barbarous Nations are at this day: for the Persons who join'd in forming these States, were themselves before under the same Government: the Sovereign Rule in Families being that which is kept up in Kingdoms. Which last Words receive a fair Illustration from the smart Saying of Lycurgus, who when a Person advis'd him to introduce a Democracy in the State, answered, Do You first establish a Democracy in Your own House (g). But really, Aristotle's Argument doth not conclude. The contrary might rather be inferr'd; that these ancient Fathers of Families, having been accusom'd before, to bear Rule, should be more inclined to a Democratical Form, under which they might still enjoy the Privilege of giving their own Judgment upon Affairs, and might bear a part in the publick Administration. Nor do they settle the Point, who tell us, that 'Paternal Government' was the most ancient amongst Men; being at 'first, mild and gentle, till upon the Increase 'of Families, and of Vices together, it was 'strengthen'd with the Power of Life and 'Death. That this Government was continued 'down through succeeding Families, in the 'Persons of the First-born, who, by a kind of 'Natural Right, held both the Sacred Office, 'and the Civil Authority; that, by this means, 'the Heads of Families grew into so many petit Kings; the great Multitude of whom discover'd in the Land of Canaan (a), seems a plain Argument in the present Case. But indeed, as the Right of Primogeniture was not of so great Force and Efficacy, as to Establish Regal Dominion amongst Brethren without their Consent, and to oblige them to unite their Families to that of their Elder Brother's; so besides, these primitive Governours, whom we find dignified with the Title of Kings, were commonly no more than Superior Magistrates in Popular Societies; tho' this Honour was most frequently bestow'd on the chief of the Race, when the respective Society was compos'd of Families, which had the same Original; yet so as that this Right of Birth and Seniority was not always observ'd.

(a) Pyth. Od. 2. v. 157, &c. Ed. Oxon. (b) Philo Jud. De Mundi Opificio, gives this Censure of the Favourers of Polytheism; They who are not ashamed to transfer, from Earth to Heaven, the worst Frame of Government, the Dominion of the Multitude. (c) In Menexeno, p. 519. B. (d) Isocrates is of the same Judgment; It seem'd unjust to us, (Athenians) says he, that many should be ruled by the Authority of a few: that those who were inferior in their Fortune alone, and in no other Respect, should be debar'd from a Share in the Magistracies and Honours: And that, whilst we have All the same Common Country, the same Privileges of Birth, some should be Masters and Proprietors of the State, others no better than Strangers and Dependents; and that, under the Pretence of Law, Persons, by Nature, Members of the Common-wealth, should be denied the Offices and Employments in it. Add. Liban. Progym. loc. comm. contra Tyrannum. (1) Principio rerum, Gentium Nationumque Imperium penes erat Reges, L. 1. c. 1. (2) In His Politicks, B. 1. c. 14. (e) L. 1. c. 13. p. 8. Ed. Oxon. (f) Polit. l. 1. c. 2. (g) Plutarch in Lycurg. p. 52. A.

V. It seems needful, on the present Argument, to bring the Opinions advanced by Hornius (b) under a particular Examination. He then, in relation to Aristocracies and Democracies, which he comprizeth under the General Name of Free States, passeth his Judgment to this purpose; There may be such an Establishment found out, as shall avoid the Confusion of the promiscuous Multitude, and shall attain to a decent and agreeable Order, making Provision for the Common Safety, by Pacts and Covenants, without Subjection, and without the Loss of that Liberty which is extinguish'd under a Monarch's Reign. Here we have almost as many Mistakes as Words. That the Order, which may be observ'd in Free States, is the only thing which shields off the Confusion of the promiscuous Multitude: That Free States are held together barely by Compact and Covenant, without any Sovereign Command: That particular Persons are not so strictly subject to a popular Assembly, or to a Council of Senators, as to a Prince under a Monarchy: That all the parts of Sovereignty are not so fully Exercis'd under the former Governments as under the latter: That the Power of Life and Death is less employ'd, with regard to private Men, by a People than by a Prince. What he asserts farther, that Certain Fathers of Families, living as yet in a separate Condition, learnt from the neighbouring Kingdoms, what Form of Government to introduce; is so far from appearing true, that in the first Union of Families and Nations, most Communities seem rather to have been of the Popular Form; till upon Discovery of the Inconveniences attending such a Government, they fell, sooner or later, under the Command of a single Sovereign; some, by their own voluntary Act, some, by Force and Compulsion. No less vain is that Remark; As Art endeavours to imitate Nature, but can never reach to Equal or to Excel her; so in these Artificial Forms of Government, the Nature of Kingdoms is, in some sort, represented, as to the Influence which they have on the Common Use and Benefit; but the inward Force and Virtue of Dominion, with which Monarchies are endued, being the Work of Almighty GOD, was beyond the Power of Men to produce. Of the Origine of Majesty or Sovereignty we have already treated; and why may not this as well agree to a Moral Compound Person, as to a single Man? For surely 'tis no Contradiction to affirm, that the Senators, under an Aristocracy, are all equal, as to their private and separate Capacities, and yet are each of them subject to the Authority of the whole Council. And it requires no Depth of Parts to apprehend the Difference between All in general, and Each in particular; between the Assembly of the People, in Democracies, and private Men, dispers'd according to their respective Habitations. Therefore 'tis but a trifling Argument which we find urged by this Author; Where the Sovereignty is ascribed to All, there either All do really possess it, or some few only. If All, then they will have none to be their Subjects; because to command and to obey cannot belong to the same Person: If it be said that the particular Men are Subjects, then All cannot be Governours; because when each separate Person is in a Condition of obeying, the Multitude, which they compose, must likewise stand under the same Engagement; for Obedience is the only thing which, in this Case, the private Members confer on the Common Body. Certainly in Moral Compound Bodies, somewhat may be attributed to All in Conjunction, which we cannot assign, either to each Member taken a-part from the rest, or to any one of those Particulars: and consequently the whole Society, is in reality a Moral Person, distinct from the separate Members, to which such a peculiar Will, such Actions, and such Rights may be appropriated, as private Men are not capable of possessing. Those Scruples likewise must soon vanish which are rais'd from this Consideration, that in popular Assemblies the Majority always prevails. For this is one of the Moral Affections which attends the very Essence of a Compound Body, that the Consent of the greater part of those who make up the Council shall be deem'd the Consent of All; in as much as no other means can be assign'd, by which the Wills of many Natural Persons, when they happen exactly to conspire, should be brought to a Moral Union. Wherefore, it cannot be pretended, that, in Aristocratical or Democratical States, the Subject, in which the chief Authority resides, is obscure or uncertain, tho' it should happen, that those Individual Persons, whose Voices upon one Occasion compos'd a Majority, upon another should prove to be of the weaker side. For none of these Circumstances take away that Unity of Will, which is to be attributed to the whole Body. In a Senate, if so many Members happen not to agree, as are required towards making a Majority, the Senate is presumed to design or to declare nothing, and therefore no Step is to be made in the new Affair. Which, tho' it often turn to the Disad-

(a) Vid. Joshuah XII. &amp; Judg. I. 7.

(b) De Civitate, l. 3. c. 11:

vantage of the State, yet doth not prove that the Senate is not invested with Sovereign Command. Besides, that other Allegation is false; True and proper Sovereignty cannot be ascribed to a Multitude, by reason that the Obedience which is necessary, upon such a Supposition, must be here wanting: since the Multitude cannot be bound always to keep the Resolution which they once embraced; and since the Obligation, rising from their Authority, doth not affect them as taken All together in a General Body. For as it doth not destroy the Sovereignty of a King, that he may when his Pleasure alters, revoke a former Decree, upon which A&t the Obligation of the Subject to the said Decree expires; so whatever Power the Common Assembly may have, as to the altering of their own Decrees; yet, in the mean time, particular Persons are no less engaged by them, than they would be by Regal Injunctions. If not, let those who maintain the contrary Opinion shew us, that Offenders against the Laws are not so liable to Punishment under Free States, as they are under Monarchies (a). 'Tis no better than Trifling to argue; that If the Sovereignty be lodg'd indivisibly in the Hands of many together, then each of those many must necessarily hold some Part of it, out of the Collection of which Parts the whole Sovereignty must at length be constituted. But at the same time 'twill be likewise necessary, that each of these Parts be Supreme: and thus in one State, there will be more than one Supreme; which is absurd. For, in Moral Consideration, there is no manner of Absurdity in supposing, that those particular Wills, which Unite and Conspire to make up the Will of the Community, should want some Power or Quality which the General Will is possess'd of. So that 'tis no good Consequence to say, the Sovereignty is the Supreme Right; therefore each Man holds a Part of it, which Part is likewise Supreme. We might with as much reason infer, that because the Votes of particular Persons, separately and solitarily Consider'd, are ineffectual towards the enacting of a Law, therefore many of them in Conjunction, are still unable to perform this Work. Lastly, he adds, that Since, in a Governing Senate, there is no one Member who may not, if he offend against the State, be brought to due Punishment by his Brethren; it follows, that in case all the Senators should prove guilty, the punishing of them would belong to the People. But each Member being thus punish'd and removed, the Sovereignty of the whole Council could no where subsist. This Difficulty will admit of an easy Solution, if we first rightly explain what it is to offend against the State. He, then, is properly said to be thus guilty, who commits any thing tending to the Prejudice of the Publick, contrary to the Laws and Injunctions of the Sovereign. Wherefore the whole Body of Senators cannot offend against the State, unless they either violate those Laws, the Observation of which, was made the Condition of their holding the Sovereignty; or turn profess'd Enemies to the People under their Charge: Upon which Suppositions, their Fate will be the same as that of Kings in the like Cases. What he farther vents in prejudice of Free States, is notoriously false. As that, The Sovereignty, exercis'd by a Monarch, is quite a different thing from that which appears in Free Governments, tho' their Effects may be alike. Because a Monarch, besides that personal Dignity and Splendor, of which no Man is capable in a Common-wealth, is endued with Majesty, which Free States may not assume. But now we look on it as a certain Truth, that GOD may, with equal Justice, be styl'd the Author of Monarchies and of Free Common-wealths; and that the former are no less produced by Covenants than the latter; from which Covenants, the Sovereignty results in both Cases; the immediate Cause of Obedience being in the People: that a Subject, consider'd under that Capacity, is obliged to the same Duties in a Common-wealth and in a Kingdom; that his Obedience is no less strictly required, and his Subjection is in no less Degree, under the one Form than under the other; and that both Governments have the same Right of punishing Criminals. For who will believe, upon the bare Word of this Author, That, in a Kingdom the Punishment of Offenders is grounded on a Right over the Lives of the Subjects, which is wanting in Free States: and that therefore under the latter, the Transgressors of the Laws are punish'd as Enemies; or only by the Right of War?

VI. We may now enquire how a Democracy is erected, and what this Form of Government hath in it, peculiar from others. When, therefore a Number of Free Persons assemble together, in order to enter upon a Covenant about uniting themselves in a Civil Body, this preparative Assembly hath already some Appearance of a Democracy; properly in this respect; that every Man hath the Privilege freely to deliver his Opinion concerning the Common Affairs. Yet he who dissents from the Vote of the Majority, shall not in the least be obliged, by what they Determine, till such time as by means of a second Covenant, a popular Form shall be actually Confirm'd and Establish'd. Mr. Hobbes (b), for want of distinguishing these two Covenants, hath handled this Subject with great Confusion. For we have formerly proved (1), that no Man can be obliged by the plurality of Votes, before he hath given his Consent to such a Form of publick Administration. Therefore what he asserts is false, that By their voluntary assembling of themselves together, we are to suppose, that they stand obliged to whatever the major Part shall resolve. What he farther delivers, may, in the following manner, be more clearly explain'd. When many Men upon a general Meeting, oblige themselves by Compact, to unite their Strength and Wealth; either in this very Meeting a Decree is pass'd, for the introducing some particular Form of Government, or not. In case, no such Decree about the Government be made, nor the Time and Place assign'd for the holding another Assembly, then, the present Meeting is presumed to be void, and each Person continues in his Natural Condition of Liberty, as before. For a Number of Men cannot become one Body, unless they have agreed upon a Constant Method of transacting publick Business. If they break up without settling this Point, yet prefix a Time and Place, for Considering and Debating the Matter farther, in order to a final Resolution; we have then no more than the Rudiments and first Principles of a State, which cannot yet be properly styl'd a Democracy. For we must not presently make use of this Name, when every Man hath a Right to give his Opinion, or when the Time and Place are pitch'd upon for another Congress; in as much as this way of proceeding is common to all kinds of Societies and Conventions, at their first rise, and before they are fully establish'd: But we are then to call it a Democratical Government, when the Right of settling Matters, relating to the publick Safety, is conferr'd for ever on a General Assembly.

(a) Add. Liv. l. 2. c. 3.(b) De Cive, c. 7. f. 5.(1) C. 2. f. 7.

VII. Towards compleating the Nature of a Democratical State, these Conditions seem especially necessary. First, that a certain Time and Place be assign'd, for holding those Assemblies, in which the common Affairs are to be Debated and Determin'd. For, as on the one side, the private Business of particular Men will not suffer them always to attend the Publick, so on the other side, if nothing be agreed upon as to the Time and Place; those who belong to the Society may either meet at different Times and Places, by which means, Factions are necessarily introduced; or else, not assemble at all; in which Case, they will not be a People, but a scatter'd Multitude, to whom no Action, and no Right can be attributed as to one Compound Person (a). Secondly, That the Vote of the Majority, shall pass for the Vote of the whole Body: since, as the World goes, it so very rarely happens, that a great Multitude of Men agree in their Judgments as to the same Matter. In the last place; since some Affairs of the Common-wealth occur every Day, and are of inferior Moment; others are less frequent, and affect the main Interest; and since it cannot be convenient, for the whole People to meet about settling the former Concerns, either in daily Councils, or at Intervals of so little Distance, as to let nothing of this Nature escape their Examination; it is therefore necessary to appoint certain Magistrates, as Substitutes or Delegates, who, by the Authority of the whole People, may dispatch Business of every Day's Occurrence; may, with mature Diligence, search into more important Affairs, and in case any thing happens of greater Consequence, may report it to the popular Assembly; and may likewise see the Decrees of the People put in Execution: for a large Body of Men is almost utterly useless in respect of this last Service, as of many others.

VIII. An Aristocracy is then constituted, when the Assembly, who by means of their first Covenant, united themselves, as it were into the Rudiments of a State, do by Common Decree, entrust the Supreme Administration in the Hands of a Council, consisting of some select Members. These Members, when they have been declared and design'd by the said Assembly, either by their Names, or by some other Mark of Distinction, and have also accepted of their Designation, are then supposed to enter upon the Sovereign Command. And here we may observe, that Mr. Hobbes (1) is mistaken when he draws the Origine of Aristocracy from Democracy, if his meaning be, that all Governments of the former kind were Changes from the latter, which are supposed to have been before compleatly Establish'd. For Experience proves, and Reason does not deny, that Men might pass on from the first preparatory Covenant, either to Aristocracy or to Monarchy, without taking Democracy in their way. Besides, we have before made it appear (2), that Mr. Hobbes doth but play with an Argument, when he tells us, 'That no Covenant can be transacted between the Senators and People, because the Government, being once conferr'd on the former, the latter do no longer exist after the manner of one Person. For to make Men capable of sustaining Obligations towards others, 'tis sufficient that they still continue Natural Persons, tho' the Moral Personality, which they once bore, may be expired. We may add, tho' the People, upon transferring the Sovereignty from themselves, do not henceforth exist as one compleat Person, opposed to their newly received Head; yet this doth not dissolve them into a loose Multitude; in as much as being join'd to their Head, the Senate, they still constitute one Person. Farther, what He infers in another place (b) is false; that As the People, under a Democracy, so the Court of Senators, under an Aristocracy, are free from all manner of Obligation. For should we be never so willing to grant the Antecedent (3), upon Supposition, that the respect which All in general bear to each in particular, may perhaps seem insufficient to found a mutual Obligation between them; yet it cannot hence be concluded, that neither is there any mutual Obligation betwixt Senators and People. As 'twould be no Consequence to say, I do not any way stand oblig'd to my self, whilst I manage my own Affairs in Person; therefore if I transfer the Care of them on another, he likewise shall be exempt from all Obligation. One thing this Author rightly observes (a), that under an Aristocratical, as well as under a Democratical Form, unless certain Times and Places are appointed for the Senators to meet, there will be no longer any such thing as a Court or a Compound Person, but a disorderly independent Multitude, without Authority or Rule. In as much as the Wills of the particular Members, from the Combination of which we apprehend the Will of the Court to spring, cannot be known otherwise than by their assembling together for this purpose. For to take the Senator's Votes, by a distant Scrutiny sent about in Writing, is a Method full of Inconvenience. Farther, it is no less necessary in an Aristocracy than in a Democracy, that the Times of meeting in a Council be not fixt too far asunder, unless the Exercise of the Sovereign Power, at least with regard to Business and daily Occurrence, be in the mean Time entrusted with some one Magistrate, or with Commissioners, not many in Number.

(a) Thucydides (l. 2. c. 21. Ed. Oxon. in the Beginning) reports, 'That Pericles, once finding the Athenians to be of a wrong Opinion about the Method to be used in a War, would neither call an Assembly of the People, nor hold a select Council; least some very false Step should be taken, whilst their Debates would be guided rather by Passion than by Reason. (1) Ubi Supra, f. 8. (2) C. 2. f. 12. (b) S. 9. (3) See the Fifth Section of this Chapter.

IX. Lastly, A Monarchy is settled, when the Sovereign Authority is confer'd upon one Man. And that this is done by means of a Covenant intervening, we have already sufficiently demonstrated, against the Opinion of Mr. Hobbes (1). Before we proceed farther, we cannot but take under Examination the pestilent Notion of a certain Anonymous Dutch Author in his Political Balance, which runs in the following manner. 'Since the Act of conferring the Sovereign Power is always design'd for the more convenient Prevention and Removal of Evils, whether proceeding from inward or from outward Causes; it cannot be presumed that a Democratical Society should ever have devolv'd this Authority on one Man and his Heirs, by a perpetual Succession. For, in as much as their Hopes of a more commodious Protection, under a single Governour, were grounded purely on the Virtues which appear'd at first in the Person Elected; and since no one can be ignorant, that all Men are changeable and mortal, and that, in a short time, either Age will render them unfit for Government, or, if they die sooner, they will leave either no Issue, or such as must be young and unexperienced; or that, should they happen to leave Children grown to mature Years, yet these may either not be more able to rule than others, by any Natural Capacity; or may want Will and Inclination to defend their Charge; we must therefore by no means suppose that a popular Society ever intended to debar themselves of the Privilege of choosing a better Governour, in the room of one, who is either weak or wicked. But that when Persons had thus got the Sovereignty into their Hands, it was easy for them, by drawing to their Assistance the greatest part of the People, especially the Souldiery, so to confirm their Power to themselves and their Posterity, as to be able ever to hold the Command even against the Will of the Subject. To which we reply, if it ever entred into the Thoughts of a Society, to confer the chief Rule on a Person under this Condition, that whensoever the People should vote his Government not so Effectual towards procuring the common Safety, as their Democratical State was before he should be depriv'd of his Office; they did not, by such an Act as this, constitute a Monarch, but only an extraordinary Magistrate, who was to depend upon the Breath of the Multitude, and therefore was not invested with the Supreme Authority. Besides, since 'tis evident, how little a State is a Gainer by frequent Changes in the Throne, other Mens rather than other Manners still succeeding; and how great a Blow it must be to the Publick to force a Prince from his Command, who hath had Opportunity, in his publick Administration, to strengthen his private Interest; it is but a fair and easy Presumption, that a People should be willing to trust their Fortune once for all, by fixing the Government irrevocably in a King: the Evils which naturally flow'd from their former uncertain, unsettled Condition, being much more to be dreaded, than any which a degenerate Monarch might create. Especially, if we consider how far the exorbitant Inclinations of such a Prince may be limited and retrench'd by fundamental Laws. And, lastly, 'tis by no means allowable to revoke all such Acts, the Issue of which doth not exactly answer our Expectation: since Human Affairs must be always liable to Accidents, and since we can establish nothing, but what will be attended at least with some Inconveniences (b).

A Monarchy differs from the Two former Species of Government in this respect (2), that under them, before any Matter can be debated or determin'd, that is, before the Authority can be actually exercis'd, 'tis necessary that certain Times and Places be assign'd for this purpose: whereas in a Monarchy, (at least if it be such as we term Absolute;) Deliberations may be held and Resolutions taken, at all Places and Times (c). For a People, or a Senate, in as much as they do not compose one Natural Body, must wait an Opportunity of meeting together. But a Monarch, who is but one Person in Natural, as well as in Moral Account, is always furnish'd with an immediate

(a) S. 10. (1) C. 2 f. 9, &c. (b) Add. Grot. L. 1. c. 3. s. 8. n. 1. (2) Vid. Hobbes, De Cive, C. 7. l. 13. (c) Herodian. l. 1. c. 14. p. 13. Ed. Oxon. 'Εκεί τε ἡ Ρώμη ὅτε πύτ' ἀν' ὁ βασιλεὺς ἦ. Where the Emperour is, there Rome is.

Power of exercising his Sovereign Command, thro' all Instances of Government. It is likewise true what Mr. Hobbes (1) observes on this Head, that in a People, or in a Court of Senators, in case any Decree pass which is contrary to the Law of Nature, the State it self, or the Moral Person, is not affected with the Guilt, but those Members only whose Votes concurr'd in the Resolution. For Sin regards only the Natural or Express Will, not the Moral or Political Will, which is purely Artificial. Otherwise they also, who disliked the Proceeding, would be included in the Crime (a). But in a Monarchy, if the Prince decree any thing which the Law of Nature forbids, the Prince himself is the Sinner; because, in his Person, the Civil or Political Will is the very same with the Natural.

X. To these Regular Forms of Government, it hath been the Custom, with most Authors, to add certain others, which they term Vicious, Distemper'd, or Corrupt. Now here it is certain, that in many Common-wealths, no less than in particular Men, we may observe a very plentiful Field of Corruptions and Diseases; so that it may be look'd on as some kind of Perfection to have the fewest Failings. Of those Diseases, which infect Civil Societies, some, we see, take their Rise from the Wickedness of particular Persons, others from some Defect in the publick Constitution. The former we may style the Vices of Men, the latter the Vices of the State. It may be proper to touch on some Instances of each Kind, for Illustration and Distinction. In a Monarchy, then, the Vices of Men, or personal Faults are as follow; if he, whom either the Chance of Blood, or the unhappy Suffrage of the People hath advanced to the Throne, be destitute of the Arts of Government, and very little or not at all affected with any Care or Concern for the Common Interest, which he prostitutes to the Ambition, or to the Avarice of bad Ministers; if he render himself Terrible, by Passion or Cruelty, forgetting that he is a Man himself, or that he governs Men; if he take a delight in exposing the Common-wealth to unnecessary Hazard or Danger; if he squander away what hath been gather'd to defray the Expences of the Publick, either in Luxury, or in unadvised Grants and Bounties (b); if he heap up Money beyond the Bounds of Reason, first squeeze'd out of the Subject; if he be notoriously abusive or unjust (c); or guilty of any other Practice, which enters into the Character of a bad Prince (d). The Vices of Men in an Aristocracy are: if, by Corruption and base Acts; Persons, of no Honesty or of no Ability, find an Easy Admission into the Senate, whilst True Merit is excluded; if the Senators break into Parties and Factions amongst themselves; if they make it their Endeavour to enslave the Commonalty to the Service of their private Interest, and to increase their own Estates at the Expence of the Publick. In a Democracy, personal Faults are such as these; if Men, who really want Judgment, turbulently and importunately maintain their own Opinions; if extraordinary Virtue, yet such as is not likely to prove too hard a Match for the Common-wealth, be oppress'd and born down by Envy; if through a Lightness and Inconstancy of Humour, Laws are rashly made and as rashly repeal'd; and what was embraced but now with Applause, is soon after disliked and rejected without Reason; and if sordid and worthless Persons are entrusted with the Management of Affairs (e). Lastly, such Vices of Men as may affect any Species of Government are: if the Persons on whom the chief Administration lies, perform their Office negligently or dishonestly; and on the other hand, if the Subjects, who ought to rest contented with the Glory of obeying, grow refractory and aspire to Command (f).

The Vices or Faults of a State, in general, are; when the Laws and Institutions are not accommodated to the Nature of the People, or of the Place; or when they are so framed as to breed inward Distractions, or to provoke the just Hatred of Foreigners; or when they render the Subjects incapable of performing such Service as is necessary for the Preservation of the Common-wealth: as suppose the Constitution be such, that Men, whilst they comply with it, cannot avoid sinking into effeminate Weakness, or, on the other hand, cannot bear the easy unactive Condition of Peace (2); or lastly, when they contradict some of the principal Maxims of Civil Doctrine;

(1) Ibid. f. 14. (a) See Luke XXIII. 51. (b) Drepan. Paneg. upon Theodosius, c. 27. n. 1. Ed. Cellar. 'Tis the last Defence of wicked Princes, to plunder some that they may be bountiful to others. (c) 'Tis remarkable what Philostratus reports, (De Vit. Apollon. l. 3. c. 9. in the Beginning,) of the old Indians, that they allow no manner of Honour or Privilege to the Heirs of the Crown; That neglectful Treatment may be a Lesson to them against unreasonable Pride. (d) Such as Claudian sets down, De Bello Gildon. v. 157, &c.

Quæcunque profunda
Traxit avaritia, luxu pejore refundit:
Instat terribilis visus, mortentibus hæres,
Virginibus raptor, Thalamis obscænus adulter.
Nulla quies: oritur præda cessante libido;
Divitibusque dies & nox metuenda maritis.

Those Heaps which boundless Avarice supply,
Vainly he spends in viler Luxury;
Tyrant to all that live, and Heir to all that dye.
Alike the Nymphs and injur'd Matrons move,
Or Brutal Rape, or foul adult'rous Love.
Sin never sleeps; new Spoils, new Lusts invite:
The Wealthy fear the Day, the Married dread the Night.

Themist. Orat. 10. De Pace ad Valent. Imper. He is but a lame Prince or Legislator, who is fit for the Service of War, but unskilful in preserving Peace. (e) In Plutarch, Dion. p. 978. E. Popular Ambition is term'd a wild Distemper, not inferior to Tyranny it self. (f) Add. Hobbes Leviath. c. 29. about the End, where he discourseth ingeniously on some Diseases of the State. (2) These Instances are taken out of our Author's Abridgment, De Offic. Hom. & Civ. L. 2. c. 8. f. 10.

and the Mischief will still be the greater, if these Irregularities happen to wear the Disguise of Religion (a).

XI. Though a sound and a distemper'd Common-wealth are vastly different from each other, yet we are not, on this account, to multiply the Forms of Government, and to oppose one or two Vicious Forms to each of those which we term Good and Regular. For these Vices or Defects do neither change the Nature of the Authority it self, nor the proper Subject in which it resides. And thus far Mr. Hobbes (b) is in the right, when he denies, that Anarchy, oppos'd to Democracy, Oligarchy to Aristocracy, Tyranny to Monarchy, are three other kinds of Common-wealths (1). I think, (says he,) no Man believes, that want of Government is any new kind of Government. But what he farther observes (2), is not universally true; 'That Anarchy, Oligarchy and Tyranny are three Names impos'd by those who, either 'mislik'd the Government, or the Governours. 'It being usual with Men to signify by Names, 'not the things only, but at the same time 'their own Affections, as their Love, Hatred, 'or Anger, their Contempt, or Esteem. For, as it happens in other Matters, that one Man loves what another violently abhors, so the same Form of Government, meets with the Approbation of some, and with the Aversion of others. And this, not only because some Persons reap a particular Advantage from such, or such a Species of Common-wealth; but likewise on account of peculiar Tempers and Inclinations (c). Men of haughty Spirits, and who dislike the Equality of a popular State, when they see all Men, without Distinction, giving their Votes in publick Business, of whom the inferior Commonalty always make up the greater Number, call this an Ochlocracy, or, a State where the base Rabble sit at the Helm, and where no Prerogative is allowed to such extraordinary Merits, as they look on themselves to be possess'd of. And yet this Name, as full of Contempt as it is, might, with Justice, be applied to such a Government as we read of amongst the Ephesians of Old: who when they expel'd Hermodorus out of the City, gave this reason for their Proceeding; Let no Man amongst us excel his Neighbours; if he doth, let him find out another Seat, amongst another People: and whom Heraclitus, for this Judgment, declared to be all worthy of Death (d). Again, if any Person is discontented that he hath not a place in the Senate, and at the same time thinks himself not in the least inferior to many of that Order; Envy and Contempt together prompt him to give them the Name of οἱ ὀλίγοι, the Few; that is, some inconsiderable Mortals, who having in no respect the Advantage of those about them, do yet exercise Authority over their Equals or their Betters. And a Man, under this Chagrine, hath commonly in his Mouth the Complaint which Ajax makes in the Poet (e).

— ἢ γὰρ ἔτ' ἑσθλός ἐστι γέγεε, &c.

Merit no longer finds a just Reward: Folly's a Favourite, and Vice prefer'd.

People of a more lofty Genius, and those, on the contrary, who are more mild and tractable both join in giving the Title of Lords and Masters to Foreign Princes, who govern with a stricter hand: whereas 'tis well known, that when a Father treats a stubborn Child with Severity, and one that is more submissive with Gentleness and Kindness, in both Instances he exerciseth the very same Paternal Power. The like may be affirm'd of the Name of Tyrant, which is now attended with an indelible Mark of Hatred and Detestation, from the Custom of the Grecians, who thought the chief Happiness of States to consist in a popular Liberty. Lucian (f) himself passeth this Censure upon them: In general, says he, People, not considering whether the Person who bears Rule be just or unjust, have an Abhorrence to the bare Name of Tyranny. Many of their Authors apply the same Word to any kind of Government in the Hands of a single Person. Thus Aeschines (g) particularly says, There are three Political Forms in use in the World, Tyranny, Oligarchy and Democracy (h). Hence 'tis worthy our Remark what Mnemon (i), in Photius, reports of Dionysius, the Fourth Tyrant of Heraclea; Having, says he, arrived to a high pitch of Glory, he disdain'd the Name of Tyrant, and assumed that of King: the latter being less Odious and more Honourable. Yet there is no one who doth not apprehend, that these invidious Titles are sometimes affix'd with sufficient Justice, to distinguish the Government of bad Princes or Senators from that of Good, the Fury of a turbulent and inconstant Multitude, from the wise Administration of a modest People. Aristotle's Decision of this Point, differs little from what hath been here establish'd; who terms Tyranny, Oligarchy and Anarchy, (for as to this latter word, he useth the general Name of Polity for a sound Popular Government,) παραβόλις Deviations or Degene-

(a) Such was the Authority of the Priests amongst the People of Meroe, mention'd by Diod. Sic. 1. 3. c. 6. and Strabo, 1. 17. p. 566. Ed. Genev. Casaub. to whom the Kings themselves were accountable. (b) De Cive, c. 7. f. 2.

(1) See Hobbes's Leviath. B. 2. c. 19. (2) De Cive, ubi supra. (c) So that we cannot universally allow that of Lyfias, De Populari Statu, Orat. 24. No Man is more inclin'd by Nature either to a Popular, or to an Aristocratical State; but every one endeavours to establish that Form of Government, which tends most to his particular Advantage. With whom Isocrates, De Pace, p. 320. joins his Opinion: No Man hath a Natural Affection for any of these States; but All love that best in which they themselves meet with the greatest Honour and Esteem.

(d) In Cicero, Tusc. Quæst. 1. 5. c. 36. Diog. Laert. 1. 9. in Heraclit. f. 2. Strabo, 1. 14. p. 441.

(e) Quint. Calaber. 1. 5. (f) In Phalarid. 1. pag. 735. tom. 1. Ed. Amst. (g) Contra Ctesiphont.

(h) Ald. Cornel. Nep. Miltiad. c. 8. n. 3. (i) Of the Tyrants of Heraclea, c. 5.

racies from a Kingdom, an Aristocracy and a Democracy (a). And who will pretend that a bare Deviation is sufficient to constitute a new Species. As for that Latitude of which the Word Esse or Species is capable, we think it not considerable enough to afford any just Matter of Dispute (b).

XII. But when we meet with such a Government, as we can neither bring under any of those Forms which are sound and regular, nor yet explain how it differs from them, by the bare Notion of a Disease or Deviation, then the Learned are put upon a more laborious Enquiry. Most Authors judge it the shortest way of getting over this Difficulty, to call such Governments Mixt States; as if they were the Result of the more regular Forms, allay'd and blended together. Aristotle is call'd in by many to countenance this Project; and therefore it may be worth our while to examine his Opinion in the Case. First then, as for what he delivers, in the Fourth Book of his Politicks (c), concerning the several Kinds of Democracy and Aristocracy, it bears no Resemblance to the Mixture proposed by our modern Designers. The chief thing he there insists on, is the reckoning up of certain Conditions and Qualities, to be found in those who are to be admitted into the Popular Assembly, or into the Ruling Senate. By which means, neither is the Sovereignty it self any way varied, nor are the Parts of it torn and wrested from each other, nor the State rent into two or more distinct Bodies; but the Forms of Government which he there mentions, are only hereby slightly diversified according to their several Accidents, or circumstantial Differences. Thus, although in the Definition of a Democracy, the chief Authority should be said to reside in a General Council, or a Council made up of all the Members, and at the same time tho' it be true, that Women and Children have as much Interest as others in the Common Welfare; yet who will maintain that a new Form of Government is establish'd, when the Women, the Children and Servants are excluded from the publick Debates? Tho', in our Judgment, 'tis sufficient for the constituting a Democracy, if those Persons are allow'd the Privilege of Votes, who by uniting together, first compos'd the State, and after them their Successors, to whom their Places and Rights properly descended. But now it's manifest, that Civil States were originally compos'd by Fathers of Families, who held the inferior Train, before mention'd, under their Domestical Sway, and certainly did not intend to relinquish all Authority over them, or to set them on the level with themselves. It was necessary therefore, that Persons who were thus in Subjection, should be debar'd from giving their Suffrage with their Lords. After the Democracy was once settled, 'twas in the Power of the Members to receive others into the State or not; to give them a full or imperfect Right; to let them have the same Share with themselves in the Administration, or utterly to exclude them from it. Whence it may happen, that in free Governments, many shall want the Privilege of a Voice, whilst yet the popular Establishment continues as perfect as ever. On the other hand, 'tis possible indeed, that a State at first, Democratical, may, by receiving large Additions, and by shutting out all these new Comers from their Honours and their Councils, at length commence an Aristocracy. In the same manner, the Species of Aristocratical Government will not be multiplied, though, in one place, Virtue and Merit should be a sufficient Qualification for a Senator, in another, the Estate and Family should be likewise consider'd. No more could it be said, that there were so many several distinct Forms of Democracy; if, under one State, every Free Denison had a Vote in the Assembly; under another, none but Men of such and such Fortunes were admitted; under a third, some particular Profession rendred Persons incapable of this Honour. Much less do any new Forms or Species (properly so call'd,) arise from the different Laws of Democracies, relating to the Election of Magistrates; whilst in some places, for Instance, all Persons promiscuously have a Right to bear these Employments; in others, again, an Estate, to such a Value, is made a necessary Condition: as suppose, under one Government, the Rich were allow'd to absent themselves from the publick Councils without Censure, the Poor not; or vice versa. And indeed, this whole Matter is plain beyond Dispute. What Judgment we ought to pass on the Mixtures, supposed to be in the Commonwealths of Sparta and Crete, as described by Aristotle, we shall elsewhere discuss. The Athenian State, which Aristotle (d) and Isocrates (e) describe and commend, was in all respects truly Popular. Polybius's Opinion (f), concerning the mixt Government in the Roman Commonwealth, comes under our Examination in another place.

XIII. As for the Moderns, some of them have invented many kinds of mixt States; yet so as that, upon the whole, rejecting the greatest part of them as inconvenient, they applaud two ways, as especially proper and useful. The first is, when the parts of the Sovereignty reside Separately and Independently in different Persons, or Bodies of the same Commonwealth, so that each Person or Body hold their respective Parts, by their own proper Right, and administer it according to their own Judgment, whilst in respect of the other parts they are altogether in the Nature of Subjects. Much after this manner, was the Disposal of the Kingdom of Numidia, by

(a) Vid. Polit. l. 3. c. 7, 8.

Themistius, Orat. 16. p. 336. Edit. Petav.

(b) Add. Sallust. Philosoph. de Diis & Mundo, c. 11. and to the same purpose,

(c) C. 3, &c.

(d) Polit. l. 2. c. 9, 10.

(e) In Arcopagit.

(f) L. 6. f. 20.

Scipio, after Masinissa's Death; his three legitimate Sons being all allow'd to bear the Regal Title and Dignity; but with this Difference, that the Elder Brother Micipsa should keep his Court at Cirtba, the ordinary Seat of the Kings; that Gulusa, the next to him, should have the chief Command of War and Peace; and that the Youngest, Manababales, should preside in Judicial Affairs (a). The other way which they propose is, when the Sovereign Authority inheres indivisibly in many together, yet so as that neither the most considerable Majority, without some few dissenting Members, nor indeed All the rest, when any one of the Number stands out, can act to any purpose, or exercise any part of the Supreme Power. And this again is subdivided into Two Models, either that all the Members shall have equal Power; or that some one or two of the Number shall be invested with certain extraordinary Rights and Prerogatives, which they may use without the Assistance of their Brethren. They proceed to alledge many Authorities from the Ancients, where Mention is made of Mixt Common-wealths; with regard to which Authorities we have already observ'd, that what is deliver'd in them, concerning the Mixture of Governments, doth not in the least belong to the Division of the Sovereign Power amongst several Persons or Councils; but either to the settling the due Qualifications of those Persons of whom the Governing Council is to be composed, or to the joining together of several good Institutions, drawn from different States. Besides, we are of Opinion, that some Examples of these Mixtures, might receive a convenient Explication, by distinguishing between the Sovereignty it self and the manner of administering it. So that we may affirm those States to have mingled, as it were, somewhat of others in their Composition, in which the Method of Administration seems to have been borrow'd from another Form: as suppose, for Instance, in a popular State, the main Business should be dispatch'd by some one principal Officer, or by a Senate; or if under an Aristocracy, one Magistrate should be invested with extraordinary Authority, or the People consulted, in many important Affairs; or if, in a Kingdom, the Difficulties of publick Business should be refer'd to the Debates of a Senate or of a popular Assembly. And if this come not up to a full Solution of the Passages cited from Antiquity, the Point will be thoroughly clear'd from what follows. We have above demonstrated, that in order to completing the Effence of a just and regular State, such an Union is required as shall make all things, which belong to the Government of it, seem to proceed from one Soul. Now hence it is manifest, that the former way of Mixture constitutes such a Body as is held together not by the Bond of one Supreme Authority, but barely by Compact; and which therefore is to be rank'd, not amongst the regular, but amongst the irregular States; being but weakly guarded against foreign Assaults, and very obnoxious to inward Disorders and Convulsions. As to the other kind of Mixture propos'd, we think it ought to be consider'd, whether those Persons, in whom the Sovereign Power is said thus indivisibly to reside, do make up a standing Senate, which is to guide and direct the whole State, as one lasting Body. If so; the Form will be Aristocratical; yet such as must be very unfit for the Dispatch of Business, whilst some few, or but one, of a contrary Judgment, may vacate the Resolutions of all the rest. Again, if those particular Members, in other respects equal, do each of them hold some part of the Government, yet so as that the Sovereign Acts cannot be exercis'd without the unanimous Consent of the whole Number, then the State is Systematical, according to the proper Notion of that Word; yet such as will likewise have great Disadvantages, as to the Management of Affairs, by reason of this very great and unnecessary Streightness. If some one Person be endued with high Degrees of Authority, and several parts of the Supreme Power above others in the Council, then the State will be plainly Irregular, lying between such a Monarchy as is over-awed by an assuming Senate, and a Systematical Form. And this Irregularity will in Proportion be the greater, in Case more than one are invested with these signal Prerogatives above the rest.

XIV. For our part, as we envy no Man the Praise of his Constancy and Resolution, who will on no account lay aside the Term of a mixt State; so we think it the more commodious and easy Method, and the more expeditious for the Explication of certain Phænomena in particular Common-wealths, to call those Governments Irregular, in which we can neither discover any one of the three Regular Forms, nor yet any proper Disease or Deviation; and which at the same time cannot with due Exactness, be rank'd amongst the Systematical Models. Concerning which, we may in general observe, that they differ from Regular States in this respect, that all things do not seem to proceed in them from one Soul and one Will, nor all and each of the Members to be ruled by one Common Power. Again, they vary from Systematical Forms, because they are not compos'd of several compleat and distinct States. Lastly, they do not fall in with Diseases or Deviations, because a distemper'd State always appears under Circumstances of Ignominy, and hath, as it were, somewhat of the Bastard in its Countenance; in as much as it proceeds, either from the ill Management of a good and regular Frame, or from incoherent Laws and improper Institutions. Whereas the Irregularity of a Government doth not only affect its Frame after an intrinsic and secret manner, but being openly confirm'd, and, as it were, declar'd Legitimate, shews it self in publick without Shame or Guilt. Therefore the former, or the Disease, cannot be suppos'd to have entred into the Intention of those who first founded the Common-wealth, ever appearing as a subsequent Vice or Defect: but the latter, the Irregularity, owes, if not its Original, yet at least its Confirmation, to the Will and Approbation of the first Authors. It is just the same Difference, as may be observ'd between two Buildings, one of which is design'd according to the Rules of Architecture, but either the Materials are naught, or through the Negligence of the Inhabitant, the Roof gapes, the Walls shake, the Beams crack, the Foundation sinks and gives way: in the other, either the Builder, at first, propos'd a Model not agreeable to the common Rules; or some great Fault, which afterwards happen'd, hath been cured and made up after a strange and unseemly manner. Farther, some Irregularities appear'd upon the first Settlement of a State, others crept in by silent Steps, and in long Progress of Time. For it might so happen, that the Authors, or the Reformers and new Modellers of a Common-wealth might not be able to introduce a regular Frame, either on account of Ignorance, or because the present Posture and Exigence of Affairs would not suffer them to consider of a more accurate Constitution (a). Sometimes too, Persons, who have been the chief Leaders and Assistants in winning a Kingdom, have beforehand contracted for such Lordships, or such Privileges in it, as that they cannot be rank'd in the Number of true and proper Subjects. Again, many times, either through Neglect of the Governours, or upon some other Occasion, a Distemper seizeth a State, and having taken so deep root that it cannot be removed, without the Destruction of the publick Frame, there remains no Cure for it, but this; to divest it, as it were, of its Faultiness and to vindicate it from Censure, by turning it into a solemn and legal Appointment; by which means what was before term'd Usurpation, Faction, or Contumacy, shall, for the future, bear the Style of a just Right and Privilege.

(a) Appian. in Lybic. Bell. p. 64. Ed. H. Steph.

XV. These Irregular Forms (1) of Government can neither be brought within any certain Number, nor divided into proper Kinds, by reason of that great Variety, which either really occurs in Fact, or at least may be framed in our Imagination. So that we have scarce any other means of discovering their Nature, but by gathering it from particular Instances, and the Illustrious Examples in Story. Such an Example we endeavour'd to exhibit in the Roman Common-wealth: as the like hath been attempted in the German Empire by Severinus de Monzambano (2). At present, 'twill be sufficient to offer a Remark or two concerning the Irregularity, which some observe, in the Government of Rome, under the ancient Emperours: whilst sometimes the State appear'd a Monster with a double or triple Body, one Prince ruling the East, another the West, or three dividing the World amongst them; sometimes, again, with a double or a triple Head, whilst two or three of the Royal Family held the Sovereign Power, as Copartners, and govern'd in Common. Now as to the former of these Cases, we may note, that whilst two Emperours presided, one over the Eastern, the other over the Western World, separately and independently from each other, then there were really Two distinct Kingdoms, which, taken both together, still retain'd the Name of the Roman Empire, out of which they had been compos'd. Besides which Agreement, as to their Original, the Resemblance of Laws and Manners, the Natural Relation between the respective Sovereigns and between their Subjects, the strict League and Alliance, which ensured their mutual Help and Support, all concur'd to make up some Appearance of Unity. But what Name we are to impose on that Form of Government, when Two or Three Royal Partners administr'd Affairs in Conjunction, it is not easy to determine. Certainly two Persons cannot make an Aristocracy. For since each is invest'd with equal Power (upon which Supposition the Case before us proceeds,) they cannot be united otherwise than by Covenant; and there could be no Expedient found out for the Dispatch of Business, should they happen to disagree about any Proposal, there being no third Person to turn the Scales. And tho' the same Inconvenience may seem to attend any ruling Council or College, where the Members are of an even Number; yet it cannot so frequently happen, that upon a Division in Judgment the Votes shall be equal. Besides, in this Case it is not difficult to bring over some one out of such a Number, to the Opposite Sentence: or, if this can't be done, the next Expedient is to let that Opinion prevail, which declares against Innovation, and would have things continue in their present state. Farther, neither can we, properly speaking, affirm the united Government of three Cæsars, reigning together, to have been Aristocratical. For this Royal Triumvirate did not compose such a Collegiate Body, as was to determine state Affairs by the Plurality of Voices, or where two Members, agreeing in Opinion, might by their proper Right and Authority compel the third, who dissented, to follow their Resolution. And in all Cases, a Council or Body of Men, in which the Major part cannot influence and draw over the rest, seems to be held together, rather by bare Compact, than by any Government or Command. We may therefore say, as to the Question before us, that the Sovereign

(a) Add. Hobbes Leviath. c. 29. post princip.

(1) Our Author in his Dissertation, De Republica Irregulari, treats of this Matter more fully.

(2) This Work is attributed to our Author, and justly, as Mr. Barbeyrac observes, from the Style and Character of it.

Authority did truly and radically inhere in that Person alone, who assumed the other into a Partnership with him; tho' both might seem equal as to the exterior Ensigns of Majesty. Thus the Historian (1) tells us of Lucius Verus, That he lived not as a Free and Sovereign Prince, but under Marcus, invested with the like Imperial Authority. Nor was it easy to suspect, that any Man would be guilty of so notorious Ingratitude, as to oppose the Will of his Patron, to whom he owed his Promotion and Honour. To which we may add this Consideration, that for the most part the Persons thus sharing the Government, were either Father and Son, Father-in-Law and Son-in-Law, or two Brothers; so that the Party admitted as a second in the Dignity, might be farther restrain'd by the Ties of Blood, or the Alliance of Marriage, from abusing the Power which had been given him, to the Prejudice of the Donor. Whence it appears, that this Practice of assuming a Colleague was not any Partition of the Sovereignty, but as it were the Designation of a Vicar General and an Heir Apparent, who was immediately receiv'd into the Business of State, and join'd with the other in the Administration; being likewise invested with the most shining Ornaments and the richest Trappings of Greatness. Now that which put the Emperours upon this Method, was the inconstant Humour of the Souldiery; who, on frequent Occasions, took a Pride in complementing their Leaders with the Imperial Title (a). If this Explication will not satisfy some Men, or if it seems not applicable to every particular Instance which we find upon Record; we have no way left but to affirm, that the Government then commienced Irregular, when more Persons than one held the Monarchy, (if it might still deserve that Name,) in Conjunction; and yet were engaged to each other only by Compact or Faction. Amongst whom if any Dissention or Hatred should chance to arise, the Consequence could be nothing less than mutual Suspicions, Plots, and Designs, and in the final Issue, a Civil War (b). Such an Irregularity the Roman State was evidently sensible of, whilst Romulus and Tatius sat as Partners in the Throne (c). In general, we may apply to all these Polyarchical Governments, what Solyman the Turk observ'd in the German Empire; that it might be well compar'd to a Lute, which costs a great deal of Labour and Skill to put it in Tune, and is very easily put as far out of Tune as ever (d).

XVI. When several States are, by some special Band so closely united, as that they seem to compose one Body, and yet retain each of them the Sovereign Command in their respective Dominions; these we term Systems of States. Whence it is, in the first place evident, that when a State is composed of several subordinate Bodies, we must not on this account presently give it the Name of System: tho' Mr. Hobbes (2) is pleas'd thus to style it, and to compare the said Parts with the Muscles in the Body Natural. No more are we to apply this Term, in general, to all those larger States, which have vastly increased their Dominions by swallowing up their little Neighbours, and by reducing them into the same Body with themselves. Which we may observe to be done chiefly in the following Methods. First, when the Victor either removes the Van-

(1) Julius Capitolinus, c. 1. (a) Themist. Orat. 16. Fratres Amantes, p. 76. B. Ed. Parisi. speaking of Valentinian, who had admitted his Brother Valens into a Partnership with him in the Empire, useth the following Expression: He receiving the Whole and giving the Whole, at the same time a Brother and a Father, the one by Nature, the other by his own Act and Choice, tho' he hath confer'd an equal Share of his Power, yet, in effect, he still keeps it entire; by reason of the Obedience and Compliance of him on whom it was confer'd.

Thus Solinus, c. 8. reports of Aeneas, that he reign'd with Latinus three Years, sociis potestate, as his Fellow or Equal in the Supreme Authority. (b) Lucan, l. 1. v. 92, &c.

*Nulla fides regni sociis; omnisque potestas
Impatiens consortis erit* —————

To trust a Partner's Rule, impairs our own:
And Empire hates a Consort in the Throne.

Statius, Theb. 1.

————— Sociisque comes discordia regnis.

————— Howe'er the Crown is shar'd, Discord's a Partner. —————

(c) Via. Plutarch. Romul. Add. Eryc. Putean. Hist. Insul. l. 2. the Story of Pertharite and Gundebert, joint Kings of Lombardy. Procopius relates a like Case; Hist. Goth. l. 1. The Goths, says he, and Odoacer's Army came to this Agreement, That Theuderick and Odoacer should reign in the City Ravenna with equal Power. And for sometime the Compact was faithfully observ'd; but the Issue was, That Theuderick, according to the vulgar Report, inviting Odoacer to a Banquet treacherously slew him. 'Tis a true Remark of Euripides, Andromach. v. 471, &c.

Two Tyrants can no more be born than one,
But press the Subjects with a double Load;
Till Discord and Sedition work their Fate.

Plin. Paneg. c. 8. n. 4 What a small Difference there is between laying down the Imperial Honour and sharing it with Another; unless the latter be difficult and dangerous? Add. Herodian. l. 4. c. 1, &c. (d) We do not think that we ought to admit, under the Head of Irregular Forms, what Francis Carron reports of Dayro in Japan; who, he says, was the true Heir of the Crown, yet was put off by the Prince in Possession, with the outward Majesty, and empty Badges of Honour. Much to the same purpose, Alexander de Rhodes relates, That in the Kingdom of Tonquin there are two Kings, one called Bua, the other Choua; yet so as that the former barely enjoys the Title, the latter really holding the Command; only Bua hath the Power of conferring the Degree of Doctor, and receives the Oaths of the Subjects, when they renew their Yearly Allegiance; as to other Matters, he passeth his time shut up in an old Palace, without Action or Business, Itin. par. 2. c. 6. (2) Leviath. c. 22.

quish'd into his own Territories, or however gives them the same Privileges with his former Subjects. Secondly, when the conquer'd Nation is left to possess its ancient Seat, but utterly losing the Sovereignty which it held before, is rendred purely the Subject of the Conquering People. In both Cases, the State thus subdued loseth its Name; but in the former, the Conquer'd are made equal to the Conqueror; in the latter, they are put under an inferior Condition, being reduced into the Form of a Province. Tho' it often happens, that the Vanquish'd are partly left in Possession of their ancient Laws or Privileges, how different soever from the Manners and Institutions of the conquering State (a). For in order to preserving the Unity of a Common-wealth, 'tis not required, that all its particular Parts shall use the same positive Ordinances, or shall stand exactly upon the same Bottom; but 'tis enough, if they depend upon one Government. And it's frequently the Art and Policy of a Conquerour, to make no Alterations in the Customs of those who are fallen under his Dominion: or, at least to accommodate himself to them for such a time as he thinks convenient.

In relation to the Government of Provinces, we are to examine what Mr. Hobbes delivers on that Subject (b). Whereas, says he, heretofore the Roman People govern'd the Land of Judæa (for Example,) by a President; yet was not Judæa therefore a Democracy, because they were not govern'd by an Assembly into which any of them had Right to enter; nor by an Aristocracy, because they were not govern'd by an Assembly, into which any Man could enter by their Election: but they were govern'd by one Person: which tho' as to the People of Rome, it was an Assembly of the People, or a Democracy; yet as to the People of Judæa, which had no Right at all of participating in the Government, was a Monarch. For tho', where the People are govern'd by an Assembly, chosen by themselves out of their own Number, the Government is call'd a Democracy or Aristocracy; yet when they are govern'd by an Assembly, not of their own choosing, 'tis a Monarchy; not of one Man over another Man, but of one People over another People. So that Mr. Hobbes seems to look on these Provinces which are dependent on some Aristocratical or Democratical State, as so many distinct Monarchies. Now tho' we easily allow, that 'tis the more usual Practice to govern Provinces by one Man, than by an Assembly consisting of many, as the same Author shews at large (c); yet we think it needless to enquire what Form of Government is establish'd over a dependent People. For Provinces have lost the Nature of States, and are made the Appendages of other States, having no kind of Sovereign Authority in themselves. Whether therefore such a Province is govern'd by a President, or by an Assembly, is an indifferent Point, which doth not in the least affect the proper Sovereignty; in as much as both He and They bear only a subordinate or delegated Power. So that the Sovereignty, exercis'd over these additional Dominions is exactly of a piece with that of the main State, and cannot, without Impropriety, obtain the distinct Name of a Monarchy or an Aristocracy; which are Terms belonging to true and independent States, such as really possess a Supreme Government of their own.

XVII. Of Systems properly so call'd, these Two kinds do especially fall under Notice: One, when two or more States are subject to one and the same King (1); the Other, when two or more States are link'd together in one Body by virtue of some League or Alliance. In regard to Systems of the former kind, 'tis observable; that it implies no Contradiction in Moral Bodies, to have but one Head over several of them together, and consequently to have one Person the Head of many distinct Bodies; which, in Nature, would bear so monstrous an Appearance. But because the Union of these Systems is founded either in the sole Person of the Prince, or in his Family, hence it comes to pass, that when the Person is deceas'd, or the Family extinct, the respective People recover their particular Right of settling their own Government, and are no longer obliged to make Use of a Common Head. Nay, during the Continuance of the said Head, the States are really distinct from each other. The Causes whence such Combinations arise, are various; but the most frequent seem to be the Marriages of Princes, and the Right of Inheritance. For there are many States, in which the Crown descends to the Female Issue of the Royal House, not only when the Male Line is utterly extinct, but when there is no Male Heir in a nearer, or in an equal Degree. Now here if the Lady Sovereign happen to take another Sovereign for her Husband, the two Kingdoms will come to a Conjunction, if not in their Persons, at least in their Common Issue. For it is not necessary, that in a Match of this Nature, the Princess should put her self, and her Dominions in Subjection to the Prince. So likewise in one undivided Kingdom, where the Hereditary Succession is establish'd, (2) either according to the plain and direct, or the lineal Course, if one of the remote Heirs any way become Master of another Crown, and the Rule of Succession (all the rest failing who stood nearer,) call him to receive that of his own Country, the two Kingdoms will by this means be united under his Reign. The Consequence is the same, if a People Choose for their King one who bears the same Character elsewhere, in Possession, or

(a) Hobbes Leviath. c. 26. (b) Leviath. c. 19. (c) Ibid. c. 22. (1) For Example, Great-Britain and Ireland, See our Author's Dissertation, De Systematib. Civit. S. 9, 10. (2) See the Seventh Chapter of this Book, S. 12, 13.

<sup>1</sup> n Reversion. Again, two or more Nations may engage by League to elect one Prince over both by joint Suffrages, and yet, as to other Matters, continue separate Kingdoms, without transacting their Affairs in a Common Assembly. Lastly, such a System doth then arise, when a Prince, constituted by the free Consent of the People, subdues by Arms another People, in his own Name, and at his own Hazard and Expence; not in the Name, or at the Charges of the State over which he presides. For that this is no impossible Case, Grotius (a) hath sufficiently made out, against the Opinion of Hottoman the Civilian (b).

As for the Dissolution of these Systems, 'tis manifest it must happen, either upon the Death of the Prince, if the Union was founded in his Person only; or upon the Extinction of the Royal Family, in case the respective Kingdoms were all entail'd in the way of Inheritance. For then, each separate People recover their Right of constituting a new King, or of introducing what Form of Government they think fit, without consulting the rest; they being supposed to have no other Bond of Union. If a Prince holds one Kingdom by Right of Inheritance, and another, by free Election; upon his Decease the Union between them will be broken, and the latter Kingdom shall have no Obligation to advance his Son to the Crown.

But if this Union depend upon a League between the Kingdoms, 'tis no less manifest, that if the Agreement happen to be violated, especially in the principal Articles, then the injured State may disengage it self from the other. Yet here we ought carefully to distinguish between the Obligation by which particular Kingdoms are tied to their respective Kings, and the Obligation by which the same Kingdoms are united amongst themselves. A King once elected, and who hath receiv'd the Fealty and Allegiance of his People, may not afterwards be deserted on account of any Misbehaviour, or any Action contrary to his Engagement, so long as he doth not profess open Hostility towards the State. Unless perchance the Compact, between the Elected King and the People, had this conditional Clause expressly annex'd to it (1), that the Obedience of the latter should be due on no other account, but upon the former's performing all, and each of the Articles settled betwixt them. On the contrary, the Engagements, by which united Kingdoms are held together, may be renounced on that side, to the Prejudice of which the Laws of the Union have been violated, tho' the Injury be not very considerable; in case the other Kingdoms concurr'd in the Action, or if it was undertaken for their Sake, or converted to their Use and Service. Wherefore upon the Decease of the Common Prince, the injured State may disclaim the Union, reserving a Right to prosecute the Authors or Abettors of the Fact, and to recover what is lost by their means. If, by the Marriage of Hereditary Princes, several States are conjoin'd, which observe a different Course and Order of Succession, the Union will be dissolv'd, if such a Case happen, as that the same Person proves incapable of succeeding to both Crowns according to the publick Laws. Let us suppose two Kingdoms in Conjunction, one of which, receives the Method of Lineal Descent by Agnation, the other, by Cognation. Here, if it so fall out, that the Common Prince decease without Male Issue, the latter of the Two Kingdoms shall pass to his Daughter, the former to the Heir Male in the next Degree. But if an Union, at first contracted on the Occasion of Marriage, shall be afterwards confirm'd, and turn'd into a perpetual Establishment, by means, either of a solemn League passing between all and each of the Kingdoms to this purpose, or of a Decree made by the Common Sovereign, with the Approbation of the respective States; then any difference, which was before observ'd in their way of Succession, shall be understood to be actually taken off. And, for the future, such a Method shall be followed, as is expressly specified in the League, or in the Decree; or such as the Authors of the Union appear to have been most inclined to; or such as is most agreeable to Reason, and most conducive to the Safety of the united States. But when one Kingdom happens to be join'd to another, in the manner of a Province, the Union founded on a precedent League expires, and a much closer Bond succeeds in its room, by means of which, they unite into the same Civil Body.

XVIII. The other kind of Systems is, when several States are join'd to each other by a perpetual League or Alliance (2); the chief Occasion of which seems to have been, that each particular People loved to be their own Masters, and yet each was not strong enough to make Head against a Common Enemy. The Purport of such an Agreement usually is, that they shall not exercise some part of the Sovereignty there specified, without the General Consent of each other. For the Leagues to which these Systems owe their rise, seem distinguish'd from others (so frequent amongst different States,) chiefly by this Consideration; that in the latter, each Confederate people determine themselves by their own Judgment to certain mutual Performances, yet so as that, in all other respects, they design not in the least to make the exercise of that part of Sovereignty, whence those Performances proceed, dependent on the Consent of their Allies, or to retrench any thing from their full and unlimited Power of governing their own States. Thus

(a) L. 1. c. 3. f. 12.

(b) Quæst. Illustr. 1.

Examples of this Conditional Clause in B. 5. c. 5. f. 4. and c. 10. f. 14.

(1) Lex Commissoria. V. Grot. L. 1. c. 3. f. 16. n. 5. See Provinces of the Netherlands, the Swiss Cantons, &amp;c.

(2) As for Examples, the United Pro-

we see that ordinary Treaties propose, for the most part, as their Aim, only some particular Advantage of the States thus transacting; their Interests happening at present to fall in with each other: but do not produce any lasting Union, as to the chief Management of Affairs. Whereas in those Leagues we are now speaking of, the contrary is observable; they being carried on with this Design, that the several States shall for ever link their main Safety one within the other, and in order to this mutual Defence, shall engage themselves not to exercise certain parts of their Sovereign Power, otherwise than by Common Agreement and Approbation. For the Promises made in the two Cases, here compared, run in very different Terms; in the former thus: 'I will join You as a Confederate in this particular War, and the manner of our Attacking the Enemy shall be concerted by our Common Advice: in the latter thus; none of us, who have entered into this Alliance, will make use of our Right, as to the Affair of Peace and War, except by the General Consent of the whole Confederacy. We observ'd before, that these Unions submit only some certain parts of the Sovereignty to mutual Direction. For it seems hardly possible, that the Affairs of different States shall have so close a Connection, as that all, and each of them must look on it as their Interest, to have no part of the chief Government exercis'd, without the General Concurrence. Or, if there be any Communities thus mutually depending, it had been the wiser Course for them, rather to have incorporated themselves under the same Government, than to rely on the bare Engagement of a League. The most convenient Method therefore seems to be, that the particular States reserve to themselves all those Branches of the Supreme Authority, the Management of which, can have little or no Influence (at least directly) on the Affairs of the rest. The same must be said of such publick Business, as either occurs every Day, or else requires so speedy Measures as to prevent a General Debate. But then as to all Affairs, on which the Safety of the Allies hath a joint Dependence, these ought, in reason, to be adjusted by common Consultation. And in this Number, War, whether Offensive or Defensive, seems to claim the first place; and after that, Peace, as the Result and Issue of War. To which, we may add Taxes and Subsidies, as they contribute to the mutual Support; and Alliances with Foreign States, as they promote the common Safety. It falls under the same Head of Duties, that in case any Dispute arise amongst the Confederates themselves, the other Members, who are unconcern'd, shall immediately interpose their Mediation, and not suffer the Controversy to come to Blows. Thus the wise Prince Philip of Macedon, declares in the

Historian (a), that The mutual Wrongs of his Allies so particularly concern'd himself, as that he could not but use his best Endeavours for a Composition, by Words to the present, and by Letters to the absent Parties: whereas those other Dangers or Injuries, which affected the whole Confederacy, belong'd to the Care of the Common Assembly, and were thence only to receive their proper Redress. As for other Matters, which seem not so necessary to be transacted in Common, as Negotiations of Traffick, Subsidies for the particular Occasions of any single State, the Constituting of Magistrates, the Enacting of Laws, the Power of Life and Death over the respective Subjects, the Ecclesiastical Authority, and the like; there is no reason but that they may be left to the Pleasure of each distinct Government: Tho', at the same time, particular States ought so to manage these Privileges, as that they shall cause no Disturbance in the General Union. Whence 'tis evident, that one or more of the Allies cannot be hindered by the rest from exercising, according to their own Judgment, such parts of the Civil Administration, as were not in the Treaty of Alliance, refer'd to the Common Direction. Yet as to the Power of Life and Death, some Scruple may be made, on account of that Passage in the Civil Law (b) (1): At sunt apud nos rei ex Civitatibus fœderatis, & in eos damnatos animadvertimus, But some Persons, Members of our Confederate States, are here arraign'd in Judgment, and receive from us both their Condemnation and Punishment. Grotius (c) hath taken a great deal of Pains to solve this Difficulty; but whoever thoroughly considers his Discourse, will find that he hath labour'd to little purpose. For he certainly leaves the following Question unanswered; How that State can entirely preserve its Liberty, the Subjects of which are liable to be arraign'd under another Government, and to be punish'd upon Conviction. We find that the Freedom of the Achaians was look'd on as considerably impair'd, when, by the Treachery of Callicrates, the most worthy Persons in that Commonwealth were accused of favouring Persus's side; against the Romans, and were cited to Rome, there to answer the Charge; upon Occasion of Xenon's Protestation, who under a just Assurance of his own Innocency, happen'd to declare, that if any Man had Thoughts of impeaching him amongst the rest, he was ready to take his Tryal, not only in the Common Assembly of his Countrymen, but amongst the Romans themselves (d). On another Occasion, the Achaians seem to have made a Breach on the Laws of Regular Government, when they demanded those Spartans to be deliver'd up into their Hands who had been the chief Instruments in promoting the Siege of Las, a Laconian Town (e). Whereas the Cause ought first to have been

(a) Polyb. l. 4. c. 24.

(b) L. 49. t. 15. l. 7. f. 1. D. De Captiv. &amp; Postlim.

(1) This Law is more naturally brought in hereafter, in the Eighth Book, c. 9. f. 4.

(c) L. 1. c. 3. f. 21.

(d) See the Case at large in Pausanias. (Achaiac.) It is likewise touch'd upon by Polybius. (Excerpt. Legat. 105.)

(e) Liv. l. 38. c. 31.

heard

heard in a Common Council of both States, and, upon Conviction, the Spartan Government should have been moved either to punish the Criminals, or to surrender them to their Accusers. As for the place alledg'd from the Civil Law, we think this the clearest way of replying to it; that whereas the precedent Discourse had explain'd what the Nature of Leagues would bear, and what ought to be done, the Words here cited declare what was actually done, in later Times; when the Romans, growing insolent on Success, used their Allies, who by free and voluntary Leagues had engaged their Friendship, with the same Treatment as those whom they had conquer'd by their Sword. Of which Injustice Cicero himself complains (a).

XIX. Since, in these Systems, 'tis necessary there should be a Communication of certain Affairs express'd in the League, and since this cannot be done so conveniently by Letters, a determinate Time and Place ought to be settled for the holding Assemblies, and one or more Persons appointed, who shall have Power to call the States together, in case of any extraordinary Business, which will not admit of Delay. Tho' it seems a much more compendious Method, to fix a standing Council, made up of Persons deputed by the several Confederates, who shall dispatch Business of daily Occurrence, or of less Importance, according to the Tenor of their Commission; who, in Matters of greater Consequence, shall make report to the States, and shall publish and execute such Decrees as are return'd to them on these Occasions; to whom the Ministers of the Confederacy, in Foreign Parts, shall give an immediate account of their Proceedings, and who shall treat with the Ambassadors of other Nations, and conclude Business in the general Name of the Confederates: but who shall determine nothing that exceeds the Bounds of their Commission, unless all the Subjects have been first consulted on the Point. How far the Power of this Council of Delegates extends, is to be gather'd either from the Words of the League it self, or from the Warrant by which they act. This is certain, that the Power, whatever it be, is not their own, but derived to them from those whom they represent; and altho' the Decrees, which they publish, pass solely under their own Name, yet the whole Force and Authority of them flows from the States themselves, by whose Consent such a Council hath been erected. So that the Deputies are no more than Ministers of the Confederate States, and are altogether as unable to enjoin any thing, by their own proper Authority, as an Ambassador is to command and govern his Master.

XX. Yet it may still appear doubtful, whether or no the whole Body of the Associates, or the Majority of them, have not a Power over particular States, or over those whom they exceed in Number, with regard to such Matters as were the first Occasion of the Alliance, and which by the express Terms of the League were appointed to be managed in a Common Assembly; so far as that the few dissenting States shall be bound, tho' against their Will, to do as the Major Part have determin'd. Here, in our Opinion, the Negative side of the Question ought to be prefer'd; if we speak of Regular Systems, and where the particular States reserve to themselves the entire Possession of their former Liberty. In as much as the Liberty of a State, which is nothing else but the Power of finally resolving and determining, according to its own Judgment, all Matters in which its Safety is concern'd, cannot be understood, in case the State may, by virtue of the Authority held over it by some other, be compell'd to certain Performances against its Will. Nor can any reason to the contrary be drawn from hence, that in the League 'twas agreed not to exercise some particular parts of the Sovereignty there express'd, unless by common Consent. For 'tis one thing to say, I engage not to use my Right unless you are willing; and another to say, I give you a Power of compelling me to use my Right, tho' against my Inclination. Now the first of these Forms is only implied in the League, not the latter. For the clearer Apprehension of which Point, it ought well to be observ'd, that when the Wills of many Persons are bound to conspire in one, this must arise, either from a Compact between them to this Effect, or because one of them hath submitted his Will to the Will of the other. An Union or Concurrence of Wills, grounded on bare Compact, doth not, in the least, destroy the Liberty of which we have been now speaking. For they agree before-hand in settling those Affairs, which are refer'd to their joint Management; or if any new Business offers it self to their Debates, they desire to be influenced not by Authority, but Argument and Reason. But when I have submitted my Will to the Will of another, and by this means have given him a full Authority over me, I may then be obliged to things, which are very inconsistent with my good liking. Nor doth The Right of the Majority (b), (which some may urge,) oppose our Judgment in this Case. For, first, The greater part draws the less only in Bodies already constituted, not in those which are still to be established. And then farther, the Prerogative of the Majority, in a settled Council, to oblige the rest, is really owing to Human Compact and Institution, not to Nature; tho' Natural Reason adviseth the Reception of this Method (as the most convenient) in numerous Assemblies, and where

(a) Offic. Add the Story of Decius Magius, who was laid in Irons by Hannibal, Livy, l. 23. c. 7, 10. and Scipio's Advice to the Romans, that they should not hear the Informers against the same great Enemy; Livy, l. 33. c. 47.

(b) See B. 7. c. 2. f. 15.

Business of various kinds, and of every Days Occurrence, is to be dispatch'd. Now in order to this, 'tis necessary that each Member do in such manner submit his Will to the Will of the whole, or of the major Part, as that he, tho' himself of a contrary Opinion, shall be bound absolutely to follow what they determine; which we cannot conceive, unless, at the same time, we suppose the latter to hold a Command or Authority over the former. Besides, in an Assembly of Confederates, there seems to be no Occasion for this Right of the Majority; inasmuch as they are seldom composed of any considerable Number of States, and are chiefly united by the Prospect of General Advantage, which 'tis presumed none in their Wits will obstinately oppose. Yet if any, through a malicious and unreasonable Perverseness, shall refuse to join in the whole, some Counsels of the rest, and, by this means, shall endeavour to betray the Common Safety, or Interest; it will be then lawful to apply the same Methods of Redress, as they who live in a Condition of Natural Liberty are allow'd to use, against the Violators of Faith and Contracts. Unless it be judg'd the more eligible Course, utterly to purge the Society of so intractable a Partner. To all which we may add, that it must frequently occasion great Injustice, if in a confederate System, the Plurality of Votes were to bind the whole Body: as when the Allies are disproportion'd in their Wealth and Strength, and consequently some contribute more than others to the Common Defence. For tho' we may be apt to imagine, that they who contribute, according to the Proportion of their Ability, do really bring equal Shares; yet it may happen very frequently, that one who hath but slender Fortunes may be more willing to expose them to Danger than another who hath larger Possessions. Thus let us suppose, that in a Confederacy, some one State contributes more to the common Security, than All taken together; here it would be a manifest (a) Breach of Equity, if this State should, by the Agreement of the rest, be compell'd to engage in any Action, the chief Burthen of which must lie upon its own Shoulders. On the other hand, if the Votes were to take place according to the Proportion of Force, or Treasure supplied to the common Cause; then the more powerful State would actually obtain a Sovereignty over All besides (b). So that we may conclude from the whole, that where-ever Business is decided by Plurality of Voices, in such a manner as that the dissenting Parties are likewise bound to stand to the Resolution; there the Regular Form of Systems or Confederacies is deserted, and the Members either break into an irregular Body, or close together in one undivided State.

XXI. The Dissolution of these Systems happens, when some of the Confederates voluntarily quit the League, and govern their own States apart; which they are induced to, chiefly by this Motive, that they hope to receive more Advantage by a Separation, than they could expect under a Conjunction, and apprehend their Allies to be rather a Burthen to them than an Assistance (c). Intestine Wars are another Cause which must necessarily break these Unions, unless, upon the Establishment of the Peace, the League be also revived. If a Confederate Power happen to be overcome in a Foreign War, it is sometimes a Policy of the Conquerour to cut the Knot, and to make each Government independent of the rest: as the Romans did, in the Case of the vanquish'd Achaians (d). We are farther to observe concerning those Dissolutions, which arise from external Force, that the Enemy by possessing himself of one or two more of the united States, acquires no manner of Right over those that remain, nor can demand to be admitted into the Confederacy, by virtue of that League which engaged the conquer'd States to the others. But a new Agreement must necessarily pass, before any such new Member can be receiv'd into the Alliance, in the room of those whom he hath subdued. Thus we find King Philip, by a Decree of the Amphictyonsians, obtaining a Seat in their Common Assembly, in the room of the Phocæans (e). For altho' the League, by which the several States are thus combin'd, may seem to be a real lasting Engagement (1), and tho' a State doth not cease to be the same, upon the Alteration of its Government; yet the Alliance must always be presumed to expire, when any one People are brought under a Foreign Yoak, or made the Accession of another Kingdom. Because, the League being made between Free States, consider'd in that Capacity, whenever this Condition fails, the League must fail with it. Nay tho' we should go so far, as to suppose, that in the Terms of the League there was an express Clause, that the Change of Government, in any State should not exempt it from the Engagement, yet the Change, here spoken of, must be presumed to be made in a lawful manner, and with the Consent of the People. And consequently neither an unlawful Usurper, nor any Foreign Enemy, shall have a place in the Congress of Allies.

On the other hand, these Systems do more closely unite, and are incorporated into the same Civil State, by the following means. Either if all the Confederates, by a voluntary Submission, put themselves under the Government of some one Person or Council. Or if some one People which hath the Advantage in Strength and Power, shall reduce the rest to the Condition of dependent Provinces: which usually happens, when weaker States allow any

(a) Vid. Grot. Apologet. Cap. 1. sub fin.

(b) Add. Diodor. Sic. l. 15. c. 28.

(c) Add. Liv. l. 38. c. 31, 32.

(d) Comp. Xenoph. l. 4. 5. Rer. Græc. where he speaks of the Peace with Antalcidas.

(e) Diod. Sic. l. 16. c. 61.

(1) See hereafter in B. 8. c. 9. f. 6.

lasting Preference or Prerogative to those that are stronger, and engage themselves in unequal Alliances (a). Lastly, if some particular Man invade the Sovereign Command; through the Favour of the Souldiers, the Esteem of the Commonalty, or the Strength of a prevailing Faction.

XXII. To conclude; The last Dispute upon this Head commonly is, concerning the Excellency of particular Forms of Government, and which ought to be preferr'd to another: whether that under which the publick Welfare may, with more Expedition, and more Certainty be procured, or that, where the sovereign Authority is less exposed to Corruption and Abuse. Now as to the Point of Comparison, thus much, in the first place, is evident, that no Frame of Civil Constitution can be so exactly model'd, and so well guarded by Laws, but that, either through the Negligence or the Wickedness of those who bear Rule, the same Government, which was instituted for the Security of the Subjects, may turn to their Prejudice and Mischiefe. The Reason of which is, because Government was first establish'd as a Defence against those Evils, which Men were capable of bringing on each other. But at the same time, they who were to be invest'd with this Government were likewise Men, and consequently not free from those Vices which are the Spurs to mutual Injury. Vitia erunt donec homines (1), Whilst there are Men in the World, there must be Faults: and therefore we cannot but, sometimes, suffer from their Hands the very Evils from which they ought to protect us. Hence the old Remark is so often true,

Quicquid delirant reges, plectuntur Achivi (2).

The Kings grow frantick, and the People smart.

As therefore the Condition of Human Affairs will not bear an absolute Perfection; so 'tis controverted, between many Persons, what Form of Government seems to have the fewest Imperfections (3): and the Generality of Judges pronounce in Favour of Monarchy (b). It is not our Design to examine the particular Allegations of each Party. Only thus much we would observe, that Arguments of this kind are by no means so very strong and conclusive, as that the Inferences, drawn from them, must necessarily fall out in all places and at all times: and that the Actions of one or two Governors are no manner of Proof, that all others of the same Order, or Title must needs follow their Example. And in our Judgment, the wise Speech of Marcellus, in Tacitus (c), is what every good and useful Subject ought to meditate upon: He said, 'He could not but remember that happy Age, under which he himself came into the World, and that Form of Government which had been instituted by their Forefathers; yet 'twas his Principle, Uteriora mirari, presentia sequi; bonos Imperatores voto expetere, qualescunque tolerare: To admire what was past, but to follow what was present; to wish for good Emperours, but to bear with any.

It may not seem improper, on this Occasion, to shew briefly the Reason why, amongst the ancient Grecians, such Persons, as under a Democratical, or Aristocratical State, assumed a Monarchical Power, met with so universal Hatred and Censure: and what Motives induc'd them to maintain their Authority by such evil Arts as we find described in Aristotle and other Authors; on account of which, the Name of Tyrant hath been branded with an indelible Mark of Detestation. Now the Grecian States seldom stretched their Dominion beyond the Compass of a single Town. And to such, the most agreeable Government was, either a Democracy, or an Aristocracy moderately exercis'd; or, lastly, what Aristotle terms an Heroical Kingdom, a princely Sway, founded rather upon the Authority of Perswasion, and upon the general Character of extraordinary Vertue, than upon any proper Sovereignty, or Force of Command. Besides, the Grecian Nation, being of a haughty Spirit, and of a stirring and restless Temper, was most in love with such a Constitution, under which every Man might bear a part in the Government. Wherefore in a State of this kind, he who had taken on himself a Regal Authority, a thing so odious to the People, against their Consent, was obliged, for his own Security, to awe the Town with a Castle or Cittadel, and to place a strong Guard round his Person; and then this Guard was to consist of Foreigners, because it had not been safe to trust his own Subjects, and because he had not the means of bridling one Province by another, by interchanging the Native Forces. Farther, the Truth and Loyalty of the Guard was not otherwise to be purchased than by the Largeness of their Pay: and hence, for the raising of sufficient Funds, the Subjects were to be drain'd by constant Impositions. Again, it was no less necessary, that the Natives should be disarm'd, and render'd as weak and little as possible; that the Heads of the Poppies should be cut off; that all Meetings of the wealthier Subjects should be suppress'd; and that Informers and Court-Spies should be maintain'd and encouraged. So that

(a) Vid. Grot. l. 1. c. 3. f. 21. n. 10. circa fin.

(1) Tacit. Hist. l. 4. c. 74.

(2) Horat. L. l. 1. Ep. 2. v. 14.

(3) Mr. Montaigne says, that Democracy is the most Natural and most Equitable Government. See Sidney's Discourse upon Government, Chap. 2. S. 16. (b) Vid. Isocrat. (in Nicochl.) Herodot. (Thalia) where the Persian Nobles debate about establishing a Form of Government, after the Magi had been kill'd. Euripid. (Supplicibus, vers. 405, &c. Bodin de Rep. l. 6. c. 4. Arniseus, Relict. Polit. l. 2. c. 7. f. 2.) and many Others. On the other hand, the Dutch Writer of the Political Balance, seems to have omitted nothing that Malice or Envy could suggest against Monarchy. A great part of whose Arguments may be turn'd upon him by what Mr. Hobbes observes, De Civ. c. 10. & Leviath. c. 19. (c) Hist. l. 4. c. 8.

'twas not Injustice only, but down-right Mad-ness, in these Tyrants, to affect such a Govern-ment as was to be preserv'd by evil Arts, which could not be lasting, and under which 'twas impossible for them to gain the Love of their Subjects. And it is equally absurd to institute a Monarchy in a State, confin'd to a single Town; and a Democracy in larger Territories, and vastly extended Dominions. But since Princes who stand possess'd of wide and spacious Realms, have no need to make use of these Arts for their Support, inasmuch as they may be able to poize and balance one Province with another; those Persons are guilty of no less Baseness and Wickedness who suggest any such Practices of Tyranny, to the Imitation of Great and Potent Monarchs, than those who make it their Endeavour to turn the Odium of the old Grecian Tyrants upon Monarchy in general. And hence likewise it is evident that Princes live much more securely in ample Dominions; because there, the disobedient and rebellious cannot so easily communicate their Designs, unite their Strength, or touch and taint the Loyalty of others. Whereas when a whole State is confin'd within the same Walls; the way lies ready for a handful of Mutineers to spread the infectious Madness, and to corrupt the whole Body of the Subjects, before the Government can either prevent, or apprehend the surprizing Danger.

CHAP. VI.

Of the Affections or Properties belonging to Sovereignty.

WHEN we would enquire into the Affections and Properties of the Supreme Power, the first Point, which falls under Examination, is how it comes to obtain that Name and Title. And the chief reason seems to be this; because 'tis impossible, that one Man should bear a greater Sway over another, than that the latter shall be obliged to imploy his Strength, and his Fortunes for the Advancement of the Publick Good, as the ruling Party directs, and shall farther be obnoxious to Capital Punishment, upon Default. To which may be added this Consideration, that as setting aside the Divine Sovereignty, particular Men cannot enjoy a higher Degree of Liberty, than the Power of guiding and applying, by their own Judgment, their Actions, Persons, and Goods; so the Freedom of a Community or Body of Men consists in their being able, by their own joint Discretion, independent of the Will of any Superior (1), to resolve and decree such Matters as appear conducive to the general Benefit and Safety. And hence, likewise it follows by necessary Consequence, that such a Power being Supreme, or, not acknowledging any Superior upon Earth, the Acts which proceed from it, cannot be disannull'd at the Pleasure of any other Mortal (2). But that a Person or a State should be able to alter the Decrees and Resolutions of their own Will, is so far from abridging, that it really inhanceth their Liberty.

II. For the same Reason must the Sovereign be acknowledg'd Unaccountable: that is, not obnoxious to Human Judgment, or Human Punishment (3). For both these suppose a Superior; but a Superior to the Supreme, in the same Order of Men, and the same Notion of Government, is a Contradiction. But it will be proper here to observe, that I may give an Account two ways, either to a Superior, who, upon his Dislike, may reverse all my Acts, and farther inflict a Punishment upon me: or else to an Equal, whose bare Approbation of my Proceedings I am willing to obtain; only to keep up my fair Character with him, and to justify my Integrity and Honour. In the former manner, Supreme Rulers are not accountable to any Earthly Power. But in the latter way, Princes, who are tender of their Reputation, commonly endeavour to lay open their Actions and Counsels to the View of the whole World: which being done only to secure the Credit of their Reign, cannot imply the least Shadow of Subjection. In the same manner, I may expend my Money and Fortunes at my own Pleasure, and as I see Occasion; and yet I am willing to keep Books of my Accounts, to satisfy my Friends, that I am no ill Husband.

And then as for the other Point, the being obnoxious to Punishment, this cannot affect Him, who owns no Court that can give him his Tryal, no Judge, that can pronounce or execute Sentence upon him. For the Courts of Justice, in a Common-wealth, reach no farther than the Subjects, and are beholden to the Sovereign for all their Authority and Power. But if, as it frequently happens, Princes condescend to answer an Action in their own Courts, in Matters of Debt and the like Cases; this is not done, as if they acknowledged any Superior Force, that could oblige and compel them, but only expresth their Desire of seeing the Plaintiff's Pretensions

(1) If this be true, then Princes, whose Power is limited, are not Sovereigns; since They can't do any thing Effectually without always consulting an Assembly of the People, or of those who represent them: But our Author, in the Tenth Section of this Chapter, asserts the contrary. (2) Vid. Grot. l. 1. c. 3. f. 7. n. 1.

(3) See Sir George Mackenzie's Jus Regium, and Arch-Bp. Usher of the Obedience of Subjects to their Princes, and the Homily of the Church of England against Rebellion.

clearly made out; which if they once appear just, they are ready to satisfy and discharge, in a voluntary manner. Yet we speak here of Human Punishment only, inflicted by a Superior Earthly Judge. For the Divine Justice finds many ways of shewing it self on those high and potent Sinners, who violate the Laws of Nature, in Contempt of all Earthly Tribunals. Reges in ipsos imperium est Jovis (a). Princes are but the Subjects of Heaven. As to what History (b) tells us of the Egyptians, that when their Kings had been ill Governours, they denied them the usual Honours of Burial: this piece of Disrespect can scarce fall under the proper Notion of Punishment.

III. Farther, when a Civil Power is constituted Supreme, it must, on this very Score, be supposed, exempt from Human Laws, or, to speak more properly, above them. As for the Laws of GOD and Nature, to bring them into the Question, would be no less absurd than impious (c). Now Human Laws are nothing else, but the Decrees of the Supreme Power, concerning Matters to be observ'd by the Subjects, for the publick Good of the State (r). That no such Edicts can directly oblige the Sovereign is manifest; because his very Name and Title supposeth that no Bond or Engagement can be laid on him, by any other Mortal Hand: And for a Person to oblige himself under the Notion of a Lawgiver, or of a Superior, is an impossibility (d) (2). Yet, in an indirect manner and by way of Reflection, the Force of his own Ordinance frequently reacheth the Legislator, on account of natural Equity, and publick Decorum; to excite and encourage Obedience in the Subject, by acting that himself which he prescribes to others, as expedient for the common Interest; and least, by forbidding such Practices, as he is himself observ'd passionately to pursue, he should seem to envy others the Sweetness of Vice, and engross it all for his own Possession and Prerogative. The Life of a Prince (says Pliny (e)) is a perpetual Censorship: by this, we are turn'd and directed in all our Proceedings; and, to secure our Obedience, we have ever more need of his Pattern than of his Prescriptions. For, Fear is a most unfaithful Guide to Vertue. Men are much better influenced into Goodness by the Power of Examples: which, at first sight, discover this Advantage in themselves, above all other Methods of Instruction, that they shew the Possibility of obtaining what they advise us to pursue. There is a Remark, not unworthy the Majesty of Kings, which Athenaus (f) hath made from the Reports of more ancient Histories, that of the two great Monarchs in India and in Persia, the former was absolutely forbid to exceed the moderate Bounds of Drinking; and the latter allow'd his Liberty in this Respect, but one Day in a Year, at a solemn Sacrifice and Festival. Claudian's Admonition to the Young Emperour was wise and proper;

*In commune jubes si quid censesque tenendum,
Primus jussa subì: tunc observantior equi
Fit Populus, nec ferre negat, cum viderit ipsam
Authorem parere sibi: Componitur orbis
Regis ad exemplum; nec sic inflectere sensus
Humanos edicta valent, ac vita regentis* (g).

Would You Your Publick Laws should sacred stand?
Lead first the way, and act what You command.
The Crowd grow mild and tractable to see
The Author govern'd by his own Decree.
The World turns round, as its Great Master draws,
And Princes Lives bind stronger than their Laws (h).

IV. For the better asserting and vindicating the just Pre-eminence of the Supreme Power, especially in Monarchical Governments, it will be proper to take under our Censure that vulgar Distinction of Sovereignty into Real and Personal; which seems, in our Judgment, to be not only very absurd, but of very pernicious Consequence, if applied to this Sense, that there shall be supposed, at the same time, in the same Monarchy, a Real and a Personal Sovereignty; the latter to be lodg'd in the King, the former in the People, as opposed to the King; and that in this, as in most other Cases, the Real Authority and Right shall have the Ascendant of the Personal. Nothing can be more evident, than that such a Notion contradicts it self, turning every Kingdom into a Monster with two Heads, and exposing it to utter Convulsion and Ruine. The Necessity of this Distinction doth by no means appear from the Reason commonly alledg'd, that the King, or the Royal Family being extinct, the People so far return to their first Right and Freedom, as that they may, at their Pleasure,

(a) Hor. Ode 1. v. 5, 6. L. 3. (b) Vid. Diodor. Sic. l. 1. c. 72. (c) Plutarch. Ad Princip, Indoct. p. 780. G. Who then shall govern the Prince? That Law which Pindar calls the Supreme Directress of Gods and Men: not written in Books, or engraven in Tables, but imprinted in a lively Sense upon the Reason, ever residing and keeping a constant Watch, nor suffering the Mind to be one Moment without a Guide and Ruler. Senec. Thyest. v. 610.

Omne sub regno graviore regnum est.

Monarchs must answer to a higher Throne.

(r) See Mr. Barbeyrac's Second Note upon this Section.

(d) Vid. Hobbes De Cive, c. 6. s. 14.

(2) V. Grot. L. 2. c. 4. f. 12. n. 1. See Mr. Barbeyrac's Fourth Note upon this Section. (e) In Panegy. c. 45. n. 6. (f) L. 10, ex Otes. (g) De IV. Consul. Honorii, v. 296, &c. (h) Liv. l. 26. c. 36. Would You lay an Injunction on an Inferior? The most lively means to engage his Obedience, will be to apply Your self, and those about You, to the same Practice. Plin. l. IV. Epist. 22. towards the End. As in a Body, so in a Government, the most dangerous Disease is that which flows from the Head. Vid. Justin. l. III. c. 2. n. 8. The Old Persian Proverbs to this Purpose, carry much good Sense in a very odd Dress: If a King pluck but an Apple in a Subject's Garden, his Servants will root up the Tree. If a King allow his Soldiers the stealing of half a Dozen Eggs; their next Exploit will be to visit the Camp with Hens. Rofar. Persic. c. 1.

either choose a new King, or set up another form of Government. It may as well be affirm'd, that we ought to suppose a Real Power in a Servant, contradistinct to the Personal Power of his Master, meerly because, if the Master dies without Heirs, the Servant is at his own Disposal. Nor can any better Argument be drawn from the Position of Grotius (a) and others, that there is a twofold Subject in which the Supreme Power resides, one Common, the other Proper; the former, the whole State or Kingdom, the latter, a single Person, or a Council, whether consisting of many, or of few. For the Sense of that Observation can be only this, if we ask in a general and confused manner, Where the Supreme Power is lodg'd? The Answer will be, In the whole Common-wealth: but if we propose the same Question distinctly, and enquire What Person bears the Sovereignty in the State? It will be answer'd, The King, or, the Senate, or the People. But who will hence infer, two distinct Sovereign Powers, one Real in the People, another Personal in the Prince? This would be no less ridiculous, than to conceive two distinct Sights in a Man; one residing in a Common Subject, the Person; the other in a Proper Subject, the Eye.

V. Many have taken the Liberty to assert, that the Power of the Prince neither can, nor ought to be Superior to that of all the People. Aristotle seems very much to countenance this Opinion, in the sixteenth Chapter of his third Book of Politicks (1). And in the fifteenth Chapter of the same Book, he discourseth to this purpose (2), A King ought indeed to be invested with Strength and Power; but in such a Degree, as that he shall be greater indeed than single Persons, and than many in Conjunction; yet still inferior to the whole Body of the People. Grotius (b) hath undertaken the Controversy with these Men; and the first Argument he urgeth against them is, that as each particular Man may give up himself in personal Servitude to Another; so a whole People or Nation may transfer on a single Governour all their Right and Power over themselves, without Limitation or Restriction (c). Tho' indeed, in other respects, it seems by no means fair to compare the Condition of Subjects, under an absolute Monarch, with that of Slaves. For as Claudian (3) well observes.

*Fallitur egregio quisquis sub Principe credit
Servitium: nunquam libertas gratior extat,
Quam sub Rege pio.* —————

They grossly err, that think a slavish Chain Binds them beneath a vertuous Monarch's Reign.
When Justice, Piety and Goodness sway
The Regal Power, 'tis Freedom to obey (d).

Grotius proceeds to reckon up several Causes and Occasions, which may induce a People to renounce all their Right in this manner, and yield it up into the Hands of an absolute Lord. Many of these we find put together by Tully (e): Men, says he, subject themselves to the Power and Command of Another, for several Reasons. They are led by Kindness and Good Will, by extraordinary Benefits, by superior Worth and Excellency, by the Hopes of Advantage, and by the Fears of Compulsion; large Promises of Bounty and Favour; and lastly, as we have seen it often happen in our Common-wealth, by downright Wages and Hire. But those Cases which Grotius chooseth to insist upon, are; if a People should chance to lie under manifest Danger of Ruine from an Enemy, and have no other means of being deliver'd, than to put themselves, without any reserve, under the Command of their Protector (f): Or, if being in Distress with violent Want, they cannot otherwise procure Sustenance and Support (g): If a Father of a Family, having large Territories, should refuse to admit any Person into his Lands, but upon Covenants of absolute Subjection: Or, if a Master, who possesseth a vast Number of Slaves, should give them their Freedom on the same Condition. Besides, it's possible, that such a Form of Government may suit with the Genius of some particular People. Nor ought the Desire of living under an absolute Monarchy, be always judg'd a Token of a low and abject Spirit, tho' it hath usually lain under this Censure, in the Opinions of Persons born in Democracies; who, on that Score, will never pardon the Cappadocians for refusing Liberty, when offer'd them by their Roman Conquerours (h). But on the contrary to any People, amongst whom there are a Number of proud, insolent, aspiring Men, impatient of Equality, a popular Liberty must be the most pernicious thing in the World; and

(a) L. 1. c. 3. f. 7. (1) In the Beginning. (2) Towards the End. See Mr. Barbeyrac's First Note upon this Section. (b) Ibid. f. 8. (c) Vid. Exod. XXI. 6. Levitic. XXV. 39. Add. Selden. De J. N. & G. Sec. Heb. l. 6. c. 7. V. L. 40. t. 12. l. 37. D. De liberali causa, & C. L. 7. t. 16. l. 10. D. d. t. l. 7. & l. 33. & D. Quib. ad Libert. proclam. non licet. L. 40. t. 13. l. 4. & L. 28. t. 3. l. 6. f. 5. D. De injust. Testam. &c. Novell Leonis, LIX. Cæsar reports of the Ancient Gauls, that amongst them, most of the inferior Populacy, when oppress'd, either by Debts, or Taxes, or the Injuries of too powerful Neighbours, fix'd themselves, as Vassals, on some of the Nobility, who enjoy'd all those Rights over them, which Masters ordinarily bear over their Slaves. De B. G. l. VI. c. 13. n. 2. (3) De laudibus Stilicon. L. 3. v. 113, &c.

(d) There is an excellent Saying to the same purpose in Philostrat. De Vit. Apollon. l. 5. c. 12. p. 245. B. Ed. Morel. As some one Man in a Common-wealth, highly surpassing others in Wisdom and Vertue, seems by his good Management to turn the Popular Government into the Command of a single Person; so a single Person reigning Sovereign in a State, if he direct all his Counsels to the Publick Good, seems to express, in his Authority, the Freedom of a Popular Government. Add. Hobbes De Cive, c. 10. f. 8. (e) Offic. II. c. 6. (f) Vid. Liv. l. 7. c. 31. (g) Vid. Genes. XLVII. 19.

(h) Vid. Strabo, l. 12. p. 273. & Justin. l. 38. c. 2. 'Tis a Saying of Euripides, in (Helen. v. 283.) and 'tis no more than what was the current Notion of the Grecians;

Τὰ βαρβάρων δούλα πάντα πλὴν ἑνός.

In Barbarous Kingdoms All are Slaves but One.

yet the same Men will very contentedly submit to a Monarchical Government. For they had rather serve One, and lord it over all others in the State, than live on the common Level; and, as Ausonius says (1), For the Sake of Commanding, they are willing to Obey. The Eastern Nations have been of old, and are still so accustomed to Monarchy, that we are told the Chinese could not form any Notion of the States of Holland, having heard of no Government, but that by Kings (a). And a Venetian Traveller (b) reports, that the King of Pegu, when he was inform'd, that the Sovereign Power, at Venice, was lodg'd in the Senate, burst out into a Fit of Laughter, taking it for a meer Jest in Politicks. On the other side, such Men are fit only to live in a popular State, as have moderate Spirits and easy Passions, and know how to rest satisfied with the same humble Condition as their Neighbours. Lastly, it often falls out, that free States are, by intestine Divisions, brought into such Circumstances, as that they cannot be safe otherwise than under the absolute Command of a single Person; and, as Lucan observes,

Cum Domino Pax ista venit (c). —

They gain a Master when they gain a Peace.

VI. It may, perhaps, seem more to the purpose, to examine the Reasons of those Men, who are so fond of exalting, above Kings, that Real Sovereignty of the People, which they have fram'd in their own Fancy. They tell us, then, that all Kings are Constituted by the People, and that 'tis Natural the Parties, who Confer the Dignity, should be Superior to the Parties who Receive it (2). Now, as to this Point, it must be observ'd, that altho', in the Constituting of all Kings, the People interpose their Consent, yet there is a great Difference in the manner how such Consent is obtain'd and applied. Some Nations take a King, upon their own free and voluntary Motion: others under the Distress of War, or some other great Necessity, receive the same kind of Government; which they would have been very far from desiring, had they not been driven to it by these Misfortunes. It is agreeable to the common Usage of Speech, to say, that those Princes only are Constituted by the People, whom the People appoint by their own free Act. On the other hand, those who extort the People's Consent, by Arms, or the like means, are not said to have been made by the People's Appointment, but to have subjected the People to their Command. But, farther, then only the Parties who constitute Another are properly Superior to Him, when it is always in their Power to determine how long he shall possess the Dignity with which they have once invest'd Him. Whereas, in many Cases, it is at first a Matter of free Pleasure and Choice to appoint the Person, and yet the Appointment, being once made, becomes necessary and irreversible. Others answer the same Argument, with this Distinction; a Man may Constitute Another, either over a third Person, or over himself. In the former Case, the Constituting Party is Superior to him whom he thus Constitutes. For 'tis suppos'd, before-hand, that the third man, both was, and still is, under the Power of Him, who thus sets a new Ruler over Him. Whence it follows, that this new Ruler must depend on the Will and Pleasure of the old. For since no one can serve two Masters, unless in Subordination; I cannot appoint another Lord over my proper Subject, without making him accountable to my self: and consequently, he is no more than a subordinate Governour. Thus a free State, when it gives a General, the full Command of its Souldiers, was, and still is Superior to him, and them. But he, who Constitutes Another with Authority over himself, can no more be suppos'd to continue Superior to him, than he can, at the same time, and in respect of the same Person, Command and Obey.

But 'tis farther urged on the other side (3), that since all Government is instituted for the sake of those who Obey, not of those who Rule; or, since the King is made for the People, not the People for the King; on that score, the People must be Superior to the Prince: In as much as, that for which another thing is ordain'd, seems more Noble and Excellent, than what is thus fram'd on its account. Here the Assertion, if held in General, is false; for all Government or Command, is not instituted for the sake of those who Obey; as is clear in the Authority of Masters over their Servants: altho' the Master cannot, indeed, well enjoy the Fruits of his Sovereignty, unless he take some Care of those, who are thus placed in Subjection under him. Besides, the Question is not, whether the Person of the Prince be of more value than the whole People; as is in case, either He or They were necessarily to perish: but, whether, since Civil Government is set up for the Benefit of the Community, the means of procuring this End, should be determin'd by the Judgment of those who have submitted their Wills to the Will of the Prince, or by Him, to whose Prudence and Conscience the Administration of Affairs hath been given in Charge.

Some, because we read of the People's being punish'd for their Prince's Sins, thence infer, that the People had a Power to restrain

(1) ————— Et dominari
Ut possint, servire volunt, ————— Idyll. 15. v. 37, 38.

(a) Neuhof. in Legat.
c. 3. f. 8. n. 13.

(b) Caspar Balbi, in Itinerar.
(3) V. Grot. ubi supra, f. 14.

(c) Lib. 1. Pharsal. v. 670.

(2) V. Grot. L. 1.

them from finning, which cannot be supposed, without a Right Superior to the Regal Authority (1). For I am not chargeable with the Guilt of another Man's Action, when I contributed nothing to it. But 'tis impossible to conceive how the People can partake in the Sin of their Prince, at which they are heartily displeas'd, unless by neglecting to use some proper Method of Correction. In answer to what is thus urged, we take it for a certain Truth, that the Sins of the Princes do not, directly, and on their own account, derive any Guilt on the Subject, unless the Subjects themselves have contributed some positive Assistance to them (a). But they cannot contract a Guilt from the Omission of any Restraint or Punishment: because being inferior to the Prince, they had neither Power nor Obligation to apply such means of reclaiming Him. For as our Ability, so our Duty of hindring another Man's Sins ariseth from our Power over him, or, from such an Authority as implies our Right of directing, and controlling his Proceedings. Therefore, what the Prince Acts, before he receives that Dignity, certainly cannot affect the rest of the People; since Equals have no Command one over the other. No more can the Subjects be charged with what He commits after his accession to the Crown: since 'tis ridiculous to say, that those, who during his private Station, had no Command over him to restrain him from offending, whilst he was in all Points their Equal, should then at last obtain such a Command, when they gave up themselves to his Direction and Sway. Nor doth that Act or Covenant, by which Subjects invest a Prince with Absolute Power, by any means make them partakers of His Sins. For by such a Covenant the People do not indulge an Impunity to the King, but only leave him in Possession of that which he before enjoy'd by virtue of his Natural Liberty: since he could not exercise the Supreme Authority, were he not exempt from Human Punishment (b).

What some urge, that, as he who hath given himself up for a Slave, still keeps a Right of recovering himself from that State; so a People, who have submitted to the Yoak of Monarchy, retain an equal Right of reassuming their Freedom: This no Man in his Wits will allow for Truth, unless it be added, as a necessary Condition, that such a return to Liberty be made, with the Consent of the Master or the Prince, by their voluntary receding, from that just Right and Authority which they had before obtain'd, over the Servant, or over the Subject (c). Besides, 'tis a groundless Affertion, to say, that a People, to whose Temper and Disposition, an absolute Monarchy was once agreeable, when they have, in Course of Time, worn off their servile Genius, may re-establish themselves in a Free Commonwealth. For if such a Case should happen, it will be incumbent on the Prince, so far as Prudence permits, to humour this Change of Inclination in the Subject, by softening the Rigour, and varying the Measures of his Reign. No less ridiculous is it to infer, that because a Master or Proprietor, who abuseth his own Possessions, may be punish'd, or deprived of his Goods, therefore a Prince too, who makes ill use of his Power, may be corrected and reduced to Reason. For that which makes such a Proceeding Lawful in the former Case, is the Prince's superior Right over the Goods of the Subjects, which 'tis the Interest of the whole Community to preserve from being thrown away to no purpose. But who will pretend, that the People have a kind of Prerogative, or a more eminent Right over the Rights of their King; or, that they are Masters to their own Master?

As for the Saying of some Princes, produced in favour of the opposite Opinion, it cannot be denied but that many such fine Speeches have been used, out of a principle of Ostentation. But they will all fall under this general Answer, that a Prince ought indeed to direct every thing to the Good and Safety of his People: but the People are not thereupon invested with a Power of punishing Him, as often as they shall judge that He applies wrong Means, towards the obtaining of that End. Alike senseless and trifling it is to argue, that, in as much as the People have not a Right of destroying themselves, or of practising any grievous Cruelty on their own Body, therefore they can transfer no such Right on the King. For who ever maintain'd, that Princes had a Right of destroying their People? We shall hereafter make it appear, that Absolute Government is by no means so formidable a thing, as these Men are willing to fancy: And how far a People may proceed, in case the Prince manifestly seeks their Ruine, will be likewise consider'd in its proper place (2). When we are told of the ancient Consuls, and other Magistrates, said to be placed over the People, and yet frequently reform'd by the People's Censure and Punishment; these Allegations are vain and idle, the Instances not coming up to the Question (3).

Lastly, as to what is objected from Scripture History, that the Jews threw off the Yoak of

(1) V. Grot. ubi supra, f. 16.

(2) Euripid. Suppl. v. 879, 880.

————— The State which suffers in its Fame
For a Bad Prince, it self is Innocent.

(b) The Argument urged from the 2 Sam. XXIV. is sufficiently answer'd by Grotius, in the place above quoted. See a remarkable Passage in Martinus's History of China, (l. 3. c. 1.) applicable to the same Chapter, v. 17.

(c) Vid. Xenophon Cyrop. l. 3. princip. (2) Chap. 8. (3) For those Consuls and Magistrates were not Sovereigns, but the meer Ministers of the People.

the strange Nations, when they seem'd to have been sufficiently Chastised for their Rebellion against G O D ; we thus reply, that either they still continued in a state of War with those Nations, never engaging their Faith, or submitting as true Subjects ; and so they had a Right of treating their Oppressors & Enemies : or else, they acted in these extraordinary proceedings by express Command from Heaven ; which if it seem to intrench on the common Measures of Right, is no Precedent for the Imitation of Others (a).

VII. To proceed, nothing is more apparent, than that in some States the ruling Power, (especially, if Monarchical,) is free in its Proceedings ; in others, it is restrain'd to a particular manner of acting : which Difference gave Occasion to the Distinction of Sovereignty into Absolute and Limited. And here we think our selves obliged, in the first place, to explain, with what Accuracy we can, the proper Signification of this Term Absolute ; which bears a hateful Sound in the Ears of Persons, born under Free Governments. Indeed the Word, if Falsly applied and understood, may encourage ill Princes to grieve and oppress the State, and to commit the worst of Disorders. Especially since there will be seldom wanting a Tribe of Flatterers, to second the Motion, and, under this Fair Pretence, to feed and inflame the Ambition, and other Vices of their Master. ' You are Absolute, will they say, ' therefore your Pleasure is your Law : therefore, waste your Subjects and your Neighbours with Unnecessary Wars, to procure your self the Name of a great Commander : therefore, take the Liberty of treating with Insolence and Abuse, whomsoever you think fit : therefore, drain your People with Rapes and Exactions, to supply your Luxury, or your Pride. A high Strain of this Parafitical Rhetorick was that which Anaxarchus used to Alexander, when under Discontent for his Murther of Clytus ; he told him, ' That Justice ' was therefore feign'd, by the Poets, to sit on ' the same Throne as the Gods, or to stand behind Jupiter's Chair, that Men might apprehend and acknowledge, whatever a King acts, ' to be Good and Right (b).

Nay, there are Authors, who upon profess'd Principles maintain the Absolute Right of Kings, by such Arguments and Reasons, as if they measured it only by a general Impunity, and a Licence to oppress and spoil the People. The true State of the Point, then, is this : As we cannot conceive, in single Persons, a higher and more absolute Liberty, than that they shall determine and dispose of their Goods, and Actions, not by the Will of another, but by their own Judgment and Pleasure, yet still with a full Obedience to the Law of Nature ; and as this Liberty Naturally belongs to all Persons, who are not subject to the Command of Others : so, where many Men cleave together in an establish'd State, there too, as in a Common Subject, must necessarily reside the same Liberty, or the Power of choosing by their own Judgment, all Means and Methods tending to the Preservation of the whole Society. And this Liberty is attended with an Absolute Command, or a Right of prescribing those Means to the particular Members, and of compelling them to a due Obedience and Conformity. Therefore in every State, properly so call'd, there must always be such an Absolute Authority, at least in Habit and Power, if not always in Exercise and Act. For 'tis a Contradiction to say, that such a Community is obnoxious or subject to none, but purely free and independent, and yet that it hath not a Right of administering its proper Affairs by its own Inclination and Judgment. And that this Absolute Sovereignty implies nothing that can be term'd unjust or intolerable, we may easily apprehend from the End of Civil Establishments and Communities. For these publick Bodies were never instituted with a Design, that Men should throw off the Restraints and Commands of Nature, and run into all the Extravagancies of evil Lusts ; but that, by the united Strength of a Multitude, a better Provision might be made, for the Interest and Security of each Member ; and, consequently, that we might be put into an easier, and safer Course of observing the Edicts of Natural Law.

VIII. But when we consider the Supreme Power, as it inheres in one Man or in a Council, whether of all, or of few, as in its proper and peculiar Subject ; it is not every where thus free and absolute, but in some places we find it under the Restraint of certain Rules and Laws. Indeed, as for Democracies, the Distinction between Absolute and Limited Sovereignty is not in them so easily discoverable. For although, in every such free State, there must be some settled Rules, founded either upon Custom, or upon written Law, determining at what Time, and by what Persons, the People shall be call'd together, publick Affairs proposed, and the Resolutions executed ; (for we can form no Notion of a Civil Community, without these constant Methods of proceeding :) yet since the Council, in which the Sovereignty resides, consists of all the People, and consequently every Man is there who obtains any Right by such Rules or Orders ; therefore nothing hinders, but that the People thus assembled, may, at any time, alter or repeal them (c). Anacharsis, in Plutarch (d), laugh'd at Solon for hoping that he should be

(a) Add. Sanderson. De Obligat. Conscient. Prælect. IX. S. 16, &c. & Prælect. X. S. 13, 16, 22, 23.

(b) Plutarch. ad Princip. Indoct. p. 780. And so in Sophocles, Antigone. p. 234. Ed. H. Steph.

Kings have large Privileges ; and, in chief, able to curb the Injustice, and the other Vices of his Country-men, by written Ordinances, things of no more Strength than Cobwebs: Solon wisely answered, that Men commonly stand to Bargains and Agreements, when it is the Interest of neither Party to break them: and that he would so frame and temper his Prescriptions, as to make it evident to all Persons in the State, that it would be much more for their Benefit and Advantage to obey the Laws than to transgress them. But the Event of Things confirm'd the Judgment of Anacharsis rather than the Hopes of Solon. The most likely Means, that can be thought of, for the ensuring and perpetuating these Decrees, is for the People to bind themselves, by a solemn Act of Religion, that they will ever observe them: as was practis'd in Rome, with regard to the Law prohibiting Regal Government. Yet whether such an Oath is any longer Obligatory, when none of the Persons survive who first engaged in it, hath been the Subject of a former Enquiry (a). Cæsar found an easy piece of Sophistry to elude such a publick Constitution. The Roman People had laid up a certain Sum in the Treasury, with a solemn Execration of any one that should dare to touch it, unless in case of an Invasion from the Gauls: Cæsar laid Hands on the Money, and solv'd all Scruples with this Bravado, that by subduing the Gallick Nation, he had, at once, freed the Commonwealth from their Oath, and from their Enemy (b). Herodotus (c) informs us, that the Athenian Lawgiver but now mention'd, made his People swear, that they would not reverse one of his Ordinances within the Space of Ten Years. Others have endeavour'd to preserve such publick Rules, by decreeing a Penalty against any Person, who should move to have them repeal'd; tho' the Penalty, in this Case, may as well be abrogated as the Laws. Thus the Thasians made it Death for any Man to propose a League with the Athenians (d). And the Athenians themselves denounced a Fine against him who should prefer a Bill for the Recovery of the Island Salamis (e). Charondas decreed amongst the Thurians, that whoever attempted to correct, or alter the settled Laws, should come into the publick Assembly with a Halter about his Neck (f). In the same manner Xenophon (g) reports, that by an Order of War, in Cyrus's Expedition, it was declared Capital for any Person to speak of dividing the Army.
The Power to act or speak what'ere they please.

(c) Ald. Mauroceni Hist. Venet. l. 13. p. 517, &c. (d) In Solon, p. 81. A. B.

But in Aristocracies and Monarchies, where the Persons governing are different from those who are govern'd, and, consequently, where the latter may obtain a Right by the Pacts and Promises of the former, the Distinction between absolute and limited Sovereignty is clearly discernible. He then, under such States or Kingdoms, is properly Absolute, who exerciseth the publick Administration by his Judgment, not according to any settled Rules or perpetual Decrees, but as the various Conditions of Affairs seem to require: or, in short, who procures the Safety of the Commonwealth, by such means as his own Prudence suggests, in every Exigency of Things and Times. And in this Sense the Term Absolute is so far from implying any thing that looks Odious and Tyrannical, that it lays on Princes a Necessity of applying a stricter Care and Caution, than those who proceed in all Business by constant Forms; if they would fully satisfy their Conscience and their Duty. Dio the Orator (h) speaks admirably to this purpose: A good Prince, says he, covets nothing, because he thinks himself to possess all things: he abstains from Pleasures, because he knows they are all within his reach, if he should be inclined to make use of them: he is juster than all Others, because he knows himself to be the Fountain of Justice to the whole State: he takes a Delight in Business and Labour, because he engageth in it by his own free Motion; and he loves the Laws, because he doth not fear them. And in this way of arguing, he proceeds truly and rationally. For who hath need of greater Prudence, than one who is to steer and direct such important Affairs? who of a stricter and more accurate Justice, than one who is above the Laws? who of a more tender Modesty, than one who hath a Licence to do all things? and who of a more resolute Courage, than one who is, by his Office, the Common Guardian and Protector?

IX. But since, in consulting the publick Safety, the Judgment of a single Person may easily be deceiv'd; and since all Men are not arriv'd at such a Strength of Soul, as to be able to rule their Passions under so vast and so tempting a Liberty (i); many Nations have thought it the more secure and prudent Course, not to put so unbounded a Power entirely into the Hands of one Man; who can neither be infallible in his Understanding, nor inflexible in his Will; but rather to prescribe to him a certain Method of Governing: it having been first discover'd, that these fixt Rules and Forms of publick Business, are agreeable to the Genius of the People, and the Constitution of the State. Nor is this Limitation of Power an Injury to those Princes, who owe their Crown to the free Gift of the People. For if they thought it hard to receive an Authority, which they could not exercise at their own Pleasure, they were at Liberty to have refused it. But when they have once accepted of the Sovereignty, under these Conditions, the solemn Oath, by which they engage to observe the Conditions, utterly forbids them to use any

(a) B. 4. c. 2. f. 17. (b) Appian. Alexand. de Bell. Civ. l. 2. (c) Clio. (d) Polyæn. Strateg. l. 2. c. 33.

(e) Plutarch. Solon. p. 82. B. (f) Diodor. Sic. l. 12. c. 17. (g) Περὶ ἀναβάσεως, l. 6. (h) Orat. 63. de Regno & Tyranno, p. 588. A. B. Ed. Morell. (i) This is what M. Antoninus acknowledges in Herodian, B. 1. c. 8. Edit. Oxon. Καλεπὸν δὲ μετρησῆναι τι, καὶ ὄρον ἐπιθῆναι ἐπιθυμίας, ὑπερτέρας ἐξουσίας. See Mr. Barbeyrac's First Note upon this Section.

Means, whether of secret Contrivance, or of open Violence, in order to subverting the Laws of the Kingdom, and rendring themselves Absolute. Because, as Pliny (a) observes, No one ought more religiously to observe his Oath, than he who hath the greatest Interest in not being forsworn (1).

'Tis a very poor Argument which some make use of, when they tell us, that since Princes are ordain'd by God, and since He hath commanded them fully to discharge their Duty, which cannot be done without the Exercise of the Sovereign Power; therefore we ought to suppose, that God, by the same Act, gives them such a certain Measure of Authority; of which as they ought not to suffer themselves to be, in the least, abridg'd; so the People cannot, with any Justice, desire to make an Encroachment upon it; nor, if they did, could they be able to bind the Prince, by a Contract so prejudicial to his Right, and to the Trust which he receiv'd from God. At the same rate, say they, a Wife might engage her Husband, by Covenant, to wink at her stoln Amours: so as to answer the Poet's Character (2).

————— *Doctus spectare lacunar,
Doctus & ad calices vigilanti, stertere naso.*

Who his taught Eyes up to the Ceiling throws,
And sleeps all over but his wakeful Nose.

Mr. Dryden.

Or the Bargain might be mutual;

*Ut faceres tu quod velles; nec non ego possem
Indulgere mihi* (3):

The Parties should be pleas'd on either side;
And both may for their private Needs provide.

Mr. Dryden.

But, as we have already evinced (4) the Origin of Sovereignty to be from God, so we take it for a certain Truth, that it was left to the Pleasure, and Judgment of Men to choose what particular Form of Government they thought most convenient: except where Civil Laws have been divinely instituted, by the extraordinary Interposition and Appointment of Heaven. 'Twas a wise Saying of Melancthon (b), States and Kingdoms differ in their Frame, some admitting Liberty in one Degree, some in another. But God approves of all Forms of Government, which are agreeable to Nature, and to Reason. None will pretend, that when a Free People are about to elect a King, one Candidate can plead the Divine Designation more than another: or that there is any peculiar Form of Words establish'd by GOD Himself, under which the Investiture of Sovereignty must necessarily be made.

Nor will the famous Description of a King by Samuel (c), do these Authors any Service, which they expound as a general Right belonging to every Monarch; whilst others will have it to be a bare account of Matter of Fact, what some Kings will do, tho' none may justly do it. Grotius (d) takes the middle way, between these contrary Interpretations, and tells us, that the Prophet's Words do neither express a Matter of Right, nor yet a bare Fact, supposed to be wrong and injurious; but such a Fact as carries in it the Force or Consequence of a Right, tho' it hath not the Foundation; and this Force or Consequence is, that it obligeth the Subject to Non-resistance: In other words, that however the Prince may, in such Actions, violate his Duty, yet the People have no more Licence to oppose his Proceedings, than if he did nothing but what was highly just and equal. And on this Account he observes it to be, that Samuel foretels the People, they should cry to GOD under these Oppressions; intimating, that the Things were above Human Relief or Remedy. In fine, he says, such Acts as these in Kings may be term'd Right, by the same way of Speech, as when the Civil Law (e) affirms the Prætor ius reddere, to do Right, even when his Sentence is unjust. But the true Import of that place of Scripture may perhaps better appear, if we take this plain and easy Method of explaining it. The Jewish Nation had hitherto liv'd under a Democracy, but such a one, as often bore the Semblance of that kind of Government, on which Aristotle bestows the Title of Heroical. Their Judges, rais'd up for the most part by Divine Impulse, either deliver'd them from their Oppressors by War, or administer'd Justice in Peace: Yet, in ordinary Cases, they had more Authority to persuade, than Power to command: and no Taxes were allow'd them beyond the standing Revenues, to encrease their Strength, or to adorn their Dignity (f). At length the People grown weary of this Constitution, desir'd a King, after the manner of other Nations; that is, one who should shine with external Pomp and Grandeur, and should either keep a constant Body of regular Forces, or at least should train up the Subjects to Arms, that they might be ready to make Head against any sudden Invasion (g). When Matters stood thus in the People's Opinion, Samuel, to put them upon a serious Deliberation, before the thing was past Recovery, sets out to them, in lively Colours, the Rights of such a Sovereign, and the Inconveniencies which would attend the Government. You would have a King, says he, who should appear with State and Magnificence: why, to compass this End, he must be attended

(a) Paneg. c. 65. (1) See Sidney upon Government, C. 3. S. 14. (2) Juvenal. Satyr. i. v. 56, 57.

(3) Juvenal. Satyr. 6. v. 281, 282. (4) In the Third Chapter of this Book. (b) In Epitom. Moral. Philos.

(c) 1 Sam. VIII. 11, &c. (d) L. 1. c. 4. f. 3. (e) L. 1. t. 1. l. 11. D. De Jus. & Jure.

(f) Add. Grot. ad Judic. c. 1. (g) See 1 Sam. XIII. 2. XIX. 48, 52.

with a numerous Train of Guards (1); therefore, He will take your sons and appoint them for himself, for his chariots, and to be his horsemen, and some shall run before his chariots. You would have a King, who should be furnish'd with a standing Military Force: it will be necessary, therefore, for him, to appoint captains over thousands, and captains over fifties, out of your Sons; who might otherwise have been employ'd in the Improvement of your private Estates. Again, the Care of publick Affairs will not allow such a King to undertake the Culture of his own Lands; therefore he will take your Sons to ear his Ground, and to reap his Harvests; as likewise, to make his instruments of war, and instruments of his chariots. Besides, since his Court will be large and full, and since it will be beneath the Dignity of his Wives, or Daughters to govern the Kitchin, and to provide Sustainance for so vast a Household; he will take your daughters to be confectionaries, and to be cooks, and to be bakers. He will have Occasion for a Multitude of Officers, to inspect and regulate the Affairs of War and Peace; and all these must have their fix'd Salaries to reward their Service; for which purpose, he will take your fields and your vineyards, even the best of them, and give them to his Servants: and for the same use, he will require the tenth of your Cattel. And, after all if need be, he will not stick to take your servants, and your beasts, and put them to his work. In a word, if You resolve to have a King, You must maintain him like a King, and settle a large Revenue for his Support; and should You afterwards grow weary of the Burthen, You cannot lay him aside at Your pleasure; Your Election having given him such a Right to the Crown, as may not be taken from him without his Consent. It is plain then, on the whole, that this Passage in the Scripture History, doth by no means patronize ill Princes, nor doth contain any certain Measure and Standard of Regal Power, there prescribed by God in the manner of a Law, so as to be incapable of receiving Addition, or Diminution from any Human Agreement; but that the Prophet barely enumerates the Burthen and Charges of a Monarchical State, whether Absolute or Limited. 'Tis certainly therefore left to the Judgment of a Free People to determine, whether they shall confer the Sovereignty on a Prince in an absolute manner, or whether they shall bind him to certain Conditions; provided these Conditions imply nothing, which is either impious towards GOD, or destructive of the proper End of Government. For although it be true, that Men first entred into regular Bodies and States, upon their own free Choice, yet in as much as they were always under the Command of the Law of Nature, they ought, on all accounts, to institute such Rules of Sovereignty and of Civil Obedience, as should be conformable to that Law, and to the just Design of Political Societies.

X. But that we may rightly apprehend what Promise or Engagement, (for all have not the same Force,) is required to the rendring a Monarchy not Absolute, (and the same will hold of an Aristocracy;) we must observe that a King, at his undertaking the chief Government, binds himself to the due Discharge of it, either by a general, or by a particular Promise, to which is usually added the Confirmation of an Oath. A general Promise may be made either tacitly or expressly. A King, by the very Act of accepting the Administration, is supposed tacitly to engage, that he will conscientiously perform his Trust; altho' no express Promise be given (a). But the most common way is to make this Promise in express Words, with the Addition of an Oath, and the Solemnity of certain Rights and Forms. And nothing is more frequent, than to have the Princes Duty described, in these set Speeches, by way of Periphrasis, or an Enumeration of its principal Parts: As, suppose, that he will be diligent and watchful in promoting the publick Security, that he will protect the good, and punish the bad, that he will faithfully administer Justice, will not oppress the Subject, and the like. Now Promises of this kind, do not in the least prejudice the Absoluteness of a Sovereignty. The King is, indeed, obliged by them to govern well; but they leave it to his Judgment and Pleasure, to choose and apply the Means in order to the obtaining this End. A particular Promise, which specifies the manner and means of Governing, may be divided according to its different Force and Effect. For sometimes it only binds the Conscience of the Prince; sometimes it makes his due Performance the Condition of his Subject's Obedience. The former is done, when the Prince engageth, (for Instance,) that he will confine the Offices and Places of Trust to Men of such Rank, or of such Qualifications; that he will invest no Person with Privileges and Immunities, burthen some or prejudicial to others; that he will enact no new Laws, impose no new Taxes or Tributes, imploy no Foreign Souldiers, and the like. But then we suppose the People to demand all this of the Prince, without constituting any certain Council, to which he shall be bound to apply himself, in case the Necessities of the Common-wealth require a Digression from such Promises and Engagements; which are always to be understood with this tacit Expression, unless the Publick Safety (the Supreme Law,) command the contrary. Such a Council, we mean, as might proceed, not precariously, but by its own proper Right, in determining these Affairs, and without the Consent of which, the Subjects should not be obliged to obey the Prince's Orders, in Points of this Nature. Now in such a State as we have been here describing, the Administration of the Government is bounded and confined by certain Laws; and the Prince, who shall act otherwise, except in Cases of Necessity, hath, no doubt, violated his Word and Faith. And yet the Subjects are not empower'd to reject his Commands, or to reverse his Proceedings, upon this Pretence. For whilst he declares, that the Safety of the People, or some extraordinary Benefit to the Publick, is the Cause and Motive of what he does, as indeed this Presumption always attends the Acts of Sovereign Princes; the Subjects are cut off from all farther Answer or Plea: inasmuch as they have no Authority to take Cognizance of those Matters, and to judge whether the Necessities of the Common-wealth require them or not. Whence 'tis easy to draw this Observation, That a People do not sufficiently guard and secure their Liberties, when they create a King only with a Limited Sovereignty, and yet do not appoint a Council, without the Approbation of which, those Acts, excepted in the Limited Grant, shall not be perform'd: or unless they oblige the King to hold an Assembly, in which those extraordinary Affairs may be debated. For this is a much better Expedient, than if the King should be only bound, in these Cases, to follow the Opinion of a smaller Council: since it might so happen, that the private Interest of those few Members, who compos'd such a Meeting, should interfere with the publick Good; whence they might be prevail'd on by the Motive of particular Advantage, to withhold their Consent from the salutary Proposals and Intentions of the Prince.

(1) See Algern. Sidney's Discourse upon Government, C. 3. S. 3, 4, 5, 7. (a) Grotius on the 2 Kings XI. 17. The People promis'd to take the King's Safety under their Care. So says Josephus; For that the King should promise any thing to the People, was not the Custom amongst the Jews: That is, by an express Promise, and such as should be made at the Coronation.

But Monarchy is brought into much narrower Bounds, and under much stricter Ties, if, at the first conferring of Sovereignty, it be expressly covenanted between the People and the Prince, that the latter shall govern according to certain Fundamental Laws, and in all such Affairs as are not left to his absolute Disposal, shall have Recourse to a Council of the Commons, or of the Nobles, and determine nothing without their Consent: that, in case he do otherwise, the Subjects shall not be obliged, by any of those illegal Commands. A People, who constitute a King over them in this manner, are supposed to have promised him Obedience, not absolutely and in all Points, but so far as his Government is agreeable to the Original Contract and the Fundamental Laws: from which, whatever Acts of his recede, are thereby rendred void, and lose all Force of engaging the Subjects to a Compliance. Nor yet can it be truly said, that these Fundamental Laws render the Supreme Power lame and imperfect. For all the Acts of Government may be exercis'd here, as well as in an absolute Kingdom: only, that whereas in the latter, the Prince proceeds by his own sole Judgment, at least, as to the final Determination of things, in the former, there is a Council establish'd, which doth, as it were, bear him Company in the adjusting of Affairs; and on the Authority of its Decisions the Sovereignty depends; not as on the proper Source of Power, but as on a Necessary Condition. Neither are there in such a State two Governing Wills; since whatever the Common Body acts, it acts by the Will of the Prince: The Limitation of the Original Grant, only producing this Effect, That (unless under such a Condition) the Prince shall not incline his Will to some particular Designs, or that such Acts of his Will shall have no Force or Vertue. No more can it be pretended, that the King, in a Realm thus constituted, loseth his Sovereign Power, or that the Council is Superior to him. For these are very faulty Consequences, 'The Prince cannot act in every thing according to his own Pleasure; therefore he hath not the Supreme Authority: I am not oblig'd to obey him in all things; therefore I am his Superior, or, at least, his Equal: I can't command a Subject in an Arbitrary manner; and therefore he must have his Turn of peremptorily commanding me who am his Prince. There is a great deal of Difference (1) between these two Propositions, 'I am bound to act with this Person's Approbation, because I have engaged myself to it by Covenant: and, I am bound to follow this Person's Will and Pleasure, because, by virtue of his Sovereignty, he hath a Right of laying these Injunctions on me. Supreme and Absolute are by no means one and the same Term. For the former, only denies a Superior or an Equal in the same Order: the latter, farther imports a Power of exercising any Kind of Right, according to one's own Judgment and Inclination.

But what shall we say, if in the Original Agreement it was expressly (a) (2) made a Condition, that if the Prince acted otherwise, he should forfeit his Sovereignty. We have many Instances of this Practice in History. Diodorus Siculus (b) reports, that amongst the Sabæans the King, though in all other Respects Unaccountable, yet if he set a Foot beyond his own Palace, was to be stoned by the People. And this, he says, was ordain'd by the Advice of an ancient Oracle. The People of Arragon heretofore, when the King had taken an Oath to preserve their Privileges, engaged their Allegiance to him in this Form, We, who have as much Power as You, make You our Sovereign

(1) Vid. Grot. L. 1. c. 3. s. 16.

(a) We say expressly, for if the Clause run only thus, In case the King act otherwise, the Subject shall not be obliged; it will not amount to such a Peremptory Condition, as the Civilians call Lex Commissoria.

(2) Vid. Grot. d. 1.

(b) L. 3. c. 47. Add. Agatharcid. de Mari Rubro, c. 50. Strabo, l. 15. pag. 488. Edit. Genev. Casaub. tells us of a Custom much like this; that in India, if the Prince happens to drink to excess, the very Women have Liberty to kill him; and she that doth the Feat, for her Reward, may claim his Successor in Marriage.

Lord, upon Condition You keep inviolably our Laws and Rights, and not otherwise (a). Severus, when he entred upon his Reign, not only swore that no Senator should be ever put to Death by his Orders; but likewise publish'd a Decree to this Effect, That whatever Emperor should take off one of the Senatorian Rank, he himself, his Children, and the Agents he made use of, with their Children, should be declared Enemies of the Common-wealth (b). Though Julius Solon, who, by the Emperor's Command wrote this Decree, in a little time after, lost his Life. To come, then, to a Resolution of the Question before us, 'tis plain, that no Absolute Prince can receive his Authority under such a Clause or Condition as we have now described. Yet nothing seems to hinder, why a limited Government, and yet a true and proper Monarchy, may not be confer'd on a Person under the Terms of Restraint. For though we should allow, That a Temporary Authority cannot rightly be term'd Supreme, yet we must not call that Authority Temporary, which depends on a Condition in the Power of the Prince to perform. Nor do we by this means subject the Prince to the Judgment of the People, as if they were, in a solemn manner, to determine whether he hath broken his Engagement, or not. For besides, that the Condition we speak of, usually consists of such Matters as are clear and obvious to Sense, and therefore not easily liable to Doubt or Dispute; such an Act of the People, whereby they take Notice of the Prince's Mis-carriage and Forfeiture, doth not carry in it the Semblance of a judicial Proceeding, for the taking Cognizance of a Subject's Offence: but is no more than a bare Declaration, by which the one Party observes and protests, that it's manifest Rights have been violated by the other Party: and such a Declaration may be made by an Inferior (c).

Grotius (1) speaks somewhat obscurely, when he observes, that the Obligation, arising from the Promises of Kings, may restrain either the Exercise of the Act, or directly the very Power. That an Act, contrary to Promises of the former kind, is Unjust, and yet Valid; but an Act, repugnant to Engagements of the latter sort, is not only Unjust, but void and ineffectual. As if he had said, sometimes a King promiseth that he will use such a part of his Sovereignty only in a certain manner: sometimes he plainly abridgeth himself of such a part of his Power. Concerning which Distinction we may offer these two Remarks: First, that an Act committed against Promises of the former kind, may likewise be Void: for Instance, suppose a Prince hath engaged, that he will not levy new Taxes without consulting the States of the Realm, we conceive that the Levies, which he shall make in this Arbitrary manner, are null and unbinding. And, Secondly, that as to the latter part of the Distinction, what Grotius there supposeth, cannot but maim and dismember the Sovereign Power.

XI. But to give us a deeper Insight into the Nature of Limited Monarchies, it will be useful to remark, that the Affairs, which offer themselves in the publick Administration, are chiefly of two kinds. Some may be settled and regulated before hand; because, whenever they happen, they have the same constant Nature. Others there are, on which, Judgment cannot be given, whether or no they are expedient to the publick Welfare, but at the very time when they appear: because the Circumstances which attend them, are not to be foreseen. Now a People, who have settled themselves in a Limited Monarchy, may provide, that in neither of these kinds of Affairs, any Prejudice shall arise to the Good and Safety of the Common-wealth. As to the former, by ordaining perpetual Laws, which the King shall be bound to observe: and as to the latter, by appointing a Council of Peers, or of Commoners, who shall always be consulted on such Emergencies. Thus a People, who are fully satisfied of the Truth of the Religion they profess, and likewise of the Decency of their External Rites, and their Ecclesiastical Polity, may oblige a Prince, when they invest him with the Government, to make no Alteration in the Establish'd Worship, by his own sole Judgment and Authority. Again, no Man is ignorant how much the Justice of a Nation suffers, when Causes are determin'd, not according to written Laws, but by the bare Sentence of the Prince, and by what they term Equity: since in this way of proceeding, Passion, or Ignorance must frequently get the Advantage over Reason (d). To avoid which Inconvenience, a People may engage the Prince whom they create, that he shall either observe the Laws already extant, or enact new and reasonable Statutes; and that according to these Constitutions, Justice shall be given by certain Colleges, or standing Courts; no Causes, except of very weighty Concern, or by way of Appeal, being allow'd to come before the King. Yet, as to this Point, Kings themselves are often fond of referring invidious Causes to the Decision of Others (e). And this Excuse is often serviceable, in putting off the importunate Intercessions of Great Persons on the Behalf of Criminals. 'Twas a brave Saying of the Emperor Andronicus Comnenius (f), (a) See Hottomann. Franco-Gall. c. 12. (b) Xiphilin. Epit. Dion. in Sever. (c) Comp. Bœcler. ad Grot. l. 1. c. 3. s. 16. (1) Ubi supra. (d) Vid. Tacit. Annal. 13. C. 4 & 42. (e) Ovid. Metam. (l. 12. v. 626, &c.) makes Agamemnon use this wife Conduct in disposing of Achilles's Arms.

A se Tantalides odium invidiamque removit;
Argolicosque duces mediis considerare castris
Iussit, & arbitrium litis trajecit in omnes.

(f) Nicetas Acominas. l. 1. De Imper. Andronic.

The King throws off the Odium, and denies
To sit sole Judge upon so vast a Prize:
But cites a Council of the Martial Peers,
And to the General Vote the mighty Cause refers:

That the Severity, and Authority of the Laws ought to be of more Force than his private Will and Inclination; and, that 'twas fit the Sentence of the Judges should over-rule the Opinion of the Prince. No less obvious is it to remark, how easily Luxury or Ambition may squander away what hath been got by the Industry and Sweat of other Men. On this Score therefore, lest the Riches of the Subject should serve only for Fuel to the Vices of the Sovereign, many Nations have wisely assign'd their Kings such fixt Revenues, as they thought sufficient for his ordinary Expences on the Common-wealth; and left the raising of larger Sums, when there should be Occasion for them, to the Consideration of a Council or Assembly. In like manner, since some Princes, out of too great a Fondness for Martial Glory, hazard themselves and their Realms by engaging in unnecessary Wars; it was a prudent Caution in those People, who, when they confer'd the Sovereignty on their Kings, obliged them not to enter upon a War, at least not on the offensive side, without the Advice and Concurrence of a proper Council. We are told of the Inhabitants of the Island Borneo (a), that they have such a Natural Aversion to War, and to Martial Princes, that when they find their Monarch to be of a fiercer Disposition, they oblige him to fight at the Head of his Army, where he may meet with the greatest Danger. In these therefore, and in all Instances of Business, which a People find to be of publick Use and Benefit, they may provide for their own Security, by settled Constitutions and Decrees: least if they should leave the absolute Disposal of such Affairs in the Hands of the Prince, the Common Interest might possibly sometimes suffer,

From what hath been observ'd on this Head, it appears in what Sense we ought to explain, that Common Assertion of the Grecian Politicians, and others who follow them, when they tell us, That the Government of a State ought rather to be committed to Laws, than to Men. For the only rational Interpretation of such a Maxim must be this, that it is more expedient the Rulers of Common-wealths should govern according to the standing Prescriptions of the Laws, than according to their own private and unconfined Pleasure. For, otherwise bare Laws are no fitter to govern a State, than the bare Needle to govern a Ship, without the Assistance and Direction of a Pilot.

Many Examples and many Methods we find in History, how the Regal Power hath been limited and restrain'd (b) (1). But perhaps no Relation is so extraordinary as that which Solinus (c) gives us of the People of the Islands Hebrides in Scotland: Their King, says he, hath nothing of his own; all Possessions lie in Common: He is tied to Equity, by establish'd Laws. And least Covetousness should tempt him from Truth and Right, he is taught Justice by the Discipline of Poverty; having no fixt Revenues, nor private Estate, but owing his Maintenance to the Publick Stock. He is allowed no Wife, but makes free with any of his Subject's Beds, as he thinks convenient. And thus he hath no Hopes of a Family and Children, to engage or to ensnare him. Apollonius Rhodius (d) tells us a lamentable Story of the Kings of the Mostynæci, that if at any time they pronounced an unjust Sentence, they were immediately shut up in a Tower, and there starv'd to Death.

XII. But whereas, as hath been already shown, Princes, in a Limited Monarchy, are for the most part obliged in such Affairs as the People thought fit not to leave to their absolute Disposal, to apply themselves to a Council, either of all the Subjects in general, or of Deputies, representing the particular Classes and Orders; it is farther to be observed, that the Power of such Councils is not in all places alike. For there are Realms, where the King, being in other respects Absolute, appoints a Council or Senate, the Approbation of which he makes essential to the Validity of his Decrees (e) (2). Now a Senate of this kind is, as to its Authority, no more than a Board of Counsellors; and when it proceeds to take the Royal Edicts under Examination and Censure, and to reject such as seem less expedient to the Common-wealth, it does this, not by its own proper Right, but by a power delegated from the Prince; who makes this prudent Provision, that nothing may be enacted prejudicial to the Publick, either through his own Inadvertency, or through the Instigation of Flatterers. Plutarch (f) reports it as 'A Law of the Egyptian Kings, which they constantly observed, to bind the Judges by Oath, that they should not obey the Prince himself, if he desired them to pass an unjust Sentence. And on the same Occasion, he tells us, that Antigonus the Third, gave Notice to the States, 'That in case he should, by any Letter to them, command any thing contrary to the Laws, they should not perform such an Injunction, but should take it for granted that he had forgot himself (g). By this means too, Princes often get rid of bold Petitioners, whilst in Appearance they grant the Request, but at the same time know, that the Senate will cancel and reverse it (h).

Yet, under this Constitution, if, at any time, the Prince positively insists in having his Will take place, and doth not own the Reasons, urged by the Senate, to be of Strength enough to persuade the contrary; the Senate cannot proceed farther in opposing the Prince's Power. For it is not supposed, that he, in appointing such a Council, intended to give up irrevocably his absolute Right of governing, and of his own accord to make his Subject's Obedience only conditional, when he might have claim'd it without any such Terms of Restraint. The Senate therefore, in this Case, hath its Authority only by Commission from the Prince, who may consequently put a Stop to it, when he thinks fit: tho' indeed he ought not to think fit, unless on very extraordinary Occasions. But thus much may be done on the People's side; when one King hath, by his own free Act, constituted such a Senate, they may oblige his Successors, (by an Oath, at their Admission to the Government,) not to dissolve it.

(a) Franc. Lopez de Gomara Hist. Ind. Occidental. c. 95. (b) How the Power of the Egyptian Kings was confined, see Diodor. Sic. l. 1. c. 71. Add. Plin. Nat. Hist. l. 7. c. 22. in fin. & Solin. C. 66. Philostratus (Vit. Apollon. Thyan. l. 3. c. 10.) reports, that the ancient Constitutions of the wise Indians, permitted the King to stay amongst them but a single Day at once. (1) Grotius, B. 1. c. 3. f. 16. is more worthy to be consulted upon this, than the Places just mention'd. (c) Cap. 35. (d) Argonaut. l. 3. (e) See what Neuhof relates of the Empire of China, Descript. Sin. C. 1. (2) See Gror. B. 1. c. 3. f. 18. (f) Apophtheg. p. 174. B. 183. F. (g) Vid. C. L. 1. f. 19. l. 1. De Precib. Imperat. offerend. (h) Vid. L. 10. t. 12. l. 1. C. De Petit. Bonor. sublat. Bodin. de Republ. l. 3. c. 4. p. 455. Gramond. Hist. Gall. l. 5. p. 277, &c. Job. Labardæ, Hist. Gall. l. 3. p. 132, 133. Ed. Paris. 1671.

A Senate thus form'd, and especially if it be left in the King's Power to suppress it, doth not hinder the King from being Absolute. For when we apply this Denomination to a Prince, we do not presume that he acts whatever he pleaseth, according as he is led by the Blindness of Lust, or the Rashness and Inadvertency of Passion; but only that he determines, by his own final Judgment, all Matters belonging to the Common-wealth: which is very far from being Inconsistent, with a Necessity of hearing good Reason and sound Advice. Hence, altho' the Council, which such a Senate offers the Prince, doth not oblige him by its own Force, or by any Authority inherent in it self, yet, it affords the Ground and Occasion of an Obligation, by representing to the Prince after what manner he may truly discharge his Duty, in the Business at present under Debate (a). For so, a Physician cannot be said to oblige a Patient by his own Power and Authority; yet when he shews him what will conduce to his Health, the Patient is bound to follow his Prescriptions, by the Law of Nature, which enjoins every one to take care of his own Health and Safety. The same must be said of the Assemblies of the Estates in a Realm; which serve only for a larger Council of the Prince, by means of which, the Complaints of the People, which are often neglected or suppress'd in private Councils, may be brought to the Prince's Ear; who hath the Liberty of taking what Method he pleaseth for their Redress (b). It is well observ'd by Mr. Hobbes (c), that unless we would rob the King of his Sovereignty, and make a State with two Heads, such an Assembly cannot undertake more Business than the King hath propounded to them: Since the People cannot choose their Deputies to other Intent, than is, in the Writing directed to them from the Sovereign, express'd. For the same Reason, when the Sovereign shall declare, that nothing more at present remains to be propounded to their Debate, the Body is dissolved. Yet they are allow'd, of their own accord, to inform the King of some Matters in the way of Address and Petition.

But the Sovereignty may then properly be term'd Limited, when the People at first confer'd it on the Prince, under this Condition, that before he proceeded to the Exercise of certain Acts, he should consult the Assembly of the Estates, and that without their Consent his Decrees should be of no Force. Yet still we ought to leave it in the King's Power, to call this Assembly, and to dissolve it (1): as likewise to propose the Matters which are to be debated in it; unless we would give him the Name only and Shadow of a King, or would throw the Common-wealth into an irregular Shape. And altho' it be granted, that the Estates assembled may, of their own accord, lay before the King Considerations relating to the publick Safety, yet the Decrees, which they form on such heads, shall derive their Force from the Royal Assent and Ratification. The Difference between such a Body of Representatives, and Counsellors properly so call'd, is this, that although, in their Applications to the Sovereign, they both act in the same manner, by Reasons and Advice; yet the Sovereign may reject the Reasons of the latter, but not of the former. Nor ought the Prince to think it hard, if the Estates do sometimes deny their Concurrence to what he offers. For he hath engaged himself by his Promise, to have always an Eye, and Regard to the common Welfare, which in all Probability, must be better understood, and more surely consulted by a Number of select Judges, than by a single Man. The Prince, therefore, in case his Estates should thus happen to dissent from his Opinion, must attribute the Misfortune to his own Inadvertency or Passions, or to the ill Fate of the Kingdom. 'Tis an idle Fear, which possesseth some Men, that by this means we shall put it in the Power of the Estates, to preserve, or to destroy the Common-wealth, as they think fit. For 'tis ridiculous to suppose so much Imprudence, either in the King, as that he shall be unable to represent to the Assembly the real Necessities of the Kingdom; or in the Assembly, as that, when they see the Business thus clearly laid before them, they shall obstinately betray their own Security. But this is certain, since the Persons who first invested the Prince with a Limited Sovereignty, cannot be presumed to have been Desirous, either of overturning and destroying the Government, or of hindring; by their Acts and Covenants, the true End of Civil Communities from being obtain'd; it may hence be gather'd, that these original Covenants and Agreements

(a) Add 1 Kings XII. 7, 8. Martinus in his History of China (1. 5. c. 37. p. 122.) relates, that the better sort of Princes amongst that People, made it a Custom, when they were admonish'd, by Persons celebrated for Wisdom and Goodness, of shunning Vice, or of pursuing Vertue, or of any Affair relating to the Publick Welfare, to receive the Advice with bended Knee. Add. 1. 6. c. 1. p. 20. (b) See Grut. 1. 1. c. 3. f. 10. (c) Leviathan, c. 22.

(1) See Sidney's Discourse upon Government, C. 3. s. 38, &c.

are always so to be interpreted, as that they may consist with the publick Safety, and on no account contradict and oppose it: And, consequently, that the Persons thus Covenanting, must be supposed to have done all, with this Reserve in their Mind, that the Terms and Conditions, which they now settled, should not, in the least, prejudice the General Interest or Security, or cause a Convulsion or a Diffolution in the Common-wealth. If then, such a Case should happen, that the Covenants, first entred upon by the People, should afterwards, in any Instance, appear prejudicial or destructive to the publick Welfare, it will be convenient, if the Matters shall admit of Delay, to propose them in an Assembly of Estates. When this cannot well be done, the King hath it in his own Power to correct, by Wisdom and Art, those dangerous Establishments. And the same Rule will hold, with regard to the standing Laws; which are now and then enjoyn'd Silence, by the Supreme Law, the Safety of the People. Thus Agésilæus commanded the Laws to Sleep one Day; that those who had fled in the Battle at Leuctra, might have Leave to return, without the usual Penalty and Disgrace. In the same manner, the ordinary Course of Judicial Proceedings is often hindered, either by the Necessity of the Times, or by the Condition of the Parties offending; who perhaps, were they to be formally Arraign'd, must first be vanquish'd as Enemies, before they can be Try'd as Criminals. Therefore Mr. Hobbes's Position will not stand, without some Grains of Allowance, when he asserts (a), That the Evil inflicted by Publick Condemnation, is not to be styl'd by the Name of Punishment, but of an Hostile Act. He speaks Truth, in case there was no precedent Crime: but when the Offence is evidently proved, the Evil inflicted will be truly and properly a Punishment, tho' the present posture of Affairs hinder the Offender from being Condemn'd in the Common Method of Justice.

XIII. But Mr. Hobbes seems inclin'd to allow no Distinction between Supreme and Absolute Power; or rather to make all Power Absolute, that is, Supreme. To whose Notions this general Remark may be applied, that what he so crudely delivers, should be limited with this Condition, So far as the End of Civil Government will admit: As, for Instance, when he says, that He, to whom the Right of Punishing belongs in a Common-wealth, may justly compel all Men to all things that he pleaseth (b). And indeed he himself inserts this Restriction; for he tells us, that by all things, he means, all things that are necessary to the Common Peace and Security (c). And so again, he observes, that There is connected, with the Right of the Sovereign, so much Obedience in the Subject, as the Government of a State necessarily requires. By the same Rule therefore, when he affirms (d), that He, who hath in such a manner subjected his Will to the Will of a Prince, as that the Prince may, without Restraint, do what he lists; make Laws, judge Causes, inflict Punishment, use the Strength and Riches of the People at his Pleasure, and all this by Right; hath certainly granted the highest Power of Sovereignty that can be given: we are to consider, with what Purpose and Intention Men first applied their Minds to the constituting of Civil States: And then we shall suppose no Person to have voluntarily transferr'd on the Prince any farther Degree of Power, than appears conducive to that End, in the Judgment of any Wise Man: tho' to determine what is thus conducive according to particular Circumstances and Occasions, doth not belong to those who transfer their Right, but to Him, on whom it is transferr'd. The Sovereign therefore hath a Right of compelling the Subjects to all such things as he judgeth to be of any Consequence to the publick Good. But to constrain them, to that which is inconsistent with the Safety of the Common-wealth, or with the Laws of Nature, is what he ought not to entertain, even in Thought and Inclination. And if he should engage in any such Attempt, no doubt he transgresseth the proper Bounds of his Authority.

It may not be amiss, if we here examine the Arguments alledg'd by the same Author (e), by which he endeavours to make out, that it would be a vain Design to introduce a Limited Sovereignty. For, in this Case, says he, 'The Assembly, which prescribed Laws to the future Prince, had certainly an Absolute Power, at least actually, or virtually. If then, the Assembly continues; or, proroguing it self from time to time, meets again at a fixt Day, and a certain Place; this Absolute Power remains ever as it was first seated; and so the Prince will not have the Supreme Authority, but will be a bare Magistrate. (And thus much we grant, if the Assembly thus meets by its own Right, and hath the Power of determining all kinds of publick Business, and of calling the King himself, to an account.) But if the Assembly dissolves it self, unless the State be dissolv'd with it, there must be left somewhere a Power of punishing those who transgress the Law; which cannot be done without Absolute Authority: This Clause we deny, as utterly false; and we have no better Opinion of the Reason, on which he builds it: A Prince (says he) who hath so much Strength granted him in a rightful manner, as to enable him to punish any Subject whatsoever; enjoys the greatest Power, that a People can give. For the Weakness of this Argument will easily be discover'd by any one, who reflects on the Design of Civil Establishments, and considers, that by submitting their Will, and their Strength, Men do not turn themselves into meer Engines, to move no otherwife than as they are drawn; but that they only grant to Another the Use of their Powers under a Condition; so as that they themselves are to judge whether this Condition be made good, and if it be not, are at Liberty to retract what they gave. Alike absurd is it to pretend, that there is not more Security against the Abuse of Power in a Limited, than in an Absolute Government (1). He who hath Strength enough to defend his People, (as all Wise Subjects must allow their Prince) hath not always Strength enough to Oppress or to Destroy them. The Commands of a General may work with good Force upon his Souldiers, when he orders them vigorously to attack the Enemy: and yet they would be found very insignificant, should he bid them turn their Swords against each other. On the whole, he is a prudent Prince, who tho' intrusted with an Absolute Sovereignty, yet in some Instances waves his own particular Advantage, when he finds the Subjects are not to be brought to a Compliance, without endangering the publick Welfare. But they are no less a prudent People, who, well knowing what things would be inexpedient to their Constitution, have, by the means of Fundamental Laws, put it out of the Power of Princes to constrain them, in those Instances.

(a) Leviath. c. 28.(b) De Cive, c. 6. s. 6.(c) G. 5. s. 6. & s. 9. in fin.(d) Ibid. c. 6. s. 13.(e) De Cive, c. 6. s. 17.

XIV. Lastly, It is incident to the Supreme Power, that it may be enjoy'd, either fully, or under more or less Degrees of Diminution: and this chiefly belongs to Monarchical Government. For some Kings possess their Realm in the way of Patrimony, Others in the way of Use only, not of Property; and this is either for the Term of their own Life, or with the Power of transmitting it to their Posterity under certain Conditions: and others are commission'd to hold their Sovereignty only for such a fix'd period of Time, which being once elapsed, their Power passeth away with it, and they return to the Condition of private Men. Indeed Mr. Hobbes (a) will have those Monarchs likewise to be call'd Temporary, who receive their power for Life, and affirms them to be properly no Monarchs, but only the Ministers (b) of the People. But it is contrary to the Common Custom of Speech to call him a Temporary Prince, who doth not lay down his Dignity, but with his Life: this Term being properly applied to those, whose Authority expires at such a certain and definite point of Time, not by Chance, but by Right.

XV. But Learned Men are not agreed to acknowledge any such Thing, as a Temporary Monarch. Grotius (c) will have the Dictator, amongst the Romans, whose Power lasted but six Months, to have been truly a Monarch: Because (says he) whilst this Period lasted, he exercis'd all the Acts of the Supreme Authority, with the same Right, as those who are most justly and properly Sovereign Princes; neither could his Acts be revers'd by any other Power. But we understand the Nature of Moral Things by their Operations; and, consequently, those Powers, which produce the same Effects, ought to go under the same Name. Tho' the continuance of a Thing doth not change the nature of it (2), yet there is no doubt to be made, but that a Temporary Command is in Dignity much inferior to one Perpetual; since Men are wont to respect those with a much more solid Veneration, whom they apprehend to be incapable of returning to a private Condition, than those whom, in a little time, they are again like to see on the same Level with themselves. But indeed, Bodinus (d) before Grotius, and many good Authors since him, have shown, that the Dictator was by no means a Monarch, but only an Extraordinary Magistrate. Nor doth that Axiom stand on very sure Ground, Those are the same Powers which produce the same Effects: for it must be farther consider'd, whether the Person exerciseth this Power as properly his own, or as delegated to him by Others, to use in their stead. On which account, it is a Mistake likewise in Grotius (e), to rank those Persons in the Class of Temporary Monarchs, Who, during the Minority of Kings, or in the time of their Captivity, or Lunacy, are appointed Protectors: in as much as they are neither subject to the People, nor is their Power revocable, before the time fix'd by Law: For these Governours exercise the Supreme Authority, not in their own Name, but in Another's; and therefore can no more be term'd Monarchs, than we call a Guardian the Proprietor of the Goods of his Ward. And then, no Man, who is vers'd in the Roman History, will allow, that the Dictator, had all, and each precise part (3) of the Sovereignty so committed to him together, as that during the six Months Space, he might exercise it as he pleas'd. And as for what is urged, that His Acts could not be revers'd by any other Power; it is not absurd to suppose a Magistrate, so Commission'd and Impower'd, that, at least, in some certain Affairs, there shall lie no Appeal from his Sentence; and yet he shall be no more than a Magistrate (f).

It is worth observing on this Head, that the Power of the Dictators, and of all other Magistrates, appointed for a certain time, doth at that very Instance expire, and the Persons do, by Right, return to a private Station: And that therefore, what-ever they do, after this precise point of Time, is look'd on as a private Act, to which any Man may refuse Obedience (4); tho', perhaps they still bear the External Ensigns of Power. Hence to abrogate the Command of such Representatives, there is no need of a new Decree of the People; but, if they refuse to resign, the old Decree is sufficient to be immediately put in Execution against them. For those Rights, the Validity of which depends on a certain Space of Time, as on a necessary Condition, do cease with the elapsed Time, without farther Process: But in Controversies about Rights, when the Quality of certain Actions is to be proved, there is need of long Debate, and of a formal Sentence. The reason of which Difference is this; there can be no Dispute whether such a point of Time is pass'd; but whether an Action was good or bad, may be argued with Probability on both sides (a).

(1) V. Hobbes, c. 6. f. 13. ibiq. Annotat. (a) De Civ. ubi supra, c. 7. f. 16. (b) C. 9. f. 11. (c) L. 1. c. 3. f. 11.
 (2) See a Treatise of Mr. Budde's, intitul'd, Jurisprudentiæ Historiæ Specimen, c. 47. See His 43d Section to the 48. (d) De Republ. l. 1. c. 8 (e) Ibid. (3) See Rosin. Antiq. Rom. L. 7. c. 17. (f) Vid. Genes. XLII. 40, 44. L. 7. t. 62. l. 19. C. De Appell. & Consultat. L. 1. t. 4. l. 8. C. De Episcop. audient. V. Etiam t. 42. C. De Sentent. Præf. præf. & L. 4. t. 4. l. 17, 18. D. De Minoribus. Add. Livy, l. VI. c. 38. l. VIII. c. 33. l. XXII. c. 25. Valer. Max. l. 2. c. 7. f. 8. in fin. (4) See Sidney upon Government, c. 2. f. 24.

But it is by many Men thought impossible to give an Instance of Temporary Sovereignty, if we speak of such Power as is properly Supreme, and not conferr'd by Deputation. For what we read of Augustus (b), that he would suffer his Empire to be granted him only for ten Years, and, upon the expiring of that Term, renew'd it again for ten Years more; was a meer Jest and a popular Cheat. Nabarzanes, in Q. Curtius (c), hid the vilest Treachery under the same specious Proposal: Put Your Government (says he to Darius) into the Hands of Another, who shall bear the Name of a King, 'till such time as he shall have driven the Enemy out of Asia; and when his Victory hath secured the Kingdom, let him restore it to its proper Master. Let Bessus enjoy the Sovereign Command, during this Juncture; and when things are settled, let him deliver to You, the lawful Prince, that Power which he receiv'd only in Trust (d). In Nicephorus (e) we find Michael Palæologus obliged by Oath, to administer the Government, 'till the lawful Heir and Successor should be grown up, and then to resign freely to him the Throne and all the Ensigns of Majesty. Tho' indeed his Oath was never kept. As for the Compact between Eteocles and Polynices, that they should Reign each a Year by Turns, this Instance may easily be Answered, by saying, that it was contrived only as an Expedient to keep the Kingdom undivided; each Brother thus possessing the entire Command, tho' in an alternate Course (f).

XVI. As for that way of possessing Kingdoms, by which they are said to be in the Patrimony of the Prince, we are first of all to observe, that a Man's Patrimony is not, strictly speaking, so much what he derives by Inheritance from his Parents, as what he enjoys with full Property or Dominion, by what-ever Means it came into his Hands. Hence, as

Property is chiefly applied to Things; so they too are especially term'd Patrimonial; in as much as they have no inherent Right, which might hinder the Possessor, either from employing, or from abusing them at his Pleasure. Afterwards Slaves came to be added to the Things or Goods, which compos'd the Patrimony of their Lords; who challeng'd so absolute a Right and Title over them, as to make the Servant not at all concern'd in his own Safety or Destruction, affirming the one and the other to be entirely the Master's Advantage and the Master's Loss. And within these Bounds did the Fathers of Families confine their Patrimonies in the early Times. For as to the Right of governing their Wives and Children, tho' this indeed belong'd to them, and to them alone; yet in as much as these near Relations were Persons considerable on their own account, they did not pretend to put them amongst their Possessions, or, to reckon them part of their Wealth and Estate(g). Nor are Men wont to set down their Learning and their Skill in the List of their Fortunes, however advantageous to them (h): tho' many a Person, by these Accomplishments, supplies the want of real Possessions, and comes under that Character in Ovid (i);

Ars illi sua census erat. —

— His Art was his Estate.

But when the Ambition of Princes began to rank amongst the chief Goods, a Power and Command over other Men; and many of them brought it into a Custom, to maintain their own Pleasures and Vices at the Subject's Cost; those Kingdoms came to be look'd on as Patrimonies, which the Sovereign had receiv'd a Power of alienating, as he should think fit: this being esteem'd the utmost Force of Property, and the very Effence, in which a real Possession did consist (i). Whereas other Monarchs, who had not obtain'd so vast a Privilege, and so unbounded a Power over their Realms, were said to hold them in the manner of Personal Possessions, and rather to have the Use of them than the Property. Which Distinction seems to have taken its Rise from the different ways of acquiring Government, especially Monarchical. For altho' no Prince can be lawfully Constituted, without the Consent of the Subjects, yet there are different manners of exerting and applying this Consent. So that, in some Cases, the King confers a Benefit on the People, in taking them under his Sovereignty: in others, the King is highly obliged and indebted to the People, for advancing him to the Throne. Those, who have given a Prince just Cause of proceeding to Hostility against them, in case they lose the Day, may by the Right of War, be deprived of all their Possessions, and of their personal Liberty it self. Therefore, if Men under these Circumstances are admitted to any Terms or Conditions, they are to acknowledge it as the pure Favour and Mercy of the Conquerour: who, tho' he leaves them to enjoy their Life and personal Liberty, and private Estates; yet is supposed to challenge the Sovereignty over them in the fullest and most irrevocable manner, for himself and his Posterity. The same Claim is presum'd to be made by a Prince, who receives a People into his Protection, when they had otherwise been inevitably ruin'd (a). Now the Effect, resulting from a Sovereignty thus obtain'd, is chiefly seen in this, that not only the Condition of the Subjects depends entirely on the Pleasure of the Prince; but that the Prince may transfer his Right of governing such a Realm, on any Person whom he shall choose; and consequently may appoint any Method of Succession, that shall be agreeable to his Judgment or Inclination.

(a) Vid. Livy, l. III. c. 38, &c. (b) Dio. l. 53. (c) L. V. c. 9. (d) What we meet with in Diod. Sic. (l. IV. c. 23, & 33.) may be produced, with better Colour, for an Instance of a Kingdom in Trust. (e) L. IV. (f) Vid. Euripid. in Phœniss. Statius Theb. l. 1. (g) Vid. L. 50. t. 17. l. 126. f. 1. D. De divers. Reg. Jur. & ibi. Jac. Godofred. & L. 9. t. 2. l. 33. D. ad L. Aquil. (h) Philo Jud. De Plantatione Noe, p. 224. C. Ed. Paris. The Painter reckons his Art, and every Mechanick the Mystery of his Calling, a kind of Inheritance or Fortune to him; not as an Earthly Possession, but as a free Reward. For these Advantages, tho' they do not fall under Property, yet are highly Beneficial to the Persons who enjoy them. (i) Metam. l. 3. v. 588. (1) See the next Chapter, C. 11 and B. 8. c. 5. f. 9, &c.

XVII. But where the King receives his Crown from the Grant of the People, there, each Person, thus concurring, is supposed to have reserv'd and secured to himself so much of his former Rights and Privileges, as is consistent with the Nature of a Civil State. And therefore, the Condition of the Subjects, under such a Constitution, rather depends on their own Choice, than on the Prince's Pleasure. Yet they could not but find it necessary, to abridge themselves of their Natural Liberty in such a Degree, as the Form of Government required which they are now about to introduce. Farther, since in conferring Sovereignty by a voluntary Act, Men are usually prevail'd upon, by the Consideration of some peculiar Merit or Advantage in the Person, and therefore would not perhaps submit to the Authority of Another, as they are willing to yield to his; it follows, that according to the regular Course, the People are to determine on whom the Crown shall devolve, after the Decease of the King now elected. And here, if the People should not think it proper to constitute every new King by a particular Election, it shall be in their Power to settle the Method of Succession; and the Prince's Nomination shall, in this point, by no means hold good against their Act. Upon this account chiefly it is, that many Authors have affirm'd these Monarchs to hold their Realms jure usufructuario, by the Right of Use and Profit; as we have already hinted: in as much as by their own Pleasure, and without the Consent of the People, they can settle nothing, either in regard to the inward Frame and Constitution of the State, or to the alienating and transferring it on any Person (b) (1). We are by no means for extending the Comparison farther, between Princes, constituted by the free Grant of the People, and those Persons, whom the Civil Law terms Usufructuarii, Possessors of things with a Title only to the Use. And therefore we utterly dislike the Assertion of Mr. Hobbes, which we meet with in his Book De Cive (c); If, says he, the People, e'er they departed from the Election of a Temporary Monarch, (that is, in his Notion, a Prince who receives the Government for Life,) made a Decree to meet again at a certain Time and Place after his Death; then, so soon as he shall happen to decease, the Sovereignty returns in full to the People; not by any new Act of theirs; but by the Right which they before enjoy'd. For during that whole Interval, the Supreme Dominion was in the People, as to the Property, and only as to the Use and Exercise, in that Temporary Monarch. This Notion, if taken in the gross Sense in which it is deliver'd, we cannot but look upon as highly dangerous and prejudicial to all those Limited Princes, who are ordain'd by the voluntary Donation of the People, and bound up to certain fundamental Laws. And the rather, because, since he hath taken the Liberty to call a King for Life, a Temporary Monarch, others may with as much reason extend the Name to those who receive the Sovereignty, with the Privilege of transmitting it by Inheritance, yet so as to keep it within their own Line and Family. Besides, since Mr. Hobbes hath not determin'd how far he would stretch the Parallel which he useth, he may easily be intangled in a Train of very pernicious Consequences. For since Property consider'd in it self, is a much more noble Right, than that of Temporary Use; some Men may on these Principles, conclude that the People are Superior to the Prince, and have a Power of bringing him to Correction, in case he doth not govern according to their Pleasure and Humour. On the like Score, we ought to reject what the same Author lays down in his Leviathan (d); that Elective Kings have not the Supreme Power; that They, who have the Privilege of appointing a Successor after the Death of the present King, do really hold the Sovereignty even in his Life time: since none have Right to give that which they have no Right to possess. For as to the Power of a Sovereign over his Subjects, it matters little what Provision is settled, or what Method agreed on, in Case of an Inter-regnum. And even when this Point is stated and determin'd by Law, the Subjects may nevertheless yield a most strict Obedience to the Prince, and be far from invading any part of the Sovereignty, or from thinking of a Successor, or of a new Form of Government, during the Life of their present

(a) The reasons urged against Patrimonial Kingdoms by Franc. Hottomann. Quæst. Illustr. 1. are answered by Grotius, l. 1. c. 3. s. 12. (b) Comp. L. 7. t. 1. l. 13. s. ult. l. 15. s. 1. D. De Usufruct. & L. 3. t. 33. l. 9. C.

(1) V. Grot. ubi supra, s. 13.

(c) C. VII. l. 16.

(d) C. 19.

Master. And then, besides, 'tis a very weak Consequence to say, that because an Elective Prince cannot appoint a Successor at his pleasure, therefore he hath the Use only, and not the Property of the supreme Command, and is no more than the Minister of a Power which resides in others. For all the Power which, in this Case, continues in others, is, that upon the Decease of the Prince, the Liberty of consulting their own Security, and of governing their Actions by their own Judgment, shall return to them. But for the maintaining of this Power, 'tis by no means necessary, so to break and divide the Sovereignty, as to say that the χρῆσις, the Property or real Possession resides in the People, and the χρῆσις only, or the Use, in the Prince. Since even in the Case of an Absolute Lord or Governour, when he is extinct, the Person who was under his Dominion, falls again into the Liberty which Nature gave him, and the Force of which seems now to revive in him. Thus, who, for Instance, will pretend, that a Father hath only the χρῆσις of paternal Authority, because, upon his Death, the Children are at their own Disposal? Or that a Master hath only the χρῆσις of the Despotical Power, because in case he die without Heirs, the Slave recovers his Liberty?

CHAP. VII.

Of the Ways of acquiring Sovereignty, especially Monarchical.

SINCE in examining how Sovereignty is acquired, it must (regularly) be supposed before hand, that the Person who acquires it, is different from those over whom he acquires it; 'tis manifest, that the Question before us, is but little concern'd with Democracies; under which those who command, and those who obey, are distinguish'd by a Moral respect only, and not a Physical. And though this Form of popular Government is sometimes set up, upon the Expulsion of a King, or of the Ruling Members in an Aristocracy; yet since still the governing and the govern'd Parties are the same, 'tis absurd to say, that the People have obtain'd the chief Command by a violent Course; or that the People have, by such Force as properly belongs to Subjects, erected a Sovereignty over themselves. In Democracies, therefore, (contrary to what we see in Monarchies,) the way of holding Sovereignty is ever one and the same. Yet these, as well as other States, may sometimes owe their Increase and Improvement to the Force of Arms, tho' never properly their Original.

II. In Aristocracies there appears some Difference, with regard to the manner of obtaining the Sovereign Power. Not only because, in some places, this Form of Government was introduced by the voluntary Act of the People, and in others by Violence; but likewise because, upon the Decease of any Member in these Ruling Councils, the vacant Seat is fill'd up in some Places by Election; and in some, again, Birth and Inheritance give a Title to the Honour. But in Monarchies, this Difference of Acquisition most visibly discloseth it self. For tho' all Princes in order to the Legal Establishment of their Authority have need of the People's Consent, yet this Consent is obtain'd several ways; and even when the Sovereignty is confer'd by the free Motion and Grant of the People, there is still this Distinction, that some Princes are advanced to the Crown by Election, others by Succession (1).

III. The way of acquiring Sovereignty by Violence, is usually term'd Occupatio, or Seisure (2): which yet we must observe to be different from that by which we lay hold on things that want a Proprietor, and thus make them our own. For since, in things of this kind, there is no inherent Right, which might cause them to belong rather to one Man than to another, (excepting the Determination of Civil Laws,) hence to obtain the Property of them, there is no need of a particular Title, but it is sufficient barely to lay our Hands upon them, with a Desire of possessing them. But since every Man is, by Nature, equal to every Man, and consequently not subject to the Dominion of Others, therefore this bare seising by Force, is not enough to found a Lawful Sovereignty over Men, but must be attended with some other Title. When Grotius (a) therefore tells us, That of Things which properly belong to no Body, Two are capable of Seisure, Sovereignty and Property; we must not understand the word Sovereignty in the strict sense, for such as is exercis'd over Men; but for a Sovereignty over Lands, the Effects and Vertue of which amounts to this; That no Person ought to fix in such a Lordship, or District of ours, against our Consent, or unless he will yield himself a Subject to us. For Men cannot be said to belong to no Body; he is his own Man, who is not Another's. (b) And on this account the same Author (c) truly remarks, That in case a Person dyes without Heirs, his Servants regain their Freedom, and his Subjects are left to their own Judgment

(1) This manner of acquiring Sovereignty by the Right of Succession, takes place likewise in Kingdoms originally Establish'd by a forc'd Consent of the People, as will be shown hereafter in the 11th Section.

(2) See above in B. 4. c. 6. the last Section. (a) L. 2. c. 3. f. 4. (b) Xenophon. Cyrop. l. 4. p. 59. Ed. H. Steph. Nothing is so much our own as our selves. (c) L. 2. c. 9. f. 1.

and Disposal; inasmuch as neither of these fall under the Right of Seifure. But as for the Limitation which he adds, unless they voluntarily relinquish their Liberty; it might perhaps have been better omitted. For where can we find a Man, who will thus utterly wave and abdicate his Freedom? He may perhaps think it convenient always to be under some Master; but he will likewise claim it as his Privilege to choose one Service rather than another. Such Occupancy then, is a proper Means for the obtaining of Sovereignty as presupposeth a just Cause of the Invasion (1), and is confirm'd, by the Consent of the Subject, and by subsequent Articles and Covenants (a). For without these mutual Ties, the State of War continues; and there can be no Fidelity or Obligation, and therefore no true Authority or Command. On which Score Hornius (b) ought to fall under Censure when he asserts, That he who subdues Another, upon precedent Injuries and just Provocation, immediately obtains a Lawful Dominion over the Conquer'd Party, and needs not to wait for his Consent. For how is it possible to descend from the Condition of War to that of Peace, without some intervening Compact? Or how can Allegiance be owed to him, who hath not purchas'd and receiv'd it by some certain Terms of Agreement? All the Advantage which the Conqueror in a Just War, gains in this respect is, that he lies under no Necessity of caressing those whom he hath subdued, and of winning their Consent by Flatteries or Intreaties, but may extort it by denouncing the severest Evils. And therefore Hornius's Argument comes to nothing, when he says (c), That if the Consent of the Conquer'd were, in this Case, necessary, a lawful Conqueror could never gain Dominion by Occupancy: in as much as the Occupancy would be of no force should this Consent of the Conquer'd be withheld. For since such Occupancy supposeth the Victor to be superior in Strength to the Vanquish'd, and therefore able to set before them any Pains or Punishments; it cannot but have so much Effect, as to hinder them from with-holding their Compliance. Because, as there is no Man, who would not rather Conquer than be Conquer'd, so every wise Man, when he finds himself worsted, will be glad to come off as cheap as he can; and will by no means think himself prejudiced in yielding a Consent to the Victor's Sway (2), when without this he must have inevitably perish'd.

IV. But what shall we say in case the Dominion be seised by Unjust Force? As to this Question, it is first acknowledg'd on all hands, that a popular State, or the Majority in such a State, may for the avoiding any grievous Evil, (whatever be the occasion which threatneth it) relinquish their present Liberty, and put themselves under the Command of a single Person, or of a select Council. And for the same Reason, that a People, subject to Kingly Government, may to escape Destruction, and when their Prince can no longer assist or protect them, submit themselves to another. But all the stress of the difficulty lies in this, that since Fear, unjustly caus'd, invalidates a Covenant, and since he who by his injurious Proceedings hath endamaged another, is obliged to make Restitution, how such a Consent of the Subject as is extorted by unjust Force, can confer the Sovereignty in so lawful a manner upon the Invader as to give him Quiet of Conscience in the Possession. For what Hornius says (3) is meer Trifling, That since the Sovereignty which the Invader receiv'd by the Consent of the People, he did not take from the People, but was invested with it by GOD, therefore, were it to be restor'd, it must be restor'd to GOD, not to the People. But we should rather conclude, that since the People, as Hornius himself allows, have the Power of appointing the Person in whom the Majesty should be infused by God; therefore, it is sufficient, if the Oppressor restores this Power only to the People. For if the People do but recover the Privilege of marking out the Person who is to govern them by their own free Choice, they will not think themselves much concern'd whether the Invader retains the pretended Majesty he hath seised, or restores it to Heaven. Our Judgment on this Point is, that we ought first, to consider, whether the forcible Invader, hath turn'd a Democracy into a Monarchy, or whether, he hath driven out a Monarch, and settled himself in his room. In the latter Case, the Obligation to Restitution doth not expire, till the Expel'd Prince and his Heirs, who had a Right of succeeding, are all deceas'd; or, till such an unfortunate Prince hath quite abdicated, or relinquish'd his Claim to the Kingdom: and this he is presumed to have done, as by other Indications, so if in a long course of time he hath made no Effort towards the recovering of his Crown (d). And in the mean time, even whilst the Invader's Title and Conscience are both unsettled, the Allegiance promis'd by the Subjects to him, holds strong and binding; provided they did not give it, till they had done all that could be requir'd of them towards serving their old Master (4). As for the former Case, this seems the most probable way of determining it, to say, that since a Nation may live, in all respects, as happy under a Monarchy, as under a Democracy, 'twill be easy for them to digest the Loss of their popular Liberty, if their new Sovereign proves a good Governor. And we may pre-

(1) Of this we shall treat in the Sixth Chapter of the Eighth Book, S. 21. (2) It was a wise Rule with the Incas of Peru, to advance the Empire, by the slowest and most insensible Degrees, and rather to invite new Subjects by Clemency and Kindness, than to compel them by Arms and Violence. Vid. Garcil. de la Vega, Com. Reg. l. 2. c. 19. (b) De Civitate, l. 2. c. 9. f. 2. (c) Ibid. (3) See our Author's Abridgment, De Offic. Hom. & Civit. l. 2. c. 10. f. 2. (4) Ubi supra. (d) Vid. Justin. l. 4. c. 2. n. 3. Ed. Grav. (4) Comp. Grot. l. 2. c. 4. f. 14 & l. 1. c. 4. f. 19.

sume they are thus satisfied, when their quiet Depoartment and long Use seems to have reconciled them to the Alteration. As for the few Murmurers and Malecontents which remain, they are not worthy to fall under regard: since there will not want some of this uneasy Temper, in every Form of Government, however freely and fairly constituted by the Community. But in case the Invader, after having made this Change and Revolution in the State, should treat his Subjects in a wicked and injurious manner, we can scarce conceive, that they are by any intrinsical Obligation engaged to obey him. We must not therefore grant Hornius (a) what he asserts without Proof, That it doth not belong to the Nature of Sovereignty; to consider what way it was obtain'd: inasmuch as at all times, and in all places, it demands the same Correspondent Obedience. For indeed, when a Person hath not only intruded into the Throne by Force or Fraud, but likewise still grievously oppresth the People, and seems to make open and arbitrary Violence the Standard of his Reign; this is a Guilt which seems incapable of being purg'd by any Course of Years, tho' Time in other Cases be thought sufficient to found a Right of Prescription. For long Possession is here nothing else but a long continued Injury (b) (1).

V. To these Enquiries another may be added, By what means and at what times a Community which hath thrown off Monarchical Government, is confirm'd in its new Democratical Frame? In resolving which Doubt different Judgments must be given, according to the difference of the Cases that may arise. First, then, if a City or Country hath on any Occasion whatsoever discarded the Sovereignty it once stood under, and set it self up for a Free Independent State, upon supposition that it hath transacted the Affair in a friendly manner with its former Lord, and hath by him been acknowledg'd for a Free Common-wealth, it immediately commenceth such, with the fullest Right of Liberty, and need not wait for the tedious Confirmation of Prescription and Use. Secondly, if a Sovereign hath upon just Reasons been divested of his Power, the Liberty is presently valid so soon as it is actually asserted; Nor is there any Necessity of its being either confirm'd by long Possession, or acknowledg'd for lawful by the former Lord; except so far as this last Circumstance may be a means of preventing all unjust Claims and quarrellsome Pretensions for the future (c). Thirdly, if the Constitution be alter'd by an unjust Rebellion, the Liberty thus usurp'd so long continues Unlawful, as the Rightful Prince shall labour to reduce the Rebels to Obedience, or at least by solemn Declaration shall protest and preserve his Right over them; till by long Acquiescence and Silence he may be presum'd to have given up his Claim. Fourthly, if it so happen that a City or Country being in great Distress and Danger from an Enemy, shall in vain beg the Assistance of its Sovereign, who is unable to afford any Shelter or Support, so as to be put on its own Defence, and oblig'd to seek for Safety from its own Strength and Counsel; we are of Opinion that the Right of the said Sovereign doth expire, when for a considerable time the People have manag'd their own Affairs in a separate manner, and have no Intercourse, or Communication with their former Governour: inasmuch as this manifestly argues a Dereliction or Desertion on the part of the Sovereign. For tho' a King, or a Common-wealth should be forc'd, by the most pressing Necessity, thus to abandon a City, or a Country under their Dominion, to its own Care and Defence (d); yet so soon as they recover out of that Necessity, they ought immediately to return to the Exercise of their former Sovereignty. Otherwise how can he pretend to be my Prince, who, for a long time, hath neglected every part of his Princely Office, towards me, when 'twas in his power to have perform'd it (e)?

VI. The manner of acquiring Sovereignty by Election is, when a People already incorporated, or now about to incorporate, do, by their own free Choice and Judgment, design or nominate a certain Person for the supreme Command; who, upon receiving such a Decree of the People, or of their Representatives, together with the Promise of their Obedience, and having accepted the Offer, is thereby invested with the governing Power. Election is usually divided into Free and Limited. By the former, any Person, without Exception, may be design'd, who either is, at present or probably will be hereafter, in all natural respects, fit for Empire. By the latter, no Person can rightly be pitch'd upon who is not of such a Nation, or of such a Family, or indued with such a particular Qualification. But indeed, if we consider the Right of Electing, as it radically and fundamentally inheres in the People, every Election will appear to be, in it self, Free. For tho' an Order may have been once made, excluding such a certain kind of Men from the Crown; yet nothing hinders but that this Order may be repeal'd and disannul'd. But if the People devolve their Right of Electing on a few Deputies, they commonly tie them up to certain Laws, defining the Conditions and Requisites to be consider'd in those who are Candidates for the Sovereignty. In some Places the Government is confer'd by a kind of Mixture of Election and Succession: when the Crown descends, in course, to the Sons of the deceas'd Prince, yet so as that the Consent of the People, or of the Nobles, shall first intervene. Which Consent is not a bare Ceremony, like that of Inauguration, or of doing Homage, but hath the Force and Vertue of a Negative

(a) De Civitate, l. 2. c. 9. s. 4. (b) Vid. Justin. l. 3. c. 5. (1) Comp. Gros. l. 2. c. 4. s. 14. & l. 1. c. 4. s. 19.

(c) Vid. Baudium de Induciis Belli Belgici, l. 3. p. 178. (d) Vid. Liv. l. 3. c. 6. l. 23. c. 21.

(e) Vid. Liv. l. 35. c. 16.

Vote. As supposing a People to have first confer'd the Government on the Author and Founder of the present Royal Family, under this Condition, that he should transmit it to his Descendants, provided they appear'd fit to receive it: in such Kingdoms, the People, or the Nobles assemble on the Vacancy of the Throne, not properly to choose a new Prince, but only to declare, that they find no Objection in the Son to hinder him from inheriting his Father's Crown.

VII. An Election may be made, either in a rising State, now about to be set up, or in one formerly erected and establish'd. In the former, after the Original Compact between the Members thus uniting, and after a Decree pass'd for the introducing of such a Form of Government; the Community or the deputed Representatives proceed to Election. Which being finish'd, and the Grant accepted, and a Covenant thereupon ratified between the Prince Elect, and the People, there immediately commenceth a State perfectly Monarchical. But, in a Kingdom already establish'd, it may happen, that the Monarch deceaseth before his Successor is appointed; and then the Nation is said to suffer an Inter-regnum (1). Now what Frame a State falls into during such an Interval, may easily be apprehended, if we consider what those Bonds were which held it together, in its former more regular and perfect Condition. Since then the Intrinsic Perfection of the State, and the actual Existence of the Sovereign Power, were both owing to the latter Compact between the Prince and People; it follows, that the Person, in whom the Sovereignty properly resided being extinct, the Kingdom sinks into an imperfect Form, and is united only by the first antecedent Pact, by which we conceive the particular Members of the Community to have agreed to incorporate in one Society. Not but that this primitive Pact uniting the general Body, is during the time of an Inter-regnum considerably strengthen'd and assisted, by the Endearment of a Common Country, and that kind of Relation or Affinity which results from thence: together with this Consideration, that the Fortunes of most Men are fix'd and rooted in that particular Soil, and the Effects of others not easily to be transported or removed (a). And this too is the reason why a Common-wealth, under an Inter-regnum, holds more firmly together than an Army, (especially if compos'd of Mercenaries,) when it hath lost its General: inasmuch as the Persons, who compose the latter Body, are such as either have no proper Country, or else a Country at a Distance. But now the wealthy part of a Nation, to preserve and secure what they possess, will be ever most forward in maintaining a good Agreement, and most industrious in re-establishing and settling the Government.

Tho' we may, with Livy (b), call a Nation, during an Inter-regnum, A State without Government, and as it were, an Army without a General; yet because Communities, at their first uniting, before the Sovereignty hath been confer'd, either on a single Man, or on a Council, seem to bear the Semblance of Democracies (2); and farther, since it is Natural, that all Persons, upon the Decease of Him to whom they committed their Guidance and Safety, should take Care of themselves; therefore an Inter-regnum, regularly speaking, hath the Appearance of a kind of Temporary Democracy: at least so far, as that the Consent of the whole People is to determine all Points, both in regard to the Administration of publick Affairs, and to the Creation of a new Prince; unless they are more inclin'd to introduce some other Frame and Constitution. And yet it is not properly a perfect Democracy; in as much as no Decree hath yet pass'd to fix the Sovereignty in a Council of the whole People, by perpetual Right; and because the Laws and publick Institutions are still adapted to Monarchical Government. Tho' it may likewise happen, that when a Kingdom consists of very large Integral Parts, as suppose of diverse Nations, Provinces or great Cities, it shall, in case of an Inter-regnum, appear like some Collective or Systematical Form (3).

Hence 'tis evident in what sense we are to expound that Assertion, laid down by Grotius (c) and others, That when a King dyes without a Successor, the Sovereignty returns to the People. That is, altho', during an Inter-regnum, the Sovereign Authority may so far be said not to be properly in the People, as that they have not receiv'd it in a formal manner, or by a perpetual Decree; yet they may in the mean time, either by themselves, or their Delegates, exercise all those Acts of Sovereignty, which appear conducive to their Safety and Preservation. For those Authors are manifestly in an Error, who assert, that upon the Extinction of the Royal Family, the Sovereignty doth not return to the People, but only the Power of designing and choosing a new King. As if, in the Case of an Inter-regnum, the People were Ne-

(1) See a Discourse of our Author's, De Inter-regnis, which is amongst his Academical Dissertations.

(a) Lyfias contra Philon. Orat. 30. c. 2. p. 471. Those who are Natural Subjects, but yet of such an Opinion, as to esteem any Country their own where they can promote their own Interest and Gain, must certainly neglect the Common Good of the State, to serve their own private Advantage: since 'tis not the Place where they were born, but the Fortunes and Riches they possess, which they look upon as their Country, and their dearest Concern. Livy, l. 2. c. 1. well observes, That the Minds of Subjects are engaged and united by the dear Pledges of Wives and Children, and by a kind of Natural Affection to the Soil where they have so long taken Root.

Antiphon, Orat. 16. Nor was it an easy thing for him to desert the City; his Children and his Wealth being sufficient Pledges for his Stay. Hence, as Plutarch remarks, (in Mario, p. 410. A.) the Romans chose Men in their Army according to their Estates; these being Pledges and Securities for Fidelity, whilst they seem'd now to have pawn'd or staked all they were worth. (b) L. 1. c. 17. (2) See above in Ch. 5. S. 6. (3) Upon this, see above in Ch. 5. S. 16. See a Discourse of our Author's, De Systematibus Civitatum, which is amongst his Academical Dissertations.

(c) L. 1. c. 3. f. 7.

cessarily obliged to constitute another Monarch! And as if they could not confer the ruling Power on a select Council, and so make an Aristocracy; or, establish the present Democracy, for a regular and standing Government!

VIII. But those States have consulted their own Peace in the safest manner, which, to avoid the Inconveniences usually arising from an Inter-regnum, have ordain'd, before-hand, on what Persons the chief Administration shall fall, when there happens to be a Vacancy in the Throne. And these, by whatever Names or Titles they pass, whether of Inter-reges, Protectors, Regents, or the like, are Temporary, (or, as we may say, Provisional) Magistrates, who, by the Authority of the whole People, are to perform, during the present Exigency, the Acts of the Supreme Power, at least such as are necessary to hold the Community together; yet so as to be accountable for their Management to the People; which account the new King doth, as in the Name of the People, demand. The Power of these Officers, upon the Election of another Prince, or the setting up another Form of Government, presently expires.

In those Kingdoms where there are constant and perpetual Senates, yet such as, in the Lifetime of the Prince, do not hold the Sovereign Authority; upon the Prince's Death, the Senate cannot, by any proper Right, claim that Authority, which before they wanted. Yet 'tis most convenient, that in case of an Inter-regnum, the chief Administration of Affairs shall, for that time, be delegated to them; as they were before employ'd by the King to assist him in his Counsels and his Cares. But then, the Power which they exercise on this Occasion, shall be supposed to be confer'd on them by the Grant of the whole People. For whatever Authority they receiv'd from the King, as a Body of Magistrates, expires upon his dying without a Successor (a); and if they are allow'd to proceed in the Exercise of their former Function, the Privilege is not owing to the Commission of the Prince, but to the Favour of the People (b). And therefore they can hold their Power no longer than the Community pleaseth; much less can they challenge a perpetual Sovereignty, or, by their own Authority, erect themselves into an Aristocratical Body, or a select governing Council. For 'tis the Prerogative of the Community, to establish what Frame of Government they think fit; unless they have, by Oath, obliged themselves to avoid some particular Constitution. Dionysius Halicarnassens (c) reports, that when the frequent Changes of the Inter-reges displeas'd the Romans, who seem'd thus to have brought a hundred Kings upon themselves by getting rid of one, the Senate refer'd it to the Judgment of the People to put the Commonwealth into the hands, either of Kings or of Annual Magistrates; as should suit best with their Inclinations. Tho' indeed we find the People returning the Complement and leaving this Option to the Senate (d).

IX. To give farther Light to this Enquiry, it may be worth our while to examine the Case which Mr. Hobbes (e) puts, and the Issue of his Opinion upon it. If, says he, the People assembled, deliver the Sovereignty to one particular Man to hold, only during his Life; and when they have so done, depart, without ordering any thing about the Place where they shall meet to make a new Election after his Death; they will be no longer one Compound Person, but a loose independent Multitude: in which it shall be lawful for any Man to meet and consult with any others, at any Time, and at any Place. Whence he concludes, that such a Monarch is, by the Law of Gratitude, obliged to take Care that the State be not dissolv'd upon his Decease: either by fixing a certain Time and Place, when and where as many of the People, as think fit, may meet and form an Assembly; or else by nominating a Successor, according as the Interest of the Commonwealth shall seem to require. Now here Mr. Hobbes is in a Mistake, whilst he thinks, 'That the People by departing from one Assembly, without appointing the Time and Place for another, do disband and separate into a disorderly Multitude; applying it, as he doth, to those, who in choosing a King, have establish'd themselves into a regular and perfect State; and not to those who have it still under Doubt and Consultation, what State or political System they shall introduce. For when a Multitude come together on the last account, and depart without agreeing to meet again, 'tis plain they are dissolv'd res seorsim, and consequently remain in the same divided independent Condition in which they were before. But they who have once incorporated themselves into a regular Commonwealth, have subjected themselves to a King, and have fix'd all their Fortunes in this Seat, cannot be presumed guilty of such a Folly, as to desire, that upon the King's Decease, the State shall likewise be extinct, and themselves thrown into the natural Condition of Anarchy, not without manifest Danger of losing the Security, which they enjoy under the present Establishment. Therefore, if they have not conferr'd the Sovereignty on the Prince, with the Right of Inheritance, or with a Power to dispose of the Succession, as he shall think fit, they must be supposed, at least, to have tacitly agreed, that immediately, upon the Prince's Death, they will hold an Assembly, either at the usual Place, or where the Prince kept his Court. Nor will there be wanting, in a whole People, some Persons of great Authority and

(a) Vid. Connestag. de Unionis Lusitan. l. 3. p. 116. (b) Add. Bodin. de Republ. l. 3. c. 2. p. 417. (c) Vid. l. 2. & Liv. l. 1. c. 17. (d) See the History of the Inter-regnum in Poland, upon the Death of King Sigismund. in Paul. Piatec. ad Ann. Christi, 1632. (e) De Cive, c. 7. f. 15, 16.

Worth, whose Influence will be able to keep the Multitude in good order, and to bring them, as soon as possible, to a general Consultation, for settling the Common-wealth. Hence too it is evident, how far we are to admit of another Assertion of Mr. Hobbes (a), that When a Monarch renounceth and abdicates the Government, for himself and his Heirs, the Subjects return to their Absolute and Natural Liberty. For it can never be true in this Sense, that the People, on such an Occasion, relapse into a confused Multitude, without any Tye or Relation to each other; but only that they receive an absolute Right of lifting and disposing themselves a-new, under any Frame and Constitution.

X. In Hereditary Realms, there ariseth some Semblance of an Inter-regnum, when the King dyes leaving his Queen with Child, or, at least, under probable Hopes of Breeding. Now by the Consent of most Nations, a Right may be transfer'd even on un-born Heirs, so as to give them the just Title and Property, tho', as yet, incapable of the Use or Exercise (b). But now, whereas there is a proper Subject, in which the Supreme Authority resides, there cannot really be an Inter-regnum. On which account, neither the Minority, nor the Captivity of Princes create an Inter-regnum, in the strict Sense of the Word. Yet as to the latter Case, it hath been a frequent Practice in the World, for the Relations of a Captive Prince, to hold him for dead, and to proceed accordingly; whereas they ought rather to administer the Government in his Name, 'till he shall return from his Imprisonment, or dye under it (c). Now altho', before the Royal Issue be brought into the World, it cannot certainly be known whether the Child will prove alive or dead, a Son or a Daughter, (in Nations where the Fair Sex is excluded from the Crown :) yet till this Point is clearly determin'd by time, the People can by no means challenge such a Right, as they obtain in a proper Inter-regnum; but the Kingdom must, in the mean while, be govern'd in the same Method as is wont to be observ'd, during the Minority of a Prince (d).

XI. By the way of Succession or Inheritance, the Sovereign Right, which one Person hath obtain'd or receiv'd, is continued to his Posterity. This Succession (1) is appointed, either at the Pleasure of the Prince, or at the Pleasure of the People (2). Those Princes, who possess their Realms after the manner of Patrimonies, have a Right to dispose of the Succession, according to their own Inclinations; and when they have once declared their Pleasure in this Point, it ought no less strictly to be observ'd, than the last Will of any Testator. And in this Case, a King may divide his Dominions amongst his Children by equal Portions, and without regarding the Difference of Sex. Or if his Legitimate Issue fail, he may transmit the Crown to his Natural (e), or to his Adopted Son; nay, if he thinks fit, to one no way related to his Family (f). But when such a Monarch hath made no Provision about the Succession, it must then be consider'd, what Person the common Course and Order of Nature calls to inherit the Throne. For though the Prince, in his Life-time, did neither by Testament, nor any other way, signify his Resolution in this Affair; yet we must presume, that he did by no means desire the State, should, upon his Decease, fall into Anarchy: Common Humanity not suffering him to leave his Subjects in a Condition of Misery and Ruine. Especially since, if he purposely declin'd to make a future Settlement, it had been easy for him to have given the People Notice; so that, upon this Intimation, they might have agreed on some Expedient for their own Security. Besides, we ought in Reason to suppose, that Princes, as well as other Persons, are unwilling that the Rights or the Possessions, which they have acquired, should, at their Decease, either be imbezeld, or left, as it were, to the first Taker; but that they would have them devolve entire to their dearest Friends. Therefore when such an Omission happens in Patrimonial Kingdoms, the same Order is to be observ'd as in Private Inheritances; except so far as the Disposition and the Safety of the Nation make it advisable to recede from that Method. For although 'tis very likely, that a Father bears an equal Affection towards all his Children, yet if he be wise, he will so far moderate and restrain it, as not to weaken the Hereditary Estate,

(a) Leviath. c. 21. (b) Hence the Persians, when their Prince Harmisdas died, leaving his Queen with Child, proclaim'd the unborn King, and crown'd Him too, by fixing the Diadem on the Royal Burthen: nay, they voted the Infant a particular Name, firmly believing it would be a Son. And this proved the Great Sapores, so renown'd in Story. Agathias, l. 4. c. 10. (c) Vid. Justin. l. 36. c. 1. Trebell. Poll. in Gallien. c. 1. We have a Story to this Purpose in Dion Cassius, l. 36. Tygranes, the Armenian Prince, had vast Treasures, laid up in the fortified Places of Sophene. When Pompey demanded all his Wealth to be delivered up to him, by those who had it in Charge, their Answer was, That they would do nothing without express Orders from their Master. And when Tygranes, though against his Will, commanded them to open the Castles, they still refused to comply, urging that the King laid this Injunction on them, not voluntarily, but through Compulsion. Yet they afterwards were oblig'd to deliver all up, when they found their Prince was severely used, and thrown into Chains upon their Refusal. Demetrius, being made a Prisoner by Seleucus, commanded his Son, with his Captains and Friends that were at Athens and Corinth, not to believe his own Writing, or Seal when they should be shown to them: but to keep for Antigonus his Towns, and the Remains of his Kingdom, as if he were actually dead. Plutarch. in Demet. p. 914. D.

(d) Vid. Serran. Hist. Gall. in Philipp. Valef. ab init. (1) Vid. Grot. l. 2. c. 7. s. 12, 13. (2) See Mr. Budde's Dissertation, De Testamentis Summorum Imperantium, & speciatim Caroli II. Hispan. Reg. c. 1. f. 21, &c. See likewise Sidney upon Government, c. 3. s. 18. (e) Thus Alphonfus, King of Arragon, gave the Kingdom of Naples, which he had conquer'd, to his Base Son Ferdinand: whereas others pretended, that it ought to have been united to Arragon, by the Arms and Wealth of which Nation, it had been subdued. Guicciardin. l. 5.

(f) Add. Justin. l. 41. c. 5. n. 10.

on which the Security and Honour of the Family in a great measure depend: and he shall be presumed to have taken this Resolution, if he hath not expressly declar'd any thing to the contrary. From these Considerations it follows, that such a Prince as we are now speaking of, is desirous to have the Monarchical Frame of Government preserved after his Death; in as much as he shew'd his Approbation of it by his own Example, and did not afterwards reverse or alter it, by his Word or Deed. And farther, since Men are naturally inclin'd to wish best to those, from whose Success, some Honour and Glory is reflected on themselves, rather than on others; and since the Power of Children casts the brightest Glory on Parents, after their Decease; it must be concluded, that a Father is more heartily concern'd for the Happiness and Greatness of his own Issue, than of Strangers. If he had any other Design, he ought in express manner to have declared it: since, commonly speaking, we do not suppose a Man to have been so little Master of his Wits, as to deprive his Children of so fair an Advantage, and to leave it, as it were, on purpose to create Quarrels and Disputes. But Mr. Hobbes is in the wrong, when, amongst the Tokens which a Reigning Prince may give of his Resolution not to transmit the Crown to his Family, he reckons (a) for one, long Custom, 'In as much as he who says nothing 'about his Successor, is supposed to consent to 'the ordinary Custom of the Kingdom: Which 'Custom, whether it derives its Original from 'the primitive Founder of the Race, or from 'any of his Posterity, hath in time, pass'd 'into the Force and Authority of a Funda- 'mental Law. But the Enquiry which we are now upon is, What Order is to be observ'd in the Succession, when it is neither determin'd by the Appointment of the last Prince, nor by the Law or Custom of the Nation. To proceed then, our Silent Monarch must be presumed to desire, not only that the Kingdom shall preserve its regular Frame, that is, that the Sovereignty shall not be divided into Shares amongst his Sons, or near Relations, nor yet held in Common by them All, with equal Power; but likewise that the State shall not be parted into distinct Governments, and many Kingdoms introduced instead of one: In as much as either of these Alterations would draw after it, not only the exceeding great Hazard and Detriment of the Realm, but also the utter Convulsion of the Royal Family. The next thing which, in this Case, must be presumed to have been the Will of the Monarch is, that notwithstanding the Prerogative of Age, his Sons should be prefer'd before his Daughters; because Men are, for the most part, much fitter to command, and the Government of Women is generally attended with a long Train of Inconveniencies, which must needs be increas'd, if the Brothers are to be set aside to make room for a Female Sovereign. Another thing to be taken for granted on these Occasions must be, that amongst Children of the same Sex, the Eldest is to be advanced rather than any of the rest: and this not only, because he is judg'd to excel the Younger in Wisdom, as well as in Years, but because, if we consider them with Relation to the Father, all Brothers are equal: And were the Crown to be bestow'd on the most Worthy of them, they could not avoid falling into Irreconcilable Differences and Contentions. A famous Instance of which Truth we have in the Revolutions, that not long since happen'd in the Empire of the Mogul, described at large by Monsieur Bernier. To prevent therefore all such Confusions, it is the best and safest Method to follow the Order of Birth, which is embraced by the universal Agreement of all Nations, as a Rule which Nature her self seems to have prescribed (b). Yet here it will be necessary, that the Eldest Son, who is thus prefer'd to the Crown, take effectual Care for the honourable Subsistence and Support of his Younger Brothers. But that he should be obliged to make their Fortunes as large, as if the Kingdom were to have been divided into equal Shares, is both needless and indeed impossible. For let us suppose four Brothers; whence can the Elder, who is to fill the Throne, procure so much Treasure, to pay the Portions of the rest, as shall be equal in Value to three Parts of the Realm (c)? If, in Monarchies of this kind, the Prince dies without Issue, his Brothers or Sisters are to succeed; and upon Failure of these, the next in Blood to the Deceas'd King; with due regard still to the Prerogative of Sex, and of Age. Nay the Government may, at length, devolve to those who were accidentally related to the last Possessor, tho' of a different Blood from the Author of the Regal Line. And this, not only, if the Deceas'd Prince thus declared his Will, but if, by the Custom of the Country, the same Method of Succession obtains in private Inheritances: for then, we must suppose, that the Prince would have the Custom hold in regard to his own Patrimony (1), as well as to those of others, when he hath made no express Disposal to the contrary.

Mr. Hobbes seems to have carried this Point a little too far, when he tells us (d), By the same way as the Sovereignty descends, the Right of Succession likewise descends: For in case the Eldest Son dies before his Father, he shall be supposed, unless the Father hath made any other Settlement, to transmit the Right of Succession to his own Children: and therefore the Nephews and Nieces shall sooner come into the Succession, than their Uncles by the Mother's (he means by the Father's) side. It cannot indeed but be acknowledg'd, that this Right of the Children to represent their Father, and come into his place, looks very fair and equitable (r); and that his untimely Death should not be the Cause of a new Loss and Prejudice to them, seems to be but a reasonable Favour. And yet, since the Son, during the Father's Life, hath not a full Right to the Inheritance, but only a just Hope and Expectation; and since it doth not appear, that this bare Hope can be so well transmitted to Children, as the Right it self might be; we may with more Probability conclude, that, by the meer Right of Nature, the Nephews have not the Precedency of their Uncles; unless their Title is strengthen'd and supported by the Laws, or Customs of the Kingdom (a).

(a) De Cive, c. 9. f. 15. (b) Add. Xenophon. Cyropæd. l. 8. p. 139. Ed. H. Steph. in Cyrus's last Speech.
 (c) Add. Bœcler ad Grot. l. 2. c. 7. s. 13. (1) V. Grot. l. 2. c. 7. f. 11. n. 2. (d) De Cive, c. 9. f. 19.

XII. But, in Kingdoms which were first constituted by the voluntary Act of the People, the Order of the Succession doth likewise, originally, depend on the People's Will. And, if they expressly confer on the Prince, not only the Sovereignty, but likewise the Right of nominating his Successor (which is seldom done, unless upon a very extraordinary account,) then he shall leave his Crown to whom he pleaseth. But, if the People themselves settled the Succession, they either were willing to have it pass in the usual way of other Inheritances, so far as that Method can conveniently be applied to Kingdoms: or else they appointed a particular Course, by which it should be regulated and determin'd. Now the Safety of the State requires, that the Succession of a Kingdom, simply Hereditary, (or where it is barely appointed that the Crown shall pass from each Prince to the next of his Kin,) should vary from the Order and Method of private Inheritances (2), chiefly in the following respects. First, That the Kingdom shall not be divided amongst several Brothers, or other Joint-heirs (b), equally distant in Blood from the deceas'd Prince. In as much as this Prohibition is highly conducive to the Agreement of the Subjects, and to the Support of the Nation and Government. Secondly, That the Succession shall stop at those Persons who are descended directly from the Monarch; and not pass to the Collateral Line, much less to the Degrees of Affinity (c). For the People, by their primitive Grant, design'd only to confer the Kingdom on such a Person and his Posterity; upon Failure of which, they again recover the Right of settling the Common-wealth as they judge convenient. Thirdly, That no Persons shall be capable of succeeding, but such as are born according to the Laws of the Country. By which Caution are excluded Natural or

Base Sons, however they stand in the Father's Affection, who may perhaps equal them to his Legitimate Issue. For, in those Nations at least which have any Honour or Spirit, such Men must lie open to Contempt, whose Mothers were not thought worthy of Legal Matrimony, and were used rather for occasional Instruments of Pleasure, than for agreeable Companions of Life. Besides, since the Ladies of that Profession are seldom famous for Constancy and Fidelity, and since they want the Advantage of a fix'd Cohabitation, it cannot so very certainly be known, whether the Prince be really the Father of this unworthy Progeny, which they charge upon him. But now 'tis highly expedient, that the Person of a King should be Awful and Venerable, and as little as possible, exposed to Controversy and Doubt (d). For which reason, 'tis the Custom, in some Nations, for the Queens to be deliver'd in an open Chamber, to take off all Suspicion of a supposititious Birth. And we read that Queen Constance, Mother of Ferdinand the Second, was brought to Bed of him, when she was past Fifty Years old, in a Pavilion erected in the most publick Part of the City, before a large Assembly of the Nobility of both Sexes (e). Adopted Sons come likewise under this Rule of Exclusion: as well because to be descended from the true Regal Line makes a Prince more respected, and fills the Subjects with better Hopes, that he will resemble his great Ancestors, no less in Virtue than in Blood: as because the People originally conferr'd the Crown on the immediate Race of the first Possessor; designing, when that should prove extinct, to resume the Power of settling the Government for the future. But allowing Adoption to give a Right to the Kingdom, this Power of theirs might be for ever forestall'd and eluded. Fourthly, That in the same Degree of Kindred, whether amongst the Children or the Grand-Children of the last Monarch, the Males shall be preferr'd to the Females, tho' the latter happen to be their Superiors in Age (f). Fifthly, That in the same Degree, and the same Sex, the Advantage shall be given to the Elder (g). Lastly, The Succession of such Realms differs from the Course of vulgar Inheritances in this, that altho' they are deliver'd, as it were, from hand to hand, and do not devolve to a new Possessor, 'till the Death of the former; yet of these Persons, the one is the Occasion only, and not the proper Cause, of transmitting them to the other: whereas common Inheritances pass to a new Proprietor by the Right, the Will and the Favour of the last. For 'tis not the

(1) See above in B. 4. c. 11. s. 12. (a) Add. Bodin. de Repub. l. 6. c. 5. p. 144, &c. (2) V. Grot. d. l. s. 14, &c.
 (b) Vid. Justin. l. 21. c. 1, 2. (c) Add. Bœcler ad Grot. l. 2. c. 7. s. 15. (d) See a famous Instance of this in Marrinius's History of China, l. 6. c. 1. p. 202. When Perseus and Demetrius disputed which should succeed Philip, it was urged on behalf of the latter, that although he was the Younger of the Two, yet he was Born in honest Wedlock, whereas Perseus's Mother was only a Mistress of the King's: and that, for Evidence of this Distinction, Perseus had no Mark of Philip in his Body, whilst Demetrius exactly resembled his Royal Father. Livy, l. 39. c. 53. Add the Story of Ferdinand King of Naples in Paul. Jov. Hist. Neapol. l. 2. (e) Pandulf. Collenut. Ret. Neapol. l. 4. (f) Add. Bœcler ad d. l. Grot. s. 17. (g) Thus Perseus urgeth against his Younger Brother Demetrius, Competitor with him for the Crown, 'That he endeavour'd to invert the Order of Age, of Nature, of the Customs of Macedon, and of the Laws of Nations. Livy, l. 40. c. 11.

Pleasure of the Prince, under these Governments, which bestows the Crown on the next Wearer: but it descends in the Royal Line, by virtue of the original Act and Constitution of the People. And, for the same reason, it is not necessary, that the Prince who succeeds, though the nearest in Blood, should take upon himself the private Affairs, Incumbrances, and Debts of the Deceas'd. But, if he thinks fit, he may take Possession of the Kingdom, and refuse the Inheritance of the private Patrimony (1), to which that nobler Right of the Crown is by no means inseparably united; but is of it self an entire, distinct, and transcendental Inheritance. For the People must be supposed willing, to have the Crown descend by a clear and unquestion'd Title: but as for the peculiar Estate and Fortune of the Prince, they are not in the least concern'd or affected with it. Besides, it might prove a Burthen to the Nation, were the Royal Heir, at his Entrance on the Government, obliged to discharge such Debts as his Predecessor personally contracted: since in Case the private Patrimony would not hold out, the Deficiency must be supplied by the publick Stock. To conclude, the chief Reasons, which move any People to establish such an Order of Succession as we have been all along describing, seem to be these: That the Throne may be fill'd without any Controversy or Doubt; and the Inconveniences of new Elections avoided: that the Splendor of the Prince's Birth may increase his Respect, and his Race and Education give the Promise of more illustrious Vertue; and that the Reigning Monarch may still govern the Kingdom with more Vigilance, and defend it with more Courage, whilst he is to deliver it down to those Persons, who on the Score of Natural Affection, are the dearest to him in the World (a).

XIII. But since, in this way of Succession, which we call simply Hereditary, it may easily happen amongst Persons, far remov'd from the Author of the Race, that it shall not be clearly known which of the many ought to be prefer'd, if the Crown fell thus Absolutely to him who was next in Blood to the Deceas'd Prince; especially since the Favour of Representation, (or of letting the Children represent their Parents in Right;) quite vanisheth in these distant Degrees: to prevent any such Controversy, many Nations have introduced a more accurate Succession, which they term Lineal (2). Now according to this, all the Descendants of the Royal Founder, are conceiv'd to form a Number of perpendicular Lines, each of which approacheth nearer to the Throne, according as the Persons, in the same Degree, stand possess'd of those Natural Advantages, the Prerogatives of Sex and of Years. And the Kingdom shall not pass into another Line, till the former is quite exhausted and extinct. It is needless therefore for Persons, in this List of Succession, to shew in what Degree they are related to the last Possessor, or to appeal to the Right of Representation; but, according as they are Born, the Law gives them a perfect Right of inheriting, in their proper Order: which Right, tho' they should happen themselves not to wear the Crown, they transmit, in the same Order, to their Children. Here then, the first Regard is to be paid to the Children of the Deceas'd Prince, and not to the Living only, but to the Dead, in case they have left Issue in any Degree whatsoever: for such Issue shall exclude all others, if their Parents were the nearest Lineal Heirs: yet so as still to allow in the same Degree of the same Line, a due Preference, first, to the Advantage of Sex, and then to that of Age. (For that the bare Prerogative of Age should out-weigh and overrule the Prerogative of Sex, can perhaps be instanc'd in no Example of History.) If the last Possessor dyed Childless, the Account passeth back to the next Line above him, and so on; still ascending from the Deceas'd; and not descending, from the first Progenitor: with the same Allowance as before to the two Prerogatives of Nature.

The two Species of Lineal Succession, commonly assign'd, are what they term Cognatical, and Agnatical (3): The former kind, which on account of its being receiv'd in the Kingdom of Castile, goes likewise by the Name of Castilian, hath this Peculiarity in it, that in the same Degree, of the same Line, the Younger Males are prefer'd to the elder Females; yet so as that no Transition is made from one Line to another on the bare Obstacle of Sex. Thus it doth not exclude the Women, but postpones them to the Men: and runs back to the Females again, in case the Males, who were superior or equal to them in other respects, shall happen to fail, together with their Issue. By Consequence, therefore, a Grand-daughter by a Son comes before a Grand-son by a Daughter, a Niece by a Brother, before a Nephew by a Sister. The other kind of Lineal Succession, or the Agnatical, differs from this, in that it excludes, from the Crown, the Females and their Descendants for ever. A Custom which seems chiefly to have been taken up, to hinder the Kingdom from passing, by Marriage, to Strangers; and to maintain the Ancient Stock in its due Veneration, which might be in danger of growing weak and despicable, by suffering so many Foreign Grains. This is commonly known by the Name of French Succession, having long obtained in that Nation. In some places the Agnatical Method is temper'd with this Reserve, that, in case all the Male-Line fails, the Right returns to the Females (a).

(1) See Grot. B. 2. c. 7. f. 19. with Gronovius's Note upon it. See Mr. Barbeyrac's 4th Note upon this Section.

(a) The Persians had a very extraordinary Custom, by which One-ey'd Persons, and those who labour'd under any other Corporal Blemish, were excluded from the Crown. Protop. de B. Pers. l. 1. c. 11.

(2) See Grot. B. 2. c. 7. f. 22, 23. (3) These Names come from the Words Cognati and Agnati, the former whereof, signifies the Kindred by the Mother's side; the latter, the Kindred by the Father's side. The latter only inherit the Crown by an Agnatical Succession, but one or other may obtain it by a Cognatical Succession.

We may remark in general of Lineal Succession, that since 'tis so very plain and easy, it might be a principal means of deciding Controversies in Kingdoms, to enquire, first of all, what kind of Succession hath been there by Custom establish'd. A remarkable Instance of this the History of the last Age presents us with, in the Dispute about the Succession to the Crown of Portugal; when Raynutius of Parma stood on the Right of Lineal, the other Competitors on the Right of Simple Inheritance (b).

XIV. Another Method of Succession (1) may be introduc'd, by Virtue of which he shall always stand nearest to the Crown, who is nearest to the Founder of the Royal Family. Thus, then, the Founder's Sons are the first in the List; according to their Age; next to them his Nephews, with regard still to their Father's Age, and to their own: upon Failure of all these, the Founder's Grand-Sons come in, then his Grand-Nephews, and so on. This was the Course observ'd of old in Numidia, as we may gather from Livy (c). The like is practis'd in the Kingdom of Siam (d); and hath been in Fez and Morocco (e): as it was heretofore amongst the Curacs or petty Kings in Peru, under the Empire of the Tucas (f). Thus, in many Parts of the East Indies, especially on the Coasts of Malabar, 'tis the Custom for the Father to be succeeded not by his own Son, but his Sister's Son: the People fancying themselves to have more evident Proof, that the latter is of the Royal Blood than the former (g). In Hispaniola, the Nephews by the Sister are admitted for the same reason; tho' not till the direct Line fails (h). And amongst other Indian Nations, in that Neighbourhood, even in private Inheritances, the present Possessor prefers his Sister's Children to his own: excepting the Family of the Tucas, where the Son constantly succeeds the Father (i). The same Rule is follow'd in Canada, with regard to Honours as well as to Estates (k). Strabo (l) reports a very strange way of Succession amongst the Chatramotita, a People of Arabia. The Crown passeth, says he, from the present Possessor, not to his Son, but to the first Nobleman that was Born in his Reign. For so soon as every new Monarch is settled in the Government, a List is taken of all the Wives of the Nobility, who appear then to be with Child; and Keepers are set over them, to observe which Lady is first brought to Bed of a Son: and the Child, which thus gets the start, is declared lawful Heir, and educated in a Royal Manner, against the next Vacancy in the Throne.

XV. 'Tis a Question usually canvass'd, who shall be Judge of the Controversy between two or more Competitors for a Crown; especially if the Kingdom be not Patrimonial (2)? For to try out an uncertain Title by the Sword, is a manifold Breach of the Law of Nature. Here then it is evident, in the first place, that Disputes of this kind cannot possibly be determin'd in the way of Jurisdiction, or proper Sovereignty: and that therefore they must be left to that Method of Decision, which holds amongst Persons, living in a State of natural Liberty, in subjection to no Judicial Authority (3). In which Sense we ought to understand what Grotius (m) hath deliver'd on this Point. Now those are said to live in a State of Nature, who are neither subject one to the other, nor both to a common Lord. And tho' the Parties themselves may perhaps, whilst they are contending, acknowledge a Sovereign; yet the Cause is of such a Nature, as not to bear the Sentence of any Person under the Notion of a Superior. First, a Foreigner cannot pretend to interpose as a Judge. Nor, Secondly, is the King himself, if the Controversy happen'd to be started in his Life-time, a sufficient Arbitrator: in as much as the People, in these Monarchies which we now speak of, are not suppos'd to have left the Method of Succession to the Pleasure of the Prince. Not but that we have many Examples, in History, of Kings, who relying on their own Authority and Worth have assumed greater Power in this respect, than the Constitution of Free Kingdoms would otherwise allow. Thus Darius, in Herodotus (n), decides the Quarrel between his own Sons: and, in Plutarch (o), Artaxerxes and Cyrus submit to their Father's Determination (p). And, Lastly, it may be maintain'd, that neither the People themselves can have such a Competition in an Authoritative manner. Yet not for the Reason assign'd by Grotius, Because the People have transferr'd all their Jurisdiction to the King and Royal Family, and therefore can claim no Reliques of it for themselves, whilst any of that Line survive. For Succession in such a Case doth not belong to that Jurisdiction, which the People conferr'd on the King: and if a Quarrel of this kind should arise, during an Inter-regnum, the People cannot be debar'd, at least, from a Temporary Jurisdiction. But the true Reason must be drawn from the Nature of these Disputes. For the Effect of Judicial Power, as exercis'd

(a) Vid. Guicciardin. l. 12. p. 367. (b) Vid. Connestag. de Unione Lusitan. l. 3. (1) Vid. Grot. l. 2. c. 7. s. 24.

(c) l. 29. c. 29. (d) Jodoc. Schouten in Descript. Regn. Siam. (e) Thuanus l. 65. ad Ann. 1578. & Connestag. de Unione Lusitan. l. 1. the last of which Authors seems to hint, that this proceeded from a particular Compact between the Brothers. (f) Garcilass. de la Vega, l. 4. c. 10. (g) Petrus de Valle, l. 1. Par. III. Epist. 6. & Hieron. Orosius, in several Places of his Work. (h) Franc. Lopez de Gomara. Hist. Ind. Occidental. c. 28.

(i) Idem. c. 12. (k) Franc. Creuxius Hist. Canad. l. 1. (l) l. 15. p. 528. Ed. Genev. Casaub. (2) The best way is to refer it to an Arbitrator that is of the same Royal Family. De Offic. Hom. & Civ. l. 2. c. 10. f. 12.

(3) See Mr. Barbeyrac's Second Note upon this Section. (m) l. 2. c. 7. f. 27. (n) Polymnia, init. Yet Justin (l. 2. c. 10. n. 9, 10.) reports that the Cause was refer'd by the Consent of the Brothers to their Uncle Artaxerxes, as to a Domestical Judge. (o) Artaxerx. init. (p) Add 1 Kings I. 5. &c.

over Subjects, is, that they shall be obliged to acquiesce in the Sentence given, and upon Refusal, shall by virtue of the Sovereign Authority be compell'd to submit. And this, because 'tis one part of Civil Subjection, to expect from their Superior, the Decision of any Controversy that may happen between them and their Fellows. But now, if we run over all the various Doubts which may be rais'd on the Point of Succession, we shall find that not one of them is capable of being solv'd by the People, in the same commanding manner, as the Causes of private Persons are ended by the Ordinary Judge. For suppose a Prince, already settled in the Throne, with the Approbation of the People, should have a Claim put in against him by another of the Royal Family, who pretends to be the nearer Heir: In this Case, the People having acknowledged the Prince in Possession, it cannot be imagin'd, that the new Claimant will appear, or stand to their Verdict. Nor, on the other side, will the Possessor of the Throne submit to be judg'd by those, who have already own'd him for their Sovereign. Much less have the People a sufficient Power to give Judgment, when they refuse to own the Person, who puts in his Pretensions. But if, upon a Vacancy in the Throne, Two Competitors offer themselves, and engage in a Dispute about their Title, and the People only stand ready to receive him for their Prince, who shall have the better Right; there is here no need of Judgment properly so call'd, or such as is given by the Sentence of the Court, to compose Matters between private Men. For in this Case the controverted Point must be one of these two; Either barely, which of the Rivals stands in the nearest Degree, or else, which Degree ought to have the Preference? When the former happens to be the Question, the contending Parties are to clear their Descent as well as they are able; and he who shall appear to the People to make out his Claim most evidently, ought to carry the Day. Now tho', in this Method of proceeding, the People's Vote weighs considerably towards turning the Scale, yet it is not pronounced like a Sentence from the Tribunal, but only in the way of a bare Approbation: as a Debtor who is ready to pay, desires only to see the Bill, and to satisfy himself in the Truth of what he is charged with.

But if the Dispute be, which Degree, or which Line ought to have the Preference, this shall be adjusted by the Common Declaration of the People; since every one is presumed to understand what way he likes best; and since the People is still to be reckon'd the same as it was heretofore, when the Order of Succession was originally establish'd. Thus the Controversy between Edward King of England, and Philip Valois, as likewise that which happen'd before, between Jane, Daughter to Lewis Hutin, and Philip the Long, was discuss'd before an Assembly of the Estates of France (a). Thus we find in Mariana (b) nine select Judges settling the Succession in the Kingdom of Aragon. And in Dionysius Halicarnassus (c), the People end the Differences between Sylvius and Iulus, in favour of the latter; chiefly on this Argument, That he was born of a Mother, who had been the True Heiress of the whole Kingdom. And yet, when this Declaration hath no more of the Nature of a judicial Sentence in it, than when a Person who hath first conferr'd a Grant, afterwards explains some Terms that were thought ambiguous, or obscure in the Instrument of Donation.

In Case either of the Competitors shall represent it as a Grievance, that the Affections of the People seem prejudiced in favour of his Rival, it may be the most ready Expedient to refer the Contest to proper Arbitrators; such as are neither inclin'd to one Party more than to the other, and, in regard to whose Interest, 'tis an indifferent Matter which of the Two gets the Victory (d).

(a) See the French Historians, and Polydor. Virg. Hist. of Engl. l. 19. ab init. (b) Hist. Hispan. l. 20. c. 2, 3.
 (c) L. 1. (d) Vid. Conestag. de Unione Lusitan. l. 3 & 5. The most usual Controversies that occur on this Head, see in Grotius, l. 2. c. 7. f. 28, &c. Arniseus Relat. Polit. l. 2. c. 2. f. 10, &c. and in other Authors.

CHAP. VIII.

The Supreme Power is to be held Sacred in Civil States.

AS Civil Empire, or Sovereignty, was first introduced to guard the Safety of Mankind, and to take off the almost infinite Miseries of a State of Nature, so that it be held sacred and inviolable by all Men, is highly the Interest of the whole World (a) (1). And thus much indeed every Man, in his Wits, will confess, that 'tis a Sin to oppose a lawful Ruler, whilst acting within the Limits of his Authority. In as much as it appears evidently from the Nature and Design of Government, that there must of Necessity be join'd with it an Obligation to Non-resistance; or to a ready Obedience in performing or omitting any thing, which it shall command or forbid. The main Question therefore must be, whether in case the Sovereign should enjoin the Subjects what is unlawful, or treat them in an injurious manner; He is then also to be esteem'd Sacred; and so, that the Subjects ought not, in a violent way, to resist and repel the Injury?

(a) Add. Diodor. Sic. l. 1. c. 90. (1) V. Grot. l. 1. c. 4. f. 2.

II. Mr. Hobbes (a) indeed maintains, that A State cannot do Injury to a Subject, as neither can a Master to his Slave. And he builds his Notion on this Argument, 'That no Covenant hath pass'd between the State and the Subject, (all Injury, according to him, consisting in the Violation of a Covenant;) and 'that the Will of the Subject is entirely submitted to the Will of the State, so that whatsoever the State acts, is supposed to be done with the Subject's Consent. But now that what a Man willingly consents to receive, can be no Injury to him, is a Maxim that every Body is acquainted with.' But we have already evinced (1), both that Injury doth not barely consist in the Violation of a Covenant, and that there doth really a Covenant (2) pass between the Monarch and his Subjects. And as for Subjects submitting their Will to the Will of the State, this must be interpreted, and restrain'd according to the true End and Design of Civil Communities; and then the whole Matter will come to this Issue: every Subject submits his Will to the Will of the State, in all those Affairs, which respect the Common Interest and Safety; and, in any Business of this kind, a private Member cannot complain of Injury, tho' he should happen to dislike the publick Proceedings. But since it is very possible, that the Sovereign Power may enjoin the Subject such Performances, or inflict on him such Evils, as bear no regard to the publick Welfare, but intrench on the particular Person's Right, whether acquired by Covenant, or by the universal Law of Humanity; there appears no reason why we should not affirm, that a private Member is capable of being injur'd by the State to which he belongs.

III. But here it ought well to be consider'd; that turbulent and querulous Subjects, are wont to censure many Actions of their Prince, as Injuries, which are by no means such. Every thing is by them condemn'd for Oppression, or Mismanagement, that doth not exactly suit with their private Judgment. Now as the great Variety of Men's Inclinations, and the Irregularity of their Aims and Wishes, make it impossible that the publick Administration should be equally grateful to all Persons; so he who exclaims against all Proceedings as injurious, which do not hit his particular Humour, is either contriving to overthrow the Constitution, or hath a Mind to be tampering in the Government himself. The last is the Case with many Murmurers; who are discontented only because the Common-wealth is not in their own Hands. Of this Number was Avidius Cassius (b), who boasted that he took up Arms against Marcus Antoninus, because he was displeas'd at the Prince's Greatness, and could not bear the Name of an Emperor. The same Pretence was made use of by Septimius Niger (c), and by Clodius Albinus (d), in their Rebellions against Severus. Many complain of their Prince for employing bad Ministers; when if we search into the Bottom of their Discontent, we shall find it to be, only that they are not themselves prefer'd to a Share in the Ministry. The Common People often grumble at the Hardship of Taxes, when no more is demanded than what the present Occasions of the Publick, or such Necessities as are likely to arise hereafter, seem to require. And what Answer they ought to receive, Mr. Hobbes (e) will inform us. As for the strict and severe Execution of the Laws, no Person can make this the Ground of his Dissatisfaction, but such an one as desires a Liberty of committing Wickedness. After all, in case any Man looks on those Burthens as intolerable, which the Affairs of the Common-wealth make necessary, he hath the Privilege of quitting the State. And if he is not inclin'd to make use of that Privilege, he hath nothing to blame but the Common Condition of Mankind, who are not to expect in this World any Degree of pure and untainted Felicity. But should he think it allowable for him, on this account, to rid himself of the lawful Government by violent means; 'twere the same thing, as if he should resolve to improve his Fortune by Rapine and Theft, because he thinks it a Hardship, to maintain himself by his own Industry and Labour.

IV. Tho' all this must be acknowledg'd to be true; yet there is no doubt, but that a State, or the Sovereign Ruler of it, may do an Injury to a private Subject: since here the Parties are both under the same common Law of Nature, at least, which is sufficient to make them capable of being injured one by the other. Now a Sovereign may be conceiv'd to injure his Subjects two ways, if, in his Dealings with them, he violates either the Duty of a Prince, or the Duty of a Man; that is, if he either treats them not as Subjects, or not as Men. The Duty of a Prince respects either the whole People, or particular Persons. Thus much a Prince owes to the whole People, that he procure the Good and Safety, of the Community, either by his own Judgment, in case he be Absolute, or if his Power be limited by Laws, according as those Laws shall direct and prescribe. Therefore he injures the whole People, if he quite throws off all Care of the Government, in his own Person, and doth not so much as see that the publick Business be dispatch'd by his Ministers. As for Instance, if he should neither undertake the Defence of the Kingdom against Foreign Enemies, nor, by a due Execution of the Laws, secure its inward Peace; and yet in the midst of all this Neglect, should continue to enjoy the Titles and Revenues, and should judge the Greatness of a Prince to consist in the unbounded Extent of his vicious Pleasures. For if, together with the Administration, he lays aside the Honours and Profits of the Regal Office, he shall be supposed to have plainly abdicated the Government. Which Privilege of resigning the Crown, ought to be allow'd him, unless he hath first, by Evil Counsels, put the State under great Difficulties, and then would desert it in the midst of its Danger. And this must be own'd for a manifest Injury, thus to discharge no part of a Duty, and yet to desire the Reward and Advantage of it. But it will be a much greater Injury, should he, with Hostile Intentions, directly endeavour to overthrow the Common Safety; and put on the Person of an Enemy, which cannot possibly consist with the Person of a Sovereign (1). But such a Case as this can never happen, where a Prince is Master of his own Reason. For who, in his Wits, would ruine what belongs to himself (2)? Or where will he meet with Subjects, who use them as Enemies? Yet indeed, if he happens to enjoy two Kingdoms at once, 'tis possible that he may seek the Destruction of the one, to advance the Interest and Greatness of the other (3). But we have an Instance even of the former Madness, in the Story of a certain King of Peru, in the last Age, who by the Practice, as 'twas reported, of some Magicians, was possess'd with so utter an Aversion to his Subjects, that he took up a Resolution to make them all away; and in order to this, commanded that no Person, under Pain of Death, should Till the Ground, for the space of Three Years. Which occasion'd so grievous a Famine, that the People murder'd each other for Food (a). Again, a Prince injures the Community, if he subverts the Fundamental Laws, without the Consent of the People, and upon no urgent Necessity: or if he go about to change the manner of holding the Government. As likewise, if he should ruine the publick Patrimony; or if, by imposing greater Tributes, than the Occasions of the State require, he should first imploy the Subject's Purfes, and then squander away the Money in Extravagance, or send it out of the Realm: with many Acts of the same Nature. To all which may well be applied the smart Conclusion of the Old Greek Epigram (b).

(a) De Cive, c. 7. f. 14. & c. 8. f. 7. (1) In the Seventh Chapter of the first Book, Señ. 13. (2) See above in the Second Chapter of this Book, Señ. 8. &c. (b) In Vulcat. Gallican. c. 1. (c) In Ælian Spartian. (d) In Jul. Capitolin. (e) De Cive, c. 12. f. 2.

Ἄλλα λύκος ἔργει τὶ δὲ τὸ πλέον, εἰ τὸ φύλαχθεν
ὄμματα, εἴτε λύκοις, εἴθ' ὑπὸ τῷ φύλακός;

But he keeps off the Wolf: we own the Deed;
But where's the Difference, if the Sheep must bleed,
Whether the Keeper, or the Wolf they feed?

The Duty which a Prince owes to his particular Subjects, is, that he permit them to enjoy the same Rights with others of their Rank and Order; that he protect and defend them, and administer Justice to every one, so far as his regard to the publick Safety will allow him. If he fails in any of these Performances towards particular Persons, when the Condition of the Common-wealth would give him leave to discharge them, he certainly does the respective Persons an Injury (c). An Old Woman, who came with a Petition to the Emperor Adrian, and was told by him that he had no leisure, at present, to hear her, in a very angry mood made Him this smart Reply, Ergo noli imperare, Therefore don't pretend to Govern (d).

That Duty which the Prince stands under as a Man, he may violate several ways, in his Transactions with particular Subjects. As suppose he should undeservedly brand an honest Person with Disgrace and Ignominy; if he should with-hold the Reward promis'd to his Service; if he should refuse to discharge his Debts, or to fulfil his other Contracts or Engagements, or to repair a Damage, which he hath occasion'd by some extravagant Humour; if he should assault the Honour of chaste Virgins, should defile his Subject's Beds by Adultery, should hurt their Bodies, seize or destroy their Goods; lastly, if he should take away the Life of an innocent Person, either by direct and downright Violence, or by suborning false Witnesses against him, or by compelling the Judges, through Threats or Promises, to pass an unjust Sentence of Death: Ammianus Marcellinus (e) hath made a very sensible Reflexion on the Grievances last mentioned. Amongst Arms and Trumpets, says he, the Equality of Condition makes the Danger seem lighter; and the Power of Martial Valour, either possesseth it self of what it attempted; or, if taken off by the Surprise of unexpected Fate, carries no Mark of Infamy along with it, but concludes Life and Pain together. But when the Pretence of Rights and Laws serves to cover and disguise wicked Counsels, when the Judges sit mask'd, in the severe Gravity of Cato or Cassius, but act every thing according to the Arbitrary Pleasure of their insolent Master, and the whole Affair of Life and Death is weigh'd and determin'd by his Humour, nothing else can ensue but Capital Destruction and precipitate Ruine.

V. But 'tis a Point of greater Difficulty, to explain whether Subjects are obliged to endure all those Injuries without resisting, or whether, in some certain Cases, they may not repel them by Force? Our Judgment on the Matter is this: Since such is the Condition of Human Life, that it cannot be exempt from all Inconveniences, and since 'tis not easy to find a

(1) As the Emperor Caligula, who wish'd that the Roman People were but one Head, that he might dash its Brains out, as we have it related in Sueton. c. 30. (2) V. Grov. l. 1. c. 4. f. 11. (3) This is what Philip King of Macedonia formerly did, as is related in Livy, B. 40. c. 3, &c. (a) Joan. Moquet. Itiner. l. 4.

(b) Antipater in Antholog. (c) V. Justin. l. 9. c. 6. near the end. Tho' indeed Pausanias's Action is by no means to be commended. (d) Xiphilin. Epit. Dion. & Zonar. T. 11. (e) L. 26. c. 13.

Man in the whole World, who is so nicely exact in his Behaviour, as to give a compleat and universal Satisfaction; 'twould be equal Folly and Impudence, to oppose a Prince for every Fault: especially since we our selves, on the other hand, are not so very punctual in the Discharge of our Duty towards Him; and since even in private Persons, the Laws are wont to pass over slight Miscarriages. Therefore how much more just and reasonable must it be, to overlook the pardonable Failings of a Prince, on whose Care the Tranquility of the whole Nation, and the Security of every Man's Life and Fortune depends? And so much the rather, since Experience informs us, with how fatal a Destruction of the People, and how miserable a Convulsion of the State, the very worst of Princes have been dethron'd. We are to forgive, then, the slighter Injuries of Rulers; as well in regard to their high and noble Office, and to the many Benefits we constantly derive from them in other respects, as out of a due Concern for our Fellow-Subjects, and for the whole Common-wealth (a) (1). We ought to bear, says Tacitus (b), with the Tempers of Princes; since frequent Alterations can never turn to the Advantage of a State. 'Tis a sensible Argument, that which Cerialis (in the same Author (c),) useth to the Rebellious Treviri. As you would endure, says he, the Barrenness of a Soil, the immoderate Force of Rain, and the other Inconveniencies of Nature, so endure the Luxury or the Avarice of Your Rulers. There will be Vices in the World so long as there are Men; but then these are not perpetual, and are amply recompensed by the Intermixture of better Qualities. Plato (d) speaks admirably to the same purpose. A wise Man will take up this Resolution in regard to his Country; then only to reprehend the Miscarriages in the State, when his Reproof is likely to meet with good Effect, and not to draw down certain Ruine on himself: but when a Reformation cannot be wrought without the Expulsion and Slaughter of many Persons, he will never attempt to introduce a Change in the Government by violent means; but will give himself up to Quiet and Retirement, and pray for his own and the Publick Happiness (e). Besides, a Man consults his own Safety, when he chooseth rather to dissemble the Affronts of too powerful an Oppressor, than to draw on himself some greater Mischiefe, by unreasonable Resentments and Complaints (f). Add to this, that as we are commanded by the Holy Scriptures (2), so are we advised by sound Reason, patiently to suffer the Moroseness and Severity of our Parents and Masters (g) (3).

Nay farther, this too is most certain, That when a Prince with plain Hostile Intentions, threatens the worst and most cruel of Injuries, it is better, if we can, to withdraw our selves from the Stroke, and either to secure our selves by Flight and Concealment, or to remove into another Country and Government, for Protection. But what if a Prince should with this Hostile Fury, attempt to destroy an innocent Subject, without leaving any Possibility of Escape? Many, as to this Case, are not able to conceive how the same Man can thus bear the Person of a Prince, and of an Enemy together, in respect of the poor Sufferer; or with what Face he can claim the Privilege of being held inviolable, who thus is bent on sacrificing a guiltless Member of the State, as a miserable Victim to his Lusts. But they are of Opinion, that if he who owes another his Protection and Patronage, shall upon no Cause at all, or upon an unjust one, assume the Mind of an Enemy towards him, he releaseth the other Party from his Duty of a Client or Dependent; so far at least, as that it shall be lawful for the latter to make use of Force in defending himself from the unreasonable Cruelties of the former. Which Defence may the better plead for Favour, the greater the Number is of those whom the Prince endeavours thus injuriously to destroy. But since 'tis hardly possible to find any Examples of Princes, who entertain a Design against the Lives of innocent Men, and openly profess that they do it out of meer Arbitrary Pleasure; a greater Doubt ariseth, what Course can be lawfully taken, when a Prince goes about to exercise Cruelty under the Pretence and Colour of Right; as suppose, in way of Punishment, for the Neglect of an unjust Command. Now here we, first of all, take it for granted, that since in conferring any Power, there is a Salvo made to the Right of all Superiors, therefore the Subjects, upon the establishing a Sovereign Civil Authority, neither could nor would, by that Act, renounce the Subjection which they before stood under to Almighty GOD; and consequently that they are not bound, by any Injunctions of the Civil Power, plainly repugnant to the Divine Commands. What a Subject ought to do, in this Case, if threatned with Violence on the account of his Christian Profession, it is not our Business to determine (4); in as (a) V. Justin. l. 15. c. 4. (1) V. Grot. l. 1. c. 4. f. 4. See Mr. Barbeyrac's Second Note upon this Section. (b) Ann. 12. c. 11. (c) H. 4. c. 74. (d) Epist. 7. p. 1281. D. Ed. Wech. (e) Cicero produceth this Passage out of Plato in the Ninth Epistle of his First Book ad Familiares. (f) See the Sentences cited to this purpose by Grotius, ubi supra. Æschylus Prometh. Vinct.

— ἐν ἑν πρὸς κέρτα, &c.

— When a self-will'd Lord
Too big to be controu'd, and fiercely bent
On Cruelty and Rage, ascends the Throne;
Strive not in vain, nor kick against the Goad.

(2) 1 Ep. Pet. II. 17, 18. (g) Pliny, L. 3. Ep. 14. speaking of Masters being murder'd by their Slaves, says, Non judicio sed scelere perimuntur, They are kill'd, not in the Method of Judgment, but of Villany. (3) Ut Parentum Severitiam, sic Patria, patiendo ac ferendo, leniendam esse, Livy, l. 27. c. 34. (4) See Sir George Mackenzie's Jus Regium, p. 113, &c.

much as the same Scriptures, in which that holy Doctrine is deliver'd, may fully inform any Person, how infinitely it concerns him, not really, nor so much as seemingly, to act any thing contrary to his Religion (a), and at how great a Price, if Occasion be, he ought to purchase his Innocence. But that, upon the Apprehension of certain Death, a Man may undertake the Performance of an Action, in it self repugnant to the Law of Nature, without any Sin on his part, we shall by and by make out (1). Yet if the Action enjoin'd be such, as I cannot perform without deriving Guilt on my self, or such as I esteem to be, in its own Nature, more bitter than Death, and at the same time no reason is shown, nor so much as Probability pretended, either from some Fault of mine, or from the publick Good, why I should be put under this Necessity of doing what might either have been done by another, or ought not to be done at all; it is manifest, that the whole Design of such a Command, is, that I may be destroy'd, who have committed no Offence, purely to gratify the Will of the Enjoiner, and his cruel Disposition towards me. By which Act, since he lays aside the Prince to put on the Enemy, he is suppos'd at the same time, to have remitted the Obligation, which lay on the part of the Subject. But still, as far as 'tis possible, we are to avoid this Danger by Flight, and to seek the Patronage of some third Person, who is not by any Ties engaged to the same Prince. Nay, if all means of escaping are cut off, we ought rather to be kill'd than to kill (2): yet not so much out of Veneration to the Person of such a Ruler, as out of regard to the Commonwealth, which, on such an occasion, cannot but be imbroil'd in the most unhappy Troubles. But when a Ruler proceeds against a Subject, in way of punishment, for a real Crime, altho' here the Subject is not bound to meet the Mischief, by voluntarily appearing and offering up himself; yet the Reason why he cannot, in this Case, defend himself by Force is, that the Prince acts nothing here but what is consistent with his Right; and therefore it would be highly injurious, whatever the Pretence might be, to offer him any Hurt on such an account. It ought farther to be observ'd, that altho' we should grant never so fully, that a particular Subject may, in some Cases, guard his Safety, by Violence, against the injurious Assaults of his Superior, and this without Sin; yet it doth not hereby become lawful for the other Subjects to throw off their Allegiance, or protect the innocent Party by forcible means. For besides, that they ought not to make Inquisition into these Acts of the Prince, which he exerciseth as it were by Virtue of his Judiciary Power, and that many guilty Persons to draw Odium on the Government, make high Pretensions to Innocence; tho' the Person should happen to be really injured, the rest of the People are not at all releas'd from their Obligation to Obedience. And that for this Reason, Because, in the first Contract, every particular Subject engageth the Prince's Care and Protection only for himself, and doth not suppose it as a Condition of his own Obedience, that all and each of his Fellows shall be justly treated. Nor is the Fear of being hereafter used in the same manner, sufficient to break off this Obligation in the other Subjects; First, because it is uncertain; and, Secondly, because 'tis possible the Prince's Hatred, to this Person, might be founded on some particular Reasons, which do not appear in others. But whilst the Subject's Obligation towards the Prince remains in Force, it shall not be lawful for him on what Pretence soever, to make any violent Resistance.

VI. Now, as what hath been hitherto deliver'd is, in the Opinion of many Men, not at all derogatory from the Sacredness of Princes: so, on the other hand, those Persons are not to be endur'd, who assert in gross, that a King, when he degenerates into a Tyrant, may be deprived of his Crown, and brought to Punishment by the People. For since the Acts of Civil Government are, for the most part so obscure, that the Multitude (3) cannot apprehend the Equity or the Necessity of them, and often, through Prejudice or Passion, will not apply their Minds to a Discovery of the Truth; and since, generally speaking, it makes for the Interest of the Commonwealth to let the Reasons of the State and the Grounds of publick Counsels and Proceedings, be known but by a very Few; it will be a most difficult Task, to point out exactly those several Actions, on the Performance of which, a Prince may justly be call'd a Tyrant, and as justly be oppos'd by the People, with any Violence whatsoever (b). Whence it may easily come to pass, that an Odium of this Nature shall be brought even on a good Prince, by such as either dislike his Person, or the present Constitution: since Men have been now long accusom'd in the Use and Signification of Words, to make them stand not only for the real Nature of Things, but for their own Humour or Affections. Thus much is acknowledg'd by general Opinion, that neither private and personal Vices, nor smaller Neglects in the publick Administration, are sufficient to denominate a Tyrant. Are heavy Taxes impos'd? The Subjects, who are not admitted to Council, cannot possibly judge whether the Necessity of the State requires this Provision or not. Are severe Penalties executed? Why, if this be done upon some precedent Offence, and according to the Laws; no Man can with Justice complain; tho' perhaps the Case would better have allow'd of Mercy and Pardon. Are some great Men innocently taken off, on the account of private Hatred or Suspicion; which, in vulgar

(a) See Matth. X. 31, &c.(1) B. 3. c. 1. f. 6.(2) V. Grot. 1. 2. c. 1. f. 9. cum not. Gronov.(3) See Mr. Barbeyrac's First Note upon this Section.(b) Comp. Boecler. ad Grot. l. 1. c. 4. s. 14.

Estimation, passeth for the highest and most provoking Grievance? Yet, if Plots against the Prince's Government, or other Crimes are, in pretence at least, laid to their Charge, or the ordinary Course of Judgment observ'd in condemning them; although perhaps the Persons themselves, and some few others may be thoroughly satisfied of their Innocency; Yet how is it possible that the rest of the People should have the same Certainty and Assurance? Especially since the Presumption of Justice always lies on the Prince's side. Well, but perhaps, Promises are broken, or Privileges formerly granted, retrench'd. Still, if the Prince be Absolute, 'tis but to alledge some Offence in the Parties, or some signal Advantage to the Commonwealth, and then he shall be supposed to have acted according to his Sovereign Right; and whether these Pretences be real or no, the Subjects are not able clearly to judge. And all Privileges must be construed with this Limitation and Exception, Unless the Safety or Necessity of the Publick forbid them to hold any longer. No small part of the Arguments usually brought for the opposite Opinion, fall of their own accord, if it be well consider'd, that these are two very different things, a People have power of applying Force to their Rulers, and of reducing them to Amendment, when they do not govern according to their Will; and, there is in the People, or in particular Persons, a Right of defending their Life and Safety against their Prince, upon the Approach of extreme Danger, and when the Prince is manifestly turn'd an Enemy towards them (1). For the Reasons which prove the latter of these Positions, do not in the like manner evince the former: and yet many Men confound the one with the other. And thus too when it is said, that a People, who have given themselves up to Slavery, have not thereby lost all Right of rescuing themselves into Liberty and Security; the Assertion will hold true only in this Sense, that a People may defend themselves against the extreme and unjust Violence of their Prince: which Defence, if it succeeds prosperously, brings Liberty along with it, as a necessary Attendant. In as much as the Lord, by thus changing himself into an Enemy, seems to absolve the Subjects from their Obligation towards him: so that they are not bound to return under his Yoak, tho' he should alter his cruel Resolutions. Excepting in this Case, a People who have given themselves up for Slaves, or rather, who have put themselves under the Command of an absolute Sovereign, have no more a Right of regaining their Liberty by Force, than I have of recovering a thing by Force, which I have already, upon Bargain, deliver'd to another Man. For this Civil Servitude is not so abhorrent from Nature, as some imagine; as that a Person who at one time, to avoid a greater Evil, finds it necessary for him to consent to it, may afterwards, when Occasion favours him, throw it off again, by the Right and Privilege which Nature allows him. And altho' the State of Slavery, should be contrary to the Inclinations of a particular People, either from the beginning, or upon the changing of their Minds; yet 'tis by no means Lawful barely on this account, to deprive the Prince of that Right which he hath already obtain'd: no more than it is lawful for the Seller to take away from his Chapman what he before deliver'd to him upon Contract; tho' he should happen to find that the Sale did not prove to his Advantage.

VII. Grotius (a), in adjusting these Matters hath taken a Course, not very different from that which we have here follow'd. Amongst other things, he well observes, that whether or no the extreme Injuries of Sovereigns may be forcibly resisted, is best to be understood by considering, as well the Nature of Sovereignty, as the presumed Design of those who first incorporated themselves in a Civil State. As for the former, 'tis not in the least, repugnant to the Nature of Sovereignty, that all the Actions of the Subjects should by it be directed towards the publick Good, and that those, who oppose its Decrees, should undergo the severest Punishment; without allowing it the Power to murder Men out of meer Humour, so as on no account to be resisted. Nor is there any Natural Connexion between an absolute Power of procuring a Man's Safety, and an absolute Power of destroying a Man at pleasure. And 'tis impossible to make out, what such a Power in the Sovereign, or such an Obligation in the Subject, can contribute to the Peace and Security of the Commonwealth. On which Score it is evident, how false that Inference is which some Men make; the Supreme Authority is accountable only to God, therefore we have sufficient Reason to conclude, that the Persons, who first united in a Community, design'd to reserve to themselves no Degree of Right, which should hold good against the Ruling Power. As if to defend ones Life against an injurious Assailant, were to proceed against him in a judicial manner (b)! Nor is their Scruple of any Moment, who disallow the Liberty of resisting Governours, in Cases of Barbarous Cruelty, on this Argument, Because we cannot frame to our selves any lawful Call, that the Subjects have to take up Arms against the chief Magistrate; since no Mortal can pretend to have any Jurisdiction over a Person of that Character. As if Defence were the Effect of Jurisdiction! Or, as if he who sets himself to keep off an unjust Violence, which threatens his Life, had any more need of a particular Call, than he who is about to fence against Hunger and Thirst with Meat and Drink (c)!

(1) See Mr. Barbeyrac's 2d Note upon this Sect. See the Homily of the Ch. of England against Rebellion, the Second Part. (a) L. i. c. 4. f. 7. (b) Comp. Bœcler ad Grot. d. l. (c) Comp. Ziegler ad Grot. d. l.

As to the latter Consideration proposed by Grotius; about the Design of Societies, he rightly judgeth, that if those Persons, who by incorporating themselves in States, gave the first Rise to Sovereign Power, had been ask'd, whether they intended to lay this Burthen on all their Consciences, that they should rather choose to die, than in any Case to oppose, by Arms, the unjust Violence of their Superiors; they should certainly have answer'd, that it was never in their Thoughts to enjoin such a Hardship. For this would indeed have been a greater Inconvenience, than that which they endeavour'd to avoid by entering into a Civil Community. For before, they lay open to the Injuries of many, but still with the Right and Power of resisting them: whereas, by this means, they must have bound themselves quietly to suffer any Injuries from Him whom they had arm'd with their own Strength. And no doubt Fighting and Contention is a less Evil than certain Death.

VIII. But this Sacredness, which we have been hitherto touching upon, doth not belong to any Kings, but those who are really and strictly such. It cannot therefore be claim'd by those, who though they bear the Title of Kings (1), are yet subject to the Power of the People; as were the Ancient Kings of Sparta, and many elsewhere; invested rather with Authority to persuade, than with Power to command (2). Such a King was Mezentius, in Virgil (a), against whom —furiis surrexit Etruria justis,

Régem ad supplicium præsentis morte reposcens.

By just Revenge the Tuscans set on fire,
With Arms their King to Punishment require.

Those Princes do likewise forfeit this Sacredness, who have either laid down their Dignity (3), or have utterly deserted and abandon'd the Kingdom; against whom, in case of grievous Injuries offer'd by them to others, it is lawful to proceed altogether in the same manner, as we might against private Persons. Not though, as Semiramis, who having prevail'd with her Husband to resign the Sovereignty to her for Five Days, made use of the Grant to take away the Life of the Giver; this Story proves nothing else, but the great Wickedness of the Wife, and the no less Folly of the Husband (b). Yet it sometimes happens, that those who have either voluntarily laid down their Authority, or have been deprived of it by some Misfortune, are still permitted to enjoy that formal Veneration of the People, which used to be paid to Princes, and all other external Badges of Majesty. Which Privilege, as it is to be look'd on as meer Imagery, made up of nothing but the Regal Trappings and Ornaments; so unless it hath been confirm'd by some Pact and Agreement, it must be conceiv'd to depend entirely on the Favour and Complaisance of others (c). Thus Labardée, in his History of France (d), rightly observes, that whilst Sedan, and the Territories depending on it, was neither Feudatory to the Emperour, nor to the King of France, nor to any other Monarch or State, the Lords and Proprietors were truly Sovereign Princes. But after that Frederic Maurice, Duke of Bouillon, had resign'd this City, with its Dependencies, to Lewis the Thirteenth of France, receiving in lieu of it, certain Lands belonging to the French Crown; he required Security to be given him, that he and his Posterity should retain the Title and Character of the former Dignity: which could not be afterwards reckoned a true independent Honour, such as accompanies Sovereign Power, but only a nicer Shadow of Princely Greatness, having no farther Effect, than the obtaining such a certain place among the Noble Families of France, and some other ornamental Privileges. And the Truth of this appears evidently from that Act of the Duke, in desiring Security for his Titles, when he gave up his Dominions. Since those, who truly and properly possess the Sovereign Dignity, have no need thus to bargain for the safe Enjoyment of it.

Another way by which a King falls back (4) into the Condition of a private Man, is in case his Kingdom be seiz'd upon as forfeited; either by Felony, committed against him whose Fief it is; or by vertue of some Clause inserted in the Donation of the Crown, importing that, if the King should act thus or thus, the Subjects should be immediately releas'd from all Obligation to Obedience. So likewise if, in conferring the Sovereignty, it were expressly agreed, that the Prince, in some particular Designs or Practices, might be resisted; such a Covenant may no doubt be put in Execution. Lastly, if a Prince constituted by the People, shall go about to alienate his Kingdom, or to change the manner of holding the Government, 'tis manifest, not only, that any such Act of his is null and void, but likewise that in case he endeavour to compass his Design by Force, the People may oppose him in the same manner (e).

IX. It is another difficult Question, what may lawfully be done, and what not, against Invaders and Usurpers of Sovereignty; and this, not after that long Possession, or some subsequent Pact, hath given them a proper Right to govern, but so long as the unjust Cause of their possessing the Throne continues, and

(1) V. Grot. l. 1. c. 4. f. 8. (2) This is what Tacitus relates of the Ancient Kings of Germany; Max Rex vel Princeps, prout Decus bellorum, prout fecundia est, audiuntur, autoritate magis suadendi, quam jubendi potestate. De Morib. Germanor. c. 11. Vid. etiam, c. 7. (a) Æn. 8. v. 494, 495. (3) Vid. Grot. d. l. f. 9.
(b) Diodorus Sic. l. 2. c. 18. (c) An Instance of which we have in Dairo of Japan. (d) L. 10. p. 684.
(4) Vid. Grot. ubi supra, Sect. 12. See our Author in the Sixth Chapter of this Book, Sect. 10, 11.
(e) Add. Bacler ad Grot. l. 1. c. 4. f. 10.

whilst they seem to be supported only by Strength. On this Head, we are first of all to enquire, whether the Commands of such Usurpers, whilst in Possession, have the Power of obliging? And here we must recollect, from what hath been formerly observ'd, that no Obligation to Obedience can be produced in me, unless the other Party had a lawful Authority over me. Meer Violence may indeed lay on a Man some extrinsecal Necessity of doing this or that; but it cannot impose an Obligation; which is an intrinsecal Engagement, so binding to the Mind, as to make the Neglect or Omission of it, sinful. When therefore a Man is threatned with Violence from a stronger Hand, he is perhaps compell'd to perform those things, to which he hath no Obligation, and which he really hates and abhors. But if he afterwards find Opportunity, no Man will censure him for breaking his way through these unjust Impositions. But what is to be done, if a Person, who at first indeed seiz'd upon the Government by Violence and evil Arts, would yet be thought to obtain it by Right, and tho' he reposes his Confidence in Arms, yet professeth to be no Enemy, but a true and proper Prince? as to such Cases, this seems in general to be the most probable Solution, that he who actually possesseth the Sovereignty, by whatsoever means he acquires it, is so long to be acknowledg'd by the Subjects, for their lawful Prince, as there appears no one who can claim the Crown by a better Right. For then it is consonant to Reason, that the Possessor's Power shall hold good, provided he act like a Legal Governour: it being the Common Interest of the People, that the Care and Direction of the State should rather lie in any one Person, than that, on the account of having no certain Head, it should be involv'd in endless Disputes and Disturbances. Since therefore the Subjects must be, in this Case, supposed to have, at least tacitly, consented to the Authority of their new Master, they shall be truly oblig'd to yield Obedience to him (a). Thus 'tis well known by what means the Family of the Cæsars rais'd themselves to the Imperial Dignity: and yet St. Paul (1) ascribes the ἐξουσία, the proper Power to them, as those who were to be obey'd for Conscience sake. And 'twas our Blessed Saviour's Command, Render unto Cæsar the things that are Cæsar's (2). For, at that time, there was no particular Person who had a better Title to challenge the Supreme Authority; and as for the Senate and People of Rome, they had receded from their Ancient Right, though more out of Fear, and for want of Strength to make Opposition, than because they approved of this Alteration in the Government. It was a remarkable Law of Henry VII of England, which enacted, that no Person, who had follow'd the Party of the Prince then reigning, should be ever impleaded or condemn'd for that Act as Criminal, either by legal Process, or by Act of Parliament. The Reasons of which are discuss'd by my Lord Bacon, in his History of that Reign (b). After the same manner in an Hereditary Kingdom, when the Right seems to lie doubtfully between two or more Competitors; whilst the Controversy is yet in Agitation, and 'till such time as it may be determin'd, either by an amicable Accommodation, or by Arms, 'tis the safest Course to obey him who hath the actual Possession (c). And much more will this Conduct be justifiable in Strangers, whom it doth not concern to examine the Titles by which the Sovereignty hath been obtain'd, but who barely go along with the Possession; especially when the Possessor is supported by Great Strength and Power.

X. But when a Person, driving out the lawful Prince, seizeth the Government, and sets himself up for King, tho' he be really the Usurper of another Man's Right; what Course shall an honest Subject take under this Difficulty; in as much as he seems still to owe Allegiance to his rightful Sovereign during his Life? On which Point it appears reasonable to affirm, that things may often come to such an Issue, as shall make it not only allowable, but good and necessary to obey the Ruler in Possession, by what means soever the Possession was gain'd. As, if the Lawful Sovereign be reduced to such Streights, that he can no longer exercise any part of the Regal Office towards his People. For then, tho' the Commands of the Usurper, being destitute of Legal Power, are not, in themselves, obligatory; yet it becomes a wise Man to consult the Welfare of himself and his Affairs, to make Provision against the Future, and with Wariness and Caution to reflect on his present Condition; that he may not rashly thrust his Life and Fortunes into Danger: As he would do, should he, by vain Obstinacy and Opposition, draw the Usurper's Rage upon his own Head, without procuring the least Advantage, either to his Country, or to the Ejected Prince. Some are willing to deduce this Doctrine from the 13th Chapter of the Epistle to the Romans, where the Apostle says we ought to obey, ἡ μὲν δὲ τῷ

(a) Aristophanes (in Ranis, Act. 5. Sc. 4. v. 21, 22, 23.) hath a notable Remark to this Purpose: 'Men should not breed up a Lion's Whelp in their City; but if he be once bred up, his Temper must be complied with.'

(1) Rom. XIII. 1, 5. (2) Matt. XXII. 21. (b) 'Tis Irene's Advice in the Historian, (Nicet. Choniat.) Nec Imperatorem qui absit, quærendum, nec qui adsit, pellendum esse; Neither to seek after a Prince, who hath deserted the Crown, nor to disturb a Prince who possesseth it.

(c) Cassius Clæna, who had stuck to the Party of Niger, against Severus, thus makes his Defence to the latter: 'I own'd neither You nor Niger for my proper Master; and tho' I appear'd on the other side, yet my Aim and Endeavour was, not to oppose You, but to vanquish Julian. Since then my Design was the same with Yours, I am, in this respect, certainly Guilty of no Fault. Nor am I more worthy of Blame, for not revolting afterwards to Your Party. For You would not Your self have been willing, that any Friend of Yours, should have relinquish'd Your Cause, and gone over as a Defserter to Niger. Xiphilin. Epit. Dion. ad Ann. 194. & Zonar. Tom. 2.

try, not only for wrath; as if he should have told us, it was not the part of a prudent Person to provoke the Anger of him who bears the Sword, by an unnecessary Stubbornness; and that therefore, out of regard to our own Safety, we should be subject mis vous êtes, to the Powers which are in being, that is, which have the present Possession. Since then a State cannot subsist without some Government, and since he who actually wears the Crown, doth, at least in some tolerable Measure, maintain the publick Security; an Honest Man and a Lover of his Country ought not, when the Posture of Affairs requires this Proceeding, by an useless Resistance give Occasion to farther Troubles. But what seems hardest of all to be resolv'd is, how the Subjects can, at the same time, keep up two contrary Obligations, one to the Lawful Prince now expel'd, and the other to the Possessor, who hath constrain'd them to swear Allegiance to him, and for the present executes the Regal Office. For how can a Man pay Fidelity to two together, who are bent upon mutual Destruction? And yet, on the other Hand, the Covenant made with the Usurper by the Subjects, and the Faith, which they have engaged to him, seem utterly unable to take away the Rights and Pre- tensions of the Lawful Sovereign: as the Composition which a Country-Man makes with Robbers, to hinder them from waiving his Estate, is incapable of extinguishing his Landlord's Right and Property. Grotius's Opinion on the Case is this, that Whilst the Usurper is in Possession, the Acts of Sovereignty which he exerciseth have a Power of obliging; not by Virtue of his Right, (for Right he hath none) but because 'tis in the highest Degree probable, that he who hath the just Right to the Throne, had rather, as things now stand, that the Commands of him, who is thus in Possession, should hold good, than that by the ceasing of all Laws and Justice, the Common-wealth should be thrown into utter Confusion (a).

And indeed, we ought by all means to presume, that every Prince hath so much Humanity, as to desire that his Subjects should be preserv'd by any Method whatsoever, rather than by striving in vain with their ill Fortune, and unseasonably expressing an Affection without Strength to support it, they should give themselves up for a fruitless Sacrifice (b). When the Romans, being themselves in Distress, were petition'd by their Allies, the Petili, for Relief, their Answer was, 'They confess'd themselves to be no longer in a Condition of supporting their distant Dependents, and therefore desired the Petitioners to return Home, and, since they had already given the utmost Specimen of their Fidelity, to consult amongst themselves, for the Future, how to make the best of their Affairs (1) (c). There appears nothing therefore, that can with more Probability be affirm'd, in the Point before us, than this, that if the Lawful Prince be brought into such Streights, as that neither he himself is able to afford his Subjects due Protection, nor they, on the other hand, able to resist the Usurper, without their imminent Ruine; it must be taken for granted, that he hath for a while releas'd his Subjects from their Obligation towards him, till such Time as Providence shall open a way to his Restauration; so far as is necessary to secure them from Destruction and Danger. And thus too, the Fealty promis'd to the Usurper, seems so far only to be binding, as that it shall be a kind of temporary Engagement, to expire so soon as the expel'd Prince shall recover his Dominions; and consisting not so much in any internal Necessity laid upon the Conscience, as in the Force of that Terrour under which they now stand. Grotius (d), in another Case, allows of an External Right and Property; and we see no Reason why there may not be admitted some kind of External Obligation, not affecting the Conscience (e). If we put all these Considerations together, we shall find, that there is scarce any Case in which a private Person may, by his own Authority, disturb an unjust Possessor of the Sovereign Dignity: especially since Experience witnesseth, that such Conspiracies do commonly exasperate the usurping Powers, to greater Violence and Oppression (f) (2).

(a) L. 1. c. 4. f. 15. Add. l. 2. c. 4. f. 14. (b) Comp. 2 Sam. XV. 25, 26. 1 Kings: II. 26.

(1) Vid. Livy, L. 23. c. 20. (c) Add the Speech of King Ferdinand, when he fled from Naples, in Guicciardine, Book I. near the End. (d) L. 3. c. 7. f. 6.

(e) See 2 Kings XI. 2 Chron. XXIII. on which Place Mr. Hobbes rightly observes, that Athaliah was dethron'd, not by any Right which the High Priest had in that Capacity, but by the Right of the Young King. Leviath. c. 44. What Opinion we ought to entertain of those Laws, which permit or reward the killing of Tyrants, see in Baile on Grat. l. 1. c. 4. f. 17. (f) Vid. Justin. l. XVI. c. 5. sub. fin.

(2) See Mr. Barbeyrac's Second Note upon this Section.

C H A P. IX.

Of the Duty of Sovereigns.

IT remains that we take a View of the Duty of Supreme Governours; which ought to be explain'd with especial Care and Diligence: as well in regard, that the Neglect of this Duty is the Occasion of so many Mischiefs in the World (1), as because to deliver the Rules and Measures of it, is the proper Business of this general Part of Civil Knowledge, it being placed beyond the Bounds of Municipal Laws. Yet in as much as others have frequently inculcated these Points, we shall reckon our Task discharg'd, in barely repeating the chief Heads (2). The Precepts, then, which unite in the making up of this Duty, may easily be gather'd, by examining the Nature and End of Civil Communities, and the proper Offices belonging to the Sovereign Power.

II. Here, then, it is, before all things, necessary, that Governours industriously apply themselves to the Understanding of every thing, that falls under the compleat Discharge of their Trust (3); since no Man can manage, with Commendation, what he hath not first rightly learn'd and consider'd (4). This was Virgil's Advice,

*Tu regere imperio populos, Romane, memento,
Hæ tibi erunt artes; pacique imponere morem,
Parcere subjectis & debellare superbos* (4).

Thee Heaven, Brave Roman, form'd for High Command,
Be these thy Arts; form thy Victorious Hand
To make glad Nations own their Peace bestow'd;
To spare the Suppliant, and pull down the Proud.

Isocrates (b) hath a wise Remark on the same Subject: It's certain, says he, that according as Princes cultivate their own Minds, so they must expect to find their Kingdom. And therefore no Champion, at the Games, hath so much need to exercise his Body, as a Governour hath to exercise and improve his Wit. And the Admonition of the Satyrist, as it belongs to all Mankind, so especially it affects Princes.

Disce _____
_____ quem te Deus esse
Jussit, & humanâ quâ parte locatus es in re (c).

Study Thy self, what Rank or what Degree
The Wise Creator hath Ordain'd for Thee,

And all the Offices of that Estate
Perform, and with thy Prudence guide thy Fate.
Mr. Dryden.

That those things, which appear necessary to be known, in order to the well-governing of a State, are not so very trite and vulgar, so obvious to all Capacities, may be gather'd from what Mr. Hobbes hath particularly deliver'd on this Point (d). Isocrates (e) calls a Kingdom, The Greatest of Human Affairs, and such as requires more than ordinary Degrees of Prudence and Foresight: being not like the Offices about the Temples, within the Power and Ability of any Person to Discharge. And Xenophon rightly concludes, that Man is able more easily to govern any other Animals than those of his own kind (f). Tho' there are many who think the Italian Proverb not altogether groundless. Pochissimo cervello basta à governar tutto le mondo; There needs but a very little Brains to rule the whole World.

From these Considerations it follows, that a Prince ought to abridge himself of all those Studies and Pursuits which contribute nothing towards this good End: in as much as the Art of Governing is so very difficult, as to require the whole Man, tho' of the greatest Parts and Abilities (5); who therefore must, as it were, forget his own Person, and live for the Sake of the People. Much more are Governours concern'd to retrench their Pleasures and useles Diversions, so far as they intercept their main Employment. For the same Reason, they ought to admit into their Familiarity Men of Wisdom and Experience (6); and on the contrary, to Discountenance and Chase away all flattering (7) Parasites, all trifling Genius's, and such as are Skill'd in nothing but what is Empty and Insignificant. Receive into Your Friendship (says Isocrates (g)) not every Body, but such only as are worthy of Your High Birth and Station; nor those with whom You might pass Your Life most pleasantly, but those by whose Assistance You may best govern the Commonwealth. Use Your self to take Delight in such Company, as may both increase the Stock of Your Wisdom, and raise the Character of Your Vertue amongst Others. Yet it were to to be wish'd, that Carneades's Observation were not too often found true, that The Sons of Princes, and other (a) Wealthy and Great Men, learn no Art well, but that of Horsemanship; because their Horse cannot Flatter them (b).

(1) See Mr. Barbeyrac's Note upon this Section. (2) See Charron upon Wisdom, B. 3. c. 2. L. Bacon's Serm. fid. c. 19. (3) V. Virgil. Æn. 6. v. 848, &c. and Mr. Barbeyrac's Second Note upon this Section. (4) See 1 Kings, III. 9. (5) Æn. 6. v. 852, &c. (6) Ad Nicoclem. (c) Perfius, Sat. 3. v. 71, 72. Add. Phil. de Comines, l. 1. p. 342. l. 3. p. 388. (d) De Cive, c. X. f. 10. (e) Ad Nicoclem. in the Beginning. (f) Cyropad. l. 1. imit. Add Socrates's Dispute with Glaucon in Xenophon's Ἀπομν. l. 3. (g) See Mr. Barbeyrac's First Note upon this Section. (6) See Mr. Barbeyrac's Third Note upon this Section. (7) See Mr. Barbeyrac's Fourth Note upon this Section. (g) Ad Nicoclem. p. 34. Ed. Paris.

III. The general Rule, which Sovereigns are to proceed by, is, Salus Populi suprema lex esto (1); Let the Safety of the People be the Supreme Law. 'Tis Plato's Description of a Prince (c), that He neither thinks nor commands what may advance his own private Interest, but what may promote the Benefit of his Subjects: and whatever he says or does, is said or done for their Advantage, and for their Ornament and Grace (2). For the Authority which Governours bear, was first conferr'd on them with this Intention, that it might prove a Means of procuring that End, for which Civil Societies were Establish'd. And therefore they ought to esteem nothing as contributing to their own private or personal Good, which is not, at the same time, profitable to the Common-wealth (3). Would it not seem a Wonder to You, (says Socrates in Xenophon (d)) if he should be own'd for a good Herdsman, who lessens the Number, or multiplies the Ill Qualities of his Drove? 'Tis a much greater Wonder, if he who hath the Command of a State, and both wasts the Strength, and corrupts the Manners of his Subjects, doth not blush at his Mismanagement, and confess himself an Ill Governour.

IV. In order to the internal Tranquillity of States, it is necessary, that the Wills and Inclinations of the Members be so moderated and directed, as shall appear conducive to the Safety of the whole Body. Hence it is the Duty of Supreme Rulers, not only to prescribe Laws fit for the obtaining of this End, but likewise so to keep up the Strictness of publick Discipline, as that the Subjects may conform to the Laws, not so much out of fear of Punishment, as out of Habit and Custom: In as much as bare Penalties are not so apt to produce a Care of doing well, (this being the proper Effect of Reason and Institution,) as a Sollicitude to avoid Discovery in doing ill. 'Tis Aristotle's (e) Maxim, that The best Laws can operate with no Success, unless the Subjects be well Train'd and Educated from their Youth. So Horace (f),

*Quid leges sine moribus
Vanæ proficiunt?*

Laws without Manners are but Words and Wind.

There's one Part of the Character given the Ancient Athenians by Isocrates (g), which is admirable to this purpose: They censured those (says he) as guilty of extreme Ignorance, who imagin'd, that where there were the most accurate Laws, there must needs be the most excellent Men; when 'tis evidently so very easy a Matter to borrow and transcribe the good Regulations of other States. Therefore they concluded, that Virtue did not derive so much Advantage and Assistance in its Growth, from good Statutes, as from good Custom and Practice. That, the greatest part of Men must, of Necessity, frame their Morals according to those Patterns by which they were first taught and instructed; but that a numerous and accurate Establishment of Laws was really a Sign of the ill Condition of a Common-wealth: Edicts and Ordinances being then heap'd upon one another, when Governments find themselves obliged to endeavour the restraining of Vice, as it were, by Banks and Mounds. That, it became wise Magistrates, not to fill the publick Places with Proclamations and Decrees, but to take care, that the Subjects should have the Love of Justice and Honesty firmly rooted in their Minds. That, not the Orders of the Senate, or People, but good and generous Education, was the thing which made a Government Happy: In as much as Men would venture to break through the nicest Exactness of Political Constitutions, if they had not been bred up under a strict Obedience to them: whereas, those who had been form'd to Virtue, by a regular and constant Discipline, were the only Persons, who, by their just Conformity, could make good Laws obtain a good Effect.

Towards the accomplishing of so good an End, in States, where Christianity is profess'd, this Religion it self doth in a high manner contribute; provided it be such as is preserv'd in its primitive Sincerity, purg'd from Human Corruptions, and inculcated, both by the Doctrine and Example of a Learned and Pious Clergy: In as much as that Holy Institution, doth not only comprize all the Points conducing to Eternal Salvation, but likewise the most perfect Scheme of Moral Precepts, which are admirably useful in disposing the Minds of Men to a Compliance with Civil Life, and yet which cannot so conveniently be establish'd by the bare Force of Civil Laws (4). For this reason, in all Christian Governments, which we are acquainted with, the Exhortatory part of the Law of Nature is given in Charge to the Ministers of the Church, to be by them press'd and enforced upon the Conscience; tho' the Dogmatical part belongs rather to those who have made this Science their peculiar Profession (h). Of great Advantage to the same Design are publick Schools; if employ'd for the teaching not of useless Trifles,

(a) Add. Diodor. Sic. l. 1. c. 71. The same Author (l. 12. c. 12.) reports that Charondas, amongst his other Institutions, order'd an Action of ill Company, and set a very severe Penalty on those who, being prosecuted upon this Action, should be convicted.

(b) Plutarch. De Discrim. Amic. & Adulat.

(1) Cicer. De Legib. l. 3. c. 3. (c) De Republ. l. 1. (2) See M. Antonin. B. 4. c. 12. See Mr. Baynac's First Note upon this Section. (3) See his Second Note upon this Section.

(d) Ἄπομν, l. 3. (e) Polit. l. V. c. 9. (f) L. 3. Od. 24. v. 35, 36. (g) Areopagit. p. 254, 255. Ed. Paris. (4) See Montaign's Essays, B. 1. c. 22. towards the End. (h) Add. Grot. De Jure Sum. Potestat. Circa Sacra, c. 1. n. 13.

and the Inventions of idle Brains, the Reliques of the Kingdom of Darknes (a); but solid Learning and Knowledge, the Use of which, diffuseth it self through all the Business of Life. Amongst these Studies, the chief is that which, upon sound and rational Principles, explains the Right of Sovereigns, and the Obligations correspondent to it in the Subjects (b). Another thing which adds Strength and Vigour to publick Discipline, is the Example of those who hold the Supreme Authority. The Manners of the whole State (as Isocrates (c) well observes) are drawn and express'd from the Pattern of the Prince. And therefore Spartian (1) had reason to say of Caracalla, when he married his Mother-in-Law, He engaged in such Nuptials, as, had he understood himself to be a true Law-giver, he, of all Men, ought to have prohibited. To see, then, that all these Particulars are duly regulated in a Common-wealth, should be the Care of the Supreme Directors.

V. Of great Service and Benefit it is, in order to the same End, to have a System of just, plain, and perspicuous Laws, for the settling of such Affairs, as the Subjects are most frequently concern'd in with one another. 'Tis the Advice of Isocrates (d) to a Young Prince, As for Laws, seek those in general which are equitable and useful, and such as may render the Differences amongst the Subjects, as few as possible, and the Accommodation of them no less easy and expeditious. The Marks which the same Orator hath set (e), to distinguish good Laws, are, that they be Few in Number (2), yet satisfactory and intelligible to those who are to use them; just and profitable, and consonant to each other; and rather directed towards keeping up the publick Institutions, than towards preventing the petty Frauds of private Dealings (f). It ought to be a settled Rule in this Point, not to Enact more Laws than conduce to the Good of the Subjects and of the State. For since Men, in their Deliberations about what they ought or ought not to do, are more frequently guided by their Natural Reason, than by reflecting on the publick Constitutions (g); where-ever there are more Laws than can easily come within the Compass of their Memory, and those prohibiting such things as Reason, of it self, doth not prohibit, here the Subjects must through meer Ignorance, without any ill Intention, fall into the Laws as into so many Snares. And by this means, the Government brings the People under an unnecessary Inconvenience; which is contrary to the original Design of Civil States. Moreover, the ordinary Form and Course of Justice ought to be fix'd in such a manner, as that every Subject may recover his Right, by as short and as cheap a Process as can be contrived. The Persians have a Proverb, that Short Injustice is better than tardy and tedious Justice.

VI. And because 'tis in vain to enact Laws, if Governours suffer them to be transgress'd with Security; it is therefore their Part carefully to put their own Decrees in Execution, and to inflict due Punishments (3), according to the Nature and Circumstances of the Fact, and the Intention and the Malice of the Offender. In which Affair, they ought so to proceed, as that the true Force of the Laws may be exercis'd, not only upon the Subjects of moderate Fortune and Condition, but upon the Wealthy and Powerful; whose Riches and Honours ought on no account to give them the Privilege of insulting over their Inferiors with Impunity; especially since Commonwealths are never in more Danger, than from the Fury of the Populacy, exasperated by Unreasonable Oppressions (h). Nor ought Indulgencies or Pardons to be allow'd without very sufficient Cause: since not to treat alike those who, ceteris paribus, have deserv'd alike, is not only unjust, but hath also a peculiar Efficacy towards inflaming the Minds of the Subjects (i).

VII. But as nothing is to be guarded with penal Sanctions, which doth not contribute to the Advantage of the State, so in the annexing of those Punishments, such Moderation is to be used, as that they may bear a just Proportion to the same End; and consequently, that they

(a) Vid. Hobbes Leviath. c. 46. & Lucret. l. VI. v. 981.

(b) Vid. Hobbes Leviath. c. 30. There is a famous Passage, relating to the Instruction of Youth, in Dio Cassius, (l. 52.) in Mecenas's Speech to Augustus. Add the Dispute about suppressing the University of Comimbra, in Comestag. De Unione Lusitan. l. 8. Nor is that to be disregarded which Gramond in his History of France, (l. 3.) offers concerning the Number of Schools.

(c) Ad Nicoclem. p. 36. (1) C. 10. (d) Ibid. c. 31. (e) In Panathen. p. 453. (2) Corruptissima Republica plurimæ Leges, dicit, Tacit. Annal. L. 3. c. 27. (f) Lycurgus (Orat. contra Leocrat.) says that Laws, by reason of their Brevity do not teach (as is done in the Science and Study of Law) but command Men how to act. Quintil. Declam. 264. Where's the Difference, whether there be no Laws, or such as are ambiguous and uncertain?

(g) Hobbes De Cive, c. 13. f. 15. Leviath. c. 30. (3) We shall treat more largely of Punishments in the Third Chapter of the next Book. (h) Leviath. ibid. (i) Pindar. Olymp. Od. 13. v. 6, &c.

Εὐνομία βάδεν πολίων, &c.

Good Law, the Basis of a State,
Here with her Sisters takes her Seat;
Strict Justice, with unhaken Mind;
And Peace, engaging to be kind.
Through their fair Hands the Treasure flows,
Which Heaven on craving Men bestows;
Daughter of Themis, who presides may be no more to the Grievance of the Subject, than to the Benefit of the Publick. In general, if it be desired, that Punishments should obtain their due Effect, they ought to be rais'd to such a Degree of Severity, as that the Pain and Sharpness of them may out-weigh the Profit or Pleasure, which might arise from the Transgression (a).
In Councils, and wise Motions guides.

VIII. Farther, since Men first incorporated themselves in Communities, to obtain Security against the Injuries of Others (1): it concerns every Government to forbid the mutual Injuries of Subjects, so much the more strictly and severely, as their perpetual living together affords more easy Opportunities of Hurt and Mischief. Neither ought the Distinction of Orders, or Dignities to be allow'd such a Force, as to encourage the Great and Powerful in tyrannizing over those of meaner Condition. The way to purchase an Honest Popularity, is, (in Isocrates his Words (b)) Neither to let the Commonalty grow extravagant and abusive, nor to let them suffer from the Insolence of the Superior Order; but to bestow Honours always on Persons of the greatest Merit, and to see that the rest are not wrong'd and trampled upon. 'Tis a good Saying of the Historian (c), Tho' it be enough for Private Men to do no Injury themselves; yet 'tis the Duty of Princes to take care farther, that others do none. It is likewise repugnant to the End of Government, to allow Subjects in revenging, by their own private Force, the Injuries which they think themselves to have suffer'd.

IX. Besides, altho' a single Ruler cannot, in Person, discharge all the Affairs of an extended Realm, so that he must, of Necessity, assume Ministers into the Partnership of his Cares; yet these, as they derive all their Authority from their Master's Commission; so whatever they act, whether well or ill, must, finally be set to his Account. And therefore Isocrates (2) prudently adviseth; So appoint others over the Business which You can't execute Your self, as considering that whatever they perform, will be ascribed to You. And again, If You happen to obtain a Magistracy, never use the Service of a wicked Person in exercising Your Office: For in whatsoever Point he Offends, the Guilt will be laid to Your Charge (d). For which reason, and because as the Ministers are, so the Business will be well or ill managed (e), Governours are obliged to employ, in publick Trusts, Men of Integrity and Ability; often to inspect their Proceedings (3), and to reward or punish them, according as they find them deserve; to the end that the rest may understand how strictly they stand engaged, to apply no less Fidelity and Diligence to the Affairs of the State, than they would to their own personal Concerns. The Chinese, to avoid all Inconveniences that might arise from Favour on the one hand, and from Resentment on the other, allow no Man to bear an Office in the place where he was Born: it being most likely that he should there meet with Persons whom he particularly loves or hates. Thus too, since wicked Men are tempted to the Commission of the greatest Sins, through Hopes of Impunity, which they easily entertain, where the Judges lie open to Bribery and Corruption; it's the Duty of Sovereigns severely to punish such Judges, as the Patrons of all those Villanies which disturb the publick Security (f), and to revoke their unjust Sentences and Proceedings. For the Practice said to be observ'd in Aragon seems unreasonable; to punish the Judges for a false Sentence, and yet to put the same Sentence in Execution. Besides, tho' the ordinary Management of Affairs is entrusted in the Hands of Ministers, yet the Supreme Rulers themselves, ought never to disdain the lending a patient Ear to the Complaints, or Requests of their Subjects.

What Qualifications Sovereigns ought to regard in those, whose Advice they would use (4) in the dispatch of publick Business, and what seems the most convenient way of getting out their Opinion, Mr. Hobbes (g) hath shewn at large. As to the latter Point, there's a remarkable Instance in Davila's History of the Civil Wars of France (h), where the Pope consults the Cardinals, not in a Consistory, but each a-part, about the Absolution to be granted King Henry. Isocrates (i) calls a Counsellor, The most useful of all Treasures or Possessions, and the most worthy of a King. Neuhof (k), in his Description of China, reports many things very worthy of Observation, concerning the Magistrates of that wise People. Nor ought we to undervalue the Directions of King James the First of England, in his βασιλικὸν Δώριον (1); that a Prince should choose his Counsellors chiefly by his own Judgment, not at the Pleasure of Others; and that he should take them indifferently out of all Orders of the People, in as much as he is the Common Father of All. In the same piece, the King hath assign'd the

(a) Add. Hobbes Leviath. c. 30. (1) See Mr. de la Bruyere's Caractères Ou Mœurs de ce Siecle, p. 334.

(b) Ad Nicoclem. p. 31. (c) Xiphilin. Epit. Dion. in Galba. (2) Ad Nicoclem. p. 35.

(d) Themist. Orat. 8. p. 117. When Satibarzanes petition'd his Master Artaxerxes for the Government of a certain Province, of which he was very incapable, together with the Sum of three Thousand Pieces of Gold; the King granted the latter part of his Request, but denied the former: for, says he, to give You so much Money will not make me more indigent, but to give You such a Government, would make me more unjust. Euripides (in Rhes. v. 626.) Every Man ought to be assign'd that Part in which he is capable of doing most Service. Libanius (Legat. ad Julian.) According as the Man is, whom You place in the Box, accordingly the Chariot will be guided. (e) Add. Xenophon. Cyropæd. l. 8. post princip.

(3) See Charron, de la Sageffe, B. 3. c. 2. (f) Vid. Diodor. Sic. l. 1. c. 75, 76. (4) Charron, d. l.

(g) Leviath. c. 25, 30. (h) L. 14. p. 966. (i) Ad Nicoclem. (k) Descript. gen. Sinic. C. 1.

(1) L. 2.

Reasons, why Men of moderate Condition should be pitch'd on, for the Offices relating to the publick Money (a).

X. Since the Subjects are obliged to the bearing of Taxes, and the like Burthens, on no other account, but as they are necessary to defray the publick Expences in War or Peace; it is the Duty of Sovereigns, in this respect, to draw no farther Supplies (1), than either the meer Necessity, or the signal Benefit and Interest of the State shall require (b). And then they are to see that these Impositions be levied according to the justest Proportion; and that no Immunities or Exemptions be granted to certain Persons, to the Defrauding or Oppressing of the rest (c) (2). Farther, that the way of gathering them, be with as little Charges as possible, and that much do not stick to the Collector's Fingers: Least it should happen to the Treasury, as it fares with Buckets in a Fire; they are fill'd to throw upon the Flames, but by passing through so many Hands, and being frequently shook from side to side, they are scarce half full, when they reach the place, which requires their Service. 'Twas a notable Answer, that which Hybreas the Orator gave Mark Antony the Triumvir, when order'd by him to double the Tribute in Asia; You should, at the same time, command us (says he) to have a double Summer; and a double Autumn this Year (3). Care ought likewise to be taken, that what is collected, be laid out on the Occasions of the Common-wealth, and not wasted in Luxury, Donatives (d), superfluous Magnificence, or idle Vanities. Lastly, Matters are to be so order'd, as that the Expences, as near as possible, keep a proportion to the Revenues; or where they fail, the Defect must be made up by frugal Management, and by retrenching unnecessary Charges. 'Tis of pernicious Consequence to affect more Pomp and State than the ordinary Income will support: and he doth, in Reality, live Great enough, who gives every one their Due. Nor ought we to be moved with that Sentence of Tully (e), 'Tis no great Commendation in a Prince to be reputed a frugal Man: Which Mr. Hobbes (f) thus explains; Frugality, tho' in poor Men a Virtue, maketh a Man unapt to atchieve such Actions, as require the Strength of many Men at once: for it weakens their Endeavours, which are to be nourish'd and kept in Vigour, by Reward.

XI. Tho' Rulers are not bound to afford Sustenance to their Subjects, (only, so far as Charity commands them to have a particular regard to those, who, by some undeserved Calamity, are rendred insufficient for their own Support (g); ) yet, in as much as the Sums, necessary to the Common Safety, are Collected from the Ability of private Persons; farther, since the Strength of a State consists in the Valour, and the Wealth of the Subjects; and because,

— gravis est domino que servit egestas (4);

Poor Vassals are a Burthen to their Lord;

Therefore, so far as in them lies, they are to take care, that the Estates and Possessions of their People be well cultivated and improved. Isocrates (h) is admirable in his Advice to this purpose; Keep a strict Eye, says he, over the Fortunes of private Men; believe the Prodigal to spend out of Your Stock, and the good Husband to encrease Your Wealth. For all the Substance of the People is (as it were) the Domestick Treasure of a good Prince. It will contribute much towards this End, if the Subjects be encouraged to take as plentiful Supplies as possible, from the Land, and from the Water; to improve industriously the Materials of their own native Growth, and never to hire other Hands, for those Works which they can conveniently perform themselves: and this is done by furthering, and promoting Manual Arts (5). And, in pursuance of the same Design, it will be of mighty Use, to advance the Exercise of Merchandise, and Navigation, in Maritime Countries (i). Nor is it enough to banish Idleness, but Men are to be brought to a frugal Method of living by Sumptuary Laws (6), which may forbid all unnecessary Expences; especially, those by which the Wealth of the Natives is transferr'd to Foreigners. 'Twas a Saying of Mecenas, that Great Riches are gather'd, rather by spending little, than by receiving much (k). Yet, in this respect, the

(a) Add. Liban. Orat. 5. De Affessorib.

(1) See Mr. Barbeyrac's First Note upon this Section.

(b) Vid. Phil. De Comines, l. 5. c. 18. circa fin. Grotius on Luke III. 13. 'Tis the Duty of Princes to adjust the publick Burthens, according to the publick Necessities; so as that they may lawfully provide for their own Support, in a way agreeable to their Quality; but not to make the Luxury and the Lust of themselves, and their Court-Slaves, the Measure of what they demand, which are indeed without measure.

(c) Add. Tho. Mori Utop. l. 1. (2) V. Hobbes De Cive, c. 13. f. 10. (3) Plutarch. in Marc. Antonin. p. 926. B. (d) Drepan Panegy. c. 27. It is the last Defence and Refuge of Wicked Princes, to take away from some, what they may bestow on others. Add. Montaigne's Ess. l. 3. c. 6. p. 175. Add. Machiavel Princ. c. 16. Plin. Panegy. c. 41. (e) Orat. pro Rege Deiotaro, c. 9. (f) Leviath. c. 11. (g) The Yncas of old in Peru, amongst all their Titles, delighted chiefly to be styl'd Lovers of the Poor, as de la Vega informs us; (Comment. Reg. l. 2. c. 14.) who likewise reports, (l. 4. c. 7.) that the Lands of Widows, in that Kingdom, had more Privileges than those of their Ynca himself.

(4) Lucan. Pharsal. l. 1. v. 152. (h) Ad. Nicoclem. p. 33. (5) Upon this Subject see Parrhasiana, Tom. 1. p. 264, &c. & Tom. 2. p. 291, &c. (i) See an Instance of this, in the Diligence of Sesostris, by which he rendred Egypt capable of Trade, and convenient for the Communication of Goods and Products. Diodor. Sic. l. 1. c. 57. Add the Rules laid down by Mr. Hobbes, (Leviath. c. 30.) to be observed in Relation to the Companies of Merchants.

(6) See the next Book, c. 5. f. 3.

(k) In Dion Cass. l. 52.

Example of Sovereigns hath more Efficacy, than the Force and Authority of any Laws (a). But if a Country abound with Men and Money, it is there convenient to tolerate some unnecessary Consumptions, and such as may seem to border upon Luxury; that the Common People may hence be furnish'd with Opportunities of maintaining Themselves, and that the vast Stock of Money may not lie dead and useless. Provided, that no Encouragement be given to Extravagance and Excess, and that those Commodities be not idly wasted at Home, which might be exported with Advantage to Foreign Parts.

XII. Farther, since the internal Health, and the Firm and Robust Habit of a Commonwealth depends on the Unity of the Subjects (1), the more exactly which Unity is observed, the more effectually the Force and Authority of Government diffuseth it self through the whole Body of the State; it is, for this Reason, incumbent on Sovereigns, to prevent all Factions amongst the People (2), from which 'tis but an easy Slip into Sedition, and Civil War; a Condition so much worse than a War carried on, with universal Consent, against Foreigners, as War is, in general, less amicable than Peace (b). As likewise to take care, that the Subjects do not bandy and associate themselves by particular Covenants and Engagements (c); and that neither the whole People, nor any part of them, place a greater Dependence, or rely more for Defence and Succour on any other Person, within or without the Realm, under any Pretence whatsoever, whether Sacred or Civil, than on their Lawful Prince. And that, on the contrary, there be no Person to whom Seneca's Description may be applied,

—Stat ingens arbor, atque umbrâ gravi Sylvas minores urget (d).

———— He stands a mighty Tree,
The Underwood oppressing with his Shade (3).

XIII. Lastly, since the Condition, under which different Nations and Kingdoms stand, in regard to each other, is but a deceitful kind of Peace, and such as cannot be relied on with any Security; it is a part of the Office of Supreme Governours to take care, that as well the Courage of the Subjects, as their Skill in Arms, be kept up and improved (4); and that all things, necessary to be employ'd against an invading Enemy, as Fortified Places, Arms, and Men, be provided betimes; for, to use the Old Proverb in Plautus (e): 'Tis a lamentable Work to begin digging a Well, when we are almost Dead with Thirst. But to be the Aggressor in a War, how just soever the Occasion of it may be, is what ought not to be practis'd (5), unless a very fair Opportunity offer it self, and when the State of the Commonwealth may, with Convenience, bear such an Undertaking. To the same End, the Counsels and Motions of the Neighbouring Governments are nicely to be dived into, and observ'd; (in which respect, the Perpetual Residence now fix'd in most Courts, are of very great Use;) and Friendships and Alliances prudently to be Contracted (f).

(a) Tacitus Ann. L. 3. c. 55. Vespasian was the principal Author of these strict and grave Fashions; himself using the Ancient Habit, and the Ancient Diet: hence there arose in Men a desire of expressing, by such Observances, their Duty to their Prince, accompanied with a Love of Emulation, stronger than any Fear of Law or Punishment. Add Bernier's Description of the Empire of the Mogul, near the End; where he speaks of the Causes contributing to the great Consumption of Gold in that Kingdom.

(1) See Parrhasiana, Tom. 1. p. 289, &c. (2) See Hobbes De Cive, c. 13. f. 12. (b) Herodot. (Uran) init. Add Evagrius (H. E. l. 4. c. 13.) concerning Justinian's Favour to the Faſtio Veneta, with the Mischiefs that arose from it; as likewise Procop. Hist. Arcan. & De Bell. Perf. l. 1. c. 24. & Bacon's Serm. fid. c. 15. & 49.

(c) Vid. Diodor. Sic. l. 1. c. 21. (d) In Oedip. v. 542, 543. (3) Vid. Bacon's Serm. fid. c. 35.

(4) See Charron, de la Sageſſe, B. 13. c. 3. f. 18, &c. (5) See Mr. Barbeyrac's Second Note upon this Section.

(e) In Mostillar. Act. II. Sc. 1. v. 32, 33. (f) Vid. Marselaer Legat. l. 2. c. 11. Add Hobbes De Cive, c. 13. f. 7, 8. and Bacon's Serm. fid. n. 29.

Of the Law of Nature and Nations.

B O O K V I I I .

C H A P. I.

Of the Power to direct the Actions of the Subject.

I. HAVING explain'd what related to the Nature of Sovereign Power in general; I come now to consider the most material Difficulties that arise upon the particular Parts of it. And since I at first supposed, that the Power to direct the Actions of the Subject, was that from which all Civil Laws were derived; to what I have already said of Laws in general, (1) I shall now add what more particularly relates to Laws Civil, and the Commands of the Sovereign Power. A Law therefore is call'd Civil either with respect to its Authority or to its Original. In the former Sense, all Laws may be call'd Civil, which are the Rules for the Administration of Justice, in Civil Courts, from whatever Original they arise (a). The Laws of God and Nature, it must be own'd, are of universal Obligation, and they that break them must expect to be punish'd by Divine Justice. But it is the Civil Power that gives them the force of Laws in Civil Courts. And the same Power must determine, what Crimes are to be punished by the Civil Justice, and what shall be left to the Divine; as also, upon what natural Obligations an Action may commence in the Civil Court; and what will not bear an Action, but must be left to the Common Ingenuity and Probity of Mankind. Hence under Civil Governments no Man is call'd to account, or can properly speaking be Punished, for the Violation of those Laws of Nature which have not the Authority of Civil Laws stamp'd upon them. For the Evils that attend such Crimes are only such as are usually called Natural Punishments. (2) Those Laws of Nature indeed, upon the Observation of which, the common Quiet of Mankind entirely depends, have in all Commonwealths the Force of Civil Laws. But there are others that have no such force allow'd them, either in express Terms, or in any Practice of Civil Courts; as well because the Controversies about the Violation of them would be very perplex'd and intricate, as to prevent the Multiplication of litigious Suits; and also that the Good and Virtuous might not be deprived of the most valuable part of their Character, the doing well out of Reverence to their Creator, without regard to the Fears of Human Penalties; for this they must necessarily lose, when there is no Distinction made whether a Man doth well out of Love to Virtue, or out of Fear of Punishment. 'And indeed, as Seneca saith, how cheap a thing is it to be good only as far as the Law obligeth us, when the Rule of our Duty is of so much wider Extent? For how many things do Piety, Humanity, Justice, and Fidelity require of us, which yet are without the Reach of the Law (b) (3)? Civil Laws with respect to their Original, are such as flow entirely from the Will of the Supream Civil Power, and respect only such things as are left indifferent by the Laws of God and Nature, and which particularly conduce to the Benefit and Advantage of the Commonwealth. And these demand the same Obedience from the Subject as other Laws do. Since it must evidently be more for the Good of Society, that in indifferent things the Determination of the Government should take place, and the Subjects should look upon that to be good which is thought so by their Governors, than that there should be endless Disputes between them about it, which do not usually end but in War and Bloodshed, certain and undeniable Evils. 'The Publick Good, saith Cicero, ought to be the End of all Laws, and is the best Comment upon, and Interpretation of them; and we do not desire the Preservation of our Laws merely for the sake of the Laws themselves, but for the common Interest and Advantage (c). And hence the Constitutions of particular Commonwealths, made for the Publick Good, are call'd by some Appendages to the Law of Nature (d). But it must be observ'd, that tho' all these Laws put

(a) Vld. Grov. de Imper summar. Potest. circa summa. c. 3. n. 3, 4, 11. & c. 4. n. 1. (b) Sen. de Ira, l. 1. c. 27.

(c) Cic. de Invent. l. 2. c. 38.

(d) Philis Judæus de Josepho. p. 531. B. Ed. Paris.

(1) B. 1. chap. 6. (2) See above in B. 2. chap. 3. §. 21. (3) Quod non vetat Lex, hoc vetat fieri Pudor Senec. Troad. v. 332. V. Grov. L. 3. c. 10. §. 1. See likewise what has been said above in B. 3. c. 4. §. 6.

together are commonly call'd the Civil Law, yet, that there are several Particulars contain'd in the Bodies and Codes of the Civil Law, which are not properly and strictly Laws. For besides those Commands which the Sovereign Power lays upon the Subject for the particular Utility of the Commonwealth, there are many other things insert'd, which should be reduc'd properly to the Law of Nature. What belongs more particularly to the Civil Law,<sup>(1)</sup> may be reduc'd to these two Heads. First, to certain Forms prescribed, and certain Methods to be observ'd in Civil Affairs, either in transferring Rights, or else in laying Obligations upon Persons, which shall be look'd upon to be valid in the Civil Court: And Secondly, To the several Ways how a Man is to prosecute his Rights in the same Courts. So that, if we give the Law of Nature all that belongs to it, and take away from the Civilians what they have hitherto engross'd and promiscuously treated of; we shall bring the Civil Law to a much narrower Compass; not to say at present, that whenever the Civil Law is deficient, we must have recourse to the Law of Nature; and that therefore in all Commonwealths the Natural Laws supply the Defects of the Civil. For which reason Hobbes calls the Law of Nature the unwritten Civil Law (a).

II. But notwithstanding, Hobbes de Cive c. 14. §. 10. will maintain this strange sort of Opinion, 'That it is impossible any Civil Law should be made repugnant to that of Nature, except it be to the Dishonour of God. The Argument he uses to prove it, is this: Men, saith he,<sup>(2)</sup> when they enter into Civil Societies, oblige themselves by Compact, to obey his Commands who hath the Sovereign Power, that is, to obey the Civil Laws; and this Compact they are oblig'd by the Law of Nature to observe. But since the Compact it self, and consequently the Obligation to obey the Civil Laws, was antecedent to the Promulgation of the Laws themselves; by the Force of the same Law of Nature, which commands not to violate our Compacts, we are oblig'd also to obey every Civil Law. For where we are oblig'd to Obedience before we know what will be commanded, there we are oblig'd to obey universally and in every Respect. But the Truth is, it must be presum'd, that when Men enter into Civil Societies, they have already a competent Knowledge of the Law of Nature; and that one of the chief Ends of erecting Civil Governments was, that the Laws of Nature, upon which the common Peace of Mankind is established, might be obey'd without danger. And in short, that there is nothing in the Laws of Nature which is any way repugnant to the Nature and End of Civil Society, but on the contrary that they are entirely necessary to assist and promote it. And therefore when Men form'd themselves into Civil Societies, and oblig'd one another by Compact to obey the Civil Laws, we must suppose that they took it for granted, that nothing would be established by the Civil Law, which was contrary to the Natural; and that the particular Advantages of the Commonwealth could not be contrary to the common End of all Government. It is possible indeed that a Civil Law might be made in Opposition to the Natural; but no Man in his Wits would ever attempt to make such a Law, unless he resolv'd to ruin and overturn the whole Commonwealth. And therefore Stratocles was very justly taken for a Madman when he publish'd his Law at Athens, that whatever (b) King Demetrius commanded, should be Law to Gods and Men. And Parysatis was guilty of detestable Flattery, when she perswaded Artaxerxes to marry his own Daughter and despise the Greek Laws; adding, that Heaven had made him the Persian Law, and the proper Judge of Good and Evil (c).

III. The same Author argues further in defence of his Opinion, de Cive c. 6. §. 16. c. 14. §. 9, 10. 'That tho' Theft, Murther, Adultery, and all kinds of Injuries, are forbidden by the Law of Nature; yet that what is to be call'd Theft in a Subject, what Murther, what Adultery, and what an Injury, is not to be determin'd by the Law of Nature, but by the Civil Law. For barely the taking away what another Man is in Possession of, is not Theft, but only to take away that which of right belongs to another. But what of right belongs to me and what to another, is a Question of the Civil Law. And in the same manner, barely to Kill a Man is not Murther, but to Kill him the Civil Law forbids. And so also, no Act of Generation is Adultery, but that which the Civil Law declares such; and lastly, Breach of Promise is indeed an Injury where the Promise it self is lawful; but where there is no Right to make an Agreement, there no Right is transferr'd, and consequently no Injury follows; but what we may make Agreements about, and what we may not, depends upon the Civil Law. To which I answer, that all that believe the Scriptures, as to several sorts of Crimes, are sufficiently assured, both from the Laws of the Jews which were of Divine Institution, and from other Parts of the Holy Books, how God the Author of the Law of Nature would have them desin'd? So that tho' the Civil Government should de facto, make some particular Acts not

(a) De Cive c. 14. §. 14. Vid. Quintil. Decl. 252. Actio inscripti Maleficii; upon which Law Quintilian says, That the Old Romans seem'd to have made it with the greatest Wisdom possible: For since, saith the Declaimer, they knew that no Prudence or Foresight could be cautious enough to prevent all the several Ways of Mischief that bad Men devise, they made this Law for an universal Security, that what Crimes escap'd the others might fall under the reach of this.

(b) Plut. Demetrius. p. 900, 901.

(c) Plut. Artaxerxes. p. 1022. B.

(1) See our Author's Abridgment, De Offic. Hom. & Civ. B. 2. c. 12. Sect. 6, 7, 8. (2) Ibid. Sect. 9.

Criminal, yet they would nevertheless be contrary to the Law of God. Especially since there can be no sufficient Reason given, why God in his Laws should give such Definitions of such Actions, unless they ought equally to be observ'd in all Nations. The Spartans allow'd the Frigid and Impotent to supply their Deficiency in the Conjugal Duties, by the Assistance of the Young and Vigorous (1): And this was done at Sparta, without any bad Imputation on the Husband, the Wife, or the Gallant, when they had no Hopes of Children otherwise: Because the Civil Laws of that State did not comprehend that Method of answering the Husband's Part at his own Request, under the Name of Adultery. And yet, since it is evident from the Laws of God, that by the Law relating to Adultery, any Familiarity of the Bed with a Woman actually married to another is forbidden; it is evident, that those Assurances also were contrary to the Law of Nature. But if it be reply'd, that the Definitions of particular Acts in the Scriptures were intended for, and only belong'd to the Jewish Commonwealth, and so are of positive Institution; yet thus much however must be allowed, that the Civil Law ought to have so cautious a Regard to the Definitions of Acts forbidden by the Law of Nature, as not to defeat the Intention and End of it, the Preservation of a Peaceable Society and Honourable Correspondence among Men. And therefore if any Definition of the Civil Law be opposite to this End, it must be granted, that it is also contrary to the Law of Nature. For Example; If the Civil Law should define Adultery to me, by telling me that it is when a Man invades another's Bed against his Wife's Consent; or of Theft, that it is when a Man takes away something from another by Night; or of Murder, that it is when a Man openly assaults another and kills him: It is manifest, that the Publick Quiet and Security of the Commonwealth could not long subsist under such Methods of Government. For we are not to imagine, that the Universality of such Definitions would sufficiently secure the Publick Peace; that is, that tho' particular Persons might perhaps sometimes be sensible of Inconveniencies from them, yet that at other times they might not find Advantages proportionable; and that the Equality of Right which such Laws would settle among the Subjects, would take off all occasion of Complaint: For tho' perhaps a Man might desire that some particular things might be lawful only for himself; yet if others should have as large Immunities granted them in Opposition to him, he would soon be willing to throw up his Privilege. And should the Civil Laws make any such Establishments, it must be impossible that the Peace and Order, which Nature intended, should be preserv'd. And if the Equality of such Laws alone were Reason enough to introduce them, why must we any longer be confin'd by any Laws at all, since by taking them wholly away, we should make the greatest Equality; which it is impossible any Man in his Wits should think of doing? In some Accounts of the Tartars (a) we are told, that they are utter Strangers to all Justice; and that when any of them wants any thing, he may take it without fear of Punishment wherever he finds it: (2) And when the Party robb'd, complains to the Magistrate of the Injury done him, the Other doth not deny the Fact; but pleads only that he wanted what he took; and then 'tis usual for the Magistrate to give Sentence, That the Party who complains, may if he pleases, right himself in the same manner upon others. There are Others indeed (b) who give a more favourable Account; telling us only that the Tartars are very free in communicating what they have to Strangers; but that they will expect a Return of the same kind, or else will take it by force. A Tartar's Definition therefore of Theft would be, When something is taken away without the Consent of the Proprietor, which the other had need of; a Definition evidently imperfect, and which manifestly subverts the Law of Nature relating to Theft. 'Tis certain, none but the worst of Men could wish for such a Law, since it might often happen, that a Man might have the Ill Fortune to be robb'd of That which of all things he was most unwilling to lose, and which he either might never find another Man possess'd of, or else so secured, that he must despair of being ever able to take it from him. But besides, the Supposition Mr. Hobbs goes upon is false; that what belongs of Right to me, and what to another Man, is a Question of the Civil Law; and that out of Civil Government there is no Propriety: For tho' Men that live under it have a more secure Enjoyment of their Proprieties, than they that live out of it; since the first are defended in their Rights and Fortunes by the united Strength of a Number of Men, besides the Assistance of the Magistrate; and the latter can support themselves only by their own single Power; yet notwithstanding, there can be no Grounds of Proof to assert that there was no Propriety before the Institution of Civil Government. For all Sovereign Princes and Commonwealths are now actually in a State of Nature, and their Proprieties are not determin'd by any common Law or Judge, but solely by Compact, and the natural means of Acquisition; and yet I believe no Body ever imagin'd that Princes might ravage, or steal from one another, without incurring the Guilt of Rapine or Theft. So that admitting, that a Man cannot make any Compact that will be valid about what is forbidden by the Civil Law, yet certainly it cannot be denied, but that they who live in a Liberty of Nature, may make certain Compacts, which it will be an Injury to violate. And therefore it is false to say we must be obliged entirely to the Civil Law, to know what an Injury is. Besides, neither will it, I think, be denied, that a Man is guilty of Homicide, tho' he be only under the Government of the Law of Nature, when he takes away another's Life without making War upon him, or in his own defence. Nor is it difficult to understand barely by the Law of Nature, without any Assistance from the Civil, that Adultery is the Violation of Conjugal Faith: But that the Civil Laws may superadd certain Obligations to the Matrimonial Contract, for want of which, the Marriage may be look'd upon to be null and void in the Commonwealth, or be deprived of certain Effects, was never deny'd. But further; it may be necessary to distinguish between what is commanded by the Civil Law, and what is only permitted, (1) and not forbidden by the Sanction of any Penalty to be inflicted by Civil Justice. For a Prohibition of the Law of Nature, and a Permission of the Civil about the same thing, are not oppos'd to one another; for a Permission of the Civil Law doth not make any Act not to be contrary to the Law of Nature, that really is so, or excuse the Man that is guilty of it from Sin against God: But it only declares, that the Civil Power hath laid no restraint upon the Person that will commit such Acts; that if a Man doth commit them, he is not to be punished on that account; and that Human Justice alloweth such Acts to have the same Effects with other Acts, that are agreeable to the Law of Nature. And therefore the Laws of Tartary do not, ('tis presum'd,) command Men to steal, nor I suppose, forbid the Proprietors to defend their own: Only the Person that robs is not liable to be Punish'd, nor obliged to make Restitution; so that according to the common Justice of that Nation, Robbery and Stealing are look'd upon to be lawful ways of Acquisition. And the same may be said for the Children at Lacedæmon; for we need not translate that Sentence of Plutarch (a) κλέπτειν νεώμοιο τῶν παίδων, the Children were commanded by the Law to steal; since the Sense of it may as well be, That they were permitted by the Law. Xenophon indeed (b) says, That it was so far from being thought scandalous for the Children to steal at Sparta, that they were under a necessity of doing it: But this was spoken only in a way of Raillery, and to mortify Chirofophus the Lacedæmonian. Neither was that Practice so inexcusably bad as some believ'd it, or to deserve so severe an Invective as Isocrates gave it (c). For the Truth of the matter was, that the Liberty the Boys were allowed in was only that of robbing Orchards, and stealing Victuals; and then too if they were taken, they pay'd severely enough for it (d). We are told too of Dionysius the Tyrant, That tho' he punished other Crimes very severely, yet he would often pardon them that stole Cloaths, in hopes that by this Method he might restrain the Syracusians from the Riot and Drunkenness they were given too. Neither do I think, that the Laws of Sparta before-mention'd, laid any Command either on the Husband, or Gallant; that matter seems to have been no more, than that if they two agreed, the Law did not interpose; but look'd upon the Children so begotten to be Legitimate, and admitted them Heirs to the Estate of the Family. So also, where Duelling is permitted, the Blood which is shed in them may be excused from the Punishment of Murder at the Bar of Civil Justice, but will not be so acquitted hereafter at the Divine Tribunal. That the Civil Power may with Justice permit things of such a nature, and that not by bare Silence and Connivance only, but by express mention made in the Publick Laws, is what I dare not affirm; by such a Method, the Civil Power would seem almost to invite the Subjects to transgress the Laws of Nature: Possibly it may be excusable to dissemble things, where the Times or the Humour and Dispositions of the People will not endure a Reformation by direct Remedies. And so there was good Reason why the Roman Law (2) call'd that, Actio Rerum amotarum, when there was indeed a real Theft committed.

(a) Sigismund. Baro. Herberstein de Rebus Moscov.

(b) Haytho de Tartaris. c. 43.

(1) See above in B. 6. c. 1. §. 15. It was sometimes common among the Romans to lend their Wives to Persons comely and well-born. See Plutarch in Numa, p. 78. D. & in Catone, p. 771. A. (2) This Permission takes place likewise in Cholchis; See Busbequius's 3d Ep. p. 155.

IV. Our Author also, de Cive c. 14. § 9. Affirms, that the Precepts of the Decalogue are merely Civil, and not Natural Laws, and that they are to be explain'd after this manner. You shall not deny your Parents the Honour the Civil Law alloweth them. You shall not kill any Man, the Law forbids you to kill. You shall avoid every unclean Act which the Law forbids. You shall not take away what belongeth to another Man against his Consent. You shall not frustrate the end of Law and Judgment, by bearing false Witness. But it will here be easily observ'd, that he depends upon an utterly false Hypothesis, and supposeth what will never be allow'd, that there's no Propriety, no Marriage, and that every thing is lawful for every Man before the Institution of Civil Governments. It is certain, the Precepts he speaks of, are obligatory, and bind even those Persons to one another, who do not live under any common Government, but only in a State of Nature, and are guided purely by the Directions of the Natural Law. For certainly Men could, and actually did divide things between one another by Compact even in such a State: and therefore would have sinn'd as much against the Eighth Commandment, if they had either openly or secretly robb'd one another, as they do that

(a) Plut. Apophth. Lacon. p. 175. F.

(b) Xenop. περί ἀναξίας. l. 4.

(c) Isocr. Panathen.

(d) Vid. Plut. Lycurgus. Xenophon de Repub. Lacedæmon. Busbequius gives a much worse Account of the Liberties allow'd to Theft among the Mengrelians, Ep. 3. p. m. 155. Vid. Lib. 11. t. 5. l. 1. D. de Aleator.

(1) See Mr. Barbeyrac's 1st Note upon this Section.

(2) Lib. 25. t. 2. Digest.

rob their Fellow Subjects in Civil Governments. It may also be perhaps denied, that a Man, in a State of Nature, is guilty of Adultery, when he violates his Neighbours Bed: But the answer may be seen, Gen. 20. c. v. 3. 26. c. v. 10. And further, since Arbitrators must be often made in a State of Nature, to decide Disputes about matters of Fact, by intervention of Witnesses, as Mr. Hobbes admits himself, de Cive c. 3. § 23. we may hence find the use and necessity of the ninth Commandment. In general, the Precepts of the Decalogue, it is evident, may be reduced to the Law of Nature; but when they are consider'd as written in two Tables, and promulg'd to the Israelites by Moses, they may properly enough be call'd Civil Laws, or rather the general Heads of the Jewish Civil Law, which are afterwards divided into particular Laws, with penal Sanctions added to them (a). Upon which Account, Grotius saith (b) the Decalogue does not in express Words comprehend every Crime, nor even all those which are punishable by the Civil Law, but only such in every kind as are most Heinous and Malignant. For there is no mention made of Wounding, but only of Murder; nor of any other sort of Gain made by another's loss, but that of Theft; nor of any other Falsity, but False Witness.

V. It may be proper in the next place to consider, that the same Author in his Book de Cive, c. 12. § 1. among those seditionous Doctrines he supposes to be the internal Diseases, and Causes of the Dissolution of a Commonwealth, sets down this for the First, 'That every private Man is Judge of Good and Evil. For, (saith he,) the Measure of Good and Evil, Just and Unjust, is the Civil Law; and whatever the Legislator commands must be look'd upon as just and Good, whatever he forbids as Unjust and Evil; and therefore it is a very ill Maxim, that we are to obey our Sovereign only when his Commands are just. There was nothing Just or Unjust before Civil Government; their Nature relates to the Commands of the Sovereign: and every Action is in its own Nature indifferent; that it becometh Just or Unjust, is owing to the Will of the Sovereign. And therefore lawful Princes make those things just, which they command, by commanding them; and those things which they forbid, unjust, by forbidding them. But while private Men assume to themselves the Cognizance of Good and Evil, they affect to be like the Sovereign, which it is impossible should be consistent with the Quiet and Peace of any Commonwealth. In Answer to him, It may be readily allow'd, that Sovereign Princes have indeed Power by annexing or taking away the Penal Sanction, to give or take from the Laws of Nature, the Force of Civil Laws in Human Courts of Justice; as also to make many things which do not belong to the Law of Nature, Just, by commanding, and Unjust, by forbidding them. But to say that before Civil Governments were erected, there was nothing Just or Unjust, either defin'd by Nature, or obliging Mens Consciences, is as false, as to assert, that Truth it self hath only a precarious Arbitrary Dependence upon the Pleasure of Men, and is not founded in the Nature of things; or that Sovereign Princes may fashion and dispose the nature of things as they please, or that the same Truth may be different from it self. And indeed the thing it self sufficiently confutes Hobbs. For is it at all probable, that those Masters of Families, who at first united, and form'd themselves into Commonwealths, should, all the time they liv'd separately, behave themselves only like so many wild Beasts; break all manner of Compacts they ever made; rob one another of Life and Fortune at pleasure, upon every pretence of a Right, and that all their Actions were to be thought purely indifferent? Upon the same grounds, Sovereign Princes now, who are still with Respect to one another in a State of Nature, should not be thought Guilty of Injustice, when they break their Compacts, and invade one another's Rights: And yet it is certain, They are not subject to Civil Laws. But on the contrary, it is not to be conceiv'd, that Civil Governments could ever have been establish'd, or after their Establishment, preserv'd; if there had not been something Just or Unjust antecedent to their existence. For 'tis certain, Compacts must have been made use of at the first forming of Commonwealths. But how could Men persuade themselves, that such Compacts could be of any Force, except they knew before, that it was Just to observe them, and Unjust to do otherwise. And if it be no Justice to stand to Compacts antecedently to the Definition of the Civil Laws, there can be no reason why Subjects may not, when they please, renounce their Obedience, dissolve Civil Government, and so utterly abolish all the Distinction between Just and Unjust. For it is Extravagant to imagine, that such Numbers of Men, as a Commonwealth consists of, will always be kept in Subjection, by no other restraints, but Fear and Power. Nor therefore can I believe there was ever any Prince heard of so far depriv'd of Reason, as to have commanded what the General Laws of Nature forbid, or forbid what They commanded; for Instance, that it should be unlawful to perform Trust or Promise, or to give any Man his due; that it should be a Crime to live with any Respect to Reason or Justice, that every Man might have full Liberty to do all the Mischief he could, and the like. But now, why might not such Laws have been made, if there had been nothing Just or Unjust, antecedent to the Determinations of the Civil Laws? 'Tis certain the Command of the Civil Power,

(a) Vid. Philon. Judæum, de Decalogo;

(b) Grot. ad Math. 5. 27.

may as well make Poison it self wholesome, and necessary Food, as make such Things as these, Just and Good. And therefore Polybius was equally in the wrong, when he seems to derive the Original of Justice and Injustice from Civil Government (a). In another Sense indeed, what Mr. Hobbs saith, may be safely enough admitted; that is, supposing that by Good and Evil, we understand no more than the advantage, or disadvantage of the Commonwealth. For then it will really appear to be a sedition Doctrin, That every private Person is Judge of Good and Evil, meaning by it, of what is for the Advantage or Disadvantage of the Commonwealth: That is, that every Private Man is a competent Judge whether those are proper Means, which the Prince commands shall be made use of in promoting the publick good; and that in Consequence, every Man's Obligation to Obedience may depend upon that Judgment. For it is necessary that Subjects (as Orho in Tacitus told his Souldiers,) should be ignorant of some things as well as know others. For if every one should have the Liberty to dispute what he was commanded, Obedience and Authority would soon sink together (b). It was Cato's Saying, that the Tenant ought not to think himself wiser than his Landlord; and of Plato, that no Man should pretend to be wiser than the Laws (c).

VI. Our next Consideration shall be, whether a Subject may be guilty of Sin, in executing the Commands of his Prince; supposing he pretends, that he barely undertook the Performance of the Action, and left the Design, Contrivance, and the Necessity of Account, entirely upon him who gave the Command? For there is a Difference between the Laws and the Commands of Princes: The Laws are General Precepts, which affect every Subject; the Commands are only occasionally imposed, upon particular Persons; but have the same effect the Laws have in obliging those they are directed to. In this Case it is the known Opinion, that a Man may sometimes sin by obeying the Commands of the Civil Sovereign, and therefore that the Subject may and ought to examine such Commands, by his own Conscience rightly inform'd (d). For certainly it ought to be supposed that Good Men promise Obedience, upon Certain conditions only; that, since they are sure to give an Account of their Actions, at the Divine Tribunal, and since all the Governments of this World are under an infinitely great overruling Power; they are always ready to obey the Commands of their Sovereign, except when they contradict or interfere with the Laws of Nature, or the manifest Laws of God. For without Dispute, should a Prince give out any Command contrary to the Civil Laws, he may be obey'd without Sin. But on the other Hand, Mr. Hobbes de Cive c. 12. § 2. declares this for a Seditious Doctrin. 'That Subjects are guilty of Sin, when they obey those Commands of their Sovereign, which they think unjust. And it may indeed be allowed to be dangerous not only to the Commonwealth, but also to the Consciences of Private Subjects, to believe, that upon any Scruple or Doubt, concerning the Equity of what is Commanded, Obedience may lawfully be refused. For should this Doctrin be admitted, it must often necessarily happen, that a Man must be reduced to a Necessity of Sinning; if he obeyeth, he must act contrary to his Conscience; and contrary to his Allegiance, if he doth not. For I think it is on all Hands allowed, that in Cases where the Conscience is doubtful, the best resolution a Man can come to, is to take that Side where there will be least danger of Sin. But now the danger of Sin is in a much nearer View, when upon an uncertain Doubt, a Man quits his Allegiance which he hath expressly sworn to keep; since the Commands of Superiors are always attended with the Presumption of being just, and are often built upon Reasons, of which private Persons cannot be allowed to be Judges. And therefore what the same Author says a little after in the same Book, may deserve to be consider'd. 'That that is my own Sin, which when I commit, I think my own; but that which I think is another Man's Sin, I may sometimes commit without deriving any Guilt upon my self. For if I am commanded to commit that which must be the Sin of him that commanded it, so he be my lawful Governor, I do not sin if I obey him. So an Ambassador is supposed to speak the Sentiments of his Master; and whatever bears an ill Sense in them, is not to be imputed to him that speaks, but to him that gave him his Instructions. Since such Ministers are under a Necessity of conforming to the Directions of them that send them (e).

(a) Polyb. l. 6. where he is transcrib'd with very little Judgment, by Machiavel Disc. in Liv. l. 1. c. 2. Vid. R. Cumberland, de Leg. Nat. l. 5. c. 5.

(b) Tacit. Hist. l. 1. c. 83. H. L. 2. c. 39. It is one part of the Character of a good Souldier, that he had rather put his Generals Commands in Execution, than make any Debates upon them. Cato de Repub. c. 5. And so far Terentius was in the right. Tacit. Ann. 6. c. 8. We are not to examine whom you prefer, or upon what account Heaven hath given you the supream Disposal of things, and it is our Glory to obey.

(c) Plat. Polit. p. 555. D. Ed. Wech. Arist. Rhetor. l. 1. c. 15. To endeavour to be wiser than the Laws, is what the best Laws take care to forbid.

(d) Sophocles, Antigone, v. 458. &c Nor could I think your Edicts of such Force, as to oblige me once to violate the fix'd unwritten Laws of Heaven.

(e) Procop Hist. Goth. l. 1. p. 175. Ed. August. Vindel. Senec. Tro. v. 868, 869. The Guilt of a Crime forced upon a Man, recoils back upon the Authors of it. Vid. Lib. 3. t. 2. l. 1. D. de his qui infam. not. Quique suo nomine non jussu ejus. &c. M. Senec. l. 4. Contro. 27. That Woman is not immodest that hath been corrupted in her Chastity by a Tyrant; neither is he guilty of Sacrilege, that takes the Offerings of the Gods, and brings them to the Tyrant, or that sets up his Statue among the Images of the Deities.

I will not deny but Man may engage barely for the Execution of an Action commanded by his Prince, the Guilt of which shall be imputed solely to him who commanded it, and not to him who was the Instrument in the Execution of it. (1) But then it will be necessary for him to take with him these Cautions. (2) First, that he be commanded barely to execute the Action, that is, only to apply the Strength of his Body to the Performance of the Action, and neither give Occasion to it, or furnish Pretext, or make use of any Excuse for it, but undertake it as an Action that belong'd wholly to another Person, and which he will not take upon himself. Secondly, That he should show his unwillingness to be employ'd, in such a Service, and desire earnestly to be excused from it (a). And Lastly, That upon declining the Action, he be threaten'd with present Danger of Life, or some other great Evil, which he is not oblig'd either in Justice or Charity, to suffer for another Man, and which the Person that commands him hath Power to inflict it; and especially if he sees that tho, he refuseth his Assistance in the Action, it will be executed by other Hands. It is undoubtedly true indeed, that no Commands of Men, contrary to the Law of God, can have any binding Force, that is, lay any Intrinsic Necessity of Obedience on the Conscience, and that therefore it can be no Crime to refuse to obey them. But there is a wide Difference, between being bound in Conscience to do a thing, and being able to do a thing without Sin, to avoid some very great Evil. For there are several things which We are under no manner of Intrinsic Obligation to do; which yet upon pressing Necessity We may lawfully undertake. And in this Case the Question is, not whether We are bound to do such a thing, but whether We can do such a Thing without any Guilt of our own, when We see we must otherwise lose our Lives to no purpose. Neither is any thing I have here said, in the least weaken'd by what Pliny saith, Ep. 9. l. 3. 'Where he tells his Friend of a very ill Cause he had been engaged against, that he had prov'd before the Senate, that it was Criminal even to have assisted in it. (Ministerium etiam Crimen esse.)' For the Persons he pleaded against, had not been barely the Instruments of another Man's Crime, but had charg'd Innocent Persons with False Crimes, that the Proconsul might take occasion to seize on their Fortunes and Estates; And their informing against, and wrongfully accusing them, was entirely their own Act; the Impeachments they made, were all in their own Names, and not in the Proconsul's, nor were they pretended to have been made at his Command; neither were they forced to be Delators, by any immediate fear of Death, if they had refused to be so. They pleaded indeed, that they were Provincial Subjects, and therefore were oblig'd by Fear to be absolutely at the Command of the Proconsul. But what look'd most probable was, that the Expectation of the Gain they hoped to make, was their greatest Encouragement; tho' perhaps it might be true too, that the Proconsul had given them reason to be afraid, if they refused to obey him; yet it is not likely he should threaten them with Death, and that there was no other possible Method left for them to escape it (b). And in this Case, the Desires, or Intreaties of Superiors must not be supposed to have the same Force in them as Necessity or their Commands (c), though in others it may sometimes be true, that the Intreaties of Tyrants are mixt with a sort of Necessity. Neither is the Example of Doeg, 1 Sam. 22. v. 18. any Objection against what has been said. For it was expressly added, that a Man ought to desire earnestly to be excused, as Saul's Guards very honourably did: (And thus the Midwives were commended for defeating the barbarous Command of Pharoab, tho' it were with an Untruth, Exod. 1.) But Doeg on the contrary, show'd himself ready and willing to put the King's Command in Execution upon the Priests, tho' we do not find that any Threats were added to it, when he had himself before, falsely accused them, insinuating that they had entred into a Secret Conspiracy with David, against the King: For it is evident from 52 Psal. that he had brought some false Accusations against them. But notwithstanding, it must be confess'd, that there are some Actions, the bare execution of which, a Man would rather die than undertake: Such as to Murther Parents, or Children; to commit Incest with a Mother, or Daughter, or to lie with a Beast. A small Stock of Courage would make a Man prefer Death, to the guilt of being an Instrument in such Actions. And I cannot but think it was a noble Spirit of Constancy and Bravery in those Romans, 'who when singled out by Hannibal, to fight with one another, Brothers with Brothers, Fathers with their Children, and Kinsmen with their near Relations, chose rather to die under Torture, than be stain'd with Blood which Nature

(a) We have a remarkable Instance of this Nature in Olearius's Travels into Pers. l. 5. c. 32.

(b) Vid. Tacit. Ann. L. 13. c. 43. Where Sullius pleads that he had done nothing out of any Design of his own, but that all was entirely out of Obedience to his Prince. Afterwards he pretended the Commands of Messalina, and wav'd his Defence. For why was there no body else made choice of that would sell his Voice to oblige that cruel and impudent Woman? But it is necessary the Instruments of Oppression and Tyranny should be punish'd: For when they have receiv'd the Rewards of their Wickedness, they shift the Crime over upon some body else: And therefore Jul. Græcinus very well deserved Commendation, who was commanded to accuse M. Silanus, and was kill'd for refusing Tacit. Agricola; and Seneca gives him a very great Encouragement. De Benef. l. 2. 21. (c) Iliad Epist. 7.

(1) See Mr. Barbeyrac's 4th Note upon this Sect.

(2) See Mr. Barbeyrac's 5th Note upon this Sect.

'had so nearly ally'd.' (a) Neither can I think it at all lawful, that to save my own Life, I may assist to take away another Man's; for that would be to make another's Life the Price of my own: And there are many things which we cannot do for Price, which upon other Considerations we may (b).

VII. But in general, that a Man may not at the Command of a Superior undertake an Action, as his own, which is repugnant to the Dictates of a good Conscience, is what no Man that hath any Sense of Religion can deny. The Judges therefore Josephus speaks of (c) (To consider some Examples under this Head) refus'd to condemn the Innocent Zacharias, tho' they were sensible what danger threaten'd them from the Fury of the Zealots. And on the other hand the Judges mention'd 1 Kings, ch. 21. were certainly guilty of a very great Sin; because they pass'd Sentence not by Order from the King, but as the pure Result of Judiciary Process upon the Evidence of the Crime; nor can the Witnesses be excused from an equal share of guilt. Nor were the Detectors Persons whose Business it was to charge false Accusations upon the Great and Rich, that ill Princes might have a Pretence to ruin them in Circumstances less criminal. Marcellus Eprius was once a Person very well known by that Character, but more particularly infamous, for the Impeachment of Thraseas: tho' Tacitus tells us he pleaded in his Excuse for that, that his Accusation charged no more upon Thraseas, than what the Judgment of the whole Senate confirm'd; which was only to spread the Crime wider, not to clear himself. 'Tis true indeed, as the Historian says, That Nero endeavour'd only to disguise his own natural Cruelty, under the Formality of set Accusations (d). But still it was the Avarice and Ambition of such Auxiliary Villains which provoked and encouraged him. Others engaged in the same Practices, excused themselves by saying, that in those Times They were under a necessity to do what they did to secure their own Honour and themselves. A kind of Defence which means no more than that they chose rather to expose others to Danger, than hazard themselves. Neither did Curtius Montanus (e), as the same Historian says, allow it to be a tolerable Excuse, because he thought the Persons that used it not to be Criminal in the Occasion of it; but in a Rhetorical way he chose to pass by some things, that he might press others with more Vehemence. And the Senate acted with great Justice, when after Nero's Death, they decreed his Instruments the Informers should be punish'd as a Race of Miscreants who lived upon private Ruin (f). The Emperor Titus with the same Justice commanded all such Persons to be publickly whipt and beat in the Forum, then dragg'd through the Amphitheatre, made Slaves and Sold; and some of them to be transported to uninhabited Islands; and after him Trajan sent away Numbers of them in a few shatter'd Vessels, that they might be left to the Mercy of the Sea, and be shipwreck'd whereever the Waves threw them (g). Neither could the secret Command of Tiberius excuse Piso from the Guilt of Germanicus's Death, if he was really the Cause of it: And if he had confess'd such a Command in the Senate, tho' that must have been enough to have put even Tiberius to the blush, and depriv'd him of all his Shifts, to excuse himself for commanding so barbarous an Action; yet the Senate had still Power very justly to condemn him as the Criminal, because he did not pretend any Publick Authority for it, but voluntarily undertook an Action which Tiberius had not the least Pretence of Justice to command, only that he might engage the Emperor to him, by such an Act of Villany (h). Neither do I think that Joab was absolutely free from the Guilt of Uriah's Murther, 2 Sam. c. 11. 14, 15, 16. tho' Chap. 12. 9. David only is mention'd as the Principal in it. And it was very brave in Papinian to refuse to defend the Murther of Geta, with that noble Saying, That it was easier to commit Parricide, than to excuse it. Others tell the Story, that he refused to speak an Oration for the Emperor, in which he would have had him inveigh against his Brother; and that he excused himself by saying, That to accuse a mur'der'd innocent Person would be a second Parricide. But Spartianus in his Life of Caracalla, (1) denies this Account, because he says, Papinian could not, as being Præfēt, make any such Oration (tho' it doth not appear why it might not have been extraordinarily commanded him) and only adds, that it was certain he was put to Death, for being a Favourer of Geta. However this be, that Man is certainly in the right, who refuses to prostitute Wit and Parts to defend Wickedness, tho' the Defence be publish'd afterwards in another's Name. For the Invention of Specious

(a) Vid. Diod. Siculum. l. 25. in excerpt. Peirescianis. Vid. Laonic Chalcondyl. l. 1. where Amurath Emperor of the Turks, commanded that the Parents of all those who had been in the Insurrection with Sauzes, should kill their Sons with their own Hands. There were two Fathers that would not obey so cruel a Command, and were therefore cut to pieces at the same time with their Sons. For Amurath used to say, That the Sons would not have join'd with Sauzes, without the Advice of their Parents.

(b) Abr. Rogerius, in his Account of the Bramins, saith, That the Bramins believe that the Wife may do any thing, tho' never so bad, which the Husband commands her, without Sin; for the Sin, they say, cannot be imputed to her, but is to be charg'd upon the Husband, whom she is oblig'd to obey.

(c) Josephus de Bello Judaic. l. 4. c. 19.

(d) Tacit. Hist. 4. c. 8.

(e) Tacit. Hist. 4. c. 42.

(f) Tacit. Hist. l. 4. c. 42.

(g) Suetonius, Titus c. 8. Plin. Pan. 34. 35.

(h) Tacit. An. i. 3. c. 16.

(1) Chap. 9.

Arguments set off with the Art and Dexterity of an Eloquent Speaker, can never be supposed to be barely the Execution of another Man's Action. In this particular Case, the Thing would have appear'd otherwise indeed, if Caracalla had only commanded some Person to have recited such an Oration in the Senate, as a Piece of his own, or some other Man's Composure, under a Capital Penalty, if he refus'd it (a). But still it must be remember'd, that where the Actions of Princes do not plainly appear to be Unjust, Subjects ought to be very Cautious, and especially Publick Ministers, how they give them an ill Character; because it is their Duty, always to presume for the Justice of their Master (b).

VIII. Upon the same grounds we may determine, whether a Subject may lawfully bear Arms in an Unjust War, at the Command of his Prince. Gratius, L. 2. Cap. 16. §. 3, 4. is of Opinion, that when it manifestly appears that the War is Unjust, it is not lawful for a Subject to maintain so bad a Cause: and that when the Case is doubtful, he ought to take the safest side, which is to sit still, and not engage himself at all in the War. But I think, a Man ought to be very cautious, how he resolves in such a manner, about Things of such Consequence as these. When according to this Opinion, the Power of the Civil Sovereign, and the Obedience of the Subject, in a Case of so great Importance, are made to depend upon every particular Man's Judgment; and when, especially, it would be easy for a Man to pretend scruple of Conscience, only to disguise his Fears and Cowardise (1). 'Tis true, where a Man is admitted to the Counsels and Debates, and hath a Right to give his Voice in them, if he is not obliged by the Determination of the Majority, without his own Consent, He cannot with Justice, so much as undertake any thing he doubts of only; and much less any thing manifestly Unjust. Which will hold true too, if it be left to his Choice, whether he will take Arms or not: But if he should be commanded simply to Obey, in this Case it must be consider'd that all Nations, acted by any Sense of Justice or Honour, before they engage in a War, always suppose, that the Cause of it is Just; and where They do not, it is to no purpose to talk of Conscience. But the Point in dispute, turns chiefly upon this, Whether in regard of certain particular Circumstances, it be convenient for the Government to begin a War, notwithstanding the truth of such a Pretence. In this Case, the Person particularly intrusted with the Government, of the Common-wealth, entirely acquainted with its Strength, must be presumed to see better what will be for the Advantage of the Publick, than any private Man can. And if a Man, admitting the Justice of the Cause, should yet doubt whether it might not be better to neglect, or forgive, the Injury done the Common-wealth, than Revenge it with a War; it must be told him, that this is by no means a sufficient Reason, for a Subject to refuse to obey his Sovereign, and provoke him to use Severity upon him, that he supposeth his Sovereign, hath not observed a certain Vertue, which hath only the Force of an Imperfect Obligation. And therefore the safest Method a Subject can take, is simply to obey, and leave his Sovereign to answer for the Justice of the War before GOD (c). But yet it must be observ'd, that what hath been said, affects only Subjects who take Arms at the Command of their Sovereign. For They that voluntarily put themselves into the Service of a Foreign Prince, ought by all means to be sure of the Justice of the Cause they engage in. And therefore the sensible part of the World will always justly condemn Those that set their Lives out to hire, without any manner of Consideration of the Cause they fight for (d).

(a) There are several Passages in Plato's Defence of Socrates, which might be applied this way: And to this we may refer the Account Dio Cassius gives of Sallust. l. 43. who he says was made Prefect of Numidia by Caesar, upon Pretence of his taking the Administration of that Province, but in reality only that he might squeeze all that he could from it. But after he was come Home he was accus'd of Extortion and Corruption, and of several Oppressions in the Province; and so was look'd upon to be more particularly Infamous, because having wrote an History, where he very frequently, and very severely reflects upon such as made their Fortunes by publick Rapine in their Governments, he himself had not made his Actions agreeable to his Writings, and therefore tho' he was acquitted by Caesar, yet he sufficiently publish'd his Crimes, by the lively Character he had drawn of them, in his own Writings. (b) See the Solacism in Politicks, Aligrius Chancellor of France was guilty of. Gramond. Hist. of France, l. 16. (1) See our Author's Dissertation De Obligations erga Patriam. l. 19.

(c) Hector in Homer saith very well, Iliad. 12. v. 243.

Ἦτε δ' ἄραδ' αἰσῶν ἀμύραδ' αἰσῶν ἄραδ' αἰσῶν.

In Tacitus Hist. L. 3. c. 25. it is call'd a publick Crime, when a Son had kill'd his Father in the Fight. Vid. L. 9. t. 4. l. 2. f. 1. D. de noxal. act. L. 9. r. 2. l. 37. D. Ad L. Aquilianam. (d) Gunther. Ligurinum, l. 7.

*Ære dato conducta cohors, & bellica Miles,
Dona sequens, pretioq; suum mutare favorem
Suetus, & accepto pariter eum munere bello, Hunc habuisse, dator pretii quem jufferit, hostem.*

Lured to the Field by Pay, and hopes of Spoil,
In servile Arms the Mercenaries toil;
Inconstant, False, and Faithless to their Trust;
The Cause that is most Gainful seems most Just:
He that first hires, Commands them to the Wars,
And those he calls his Enemies are theirs.

C H A P. II.

Of the Power of the Sovereign, over the Lives of the Subject, in Defence of the Common-wealth.

I. Tho' the End Men propos'd to themselves, by entering into Civil Societies, was, to provide, not only for the Security of their Estates, but more especially of their Lives; yet it was found necessary to the Preservation of Civil Government, that the Sovereign should have some Power over the Lives of his Subjects; and that for these two Ends. First, To guard the Common-wealth from Evils and Dangers; and Secondly, To suppress Disobedience to the Laws. By the First, The Sovereign hath Power to hazard the Lives of his Subjects in Defence of the Common-wealth, and to assert the Rights that belong to it; since in War Men always propose to take away one another's Lives. And since the Art of War it self is not to be learn'd without Experience, it was Plato's Opinion (1); that the Lives of the Subjects might be expos'd to some Danger for the Attainment only of the Military Accomplishments, (tho' I confess I am not of his mind) and accordingly he proposes that the Weapons us'd in all Military Exercises, should differ little from the real and dangerous ones, such as might strike some Apprehensions of Fear into the Persons that us'd them; and he afterwards adds a Law, That if any Man happened to be kill'd in those Exercises, that the Person who kill'd him should be acquitted by the Law, and be look'd upon as innocent. For, saith he, the Legislator ought to consider, that tho' perhaps he may lose some few of his Subjects by this Method, yet that the rest will suffer nothing by it; but that if there were no Apprehensions of Danger in these Exercises, there will be no way to distinguish between the Brave, and the Coward; and the want of such a Distinction would certainly be of worse Consequence to the Common-wealth, than the other Evil. And such Military Exercises we are told are now in use in Japan (a). Demosthenes mentions an Athenian Law (b), by which if a Man kill'd another accidentally in any Exercise, he was not to be banish'd: 'The reason of which was, saith he, because Law doth not consider the Event, but the Intention of the Person, which was only to overcome his Adversary, not to kill him: but if his Adversary was too weak to bear the Fatigue a Victor must expect, the Law thinks him the Cause of the Misfortune which befalls him. And indeed there is very good Reason that even the Exercise in Military Duties, should be under a severe Discipline, since in War the Fate of things may frequently turn upon a very small Neglect. And therefore tho' Civil Courts are sometimes easily induced to make Allowance for those Passions, that have generally a violent Influence upon us, yet a Court Martial hardly will ever afford them any Favour. And hence Military Judicature makes it Capital to desert the Post a Man is commanded to, tho' perhaps to avoid present Death (c). (Though some have thought the Shame of some ignominious Punishment might be a better Expedient to prevent Cowardise.) And therefore to refuse to List into the Military Service, hath in some Nations been severely punished (d). There was a Law at Sparta, which made it Death for any Man to refuse to hazard himself for his Country; so that as the Orator speaks upon it, 'The Occasion of their Fear was made their Punishment; and there being two such Extremities in view, there would be hardly any Man who would not sooner venture the loss of Life among Enemies, than suffer it to be taken away by the Laws in his own Country (e). 'Tis true there are few Nations in which there are not Numbers of Subjects by their Years and Strength of Body fit to bear Arms, who have nevertheless Immunities from that Service granted them, either out of Respect to their way of Life, or upon some particular Indulgence of the State; but it must be understood that all such Privileges are to continue no longer in force, than while there are other Subjects enough, or else Allies, or hired Forces in readiness to defend the Common-wealth: In Cases of the last Extremity, They must be superseded; and they that enjoy them must Arm, as well as others, in the common Defence. For certainly it is more reasonable that such Privileges should be laid aside for a time, than that by an unseasonable Superstition for them, the whole Common-wealth should be ruin'd. And therefore at Rome, all Exemptions from Military Service, allowed to the Old, and the Priests, always ceased upon Expectation of a Gallick Invasion (f). It should too be observ'd as was a wise and good Institution made by Solon or Pisistratus, (which is mentioned by Plutarch in the Life of Solon (2),) That such as were dis- abled in the Wars should be allowed Pensions out of the Publick Treasure. And indeed if the State of the Common-wealth will permit, there is all the Reason in the World that They should have some Consideration made them who are upon hard Duty, while others sit at ease, and are not only forced to neglect the Concerns of their Families, but to undertake a larger share of Service for the Publick than other Subjects (a).

(1) De Leg. l. 8 p. 907. A. B. Ed. Wech. (a) Vid. Bern. Varen. Deser. Japon. c. 19. (b) Orat. adv. Aristocrat. (c) Vid. Liv. l. 5. c. 6. Fustuarium moratur, qui signa reliquit aut presidio decedit. He deserves the Bastinado that flies from his Colours, or deserts the Post he was commanded to. Mich. Montaigne's Essays, l. 3. c. 12. p. 775. Justin. l. 32. c. 3. in fin. Ferdinandus Pinto, c. 10. (d) Lycurgus Orat. contra Leocrat. (e) Vid. Leg. Longobardorum, l. 3. Tit. 13. s. 1. (f) Appianus de Bello Civili, l. 2. p. 523. Ed. H. Steph. Vid. L. 10. t. 48. l. ult. C. de quibus muneribus. Nem. lic. se excusare. Andræas Maurocenus Hist. Venet. l. 4. p. 147. (2) Pag. 96. C.

II. And here it may be enquired, whether, if a Man detain'd Prisoner by an Enemy, to obtain his Freedom, promiseth that he will never for the future bear Arms against him, his own Country can afterwards oblige him, contrary to his Promise, to draw his Sword against the same Enemy? Some, I know, suppose, that such a Compact in it self, is void, because it is contrary to the Duty every Subject owes the Common-wealth: But, I should not think it so sufficient an Answer, to say that every thing contrary to Duty is therefore immediately Void and Null; as to deny that it is contrary to the Duty a Subject owes the Common-wealth, to procure himself Liberty, by promising that which is already in the Enemies Power. For except the Enemy give the Captive his Liberty, he can never bear Arms against him. And therefore the Common-wealth loseth nothing by such a Compact; for unless the Captive recover his Freedom, he must be considered as lost already. And therefore when the Common-wealth receives him again from his Captivity, it is suppos'd to receive him upon such Terms, as leave him Power to keep his Promise with his Enemy, especially if he gain'd his Liberty by his own Interest only, without any Publick Assistance from the Common-wealth. But cannot the Transcendental Power of the Sovereign rescind such an Obligation, when the common Safety requires it; as suppose the Common-wealth be in eminent Danger, except he in particular take Arms? In this Case, I think, that since it is next to a Contradiction for me to be a Subject, and yet to be under an Obligation which must make me unserviceable to the Common-wealth in the greatest publick Extremities; no less absurd is it for me to imagine it possible, that I should be obliged by a simple Compact, not to resist the unjust Violences of a Person, that attempts the Ruine of my self and all that belongs to me: therefore the Force of such a Compact extends to the Offensive only, and not the Defensive Wars; especially if the hazard of the Common-Safety of the Whole State be like to endanger mine too. For to what purpose did my Enemy grant me my Liberty, if he intended to tie me up so that I should have no power left me to make any opposition against him, if he should ever after, design any thing against my Life and Fortunes. And therefore such a Compact is no Objection against my taking Arms at my Sovereign's Command in Defence of the Common-wealth. It is a Question something like this, Whether a Captive that hath his Freedom given him by his Enemy upon a certain Condition, upon Non-performance of it, be obliged to return to his Captivity? And it is affirmed of Private Persons: But Bussieres Hist. Franc. l. 16. speaking of King Francis, doubts whether it may be so of Sovereign Princes. I shall not determine the Controversy: But I think it would be the safest and wisest way, not to let a Captive Prince have his Liberty, before the Conditions of it are actually performed.

III. From what hath been said it follows, That tho' the Necessities of the Commonwealth do not at present require Military Service from the Subject, yet that it is a Crime which ought to be severely punished; for a Man to make himself or others unfit for that Service; For tho' other parts of my Body, as Seneca saith (b), are my own, yet my hands belong to the Publick. Instances of this sort of Cowardice are frequent to be found even among that Martial People, the Romans themselves. Suetonius tells us the reason why Tiberius reform'd the Houses of Correction in Italy, was, because the Keepers of them were suspected, not only to have often taken up Travellers, but to have conceal'd Persons that fled to such Holes for fear of being impress'd Souldiers (c). And This might perhaps be the reason why the Emperour Hadrian afterwards suppress'd all those Houses (d). C. Vettienus was Known to have cut off the Fingers of his left Hand, that he might be excused from serving in the Italian War: and his Goods were confiscated for it by the Senate, and himself condemned to perpetual Imprisonment. And Augustus expos'd a Roman Knight, with all his Estate to Sale, for cutting off his two young Sons Thumbs, that they might not be forced into the Wars (e). And therefore Ammianus Marcellinus, speaking of the Dispositions and Manners of the Gauls, saith, That none of them ever cut off their Thumbs, to make themselves incapable of Military Duties, as the Italians had done. And accordingly there were several Laws made among the Romans, to restrain such practices. Trajan made a Law, That the Person who disabled his Son, when any Levy was made for War, so that he could not be fit for Military Service, should be banished (f). And there is another of Constantine's, extant to this purpose. That the Sons of Veteran Souldiers fit for the Service of the War (some of which have refused to list themselves out of Sloth and Laziness, and others have been so cowardly as to maim themselves, only to avoid the necessity of that Duty) if they are thought incapable to serve in the Army, shall be forced to attend the most servile Offices about the Court (g). He that thinks to excuse himself from bearing Arms, by cutting off his own Fingers, shall not

(a) Vid. Diodorum Siculum, l. 1. c. 73. where he gives an Account of the Egyptian Laws relating to the Souldiery.
 (b) Seneca, l. 1. Controv. 7. (c) Suetonius, Tiberi. c. 8. (d) Spartianus, c. 18. Vide Not. Salmas. in loc. Faler. Mex. l. 6. c. 3. (e) Suetonius, August. c. 24. Am. Marcellinus, l. 15. sub fin. (f) L. 49. t. 16. l. 4. f. 12. D. de Re Militari. (g) V. Theod. de fil. militar. apparitor. & veteran. l. 1. Et de Tironibus, l. 4. 10 escape what he designed to avoid by it, but shall with that Mark of Infamy be forced to undergo the Drudgery of the Service, since he refused the Honour of it. And further, Those Provincial Subjects that by such Practices are forced to make their Levies weaker, shall be allowed so much favour as to bring two Maim'd Persons for one whole. But the severest Law is that in D. ubi supra, l. 5. de Re Mil. If there be any Person that to avoid being Imprest for the War, bath, as he thinks secured his Body from danger, by cutting off his Fingers; he shall be condemn'd to be burnt, and the Master that doth not hinder him, shall incur a severe Penalty. But it is probable that this Punishment was to be inflicted only on Slaves, but the Laws before mention'd comprehended the Freemen. For it is very well known, that the Romans would not at first permit their Slaves to bear Arms, but in Cases of the greatest Extremity. Tho' it is manifest That this was not observ'd in the latter End of the Empire as appears from l. 16. C. Theodos. Tit. eod. where there is this Law of the Emperors, Arcadius and Honorius: Against the Irruptions of the Enemy we command, that not only the Persons, but their Abilities shall be regarded; and tho' we believe, that Freemen may be moved with a more generous Concern for their Country, yet by the Authority of this Edict, We command the Slaves also to List themselves with all speed for the War, and if they are found to be fit for the Service, they shall be rewarded with their Liberty, &c. For that Law in the Eleventh Book under the same Title, which is also extant in the Twelfth Book of the Codes of Justinian, Tit. 49. l. 2. speaks of Slaves that were alieni juris, belong'd to other Men, that the Person that offer'd to send them to the Wars, should be forced to pay a Libra of Gold into the Treasury. But the Eighth Law in the Theodosian Code under the same Title, doth not simply forbid the levying of Slaves for Souldiers, but only commands that no Slaves should be taken into the choice Companies. And † Vegetius complains that either by the Favour or Connivance of the Officers the new listed Men all pass'd the Muster, and that such as were not fit for their Master's Service, were taken to serve the Publick. But some will have it, that the Italians and French derive their word Poltrones from this cutting off the Thumbs: But I am inclin'd to think Menage is more in the right (a), in deriving it from the Italian word Poltro, which signifies one that always lyes at home upon his Couch.

IV. A Man therefore that is obliged to attend the War, is bound to defend the Post his Commander appoints him to, tho' perhaps he foresees he must in all probability lose his Life in it. And tho' in the general, all Burdens ought to be laid proportionably on the Subjects, so that they may assist one another in the bearing them; or where that cannot be, or there is no necessity of it, that they may relieve one another by Turns, or else excuse themselves by an Equivalent another way, or else appoint every one his share by Lot, yet the Nature of War will not permit, that those dangerous Posts should always be appointed by Lot. And therefore it must be left to the Commander to choose the Persons he thinks fittest, or if there be any Number fit, which of them he pleaseth. Unless there be any that will Voluntarily undertake the danger, as Calpurnius Flaccus did (b), and before him Decius Mus (c). And no Man of Bravery or Spirit will ever complain that he is commanded upon such Duty, but will rather Commend his General's Judgment and Conduct in it (d). And besides, since 'tis by the Protection of the Common-wealth that we enjoy our Lives for a long space of time, which, if we had been exposed to a State of Nature, we should soon have been deprived of; we must not think it a Severe piece of Duty to part with them in defence of the Common-wealth, especially since we are so many other ways indebted to it. And therefore it is not at all unjust, that upon an extraordinary Command of the Common-wealth, and in its greatest extremities, we should hazard that Life in its Defence, which it doth in effect bestow upon us every day; and especially, since in a State of Nature every Man must be forced to defend himself with his own single Strength, unless he will choose to die, or be enslaved. But now in Common-wealths it is much better to hazard our selves with a Number, not only because the hopes of Victory are greater, but because, tho' a Man be kill'd in the fight, yet by the protection of the Common-wealth his Goods and Fortunes will be preserv'd for his Relations; which in a State of Nature there could be no hopes of. But however, it ought to be observ'd, that the Design of such Commands is not, or at least ought not to be, to take away the Lives of the Souldiers directly: I say, ought not to be; for we have an Instance in David, that Generals are sometimes guilty of such Crimes, 2 Sam. XI. 15. and he is therefore call'd a Murderer, Ch. XII. v. 9. And it is not uncommon to expose such as are less beloved where they must inevitably be cut off by the Enemy (e), as Micipsa sent Jugurtha to Numantia, that either his own Valour or the Enemies might be fatal to him. But the Design of such severe Commands, ought to be either to avert some great Evil, or to procure some great Good to the Common-wealth, and then the Souldiers may justly be engaged in such hard Parts of Duty; tho' it may happen, that they may fall in the Enterprize. For the † Vegetius de Re Militari, l. 1. c. 7. (a) In Origin. Ling. Franc. (b) Flor. l. 2. c. 2. (c) Liv. l. 7. c. 34. (d) Seneca de Provid. c. 4. 'Why are the Bravest Men in the Army commanded upon the most difficult Enterprizes? It is the Choice of the Troops that the General sends out to Surprize the Enemy by Night, to observe their Motions, or to force a Party to dislodge them; and yet none of them that are sent, complain that their Commander deals hardly with them, &c. (e) Vide Q. Curtium, l. 7 c. 2. Polyb. l. 1. c. 9. Died. Siculum, l. 14. c. 83. Et l. 19. c. 48. Justinum, l. 12. c. 5; n. 8. Zonar. T. 2. in Mauris, Sallust. B. Jugurth.

Conditions of a decisive Combat are either, kill your Enemy, or die with him: For this is better than to fall alone. And therefore I think those Commanders at Sea may justly be quitted from the Guilt of Self-Murder, or that upon the exprefs Order of their Superiors, or at least upon a Presumption of it, from the State of the Engagement, blow themselves up with their Ship, rather than be made a Prize to the Enemies. For let us suppose the Number of Ships equal on both sides; when one of ours is taken, the Enemy hath an Advantage of two Ships more than We: if ours only be lost, then they have but one more; but if both sink together, the Strength on both sides will still be equal. And 'tis scarce possible if our Ship be blown up, but it must ruine one or more of the Enemies with it. For the greatest Danger of being taken, is when the Ships are Grappling, side by side; and generally the Enemy must suffer more than we by such an Act; For 'tis evident, they must have much the Advantage of us, when they force us to fly to so desperate an Expedient. But to blow up only to avoid being sunk, is I think a very ill Choice; because a Man may have some Hopes of escaping by swimming (a). It was an old Law among the Chinese, That the General should forfeit his head, that had the Misfortune to succeed ill in the Fight, tho' not through his own Fault, by which they design'd to oblige their Commanders, whenever they engaged an Enemy, to think of nothing but Victory, or Death (1).

V. But what if the Life of a Subject be demanded without the Hazard of a Fight; for Instance, to appease a powerful Neighbour, and in consequence to divert some imminent Evil, or perhaps prevent the Ruine of the Common-wealth? In such a Case, it must be consider'd, what Reasons such a Neighbour may have to demand the Subject to be yielded up to him. If it be for any Crime he hath been guilty of, tho' perhaps there may be some easy way, or other, for him to escape, yet he ought to be particularly cautious how he exposes the Common-wealth to Danger upon his Account. And therefore though we may suppose, that a Man under such Circumstances is not obliged to deliver himself up to his Enemy; yet he is bound to dispose of himself so as to bring no Inconveniencies upon them that give him Reception. And I make no doubt but his own Country and Common-wealth may for that reason eject him against his Consent: For perhaps it may be thought less Cruelty, to do so, than to surrender him up. But it may be supposed that the Lives of certain Subjects may be demanded for some publick Crime of which those particular Persons are wholly Innocent. Such a kind of Calamity is related to have befallen the State of Athens for the Death of Androgeos: In Revenge of which Minos, after he had subdued the Athenians, demanded of them by way of Tribute, Seven Young Men, and as many Young Women, to be devour'd by the Minotaur (b). And in a Case like this, I do not see how any Subject can refuse to take the Chance which falls to his Lot, (which is the fairest way of Decision between Equals) unless there be a Theseus found who will voluntarily undertake to conquer the Monster. But the Difficulty will be greater, if we suppose the Life of an innocent Person to be demanded, or some other Evil threatned him as great as Death, without any pretence of publick Guilt, or private Crime. We have an Instance of such a Case in Libanius, Tit. 1. Decl. 27. where a Tyrant demands a certain beautiful young Man of a Neighbouring City, threatning War if he was denied. The City chooseth to hazard a War rather than deliver him up. But when It was closely besieged by the Tyrant, the Father of the young Man kills his Son and throws him over the Wall; and afterwards when the Siege was rais'd, he is accused of Murder (c). I shall not here either accuse, or defend the Father: he might possibly make a better Defence for himself than Virginus did in Livy, L. 3. c. 50. however, I think it is past dispute, that the Common-wealth is not obliged to protect such a Person to its own Ruine: For so the Common-wealth must be destroy'd, and the innocent Person be far from being secured by it. Neither can any Man desire that the whole Common-wealth should perish with him, and upon his Account. The only Refuge such an unhappy Person can take, must be either to provide for himself if he can, by flight; or else by attempting some bold and dangerous Enterprise. When all fails, he must submit to unavoidable Misfortune, in which it may be possible at least for him to preserve his Mind innocent (d); since it is utterly unlawful for a Man to destroy himself to avoid the most injurious Usage. And the Common-wealth, after it hath defended such an unfortunate Person to the utmost of its power, and endeavour'd as far as possible to assist his Escape some way or other; and all proves to no purpose, and imminent Ruine cannot be well otherwise avoided; may at the last forsake him; that is, not hinder his Enemy from taking him: For it is a cheap Peace that can be bought with the loss but of one Subject. But that the Common-wealth should deliver him up to his Enemy, or force him to surrender himself, is, I think, neither lawful or necessary. We have an Example of this Nature in Megacles of Messana, Marselaer Legat. l. 1. c. 33. and of something greater in the Story of Sperthias

(a) Lucan, l. 3. v. 706, 707.Non perdere letum
Maxima cura fuit.Whose greatest Care
Was not to be depriv'd of Death.(1) See our Author's Abridgm. De Offic. Hom. & Civ. l. 2. c. 13. f. 2. (b) Vid. Virg. Æn. VI. 20. Hygin. Fab. 41. Orid. Met. VIII. 170. Plut. Theseus. (c) Vid. Boecler in Grot. l. 1. c. 1. s. 6. p. m. 95. (d) Vid. L. 3. c. 1. l. 1. f. G. D. de Pestulando.

and Bulis, who voluntarily surrender'd themselves up to Xerxes to satisfy him for the Injury the Lacedemonians did him in killing his Ambassadors (a). But however the Commonwealth ought to set a greater Value upon the Lives of the Subjects, than to squander them away profusely upon the Fear of uncertain Danger, or upon prospect of unnecessary Good; neither is any Subject obliged to sacrifice himself upon such Occasions. And therefore the two Brothers, the Philani, did more for their Country than could have been desired of them (b). And Caiaphas made a very ill Application of what was otherwise a good Saying, John XI. 50. implying that it was lawful to take away an innocent Person's Life, that the Romans might not be jealous of any Revolt among the Jews, and so take an Occasion to bring a War upon them; especially since it would have been easy to have prevented such Suspicions by Measures much gentler than that of the Death of an innocent Man. And I do not see how the Action of Darius was excusable, when he threw away so many thousand Lives only to gain Zopyrus Credit among the Babylonians (c).

VI. It is also often necessary, that for the Ratification of publick Compacts, some of the Subjects be given for Hostages (1). And the Civil Power may force them to undertake this Duty, when there are none that offer themselves voluntarily. And if any over-powerful Enemy demand certain particular Subjects for Hostages, they cannot, I think, upon any pretence refuse. But where there is any Number of Persons proper to be given for Hostages, and it is indifferent to the Party we make the Agreement with, or our selves which of them be given to take away all Occasion of Complaint, or Suspicion of Partiality; the proper Method will be to determine the Matter by Lot. And if the Hostages are to be detain'd for any long time, it will be reasonable to relieve the first, by sending new in their places. As also to take Care, that the extraordinary Service the Hostages undertake, more than other Subjects shall be compensated to them some other way. And here it may be enquired, Whether the Lives or only the Liberties of Hostages are engaged? And, I think, it sufficiently appears, by giving up the Hostages, that thus much is actually done and intended: 'We deliver these Persons into your hands as a part of the Commonwealth we particularly value, and if we break the Articles of Compact, we leave it entirely to your Mercy to do with them what you think fit. Thus the City of Liege gave Hostages to Charles Duke of Burgundy, upon Condition, That if they did any thing contrary to the Agreement, he might freely give himself Satisfaction upon the Hostages; tho' the Duke afterwards dismiss'd them (d). And therefore since the Breach of Compacts of this Nature is a just Reason for levying War against the Party which is Guilty of it; it is manifest, that after such Breach of Compact, and after the War is begun, that the Hostages themselves may be look'd upon to be Enemies, in the same manner, as all the Subjects of that Commonwealth, comprehending such as were no way accessory to the Occasion of the War. And 'tis certain that Hostages have often suffer'd in the same manner as profess'd Enemies. Tho' on the other hand there have been many others, who have thought it barbarous and inhuman, to revenge the Injuries others have done, with the Deaths of innocent and unhappy Persons (2). And it is certainly false to say, that the Hostages are given with Intention that they should suffer Punishment for the Compacts violated by the Commonwealth. For I cannot see how the End Men ought to propose to themselves from punishing, can possibly be obtain'd by the Punishment of an innocent Hostage, who did not properly consent to the Violation of the Compacts, but only did not refuse to suffer Evil in another's stead, which in it self is no Crime. And the Hostages will notwithstanding be a sufficient Caution, tho' by the Law of Nature they cannot properly be punished for another's Default: For it is enough that they are in such a State as leaves them at any time expos'd to the Liberties of War, and that their Security depends solely upon the pleasure of an injured and angry Enemy. But however, the Truth is, the Commonwealth directly engageth only the corporal Liberty, and not the Lives of its Hostages; because it firmly resolves, (or at least ought to do so,) to observe its Faith; and therefore morally supposeth no such Case by which it shall give the other Power over the Life of the Hostage. And without dispute, the Commonwealth offers great Injury to the Hostages, either by unjustly breaking Compacts, and exposing them to the Mercy of the Enemy; or by giving them up, only with a Design to betray him into Security, and so make the greater Advantages upon him. But on the other hand, let us suppose the Party that receives the Hostages may take Advantage from thence, either to employ them in some secret Treachery against us, or to provoke us with open Injuries, threatening Death to them, if we resist him: In such a Case, it must be thought reasonable that, if the Injuries are so great, as to make it more supportable, to hazard the Lives of innocent Hostages, rather than the Commonwealth should suffer them, we may very justly neglect the Consideration of their Danger, and make all the Strength we can to resist the Enemy. And the Commonwealth, in such a Case, doth no greater Injury to the Hostage, than it doth when in War; it appoints particular Subjects to certain Posts, in a brave Defence of which, They must either Dye or be made Prisoners. And the Hostages

(a) Herodot. Polymn. Grof. 1. 2. c. 25. f. 3.

(b) Vid. Sallust. de Bello Jugurth. Pomp. Mela. 1. 1. c. 7.

(c) Herodot. Thalia, in fin.

(1) See hereafter in C. 8. f. 6. and Grof. 1. 3. c. 20. f. 52. &amp;c.

(d) Phil. de Comines, 1. 2.

(2) V. Grof. 1. 3. c. 11. f. 18.

ought patiently to submit to such fatal, unavoidable Misfortunes, and not be dissatisfied with their Country, since it could not be supposed to foresee so unexpected a Case (a). Neither ought we upon this Account to set the less Value upon a Civil State, since such extraordinary Cases seldom happen in it: when in a State of Nature, it is impossible but such Inconveniencies must be very frequent. And this Reasoning must determine the Case that happen'd to the People of Utica; some of the Subjects of which City, Agathocles intercepted, and tied them in certain Engines which he placed in the Front of the Battle, that so their Fellow-Subjects might be under a Necessity of killing them, whenever they attempted to beat him back (b).

(a) V. Ammian. Marcellinum, l. 28. c. 6. (b) V. Diod. Sicul. l. 20. c. 55. Gunther. Ligurinum, l. 10. Grot. l. 3. c. 20. f. 52, &c. Bæcler. in Grot. l. 1. c. 1. p. m. 102.

CHAP. III.

Of the Power of the Sovereign, over the Lives and Fortunes of the Subject, in Criminal Cases.

I. THE Civil Sovereign hath also a Power over the Bodies, and Lives, as well as Fortunes of the Subjects, in criminal Cases, which is usually call'd in short, The Power of Life and Death, (a Power manifestly different from that which God hath over his Creatures, Psal. 90. 3. or that of Men over Beasts.) And the first Dispute that riseth upon this Subject, is, How such a Power could by Compact, from particular Men, be transfer'd to the Common-wealth? For since Punishment is an Evil inflicted against the Consent of the Party punished, and that which a Man inflicts upon himself, cannot be said to befall him against his Consent; it will be some Difficulty to account, how a Man can have a power to punish himself, and consequently be in a Capacity to transfer such a power to another. For the Severities of the Monastick Life, and the Pains Men inflict upon themselves by Ecclesiastical Discipline, are either no Punishments properly speaking, but are rather applied by way of Physick to suppress the Force of Lust, or else are wholly involuntary and imposed by the Priests upon the Pretensions of the Divine Authority of their Office. And therefore it makes no Alteration in the Nature of the Punishment, that the Stripes are inflicted with their own hands, because the Fear of a greater Evil threatned to the Disobedient, forces them to execute that Rigour upon themselves: as we see Malefactors go to the place of Execution, who would be drag'd thither if they refused. So it is the Cultom in some Nations for the Condemn'd Criminals to dispatch themselves (a). And therefore as to the matter in Dispute, it will be easie to conceive, that as in Natural Bodies, the Mixture and Temperament of several Simple forms a Compound, in which we often perceive such Qualities as cannot be found in any of the Ingredients that compose the Mixture: So Bodies Politick which are compounded of a number of Men, may have a Right resulting from such a Composition, which no one of the particulars was formally possess'd of; which Right, derived from the Union, is lodged in the Governours of such Bodies (b). Thus it never was pretended, that every particular Man hath a power to make Laws for himself, and yet when every Man submits his Will to one, 'tis confess'd there commences a power to prescribe Laws to all. After the same manner the Head of a Body Politick may have a power to inflict Punishments on the particular Members, though the Members had no such power before themselves. And this will be easy to account for, since every particular Man obligeth himself not only not to defend the Person that is to be punished, but if need be, to assist the Sovereign as far as he is able, against him (c) (1). And from hence the Reason is evident, why it does not follow, (as some suppose) that whatever the Sovereign takes away from the Subjects by way of Punishment, is done by their Consent, because they at first consented to allow of, and confirm every Action of the Sovereign: because, since that particular Case which gives the Sovereign a power over the Life of the Subject, is left entirely in the power of the Subject himself, so as he may for ever prevent it if he pleases; therefore such a Case is never consider'd by particular Men as ever like to happen. Hobbes indeed in the Beginning of his Leviathan, c. 28. asserts, That the Right the Common-wealth has to punish, is not grounded on any Concession, or Gift of the Subjects, but that the Foundation of that Right is built upon that other, which before the Institution of Common-wealths, every Man had to every thing, and to do whatever he thought necessary to his own Preservation. And therefore that that Right was not given, but left to the Common-wealth; which, yet since it has power sufficient, it may make use of, as it pleases, to the Security of the Subject.

(a) Diod. Siculus, l. 3. c. 5. speaking of the Ethiopians says, One of the Officers is sent to the Criminal to carry him the Signal of Death, upon the Sight of which he goes home and kills himself. (b) L. 41. t. 3. l. 46. D. de acquir. rer. domin. (c) Conf. Hobbes de Cive, c. 2. f. 18. (1) See above in B. 3. c. 7. f. 5.

To which it may be answer'd, That the Right of Punishing is different from the Right of Self-preservation: and by the Exercise of it upon Subjects, we can never understand what a State of Nature allowed where there is Subjection. But I must further add, That the Punishments I here speak of, are such only as Human Legislators arbitrarily prescribe against Offenders, and as are distinguish'd from those Evils which are the natural Consequences of Sin.

II. But in treating of the Right of punishing the Subjects, I will premise that I intend to confine my self to that Right only which one Man exercises over another, without Regard to the Methods and Proceedings of Divine Justice, which it must be allowed is in many Cases of a Nature much different from human Judicature (a). To begin therefore as high as we can; It must be observed, that, in general, in almost every Sin, but especially in such as bear Relation to another Person, there are two things considerable; First, the Defect or Deviation from the Law; Secondly, the Harm or Damage another Person sustains, either directly or indirectly by it. And so far we may be certain, That every Man is obliged by the Law of Nature, to make Satisfaction for the Harm or Damage another suffers on his Account; and in Case it proceeded from malicious Design, to give Caution for his good Behaviour for the future. But there is a Difference indeed between such Caution, when it is to be given by Men that live in a Liberty of Nature, and them that are Subjects of a Common-wealth. The Law of Nature seems to oblige the First, to give no other Caution, than that after they have express'd a Concern for what they have, and voluntarily offer'd to compensate the Damage, they should either by simple Asseveration, or at farthest by Oath, oblige themselves to forbear the like Injuries for the future. For a voluntary Repentance is a sufficient Evidence of an Alteration of Mind, and that their Resolution to abstain from Violence for the future is sincere (1). And therefore if the injured Party refuses to accept of such an Accommodation, and is either so Diffident, or so Perverse as to endeavour to force upon them Articles of larger Extent; since the Others are not obliged by the Law of Nature to comply so far; the Blame of Breach of Peace must lie on his side, and the others may justly resist him. And in such Circumstances the Justice of the War must be determined for them that offer'd the Injury, and the Injustice will be on his side that receiv'd it. But when a Man will give no Satisfaction, unless he be forced to it, since from thence he sufficiently discovers the Obstinacy of his Temper; and when no Terms of Composition will be accepted, unless the Party injured has Strength enough to overpower the injurious; it must be left to the Pleasure of the Conqueror, to insist upon what Propositions he thinks most likely to secure his future Quiet. And when the Difference is grown to that height, the Conqueror may take the Liberty, not only to disarm his Enemy, to demolish and take Possession of fortified Places, to condemn him to perpetual Imprisonment, and the like; but may also put him to Death, upon sufficient Assurance, that if ever he recovers Liberty, he will renew his Outrages, and there can be no other effectual way found to prevent it. But then, as this Caution is demanded rather in a way of War, than Punishment properly so call'd; (though 'tis usual with some to call all manner of Evils, whether such as are the natural Consequents of Sin, or those that are inflicted in a Liberty of Nature for Injuries committed, by the Name of Punishments, in a more loose Sense of the Word) so it cannot properly be said that a Man is obliged to demand to it. Because it supposes and implies a sort of Blemish and Stain upon the Mind, and a Sin against the Law of Nature, in the Person 'tis extorted from, viz. his refusing to give a voluntary Satisfaction, and a violent Defence of his Fault. Nay, since the Evils that are the Effects, and Incidents of War, cannot properly be call'd Punishments; (as will sufficiently appear from what follows,) it is manifest, that Human Punishments in a strict Sense, or such as are derived from Human Authority, cannot affect them that live in a Liberty of Nature, though it cannot be denied, but that they too are subject to those Evils which flow by a Natural Connexion from Sin.

III. But in Common-wealths, if a Man suffer Harm or Damage, it is not only recovered with greater Ease, than in a State of Nature, by a War that must be supported by his own single Strength; but there is before hand as much Care taken, as the Nature of Human Affairs will permit, to prevent Injuries or Harm that be offer'd the Subject, by awarding Punishments to be inflicted by publick Justice on all Offenders against the Law. For since the Wills and Inclinations of Men are so easily Byass'd either to Good or Ill, it was certainly the most effectual Expedient that could have been pitch'd upon, to direct or restrain them, to set in View, the Dread of some present Evil.

IV. Punishment therefore, in general, may be thus defined; It is an Evil of Suffering, inflicted for an Evil of Doing. Or, It is some uneasy Evil inflicted by Authority, in a compulsive Way, upon View of antecedent Transgression (2). For though 'tis common to enjoin several sorts of Labour in lieu of Punishment; as suppose a Man be condemn'd to the Mines, to the Gallies, to the Work-house, to raise a Fortification, to

(a) And this, Plutarch seems in some measure to be sensible of, L. de Sera Num. vindict. p. 449. F. A Man can hardly conceive any thing of God with better Assurance, than that He is one that exactly knows the proper time for the Cure of Vice, that Punishment is the usual Remedy he applies to every Sin, which he does not always distribute in the same Proportion to all, or at the same time. (1) See above in B. 2. c. 5. f. 3. towards the End.

(2) V. Grot. L. 2. c. 20. f. 1.

cleanse the Common-Sewers, or the like; yet these are to be look'd upon only, as they are hardships, or servile laborious Employments, and cause an Uneasiness in the Person who is forced to submit to them; and therefore may be reduced to Sufferings. It is said therefore, That Punishment is inflicted upon view of antecedent Transgression; And hence it follows, that none of those Inconveniences a Man suffers by an infectious Distemper (1), by an infirm or maim'd Body (2), or by any Uncleanness (3), can properly be call'd Punishments. Many of this Nature are mention'd in the Jewish Law; As when the Lepers are commanded to be separated from the rest of the People; and when such as were maim'd or blemish'd in any Limb, were to be excluded the Priesthood, and the like (4); Which are no more Punishments, than it is for a Stranger, or a Person of mean Quality to be made incapable of certain Offices in the Common-wealth, or than it is for a Man to be in pain at the setting a broken Leg. Tho' sometimes such Misfortunes are improperly call'd Punishments, by the Resemblance they bear to the real. As we say in common Discourse of Persons extremely infirm, or miserably deform'd, that their Life is Punishment to them. And hence it also follows, that Imprisonment, the Design of which is only the safe Custody of the Party accused, is not properly Punishment, because no Man can be suppos'd to be justly punished, before he be judicially heard. And therefore whatsoever Hurt a Man suffers by Bonds or Restraint, before his Cause be heard, and he be declar'd Guilty, more than is necessary to secure his Person, is against the Law of Nature, and ought to have Satisfaction, or at least some Allowance made for it in the subsequent Punishment (a). I add, Inflicted by Authority, to distinguish Punishment from those Evils a Man suffers, either by War, particular Quarrels and Self-defence, or by private Malice. And therefore, there is no real Disgrace in losing an Ear, suffering the Blows of a Cudgel, or the like, but only in the Cause of it. 'Tis Selden's Opinion indeed (b), That the Slaughter and Spoils committed in War are a sort of Punishments; Which may be true enough in this Sense, that a just War, begun upon just Provocations, and the Calamities the injurious Party suffers by it, may be look'd upon as Natural Punishments, and that a Conscientious Warriour should endeavour to reduce the Outrages of War to the same Calmness and Proportion the Civil Court observes in inflicting Punishments. But 'tis evident, there are other Distinctions between the Evils of War, and Punishments; since as Tacitus observes, In time of Peace the Cause and Merits of the Person are always regarded, when in War the Sword makes no Difference between the Criminal and the Innocent. Neither does the Civil Court look upon those Evils to be Punishments that are only the Natural Consequents of Sin; as when a Man loses his health by committing any unlawful Act, or by assaulting another, is beat himself; for these are Evils not inflicted by the Authority of the civil Sovereign. And therefore if a Man by ill Courses happens to weaken his Constitution, impair his Estate, or lose the good Opinion of his Friends, from whom otherwise he might possibly have expected Favours; this does not make him the less liable to Punishment. And lastly, it was necessary to subjoin, that the Penalty was to be inflicted in a way of Compulsion, or by Force: Because otherwise it would be impossible to attain the End design'd by punishing; which is to deter Men from Offending by the Severity of the Punishment. And therefore some have not thought it proper to allow the Criminals the Choice of their own Punishment; Because, as the Declaimer says (c), 'It might seem to give Countenance to Vice; and because it would take off those Fears that are generally the strongest Guard upon Men's Innocence, to allow Delinquents to suffer what way they pleas'd. For, (as he reasons,) a Man allowed the Liberty before-hand to compose himself to an obstinate resolute Temper of Mind, may defie all our Racks and Tortures. 'Tis a Mistake to measure the Severity of the Punishment by the Terrour only of the Name of it, for there can be no Punishment but that which a Man suffers Unwillingly and with Regret. And there can be no Pain but that which our own Impatience gives us. 'Tis our Fears only that make Cruelty it self look terrible. How can we call that a Punishment which Men will meet half way, and which they are ready to demand? Condemned Criminals should be drag'd to Execution, and not left to go as they please. But after all, such a Choice does not always make the Punishment involuntary, but only perhaps mitigates the Degree, or alters the Manner of it; still the Punishment, whatever it be, that at last determines the Choice, is certainly involuntary and the Effect of Force (d). And therefore it may be further inferr'd, that it is an improper Expression to say, a Man is oblig'd to be punish'd, or that such a one owes a Punishment; because, Punishment signifies Harm inflicted against a Man's Consent, and implies an Aversion of the Will to it. But now it is always suppos'd, that what we are properly obliged to, we ought to be ready and willing to perform. And therefore the Reason is plain, why, for Instance, in working upon a Fortification, a Servant at the Command of his Master, without any particular Wages, and a Malefactor condemn'd to that Labour, may be employ'd in the same Service, and the Work be a Punishment to one, and not to the other; because the Servant undertakes it upon the Obligations gations he is under to his Master, and is therefore supposed to do it voluntarily; but it is imposed upon the other as a Task, which he cannot submit to, but with Unwillingness and Réluéctance (a). And when we are told that in some Countries, (as particularly in Japan) the Condemn'd Criminals are their own Executioners, we are not to look upon that as a voluntary Action, any more than that with us, they usually go to the place of Execution; or than that in Spain, the Executioner suffers his Prisoner to be unbound, and only commands him to follow him; or when (as it was the old Custom in Lithuania) the Malefactors are forced to erect their own Gibbets, and hang themselves. For these can never be supposed to be properly the Acts of the Criminals themselves, but to be only Compliances they submit to, in hopes of avoiding greater Evils that might be the Effects of the Refusal. Thus it was very particular when Gracchus in Livy (b), is said to have made some of his Souldiers, who had not behaved themselves with the same Bravery as the rest of his Army, take an Oath, That they would not eat or drink in any Posture but standing, as long as they should be in the Service. For as they could not refuse the Oath, so they thought they ought rather to bear the Disgrace than be perjured. But further, neither can a Man properly be said to be punished, who is bound for another, and is afterwards forced to pay the Bond. For the other Man's Misdemeanour is only the bare Occasion of his sustaining that Damage, but the Obligation which he voluntarily took upon himself, is the proper and immediate Cause of it. Moreover from what has been said it follows; That, as a Man is not oblig'd to inform against himself, that the Penalty the Law appoints may be put in Execution upon him, after he has made Satisfaction for the Damage or Harm he has done; so for the same Reason he may lawfully endeavour to escape from it, either by denying the Matter, concealing himself, or flying, without the Violation of any Obligation whatever (c).

(1) See Levit. Ch. 13. (2) See Deuteron. XXIII. 1. (3) See Levit. Ch. 15. (4) See Levit. XXI. 17, &c.

(a) V. D. l. 48. t. 19. De Panis, l. 8. f. 9. (b) De J. N. & G. Sec. Heb. l. 4. c. 11. (c) Quint. Decl. 11. p. 156, 157. Edit. Lug. Bat. (d) Senec. L. 4. Controv. 24. p. 234. Ed. Gronov. Imprisonment was no Punishment to me, I came thither of my own Accord. Arrian. Epiet. L. 1. c. 12. Where-ever a Man is detain'd against his Will, that Place is his Prison. Add. Charron de la Sageffe, L. 1. c. 6. f. 8. & c. 39. f. 9.

Bœcler indeed in his Preface before Grotius writes very obscurely upon this Subject, p. 9. 'The Merits of Human Punishments, says he, belong to the Law of Nature, both as it is a Law, and as it is Natural. If it be a Law, it produces an Obligation; but there can be no Obligation, neither can it be conceiv'd how there should be, without some Penalty attending the Violation of the Law. 'Tis beyond Dispute, that such as Transgress the Law of Nature must expect to be punished, because Punishments are unavoidably annex'd to every Law; and it is not in the least repugnant to Nature (1), that a Man that does Evil, should suffer Evil. But it would be false Reasoning to infer, that because the Law produces an Obligation, therefore every Man that breaks it, is obliged voluntarily to deliver himself up to be punished by the Civil Sword. Hobbes in his Book de Cive, c. 14. § 7. says very well, That the Second Part of the Law, which is call'd the Penal, is Mandatory, and speaks only to the publick Ministers. There is no particular Clause in the Law, which commands the Criminal to go voluntarily to the place of Execution; but there is a particular Injunction to the Magistrate, to take care that Malefactors be executed. And therefore the Delinquent is not in fault, if he be not put to death, but the Blame lies wholly upon the Magistrate, who neglects a Matter of such Concern and Importance to the Commonwealth. Socrates when Crito perswaded him to make his Escape out of Prison, told him (d), that That would be to break the Laws of his Country, which every good Subject was bound to obey; that every Man ought to yield to the Sentence the Government passes upon him; and not return the Injury upon the State, or pretend to show it has been unjust. But these are only Noble Sayings, which perhaps in some particular Circumstances, a Person truly brave and innocent, might resolve to practise, but which can be of no Force (as I can see) against any thing here asserted. And therefore we may further conclude, That as no Man is bound to Accuse himself in the Civil Court, or to make any voluntary Confession of his Crime, so it is unjust in Criminal Cases to put the Prisoner to declare his Innocence upon Oath: Tho' this Custom was usual at Athens (e), and the thing might look very dreadful, when the Party was obliged at the solemn Sacrifice of a Boar, a Bull and a Ram, to imprecate, as the Form run, Destruction to himself, his Race, and Family. And hence Hobbes infers de Cive, c. 2. § 19. 'That the Answers which are forced from a Man in Torture, are no Evidence to the Fact; but only helps to find out the Truth. So that a Man has a Right to give a true or false Answer, or if he please, not to answer at all (f). 'Tis an odd Story to the Purpose we have in Ctesias's Account of the Indies; he says, 'That there is a Spring in India, the Water of which, as soon as drawn, turns into a Curd like that of Cheese, and that if a very little Quantity of this be infused in Water and so drank, there will follow a Distraction upon it, which, the same day, will certainly make a Man discover every thing he hath been concern'd in. He adds, the King takes the Advantage of this Water, when he would make a full Discovery, whether the Party accused is really guilty of the Crimes he is charged with, or no; and if a Man discovers himself to be guilty of what he is indicted, he is forced to be his own Executioner; but if

(a) Vid. L. 3. t. 2. l. 22. D. de his qui Infam. not. (b) L. 24. c. 6. (c) Quintil. Declam. 314. All Confession is of such a Nature, that a Man would be thought Mad that were guilty of it. Id. Declam. 328. Neither is there any Man so Desperate, or that hath so little Love for himself, that doth not commit his Crimes with a Design to deny them. (1) V. Grot. l. 2. c. 20. f. 1. (d) Plato in Criton. p. 37, &c. Ed. Wech.

(e) Demosthen. contra Aristocrat. (f) Vid. L. 48. t. 18. l. 1. f. 23. D. de Questionib. Charron de la Sagesse, L. 1. c. 4. § 7. f. 6. Montaigne's Essays, L. 2. c. 5.

his own Confession proves nothing against him, he is immediately acquitted. But it should be carefully observ'd, that generally in all Laws the Dispositive part, or that which contains the matter of the Law, and the Comminatory, or that which comprehends the Penal Sanction, are express'd by two distinct forms of words; As thus, You shall not do this; and, He that does so, shall suffer the Penalty. In some Law the latter part seems to be no more than the Condition of the foregoing Prohibition, thus, You shall not do so and so, except you pay so much by way of Mulet. And in Laws of this nature, that which looks like a Penal Sanction, is in reality no more than a Tax; since it is left to the discretion of the Subjects, whether they will pay the Money the Law demands, or forbear such a particular Act. And this is generally the method observ'd in Sumptuary Laws; the design of which is commonly alternative, either to induce the Subject to a Frugal way of Life, or to enrich the Publick Treasury. For to allow of any price for Privilege, or exemption from the Law of Nature is absolutely unlawful. But the common design of other Laws is only to dispose Men to Obedience by the fear of Punishment. And therefore that Person knew nothing of the true nature of Punishment, who when he had ask'd the Magistrate what was the Fine for striking a blow on the Face, threw down the Money, and struck the Magistrate himself. For the Laws were made to redress Injuries, not to allow of Dispensations to commit them upon the payment of a Sum of Money. And therefore it is evident, that those Laws only, where the prohibition is alternative or conditional, excuse a Man from the Offence who has paid his Mulet, or is in a readiness to pay it; which he is likewise obliged to do upon Demand; But not in other Laws, where the Interdict laid, is absolute. But it must be confess'd, that there ought to be no such Laws as the purely penal, or such as propose no other End, but to make Advantage by the Fine. Some indeed call'd such a Law purely Penal, which barely annexes a Penalty to a plain Command, and neither expressly commands or forbids any thing: and This is given for an Instance, A Person elected Mayor of a Town, refusing the Office, shall be fin'd an hundred pounds to the Publick. But in my Opinion, This and all other Statutes of the like nature, imply some such Precept as this: No Man, when he is lawfully Elected, shall refuse to assist the Common-wealth; so that, That before, seems to be a penal Clause annex'd to This (a).

V. But further; Since we look upon a Judge to be just, when he inflicts Punishments agreeably to the demerit of the Offender; and since Justice is said to be administred, whenever the Penalties are duly allotted; it has from hence been disputed among Philosophers, what Branch of Justice the Imposition of Punishments belongs to; whether to the Commutative or Distributive; or as Grotius (1) changes the Terms, to the Expletive or Attributive. They that refer the Infliction of Punishments to Distributive Justice, give us these Reasons for it, that in the Distribution of Punishments as well as Goods, there is a proportionable regard had to the greater or less desert of the Persons. And since, according to their Opinion, Distributive Justice is concern'd in all those Things which the Whole applies to the Parts, or the Common-wealth to particular Subjects; it is evident that the Common-wealth inflicts the Punishments on particular Subjects. But it may be replied, That it is a Mistake to suppose that Distributive Justice takes place, as often as there is an Equality to be made between more than Two Terms (2), or whenever any thing is to be divided proportionably between more than One. For in Partnership, the Dividends of the Profit are shared among every one of the Members, according to their different Proportions; and yet in this Contract, the Dividend of the Profit becomes due a quite different way from that of Rewards and Punishments. For I think it is manifest, that Punishments are not consequent upon force of Compact, and that no Man, when he submits himself to Government, makes any particular Agreement to be punished for the Crimes he may commit (3) And therefore the Imposition of Punishments does not any way agree with the description of Distributive Justice which I gave before. But further; It is only by Consequence, and purely Accidental, that greater Criminals are punished with greater Rigour, and less, with proportionable Severity, not that it was primarily and in it self intended. For there is no necessity that in awarding Punishment to any particular Crime, the Magistrate should make a Comparison between that Offence and some other, and so proportion the measure of the Punishment for both, according to their different degrees of Malignity: But every Crime has, as it were, a separate Punishment allotted to it with more or less Severity, as the Publick Benefit requires it; tho' it usually happens, that the Punishment is either increas'd, or alleviated according to the different degrees of the Transgression.

Some Persons that reduce Punishment under Commutative Justice, consider it, as if Punishment were something assign'd to the Delinquent in the same manner as is usual in Contracts. A Mistake they were led into upon a common Expression, That Punishment is the due of every Offender; which is manifestly an improper way of speaking. For a Man that has any thing due to him has a Right over the Debtor to oblige him to the Payment of it. But I think there will be no Body so absurd as to say, that the Delinquent has a right to challenge his Punishment of the Magistrate. And therefore the meaning of that Saying is only this, That the Magistrate may justly Punish a Criminal as the Law directs. Grotius, l. 2. c. 20. §. 2. says, 'That the Distribution of Punishments does originally and principally belong to Expletive Justice for this reason; because no Body can punish another lawfully, unless he has a Right to do it; which Right ariseth from the others Crime. But he was impos'd upon by the doubtful meaning of the word Right. For there is a very wide difference between a Right to do a thing, and a Right to receive something from another. The Meaning of the former Right is this, I have a Power to exercise this particular Act, and no Body ought to hinder me in it: the sense of the latter is this, I have a Right to receive something from another, and he at the same time is under an obligation to let me have it. Now when the Discourse relates to Expletive Justice, the word Right is not to be taken in the former signification, but in the latter. And this Right is fix'd in him that receives the Thing, and not in him that bestows it: As for instance; When I pay my Servant his Wages, I am engaged in an Act of Expletive Justice; not because I have a Right to Pay him his Wages, but because he has a Right to demand it of me. Thus, I may safely say I have a Right to command my Servant to take off my Shoes; but certainly 'twould be strangely impertinent to infer from thence, that therefore to command him that Service was an Act of Justice. And it is an Argument much of the same nature, to say, that because Punishment cannot lawfully be inflicted but by a Person that has authority to do it, therefore Punishing is a branch of Expletive Justice. Another Argument produced by Grotius, is this, 'That in Crimes and Penalties there is something that much resembles the nature of Contracts; For as the Seller of any Commodity, is supposed to have obliged himself to every thing natural to the sale, tho' he mention nothing particularly; so every Delinquent seems voluntarily to oblige himself to be punished; for every Man's Reason tells him, that it is absolutely necessary that every great Crime should be punishable; and therefore a Man that chooses to transgress, directly and deliberately, may by consequence be said to consent to be punished: And therefore in Scripture we find that Sin is frequently call'd by the name of a Debt, which we are as much obliged to discharge, as They are that are under Bond to their Creditors (a). To which I answer, That thus much is certain, that if a Man knows the Penalty the Law appoints for such a particular Crime, and yet is wilfully guilty of it, he can have no reason to complain of unjust Usage, or to think himself hardly dealt with, when he is brought to punishment. But it cannot from hence be infer'd, that a Man gives a direct and immediate Consent to his own punishment; or rather, that he has obliged himself by his own Consent to suffer it. Since no Man is ever guilty of a Crime, but he has some hopes, either by concealing himself, or some way or other to secure himself from Justice (b). Vasquius indeed (c) attempts to prove, that Criminals are obliged by their own consent to suffer punishment, because the Penal Laws, as well as others, are made by the consent of the Subject; or at furthest, because the Legislative Power is derived originally from the consent and agreement of the People. But I think there is little or no force in the Argument: For as I have proved elsewhere, Laws are not Compacts or Agreements. And I think there is no Absurdity in the thing, that I should give my Consent to the Establishment of a Power, which may perhaps afterwards exercise certain Acts upon me, whether I will my self, or no. Only, I can pretend no reason of Complaint, if I do afterwards feel its severity, because I consented to such a Power. But Sin is compared to a Debt, not because a Man is oblig'd to consent to his own Punishment, but because the Legislator has the same Right to challenge the Penalty of the Delinquent, as a Creditor has to demand the Money lent to the Debtor; and because the Body and Goods of the Offender are no less liable to the Magistrate on a criminal account, than the Goods of the Debtor are to the Creditor in Cases of Debt. In the Elements of the Roman Law, (1) Obligations are divided into such as arise from Consent, and such as are the result of Transgression; but it should be observ'd, that from Transgression there arises an Obligation, only to make Satisfaction for the harm that is done, but not to suffer the punishment: And that Obligation it self is not properly founded upon a Man's consent to the Penalty; but upon that necessity of Restitution, which upon a Settlement of Property, evidently flows from the Law of Nature. Thus Aristotle distinguishes Contracts into the Voluntary, and the Involuntary (2). But his meaning may be thus explain'd; That as in Contracts of Duty there is a Return made of Equal for Equal, so in Criminal Cases, the Satisfaction ought to be an Equivalent to the Damage. But the reason why he calls the obligation to make satisfaction, an Involuntary Contract, is, because, for example, in Cases of Debt, it depends upon the Creditor's pleasure whether the Debtor shall receive the Money or no: But, for example, the obligation a Thief is under, to restore me what he has robb'd me of, or the value of it, bears no manner of relation to any consent of mine, but he brings it upon himself much against my will. For 'tis certain, I had rather he should have left me in quiet possession of what was my own, than have given me the trouble of bringing an Action of Theft against him, especially where there is no hope of recovering more than barely the principal by it. But it may be further considered, that generally every Right has an Obligation that answers it in another Person. And therefore upon commission of the Criminal Action, the Party that is injured has a right to demand Reparation for his loss, or the harm he has suffered; and the Injurious is under obligations to make him satisfaction; and This is the matter which Expletive Justice relates to. But as the Criminal Action is a Deviation from the Law; the Governours of the Common-wealth have power to punish as they think necessary; but the Delinquent is under no obligation to offer himself voluntarily to be punished. For which reason the Infliction of Punishments cannot fall under Expletive Justice. So that, it may be said upon the whole, that Punishment does not belong to either Species of Justice, but makes a particular branch it self. Unless it may be thought more proper to say, that both the Imposition of Punishments and the Distribution of Rewards, which have not been determined before hand by particular Compact, are parts of Prudence necessarily belonging to the Government of others, and therefore should be rank'd under Justice in General.

(a) Vide Sanderton de Obligat. Conscient. Prælect. 7. f. 13. seqq. (1) See above in B. 1. c. 7. f. 11. (2) See Grot. B. 2. c. 20. f. 2. (3) This is true: But, since upon a Sovereign, the Right of Life and Death, or, the Right of the Sword is conferr'd: His Subjects are oblig'd not to resist him, tho' he make Use of it upon their own Persons.

(a) V. L. 49. t. 14. l. 34. D. de Jure Fisci. L. 9. t. 8. l. ult. C. ad L. Juliam Majestatis. In Tacitus, Ann. 12. c. 53. The Woman that Married another Man's Slave without the Knowledge of his Master, is said to have Consented to her own Slavery. (b) Thucydides, l. 3. c. 45. Edit. Oxon. init. There are several Crimes which the Commonwealth hath forbid under Pain of Capital Punishment; and yet Men have Hopes strong enough to persuade them to venture and run that Risk; and there is no Man that will undertake an hazardous Enterprize, when he despairs of the Success of his Plot. And we never heard that one State revolted from another, which did not imagine it self stronger and better prepar'd for War. (c) Vasq. Controv. Illustr. l. 1. c. 28. n. 12, 13.

(1) Institut. L. 3. t. 14. De Obligat. l. 2.

(2) See above in B. l. c. 7. l. 12.

VI. It will therefore, I think, be allowed by every Man that pretends to Reason, that tho' by Nature all Men are upon the level, and Punishment it self seems to be a severe and rigid sort of Discipline, while Men endeavour only to afflict and ruine one another; and tho' the wise Creator of the World hath so disposed the Nature of Man, and the Events of Things, that ill Actions are generally pursued by ill Consequences, which in a manner revenge themselves upon the Causes of them: yet that positive Human punishment after all hath nothing in it repugnant to natural Equity; but that on the contrary, it is absolutely necessary to the Common Quiet and Security of Mankind. For as it was requisite to the Publick Peace of the World, to put an End to the Equality of Nature, by erecting Civil Governments; so in the general Loosness and Corruption of Manners, and Natural Aversion to Vertue, the force of Government would soon be dissolved, if bad Men were not confin'd, and frighten'd into obedience, by the Dread of some present Evil. And since every Man is before-hand told publickly what he ought to do, and what forbear doing, and what Punishments will be inflicted on such as act otherwise, no Man can blame any body but himself, if by a wilful

Transgression of the Laws, he falls under the Severity of the Punishment.

VII. As to the Persons the right of punishing is to be lodg'd in, and exercis'd upon, 'tis Grotius's Opinion, l. 2. c. 20. §. 3. 'That Nature has not given any Determination upon it. 'So far indeed, says he, we may discover from Nature, that 'tis most convenient, some Superiour should be impower'd with it; tho' that is not absolutely necessary neither; unless we take the word Superiour in such a sense as will imply, that a Man which is guilty of a Criminal Action, shall be thought to have made himself inferiour to all the rest of Man-kind by that very Act. The Consequence of which is, that no Man ought to be punish'd by one equally guilty with himself (a). But I confess I cannot be perswaded but that the power of punishing is a Part of Sovereignty, and consequently that no body can properly be said to inflict Punishment upon a Man, unless he has Authority over him. For tho' upon a view of the ill Dispositions of Men, and how easily they are inclin'd to injure and molest one another, we find it absolutely necessary to the Preservation of Society in the World, that Punishments should be inflicted; and tho' every Man ought to direct his Actions to the support of Society, as the general good of all Mankind; yet it does not follow that every Man is obliged to undertake every Action that tends to advance that End; Since that would be to no purpose, without a concurrence of certain other particular Requisites. Thus, It is necessary Men should be under some sort of Government or other; tho' no Body imagines, that it is left at random for any Man to assume a Right or Power over others as he pleases. Now then, every Evil which is inflicted upon antecedent Transgression, cannot properly be called Punishment, but that which was threatned before, and is inflicted after the Crime is known. And therefore the Evils of War, and all Acts of Hostility, must not be call'd Punishments, tho' tis true that we procure Caution against future Injuries by them; for in a state of War, every Man provides Caution for himself by his own force, and in what manner he pleases; but the Caution an injured Person receives from Punishments, must be procured by the Power, and according to the Determination of the Superiour; In War the injured Party only, is directly concern'd to punish, and suppress his Enemy; but in Civil Government, the whole Common-wealth is as much concern'd as the Party that is injured, to punish a Criminal. Again, 'tis left to the Discretion of the Injured only, whether he will revenge himself upon his Enemy, with a War, or not; But 'tis left entirely to the Superiour, whether Punishment shall be put in Execution, or not; nay, he has Power to inflict it, tho' the injured Party desire the contrary. And lastly, the quantity of the Punishment is generally determined, before the Fact is committed; but in War the Caution must be settled according to the Circumstances of my own, or my Enemies Condition. But besides, tho' Nature has not determined, whether I, or any other particular private Man ought to have the right of inflicting Punishments, any more than it has design'd us to be Princes; yet I think it is sufficiently clear from Reason, that Punishment, as it is the Execution of a Judiciary Sentence ought to be derived from some Superiour, or from a Person who has Authority over the Criminal. Neither is there any reason why we should be so nice in the Explication of the word Superiour: For 'tis absolutely false that every sin leaves such a Blot upon a Man's Honour and Character, that he must presently be thought no better than a Beast. Neither is it good Reasoning to infer, that because such a Man is guilty of such a Crime, therefore I have power to punish him. For if I suffer by the Criminal Action, in a liberty of Nature, I may demand Satisfaction of him for the Injury, and Caution for the future in a way of War; if the Action does not affect me, but some other Person whom I am not particularly obliged to defend; I can have no more pretence to engage my self in his Cause, than I have to prescribe Laws to those that owe me no Subjection. Ex. II. 14. It was a saying of Democritus, that it was most agreeable to Nature, that the most deserving Person should govern; which is perhaps true enough in this sense, that where the Government is to be conferr'd upon a single Person elected by a Plurality of Voices, and no one Man has any particular claim of Right to it more than another, it would be the most rational way of proceeding, to make choice of a Person of the greatest Merits, and that seem'd to be best acquainted with the Arts of Government. But such a Person can pretend to no Authority over others, except they voluntarily submit to him. As for what Grotius says, that a Criminal ought not to be punished by a Person as guilty as himself; This does not properly concern them that have publick Authority to punish, but only affects such People as love to censure and impeach others, barely upon their own private Authority, and out of a pretended hatred to Vice, without Warrant from any Obligations they are under by the Duties of their Office and Place. Tho' without dispute it is very unbecoming, and must necessarily lessen the Respect that is due to the Magistrate and the Laws, when the Person that administers Justice, is guilty of the same Vices he punishes in others, for a Man that Punishes that in others, which he allows himself to be guilty of, does not seem to be out of love with the Crime, but to envy others the enjoyment of it (a.) Yet I don't think it had been unlawful for Nero himself, after he had kill'd his Mother, to have put others to death that had been guilty of the like Crime (b). And in this, Hobbes is of the same Opinion, Leviath. Chap. 28. That Punishment is derived from the Superiour as such. The Definition indeed, which He gives of Punishment is hardly so full as it ought to be, containing only those Punishments that are inflicted by the Civil Power, and making mention but of one End only. Punishment, says he, is an Evil inflicted by Publick Authority on him that has done or omitted that which is judg'd by the same Authority to be a Transgression of the Law, to the end that the Will of Man may thereby be the better disposed to Obedience. But he rightly infers from thence, That neither private Revenges, nor Injuries of private Men, nor

(a) See John, Ch. VIII. v. 7. Rom. II. 21.

(a) Vide Plin. L. 8. Epist. 22. Plato, Minoe. He is a wicked Man that does one thing himself, and commands another. Add Gratian, Caus. 3. Quæst. 7. c. 3, 4. seqq.

(b) But yet not for Domitian to punish Women convicted of Adultery, when he Himself had Debauch'd them. Zonaras, Tom. 3. To this we may refer that which Medea saith in Seneca's Trag. v. 500, &c.

He did the Crime, that hath th' Advantage of it, He's Innocent to You, who only was Your Instrument.

And certainly all voluntary Informers and Censurers of others, ought to take care how they fall under the reach of what Juvenal saith, Sat. 2. v. 23, &c.

Loripedem rectus derideat, Æthiopem albus:
Quis tulerit Gracchos de seditione querentes?
Quis calum teris non misceat, & mare calo,
Si Fur displiceat Verri, aut homicida Miloni,
Clodius accuset mæchos, Catilina Cæthegum,
In tabulam Sylla si dicant discipuli tres.

Let him cry Blackmoor-Devil, whose Skin is White,
And Bandy-legs, who treads himself Upright;
Let him Reprove that's Innocent. — In vain
The Gracchi of Sedition must complain.
'T would make you swear the Planets from their Spheres, Should Verres peach Thieves, Milo Murtherers.
Clodius tax Bawds, Cæthegus Catiline,
Or Sylla's Pupils Sylla's Rules decline.

And again the same Satyr, v. 38, &c.

— Felicia tempora; que Te Moribus opponunt: habeat jam Roma pudorem.
Tertius e caelo cecidit Cato.

— Blest times
That made Thee Censor of the Age's Crimes!
Rome now must need reform, and Vice be stopt,
Since a Third Cato from the Clouds is dropt.

Mr. Tate.

Seneca, Controv. l. 2. contr. 14. There is nothing more Despicable than a Man that chastizes Vice, and yet imitates it. Cic. Tusc. Quæst. l. 3. c. 30. It is the particular Character of Folly, that it discovers another's Faults, and forgets its own. Plaut. Trucul. Act. 1. Scen. 2. v. 58. He that accuseth Another of a dishonest Action, ought to be cautious Himself. Ovid. Fast. l. 6. v. 647.

Sic agitur Censura, & sic exempla parantur,
Cum Judex, alios quod monet, ipse facit.

Unenvied he a brave Example stands,
Who by his Deeds confirms what he commands.

Pains

Pains inflicted by publick Authority without precedent publick Condemnation; Nor Evil inflicted by usurped Power, nor Harms inflicted on the Subject without Regard to future Good, are properly Punishments, but rather Acts of Hostility. But it must be observ'd, That such false Punishments as these do not immediately place us in a State of War, or give us Licence to make use of the Liberties of an Enemy, or that a Man who has suffered such Evils is left to his Freedom to return Hostilities upon those that inflicted them. The same Author also excludes those Evils from being Punishments, which are the Natural Consequences of Evil Actions; 'As when a Man in assaulting another, is himself slain or wounded, or when he happens to fall sick upon the commission of some unlawful Act; tho' this indeed will look like a Punishment from God. Again, he says, that when the Harm inflicted is less than the Benefit that naturally follows the Crime committed, it is rather the Price or Redemption, than the Punishment of a Crime. And among his Acts of Hostility, he mentions the Excess of Punishment; or when a greater Punishment is inflicted than the Law allows of; and when Hurt is inflicted for a Fact done before any Law forbade it; and when any Evil is inflicted on the Sovereign; and when Harm is inflicted upon a declared Enemy. But what he adds to this afterwards; That One who has been a Subject, and declares himself an Enemy, is not to suffer as a Subject but an Enemy, and therefore that such as are guilty of Treason, may be made to suffer whatsoever the Representative of the Common-wealth will, or as Enemies, I cannot agree with him; because whatever punishment is inflicted upon Treason, is inflicted upon the Force of Authority, and proceeds from the Supreme Power, tho' the Traitor himself may rebel and deny his Authority, and sometimes put the Common-wealth to a Necessity of Suppressing him by Arms, before he can be proceeded against as a Criminal; as when a Man is in pursuit of his Slave who is run away, he does it by a Right of Property, and not of War. I may further add, That the Evils an Enemy suffers, are none of them thought to be Infamous, whereas the Infamy of it, is a particular addition to the punishment of Traitors.

VIII. The next Thing that falls under Consideration, is, the End (1) of Punishment, which every Man ought to propose to himself in inflicting it, after Satisfaction made for the Damage, or when the Nature of the Case will not admit of Satisfaction. And here my first Assertion is, That tho' it does not appear to be unjust in it self, that the Man that did Evil should suffer Evil (a), yet that Punishment ought never to be inflicted without a prospect of making some advantage from it. And therefore Hobbes makes this one of his Laws of Nature, de Civ. c. 3. s. 11. That in Revenges or Punishments, Men ought not to look at the Greatness of the Evil past, but the Greatness of the Good to follow; whereby, we are forbidden to inflict punishment with any other design, than for the Correction of the Offender, or the Admonition of others. And 'tis Plato's Judgment (b), That a Man that acts with Prudence, will never punish barely for the past Offence; for it is impossible for him to undo what is done already; but he will always regard what is to come, either to prevent the same Offender from being guilty a second time, or else to frighten others from transgressing by his Example (c). It is indeed absolutely necessary, that some regard should be had to the Crime committed, because without that, 'tis evident, there can be no punishment; but then the End of punishment ought also to be considered, that a Man may not suffer Evil, for what is too late for him to remedy; for tho' he be a Criminal, yet he is of the same Flesh and Blood with other Men. And Hobbes proves this Law by these two Reasons; first, 'Because a Man is obliged by the Law of Nature upon Caution for the future, to pardon them that repenting desire it: And secondly, Because Revenge, as it respects only the Past, without regard to the Example and Profit to come, is only a Triumph and Glorifying in the Hurt of another, tending to no End, and is therefore vain, and contrary to Reason. It might perhaps be a Saying proper enough for an Attila (d); That he knew nothing sweeter than Revenge, and thought no Satisfaction in nature greater: But a Judge when he is forced to punish, ought by no means to take pleasure in the Sufferings of the Criminal (e).

*Qui fruitur pœnâ ferus est legumque videtur
Vindictam præstare sibi; diis proximus ille est,
Quem ratio, non ira movet: qui facta rependens
Consilio punire potest.* —

'Tis cruel Pleasure to enjoy the Pain
Our Sentence dooms the Guilty to sustain;
Justice forgets her first and great intent,
When to Revenge she turns the Punishment:
But 'tis a Godlike happiness of Mind,
Freely to judge, with Passion unconfined;
To reason calmly, and as things appear
In their true light, be gentle or severe.

(1) See Grof. B. 2. c. 20. Vid. Bacon. Serm. fid. c. 4. (a) Pindar. Nem. Od. 4. v. 52.

Ἡ δὲ τῶν κακῶν ἐστὶν ἡ ποινή.

He that doth Ill, 'tis just should Suffer.

Euripid. Hecub. v. 1250, &c. When you have had the guilty Confidence
To do a Crime, learn to submit and bear
The Punishment.

(b) Plato Protag. p. 226. A. B. Edit. Wech. (c) Seneca de Irâ, l. 1. c. 16. speaks to the same Sence. (d) Fortunandus de Rebus Geticis, c. 39. (e) Claud. de Conf. Mallii, v. 223. &c. Valer. Max. l. 2. c. 9. s. 3. Vulcat. Gallianus in Avid. Cass. c. 12. It never looks well for a Prince to be guilty of Revenge, purely to satisfy his own Resentments.

And therefore Augustus struck out the Names of such Criminals, that by their Meanness could afford their Enemies no other Satisfaction, than that of Revenge (a). 'And therefore when the Magistrate punishes a Criminal with Death or Ignominy, it is not because he takes any Delight in their Punishment, but because he intends such Examples for publick Instruction, and that the Common-wealth may make some Advantage by their Death, that did it no Benefit in their Lives (b). But I am not so far of Hobbes's Opinion, as to call it an Act of Hostility, whenever the Government punishes without considering the true End of Punishment; so the Punishment in other Respects be inflicted according to the Laws of the Common-wealth (c).

IX. But the true and genuine End of Punishment is Precaution against Injuries; which is obtained, either by the Amendment of the Offender, or by detering others by his Example from offending for the future; or by inflicting such Punishment on the Party peccant, as shall deprive him of a Capacity of transgressing any more; which Grotius, in other words, in the Second Book, Ch. 20. Sect. 6. expresses thus, Punishment either respects the Persons good that offended, or his, whose Interest it was he should not have offended; or indifferently, the Good of every one (d). The first sort of Punishment, is that which designs the Amendment of the Offender, or to correct his bad Inclinations by a contrary Method of Cure. For since every Action, and especially one which is deliberate and repeated, is apt to bias our desires to give us a bankering after it, and to grow into what we call an habit; it will be necessary to deprive Vice, as soon as we can, of all that looks tempting in it (e). 'And therefore, as Socrates said, of all Delinquents, he is certainly the most unfortunate, who never suffered for his Crimes, and he's sure to be less unhappy, when ever he does; since then he satisfies the Justice of God and Man; for he that suffers dischargeth the guilt of his Conscience (f). Correction, as Seneca says, well design'd, and used with Judgment, is sometimes absolutely necessary; there being no such hurt in it as is commonly imagin'd; for under an appearing evil, it carries with it a very successful Remedy. For a vicious Disposition is reform'd by Pain and Uneasiness inflicted on the Body, after the same manner, as it is usual to bring crooked Timber to straitness, by plying it over Fire, or by opening its parts for use, by the Wedge and Sawe. Though we need not go so far, as to agree to what the same Author saith in another place; 'That when either by our Selves, or by Friends, we have injured another Person, it is our duty immediately to apply our selves to the Magistrate to be Punish'd, as we would to a Physician; lest the injurious Distemper should so far infect us, as to settle in an incurable Disease: For a Man that is of so good a Disposition, as to be in a readiness to deliver himself up to Justice to punish his own faults, has no need of making the Magistrate his Physician, but may be safely trusted with his own cure (g).

X. As to the Person who is to inflict this sort of Discipline, Grotius thinks (h), 'That 'tis naturally free, for any Man to exercise that sort of punishment which designeth only the Reformation of the Offender; provided he be Master of a good Judgment, and not guilty of the same Faults, or others of the like Nature himself. (For they are certainly the most unpardonable Criminals, who have the Impudence to Impeach others of Crimes they are guilty of themselves; and if a Man would reform others, he must first mend himself (i).) 'But that as to other sorts of Punishments which are of a compulsive nature, such as Whipping, Beating, and the like; Nature hath made no Distinction between the Persons that may, and those that may not, inflict them upon others. Except it be, that Reason hath particularly allow'd Parents the use of this Right over their Children, upon the force of Natural Relation. And therefore generally the Civil Laws, to prevent Confusion and Disturbances, have justly restrain'd the common Affinity of Mankind, only to the nearer Branches of Blood. But there does not seem to be much Satisfaction in This: For, as I said before, no punishment, whatever the end of it be, can be inflicted, but by the Authority of the Sovereign: And therefore all Reproof by words looks rather like Counsel and Advice, than Pu-

(a) Suetonius Aug. c. 32. (b) Senec. de Irâ, l. 1. c. 6. (c) Leviath. c. 28. Add. L. 18. t. 7. in fin. l. 7. D. de servis exportandis. (d) Conf. Senec. de Clem. l. 1. c. 22. (e) Plato, Gorgias, 325, &c. (f) Seneca de Irâ, l. 1. c. 5.

(g) Apuleius de Dogm. Plat. p. 615. Edit. in Usum Delph. There is more Disquiet and Uneasiness in the Impunity a Delinquent enjoys, than there is in the most severe Punishment. Plato de L. L. l. 9. in the Beginning. No Punishment appointed by Law is intended for an Evil, but only to effect one of these two Things, Either to make the Offender better, or at least not so bad as he was. Aristot. Eth. ad Nicom. l. 2. c. 2. p. 20. Ed. Paris. Punishment is a sort of Physick, and Physick commonly works by contraries. Alcicon de Doctrin. Plato, c. 32. 'Tis as necessary for an Offender to be Punish'd, as it is for a sick Man to apply himself to the Physician: For Correction is a sort of Remedy for a vicious Mind. Tacitus, Ann. III. c. 54. A debauch'd and debauching, a crazy and violent Temper, must be cooled and kept under by Restraints as strong as the force of its Lufts. Plato in Critias, in the Beginning. The proper Punishment, for one that transgresseth out of Negligence, is that which makes him cautious.

(h) L. 2. c. 20. f. 7. (i) Isocrat. de Permutatione, p. 539. Edit. Paris. Laëtantius Div. Inst. l. 4. c. 23. When Crispus in Tacitus, Hist. l. 2. c. 10. towards the End, Condemn'd Faustus, tho' he himself had been Employ'd and Rewarded for bringing in Accusations of the same kind before, 'tis said, That the Punishment of the Crime did not grieve Faustus so much, as it did that such a one should inflict it. Arnobius adv. Gentes, L. 1. It is great Injustice in you, to make that Criminal in us, which you do your selves; or to allow your selves in the Practice of those things, which you strictly forbid to others.

nishment; which when vehemently delivered and pressed in harsher Language, seems to be founded rather upon the particular Laws of Friendship (1), than upon any common right. And the truth of this appears from the common return that is made to any Man, who undertakes to reprove a Person he has no acquaintance with, (as Terence (a) represents it) Have you so little Business of your own, as to intrude into another's, and meddle with what doth not concern you? And therefore Chremes, in that Author, when he justifies his reprimanding Menedemus, appeals to the Right of a Neighbour, which he said, he thought might claim the next title to Friendship (b). But besides, 'tis a very necessary part of Prudence, to know how to apply our reproof; for an unseasonable mistake of this Nature, may be of very ill consequence to a Man's self, and harden the Person he intended to reform in the vicious course he was in before. Parents (c) indeed have a right to correct their Children, upon a double Account; both because the Methods of Education, which Nature obliges them to bestow upon their Children, would be to no purpose, if they had not the liberty, as they see occasion, to use them with a little Sharpness and Severity; and because, out of Civil Government, they would have an absolute Sovereignty over them. And though, in many Common-wealths, this power is reduced to a very little compass, yet they have so much almost every where left them, as giveth them leave to correct their Children at discretion, for those petty Misbehaviours, which are the effects rather of the levity and imprudence of Youth, than of any inveterate settled ill habits of the Mind; and which disturb more domestick Quiet, than the publick Peace. And 'tis as necessary, that such as in the Parents stead, have the care of educating young People committed to them, as Tutors, Governours, and Masters, should be allowed the same Power; because they can never discharge their Duties as they should, without the moderate use of gentle Discipline (d). But this sort of punishment Grotius says, ought never to proceed so far as Death; since 'tis very absurd to hope to reform a Man, by throwing him into a Condition, in which 'tis impossible for him to express any Amendment: though 'tis the Opinion of some, that when a Man is grown incorrigibly vicious, 'tis just and reasonable to deprive him of Life; especially since such sort of Persons are generally very bad Neighbours to others. So Seneca says, 'That Death is the best Remedy for an incorrigible Disposition; and that 'tis the safest way for him to leave the World, who is never like to be Master of himself in it (e). And Plato says, that a wicked Man had better not live, since he is under a Necessity of living ill. Sulpitius Asper, in Tacitus, gave this Reason for his engaging in the Conspiracy against Nero, that it was impossible for him to stop his Cruelties otherwise; or as Suetonius telleth the story in his Life of Nero, some of the Conspirators charg'd all the guilt of the Plot upon Nero himself; as if they could not have better express'd the respect they had for him, than by killing him, after he had dishonour'd himself by such variety of Wickedness (f). Yet Charity should persuade us not to be too easily prevail'd upon to give any Man over for desperate. But this sort of punishment may also promote the good of others. For 'tis certainly sufficient Caution to others, when a Man reforms upon the sense of the severity of his punishment: and when an incorrigible Person suffers Death, greater Security cannot be given that he will never create fresh Disturbances. And that none but such incorrigible

(1) Vid. Terent. Heautontimor. Act. I. Sc. I. v. 4, &c. (a) Ibid. Act. I. Sc. I. v. 23, &c.

(b) Q. Curtius, l. 3. c. 12. n. 16. speaking of Hephestion, No one could take that Liberty to Reprove the King which he did, which yet he was so tender of using, that the King seem'd rather to allow him in it, than he to assume it. Cic. Off. l. 1. c. 17. Advice, Perswasion, Exhortation, Consolation, and sometimes Reproof, are particularly used in Friendship. Hom. Iliad. l. 11. v. 792. ἄρα δὲ ὃ παρὶ φρασὶς ἔστιν ἑταίρος. And to this we may refer that of Mufonius Rufus in Tacitus, Hist. l. 3. c. 81. (c) V. L. 47. t. 10. l. 7. f. 3. D. de Injuriis. Libanius Declam. 20.

(d) Seneca de Irâ, l. 2. c. 27. The Corrections of Parents and Masters must be look'd upon to be of the same Nature with Cutting and Abstinence, and other severe Methods of Cure, which do us good when they hurt us. What Power other Relations have over others, in this Case may be seen. L. 9. t. 5. C. de Emendatione propinquorum. Plato de L. L. l. 7. p. 893. A. decrees, that in his Common-wealth, Since young People are as intractable as the wildest of Beasts, those Children that were Free should be subject only to the Correction of those that had the Charge of their Education. But that any Freemen should have the Liberty to chastise any Slave, whether Boy, Master, or Tutor, if he took him in any Fault. Xenoph. de Repub. Lacedæmon. Lycurgus made a Law, That no Man should command his own, or another Man's Children, to do any thing but what was Just. And that if a Child should be Beaten by another, and complain of it to his Father, it should be thought Mean and Irreputable, if the Father did not Correct him again. But what Xenophon says, l. 5. μεὶ ἀναλάσῃ: (That, if I strike any Man for his own good, I own I deserve to be punish'd, but then it must be so as Parents are punish'd by their Children, or Masters by their Scholars: For thus Physicians are allow'd to Cut and Burn their Patients, when it is in order to their Cure) was only to excuse that Severity, and Moroseness of Humour that was observ'd in him. But what may be Lawful enough for a General or a Commander to do, is not therefore Lawful for every one else.

(e) Seneca de Irâ, l. 1. c. 16. in the Beginning. You are now grown incurably Wicked, and are perpetually adding one Crime to another; you no longer give your self the Trouble to bring Excuses; (which ill Men are seldom without) for your Vices, but think the Sin it self, reason enough for you to sin on. You have such a Thirst after Wickedness, and have indulged, and pleas'd your self in it so long, that it is impossible you should quit it, till you take leave of your self. You will one time or other endeavour to lay violent Hands upon your self. Well we will be your Friends, and remove that Madness from you, which so disorders you; and since you are so deeply engaged in your own and other Men's Punishments, will shew you all the good that is now left for you, and that is, Death. Senec. de Benef. l. 7. c. 20. Plato in Gorgia, p. 349. B. Tacitus, Ann. XV. c. 53.

(f) Sueton. Nero, c. 36. Iamblicus in Protrept. c. 2. As it is safer to apply Causticks to a Swelling, than leave it to it self; so 'tis better for a wicked Man to Die than Live, Rosar. Persic. c. 1. When a Man is never Innocent but in his Sleep, 'tis better he should Die than Live, as Plato will have it, de L. L. l. 9. p. 928. D.

Persons should suffer Death, may perhaps be well enough admitted, in Crimes of a lower rank, and less malignity. But Crimes of a deeper stain, must not be allowed the same Privilege. For since no Man is to be declared incorrigible till he had been frequently guilty of the same Fault, it would be but little for the advantage of the Common-wealth, to defer the punishment of a Criminal, till he had frequently repeated perhaps the worst of Villanies.

XI. Another End of Punishment, is his good, whose Interest it was the Criminal should not have offended, or who suffer'd by the others Offence; that he may not for the future be in danger of the like injury from him or any one else (d). And this is to be obtained these three ways. First, by the Death of the Criminal: or Secondly, if he be allowed Life, by depriving him of Power to hurt; as by keeping him in Custody, taking his Arms, and other Instruments of Mischief from him, securing him in some distant place, and the like: or else Thirdly, by obliging him to learn, at his own Peril, not to incur further Guilt or Offend any more; which falls in with the Amendment, before treated of. But now there can be no effectual way to secure the Party injur'd from suffering the like from other Hands, but by such a punishment, as shall be publick, conspicuous, and make the Criminal an Example. And for this reason Malefactors are seldom executed in Prison, but in places of common resort, and with such frightful Solemnity, as may strike Terrour into the Multitude. And this is an End so natural to Punishment, that when in heat of Passion and Revenge, a Man thinks he hath had sufficient Satisfaction from the Person that had abused him, 'tis usual to add, as you like this, provoke me another time. But however, the Sovereign only, has just power to inflict this Punishment: Though Legislators in several Common-wealths, in compliance with the fierce and obstinate tempers of their People, have made several Allowances and Indulgences to that ill-natur'd Passion which urges Men to prosecute their own Resentments and do themselves Justice. The Revenger of blood in the Divine Law, seemeth to have been establish'd by such an allowance (a); except we rather think this to have been some remainder of the State of Nature. And some think they discover a Custom, like this in Homer, in that Passage which relates to Theoclimenus. Indeed, I think the Law Euripides mentions, can hardly be explain'd in any other sense (b), (οὐρανὸν ὄσιον ἀνταποκρίσιναι τῷ μῶ,) that is, they made satisfaction by banishment, and did not kill one another; implying that the old Custom of private Revenge was abrogated, to prevent the danger of its going too far; which in Punishments inflicted by the Magistrates, there is no fear of. It appears indeed from Homer, that it was usual to buy off the Banishment, by paying a pecuniary Mule, to the next of Kin to the Party kill'd (c). And at this day in Morocco, 'tis permitted the Kindred of the murther'd Person, either to compose all difference by an Agreement with the Murtherer, or to dispatch him without formal Process, if Publick Justice hath not apprehended him before; because it is there taken for a settled Rule, that Revenge is no sin. And Tacitus in his Account of the Germans, c. 21. tells us, 'That the Father, or the next of Kin, are under a necessity of engaging in the quarrel; but the difficulty of an Accommodation, (saith he) is not great, for 'tis usual to expiate a Murder, by a Present of a certain number of Sheep, and other Cattle, and then all of the Family will be fully satisfied (d).

XII. The third End of Punishment is the good of all indifferently; the Severity of the Punishment being sufficient Caution for every Man's Security (e). The design of which sort of Punishment is, either to prevent Malefactors that have done Injuries to some, from doing the like to others; an effect to be obtain'd, either by putting them to death, by confining or disabling them in such manner, as shall deprive them of the power of doing harm (f), or by the rigour of the Punishment, overcoming their Inclinations to transgress: or else to deter others, that might be encouraged by the impunity of

(1) See Grot. B. 2. c. 20. f. 8. (a) Numb. XXXV. Deut. XIX. Vide Selden. de J. N. & G. Sec. Hebr. l. 4. c. 2. Grotius upon Exod. XXI. 12. Add. Rochefort Descr. Antill. p. 2. c. 19. Homer. Odyss. v. 276.

(b) Euripid. Orestes, v. 512. (c) Homer. Iliad. 9. v. 628. Vid. Apoll. Rhod. Argonaut. l. 1. v. 90.

(d) Vid. Dionys. Halicarnass. l. 1. p. 68. Edit. Lips. Leaving Numitor to inflict the Punishments as he pleas'd, because he thought it reasonable, that the Party that was Injured should have the Right to Punish.

(e) Plato de L.L. 11. p. 977. B. Criminals are Punish'd, not because they have offended, for what is done can never be undone; but that for the future the Criminals themselves, and such as see their Crimes punish'd, may take Warning, and be put out of Love to Vice. Tullus in Livy, l. 1. c. 28. Let others at their Peril, attempt the like afterwards, when I have made him an Example to all Mankind. — And let the World learn, by your Punishment, to think those things Sacred which you have violated. Liv. l. 1. c. 33. Ancus built a Prison in the middle of the City, just by the Forum, to frighten the growing Boldness of Vice. Add. Agathias, l. 4. init. Lucian. Phalaris, l. 1. p. 735. in fin. It would be to no purpose to expect any Benefit from any thing, if Malefactors were not perpetually terrified by the Fears and Expectations of Punishments.

(f) Gunth. Ligurinum, l. 1. v. 527, &c.
Nec melius stultæ, furor atque superbia, plebis
Puniri poterat, quam tanti ut causa tumoris,
Eriperentur opes, ut, quos opulentia dudum
Fecerat elatos, in se revocaret egestas.

What happier Art could he have us'd t'assuage
 A haughty Town, and a bold Faction's Rage;
 Than to deprive them of that Wealth, from whence
 The fatal Ills unhappily commence?
 Seditions are by Wealth and Ease maintain'd,
 But soon by Want and Poverty reclaim'd.

Speaking of the Citizens of Utrecht, who had been Fined a great Sum of Money by Frederick; for an Insurrection there.

Delin-

Delinquents, from hurting and disquieting their Neighbours. And this may be effected by Publick Executions, or as they are usually call'd, Publick Examples, at the sight of which others are to take warning (a). And the more publick the Punishment is, the greater effect it is like to have in reforming others. The Lacedemonians had a Custom contrary to the rest of the World, in punishing their Criminals in the Night (b); thinking perhaps that the darkness added something to the *terrou*r of the Punishment (c). And under this End of Punishment, we may comprise all those Advantages which result from the Support and Preservation of the Authority of the Civil Government, among all the impudent and violent Invasions upon the Laws, which so frequently disturb and weaken it. For 'tis the Interest of the whole Common-wealth, to be concern'd for the preservation of the supreme Authority; and as long as that continues entire, the most profligate Criminals may be kept under restraint. But besides these Ends of Punishment I have here mention'd, I see no necessity of allowing those other Selden mentions de J.N. & G. l. i. c. 4. as the Satisfactory, Purgatorial, or Expiatory, or either that the deviation from the Law may in some measure be made up, and the inequality of the Action be corrected. The Arguments he produces from Scripture, seem to relate only to Divine Justice, or the particular Sanctity of the Jewish Nation.

XIII. As to those Exceptions which Grotius (d) adds to this Proposition, That the Infliction of all Exemplary Punishments ought to be lodged in the Government of every State, it must be observed, that whatever is inflicted in certain Places and on certain Persons which are not subject to any determinate Court of Judicature, as for example upon Pirates, must be reduced under the Right of War, which is utterly different from the power of punishing. For Pirates and Freebooters are common Enemies, and every Man may draw his Sword against them. 'Tis good Advice indeed which Grotius gives afterwards (1), That it would be the most proper method for Merchants and Seamen, before they begin their Voyage, to procure Commissions for themselves from publick Authority to take all Pirates, where-ever it be their fortune to come up with them, that so, when they are obliged to it, they may engage them, not as by their own, but upon the publick Authority. The Law mentioned in Deuteronomy, chap. 13. v. 9. doth not give every private Man right to kill the Person that would lead him into Idolatry; but only to bring him forth to Justice, that upon cognizance of the matter, the People should stone him. But yet, admitting that every private Man had power given him to punish one convicted of such a Crime, the establishment of such a Power by a previous Law, makes the private person an Instrument of the Government; and what Actions he undertakes on this account, must be look'd upon as commanded by publick Authority (e). The Action of Phineas (2) tho' favour'd by God's particular approbation, is not an Argument to be insisted on; For such a Zeal allow'd to any Man indifferently at other times would soon confound and distract all Civil Order, and give Colour and Protection to every one's Rashness and Passion (f). The power of Life and Death, which in some Common-wealths, Masters of Families have over their Children and Servants, tho' it do's not originally flow from the Common-wealth, yet under Civil Government, we may imagine it to be a branch of publick Authority, which the Sovereign permits Heads of Families to exercise over those under their Charge. And there is no reason to the contrary, why there may not be a Magistrate in every Common-wealth, who in certain Cases may be allow'd power to punish Criminals extraordinarily, without any judicial hearing, provided care be taken he shall not abuse an Authority of so large extent. Thus when the Government sets a certain price upon the Head of a Traitor, the person that kills him, is suppos'd to do it by publick Authority; for altho' such a Declaration has not always the force of a Command, yet when the Traitor is kill'd upon view of that encouragement, the action may be defended as undertaken by publick allowance and authority (g). Grotius in his Comment upon Esther, cap. 9. v. 10. observes, That it was an Opinion which obtain'd of old among the Jews, that if any Man attempted to betray an Israelite, or his Estate to the Gentiles, or put any publick Affront upon the whole Body of their Nation, that it would be no sin for a Jew to kill him, his estate being left his heirs. But the liberty which the Jews at that time took in the execution of their Revenge, does not seem to be agreeable to the nature of the Civil Government. There is a Law mention'd in Andocides Orat. 1. 'That if any Person attempted the Subversion of the Democracy of Athens, or if any Person, upon the dissolution of the Popular form of Government, should create any Magistrate, he should be pronounced an Enemy to the State; and no body that kill'd him should be punishable; and then follows the Oath which all the Athenian Tribes engag'd in, to kill the Person that should do so. And Valerius instituted a Law at Rome, 'That no Magistrate should ever be created, from whom there should lie no appeal; and that it should be lawful to kill any Person that should make such a Magistrate. And that it should not be capital for

(a) Vide L. 9. t. 27. l. 1. C. ad L. Jul. repetund. L. 9. t. 20. l. 7. C. ad L. Fabiam. de Plagiar. Quintii. Declam. 274. When Criminals are executed, the most publick Places are chosen, where there will be the greatest Number of Spectators, and so the most, for the Fear of Punishment to work upon 'em. Senec. de Ira, l. 3. c. 19. The more publick the Punishments are, the greater Effect will they have upon the Reformation of others.

(b) Herodot. Melpom. p. 107. Edit. H. Steph. (c) Comp. Val. Max. l. 2. c. 9. f 3. (d) L. 2. c. 20. f. 9.

(1) Ubi supra, f. 14. (e) See Grotius upon the Place. (2) Numb. XXV. (f) V. Selden. de J.N. & G. &c. l. 4. c. 4.

(g) Add. C. L. 3. t. 27. Quando liceat unicuique, &c.

any Man that did kill him (a). And the Panchæi are said to have lookt upon it as unlawful for their Priests to pass the borders of their consecrated Country; and if any Man found them without those Limits, he was allow'd to kill them (b). Here therefore we may observe, That in these, and all other Laws of the like Nature, upon such evidence of the fact, as admits of no scruple and dispute, the general Edict has the force of a positive Sentence of Condemnation; and the Death of the Person that follows upon it, seems to be authorized by the command of the Magistrate (i); and if a private Man, upon the influence and instigation of such a Law, (supposing the Reasons of it to be just,) should kill the Party, he will not only be indemnified in the Civil Court, but may be fairly acquitted by his own Conscience, so he was not induc'd to that action by any private grudge or resentment, but barely by a belief, that by such an action he should do good to his Country; and especially, if the reason why the Law permitted, or commanded any Man to be the Executioner of the Penalty was, that the Common-wealth was in imminent Danger from such treasonable Attempts. But the Case is different, as to the Blood which is spilt upon an Indulgence, the Law sometimes alloweth to a just Concern and over-violent Passion; which only takes off the Civil Punishment, but doth not excuse the guilt of the act. Of this nature are the Laws which permit Husbands to kill Adulterers and their Wives, when they surprize them in the Act: for Human Laws pardon only the violence of a Discontent conceiv'd upon the most severe Injuries. Though possibly it might be a more convenient way, to leave such Injuries to be punisht by the Magistrate, so the Common-wealth might be in no danger by the delay of the revenge (c).

XIV. But notwithstanding, from the Ends of Punishment, and the State of Human Nature, 'tis manifest, there may be some Actions, in themselves evil, which yet it wou'd be needless, and to no purpose for Human Justice to punish. Such as are, first, Acts meerly internal, as sinful thoughts, evil inclinations and desires;

though it may afterwards happen, they may (as suppose by a subsequent Confession,) be discover'd (d). For since no Man is injur'd by such an internal motion, no man can be concern'd for the punishment of it (e). 'Tis true indeed, as Philo saith, That while we entertain, tho' it be only our Imagination, with bad thoughts, we are guilty of those thoughts: but this holds true with relation only to Divine Justice. Though Grotius in his Comment upon the 5th of St. Matthew, v. 28. shews from several Testimonies of Heathen Writers, that such thoughts, from bare reason only, may be proved to be real sins (f). But 'tis a quite different thing, when the internal acts are considered in conjunction with the external; for the influence these have upon the Quantity and Quality of our actions, is very considerable. And therefore many Crimes are punished, which have yet been stopt in the attempt, and fail'd of final success (g). But besides, it would be too rigorous to make every peccadillo subject to the severity of Human punishments, since in the present state of human Nature, the greatest caution and intention imaginable, is not sufficient to guard us from a multitude of slips and infirmities. And therefore Themistius (h) when he had divided Men's failings into three sorts, viz. Misfortunes, Mistakes, and Criminal Actions, very justly adds, that a Prince ought to pity the first, correct the second, and punish the third (i). 'Tis said of Alphonsus King of Arragon, 'That having carefully read over the whole Body of the Portuguese Laws, he highly commended the Wisdom, and the Order, and Administration that was observed in the Common-wealth; but was as much displeas'd to find so many Particular Laws calculated for the most Trivial and Minute Cases; and to expose the scrupulous exactness of them, he ask'd the Portuguese in way of raillery, How a Man was to be punish'd that set his foot to ground (k). Grotius in his 2d Book, C. 20. §. 19. speaking to this Subject, seems not to have said what is exactly proper or true: Our slips and failings, saith he, can hardly be call'd sins; because, if we consider them in the general, they are not committed with that liberty, which in

(a) Liv. l. 3. c. 55. (b) Diodorus Siculus, l. 1. c. 46. (i) Vide Grot. L. 2. c. 20. f. 17. (c) Vide Gratian Can. quicunque, &c. Cauf. 33. Qu. 8. Senec. Controv. l. 1. Controv. 4. l. 4. Controv. 24. Xenoph. de Educat. Cyri. l. 3. p. 41. Edit. H. Steph. Valer. Max. l. 6. c. 1. f. 13. Boetius ad Grot. l. 2. c. 1. f. 14. Ant. Matthæus de Criminib. ad L. 48. D. t. 5. Grot. in flor. sparf. ad Jus Justinian. ad L. 48. t. 5. D. l. 22. f. 4. ad L. Ful. de Adult. (d) Ad Grotius Imper. de Summar. Potest. circa sacra, c. 3. f. 1. (e) Cogitationis pœnam nemo patitur. Vide L. 48. t. 19. l. 18. de Pœnis. Philo Lib. quod det. pot. infid.

(f) Add. Bodinus de Repub. l. 4. c. 7. p. m. 734. Ammianus Marcellinus gives us a very strange Instance of Calumny, l. 15. c. 2. The Story he tells is of one Mercurius, whose Practice it was, when any Man happen'd to tell his Friend his Dreams, (and Dreams in Nature we know use to be odd and extravagant) to paint them in the worst Colours his Malice can give them, and then represent them to the suspicious Emperor: upon which the Dreamer was indicted, as guilty of as great and high a Misdemeanour, as if he had actually committed some unpardonable Fact. So that when this came to be publickly known, People were so far from telling their Dreams before strange Company, that they would hardly own that they had been Asleep. And some Learned Men were concern'd, that it was not their Fortune to be Born among the Atlantæi, where, they say, no Body dreams.

(g) Vide Grot. in Flor. sp. rf. ad Lib. 48. t. 8. l. 14. D. ad L. Cornel. de Sicariis. (h) Orat. IX. ad Valentin. Jun. Add. Sanderfon. de Juram. Oblig. Prælect. 3. f. 18. (i) Hier. Oforius, l. X.

(k) Julianus in Cæsariibus de Probo. 'Tis very difficult for a Man to govern an Horse, or any other Beast, and much more Men, without indulging them in some things they have an Inclination to; as Physicians usually allow their Patients in little Irregularities, that they may be the stricter in the Observation of the great and chief Prescriptions.

particular they seem to be: for I can't think it is a Consequence, that if it be morally impossible, but a Man must fall into some sins; therefore such sins of daily infirmity, or incur-sion, as they are call'd, cease to have the nature of sin. He adds in the same Chapter, that those sins do not deserve punishment, which neither directly, nor indirectly, bear any relation to Human Society, or other Persons; for that there can be no reason, why we should not leave such Sins to be punish'd by GOD Almighty, who has the highest Wisdom to know them, the greatest Justice to examine them, and the most absolute power to punish them: and that therefore 'tis without any prospect of Advantage, and consequently to no purpose for Men to institute such punishments. Tho' I think, it may be very well made a question, whether there be any such sins as those he speaks of, if we except thoughts before they are produced into action. Besides, the Civil Laws deny to some Acts the power of producing an Action, or exempt them from human Penalties; either for publick Peace and Quiet, or upon other reasonable accounts; sometimes it may be supposed that a certain Action would look better, if it could not seem to have been undertaken upon fear of human Punishment; sometimes the matter may be too frivolous to give the Judges the trouble of hearing it; or perhaps be too perplex'd and intricate to be determin'd; or when the evil is grown inveterate and so rooted in the Temper of the People, that it is not likely to be suppress'd without a Convulsion, which might prove Fatal to the Common-wealth (a); or else to prevent an unreasonable Increase of Suits at Law (b). In fine, It is absolutely Necessary, that all those Disorders of the Mind, which are the Effects of the common Corruption of Mankind, should be exempted from Punishment; since they are so general, that 'tis impossible but all Civil Govern-ment should be dissolv'd, if such Sins should fall under the Severity of human Penalty, before they discover themselves by an open Enormity; such as are Avarice, Ambition, Inhumanity, Ingratitude, Hypocrisie, Envy, Detraction, Pride, Anger, Discord, and the like: all which Vices, it was our Saviour's great Design, by the Holi-ness of his Doctrine, to extirpate and suppress. For 'tis certainly true, as Seneca says, 'That 'if every Man was to be punish'd that was of a 'wicked and depraved Disposition, none could 'be excus'd from Punishment (c).

XV. But neither is it always necessary that such Misdemeanours, as may properly be punish'd by the Civil Court, should therefore always be punished by it (1); but there may be sometimes room left for pardon. The Stoicks indeed, as Stobæus (d) represents them, were violent against this Opinion: For a wise Man, they said, ought never to pardon any Body; because the Person that pardons must suppose that it was not the Offender's Fault that he transgress'd; though 'tis certain, that every Man's own natural Depravity is the cause of his Transgression: and therefore 'tis still true, that Offenders ought not to be pardoned. What they meant by this Argument seems to be this; either 'tis a Man's own fault that he offends, or it is not; if it be not his fault, there is no Offence committed, since every Man transgresses from his own natural Depravity, and therefore in this case there is no need of pardon; and if it be a Man's own fault, then he can't be admitted to pardon, because Pardon is not to be allow'd to any wilful Transgressors. Which Reason manifestly begs the thing in dispute. They add, That a good Man is not to be compassionate or merciful; for a compassionate mer-ciful Man deprecates and endeavours to alle-viate the Punishment a Criminal deserves, but every Man ought to have Retribution made him, according to his deserts. But now, the Nature of desert or merit is different with respect to good, and with respect to evil. The good which is due to a Man cannot in Justice be denied him; but the Nature of evil is such, (it not intending the Benefit of the Person that must suffer it) that it is no Injury to deny it him. They argue further, that a Man cannot be in-clinable to mercy, without thinking that the Punishments which the Law appoints for De-linquents are too severe; or that the Legislator has prescrib'd penalties without due regard to fact. But this is still but weak Reasoning. For 'tis no Contradiction, that the Punishments prescrib'd by the Law may be just, and yet may sometimes be mitigated; for the Law determines only in general, what Punishments are to be inflicted on such and such Crimes, without consideration of the particular Circum-stances which may sometimes happen, in certain Persons, in certain States and Conditions of the Common-wealth. But particular Men are pardoned for certain Reasons, which do not take place either in all Offenders, or at all times. Seneca (e), in his Book de Clementia, says, That Pardon is a Remission of the Punish-ment which is due, (pœnæ debitæ) but that a wise Man always doth what he ought to do. But here the Mistake lies in the word due. (debitæ.) For if it be meant, that punishment is due to Offenders; that is, that an Offender may be punished without injury or just occasion of complaint; in this sense it will not follow, that if a Man doth not punish an Offender, he doth what he ought not to do: for a Man may very justly and lawfully do many things, which he is not always necessarily obliged to do. Be-sides, as it is a mistake to say, that punishment is due to an Offender, meaning by it, that there is an inherent Right in the Delinquent which the punishment is to satisfy; (for I think no Man ever complain'd that his punishment was remitted; except it may be said, that a Man

(a) To this purpose is Tiberius's Epistle about Luxury. Tacitus, Ann. III. 53. (b) Add. Seneca de Clementia may wish that such correction, as might have reclaim'd him when he was young, was neglected, when he finds that his childish Levities and Faults, are grown up into bold and manly Vices.) So 'tis improper to say, that a Delinquent ought to suffer Punishment, (pœnam dare) meaning by it, that he is under an Obligation to suffer it: the reason of which I have explained before. But if by the word due, (debita;) it be understood, that a wise Man is oblig'd to inflict the punishment; I answer, first, That no Man can be under any such Obligation, unless the executive power of the Laws be either publicly or privately committed to his Care. And, secondly, That the Obligation which lies upon the Governours, doth not relate to the Delinquent, but to the whole Common-wealth or Society, whose safety they are bound to provide for, and especially this way, by punishing the Insolence of Offenders; which if they neglect to do, there is no injury done the Criminals, but they have violated the Obligations which they owe to the Common-wealth. But 'tis evident, that the Peace and Safety of the Common-wealth is so far from being subverted, that it is sometimes secured and establish'd by granting pardon, in proper times and places.
L. 1. c. 22. (c) De Ira, l. 2. c. 31. in fin. (1) Vid. Grot. ubi supra, l. 21. (d) Stob. Serm. XLIV.
(e) Senec. de Clementia, l. 2. c. 7. in fin. Vid. Ciceron. Orat. pro Muræna, C. 29.

XVI. Grotius, l. 2. c. 20. sect. 21, 22. says, That there is room for Pardon even antecedently to the penal Law; but this ought to be dexterously explain'd; otherwise it will appear to be but a very vulgar Thought, that where there is no law, there is no punishment, no transgression, or pardon of transgression. And a penal Law, is not only a law, which defines the particular sort of punishment; but that law also is a penal Law, which leaves the Determination of the Quality and Quantity of the Punishment, to the Discretion of the Judge. Here therefore it must be observ'd, that in Common-wealths which have no written Laws, the Laws of Nature serve instead of Civil Laws, and Justice is administred according to them; and Persons transgressing them are punish'd at the pleasure of the Judge: but even, where the civil Laws are written, yet since it is impossible they should be so express and particular, as to comprise all that Variety and Compass of Action, in which Men's impieties may be discover'd; it is necessary that Reason, and the Law of Nature should supply the Defects of the civil Law: and where the express penal Sanction is not sufficient, it must be left to the discretion of the Judge to determine the Penalty (a). And thus we may understand how Punishment came to take place antecedently to the penal Laws (b). But although, in such Common-wealths, the Magistracy hath power to inflict Punishment on Malefactors, yet this is no Reason why every Malefactor should be punish'd; but that must depend upon the Connexion there is between those Ends for which Punishments were at first instituted, and the Punishment it self. And therefore, if in a particular case, those Ends, upon a moral Estimation, do not appear to be necessary: As suppose, first, 'Tis thought most advisable, that such a particular Crime should not be divulg'd; or, secondly, If there be other opposite Ends of no less Utility and Necessity, as suppose, the same, or a greater Good might be obtain'd, by omitting the Punishment; or, lastly, If the Ends proposed by punishing, may be more conveniently obtain'd some other way; I can see no direct Obligation that lies upon the civil Court to inflict punishment (c). To instance in the first case, we must imagine some Sin, which is not yet grown into common Acquaintance, and in consequence, the publick Impeachment and Prosecution of which will appear neither Necessary nor Safe: for many Men's Obedience depends more upon their Simplicity and Ignorance of Vice, than any real Love they entertain for Vertue; and the punishing such a Crime, so new and strange, would not frighten so much, as sollicite and provoke their perverse Curiosity, to make an Experiment upon it too, and to love what is forbidden them. For this reason, 'tis said, Solon instituted no law against Parricide, that he might not seem by forbidding it, to have put People in mind of it (d). And Busbequius tells us, 'That the Turks seldom make Inquiries after secret Criminals, for fear they should only find Occasion for Scandal; but that every open Breach of law they severely punish (e). An Instance to the second case, may be conceiv'd in a Criminal who pleads his own, or his Parent's, or his Ancestor's Merits to balance his present Transgression; for it may sometimes be equally, or perhaps more beneficial to the Common-wealth, to reward a brave Action of a particular Nature, than to punish a bad one: and the Expectation of future Benefits, as well as the Memory of past, may be thought sufficient to expiate the Crime. For though what is once ill done can never be remedied, yet it may be atoned for by the brave Actions of the same Persons afterwards, and so be honourably forgotten (f). An Instance in the third case, may be taken from a Man who is won by good Advice to reform, makes a verbal Satisfaction to the Person injur'd; and giveth Security that there shall be no farther occasion of Punishments to these Ends, and that his Fault shall not be of any mischievous Influence. And then Seneca himself says (g), 'That a

(a) Lycurgus contra Leocratem. It was not through any Oversight in the Legislators, that the Punishments for such Crimes happen'd to be omitted; but because in the first times there were no such Actions ever heard of.

(b) And from hence that Passage in Cicero may be explain'd, l. 1. in Verrem. c. 42. No Law takes Cognizance of the Time past, except it be in a thing in its own Nature criminal and wicked, so that if there were no Law in force, it ought nevertheless to be absolutely avoided.

(c) V. Gratian. Caus. 23. Quæst. 3. c. 18, 24. 'Tis the same thing almost not to be, and not to be known.

(d) Apuleius Metamorph. l. 10. p. 319. Edit. in usum Delph. Add. Senec. de Clement. l. 1. c. 23. Busbeq. Ep. 3. gave Augustus concerning the Imposition of Punishments.

(g) Seneca de Ira, l. 1. c. 16. p. 29. Edit. Gronov.

'wife Man will be very ready to pardon a 'guilty Person, when his Sorrow for his Fault 'giveth him promising hopes of Amendment; 'and when he perceives he acted not by Prin- 'ciple, but only out of Rashness and Folly; 'nor will the Impunity so given, either be 'dangerous to the Person that receives, or to 'him that gives it. From all which, by the way, it appears how far a Crime may be re- leased by Composition and Agreement with the Accuser or injured Party; namely, that they may safely remit and forgive it, so far as their private Concerns are engaged in it; but that no particular Composition with them can super- sede or prejudice the Right of the Common- wealth. And therefore such Agreements be- tween private Men, may take away the second End of Punishment, but not the third (a). But to this Case we may reduce those Misbehavi- ours which we commonly call Follies of Youth, which any Man of candid Temper is willing to pardon; since, when the Warmth of that Age is over, Men usually admit of cooler and more sober Thoughts (b). And so also, when a Man has been injured (c), as he thinks the Injury much the less, if the injurious Party confesses that it was a rash and inconsiderate Action; so in all such Cases he will be more inclined to pardon than punish (1). For since all sorts of Punishment, and especially the more severe, seem to have something in them, which consider'd in its self, is, though not Repug- nant to Justice, yet contrary to that Love and Affection, which should be the Result of the common Affinity of Mankind; upon this account Reason will easily permit the Punish- ment should be sometimes superseded. And so we find Plutarch reasoning (d), 'Why, says 'he, were the Rods and Ax always carried 'Tied and Bound up before the Roman Ma- 'gistrates? unless either to signify to us, that 'their Anger ought not to be left loose and 'unconfind; or else that the slow unbinding 'the Instruments of Execution, might give 'them occasion to demur and delay Sentence; 'and, as it hath sometimes happen'd, to reverse

'the Punishment, after it hath been pro- 'nounced (e). For some Vices are Curable, 'others are past Remedy; the Rods are to cor- 'rect those that may be reform'd, and the Ax 'cut off what there is no hopes of amending. For sometimes a greater and juster Charity forces Justice to inflict the Punishment, that the pardoning one Man might not incommode many others: For 'tis but cruel Compassion to spare one Malefactor to the Wrong and Hazard of a number of innocent Persons (f). King James in his Donum Regium, l. 2. gives us this Catalogue of Crimes that ought never to be pardoned; Namely, Sorcery, Robbery, Incest, Sodomy, Witchcraft, falsifying the Coin, Oppression or publick Violence. In these Cases I have mentioned, therefore, the Stoicks say, A wise Man would spare and not pardon (g). But 'tis a ridiculous Nicety to refuse to call that a pardonning with the rest of the World, which they themselves will have to be sparing; and 'tis certainly beneath Men of Sense to dispute about Words, when the Sense of the thing is agreed upon.

XVII. But after the Establishment of the penal Law, the Difficulty seems to be greater, how the Delinquent can be excused from Punish- ment (2). For there seems to be more room left for Pardon, where the Penalty is arbitrary, than where 'tis expressly determin'd by a Law; and that, not so much, because 'tis expected that the Legislator should act conformably to his own Laws; as because the Authority of the Laws will be lost, if the due Execution of them is without good reason neglected; and because the Magistrate himself would seem to invite others to transgress, when the hopes of Pardon which he gives the Criminal is equal, or greater than the fear of Punishment (3) (h). Therefore, though the Force of human Laws depends upon the Will of Man, not only as to their Original, but also as to their Conti- nuance; yet they ought not, but upon very urgent and weighty Reasons, to be alter'd or repeal'd. For this would be a Breach of the Rules of Prudence, in the Art of Government.

(a) Tacitus, Ann. III. c. 70. There was Reason why he ought to be slow in pardoning the Indignities offer'd to himself, that he might be Cautious how he forgave those that injured the Publick.

(b) Juvenal, Sat. VIII. v. 166, &c.

Quædam cum prima rescantur crimina barba.

Some Faults of Course with Childhood end.

Vid. Aristot. Rhet. l. 2. c. 3. init. (c) Vid. Arrian. de Exped. Alexand. magn. l. 7. (1) V. Grot. l. 2. c. 20. f. 22.

(d) Plut. Quæst. Rom. §2. (e) Juvenal, Sat. VI. v. 220. Nulla unquam de morte hominis cunctatio longa est.

(f) Julian. in fin. Misopog. p. 371. Ed. Spanhem. 'Tis an Encouragement to the Growth of Wickedness, to show any Favour to Thieves and Villains. Appianus Alexand. Mithrid. Bello, p. 250. Ed. H. Steph. There is nothing more Ungrateful than a pardon'd Criminal. And therefore none ought to be pardon'd but such as repent of their Wickedness.

(g) Gunth. Ligurinum, l. 1. v. 478, &c.

Plus sæpe nocet sapientia Regis,
Quam rigor: ille nocet paucis, hic incitat omnes
Dum se ferre suos sperant impune reatus.

Excess of Mildness in indulgent Kings,
More Danger, than the strictest Rigour brings.
Some few perhaps may by Injustice die,
But who can any pleasing Sin deny,
Secure of Pardon and Impunity?

Sæus Rosar. Pers. c. 8. 'Tis brave and generous to forgive. But there is no Reason we should find a Cure for his Wounds who hath been a publick Enemy. A Man ought to think it an Injury to Mankind to let go a Serpent. To this relates what Lepidus said in Tacitus, Ann. 2. when he was against dealing severely with the foolish Poet; If he be pardon'd, the Common-wealth will be in no Danger by it; and if he be punish'd, his Example will have no Effect. (2) Vid. Grot. ubi supra, f. 14. (3) See above in B. I. c. 6. f. 17. (h) Arnob. l. 7. The Number of Criminals certainly encreaseth, according to the Hopes they have of buying off their Crimes; and Men are less scrupulous of offending, when they see the Favour of a Pardon is easily purchas'd.

But

But I don't know whether it be not a more dangerous Mistake, without very good Reason, to suspend the Execution of a Law still in force, for the sake of certain Persons; than utterly to abrogate it: since generally, none of the common Grievances of Men, seem more insupportable than this, That Persons of equal Merit, are not used with equal Justice. But notwithstanding, as the Sovereign may, when he sees good Reason for it, repeal an intire positive Law: so he has Power to suspend its Effect, with regard to certain Persons, and certain Crimes, the Law in other respects being still in force. The Sovereign I say, for subordinate Judges are not to make or alter Laws, but only to pass Sentence, according to those already made (a). Grotius, in the Chapter before mention'd, Seet. 25, 26. distinguishes the Reasons of Pardon given after the penal Law, into Intrinsic and Extrinsic. The Intrinsic Reason, according to him is, when the Punishment would not be unjust, as being before lawfully enacted and promulg'd, but however has the Appearance of too much Severity, when set in Comparison with the Fact; though I confess, I should think, that if the Penalty the Law enforces be in general too severe, it would be a wiser Method to correct the Law it self, than to pardon some few, and leave others expos'd to the Rigour of the Punishment. But undoubtedly Judges are obliged, upon all Rules of Equity, if not entirely to remit, at least to mitigate the Punishment, when they find in certain particular Facts, a Concurrence of Circumstances, that alleviate the Crime, as to the Quantity and Quality the Law supposes. In which Cases, the Fact it self hath the Intrinsic Grounds, though not of Pardon, yet of some Mitigation of the Penalty adherent to it. And therefore, I am of Opinion, 'twould be much more proper, to allow of no other but the external Causes of relaxing Punishment; such as the former Deserts of the Criminal himself, the Merits of his Family, or Relations, or some other commendable Action or Thing; or lastly, the Hopes that the Delinquent may make Amends for his Fault, by many good Actions afterward. 'And therefore, Tully saith (b), That a Man that petitions for Pardon, should first of all put the Judges in Remembrance, what good things he hath formerly done, and show how they overbalance the Guilt of his present Crime; and that in short, he has been the Cause of more Good, than Evil: And then, saith he, in the next place, he should recount the good Actions of his Family, whatever he thinks proper to be insisted on, and then he is to prove that he did not commit the Fact either out of Malice or Cruelty, but out of Rashness, or from some ' other Person's Inflation, or upon any other creditable or honourable Cause which engag'd him in it; and after all make what Promises, and give what Assurance he is able, that the Sense of his Crime, and the Lenity of the Judges in pardoning him, shall have such an Influence upon him for the future, as shall entirely restrain him from ever attempting the like again. And thus it hath been usual to pardon some Criminals, upon the Desert and Merit of their Ancestors, or at the Request of Men in favour. 'Tis related of the Emperor Hadrian, that he alleviated the Punishment of Criminals, according to the number of Children they had (c). And some have been acquitted, because they happen'd to be the last of Noble and Illustrious Families. Phryne an Athenian Courtisan, when she was tried for her Life, was brought off by the Art of Lysias the Orator (1), who took off her upper Garment, and expos'd her naked Breast to the Court. And M. Antony the Roman Orator, brought off M. Aquilius, when he was plainly convicted of Bribery, by the like Art. For bringing him in Publick View into the Court, at the Close of his Defence, he open'd his Bosom and shew'd the People the honourable Wounds he had received there (d). Polydore Virgil relates it, as a Custom which obtain'd formerly in England, that no Criminals, except such as were convicted of Treason, suffer'd Death, but were condemned only to perpetual Imprisonment, if they could but Read (e). And these Reasons will appear more Satisfactory, if upon Examination of the Fact, it seems to be particularly exempted from the Reason of the Law. The General Reason indeed, for the Observation of every Law, is the Authority and Will of the Sovereign Legislator; which, when there appears no other Reason, is Reason sufficient; but the Particular, is either some Benefit likely to accrue to the Common-wealth, or some Inconvenience which may be avoided, by the Observation of the Law: as for Example, let us imagine some place where sumptuary Laws are in force; the general Reason of these Laws, is the Will of the Legislator; the particular, that the Estates of the private Subjects may not be wasted or squandered away by extravagant and unnecessary Charges; and in this Instance, though the general Reason of the Law may be enough to support the Authority of it; yet when the particular Reason of it ceases, the Punishment may justly be remitted with greater Ease, and less Discredit to the Authority of the Law: As for Example, in this Case, if we suppose the Offender in such plentiful Circumstances, as to be out of Danger of being reduced to Poverty by the Vanity and Lavishness of his Expences. Rigid Governments indeed, will hardly bear Neglect in the Execution of their Laws or Commands, only because the particular Reason of them is ceas'd. As 'tis said, Cambyses was very well pleas'd that Cræsus was saved, but yet put the Persons to Death, that spared him, for their Remisness in Executing his Command. Again, it may be a reasonable Plea for Pardon, either when a Man is intangled in a Crime through Ignorance, though perhaps not such an Ignorance as wholly discharge the Fault, but such as might proceed from Remisness or Negligence; or if he were taken with any sudden Weakness or Disorder of Mind, which could not be easily prevented or overcome. Under the first of these, we may place the Misfortune of Charondas, in Diod. Siculus, who came through Inadvertency with a Sword on into a Publick Assembly, contrary to a Law he himself had made; and therefore I think he had no Reason, upon that Account, to lay violent hands upon himself (a). There is another Story in the same Author, of Diocles the Syracusan (b), who instituted a Law, by which it was made Death for any Man to be seen Arm'd in the Forum, without any Allowances to be made for Inadvertency or any other Circumstances; and yet he, upon the News that the Enemy had made an Incurſion into his Territories, Arm'd himself, and hearing that there was a Sedition rais'd in the Forum, went thither with his Sword on; but being told of it by a private Person, kill'd himself with it. But indeed there was no Pity due to him, because in his Law, he had cut off all Exceptions of Inadvertency, or any other Circumstances of the like Nature. Neither is what has been said of this Point, in the least refuted, by all that tedious Dispute of Matthæus, de Criminibus ad L. 48. Tit. 19. §. 5. D. To what has been already said it must be added, That as the Measures of Punishment in Human Judicature must be taken by the Advantages of the Common-wealth; so the same Rule may make it Necessary to admit Criminals to pardon upon Account of their Numbers. For though in general 'tis no Excuse to plead, that there were others guilty of the same Crimes (c) (1); yet every wise Government ought to take care that Justice, which is intended for the Preservation of Human Society, should not prove the Ruine and Destruction of it.

(a) Lysias II. Orat. 13. c. 3. in Alcibiad. Themistius, Orat. 9. de Humanitate Theodosii. There is a great difference between the Power and the Duty of a Prince, and a Judge; The latter is to be directed by the Laws, The former may amend and alter them, alleviate and soften their Rigour and Severity; as being himself a living Law. L. 40. t. 9. l. 12. f. 1. qui, & a quibus Manumiss. & L. 49. t. 8. l. 1. f. 2. D. quæ sentent. sine Appellat. rescind.

(b) Cic. de Invent. l. 2. c. 35. (c) Vid. Xiphilin. Epit. Dion. Vid. Liv. L. 8. c. 35. (1) The Author was Hypocrites and not Lysias, V. Athen. l. 13. (d) Herodot. Thali, p. 112, Ed. H. Steph. (e) Polyd. Virg. Hist. Angl. l. 26.

*Cautius ingentes morbos, & proxima Cordi
Ulcera, Pæoniâ tractat solertia cura, Parcendoque secat; ferro ne longius acto,
Irrevocandus eat sectis vitalibus error.*

The Skilful Surgeon all his Care applies,
When nigh the Heart the burning Ulcer lies;
With gentlest Touch he tries th' affected Part,
And probes th' throbbing Wound with cautious Art,
Nor wide th' Incision makes, but spares th' Unſound,
For fear the Vitals suffer by the Wound (d) (e).

And therefore 'tis a very good Character of a Prince Ovid gives us, L. 1. de Ponto (2), that He reforms more Vices by threatening Punishment, than by Punishment it self. Besides, 'tis frequently necessary either to soften the Rigour of some Laws, or else suffer them to grow out of use. So Tacitus saith, Ann. l. 3. (3), 'That it was propos'd to reform the Law called Papia Poppæa, because the Number of Persons 'obnoxious encreas'd, and every Family lay at Mercy, ready to be ruin'd upon the Suggestion of the Informers; and because, as he saith afterwards, the Informers had advanc'd themselves so far, that they had prevail'd not only in the City, but also over all Italy, and over every Citizen they could find any where else; so that many were already ruin'd, and almost every one was under the same Apprehensions. And thus Tiberius, in his Letter to the Senate (f) tells them, That he thought it a more proper Method to pass by the Headstrong Over-grown Vices, than by attempting to correct them, to discover only what Crimes they had not Strength enough to master; That it would be best to reform them first in themselves, and then to be content to wait till Shame had corrected them in the Nobility, Necessity in the Poor, and Rich should grow weary of them. For Men were not made for Punishment, but Punishment for Men. And therefore, if they who have the right to inflict punishment are under Apprehensions of imminent Danger upon the infliction of it, they can be no more oblig'd to punish, than a Man is to lay Violent Hands upon himself. In a Ship, if a Pilot should commit a Crime, when no Body but He understands the Management of the Vessel, 'tis plain that the Man that would do Justice upon him must unavoidably shipwreck himself, and all the rest of the Passengers. And so also the

(a) V. Diodor. Sicul. l. 12. c. 19. (b) L. 13. 33.

(c) Vid. Hæocrat. laudat. Busrud. circa fin. p. 397.

(1) Quæ sit auctoritas ejus, qui se alterius factò, non suo defendat? Cicer. Orat. in Vatin. C. 6. p. 243. Ed. Græv.

(d) Claudianus de Bello Getico. v. 120, &c. (e) Lucanus Pharsal. l. 2. v. 141, &c.

— Dumq; nimis jam putrida membra recidit,
Excessit medicina modum, nimiumq; secuta est
Qua morbi duxere, manus: periere nocentes,
Sed cum jam soli possent superesse nocentes.

Tot simul infesto juvenes succumbere leto,
Sæpe famæ, pelagiq; furor, subitaq; ruina,
Aut cæli terræq; lues, aut bellica clades
Nunquam Pæna fuit. — Ib. v. 198.

While he, the sound, freed from th' infected part,
With Diligence severe and barbarous Art,
The weaken'd Body sank beneath the Smart.
The Guilty only were of Life depriv'd,
But when the Guilty only had surviv'd.

In Plagues and Famines, and relentless Seas,
By Earthquakes, and by common Enemies,
Rome oft her noblest Lives in numbers spent;
But ne'er before gave up to Punishment.

Senec. de Ira, l. 2. c. 10. There is a Necessity of Pardon when the whole Army deserts. (2) Epist. 2. v. 127.

Nulla metu pæna, pæna qui pæna, coerces.

(3) C. 25. 28.

(f) Tacit. Ann. l. 3. c. 54.

Magistrate may lawfully wink at some Crimes, the Punishment of which would be of dangerous Consequence to the Common-wealth: And especially, when the Persons guilty are necessary to the common Safety and Preservation. Tho' the Magistrate ought never to make any direct Agreement, for the permission of Vice, much lets make publick Gain by it (a). In Italy, Pardons are sometimes publickly promis'd to any of the Banditti, that shall bring with him the Head of another of the same Gang. (Tho' Harry Stephens (b) seems to have disapproved that Custom, and says, that the reason of it might appear agreeable enough in an Aristotle or a Plato, but could never become a Christian.) Upon such a Promise that the Villains might have a Jealousie of one another, and be hinder'd from uniting into Bodies, and from doing so much mischief as otherwise to the Common-wealth. (Sir Thomas More was of a contrary Opinion in his Utop. l. 2.)

XVIII. I shall in the next place enquire into the Method of rating Penalties, or what Measure of Punishment it is reasonable to allot to particular Crimes. And here besides what I have before (1) said concerning the quantity of Actions, 'tis obvious to observe, that in Civil Courts the measures of Criminal Actions are taken chiefly, First, from the Object they are concern'd in; and Secondly, as their Malignity doth more or less harm to the Common-wealth; And Thirdly, from the Intention and Malice of the Delinquent, which may be discovered by variety of Circumstances. The greater therefore and more noble the Object injured is, the greater and more Criminal is the Fact esteem'd. As therefore, as of all Objects, God Almighty is the Greatest and most Excellent, so any Action which tends to his Dishonour, is of all others the most wicked and detestable. And as the Obedience and Reverence due to him, which consists chiefly in the Actions of our Minds, ought to influence and govern our whole Lives; so (as he himself has discover'd his Pleasure), those Actions by which we express our external Reverence to Him may be superseded, when they come in Competition with those, which design any extraordinary benefit to Mankind, or to avert any great Evil from them, where there is danger in the delay. Luk. XIV. v. 5. the Actions next in remove from these, are such as affect the whole Body of Mankind; And then such as disturb the Publick order of the Common-wealth. Afterwards follow those Criminal Actions, that affect only particular Men; and under this Rank, the Civil Court sets those foremost, that strike at Life, the Foundation of all our temporal Happiness; and next such as concern the Members, not Vital, but without which life it self, would be an uneasy Burden; And which are to be valued according to the dignity of their use (2). The next Class of Criminal Actions are those, that disorder the quiet and honour of private Families; the Foundation of which is Matrimony; (though Philo the Jew, in his Book de Decalogo & de Special. Leg. places the Command against Adultery, before that against Murder) And in the next place, we may rank those that rob us of, or deny us those Blessings, which make up the Necessaries and Conveniences of Life; and that either directly or indirectly, by depriving us of them out of wicked design. And in the last place, we may reckon such as deprive us of our Reputation, or civil Character and Esteem. In the particulars of these Crimes, such are of the first Rank, which have reach'd to the greatest height of a consummate perpetration. The Inferiour are those that terminate in some Acts, and are not arrived at their full growth. And in these, the Degrees of Malignity differ according to the pitch they have arrived at. And here we may observe, that naturally, a Design, and Inclination to transgress, in any particular Act, must not be consider'd under the same Degree of Enormity, with the Fact it self, actually finished; because Evil presents it self to the Mind, under more odious and disagreeable Colours, when we come to close with the Commission of it; and consequently a Man must have greater Obstinacy, and Resolution, to overcome it, than when it lies, as it were at a Distance, and he hath but newly entertain'd the thoughts of the Attempt. When therefore we say the Will is the same with the Deed, we must understand, that this is meant only of such an Act of the Will which is united with the utmost Endeavour, so that no new Operation of the Will Intervene between this and the Event of the Crime, though the success of the Action fail; As suppose a Man takes aim at another to shoot him, tho' he should miss his Mark (3). And therefore Sir Tho. More, Eutop. l. 2. saith, 'That there is no less Danger in 'having attempted any ones Chastity, than in 'having actually violated it. For in every 'Criminal Action, a settled and determinate 'endeavour, is equal to the Deed. For 'tis 'not reasonable, that that Man should have 'any allowance made him for what was 'wanting to the completion of his Action; 'since 'twas far enough from his intent, that 'any such defect should happen. But the generality of such kind of Evils are rated higher or lower according to the Disparity of the Subjects they happen to light upon, as to their State and Condition, Happiness or Infelicity, Age, Time, or Necessity, or any particular Passion, or Affection, that might byas to some particular good, or give an Aversion to some Species of Evil. Neither must we only barely consider, what are the direct and immediate Consequences of any Action, but also what else may probably ensue; as in Fire, and Inundations, the Miseries and Deaths of a number of unfortunate People, are always to be consider'd

(a) See 2 Pet. II. 15. (b) Apolog. pro Herodot. c. 18, hereafter in Section 27. towards the End.

(1) B. 1. c. 8. (2) See Grav. B. 2. c. 20. f. 30. (3) See

(4): And

(a): And therefore the Chinese make it death, for any Man to be the occasion of the breaking out of Fire, tho' it were only by his neglect.

XIX. The intenseness or remissness of the Will and Inclination, are to be measured principally by the Causes and Motives which engage Men in Sin (1). There is hardly any Man wicked, without cause or design (2); for if a Man be in love with Vice, purely for its own sake, and sin only out of Vanity and Affectation, or has no other reason to give for his Vices, than that they are unaccountable and incredible (b), he must certainly be arriv'd at the highest pitch 'tis possible for Human Impiety and Impudence to reach. And therefore, we never find any Malefactor so confident, but he will either deny the Fact, or pretend some plausible reason for excuse, and extenuate it from some pretence of Nature (c). 'Tis certain, the greatest part of the World are perswaded into Sin by their Passions. Some of these press us with a sort of Violence, to escape present or imminent Evil. And 'tis reasonable these should be allowed to excuse or extenuate the Crime. And therefore such Crimes as are the Effects of the Fear of Death, Imprisonment, or any great Discontent, Pain or Passion, or of extreme Poverty, are always look'd upon to be excusable. The wise Hebrew pronounces, That the Thief whose mean Circumstances tempt him to Steal, is a more excusable Criminal than the Adulterer. So Theft in case of Hunger, is a less Crime, than the same, when it is the effect of unmeasurable Avarice; and Perjury upon fear of Death is more excusable than only upon the view of Gain, or to betray a Trust. And thus, as the Author ad Herennium speaks, B. 2. (3). 'Tis a greater Crime to debauch a Woman of Quality, than commit Sacrilege; because 'tis possible Extremity may force a Man upon the one, but the other can be the effect only of ungovernable Lust (d). And therefore Bawds that live by encouraging and supplying the Lusts of others, deserve more severe punishment, than any Man that pursues only his own Pleasure. It is the Opinion of the Emperor Antoninus (e), That those Crimes which Anger gives occasion to, are more excusable than those that arise from Lust. For, saith he, a Man that yields to the Passion of Anger, seems to break with the Laws of Reason, with some Regret and secret Reluctance of Mind; but one that sins in complaisance to his Lusts, gives himself up with Pleasure, and therefore is more intemperate, as well as more soft and effeminate in his compliance. And as another observes (f), Anger has a much stronger, and a more violent influence upon us than Love; for that gives us time to deliberate and consider with our selves; but Anger raises such Storms in men's Breasts as hurry them besides themselves, and is never quiet till it is satisfied. The Bias of the other Passions inclines men either to some real or imaginary Good: The things that are really good, can have no natural tendency in them to tempt us into sin; such are all kind of Vertues and the Actions which flow from them. Other things may indeed be good in themselves, but may be also inducements to Sin, according to the disposition of the Man's mind, who is in possession of them. Of this Kind, some are pleasing and delightful; others instrumental only in the procurement of delights, which are such as we call useful. Now every Crime committed in pursuit of any of these things, is (ceteris paribus) look'd upon to be more excusable, the more that good which was in view, appears to be agreeable to Nature, or the more uneasy Men are without it. The imaginary good Things are such as Men owe the Credit and Value of, either to their Folly, their Vanity, or their Vices: Among these, we may rank Vain-Glory, or an Opinion of more than common Worth, neither bottom'd upon Vertue, nor with any mixture of real Profit joyn'd to it; as also Revenge, as it proposes to it self, nothing else but the harm of the injurious Person. And the less of Nature there is in these, and the easier it is for a Man to be without them, the more criminal are those Actions judg'd that flow from the pursuit of them (g). It is also certain, that all Crimes which are the result of clear and distinct Knowledge, are greater than those which arise from Error and Mistake: and that those Errors are more dangerous and criminal which a Man runs into, through an obstinate pursuit of his own Principles, and false Reason, than those which he imbibes from Publick Teachers. And it is also well observ'd by Hobbes, Leviath. c. 27. That the same Fact committed upon a presumption of Power, Friends, or Riches, by the assistance of which, the Offender hopes to resist the Publick Ministers of Justice, is a greater Crime than when it proceeds from hopes of not being discovered, or escaping by flight; for the one is an open contempt of the Law, the other not (h). And therefore Aristotle saith (i), such as deny and persist in their Crimes are punish'd with more severity; but such as think themselves justly dealt with, deserve to be us'd with gentleness and lenity: and the reason is plain, because 'tis impudence to deny what is plainly prov'd; and impudence is contempt and wilful opposition. And upon this View (says Seneca (k)) a wise Man will sometimes pardon a great Crime easier than a less, if he finds that that was the effect rather of weakness and infirmity, than rancour and malice; and that this is the product of a close, designing, inveterate Craft. Neither will he punish the same Crime after the same manner, in different Offenders, when what the one committed through indiscretion and negligence, the other did industriously and deliberately.

(a) Vid. Grot. d. 1. (1) Vid. Grot. d. 1. f. 29. (2) V. Senec. de Benef. L. 4. c. 17. V. Auctor. ad Herennium, L. 2. c. 19. (b) Calpurn. Flaccus, Declam. 2. Princip. (c) Cicer. de L.L. l. 1. c. 14. (3) Chap. 30. towards the End. See hereafter, Sect. 21. towards the End. (d) Add. Val. Max. l. 8. c. 1. in fin. (e) L. 2. c. 10. (f) Libanius, Declam. 23. (g) Grot. d. 1. f. 29. (h) Add. Aristot. Rhet. l. 1. c. 12. & 14. (i) Rhet. l. 2. c. 3. (k) Senec. de Ira, l. 1. c. 16.

XX. Another Argument of the great force and violence of the Inclination and Intention, is, when besides the common Reasons that ought to be sufficient to restrain a Man from sin, there happen to be other particular Reasons, founded either in the Person of the Delinquent, or in the Person of him who was injured in the Fact, or in any other Circumstances. Thus as Juvenal saith (a),

Omne animi vitium tanto conspectius in se Crimen habet, quanto major qui peccat habetur.

—More publick Scandal Vice attends,
As he is Great and Noble, who offends.

And thus the same sort of Sin, committed by a Church-man, is look'd upon to be a greater fault than by any one else, because 'tis expected he should be a Pattern of a pious and unblameable Life to others: For a Man that neglects himself, what he persuades others to do, confutes his own counsel by his practice; for the force of his example by which he dissuades, is much stronger than all the Arguments by which he would convince (b). Tully saith, 'The Guilt there is in the Vices of a Prince, is not so much to be consider'd (tho' that too may be great enough) as the consequences that attend them, that there will be always great numbers ready to imitate them; and therefore Princes of bad Morals deserve very ill of the Common-wealth; not only as they are vicious themselves, but as they spread and propagate Vice: not only as they are wicked themselves, but as they do more harm by their Example than by their Sin (c). Thus Tacitus (1) saith of Capito, 'That he was the more remarkably Scandalous, because being so great a Master in the Knowledge of Human and Divine Laws, he had forfeited his publick Character, and disgraced his own private Skill. And Tully saith in another place (d), As it would be unpardonable in a Man that profess himself a Grammarian, to speak improperly, or in one that profess to have Skill in Singing, to show none in the Practice of it; because these are Faults in the Arts they pretend to: So a Philosopher that is guilty of Misbehaviour in the Conduct of Life, is the most inexcusable; because he is deficient in those Duties he affects to be thought a Master of; and commits Mistakes in the Art of Life which he professeth (e). In Peru, under the Empire of the Inca's, a Magistrate found guilty of any Crime, was punished with greater Severity than any private Offender; For This reason added, that He was expressly prefer'd to the Administration of Justice, and plac'd in an Office of Trust, upon the presumption that he was a Man of more than common Probity and Goodness (f). Upon this account the Injuries of a Friend, affect us more than those of an Enemy (g). And on the other side, a Benefit conferr'd by an Enemy, is more pleasing and more valued, than the Kindness of a Friend: Notwithstanding what Terence saith, 'That when a Man stands in need of a good turn, he is glad to receive it at any hand; but 'tis double pleasure to receive it from one he has reason to expect it from (h). For the same Reason, an Affront from a Man of mean Circumstances, is more insupportable than from an Equal or Superiour (i); or from a Man's own Children or Servants, than from another's. There are also some particular Crimes, which are branded with particular Infamy, as consisting in the violation of such Acts of Duty, which Men are obliged to pay to certain particular Persons, (2) and are therefore judg'd to be more highly wicked; such as Disobedience to Parents, (3) Inhumanity and Rudeness to Relations, Ingratitude to Benefactors; which are look'd upon to be more heinous, than if they terminated in any other Persons (k). In fine, 'tis a material aggravation, to consider the time, and place, when, and where the Fact was committed. And thus the same Crime committed in a publick place, before Witnesses, is greater, than when a Man endeavours to conceal it; both because, what is acted with the advantage of secrecy, at least gives less scandal; and because, 'tis a strong presumption, that, that Man is a bold and harden'd Offender, that has the impudence to out-face the World, and to sin, as it were, in defiance to all the good and sober part of Mankind (l). Thus it is a

(a) Sat. VIII. v. 140, 141. Dio Chrysostr. Orat. 1. de Regno, p. 9. C. Any Vice in a Prince is more heinous, and more in view. And to this sense we may apply that of Pliny, Nat. Hist. l. 5. c. 1. Men are never more credulous and easy of Belief, than when any Falsity is promoted under the Authority of a Great Man.

(b) Libanius, Declam. 29. (c) Cicer. de L.L. l. 3. c. 14. Senec. Hercul. Fur. v. 745, 746. The Crimes of Princes are of deeper Stains. (1) Annal. III. 70. (d) Tuscul. Quest. l. 2. c. 4. (e) Quintil. Declam. 3. p. 38. 'Tis the Misfortune of Superiors to be thought to command Others, what they do Themselves: and Evil is always most Pernicious, when the Author of it is Great and Powerful. (f) Garcilass. de la Vega Com. Reg. l. 2. c. 14.

(g) Petron. One that offers Violence to a Stranger is a Villain, but a Man that injures his Friend is little less than a Parricide. Among the Celts, according to Nic. Damascenus, de Moribus Gentium, a Man that Kill'd a Foreigner was Punish'd more severely than if he had Kill'd a Subject. The Punishment of the first, was Death, of the second, only Banishment. (h) Terent. Adelph. Act. 2. Sc. 3. v. 1, 2. (i) Vid. L. 47. t. 10. l. 17. f. 3. D. de Injur.

(2) D. ubi supra, l. 7. f. 8. (3) Vid. Grot. L. 2. c. 20. f. 30. & 2 Sam. c. XVI. v. 11. (k) To this purpose is that Passage in Lyfias, speaking to the Athenians, Orat. 4. contra Andocid. c. 6. Ye ought to shew your selves more severe to your own Subjects, when they Prophane the Rites of your Religion, than to Foreigners; Because the Crime, as these commit it, seems to come from Abroad; in your own People 'tis Native and Intestine.

(l) Vide Aristot. Probl. f. 29. q. 14. Vide D. De ubi supra, l. 7. f. 8.

greater sin, to be guilty of unchast Actions in a Church, than in a Tavern; to strike in the Court, than in a private House; and to be guilty of Intemperance on an ordinary day, ceteris paribus, is more excusable, than on days set aside for Devotion (a). Thus Cicero severely aggravates Antony's Crime, for coming into the Court so disorder'd with Wine, as to be forc'd to vomit while he sat on the Bench (b). Thus the Declaimer saith (c), 'That tho' Rudeness in any other place may perhaps be excusable, yet in the Temple, where we set a guard upon our words, where we compose our Souls, and confine even our thoughts, to offer an injury, or affront there, with the same boldness as in an unrequented, private place, is unsufferable (d). Lastly, The Methods and the Instruments used in the commission of the Fact, seem to be accessory to the aggravation or extenuation of the Crime; because 'tis usual to infer from them, the force or weakness of the intention. And therefore 'tis a greater Crime to rob a Man of his Goods, by forcing his House, by digging through his Walls, or artificially picking his Locks, than by going in boldly at an open Door.

XXI. Another Thing which aggravates or extenuates the Crime, is the power or ability the Person was Master of, to forbear the Fact (i). For some Men have clearer and more lively Apprehensions of the Reasons why they should decline ill Acts than others. And some have stronger Propensities than others to some particular sorts of sins, which may be accounted for, either by the particular mixture and constitution of the Body; or else by the Age, Sex, Education, or other Circumstances (e): For 'tis easie to observe, that young People, Women, and Men of grosser natural Parts, or that have had no advantages of Education, do not so accurately distinguish between Just and Unjust, Lawful and Unlawful; and know very little of the measures of them, or how to weigh and consider them (f). In Persons, where Cholera is the prevailing humour in the Body, Anger is the governing Passion; others of more and warmer Blood, are easily inclined to Lust: Age turns our Desires one way, and Youth another (g). Again, The nigher any Evil seems to threaten, the stronger is the fear it causes, and the more difficult it is to resist it. A fresh Resentment strikes us with more Violence, than that which hath been cool'd by interval of time. And tho' Grief and Discontent will not always be silenc'd at first by Reason, yet they have not the same excuse when they have had time to be compos'd and quieted. In general, It is more Criminal to go sedately and calmly to commit sin, than in a disorder and disturbance of Passion (h). And therefore Aristotle says, 'That every Man must think him less excusable, who engages in a bad Action upon weak Temptations, than One, that is guilty of the same, upon the violent persuasions of strong Passions. And that when a Man strikes in cold Blood, he is more Criminal than if he were angry; for how far would such a one proceed, (saith he) if he were heated into a Passion? It was Pittacus's Law indeed (i), That such as abus'd others in their Wine, should pay double the sum they should do, if they had been sober: 'For since People in that condition, (saith Aristotle,) are generally inclined to be more abusive than others, the Law doth not so much regard the Pardon which ought rather to be allow'd to Men in the disorders of Drink, as the publick Good (k). But Crimes that arise from Passions, are look'd upon to be less odious when they are the effects of a Passion alarm'd and rous'd in us at the appearance of Evil; and such as arise from an appetite or eager pursuit after pleasures, especially the more needless ones, to be more criminal. For Pleasure doth not affect us so sensibly, and may be easier delay'd, or satisfied more innocently some other way without guilt. And (Aristotle saith) therefore, 'That 'tis a greater uneasiness to bear Pain of any sort, than to deny Pleasure: For, (saith he in another place) Pain distracts and weakens Nature in

(a) Ibid. l. 9. f. 1. D. de Injuriis, &c. (b) Cicero. Orat. Philip. 2. c. 25. (c) Quintil. Declam. 252. If any Injury be done to the Magistrate, it is an Act of Hostility against the State; if to an Ambassador, Satisfaction must be demanded by War, and the Laws of Nations. The same Sum of Money taken from a private Man, is Theft; from the Altar or Temple, Sacrilege. And so one that violates another's Chastity, shall pay to the Party demanding barely Satisfaction for Virginity, Ten Thousand Sesterces; but one that hath been publickly Guilty of the same Crime, and ravish'd a Candidate to the Priesthood, must not be allow'd the same Terms. Quintil. Decl. 264. Add. Instit. Orat. l. 6. c. 1.

(d) Demosthen. adv. Midiam. I was Abused by my Enemy, in cold Blood, in the Morning, out of Malice, not upon any heat of Wine, publickly, before Strangers, as well as Citizens, and that in the Temple, whether I was obliged to go by the Duty of my Office.

(e) Vid. Gros. l. 2. c. 20. f. 31. (f) Vid. L. 48. t. 13. l. 6. D. ad L. Juliam peculatus, &c. in Princip.

(g) Procop. Hist. Vandal. l. 2. c. 14. As it is very unusual, so it would be the more commendable, for the Son to lay aside that Falseness and Violence of Temper which run through the Family, and to take up a contrary Coolness and Probity.

(h) Gramond. Hist. Gall. l. 13. Young People seldom trouble themselves to be Wise, because they look upon it to be their Privilege to do what they please. Libanius, Decl. 21. p. 531. C. D. Ed. Paris. It borders very much upon Youth, to neglect the Obligations of Duty, and to be ignorant of what is Just and Honourable. Ibid. In all Nations the Age is made the Excuse for young People.

(i) Cic. Off. l. 1. c. 8. Those Faults which are the effects of any sudden Commotion, are more excusable than such as are premeditated and designed. Philo Jud. de Specialibus Legibus. p. 791. B. Edit. Paris. says, That it is an imperfect Crime which is not the effect of much Deliberation. Plato de L. L. l. 9. p. 931. C. Ed. Wech. They that Kill a Man upon premeditated Malice, are to be Punish'd more severely, than such as are guilty of Man-slaughter only, out of a sudden Rashness. (j) Aristot. Polit. l. 2. c. 12. (k) This Law is also mention'd by Plutarch in Conviv. 7. Sapient. p. 155. F.

' the Person that suffers it; but Pleasure hath ' a different effect, and offers it self fairer to ' our choice, and therefore ought to be thought ' more criminal and opprobrious (a). Lastly, Another motive to alleviate the Penalty, is when a Man's Friends and Relations perswade him to transgress the Laws (b).

XXII. 'Tis also usually consider'd, whether the Malefactor were himself the First of the Kind, or were seduc'd by the Examples of others; whether this be the first time he is found guilty, or whether he be an old Offender. For in every Common-wealth, the first Man that has the boldness to commit a Crime, which is like to be of ill Example, and which he does in a manner inform others in, is more highly Criminal, than another that has been encouraged by frequent Precedents in the like Crime before (c). Again, the same Fact, if it hath been constantly punish'd in other Men, is a greater Crime, than if there have been frequent Instances of Impunity: because the first is greater Contempt of the Government and Laws, than the latter. But the more or less frequent Repetition of the same Action, doth not make it in it self better or worse, any farther than as it discovers it to proceed from inveterate Custom or Habit (d). And since regard is principally had to the frequency of the Repetition, in the making an estimate of Moral Actions, (since from thence 'tis usual to measure the force of a Man's Resolution; and therefore it is commonly said, that ill Habits are worse than ill Acts;) it sufficiently appears why a good Action which a Man has frequently repeated, is look'd upon to be better than one he has but newly begun, or very seldom practis'd: and on the other hand, why a bad Action, often reiterated, is judg'd a greater Crime, than one the same Person has but once or twice been found guilty of (1). To this purpose was the Emperour Julian's Law against Lyars (e); If any of my Servants be found guilty of a Lye, the first time, I pardon it; if he presume a second time, I bear with him: if it be prov'd upon him a third, he has not absolutely incurr'd my Displeasure; but if he venture the fourth time, I forbid him my Presence. But the Peruvians under the Government of the Inca's, took particular care to punish the first Essays of their Criminals, because by this Method they thought they might prevent the return of the same Crime another time. For unless the Weeds are rooted up when they first appear, it must be expected that they will plentifully encrease. And where Justice moves so slow as not to reach the Offender, 'till he has repeated his Crime, private Subjects are apt to grow impatient, and to take the liberty to Redress themselves, to the prejudice of the publick Peace (f). Neither is it any Objection, that a good Habit gives an easiness to good Actions; or that on the contrary, an ill Habit makes it difficult to forbear doing ill. For that labour it must cost a Man to attain the good Habit at first, is a sufficient reason why the value of it ought not to be less'n'd, tho' the exercise of it be Easy and Pleasant. And on the other side, the aversion to Sin, ought to be therefore the greater, because by a frequency in doing ill, a Man shall contract such a Familiarity with Vice, as he will hardly ever be able to renounce, and by repeated Transgressions will be abandon'd to Impudence, and forget the sense of Shame. For the common Infirmities of Human Nature, will excuse some Errors and Slips in the conduct of Life; but to be often guilty of the same Miscarriages, is a degree of Madness not to be born with (g). The Faults a Man is guilty of at sixteen, will not appear the same, tho' all other Circumstances be supposed to continue, when he is forty; for by that time, besides that, his Habit appears inveterate and inexcusable, the maturity of his Judgment must cut off all pretences of excuse and plea for pardon. And all these things are, with good reason, to be consider'd in levying punishment. For a Crime of no extraordinary Malignity, upon the first Commission, may be more easily pardon'd; or at least punish'd with less Rigour, than one which has been the common Practice of the Delinquent (2). Sometimes also, future Reformation is made the Condition of Pardon for past Offences: And in defect of that, the Punishment of the past, is join'd with that of the repeated Crime; and former Misdemeanours are again brought under the reach of Justice (h). From whence it appears, in what Sense that common Aphorism is allow'd to be True, That the Estimation of a Crime is never encreas'd by any after Act (3). And here it might also be enquired, how far that Custom of the Persians, which Herodotus speaks of, was agreeable to Natural Equity, when in Criminal Cases, the whole Course of the Delinquent's Life was examin'd, together with his particular Offence; and if upon the whole it appeared, that there was an overbalance of good Actions, the Crime was pardon'd. But upon a strict view, it must appear that all that signified nothing to the intrinsic estima-

(a) Arist. Nicom. l. 7. c. 8. The Intemperance of Anger is less Criminal than that of Lust. Id. Magn. Moral. l. 2. c. 6. A violent inclination for Pleasure is much more faulty than any excess of Anger. For Anger is a very restless uneasy Passion, and every one that is under the power of it, finds himself discomposed. But the Incontinence that ariseth from the concupiscible Appetites is attended with Pleasure, and therefore is less excusable, because it seems to be the effect of Wantonness and Effeminacy. There is a Passage like this, in Marcus Antoninus, l. 2. f. 10. Ad. Aristot. Probl. f. 29. q. 16. (b) Vid. L. 47. t. 16. l. 2. D. de receptator. Ad. Grotius, d. l. f. 29.

(c) Velleius Paterc. l. 2. c. 3. Precedents seldom stop where they begin, but if allow'd never so little Liberty, will soon make way for themselves to break out further. Vid. Gell. l. 10. c. 19. Polyb. excerpt legat. 93. c. 5. (d) Vid. L. 48. t. 19. l. 28. f. 3. D. de penis. Ant. Matthæus de crimin. tit. de furtis. f. 9. seqq. & L. 48. D. tit. 18. c. 4. f. 27, 28. (1) Vid. Grot. L. 2. c. 20. f. 30. (e) Libanius Legat. ad Julian. (f) Garcilass de la Vega. Com. R. l. 2. c. 14. (g) Sir Tho. Browne's Relig. Medici, f. 41. (2) V. Grot. d. l. (h) See i Kings l. 52. II. 23. (3) Nunquam crescit ex post facto, præteriti delicti estimatio, L. 50. t. 17. De divers. reg. Juris, l. 138. f. 1.

tion of the Crime: and therefore 'tis probable, this Method was not us'd in Crimes of an higher Quality, and where there were manifest Proofs of the prepenſe Malice of the Criminal; but as Grotius d. l. thinks, was, or at least ought to have been confin'd to such Cases only, where the Delinquent being not otherwise notoriously vicious was unwarily betray'd, by some Satisfaction or other, he conceiv'd, he should find in the Commission of the Fact, or else, where the Proof of the Fact lay Intricate and Perplex, a view of the Criminal's Life might be necessary to give the matter so much Light, as to discover whether it were probable, he was guilty or not: since a Man must make several Steps before he can come to the highest pitch of Guilt (1). Yet Herodotus (a), gives us an Example of Sandoces a Persian Judge, whom Darius commanded to be Crucified for taking Bribes; and giving wrong Judgment; but when he call'd to mind that the Services and good Offices he had done him, were more than his Crimes, order'd him to be taken down, and admitted him again to favour. And Cicero, in his Defence of Sulla, reasons the same way, 'In all Matters of Importance and Concern, (saith he) we are not to measure a Man's Intentions, Thoughts, or Actions, by the Fact it self; but by the Circumstances of his Life; and the reason (saith he) is, because according to the Opinion we receive of a Man's Morals, we generally Conjecture, how far he may be guilty, and how far not (b). And for this reason, it was usual in the Old Roman Judgments, for the Accuser to begin with a Censure upon the Life and Behaviour of the Criminal; and on the other side, the Patroni either made excuses for him themselves, or brought in the Laudatores, Persons that should give Testimony of his good Behaviour. And there was good reason for the Practice; for considering the general Depravation of Mankind; a Judge ought to be very cautious, how he takes away the Life of any Subject, who upon the whole, may rather be thought a good, than a bad Man. But it is to be observed, that an Inquiry into the Criminal's Morals, and past Life, where the Fact is intricate and obscure, may make the Presumptions great on both sides; and therefore, that if any Man has clearly acquitted himself of the Crime he was indicted of, he may lawfully plead, that he was not oblig'd to make a Defence for his Morals, or vindicate his former Behaviour, but only to acquit himself before the Court, of the Crimes his accusers directly charged him with (c). But yet when a Man that has always been a regular and dutiful Subject, changes his whole course of Life; there is good reason the Laws should deal severely with him, upon a double Account; both because he hath been guilty of a Crime, and because he has made so ill a Choice, as to change a good Course of Life for a bad one (d).

XXIII. Now although from what has been said, it sufficiently appears, that one Crime is greater than another; and that Human Justice ought not to punish every Crime with equal severity; yet notwithstanding, it must be confess'd, that both the precise Quantity and Quality of Human Punishments, depend upon the Determination of the Civil Sovereign, which is principally to be directed, by the advantages and publick Good of every Common-wealth. Upon this view Amasis King of Egypt, punish'd no Criminal with Death in all his Reign; but according to the Degrees of every Man's Offence, condemn'd him, to bring a quantity of Earth, or Rubbish to the City he belong'd to. And by this method the Ground the Cities stood upon was rais'd higher, and the Cities secur'd against the Inconveniences of the Flood upon the rising of the Nile (e). But indeed there is no Necessity, that there should be always the same Proportion observ'd between the Penalties, as there is distance between the Objects injured by the Offender. Every particular Crime may be sentenced to a particular Punishment, as it happens to be most agreeable to the Circumstances of the State; without any Regard, whether another Crime, which in it self may seem greater or less than this, be punish'd with more or less Severity. Plato proposes a Law of this Nature (f), 'That if any Man robb'd the Publick, whether of more or less, his Punishment should be the same. For (saith he) a Man that takes away a thing of less value, though he doth it with less force than another that robs the State of something greater, yet he is guilty of the same ill Principles and Intentions: And a Man that takes away something of considerable worth, which he never deposited, can but be Unjust and Criminal. The Law therefore doth not inflict greater or less Penalties upon the Offenders, from the Comparison it makes between the Degrees of their Theft, but because it supposes, that one is more capable of being Reform'd, than the other. 'Tis certain, a Judge ought so far to observe Equality in the Distribution of Punishments, as to take care that such as are equally guilty should be equally punish'd; and that a Fault which was severely corrected in one Man, should not without very good reason be excus'd in another: since it must be expected that such Partiality would be a certain cause to raise Disturbances in the Common-wealth; and because a Punishment can have no effect when it is not inflicted upon any view of publick

(1) Nemo repente fuit turpissimus — Juven. Sat. 2. v. 83. (a) Polyimnia, c. 13. (b) Orat pro Cluentio, c. 25.
 (c) Author. ad Herennium. l. 2. c. 3. (d) Polyb. l. 7. in Excerpt. Petrescian. But when he took a quite contrary way of Life, and grew every day worse and worse; 'twas fit every body should change their Opinions of him.
 (e) Herodot. Euterp. p. 90. Ed. H. Steph. Diodor. Sic. l. 1. c. 65. Tho' Amasis King of Egypt, when he built Rhinocolura, took care that all those sort of People, the Scum and Filth of the Nation, should be carried into a Place by themselves, that they might not infect others, Diodor. Sic. l. 1. c. 60. (f) Plato de LL. l. 12. init. p. 982. C. Ed. Weck.

Good, but barely in Gratification to private Passion. But still an Equality of Punishment must be suppos'd only where the Criminals are guilty of the same Fact in Specie, and not of different. For 'tis common for Human Justice to punish small Faults with greater Rigour, or to take the contrary Method, as the Exigences of the State, or the Will of the Legislator determines. And the Criminal has no Reason to complain of the Partiality, since he knew before-hand what he was to expect (a). For instance, though Theft in it self be a much less Crime than Murder, yet the Thief has no just reason to complain, should he be condemn'd to suffer the same Punishment with the Murderer, tho' his Crime was not equal in Degree. The reason why Crimes of different Degrees are equally punish'd with Death is, because Death is the greatest and last Evil Men can inflict (b); unless it be that sometimes the way to it is short and easy, and at other times made terrible, and grievous, by delay and torture (c); or that sometimes dishonour is done to the dead Body, and infamy fix'd upon the Memory of the Person (d), which is sometimes inflicted a considerable time after the Delinquent's Death; and may again be recall'd, and taken off (e). Besides, the Will of the Legislator is often consider'd in determining the Penalty, though not in so absolute a Degree, as to exclude the Interest and Advantage of the Publick, yet to such a Degree, that the particular punishment seems in a manner entirely to depend upon it. There are also some Crimes of so black a Nature, as will justify the greatest Severity that can be us'd upon Criminals who have contracted the slightest Acquaintance with them (f). So Philo says, 'That a Man who attempts only to kill another treacherously, is not the less guilty of Murder tho' he fails of Success: And the written Law in this Case commands, That if a Man come presumptuously upon his Neighbour to slay him with guile, thou shalt take him from mine Altar that he may die (g). The Athenian Judges indeed, were too severe, when they condemn'd a Boy for pricking out a Bird's Eyes, upon Suspicion, that it was a sign of a barbarous Temper, and that he might prove a very ill Member of the Common-wealth, if he were suffer'd to grow up to years of Maturity (h). But it is not the actual Commission of a wicked Act that makes the Criminal: 'Tis enough that a Man has arm'd himself, and discovers his Inclinations to Rob and Murder: For the Wickedness doth not always begin, but is exercis'd and improv'd only by the practice. For as Paternus reflects upon Caius Cato's being condemn'd for a small Offence (i); 'The Inclination and Intent of the Offender may sometimes be of greater force with the Judge than the Crime it self. For 'tis natural enough to argue from the Fact to the design of the Criminal; and to consider rather of what Nature the Offence is, than how great (k). In Cases of Treason and Conspiracy against the State, bare Consciousness, or Privity without any Assent, and Silence only, and the Concealment of it deserves Punishment (l). However in the Distribution of Punishment, there ought always to be as much Gentleness and Lenity

(a) Calpurnius Placcus, Declam. 5. When the Consequences are threaten'd before-hand, the Fault lies no where but in the Sufferer. (b) Lycurg. Orat. contra Leocrat. The greatest and the last of Punishments is Death. (c) Ovid. Her. Epist. l. 10.

Morsq; minus pœnæ, quam mora mortis habet.

Death hath less Pain it self, than the delay. Tho' some think a quick Dispatch an easier Punishment than a Miserable Life. Vid. Cæsaris Orat. in Sallust. Conjur. Catilin. and Tiberius's Answer in Suetonius, c. 61. To one that desir'd his Punishment might be short, was, I am not yet reconciled to you.

Senec. Hercules Fur. v. 512. Death to the Miserable is Ease.

Senec. Æg. Agamem. v. 989. He's yet unskill'd in the Arts of Tyranny, That punishes with Death.

El. Ibid. v. 996. Why is there any thing beyond the Grave?

Æg. Ibid. Yes Life when one desires to die.

Euripid. Hippol. Coron. τῆς δὲ ἀδύτης βίας ἐὐδελὲς δὲ συυχῆ. v. 147. Th' Unfortunate desire a speedy End.

Nay, Charron de la Sageffe, l. 1. c. 39. (VI.) §. 10. Ranks it among the ridiculous Notions of the Vulgar, to think to be reveng'd of an Enemy by killing him. For this, saith he, is only to take from him the sense of Misfortune, and to secure him from all further Harms; unless a Man thinks it necessary to his own Security, to leave no body alive that is like to be his Enemy, or to make him uneasy. In Philostratus l. 1. Apollonius condemn'd the Eunuch, that lay with the King's Concubine, to live, by way of Punishment. (d) Ælianus N. Hist. l. 4. c. 7.

(e) Vid. Socrat. Hist. Eccles. l. 7. c. 44. (f) Vide Ant. Matthæum de Crimin. Proleg. c. 1. §. 5, 6. & ad L. 48. D. tit. 5. c. 3. §. 10. & tit. 18. c. 4. Ziegler ad Grot. d. l. §. 39. Valerius Maximus l. 6. c. 1. §. 8. Vide L. 47. t. 11. l. 1. §. 2. D. de extraordin. Crimin. D. ad L. Cornel. de scariis. Vide L. 48. t. 8. l. 3. §. 1, 2, 3. Philo Judæus de confusione linguarum, p. 343. C.

(g) Vide Philon. de specialibus legibus, p. 791. Tacitus Hist. l. 2. c. 77. Qui deliberant disciverunt, to demur is to desert. And to this we may refer that of Plutarch, Cæsar. Penalties are not always inflicted for the Fact, but sometimes for the Intention and Design. Quintil. Declam. 362. The Law lays the Punishment upon the Will. Lyfias Orat. in Simonem. c. 12. It is certain that those we reciev'd our Laws from, did not intend that a Man who in a Quarrel had done harm to another, should therefore be banished: But that such as violently assaulted and injured a Man with a design to take away his Life, tho' they fail'd in the Attempt, should yet suffer that severe Punishment; because they suppos'd it just, that should suffer as really guilty of the Fact, that deliberately endeavour'd to put it in Execution; for tho' it happen'd that they were mistaken in the success of the Action, yet they pursued it as far as they had Power. Add. Ælian. Var. Hist. l. 14. c. 27.

(h) Quintil. Instit. Orat. l. 5. c. 9. Senec. de Benef. l. 5. c. 14.

(i) L. 2. c. 8.

(k) Ad L. 9. t. 8. l. 5. princ. C. ad L. Jul. Majest. Grotius in Flor. sparf. in Jus Justinian. (l) We have an Example of Thunus, in Benj. Priolus Hist. Gall. l. 1. c. 6. and of Dawid Berchinus, in Buchanan. Rerum Scotic. l. 8. Ad. Diodorus Siculus, l. 11. c. 54.

used, as is possible. And therefore the Severity of Draco's Laws, might justly appear insupportable, and deserve Solon's Corrections (a). Yet the Course of Justice in Pera, was altogether as Rigorous; for there almost every Crime was punish'd with Death: the Judges not so much considering the simple Nature of the Offence, as that it was a Breach of the Commands of the Inca, whom they look'd upon and revered as a God (b). But there is good Reason for enhancing the severity of the Punishment, when just Repentment, and Care for the Common Good, makes it necessary to secure the Publick Quiet by punishing Malefactors. For Instance, suppose the Criminal threaten Danger to the State, if he be not punish'd in time. H. Stephens gives us a Story (c), of a Man that having begg'd for a Pardon of the King, of France for the seventh Murder he was guilty of, and finding he could not obtain it, boldly told the King, that he would own only the first Murder to be his own proper Action; and that the Imputation of all the rest must lie upon the King himself; for that he should never have committed the other, if the King had not given him Encouragement, by pardoning the first. Sometimes also it is necessary to make Examples of some Malefactors to frighten others; especially where the general Perswasives and Inducements to Wickedness are strong (i); such as are Easiness and Use, which nothing but a severe Discipline can Reform. The Jewish Law lays a greater Penalty on the Person that steals out of the Field, than one that robs an House, because the first is done with greater ease; compare Exod. XII. v. 1. with the 7th and 9th ver. (d). And thus the Scythians thought no Crime so Heinous as Theft, because having neither Houses nor Folds to keep their Cattle in, no Man's Property could be secure, if Robbery had any Indulgence. And in some Nations, Theft is look'd upon to be a greater Crime in a Domestick, than in a Stranger (e). It was Death at Athens, for a Man to steal from the Baths, from the Schools of Exercise, or the Market, or any such publick Place; but one that robb'd a private House, was only to pay double the worth of what he stole (f). Q. Curtius says, 'There was a Custom among the Persians, that oblig'd them to be strict in concealing any Secret that concern'd their Kings; and adds, that neither Hope, nor Fear, could extort any Expression from them that might give Light to discover it; the Ancient Constitutions of that Empire, obliging them to such silence, upon pain of Death; and that therefore no Intemperance was punish'd so severely among them, as that of the 'Tongue, it being thought that no Man could be capable of any great Attainments, who could think it a pain to be silent, when it was plain there is nothing in Nature easier. Further also, Custom, or when a Vice is grown popular, or in Fashion, (for as to that habitual Custom or Familiarity, particular Men contract by repeated Sins, I have spoken already) though it be some Extenuation of a Crime, yet doth certainly deserve very severe Punishment (g).

—————Veteri post obruta morbo
Corpora, Pœnias nequicquam admoveris herbas
Non levioꝛe manu, ferro sanantur & igni, (h).
Ne noceat frustra mox eruptura Cicatrix, &c.

A crazy Body long inur'd to Pain,
 From healing Medicines seeks Relief in vain:
 When at the Bone the fretting Ulcer smarts,
 It fears the Lance, but mocks the gentler Arts.
 With Cauticks and Incisions, force your way,
 The Treacherous Wound will else your Skill betray.
 Skinn'd o'er without, it seems to heal inclin'd,
 But still the Sore lurks festering deep behind.
 But searching Fires, the secret Faults disclose,
 Pursue the watry Humour as it flows;
 From sickly Veins prevent the fresh Supplies,
 And stop the Springs whence first Corruption rise:
 If obstinate the Sore, and still unsound,
 And dangerous Gangreens gnaw within the Wound; }
 A Limb cut off must for the whole compound.

And therefore Grotius judiciously observes (i), that in publick Trials, it is some Excuse for an Offender to plead that his Fault is common; because in all Trials the Point in Dispute is, what Share of Guilt that particular Person has contracted; and this without doubt must appear the less, when the Man was carried away with the Violence of the Stream, rather than the Force of his own Inclinations; But when Laws are to be made, a prevailing Custom is an undeniable Argument, that there is greater need of severe Sanctions to suppress it; because Laws must be supposed to regard the Advantages that may accrue by the Punishment in general. However, when a Vice has rais'd it self to such an Head, and Offenders are grown so numerous, that if all of them were to fall under the reach of Justice, the Commonwealth must be much dispeopled, if not entirely ruin'd by rigorous Executions of Law, the Law must yield to the Necessities of the State, and rather be neglected, or laid aside, than occasion the Desolation of the Common-wealth (k). For Laws are to be applied only where things are capable of being effected, and so may very well punish Offenders when they are few, and may easily be reclaim'd by Punishment, but to attempt upon Multitudes is to no purpose (2).

(a) Vid. Plutarch. Solon. (b) Garcilass. de la Vega, Com. Reg. L. 2. c. 12, 13. (c) Apolog. pro Herod. c. 17.
 (1) V. Grot. d. l. f. 34, 35. (d) L. 47. t. 17. l. 2. D. de EffraCTOR. Justinus, L. 2. c. 2. de Scythis.
 (e) Tho' the Roman Law seems to have the contrary Method, L. 48. t. 19. l. 11. f. 1. D. de panis. Vide Ant. Matthæum de Crim. tit. de Furtis, c. 3. f. 2, 3. Ad. Arist. Probl. f. 29. Quæst. 14. (f) Vide L. 47. t. 17. l. 1. D. de Furibus Balnear. Ant. Matthæum de Crimin. ad h. t. & t. 14. de Abigeis. Add what Philo Jud. urges, to aggravate the Crime of Sorcery, de Special. legibus, p. 791, 792. Ed. Paris. Q. Curtius, l. 4. c. 6. f. 5, 6.
 (g) Leg. 16. f. ult. D. de Pœnis, ubi supra. (h) Claudianus in Eutropium, l. 12. v. 11. &c.
 (i) In the above-mention'd place, f. 35. (k) See Tiberius's Epistle concerning Luxury, Tacitus Ann. 3. c. 54. in the Beginning. (2) Plutarch. in Solon. p. 90. Ed. Wech.

Lastly, where the Necessities of the State are pressing for the purpose, if upon an Invasion and War, there should be no other Person fit for the Command and Charge of a General, there can be no Reason why a Criminal of experienc'd Courage and Conduct might not be releas'd even from Capital Punishment, when it appears that the State cannot be safe without his Assistance; and therefore there was Reason in what Fabricius said, when he gave his Vote for Cornelius Rufinus a good General, but a very covetous Man, to be Consul; that he had rather be robb'd than sold (1). And so Junius the Dictator after the Defeat at Cannæ, publish'd an Edict, That if any Man, whether he was a Prisoner for a Capital Crime, or for Debt, would list himself for the publick Service, under his Command, he would grant him a Pardon, and discharge his Debts (2).

XXIV. From all which I think it is evident, that there is no vindictive Justice in the Civil Court which determines what Degrees of Punishment ought to be inflicted on particular Crimes, by any Decision of Nature. But the true Measure of all human Punishment must be taken from the Utility of the Common-wealth; and according as the Ends of Punishment, seem most easy to be attain'd, the Punishment may either be enhanced or alleviated, according to the Discretion of the Government. Yet still so as that the Method of Punishment may admit of great Latitude. And therefore, as it would be too severe to inflict a Penalty, when the Ends of punishing may be attain'd by gentler Methods (3); so the Punishment is much too easy, when it has not Sharpness enough to produce the Ends design'd by it, and consequently to restrain the Insolence of the Subject, or settle the internal Security of the Commonwealth; or in short, when it is a Punishment the Delinquents themselves despise (4). If the Legislator go too far on the one hand, he is liable to the Infamy of being Cruel (5); and if he inclines to the other side, he makes all Punishment insignificant; and gives absolute Liberty to Vice. For since the Natural End of all Punishment is to dispose Men to obey the Law, and in Consequence, to restrain them from Actions contrary to it; and since Men, whenever they allow themselves to consider, always weigh the Conveniencies and Inconveniencies which arise from the same thing; it is evident, that if the Harm, or Pain inflicted, be less than the Benefit or Satisfaction that naturally follows from the Crime committed, the Punishment will be but a very slender Inducement to persuade any Man to resist the Temptation of Disobedience (6).

XXV. I am to add further, that since the same Punishment doth not affect all Persons alike (3), and consequently will not raise the same Dispositions in all, to Obedience, it is easy to discover, that both the general penal Sanction, and the Application of it to particular Parties, ought to be made with a suitable Regard to the Person of the Delinquent, and in that, to all those Qualities of Age, Sex, Dignity, Fortune, Strength, and the like; which may either increase, or mitigate the sense of Punishment (7). For the same Mulct, for Instance, will press hard upon a poor Man, which will be no Burden at all to a rich; An ignominious Punishment will fit easy upon a Wretch mean and despicable, when to a Person of Honour and Quality, nothing will be more insupportable and afflicting; And Men, and full grown People have more Strength to bear Punishment than Women and Children (8). And the Moors therefore punish Women guilty of Unchastity, with greater Severity than Men; because they suppose that generally the Arts and Enticements of the Women, first give them Encouragement. But yet it doth not from hence follow, that Punishment ought to be inflicted in a Geometrical, (or as Bodinus (9) affectedly calls it, an Harmonious) Proportion; all that is really intended here is no more than to make a simple Equation between the Crime and the Penalty, which the Circumstances of the Person are necessary to find out. But if on the account of such Qualities, which neither aggravate the Crime, nor augment the sense of the Punishment, Crimes equal in Demerit are unequally punish'd; 'tis a shameful Partiality and respect of Persons; of which Grotius doth not always acquit the Roman Laws. And some produce this for an Instance (4), a Man that kills his Wife, when he has taken her in Adultery, if he be a Person of inferior Rank, is sentenc'd to perpetual Banishment; but if he be in any Dignity or Office, he is only to suffer the Relegatio for some short time; For a mean Person may be as much concern'd and afflicted at the Disgrace he suffers by the Falseness of his Wife, as a Man of Honour, and may leave his Country with equal Grief and Regret (5). And Lastly, it may also be observ'd, that in some Nations, certain Sorts of Punishment are attended with particular Infamy, thus Euripides,

High on the Gallows ignominious Pains,
The very Slaves regret and think dishonourable,
But by the Sword to fall looks generous and brave:

(1) V. A. Gellium, l. 4. c. 8. (a) Livy, l. 23. c. 14. Add Grot. upon 1 Kings II. 6. (2) See Montaign's Essays, B. 1. c. 11. p. 309. Ed. Paris. (b) V. Gellium, l. 20. c. 1. de Veratii Petulantia. (c) V. Hobbes de Cive, c. 3. f. 11.

(d) Vid. Hobbes de Cive, c. 13. f. 16. Leviathan. c. 27. Author. de princip. just. & decori p. m. 200. Cumberland. de Legibus Nat. c. 5. f. 39. (3) Vid. Grot. ubi supra, f. 33. (e) Vid. l. 47. t. 19. l. 4. f. 1. & l. 12. f. 1. D. de Incendio, ruina, &c. & t. 10. l. ult. D. de Injuriis, &c. & t. 11. l. 6. D. de extraord. Crim. & t. 12. l. ult. D. de Sepulchro violato, & t. 14. l. 1. f. 3. D. de Abigeis. t. 21. D. de termino moto. L. 48. t. 8. l. 3. f. 5. ad L. Cornel. de Sicariis.

(f) Vid. L. 48. t. 5. l. 38. f. 24. l. 39. f. 4. D. ad L. Jul. de Adult. L. 48. t. 13. l. 6. D. ad L. Jul. Pecul. & t. 13. l. 5. f. 3. D. ad L. Jul. Pecul. L. 4. t. 4. l. 37. f. 1. D. de minor. L. 50. t. 17. l. 108. D. de divers. reg. jur. Add. Olearius Itin. Perf. L. 3. c. 6. of the Pecuniary Mulct, paid among the Russians for any Abuse offer'd, call'd by them Biszestia.

(g) De Repub. l. 6. c. ult. (4) V. D. L. 48. t. 8. l. 1. f. 5. (h) Vid. Edictum Theodorici Reg. c. 91. Add. Zieg. ad Grot. L. 2. c. 20. f. 33.

(a) And Telemachus in Homer (b) would not dispatch his Maids, καταφῶν δαμάτω, that is, would not kill them by the Sword, but hangs them. The Punishment of strangling on the other hand, is look'd upon to be Honourable by the Ottoman Family, who think it infamous that noble Blood should be spilt upon the Ground. And the Jews thought it a more ignominious Death to be beheaded, than to be strangled or ston'd (c). On the contrary, some Punishments have had the Fortune to be accounted Honourable. And upon such a Notion as this, we are told that the Athenians were angry, that so mean and contemptible a Wretch as Hyperbolus, should be banish'd by Ostracism (d); Because it was usually thought an Honour to suffer that Punishment; and they could readily yield Ten Tears Banishment to have been really a Punishment, when Thucydides and Aristides, and such great Men suffer'd it; but they thought it was too great a Credit to Hyperbolus, and would only encourage him to boast, that he had suffer'd the same Punishment which was inflicted upon the most gallant Men of Athens (e).

XXVI. Neither can I see any Necessity that every Common-wealth should take its Measure and Standard for the Punishment of Crimes, from the penal Sanctions of the Jewish Law. Because that part of the Law was the Positive and Civil Law of the Jews, and was accommodated to the Genius of that People and Commonwealth. From which, since the Constitutions and Tempers of other Nations and Commonwealths are very different, there is good Reason why the Penalties too shou'd be different. Whether this indeed will hold true with Respect to the Capital Punishment of Murder, as well as to other Crimes, may bear some Dispute. Because, the Law which determines that Punishment seems to have been promulg'd to all Mankind, as well as to the Israelites. And the Reason of the Punishment is evident. Because, a Man who is barbarous to that Degree, as to take away any Man's Life maliciously, can never give sufficient Caution to others, without losing his own (f). However, I think it should not be thought a Breach of that Command God gives, Gen. IX. 6.

(1), if a Murderer should be released from capital Punishment, upon some extraordinary Exigence of the Common-wealth. For since the Determination of all Punishment is of positive Institution, and all positive Laws may be accommodated to the Necessities of the State; that Law may also reasonably be suppos'd to admit of the same Exception. Some indeed are of Opinion, that that Passage is rather a Divine Commination than a Law, and that God only declares by it, that he will execute Vengeance upon Murderers, either by Men, or by some other severe Method, if they happen to escape the Inquisition, and Rigour of human Justice. See Acts XXVIII. 4. Neither doth Grotius's Interpretation of it, L. I. c. 2. s. 5. exclude the Exception which is grounded upon the State of the Common-wealth (g). But Selden, L. 4. c. 1. expressly affirms, that the Jewish Rabbins did not understand that place to be a Law of such Force, as that it should always oblige the Magistrate necessarily to punish Murder with Death; but that it was an express Indication of God's Hatred to that Crime, from the Severity of the Penalty he annexed to it; which it might be lawful for Man, according to the Posture of Affairs, and Variety of Circumstances in the publick Government of the State, either to limit or inflict. And for this Reason, the Jews (as their Law directs in other Cases) did not inflict Death upon any of their own Nation that kill'd a Profelyte of the Gates, or any other Gentile. Nay, if any Number of Jews, or other Circumcised Persons, had by Blows or Kicks, or any other way Kill'd one of their own Nation, so that no One of them separately did any thing which might be the immediate Occasion of his Death, all of them were acquitted from suffering that Penalty which was otherwise due by Course of Law; because neither of them singly was guilty of the Murder (h). However this be, I would not be thought to persuade the World to an unwarrantable Easiness in dispensing with the Punishment of this Crime. Neither would I undertake to defend that Expression in one of the Constitutions of the Kings of Poland, rela-

(a) Helena, v. 306, &c. Plin. Nat. Hist. l. 2. c. 63. Strangling is an odd sort of Death, by stopping the Breath which endeavours to find a Passage. Add. L. 48. t. 19. l. 28. f. 2. D. de Paris. To this also we may apply that of Dio Crisostom. Orat. ad Alexandrinos. The one is the Death of a Malefactor, the other of an unfortunate Slave.

(b) Odys. l. 22. v. 465, &c. (c) Seld. de J. N. & G. l. 7. c. 6. Thus Philo Jud. in Flaccum, is very angry that the Jewish Magistrates and Senators at Alexandrina should be scourg'd in the same manner, and with the same Instrument, as the meanest Egyptian Slaves were. To this we may refer that of Seneca, de Constantia Sapient. c. 4. There are some Slaves that had rather be scourg'd than beat. And it was I presume a very ignominious Punishment which is mention'd. Additament. I. Leg. Burgund. Tit. 10. (d) Vid. Plutarch. Alcibiades, pag. 197. B. Where there are these Verses quoted out of Plato the Comick Poet.

Worthy to suffer what he did, and more,
But not in such an honourable way;
The Abject Wretch the Sentence did disgrace.

Vid. Plut. Nicias, p. 530. E. Where he speaks of the same Matter.

(e) Thus it was some sort of Comfort. Aeneæ magni dextra cadis. ———

Virg. Aeneid. l. 10. v. 830. & de la Cerda in loc.

(f) To this Purpose is that of Antiphon. Orat. 15. All Courts of Justice that sit upon Murder, are always in the open Air, that the Judges may not be forced to come into the same place with the Malefactors; and that the Prosecutor may not be under the same Roof with the Murderer. Add. Libanius, Progyrn. loc. com. contra Homicidam.

(1) See Grot. on that place, and on Matt. V. 40. (g) Add. Grot. in Flor. spars. ad Jus Justin. ad L. Corn. de Sicar.

(h) See more in the same place.

ting to the Punishment of Murder in the Nobility, Nos divini Juris rigorem moderantes, We mitigating the Rigour of the Divine Law (a). And here I should take some Notice of the Dispute, which some scrupulous Persons have rais'd against the lawfulness of punishing Theft with Death. But upon this I refer you to the Opinion of Grotius, L. 2. c. 1. f. 14. (1). Yet Selden says, De J. N. & G. L. 7. c. 6. That among the Jews the Punishment of a Gentile, found guilty of Theft, was Death; but that the natural Jews were used with more Gentleness (b). And Herod's Laws are condemn'd as too severe by Josephus, That such Persons as were guilty of Burglary, or of breaking up, or digging into Houses, and such as robbed in the Night, should be sold out of the Land to Strangers. By a Law of Solon's at Athens it was decreed, That the Penalty for simple Theft, if what was stolen was recover'd, should be to pay double; or if it was not recover'd, ten times the Value of it. But it was added, That if any Person had surreptitiously taken away out of the Licæum or Academy, or the publick Schools, either Cloths, or Cups, or any thing of the least Value, or any Vessel out of the Schools of Exercise, the publick Walks, or Portico's, worth more than ten Drachms, he should be punish'd with Death (c). What Punishment the Roman Law inflicted is very well known. Justinian does not allow that a Man who was guilty of no more than simple Theft, should suffer even so much as Mutilation of Members (d); Though otherwise it cannot be thought absurd that every Criminal should be punish'd in the Part which offended, so Alexander Severus punish'd a Notary who exhibited a false Libel of a Cause before the Council, by passing Sentence upon him, that the Nerves of his Fingers should be cut, so that he might never use them to write more (e). So Seleucus pass'd a Decree, That an Adulterer should be condemn'd to lose his Eye, because the Eye makes the first Breach upon the Chastity, and so much forbidden Passion may be express'd in Looks as may easily kindle the most unlawful Lusts. And so also the Law of God commands, That the Woman's Hands should be cut off, who in any Strife, between her Husband and another Man, drawing near to deliver her Husband out of the Hand of him that smiteth him, putteth forth her Hand and taketh him by the Secrets, Deut. XXV. 11. (f). However Anton. Mattheus, De Criminibus, Tit. de Furtis, C. 2. puts a handsome Interpretation upon Justinian's Institution (2) by urging for it, That since 'tis generally either Idleness, or Poverty that forces People to steal, the Emperour was not willing Thieves should be punish'd by losing the use of their Limbs, that they might not be depriv'd of the Instruments necessary for them to reform their bad Course of Life; and when they ought rather to be forced upon some laborious Employment. In Germany, the Law, that all Thieves should be hang'd, was made by Frederick the Second (g). And it was afterwards confirm'd by Charles V. but it look'd more severe in him than in Frederick, because he took no Care of the Value of the Coin which was then sinking. Upon the whole, though I am of Opinion, that 'tis possible for Judges to be too free in inflicting capital Punishments, and that sometimes it might turn more to the Advantage of the State, if such Criminals as are here spoken of, were rather condemn'd to some useful Labour and Service (h); And so we are told Sabaco King of Egypt, forced all Malefactors that were condemn'd in capital Punishments, to publick Labours; and that the Country was soon sensible of the Benefit it receiv'd from such an Application of them (i). Yet I make no doubt but that Theft may lawfully be punish'd with Death. And from what has been said, it will be easy to answer all the Objections urg'd to the contrary, especially those from Ant. Mattheus.

XXVII. Neither lastly, is it necessary that a Man should suffer in the same manner in which he offended, or that a Criminal should always be punished by (3) Retaliation. This Opinion is commonly ascrib'd to the Pythagoreans, who defined Punishment by [Ἀντιποινῆς or] a suffering the like. And the Judgment of Rhadamanthus is brought to confirm this Method. Justice is duly then administr'd (k); when the Offender suffers as he sins. But Aristotle, Nicom. l. 5. c. 8. proves the Absurdity of the Ἀντιποινῆς, or Retaliation by this Instance: If a Magistrate (says he) strikes another Person, he is not to be stricken again, but if another Person strikes a Magistrate, he is not only to be stricken again, but to be further severely punish'd. As to that Command in Ex. XXI. 23. and Levit. XXIV. 20. the Jewish Doctors are generally of Opinion, that it does

(a) Add. Philo Judæus de legibus special.

(1) See Mr. Barbeyrac's Second Note upon this Section.

(b) Josephus Archæol. Jud. l. 16. c. 1. (c) Add. Aristot Problem. f. 29. c. 14. (d) Justinian. Novell. 134. c. ult.

(e) Lampridius, Alexander. c. 28. (f) Thus Vulcatius Gallicanus in Avidius Cassius, c. 4. relates, That he had cut the Nerves of the Deserter's Legs. Add Cujacius's Observ. L. 7. c. 13. (2) Institut. l. 4. c. 1. De obligat. que ex delicto nascuntur, f. 5. (g) Feudor. l. 2. t. 27. f. 8. de Pace tenenda. (h) Vid. Herodot. Euterpe, p. 90. Ed. H. Steph. Diodor. Siculum, l. 1. c. 65. (i) Sir Thomas More, Utop. l. 1. (3) See Mr. Barbeyrac's First Note upon this Section, and Grot. B. 2. c. 20. f. 32. (k) Ovid. de Arte Amandi, l. 1. v. 655, 656.

— *Neque enim lex æquior ulla est,
Quam necis artifices arte perire sua.*

— Th' Inventers, as 'tis just,
Should feel those Pains themselves discover'd first.

Quintil. Decl. 11. p. 154. The Justice of Revenge is shortest when the Crime is the measure of the Punishment. And if the Nature of Revenge be consider'd, a Man is best reveng'd, when his Injuries are punish'd in the same way they were committed. Senec. l. 5. Contr. Prefat. p. 276. What a Man designs for a Punishment to another, is often by a very just Method of Punishing chang'd into his own. Polyb. l. 12. in Excerpt. Peiresc. Since he hath carried himself with so much Bitterness and Moroseness to others, 'tis just others should use him with the same Unkindness.

not oblige to a rigid Retaliation, but that such Crimes may be redeem'd by a pecuniary Mulct. Bodinus de Repub. L. 6. C. ult. denies that this Law was ever in force. For Example, that it was never understood that when one Man broke another's Leg, his should be broken too; and he adds, that that Form, An Eye for an Eye, and a Tooth for a Tooth, is no Argument to the contrary; because That was only a proverbial Expression, and implied no more, than that the Penalty ought to be proportion'd to the offence; that what deserv'd only a Reproof ought not to be punish'd with Death; and that such Offences as deserved Death, ought not to be corrected with a Reprimand; and that This may easily be inferr'd from hence, that those Divine Laws do not punish Theft with Theft, Adultery with Adultery, nor Wound with Wound. But Theft with double or four times the value of the thing stol'n; Adultery with Death; and a Wound with a pecuniary Mulct. The same Divine Law hath also respect of Persons; For Instance, if a Man curses a private Person, the Law prescribes no severe Punishment to be inflicted on him: but if a private Man curses the Ruler, or a Son his Father, the Punishment is Capital. On the other Hand, Constantinus L' Empeur Babakama. c. 8. §. 1. contends for the Literal sense of Those Words. I shall not undertake to determine the dispute between 'em; But after all, 'tis confess'd however, that it was left to the Power of the Judge to transmute the Corporal Punishment of Retaliation into a pecuniary, according to the nature of the Circumstances, from that Passage of the Law, Ex. 21. 29, 30. where a greater punishment is admitted to be chang'd for a less. 'And Josephus says in his Antiquities, L. 4. C. 8. that he that puts out another Man's Eyes, was to suffer the like and lose the same himself, which he deprived the other of; unless the Person that lost his Eye, was content to take a Summ of Money in lieu of that Penalty; the Law allowing the Sufferer to set the Rate upon his own Misfortune. But on the other hand, they that endeavour to prove Retaliation, urge that passage in Deuteronom. XIX. 19. (a). But it may be answer'd, that the Laws there mention'd, cannot with any appearance of reason be thought to belong to this Subject; since the Punishment for Evil-speaking, and Cursing, exceeds all the Measures of Retaliation; the bare Endeavour having the full Evil set in view. However, in other respects the Penalty of that is not unjust. For there is no difference between an Evil-speaker, and one that does ill, but only in the Opportunity (b). Thus by the Law of God, a Man that brought an evil Report upon a Virgin, was lookt upon to be equally guilty, with one that forced her Honour. Deuteron. XXII. 19. 29. (c). For there can be nothing more Injurious and Malicious than Detraction; it maketh us think well of Falshood, and forces Innocence itself to look guilty (d). And the State of Human Affairs must be reduced to a very desperate Condition indeed, if every Man's malice has power to make us Criminal: For Innocence can never be happy enough, to escape the pernicious Diligence of a Slandrous Tongue (e). In one of the Laws of the Twelve Tables it is Instituted, that the Man that breaks another's Limbs, unless he can make his Peace, and Compound with him, shall suffer the like. Upon which Law I refer you to the Dispute between Favorinus and Sex. Cæcilius in Gellius, (1) L. 20. c. 1. But it is plain, that Retaliation was grown out of use at Rome, from the 7th Section of the Institute, De Injuriis (f). Diodorus Siculus, L. 12. c. 17. gives us an Account of a Law made by Charondas to this effect: If any Man puts out another's Eye, let his Eye also be put out. 'It happen'd, That 2 Person blind in one Eye was set upon, and lost his other, and consequently was entirely deprived of Sight: Now in this Case, tho' the Criminal was to be deprived of one Eye, yet his Punishment was justly thought less than he deserv'd; because, tho' He might seem to be sufficiently punish'd by the Letter of the Law, yet his Loss was not considerably so great as the others. And therefore it would look more like Justice, where the Penalty was to be laid equal to the Injury, that the Person, who entirely deprived the Man of Sight that had lost one Eye before, should lose both his. The blind Man grown therefore impatient at his Misfortune, and the Partiality of the Case, took the Courage to represent his Case to the People, bewail'd the unhappy Condition of his Life, and beg'd them to alter the Law; at last putting the Rope about his Neck, (as the Custom was there upon such occasions) his Entreaties had the desir'd Effect, the Law was abrogated; a new one better consider'd was preferr'd, and He escap'd the Death he was ready to have suffer'd (g). But however this be, 'tis cer-

(a) Conf. L. 9. t. 2. l. ult. C. de Accusat. & Inscip. L. 9. t. 46. l. ult. C. de Calumn. L. 9. t. 12. l. 7. C. ad L. Jul. de Vi Publica. Josephus Archæol. Jud. l. 4. c. 8. No Israelite shall have by him any mortal Poison: And if any such be found in his Possession, he shall die, and suffer what he was to have done whom the Poison was prepar'd for. Diod. Siculus, l. 1. c. 77. repeats an Egyptian Law of the same Nature.

(b) Quintil. Decl. 331. 'Tis a sort of Murder to attempt any Man's Life, that ought not to be kill'd. And Plin. in his Panegy. c. 35. n. 3. speaking to the Delators tells them, That they were to expect Punishments equal to the Rewards they had had before, that their Hopes should be no greater than their Fears, and that they should be as much afraid Themselves, as they were fear'd before by others.

(c) Isocrates de Permutatione, p. 540, 541. Detraction makes Judges Perjure themselves; extinguishes the Light of Truth, involves All that hearken to it in a Mist of Lies, and then easily finds a way to deprive Men of their Lives.

(d) Quintil. Declam. 11. Defamation can have no effect, but by the Injustice of the Judge. (e) Constitut. Sicul. L. 2. c. 14. (1) Noët. Attic. (f) Institut. L. 4. t. 4. l. 7. (g) Demosthenes mentions the same Law, adv. Timocratem. Aristot. Rhet. l. 1. c. 7. The Punishment is not the same when a Man puts out his Eye that has but one, and one of his that hath two. Add. Pet. Gregor. Tholofanus Syntagm. l. 31. c. 10.

tain, That so rude a Notion of Retaliation can never be a just Measure of Punishment. For in the first place, there are a great many Crimes, which it cannot possibly be apply'd to. As I believe, Retaliation was never thought a proper Punishment for Adultery, Ravishment, Bestiality, Treason against the State, Reviling, Detraction, Sorcery, Forgery of Wills or Deeds, Counterfeiting the Coin, Imposing of false Births or Adulterous Children, Procuring Abortion, Kidnapping, Crimen Ambitus, Incest, Sacrilege, Removing the Landmark, Defacing Sepulchres, Cozenage and Collusion, Prevarication, and the like. And by the way, It should be mention'd as an Instance of the Wisdom and Piety of the Emperour Theodosius, that he took off the shameful Punishment of Women taken in Adultery then usual at Rome, by which they were to be condemn'd to the publick Stews, and were there to be prostituted to All that came, a Bell ringing all the time they suffer'd that Infamous Punishment. For though an Ignominy of this Nature, might possibly produce the same Effects as the most severe Punishment; yet since this Punishment could not be put in Execution without Sin, it seem'd rather to encrease than take away the Guilt of the Fact it punish'd (a). But admitting that those Laws which seem to establish Retaliation, apply it only to Injuries and Hurts that affect the Body; and admitting that One may imagine a Case where the Crime committed may be well enough turn'd into the Punishment of it; and that neither the Persons, the Place, the Time, Quality, or Cause, enhance or aggravate the Crime: Yet even upon such Suppositions, simple Retaliation will not be a proper Punishment. For Instance, a common Man strikes another a Box of the Ear, in some private Place; now if the Person that suffer'd the Stroke is to return the other the Like, 'tis to be fear'd, he will hardly be exact enough to observe a just Proportion (b). And if the Execution be referr'd to a third Person, how shall he know with what force the first Blow was given? Besides, in many Crimes Retaliation might be too severe, if there should be no Distinction made, whether the Fact were committed maliciously, or not; Or if no difference of Persons be observ'd. For Example (1), a Man designing to strike another a Slight Blow in the Face with his Diamond perhaps, or some Stone he wears on his Finger, unhappily, against his Intention, strikes out his Eye. It would be very severe, if such a Person should, upon that Misfortune, be condemn'd to lose his Eye too. So if a Gentleman kick a common Porter or Labourer, it would be too severe to sentence that the Kick should be return'd again upon him, because, 'tis a Dishonour to a Person of Quality to receive a Kick, and none to one of mean Condition. Again, on the other hand, in many Crimes, the Punishment of Retaliation seems too easy. And this may happen particularly from a Disparity between the Persons who did, and who suffer'd the Injury; or else from a Disparity of Place, Time, and other Circumstances. But in the general, the Arguments which Grotius produces in the Chapter before cited §. 32. entirely confute that wild extravagant Notion of Retaliation; Where He also with very good Reason denies, that when a Man hath deliberately, and without much alleviating Circumstances, done hurt to another Person, He ought to suffer just as much Harm as he has done, and no more. For 'tis a Contradiction to Equity, that the Fears and Dangers of the Innocent and the Criminal should be equal. And there would be but slender Provision made for common Security, if Malefactors should be under no greater Fears from publick Justice and the Laws, than good Men are from their Insolence and Wickedness; especially since the Hopes of Concealment, of escaping by flight, or by some way or other evading Justice, are in a manner additional Advantages to every Villain. And besides, the most Sacred Laws themselves do sometimes ordain the same Punishments for imperfect and finish'd Crimes, Deut. XIX. 19. Exod. XXII. 9. (c) It was a remarkable Law which Strabo mentions, L. 15. among the Indians, He that deprives men of the use of a Limb shall not only suffer the like, but shall have his hand cut off also. But if any Person deprives an Artificer or Mechanick of the Use of an Hand, or an Eye, He shall be put to Death. And by Solon's Law, the Person that put out one of another Man's Eyes, was to lose both his own (d). And so also a Man that went arm'd with a Design to kill any Person fell under the reach of the Law de Sicariis, L. 48. t. 8. l. 1. D. ad L. Corneliam. Now though the Consequence of this be, that the Punishment of a mature finish'd Crime, should be proportionable to the degrees of its consummation, yet since human Justice can inflict no Punishment greater than Death, and it is impossible that should be repeated, there must necessarily be a stop made there; though according to the degrees of the Crime, the Punishment of Death may be made more painful by Torture, or appear more grievous from the Circumstances of Ignominy and Disgrace, which either attend or follow after it.

XXVIII. I proceed in the next place, to consider those Punishments which are inflicted by human Justice, for other Men's Crimes. And here, without dispute, (2) They that do really partake of the Guilt of the Offence, ought to share also in the Punishment in proportion to the Influence they may be supposed to have in the Fact; Since they suffer not for another Man's Fault but their own. But now

(a) Socrates Hist. Eccl. l. 5. c. 18. (b) Add. Lex Wisigothorum, l. 6. t. 4. c. 3. (1) V. Aristot. Ethic. ad Nicom. l. 5. c. 8. (c) V. Editum Regis Theodorici, C. 13. & 50. (d) Diogenes Laert. Solon.
(2) V. Grot. L. 2. c. 21. §. 1.

how, and by what Method of acting a Man may be said to partake of another's Crime, I have shewed before (1) (a). But it must be observ'd, that there is This difference between Satisfaction for Damage, and Punishment; that 'tis more usual for human Justice to condemn an Offender to make Restitution, than beyond, and besides that, to suffer Punishment also: Because Imprudence or Levity of Offence may be sufficient Motives to supersede Punishment, though perhaps not to excuse Reparation for Damages. It was a remarkable Law which was made by Thomas Randolph, Regent of Scotland, (b) 'to Suppress the Robberies which were then frequent; 'And That was, That all Husbandmen should leave their Plows, and other Instruments of Tillage, in the open Fields: And that at Night they should not so much as lock or secure their Houses or Barns; and That the Losses They suffer'd. should be paid to them by the Justiciaries of the Kingdom, who were to be reimburs'd by the King, and the King was to satisfy himself by the Goods and Chattels of the Robbers that were apprehended. But now as to Crimes contracted by Corporations or publick Bodies, It must be observ'd, that though the Decrees, to which the Major Part consents, are generally look'd upon to be Decrees of the Whole Body; so that the lesser Number dissenting, shall be oblig'd notwithstanding to see them executed: (c) (2) Yet if there be any Enquiry made about the Guilt of such an Act, Those Persons only are to be supposed liable who actually gave their Consent. And Those are innocent, who denied their Agreement to it, from the Beginning, and constantly persisted to dissent from it (d). Alexander the Great took Thebes, He commanded that all the Thebans should be sold for Slaves excepting only such of them, as were against passing the Decree to break Alliance with the Macedonians (e). Nay, it is not uncommon to excuse Those at least, (as to the highest degrees of Guilt) who dissented at first, but afterwards fell in with the Prevailing Number, and then pursu'd the Execution of the Criminal Decree as far as they had Power. So the Greeks were said to have spared Antenor and Aeneas, (3) who had perswaded the Trojans to restore Helen, though the Latter of them perform'd many brave Actions in Defence of his Country. It is also to be further observ'd, that the Punishment of a Corporation or Body Politick, as such, is different from the Punishment of particular Persons and Subjects. The Punishment of a particular Subject, is sometimes Death. And that which answers it in the Body Politick is Dissolution (f): And when a Corporation or Community is thus dissolv'd, all usufructuary Advantages are said to be at an end with it; in the same manner as in Cases of Death (g). Sometimes particular Persons, are by way of Punishment, made Slaves. And the Body Politick suffers the like, in case It were once immediately subject to the Civil Sovereign only, but is afterwards subjected to some other subordinate Body, or perhaps to a Particular Subject. And lastly, as Particular Persons may be punish'd by way of Mulct levied upon their Estates: So the Body Politick when It commits any Publick Crime, is punish'd by Deprivation of the Publick Goods belonging to It, such as Forts, Naval Stores, Ships of War, Arms, Treasure, publick Lands, Privileges, and the like. So when The People of Antioch, upon the Imposition of a new Tax, pull'd down the Emperour Theodosius's Statues in all the Publick Places, He punish'd them by forbidding them the Use of the Theatre and the Baths, and by taking from them the Title of Metropolis, which their City enjoy'd before (h). And so Marcus the Emperour took away from the same People all the Publick Shows, and other Ornaments of their City; (though he afterwards restor'd them again) (i). So Severus demolish'd the greatest part of Byzantium, ruin'd the Theatres and Baths, and all the Ornaments of the City, reduc'd it almost to a Village, and made it subject to the Perinthians (k). And thus the Emperour Constantias by way of Punishment to the same City, Because They had kill'd his General, Hermogenes, took away from them the Dole of Corn which he had usually before distributed among them (l). But however in Crimes where there are Numbers of Complices 'tis reasonable, the Chief Promoters and Abettors, should be punish'd with greatest Severity (m). And in short, In Estimating the Crimes and Penalties of Corporations and Bodies Politick, It should be consider'd as Quintilian very well observes (4), 'That generally whatever a Community undertakes, must be ascribed to the power of the Counsellors that direct It; And that all Popular Disturbances and Insurrections are of greater or less Violence according as the People are exasperated. Just as all Motion in our Bodies derives it self from our Minds, and our several Parts are as it were dead and useless till put in Action by the Soul. 'Tis the easiest thing in Nature to raise any Kind of Passion in a Multitude. For there was never any Assembly, where every Man could perfectly govern himself by his own Thought, Sense and Reason. Nor

(1) See above in B. 1. c. 5. f. 14. and in B. 3. c. 1. f. 4, 5. L. 9. t. 8. ad L. Juliam Majest. l. 5. c. 9, & 10.

(b) Buchanan Rer. Scotic. L. 9. (c) Vid. Polyb. l. 5. c. 49. in fin. Plin. l. 6. Ep. 13. Particular Men at the first Proposition of any Matter may lawfully dissent; but when the Decree is pass'd, that which the Majority agreed to, must oblige all. (2) Upon this, See above in B. 7. c. 2. f. 15. (d) See Luke XXIII. 51.

(e) Plut. Alexander. p. 670. D. (3) V. T. Liv. l. 1. c. 1. (f) Ad. Constitut. Sicul. l. 1. tit. 47.

(g) Modestinus in L. 7. t. 6. l. 21. D. quibus mod. Usufruct. amit. (h) Libanius Orat. 13.

(i) Vulcatius Gallicanus in Avid. Cassius. c. 9. (k) Herodianus. l. 3. c. 19. (l) Socrates Eccles. Hist. l. 2. c. 13.

(m) Vid. Liv. l. 28. c. 26. ab. init. (4) Quintil. Declam. 11. p. 156. Ed. Lug. Bat.

' was there ever a Multitude that had the Fore-sight and Prudence particular Men have. Whether it be that all Men are less affected with publick Concerns; Or that every Man is less sollicitous, where he doth not think himself in particular answerable for the Success. For the Presumption and Dependence Men have upon others, make them negligent and remiss themselves. And so Cicero says, that among the Romans, if any Number of Soldiers had offended against the Laws Military, some few of them were punish'd as their Lot happened, That so the Terror might reach all, though but few fell under the Punishment (a). And this is implied in the Answer of Germanicus's Army to him in Tacitus, That he should punish the Guilty, but pardon such as had been Misguided (b).

XXIX. And here it may be question'd, Whether a Crime committed by a Community or Corporation will always leave it under Execution of the Punishment, for Instance, If a Community has been publickly Guilty of some criminal Act, perhaps two or three hundred Years past (1)? It may perhaps have some Show of Reason for the Affirmative to say, That as long as the Community lasts, it continues the same (2), though the particular Members in it change, and succeed one another. But when the Question is of Human Punishment, It ought in Truth to be denied. For it is more necessary, even in particular Men, to punish fresh, and therefore more scandalous Crimes, than old forgotten Faults. And therefore, there was very good reason for that Prescription of Crimes which the Roman Laws allow'd (c). Besides, it is to be observed, that some things may be immediately and naturally predicated of a Community as such; For Example, The having a common Stock, common Constitutions, Rights and Privileges, which the particular Members cannot call their own. And again, that there are other things which agree to the Body, only as derived from the particular Members, or which first of all inhere in the Members, and afterwards influence and denominate the whole Body. Thus it is usual to call a Society Learned, Noble, Wise, Honourable, or Contemptible, as the Majority of its Members is Learned, Noble, Wise, Honourable, or Contemptible, tho' perhaps some of the Members may be Unlearned, Base, or Imprudent. And in this latter Sense it is, that such Bodies may be said to have incur'd Punishment. For the Demerit adheres to the particular Members, as they are suppos'd to be Persons who have the use of their Understanding, and are capable of acting with Reason and Choice. But a Community, as such, and as it is conceiv'd to be distinct from the particular Members, has no Faculties by which it is capable of exercising such Actions as primarily and immediately contract Demerit; and which may therefore be suppos'd to be distinct from those of the particular Members. And therefore it follows, that if the Members, by whom the Body contracted the Demerit, are dead and gone from the Society, and the Guilt has not been continued by any Act of their Successors, that the Demerit it self expires with them; and consequently that which made the Body liable to Punishment; since the one cannot be justly inflicted without the other. Plutarch (d) indeed, in this case, appeals to the Methods of Divine Justice, which sometimes, as we read, Visits the Sins of the Fathers, upon the Children. But as the Proceedings of divine Justice are not always to be made a Pattern to human; so neither doth it follow that if it be Equity, to allow Posterity the Possession of those Rewards and Honours which were acquired by the Deserts of Ancestors; it is therefore Equity, that they should also suffer the Punishments due to their Ancestors Offences. For it is the Nature of a Benefit, that it may freely be bestow'd, at the Pleasure of the Donor, even upon a Person wholly undeserving; but the Nature of Punishment is quite different. The Romans (as Justin tells us) made use of the Pretence of an old forgotten Kindness, to undertake the Defence of the Arcarnians against the Etolians (e), declaring that the Reason why they assisted them was, because the Arcarnians did not join with the other Cities of Greece, to send Forces against Troy, from which City the Romans would be thought to have derived themselves: Though it was clear this was nothing else but Pretence, and was only a Colour to excuse themselves for interposing in things it did not belong to them to be concern'd in (f).

XXX. But however it is still true, That human Justice ought not to force a Man to bear part of the Punishment of another's Crime, when he was not Accessory to the Commission of it. The Reason is, because all Merit and Demerit are entirely personal, and founded in the Will of each Man; which certainly is, or nothing is, at his Command, and which can't contract any Guilt, but by some internal Motion of its own (3). But because it often happens, that some Men's Offences are the Occasions of Evil to others; that we may not be apt from hence to make a wrong Inference; It is necessary to observe, in the first place, that not every thing that brings Uneasiness, Inconvenience, or Loss upon a Man, is properly

(a) Cic. pro Cluentio, c. 46. Tacitus, Ann. L. 1. c. 44. init. (b) Add Polyb. 1. 11. c. 27. in fin. & excerpt. Legat. 1. 28. c. 4. Bodinus de Rep. 1. 3. c. 7. p. m. 527. & Sequ. Ant. Matthæus de Crimin. ad L. 48. D. t. 18. c. 4. f. 30. Const. Sicul. L. 1. tit. ult. (1) V. Grot. 1. 2. c. 21. f. 8. (2) Plutarch de sera numinis vindicta, p. 559. A. (c) Vid. Ant. Matthæum de Crim. ad L. 48. t. 19. c. 4. t. 20. c. 4. f. 14. (d) Plut. de sera Nam. Vind. d. 1. (e) Justinus, L. 28. c. 1. in fin. (f) But the Expressions Mahomet the II. used to Pope Pius the II. were more ridiculous than this; That he was surprized to find Italy joined in a Confederacy against him, since the Trojans were his Ancestors as well as theirs, and since it ought to be their common Concern to revenge H. For's Death upon the Greeks, whom the Italians had now made an Alliance with against him, Mich. Montaigne's Essays, 1. 2. c. 36. p. 556. (3) This Reason is taken from the Beginning of the XXXIII. Section.

Punishment (1). A Man when his Estate is confiscated upon some criminal Account, and he is reduced to Want and Poverty, may properly be said to have suffer'd Punishment. But how many Men are there, that come into the World without any other Fortune or Estate than their own Persons? How many are there that by Fire, Shipwrack, Incurfions and Depredations of Enemies, are stripp'd of All, and whose Poverty cannot be call'd human Punishment, but fatal Misfortune? And I may say, that therefore the Evils, for Example, which Subjects sometimes feel from the Miscarriages and bad Government of their Princes, should be thought also to be of the same Nature with those other Inconveniencies and Afflictions, which attend human Life; such as ill Constitution of Body, Infirmities of Age, unwholesome Air, Barrenness, and the like.

XXXI. And Secondly, it must be further observed, that there is great difference between the Damage which a Man suffers directly by another's hand, and that which falls upon him only by Consequence. A Man suffers the first, when he is depriv'd of that which he has already all proper Right to. The other happens when that Condition is intercepted, without which he could not enjoy such a Right (a). Thus when the Estate the Parents were possess'd of is forfeited, the Children also feel the Loss of it. But however, That is not a Punishment properly, with respect to the Children, because they cannot come to the Inheritance of their Father's Estate, unless their Fathers preserve it for them till they die. And therefore the Confiscation or Forfeiture only intercepts the Condition, without which the Children can have no Right to their Father's Estate (b). But however, it was truly an unjust and barbarous Law, (as Buchanan calls it,) which was made by Mogaldus King of Scotland, That all the Goods and Chattels of condemn'd Criminals, were to be forfeited to the Crown, excluding their Wives and Children from any Part of them (c).

XXXII. Again, Lastly, It ought to be observed, that sometimes the Evil a Man may suffer, or the Loss of any Good he may sustain, may be occasion'd by another Man's Offence, or because another Man has not perform'd his Obligation; but still that this Man's Offence, or Deficiency in Performance of the Obligation, is not the proper and immediate Cause why the other suffers Evil; Nor can any third Person pretend any direct Right from such an Offence to inflict Evil upon him (2). Thus it is common for Fidejussors, Bondsmen, to suffer Loss, when the Debtor they engage for, breaks his Promise. But the immediate Obligation that binds the Fidejussor or Bondsmen to discharge the other's Debt, is his own Promise. For as a Man that engages himself to be bound for a Buyer, is not properly obliged from the thing bought, but from the Promise he made: So a Man Bound for a Criminal, is not properly obliged by the other's Crime, but by his own Engagement. From whence it follows, that when the Fidejussor or Bondsmen is to suffer Evil, it must not be measur'd by the other's Crime, but by the Power he had to promise. And therefore when the Delinquent escapes, and it is necessary his Surety should make Satisfaction to Justice, 'tis not to be consider'd what Evil might have justly been inflicted on the Delinquent, but what Degrees of Evil the other could oblige himself by his own sole Consent to suffer for him. And hence it may also be inferr'd, how far Bondsmen or Fidejussors may be admitted in capital Cases: And that may be only thus far; either that the Bondsmen may promise the Magistrate, (whose Duty it is to prosecute the Offender) that he will satisfy for the Damage he has done; or else that he will take care to bring him to Trial, upon Condition that the Criminal may be admitted to Bail, if he be already apprehended, may be free from the Inconveniencies of a Prison, and may not be oblig'd to appear at his Trial in Irons; or if not apprehended, that nothing be issued out against him in his Absence, and before he has had a judicial Hearing. But no Man can oblige himself to suffer Death for a Criminal (3); since no Man hath so much Power over his own Life. Neither can the nature of Human Justice allow such Punishments to be inflicted. For the end of Punishment is to restrain Men from Transgressions, and dispose them to Obedience. But in This Case, neither has the Fidejussor himself offended, neither by his act of Engagement doth he derive the guilt of the other's Crime upon himself. For it can be no Crime in Him to desire that the Criminal should have a Fair Hearing in a Convenient Place, and be without trouble and disquiet, before Judgment passes upon him: Nor is it any to promise He will pay the Pecuniary Mult imposed on the Criminal, in what manner the Magistrate shall think fit to set it, when the Criminal is fled from Justice. Besides the End of Human Punishment cannot be obtain'd by punishing the Surety; for if He be punish'd, he must be punish'd, not because He himself is guilty of any Criminal Action; but because He is so imprudent as to expose himself to Danger, upon the presumption of another Man's Honesty. And then all the Effect of such a Punishment will be This, that Other Men will be more cautious for the future how they engage themselves; Not that They will be more careful to avoid the Crime the Offender was guilty of. And therefore such a Punishment would seem to have no Regard to the Fact of the Principal Criminal, but only to the unwary Credulity of the Surety. And therefore the Magistrate that punishes a Bondsmen, or Fidejussor, understands neither the Nature of Punishment, nor his own Duty in inflicting it; except it appear that He design'd only to abuse him, and elude the force of publick Justice. And again, since no Man has such Right over his own Members as to take Liberty to deprive himself at pleasure of any of them; it is evident that no Man can oblige himself to suffer the Punishment of Mutilation for another Person. But 'tis a different Case, when Jaylors, the Keepers of Malefactors, are punish'd with Death, who either by Neglect or Collusion, gave them opportunity to make their Escape; for they suffer for their own criminal Default, not for their Prisoners (a). Nay further, Though it must be allow'd that the free Heads, and Masters of Families, had the Liberty of setting up what sort of Government or Law they pleas'd; yet it does not seem to be a proper Method to banish the Fidejussors; as well because Banishment can hardly be called a Punishment; as because it is not the Interest of the Commonwealth to drive away such Subjects (b). There are several other Cases, where a Man may suffer Inconvenience by another's Offence. For Instance, If a Friend be so kind to me as to let me live in his House Rent-free, and it happens that my Friend, the Proprietor, be found guilty of some Crime for which his House is forfeited: 'Tis plain that I must be sensible of Inconvenience in such a Case, because I must be forced to provide my self of a new Habitation, when perhaps he would have allowed me to have lived there longer upon the same Terms. But the Punishment doth not properly affect me. For the Publick, that is seiz'd in the Propriety of the House, may when it pleases, by its own Right, deny me the Use of it, at that Rate I had it before. So also Children of Traytors and Rebels, are often denied Civil Honours in the State. And this indeed aggravates the Punishment in the Parents, since their Children, (whom they are supposed to have the greatest Affection and Regard for) must for their Fault live without any publick Character, or Mark of Honour and Esteem in the Commonwealth. But this is in Reality no Punishment to the Children; because the Government may bestow Honours where it pleases, and therefore may by its own Right and Authority, exclude such Persons as have not in the least offended, from all Titles and Dignities it has power to confer, as often as it is thought agreeable to the Rules of Government, and the publick Good.

(1) V. Grot. L. 2. c. 21. f. 10. (a) We have an Instance of this in L. 39. t. 2. l. 24. f. ult. l. 26. D. de Damn. inj. &c. & L. 35. t. 2. l. 63. D. ad L. Falciariam. (b) Vid. L. 48. t. 22. l. 3. D. de Interdict. & Relegat. &c. (c) Buchanan. Rerum Scotic. l. 4. (2) Vid. Grot. d. l. f. 11. (3) See above in B. 5. c. 10. f. 12.

XXXIII. From these Distinctions it appears, that no Man can be justly punish'd by any civil Court for another Man's Offence, when he is free from Guilt of it. And the Reason is, because that Aptitude which disposes a Man for Punishment proceeds from Demerit, and Demerit in the last Resort is founded in the Will, which is certainly, or nothing is, at a Man's own Command, and which cannot contract any Guilt, but by some internal Motion of its own. 'Tis a Mistake in Grotius, in the Chapter before cited, Seet. 12. to think that there may be an Instance given to the contrary, Extrinsic to the Person of the Delinquent, in the Person of one he hath a violent Affection for. And I think it is nothing to the Purpose to say as Plutarch does (c); 'That the Master by 'correcting some of his Scholars, puts all the 'rest in mind of their Duty, and a General 'by making a Decimation, punishes the whole 'Army. For both the Youth that is corrected, and every tenth Souldier that suffers, is really Criminal himself. And hence therefore it follows also, that innocent Children are not to be punish'd for the Crimes their Parents were guilty of (d) (1). And therefore some Interpreters explain Joshua, C. 7. v. 24. thus, That Achan's Children were brought out only, that they might hear the Instructions Joshua gave them, and the rest of the People; and be advised to take warning how they were found guilty of the like Crimes themselves; not that they were to be ston'd with their Father. But if this Comment upon the Text will not be allow'd, See what Grotius saith, de J. B. & P. l. 2. c. 21. § 14. in princip. (e).

— Ne perge queri, casusque priorum
Annumerare tibi. Nec culpa nepotibus obstat.
Tu modo dissimilis, rebus mereare secundis Excusare tuos.

Lament no more, nor to your self misplace,
The Crimes or Fortunes of a former Race.
Our Parent's Guilt but to themselves extends,
Taints not the Blood, nor to the Sons descends,
By your own worth, you blot out the Disgrace,
And raise the faded Lustre of your Race (f).

And therefore that Law of the Persians, by which, when any single Person was found guilty of Misdemeanour against his Prince, his whole Family and all his Relations were to suffer with him, was justly censured by Am. Marcellinus, as Insupportable, and Barbarously Rigorous, beyond Example (g). 'Tis certain

(a) See 1 Kings XX. 39. seqq. Acts XII. 19. (b) Garcilasso de la Vega Comm. Reg. l. 6. c. 3. relates, That the Provinces which bordered on the Imperial City Cozco, were oblig'd, by way of Tribute, to furnish the Court of the Ynca with Officers and Servants. And that upon any Crime or Neglect they were guilty of, the Provinces that presented them were to be responsible. (c) De sera Numinis Vindicta. p. 561. A. Ed. Wech.

(d) Vid. L. 9. t. 47. l. 22. C. de Penis. L. 48. t. 19. l. 26. D. de Penis. (1) Vid. Grot. ubi supra, f. 13, &c.

(e) Ovid. Metam. L. 4. v. 669, 670.

Illic immeritam, maternae pendere lingua,
Andromedam Penas, injustus jusserat Ammon;

There partial Jove did for her Mother's Crime
The fair Andromeda in Chains confine.

(f) Statius Thebaid. L. 1. towards the End. (g) Vid. Herodot. L. 3. p. 235. Edit. H. Steph. de Intapherne. Justin. l. 10. c. 2. The Macedonians had a Law much of the Nature. Vid. Curtium, L. 6. c. 11. l. 8. c. 6.

indeed, that by Punishments of such Cruelty, Princes intended above all things to provide for their own Safety (a). For though a Man may have Bravery enough to despise his own Life (as Hellanicus in Justin, is said to have done when he was Old and Childless, and was therefore the more animated in his Conspiracy against the Tyrant Aristotimus, because he had nothing to fear, neither his Age, nor Family;) yet he will not be perhaps without Fear, when he knows that his Friends and Relations may be ruin'd with him, and upon his account. And again, it might seem to be a further Security to cut off the Sons, to prevent them from revenging their Father's Death. For says Aristotle, It is but Folly to kill the Father when the Sons are spared (b). Besides, it is not easy to be believ'd, that a Man will have the Boldness to undertake an Enterprize of so much Danger, without communicating his Design to his Relations. For which Reason Arrian says (1), Alexander put Parmenio to Death. And perhaps it may be true as Cassius in Tacitus said (c), 'That tho' there is a Mixture of Injustice in every exemplary Punishment, yet the Evil particular Men suffer by it, is sufficiently recompens'd by the Benefit it brings to the Publick. Thus in the Ninth Book of the Codes, t. 8. ad L. Julian Majest. the Sons of Traytors were to suffer the same Punishment as their Fathers, when it was to be fear'd they might be influenced by their Father's Example (d). Thus the Children of the Maratocupeni, (Robbers in Syria, who had that Name given them from the place they inhabited,) were all cut off with their Parents, for Fear they should grow to imitate them. Hobbes in his Leviath. c. 28. gives this Reason for the Justice of this sort of Punishment, 'Because such as are Guilty of Treason against the State, are profess'd Enemies to it, and therefore it is lawful by the original Right of Nature to make War upon them; but in War the Sword judgeth not, nor doth the Victor make Distinction between nocent and innocent, nor has other Respect of Mercy, than as it conduceth to the Good of his own People. And besides, in publick Judgments and Trials in case of Treason, there is this thing particular, That the Sovereign may sit Judge in his own Cause; and sometimes, laying aside the Formalities and Intricacies of Process, begin with the Execution (e). But yet conscientious Princes ought to consider what Tiberius said in the Case of Cn. Piso Tacit. Ann. 3. c. 12. And indeed, neither in War ought the Sword to be so Merciless, as not to spare such as Age and Innocence plead for. And since such as are born in the Commonwealth are Subjects, there is no Reason why they should be treated as Enemies, unless their own Acts make them such. And therefore, there can be no other way of punishing an Innocent Son for the Treasons and Rebellions of his Father, than by intercepting those Goods from him, which would otherwise have descended from his Father to him. In Peru under the Government of the Tuca's, if a Curaca were put to Death for any Misdemeanour, his Son was not therefore denied to succeed in his Father's Place and Office, but was shew'd his Father's Crime and Punishment, that he might take Warning from thence how he offended (f). But to be denied those Honours which a Man can lay no Claim to, is not properly Punishment. But neither do the other Reasons that are given, excuse the Injustice of this sort of Punishment: As for Instance, when the Greeks (as Dionys. Halicarnassæus tells us) cut off any Tyrant; they always either kill'd or banish'd his Children, upon an Opinion, that it was a Contradiction to Nature, to suppose good Children could be born of bad Parents, or bad Children of good (g). Neither can this sort of Punishment be justified by any Arguments from Divine Threatnings, since the Dispute relates only to human Justice (h). And therefore it was a wise and good Constitution of the Egyptians, that no Woman with Child should suffer Death, till she was deliver'd, which is also now observed in other Nations (i). And here it may be observ'd, That it is an Abuse of the Legislative Power, when the Legislator takes Advantage of the Crimes of particular Offenders, to enact Rigorous Laws against a whole Sex or Order; though perhaps afterwards, in Tract of time, the Punishment it self may grow into Credit, and the Death inflicted by it be thought Honourable. As it happen'd by that Law among the Indians; by which the Wife was to be burnt with her deceas'd Husband. The Occasion of which Law was, That the Women when they were tired, or out of Love with their Husbands, made no Scruple to poison them to make way for the Embraces of others (k). And hence also it appears, that the Heir is not affected by any Punishment inflicted upon the Body, or Reputation of the Delinquent (l). But a pecuniary Mult will reach him, tho' in Equity it ought not to exceed the Value of the Inheritance which descends to him (m).

(a) Justin. l. 26. c. 1. l. 21. c. 4. towards the End. A. Cælius in Val. Maximus, l. 6. c. 2. speaks to the same sense. (b) Rhet. l. 2. c. 21. (1) B. 3. (c) Ann. XIV. c. 44. (d) Vid. Ant. Matth. de Crim. l. 48. t. 2. f. 10. Am. Marcell. l. 28. (e) Add Grot. Comment. upon Joshua I. 18. (f) Garcilass. de la Vega Comm. Reg. l. 2. c. 13. (g) And it was very well said by Marcus in Vulcat. Gallicanus in Avidius Cassius, c. 12. And therefore ye ought to pardon Cassius's Children, his Son-in-law and Wife. But did I say pardon? since they are Guilty of no Crime. (h) Add. Grot. l. 2. c. 21. f. 14. (i) Diod. Sicul. l. 1. c. 77. Ælian. V. Hist. l. 5. c. 18. cum Schefferi Notis. l. 48. t. 19 l. 3. D. de Paris. l. 1. t. 5. l. 5. f. 2. l. 18. D. de statu hom. Plut. de sera Numin. Vindict. p. 552. D. Add. Quintil. Declam. 277. What Severity of Punishment on the other hand is used in Japan, we are inform'd by Bern. Varenius Descr. Japoniæ, c. 18. Ferdin. Pinto Itin. c. 55. Varenius de Relig. Japon. c. 11. p. 129. (k) Vid. Cic. Tusc. Quæst. l. 5. c. 27. Strabo, l. 15. Abr. Rogerius de Braminib. p. 1. c. 19, & 20. (l) L. 48. t. 19. l. 20. D. de Paris. (m) Vid. L. 47. t. 1. l. 1. D. de privatis Delictis.

C H A P. IV.

Of the Power of the Sovereign, in determining the Value of Subjects.

THOUGH there may be discover'd certain Foundations for the Preference of one Man to another, even in a Liberty of Nature, out of Civil Government; yet since those Foundations cannot give any Man a Right, unless enforced by Compact, or the Definitions of the Civil Power, I think this a proper place to explain the Nature of those Distinctions, which are made between Men, according to the Esteem they are differently rated by. Now Esteem is the Value which is set upon Persons in Common Life, according to which they may be equall'd, or compar'd with others, and be rated either higher or lower than those they are compared with. For there is a near Affinity between the two most noble Branches of moral-Quantity, Esteem and Price. The first is consider'd in Persons, the second in things; because as the one is the Rate of Persons in Common Life, so the other is of Things. And as the chief Reason why a Price was set upon things was, That when they were to be exchanged or removed from one Person to another, they might be the better compared with one another: so the End intended by Esteem is, That we may be able to form a Comparison between Men, by setting as it were a Value upon them; and in consequence establish a becoming Order and Distance between them, whenever they should happen to be united; it evidently appearing that nothing was more absolutely inconsistent with the Convenience of Life, than an universal Equality. Now Esteem may be divided into simple and intensive. I shall consider both parts of the Division, with the different Relations they may bear to such Persons as live in a Liberty of Nature (1), and such as are Members of the same Commonwealth.

II. Simple Esteem, with regard to such as live in a Liberty of Nature, seems chiefly to consist in this; When a Man's Behaviour and Character prove him to be One that acts upon Principles of Conscience, One ready to comply with the Laws of Human Society, and prepared, as far as he has Power, to observe the Law of Nature towards other Men (2). For as we say of a thing which is of Use in Common Life, that it is of Value; and, on the contrary, say of a thing there is no Use of, that it is worth nothing; so it may be said, that That Person is a Man of some Value, that will suffer himself to be treated like a sociable Creature. But when a Man plainly shows himself unfit for Society, by disregarding and confounding the Law of Nature, and the good Offices he owes to other Men upon the Force of it; he may deservedly be look'd upon to be a Man of no Worth or Value.

III. Now this sort of Esteem may be consider'd three ways. First, as Intire. Secondly, as Impaired. Thirdly, as utterly Lost. It continues intire, till a Man by some Act of deliberate wilful Malice, out of wicked Design, violates the Law of Nature to the Prejudice of another Person. For the Frailties of human Nature excuse Sins of Infirmary, and a Man does not by them forfeit the Reputation of being an honest Man, as long as he continues to have a firm Sincerity of Mind, and endeavours to do nothing but what is just and vertuous. And every Man is supposed to deserve this Esteem till his own Evil Actions deprive him of it. And therefore it may be said, That all Men naturally have an equal Share of this Species of Esteem, and before they have been Guilty of any criminal Action, must be supposed to be equally Good and Vertuous (a). And this is the Ground for that common Saying, Every Man should be supposed a good Man, till the contrary is proved. And this will hold True, notwithstanding those ill Dispositions Hobbes chargeth upon human Nature (b). If he be in the Right, indeed every Man must be supposed an ill Man, till the contrary be proved, or rather till he is depriv'd of all Power to do Hurt. But it must be said, that the Principle he at first lays down, That all Men have Power and Will to hurt or destroy one another, is far from being universally True, as I have prov'd already (3). But yet because Men may wish and endeavour one another's Hurt and Ruin, therefore it may be said that every Man may naturally be look'd upon to be a good Man; but that it is not impossible he may happen to be otherwise, and that Men may be kind and friendly to one another, but that it is not safe absolutely to rely upon, or trust them.

IV. The same Species of Esteem is lessen'd or impair'd by criminal malicious Actions, especially by those of more than ordinary Guilt, and which were intended contrary to the Law of Nature, unjustly to disquiet other Men; The Effect of which Actions is, that it will not be thought Safe to give Credit for the future to such a Deceiver, or to engage in Business or important Affairs with him; without

(1) Such are Sovereigns, and Citizens of different States, with respect to one another. (2) See Mr. Babeyrac's Note upon this Section. (a) Plin. L. 5. Ep. 3. The Inequality of the Orders among Men, should make no Difference in the Exactness of their Behaviour. Sanctitas morum non distat ordinibus. (b) De Civ. c. 1.

(3) B. 2. c. 2. l. 7, 8.

Solid Caution. But though a Man's Esteem may be impaired, and his Reputation sink upon such ill Actions, yet it is not absolutely Lost. For though I may justly suspect, that a Man will use me in the same manner he hath used others; yet I cannot be always so absolutely certain of this, but that sometimes it may fall out contrary to my Expectations. For perhaps there might have been some Particular Reasons which moved him to injure other Men, which he may not have against me; and a Man may sometimes be under the Power of violent Passions, which at other times he is free from. However, the Blot which a bad Action leaves upon a Man's Reputation, may be taken off by a voluntary Tender of Reparation for Damages, or of some Equivalent; and by giving Evidences of Sorrow and Repentance. For all these voluntary, unforced Motions, may be Conviction enough, that his Intentions are really alter'd, and that he sincerely repents.

V. But a State and Way of Life which directly tends to the Harm of other Men without Distinction, and to make Advantages by manifest Injustice, utterly destroys all this Esteem. Now there are in most Commonwealths People that, by a particular way and manner of Life, own and profess the Exercise of certain Vices; such as are, All Whores, Barwds, Strolers, and sturdy Beggars; all those Plato banisheth his Common-wealth (a). And they are (as Isocrates (1) saith) a Disgrace to That they live in (b).

But now, How little Share of Esteem all these are to have, must be determin'd by the Government that tolerates them (c); when the Publick thinks fit to give them Indulgence (d); they cannot certainly at least be denied the common Rights of Men. So the Pimp expostulates in Terence, Though I am a Pimp, the common Bane of Youth, a perjurd Wretch, and publick Nuisance, yet I never did you any Wrong (e). 'Tis certain indeed, That a Way of Life maintain'd by the Profession of any sort of Vice, must very much tend to ruin all Natural Esteem: But unless the particular Vice be also attended with Injury to other Men, I do not see why the Persons that profess the Practice of it, should be treated as publick Enemies to all the World. But where the Profession of a Vice is accompanied with Harm and Injury to other Men; and where the Persons professing it, treat no Man who is not of their own Society with better Usage than they would Beasts, declaring Hostility, not against any certain Enemies, but against Mankind in general, 'tis manifest they utterly forfeit all that Esteem Men usually measure one another by. And such are, All Pirates (2), Highway-Men, Robbers, Ruffians, Pick-pockets, and the like. And the Difference will not be material, nor will their Characters be much better'd, Whether such Persons act always up to the Height of Wickedness and Villany or not? Whether a Robber will satisfy himself barely with committing Spoil and Robbery, and forbear Bloodshed, and be contented only to have taken away my Money or my Goods. For as 'tis no Justice, so it can deserve no Commendation, not to be an accomplish'd finish'd Villain. And without dispute, whole Bodies and Clans of Pirates and Robbers ought to be rank'd under this Denomination, as long as they continue their Course of Life, notwithstanding they may seem to have some Resemblance of Justice among them (f). Neither will whole States and Common-wealths deserve better Rank, when they are not content to acquiesce in the Enjoyment of their own Rights at home, but invade and ravage the rest of the World, without Regard to Faith or Compacts to the contrary. But where States or Common-wealths are so Partial, as to be just in the Observation of Compacts with some particular Allies, but to all other their Neighbours, or at least to certain Nations, show little Regard in the Observation of the Law of Nature, and scruple not, without just Provocation, to break it; Their Credit, it is evident, must very much sink, but it would be too severe to deny them every Degree of Esteem. Now, the Effects that attend Men under such a Loss of Esteem, are generally such as these; That unless they leave off their unjust and bloody way of Life, it will be necessary for other Men to show them no more Mercy, than they do to Beasts of

(a) Plato de L. L. l. 11. (1) In Areopagitico. (b) Atticus Bishop of Constantinople, in Socrates's Ecclesiast. History, tells Calliopi, That he should distribute his Charity, not among those that made a Trade of begging, only for their Bellies, and spent their whole Life-time in nothing else; but among such whose Modesty would not suffer them to ask it. Socrat. l. 7. c. 25.

Thus neither were Beggars tolerated in Peru, under the Government of the Ynca.
(c) But they that were disabled, so that they could not maintain themselves, were kept by the Publick. Vid. Garcilass. de la Veg. Com. Roy. l. 5. c. 9. & l. 5. c. 11. (d) But formerly in Egypt, there were professed Thieves allow'd, of whom Diodorus Siculus, l. 1. c. 80. gives this Account. 'Such as would be employ'd in the Trade of Thieving, enter'd their Names with the Grand Master of the Order, and were obliged by Article, to bring all the things they stole to him; and they that lost any thing were to apply themselves by Letter to him, in which they were to signify the Particulars they lost, together with the time and place, when and where, they were lost, and so every thing being easily discovered, the Person robb'd was to pay a fourth part of the Value of the things, and take them again. For since it would have been impossible to prevent all manner of Thieving, the Legislator found out this Expedient, that what was lost might be recovered, by paying only a small Price for the Redemption. But no Question, it would have been a better Method, and less inconvenient for the Subjects, to have made severe Laws against such sort of People, and to have taken care they should be strictly put in Execution.

(e) Ter. Adelph. Act. 2. Sc. 1. v. 34, 35. Vid. Constitut. Sicul. L. 1. t. 20. (2) See above in B. 2. c. 2. f. 10.
(f) Thus in Heliodorus's Ethiopicks, L. 5. c. 15. There is mention'd a Law that was among the Pirates, by which he that first boarded the Enemy's Ship, and expos'd himself to the greatest Danger in the Fight, was to have his Choice of the Booty. And in the same place we are told, That the Robbers observe some sort of Conscience among one another, and shew Kindness and Humanity to those they are acquainted with.

Prey. That when they are apprehended, they will be used with more Severity than any other sort of Enemies, though others might have threaten'd equal Danger: That They will not be look'd upon to deserve the common Offices of Humanity; And that all merciful Usage will be denied them, least it may seem to encourage them in their Villanies. Moreover, as there can be no Strefs laid upon their Faith, should they offer it, since the Habit of Outrage they live in, must have cancell'd all Good Opinion of them; so I doubt not it may very well be maintain'd, That Neither are They capable of receiving Obligations of Faith from Other Men, as long as they continue in their Ill Course of Life, (which must always be presuppos'd): For I either make a Voluntary Agreement with such a Person, or he Compels me by Unjust Force. I cannot do the First, without deriving upon my self some Share of his Guilt, by treating such a Man as a Friend that professes himself a common Enemy to all the World, except his own Accomplices. Not to say further, That it may be often an Injury to other Men to keep Faith with Robbers, For Instance, in the Case of leaving some Depositum in trust with Them (a). But if a Robber should have done Me some Good Office, which it was no Discredit to Me to receive from such Hands, it can be but reasonable that I should give him the Reward I promis'd (1): But then He is not the Person He was suppos'd to be, a common Enemy to all Mankind besides his own Companions. On the other Hand, if he Compels Me by Unjust Force to engage my Faith to Him, it appears from what has been said before (2), that Compacts extorted by Fear are Invalid. But after All, Such Persons may recover their Lost Esteem, by giving over Their infamous Course of Life, and by taking upon them some other Creditable Profession. And So may Whole Bodies of Thieves and Robbers by such a Change, as well as particular Men. And from That Time They are to be dealt with as Men of Repute and Honesty. But They ought first of all, either to make Reparation, or obtain their Pardons for the Injuries They have done.

VI. Simple Esteem, with regard to such as live under Civil Government, is, That Sort of Esteem by which a Man is look'd upon to be at the lowest, A Common, but A Sound, Member of the State. Or when a Man hath not been declar'd A Corrupt Member, according to the Laws and Customs of the State, but is suppos'd to be A Good Subject, and is Look'd upon and Valued for such. And this Esteem may be lost under Civil Government, either First, When it is denied to Certain States or Conditions; or, Secondly, When taken away upon a Criminal Account. The First may happen Two ways; Either 1st, when the State hath Naturally in it self nothing bad or wicked belonging to it. Or 2dly, when it really deserves, or at least is thought to deserve, such an Imputation. Thus a State of Slavery, tho' it implies in its own Nature nothing Bad or Criminal to belong to it, Yet in many Common-wealths deprives Men of all simple Esteem; and Slaves are neither look'd upon to be Civil Persons Rated or Number'd in Civil Assessments, or Considered, or Valued as Subjects. It is well known how despicable their Condition was among the Romans (b); And the Esteem the Jews allow'd their Gentile Slaves was not greater (c). So also in some Common-wealths, 'Tis a Dishonour to be base Born, tho' the Blemish of the Birth is certainly only the Parents Fault (d). And Thus in India, there is a certain Race of Men call'd Peneas, which are look'd upon to be infamous (e). A State under the Latter Consideration takes away or lessens Civil Esteem, Either because the Persons that live under it, are employ'd in Things which cannot be perform'd without the Guilt of some Vice or Sin; Or else are oblig'd by It to undertake such Mean Offices and Duties, which None but Persons of base and abject Spirits would stoop to be employ'd in. What Value is to be set upon Those of the First Sort must be known from the Laws, or Customs and Manners of every Common-wealth (f). Those of the Second Sort are common Hangmen and Executioners, Bailiffs, Goldfinders, and the like; Persons that in most Common-wealths are denied the Society of all People of Fashion or Reputa-

(a) Vid. L. 16. t. 3. l. 31. f. 1. D. Depositum, &c.

(1) See above in B. 3. c. 6. f. 11. towards the End.

(2) See the same Book and Chapt. f. 10. &c.

(b) Vid. L. 18. t. 5. l. 6. D. ad L. Juliam de Adulter.

(c) Joseph. Archæol. Jud. l. 4. c. 8. Neither are Slaves permitted to be Witnesses, because of the Baseness of their Minds; since it may justly be believed, that their Testimonies are corrupted, either by the hopes of Gain, or else out of Fear. Add. Selden. de J. N. & G. Sec. Heb. l. 5. c. 3. Lex Wisigoth. l. 2. tit. 4. c. 9.

(d) Vid. L. 6. t. 57. l. 5. C. ad S. Actum Orficiatum & Stobæum, Serm. 75. Unless perhaps we allow there is something in that which is said in Procopius Hist. Arcan. That the Infamy of a Woman's Vices not only spreads it self to her Husband, but descends in a greater degree to the Children, and they are condemn'd to bear a perpetual Mark of Disgrace, as if Nature had stain'd them with the Dishonours of their Mother.

(e) Vid. Abbr. Rogerium de Bramin, Part 1. c. 2.

(f) To this Purpose is that which is related by Valerius Maximus, l. 7. c. 7. of Q. Metellus the Prætor Urbanus, who would not allow Vecilius the Bawd, the Possession of Inventius's Goods, tho' they were left to him by Will; because he would neither seem to approve Inventius's Action, in throwing away his Fortune into such a Sink of Lewdness, nor allow Vecilius the Rights of a true Citizen, since he had renounced every honourable way of Life. And thus in the same Author, when Genucius, a Priest of Cybele, had obtain'd a Decree of Cn. Orestes, the Prætor, that Navianus's Goods should be restor'd to him, the Consul, Emilius Lepidus, revers'd the Prætor's Decree, that the Court of Justice might not, under the Pretext of his Suing for his Rights, be polluted by the obscene Presence and contaminated Voice of Genucius. And to this belongs also that, in L. 11. t. 5. l. 1. D. de Aleator. Where the Prætor saith, He would give no Judgment, if any Person should Beat or do any Damage to him, at whose House he should hear they play'd at Dice, or if any one Stole or Cheated him of any thing, at that time.

tion. And in some States the Laws themselves have expressly so determined. In Rome, Cicero says (a), 'The Executioner was forbid by the Laws of the Censors, not only to be seen in the Forum, but to see the Light, or breath the Air of that Place, or to have any Habitation in the City; As if his Presence would strike Infection and Pollution upon the publick Assemblies. In Other States, It is thought Scandalous to mix in Company with such Persons, only upon the Force of Custom and common Opinion. It seeming natural to suppose, that Persons employ'd in Cruel and Slavish Offices, Would have generally Humours and Dispositions suitable to their Employments; And that None but Men of Mean and Servile Tempers could voluntarily submit to them. Among the Romans, the Souldiers indeed were often made use of in publick Executions in the City as well as in the Camp, without Infamy, or Diminution of their Esteem (b). For there is much difference between doing an Execution at the Particular Command of a Superiour, and between doing it by Profession. So also among the Jews, Criminals were Stoned by all the People. And Montaigne tells us (c), that Witoldus, Duke of Lithuania, introduced a Custom in that Country, that Condemn'd Criminals should put themselves to Death with their own Hands, It appearing unreasonable to Him, that Innocent Persons should be employ'd to commit Murther; Tho' this was but a filly Reason, For the Executioner cannot be said to commit Murther by inflicting the Punishment the Law awards. But Others give this better Reason for the Law, that None might be forced upon the Office of an Executioner, to cause and to see the Agonies of the Criminals, to which the innate Tenderness and Compassion of human Nature must give every man an Aversion.

The Roman Laws set a Mark of Infamy upon All Persons that acted upon the Stage for Hire (d), or suffer'd themselves to be Hired to fight with Beasts (e). But the Reason why Infamy was annexed to such Actions, was not that any Immorality was supposed in them. (For such Actions may, 'tis possible, be Innocent enough;) But The Gain made by them was That which made them look dishonourable and base to the Natural Gravity of the Romans. (For 'tis often the Hire only which makes the Service Mean and Base.) By the Same Laws, it was look'd upon to be Infamous, for a Man to Permit His Daughter to Marry while She was a Widow, within the time of Mourning; Or to Marry Any Person in such Circumstances Himself; Or to suffer Any Person under his Charge to Marry or to be Married Within that Time; Because it might seem to betray much Levity and Unsettledness of Mind, to argue weak Inconstancy of Faith, and wild desultory Lust. Among the Ancient Inhabitants of the Canary Islands it was thought very great Ignominy and Disgrace to be a Butcher (f); And Sir Thomas More makes his Utopians of the same Opinion (g). Selden tells us, that the Jews refused to admit Four Sorts of Men either to be Witnesses, or to have any Hand in Judicial Matters; because of the Ill Repute they bore among them; And Those were Gamesters, Usurers Persons that made Gain by the Produce of the Seventh Year, or Year of Remission; and Such as taught Pidgeons to fly. And He adds, They gave this Reason for it; Because None of these Sorts of People apply'd themselves to any Way, of Life which tended to promote Publick Good, or bring any Advantage or Convenience to Human Life (h).

VII. Thus the Loss of Simple Civil Esteem may be owing purely to a State of Life. But a Man may also entirely be depriv'd of it upon a Criminal Account; When for some Particular Sort of Crime He hath committed, (for every Offence will not deprive a Man of Civil Esteem) (i) the Laws of the Commonwealth fix a Mark of Infamy upon him: Which is usually done, Either by Taking away his Natural Life at the same time, and by condemning his Memory, or by ejecting him out of the Commonwealth with Shame and Disgrace; or perhaps by Allowing him to Continue in the Commonwealth, but not as a Sound, but Disorder'd, Infected Member; Or, in other words, by permitting Him to inhabit in the Dominions of the State, and to enjoy the Common Protection of the Laws, but by Excluding him out of all Publick Offices and Employments, and all Honourable Societies, by making him Uncapable to make any Will, and by disabling Him to do any Legal Act which supposes untainted Reputation. But now what are the Crimes which contract all this Infamy must be known from the Laws of every particular Commonwealth (k). And Here it may be observ'd, That according to the Civilians, the Infamy which is contracted by any bad Action may be either the Effect of an Immediate (1) Imposition of the Law it self; or of some antece-

(a) Pro Rabirio, c. 5. (b) Vid. Petr. Fabr. Semestr. l. 2. c. 6. (c) Essays, l. 3. c. 1.

(d) Vid. L. 3. t. 2. l. 1. i. D. de his qui Infam. not. (e) Vid. L. 3. t. 1. l. 1. f. 6. D. de Postulando.

(f) Aloisius Cadamustus Navigat. c. 8. (g) Utop. l. 2. (h) Selden de J. N. & G. Sec. Heb. l. 4. c. 5.

(i) Vid. L. 1. t. 54 l. 1. C. de modo Multarum. (k) Vid. L. 50. t. 13. l. 5. f. 1, 2, 3. D. de extraordin. Cognit. Tho' in this place I observe, that in some of the Examples, there is hardly any Distinction made between the simple and intensive Esteem. And here we may observe a Law of the Egyptians, by which Souldiers that deserted, or did not obey the Orders of their Commanders, were not punish'd with Death, but only Infamy and Shame. And if they could by their Courage afterwards wipe off the Ignominy, they were restor'd to their former Dignity. And thus the Legislator, by making Ignominy a greater punishment than Death, taught them to think Infamy the greatest Evil, and at the same time seems to have considered, that such as were punished with Death, must for ever be made incapable of doing any further Good in common Life, but that such as were only deprived of their Honour, would be always endeavouring to do something that might recover it, Diodor. Siculus, l. 1. c. 78. (1) Vid. D. d. l.

dent Examination and Sentence of Some Judge (1); or else of the Censure of Men of Character and Esteem, Which is commonly call'd Infamy of the Fact (a). (b) But I am rather inclin'd to think, This Infamy of the Fact is not so much the Immediate Effect of the Opinions, of Men of Character, As a Punishment which the Law also inflicts upon that View, that Good Men always condemn Such Actions, and look upon them to be Base and Wicked. For Tho' it may be thought a Discredit, to fall under Censure of Persons of Approv'd Lives, and Reputation, yet unless the Law joins with, and confirms that Censure, No Man can suffer so far in his Civil Esteem by the Judgment only of Private Men, as to be Excluded from any Rights and Advantages which the Civil Laws allow to an Unblemish'd Reputation. And therefore it is evident, That a Man doth not Immediately forfeit Esteem, When He is Accused of, and Charged with, any Crime of Infamous Nature and Quality. For as Julian rightly answer'd Delphidius the Orator, (2) When he cry'd out, Who would be guilty, If it were sufficient to deny the Fact? 'Who could be Innocent, If it were enough only to Accuse (c)? But it is Then a Crime produceth Infamy when the Person is condemn'd for it, or confesseth it. And That he is also supposed to do, when he agrees with the Prosecutor to let his Action drop: Because all such Agreement naturally supposes Confession (d); Except perhaps it may be made appear, that He chooseth to come to Composition with the Prosecutor, not out of any Consciousness of Guilt, but for other just Reasons, as to escape the Vexation and Trouble of Trial, the Severity or Partiality of the Judge, or upon some particular Dislike he bears to his Person (e). But tho' a Man's Reputation is suppos'd to be Clear'd, when He is Acquitted from the Crime which was charg'd upon Him; Yet to make his Innocence appear the more Unquestionable, and to punish Calumny and False Accusation, 'Tis usual in many States and Common-wealths to force the Accusers to beg pardon, confess themselves guilty of Falseness, make their Submissions, and pay Respect and Honour to the Party Accused, and the like (f).

VIII. From What has been said It may also be infer'd, That it is no Real Infamy or Dishonour, When a Man hath suffer'd an Abuse either by Words or Actions, not to Revenge it with his own Sword; As the Custom is in some Countries, especially among Persons of Rank, and Men of Military Profession; but to punish it by the Magistrate, or pass it by in Silence, supposing such Patience doth not imply Confession of any Bad or Base Action. It seems to argue indeed much Cowardice and Littleness of Spirit, tamely to submit to Every Man's Insults and Injuries, without endeavouring Bravely to vindicate and assert his Rights and Liberty; And it seems natural in such Cases, For every Man to be of the Opinion of Neoptolemus in the Poet (g), Τὸ θναίνω μᾶλλον ἢ ἀπὸ βλεμῶ καλεοίμην.

I'd sooner Die than be a Coward thought.

There are Certain Injuries which If a Man chooseth generously rather to Despise than to Revenge, He will not bring his Courage in Question. Nor can I see any thing in such Conduct that can rob Him of his Natural or Civil Esteem. And therefore, Hobbes says, 'If a Man receive Words of Disgrace, or some little Injuries from another, for which there is no Punishment assigned by Law, and is afraid he shall fall into Contempt, and be obnoxious to the like Injuries from others, and to avoid this, protects himself by the Terror of his private Revenge; this is a Crime, and such a Fear will not excuse it; because the Common-wealth would have the publick Words, that is, the Laws, be of more force with the Subjects, than the Words of any private Man, which they that made the Laws therefore assign'd no Punishment for, because they thought it not worthy a Man that had the Use of Reason to take any notice of them (h). And much less is it any Dishonour for a Man, in a Common-wealth, where the Laws expressly forbid Private Revenge, to prefer Obedience to the Laws rather than expose himself at once to the Danger of the Fight, and the Severity of Civil Justice, upon a vain pretence of Honour (i). Neither is it always I presume a sign of Cowardice, for a

(1) Vid. L. 3. t. 1. l. 1. f. 8. De postulando. (a) Infamia Facti.

(b) Vid. L. 2. t. 12. l. 13. C. ex quibus Caus. infam. irrog. Add. L. 37. t. 15. l. 2. D. de obseq. Parent. prestand. l. 20. & D. L. 3. t. 2. l. 20. de his qui notant. infam. Vid. L. 9. t. 9. l. 25. C. ad L. Jul. de Adult. And to this you may refer that which Rochefort Descrip. Antillar. Part 2. c. 8. relates of the Apalachite. They have no other Punishment, saith he, for Thieves, besides the Reflections that are made upon them in all Company upon that account; and this is generally taken so hard by them, that to avoid it, they will fly away into the most uninhabited Desarts.

(2) V. Ammian, Marcellin. L. 18. (c) And to this we may apply that of Plautus in Trinum, Act. 1. Sc. 2. v. 44. 45. Not to commit a Crime is in a Man's own Breast, the Suspicion whether he does or not, is in anothers.

(d) Vid. L. 3. t. 2. l. 5. D. de his qui infam. notant. Quoniam intelligitur confiteri crimen, qui paciscitur.

(e) Thus in Isocrates adv. Callimach. in the Beginning. Some persuaded the Defendant to Compound the Matter with the Plaintiff, because in Trials there are several things which fall out otherwise than are expected; and in passing the Vote, there is more of Chance than Equity. And therefore it is a much better and safer way to be at some small Expence, to get clear of a Crime, than to refuse to pay any Money, and run so great a Hazard.

(f) It is evident from Josephus de Bello Judaico, l. 4. c. 39. That the Ignominy of having been in Chains, was supposed to be taken away, if the Chains were not Unlock'd, but Fil'd afunder; and this, he saith, was the way, when any one had been put in Chains innocently, among the Romans.

(g) Q. Calaber. l. 9. (h) Leviath. c. 27. Vid. Leg. Salicam. tit. 32.

(i) — Injustum rigido jus dicitur ense. Ovid. Trist. L. 5. El. 7.

'Tis cruel Justice which the Sword inflicts.

Man to refuse to put his Life and Fortunes to the Venture upon every little insignificant Quarrel, when there may be often less dangerous, and more innocent and lawful Occasions offer'd to show his Courage (a). Thus When Pyrrhus in Plutarch call'd Antigonus Villain, and challeng'd Him to meet him upon the Plain, and fight him for the Kingdom, Antigonus answered, ἢ μὲν αὐτῷ στρατηγίαν ἐν ὄπλοις μάχων ἢ καυρῶν εἶ, that His Way of making War consisted as much in knowing proper Times and Opportunities, as in Strength; and that if Pyrrhus were weary of his Life, he might easily find ways enough to go out of it; And So Augustus Answer'd Antony's Challenge, in the same Author, That he might easily find a way to die (b). And in such Cases, no Prudent, Considerate Man, hath any reason to be disturb'd at the Opinions or Censures of the Vulgar; since the Esteem of every Subject is to stand and fall by the Judgment of His Sovereign, and the Laws of the State; Since 'tis sufficient Proof of Bravery and Resolution to obey the Laws, in Defiance to all the little Cavil and Calumny of the Vain and Idle Part of Mankind. And hence it will be no Difficulty to answer what Hobbes says in his Leviathan, c. 10. 'That it is 'hardly possible, but private Duels should be 'thought Honourable, because they are the 'Effects of Courage, which is Power. For Why should it not be rather look'd upon to be a Sign of Greatness and Bravery of Spirit, to know how to govern the Heats and Passions of our Minds, and to give them no other Liberty but what the Laws allow? Tho' I think the same Author says very well afterwards, c. 30. 'That all Laws that forbid Duels, 'should ordain Honour for them that refuse, 'and Ignominy for them that make the Challenge; and thus those that refus'd to fight would have an Honourable Excuse. The Remedy the Sicilian Constitutions propos'd against this Custom was, by inflicting severe Penalties upon them that offer'd any Affront (c).

An Account, by the way, of the Antiquity of Duels, and whence they at First began, We may see in Diodorus Siculus (d). 'The Gauls '(saith he) in the Height of their Entertainments upon the least Quarrel that arose, 'would break off their Mirth, take their 'Swords, and without expressing any value 'for their Lives, go out and fight. And this 'they did upon a Belief, That They should enjoy another Life, in a new Body; and therefore easily despised the Care of This; As 'Lucan expresseth it:

— Inde ruendi

In ferrum mens prona viris, animæque capaces Mortis, & ignavum est reditura parcere vitæ (e).

— Hence they so bravely dare
Defie the Sword, and all the dread of War,
Scarce satisfied with death; and think it mean,
To spare a Life that must return again (f).

IX. But Further, it is also evident, that the Government cannot deprive any Man of his Natural Simple Esteem arbitrarily, at pleasure, but only upon Some Antecedent Crime He hath been guilty of, Which is attended with Infamy, either by its own Intrinsic Turpitude, or by Express Sanction of Law. For Since such a Power can no way be supposed to promote Civil Society, or the Interest of the Commonwealth, it is not to be supposed it was ever Conferr'd upon the Sovereign Governours in it. But as the Civil Sovereign may Unjustly Eject a Subject out of the Commonwealth; so He may Unjustly also take away his Civil Esteem, so far at least, as to deprive him of all those Rights and Advantages which attend an Untainted Esteem in the Commonwealth. But his Intrinsic Natural Esteem can no more be taken away from a Man, than his Vertue and Integrity. Besides, 'tis next to a Contradiction, that a Man should be declared Infamous at the Pleasure only of the Government; that is, That a Man should be charg'd with a Suspicion of being guilty of some Dishonourable, or Criminal Action, not because he is really Guilty, but because 'tis the Pleasure of the Government by such means to use an Innocent Person as if he were Criminal. And I think it is also beyond dispute, that there lies no Obligation upon any Subject, to sacrifice his own Simple Esteem and Character, to the Civil Government, or to contract any Real Infamy, for the Advantage of the Publick. For neither hath the Government Power to command any Base, or Ill Action, which will be the cause of real Infamy; neither ought a Subject to obey, if It should.

X. Whether indeed, it may not be required of a Subject of Good Character, to take upon himself the Infamy of his Prince, or his Country; or as it were, make himself Criminal for their Faults, is not so clear. But Here (tho' I think it hardly possible for a Man to counterfeit himself a Criminal, without being in some measure, really so) I conceive, There ought to be a Distinction made between a Prince's Domestick or Private Faults, and Those that are Publick, or which have an Influence upon the whole Commonwealth. Now that a Man should take the First Sort upon himself, and make himself Criminal for his Prince, can neither be Lawfully, and Justly desired by the One, nor Safely be complied with by the Other: Whether with design to put some plausible Colour upon the Action of the Prince,

(a) Vid. Cæs. Com. de Bell. Gallic. l. 5. c. 44. Vid. Busbeq. Epist. 3. de Velibego.

(b) Plut. in Pyrrh. p. 404. A. & in Anton. p. 950. E. Alexander de Rhodes Itiner. l. 2. c. 6. relates of the Soldiers in the Kingdom of Tonquin, That tho' they are very Valiant against an Enemy, and set but little Value upon their Lives; yet among one another they never draw their Swords, but are as loving as Brothers: And that when they once saw a Frenchman and a Portuguese fight a Duel, they were amazed at it, and said they never saw such Barbarity before. (c) Const. Sicul. l. 3. tit. 33. f. 4. (d) L. 5. c. 28. (e) Lucan. l. 1. v. 460, &c.

(f) Vid. Appian. Celtic. Where he gives the same Reason for the Boldness and Bravery of the German.

or whether to take the Blemish that would otherwise be fix'd upon His Natural Esteem, upon Himself. For no body can take away the Civil Esteem of the Sovereign, because he is placed above the reach of any Civil Judicature. Thus it cannot be thought that any Good Man can approve the Action of Anicetus, when He declared, He had been guilty of Adultery with Octavia only that Nero might have a Pretence to dissolve his Marriage with Her (a). But Yet 'tis not Uncommon, that when publick Ministers by Secret Order from their Masters, Enter into Treaties with Foreign States, or oppose and form Designs against Them, Which if known to be the Result of Publick Counsel or Instructions, would bring Danger or Inconvenience upon the State, to avoid the Ill Consequences which might follow, by laying the fault upon the Ministers, as if they had Acted only by their own private Judgment. And in such a Case, I think no good Subject would refuse to divert the Evil from the Commonwealth, by favouring the Excuse, and yielding that what He did, was beyond his Instructions and without Command; Provided his Punishment be no greater than some small pretended Disgrace (b). For to suffer Death upon That Account, or to be given into the Hands of the Injured Party, would be a Severity not to be born or excused. But the Pretended Punishment, Whatever it be, may be easily either remitted or Compensated otherwise. For 'tis unquestionable, that He that hath Power to inflict Civil Infamy, hath also Power to remove it (c). But notwithstanding, if Infamy be inflicted for any Impious or Flagitious Action, Restitution of a Man's Fame will only produce the External Civil Effects of an Unblemish'd Reputation; but will not in the least wipe out the Blot which lies upon his Natural Esteem.

XI. Intensive Esteem, is that Species of Reputation by which Persons otherwise Equal in the Simple Repute, are prefer'd to One Another, According as One possesses a larger share than Another of Those Things, whatever they be, which are apt to raise in other Men Reverence and Respect. Now Honour, which answers the Intenseness of Esteem, is the Signification of our Opinion of Another Man's Excellencies. And therefore the Honour is not really in Him that receives, but in him that gives it (d). For tho' a Man may set what Value he pleases upon himself as the Seller does upon his Commodities: Yet as in These, it is the Buyer at last that determines the Price; so the Value of Men is no higher or greater than as others are pleas'd to set it (e). For as Hobbes says, let a Man (as most Men do) rate himself at the highest he can; yet the true Value of him is no more than he is esteem'd at by others (f). But yet every Man is affected more or less with the Honour others pay him, as It answers to that Value which he puts upon himself (g). But the Esteem it self, or That which gives Men the Title of Desert to Honour, is often Figuratively expressed by that Word. And so Certain Publick Stations, and Places of Dignity attended with Honour, are peculiarly call'd Honours. 'Tis rightly observ'd by the Author before-mention'd (g), 'That it is impossible any Society should be either great, or of any long continuance, that at first united only upon such a Bottom as a Common desire of Glory, or upon mutual Obligations to assist one another in their pursuits after Honour; because Glory and the Honour that is built upon it, consist in Comparison and Preference, and so what belongs to every body, belongs to no body; and because the Rate that is commonly set upon a Man, is taken from what he is able to do without the Assistance of others (h). On the other hand, the further Ignominy spreads, the lighter it seems, and the easier it is supported. Now this Intensive Esteem also may be consider'd, Either with regard to Such Persons as live in a Liberty of Nature; or Such as are Members of the Same Commonwealth. But I shall now proceed only to examine the Foundations of this Intenseness or Eminence, as They fall under these Two Considerations. First, As they produce barely an Aptitude or Disposition in Men to receive Honours from Others; and Secondly, as They give them a Proper Right to demand Honour as their Due.

XII. The Foundations of Intensive Esteem in General are all those Things which discover, or are supposed to imply extraordinary Excellence or Perfection of any Kind (i). The Effects of which are consonant to the Laws of Nature and the Ends of Civil Government. For 'tis unusual to see Persons of dissolute Morals and Eminent for Nothing but their Vices, celebrated and admired by the Multitude. So in particular, are Men of unusual Strength and Abilities at Eating and Drinking (k); of ex-

(a) Vid. Tacit. Ann. XIV. 62. Euripides, Helena, v. 106, 107. Nor for my Brother can I bear that Stain. Add the Story of Anton. Perez in Thuanus, l. 104. (b) Add. Marselaer. Legat. l. 1. c. 33. p. m. 200.

(c) See Cornel. Nepos. Alcibiad. c. 6. f. 5. Libanius, Orat. 7. To dissolve, and undo things that are already done, is what we reckon among things impossible; but to take off Ignominy from them that are in Disgrace, is not so difficult a Task; and you are the only Physician that can cure this Disease: Speaking to Julian the Emperor. See Justin, B. 5. c. 4. (d) Aristot. Nicom. l. 1. c. 3. We ought to think the Honour is rather in those that Honour, than them that are Honour'd. (e) Vid. John VIII. v. 54. (f) Leviath. c. 10.

(g) See above in B. 7. c. 1. f. 2. towards the End. (h) Hobbes de Cive, c. 1. f. 2. (i) Cic. de Nat. Deor. l. 1. c. 17. Every thing that excels, may justly command a Veneration.

(k) Such as Juvenal describes, Sat. IV. v. 139, 140.

Nulli major fuit usus edendi Tempestate mea.

In Arts of Eating, none more early Train'd;
None, in my Time, had equal Skill attain'd. Mr. Dryden.

Aristoph. Acharnens. Act. 1. Sc. 2. v. 35, 36. The barbarous People value Men only, as they can Eat and Drink most.

travagant, insatiable Lust; of mad, rash, ungovernable Humours; dextrous, ingenious; crafty, artful Villains; and in short, All Mifcreants whatever, that are arriv'd at some signal Proficiency, and seem to be Leaders in their several Vices. But who, the more They are accomplish'd in their different vile Practices, will appear only the more insupportably Wicked to all the good and sober part of Mankind (a). It may possibly require much strength of Body, and readiness of Parts to be compleatly Vicious; But 'tis also certain, that Vice will govern with greater Power and Violence, where there is more Vigour and stronger Appetites to entertain and support it. From All Which it is easie to infer, that Commendation and Glory must be rated only by the Valuation of the Persons We receive it from. And therefore, that the greatest Commendation is that which comes from Persons that deserve it themselves; And consequently, that a Wise Man will set no value upon their Praise, (as M. Antoninus saith,) who cannot so much as appear pleasing to themselves (b). But in particular, the Foundations of This Esteem are such as These; Perspicacity of Mind, Parts and Abilities capable of much Improvement and Variety of Knowledge, especially when great Capacities are answered by great Attainments. A Judgment turn'd for Business, easily discerning the true State of things, and difficultly imposed upon (c). Steadiness of Resolution, unshaken and unmov'd at External Accidents, above fear, and beyond the force of Temptation. Eloquence, or the Power of expressing the Thoughts with much fluency of Words, and gracefulness of Utterance. And next to These, Strength, Beauty, Comeliness, and Good Proportion of Body; as these may be suppos'd to be either Instruments, or Promises and Signs of certain Graces and Perfections in the Mind (d). Hence it has been vulgarly thought, that extraordinary Tallness of Body, implies a Mind and Person Great and Noble. And the Gods and Heroes were therefore represented upon the Stage in the Buskin, that the Actors might appear of an unusual Size. And 'tis observable, that there are many Men that wish to be Taller than they are; but that there are very few that would be content to lose an Inch of their Stature. But how ridiculous soever this Opinion seems to be, it prevail'd so far, that upon the force of it, the Ethiopians, (as Herodotus saith (e)) chose their Kings by a certain Measure. A Method of Election, which would no doubt have been much approved by the Indian, mention'd in Montaign, who happening to be at Roan while the Court was there, in the Reign of Charles IX. said, that he thought it very strange so many Tall Men with long Beards, and so bravely arm'd, as They were that stood about the King's Person, (meaning the Swiss-Guards) should be content to obey a Beardless Boy, and that he wonder'd they did not choose One of them King (f). But it is often seen (as the Poet says) That,

— *Natura breves animis ingentibus artus,
Finxerit.* —

Nature large Souls in little Room confines (g).

And that (h),

— *Ἄνερον τε
Ἄπειρον τε πλείονα, μέγαν δ' εἰς ἑδὴν ἀέξει
Ἄνερον, οἱ μὲν οἱ πικρὴν ἔστι μῆτις ἔπι.]*

'Tis fond to hope Success from Strength or Might;
Except with Force, Prudence and Art unite.

But besides These Foundations of Intensive Esteem, there are also others to be mention'd, such as the Goods of Fortune (as they are call'd) which seem either to suppose Industry, Wit, and Prudence necessary to obtain them, or to promise Power, or to supply Matter to do Great Things. But That which advances Reputation most, and is the Foundation of the Highest and most Intense Esteem, is Good Success, and Fortune in Great and Important Actions. This first of all seeming to suppose Intrinsic Worth and Excellence, and then to demonstrate the Advantages that arise from it, and the Lawful Ends it may and has been applied to (i). And as the Fame of such Achievements gains Belief in the World, it is properly call'd Renown. A Reputation of particular Prudence and Conduct in Difficulties relating to Common Life and Practice, or to Speculative Abstracted Truths, is what is usually call'd Authority: which others more fully call an Opinion of greater Knowledge, join'd with Probity and Sincerity. And hence those Degrees of Esteem which Age is thought to confer, are founded upon nothing more than the common Perswasion, that Experience and long Observation upon Business and Things, gene-

(a) Philo Judæus de Migrat. Abrahami. p. 413. A. Ed. Paris. To Excel many Things that are Bad, is only a more famous Infamy. Arrian Epietet. l. 3. c. 14. If you tell me you can Kick with a great deal of Strength; I answer, You value your self upon that which belongs to an Ass. (b) M. Ant. l. 3. c. 4.

(c) Vid. Ecclesiast. IX. 15. 1 Kings III. 28.

(d) Vid. Virg. Æneid. l. 5. v. 344. Isocrat. in Encom. Helenæ. Tho' he is there a little too much an Orator. Lord Bacon's Essays, c. 41. 42.

(e) Thalia. Vid. Themest. Orat. 14.

(f) Montaign's Essays, l. 1. c. 30. Add 1 Sam. X. 23, 24. and here also we may apply to this sense, that of Oppian, Cyneg. l. 3. c. 68.

Μείον ἄνδρ' μείζων τελέθει, μέγαλοισ' ἢ μέγαν.

The Great excels the Less, the Less the Great.

(g) Claudian, de Bello Getico, v. 584. (h) Q. Calaber, l. 5. (i) Aristot. Rhet. l. 1. c. 3. 'Tis just to Honour those that do Good, but not such as barely have it in their Power. Pind. Olym. Od. 6. v. 123, 124. τεκμαίρου γρημ' ἔργων, The Work discovers what the Author is.

rally produce Caution and Prudence (a); tho' it is not to be denied, that there are Instances where Grey Hairs are not signs of Wisdom (b). But now on the Other hand, Women generally desire rather the Complements of Youth and Beauty, than the Respect and Honours paid to Age. And therefore Lais, when she grew Old, dedicated her Looking-Glass to Venus, Adding as it is in the Epigram (c):

— ἐπι τῆν ἡρὸν ὀφθαλμοῖς

οὐκ ἐδέλω' οἷν δ' ὡς παρ' ὅ, ἐ δ' ὡς αἰμα.

The Face I once could boast no Glass can show,
And that I now have left I would not know.

The Roman Law seems to allow more Worth and greater Dignity to Men than Women (d). Tho' in general, there are some Foundations of Esteem common to both Sexes. And there are others which are particular to the Women, such as the several Accomplishments of Vertues and Duties peculiar to their Sex. And there are Others again, which are borrowed and derived to them, when they are said to shine with the Rays of their Husbands (e); or when they Value themselves upon the Number or Worth of their Children (f).

XIII. From all which it readily appears what Judgment may be made upon what Hobbes says in the X. Chap. of his Leviathan, where he reduces all the Foundations of Honour or Intensive Esteem to Power, which he calls a Possession of present Means, to obtain some apparent future Good. And this he divides into Natural and Instrumental. Natural Power (he says) consists in the Eminence of the Faculties of Body or Mind, as extraordinary Strength, Beauty, Prudence, Arts, Eloquence,

Liberality, Nobility, and the like. Instrumental Powers are those, which being acquired by these or by Fortune, are the Means and Instruments of acquiring more, as Riches, Reputation, Friends, and good Luck; and in short, any Quality whatever, or the Reputation of any such Quality, as makes a Man be lov'd, or fear'd of many. And then he defines Worth, or Dignity; That it is the value or price of a Man, or as much as would be given for the use of his Power. And the manifestation of that Value we set on one another is that, he saith, which is call'd Honouring and Dishonouring. Thus to value at an high Rate, is to Honour a Man; at a low Rate, is to Dishonour him. Afterwards he recounts the natural Tokens, or ways of Honour, as to pray to another for Aid, to Obey, to give great Gifts (g), to be sedulous in promoting another's Good, to give way or place to another in any Commodity; to shew any sign of love or fear, to praise, magnify, or call happy, to speak to another with Confidenciation, to appear before him with Decency and Humility, to believe, to trust, to relied on another, to hearken, to counsel or discourse of what kind soever, to agree with in Opinion, to imitate, to honour those another Honours, to employ in Counsels or Actions of Difficulty. And farther, Civil Dignity according to him, is that Value which is set on a Man by the Common-wealth, which is understood by Offices of Command, Judicature, publick Employment, or by Names or Titles, introduced for distinction of such value. And he rightly observes, that the Common-wealth may make whatsoever it pleases to stand for Signs of Honour, tho' it be otherwise in its own nature indifferent; as for instance, it (a) Vid. D. L. 50. t. 6. l. 5. init. de Jure Immunitatis. Q. Calaber, l. 5.

Αἰεὶ δ' ἐν βελήσι γέρον πολυῖδρις ἀμείνων
Ὀπλοτέρη πέλξ ἀνδρῶν, ἐπεὶ μάλα μὲλα οἶδε.

Diod. Sicul. l. 19. c. 34. It seems more natural, to pay greater Reverence and Respect to Aged, than to young People. Oppian. Halieut. l. 1. v. 683. γῆρας γ' ἐναίσιμον ἀνδρῶν ἰθυσίον, Age makes Men venerably Great.

(b) Such as we apply that of Ovid Metam. l. 9. v. 436, 437.

— Qui propter amara senectæ.

Pondera despicitur, nec quo prius, ordine regnat.

And as Lucan, l. 1. v. 135. expresseth it:

— Stat magni nominis umbra:

And therefore Horace saith very well, Ep. l. 1. Ep. 1. v. 8, 9.

Solve senescentem mature sanus equum, ne
Peccat ad extremum ridendus, & ilia ducat.

Antiphanes. Life is like Wine, when it runs low, it will turn fowre. Add Charron de la Sagesse, l. 1. c. 35. f. 5. Strabo, l. 15. p. 488. The Indians allow no Pre-eminence to the Aged, unless their Prudence deserve it. Philo de Abrahamo, p. 387. A Man ought not to be call'd Old from the time he hath liv'd, but from the way he hath spent his Life in. For many that have continued a long course of Years in ill Practices, can only be call'd long liv'd Boys. And it is sometimes true, as Varro saith, de re Rustica, l. 2. c. 2. That is a better Age which is attended with Hopes, than that which is follow'd by Death. Quint. Inst. Orat. l. 2. c. 1. p. 104. We ought not to value any one according to his Age, but according to the Improvements he hath made. Isocrat. in Archidam. init. It is not our Years, but our Parts and Industry that makes us wiser than others. Philostrat. in Vit. Apollon. Thyæn. l. 6. c. 3. p. 287. D. Youth doth not hinder a Man from seeing things clearer than even old Age it self.

(c) Antholog. l. 6. Quintil. Declam. 306. p. 462. There is nothing to be loved in an old Woman, but the Memory of what she was. Add Ld. Bacon's Essays, c. 40.

(d) L. 1. t. 9 l. 1. D. de Senatoribus. Add. Jac. Godofred. de præcedentia, part. 1. c. 5. f. 35.

(e) Vide l. 8. D. de Senatoribus, ubi supra. (f) Vide Ovid. Metam. l. 6. fab. 4. v. 127. & seqq. Valer. Max. l. 4. c. 4. f. 1. Plut. in C. Gracch. Vide Buchanan. Rerum Scotic. l. 12. init. Orat. Kennedi.

(g) And upon this Foundation I suppose, (tho' the Respect intended, was oddly express'd) the Prince of Zamaga in Africa, as Leo Africanus, l. 1. relates it, kill'd a great Number of Camels and Ostriches, to entertain his Guests; which sort of Provision they desired him to spare, he told them, that he should not deal civilly by them, if he treated Guests he thought so Noble, and that he had never seen before, with only the lesser sort of Animals.

‘ was a sign of Honour among the Persians, to be conducted through the Streets in the King’s Garments, upon one of the King’s Horſes (a), (as it is alſo to wear certain Marks or Badges). Thus the Chinese ſalute with the Head and Hand; the Japoneſe by putting off their Slippers. The Chinese always riſe to any Perſon they deſign to Honour. They of Japan pay their Honours ſitting on the Pavement, and think it Rudeneſs, and Ill Breeding to ſtand when they perform their Ceremonies (b). However all this be, that Notion of his, that Honours conſiſt ſolely in the Opinion of Power, is by no means to be admitted; neither what he infers from thence, ‘ That it doth not alter the Caſe of Honours, whether an Action (ſo it be great and difficult, and conſequently a ſign of much Power) be juſt or unjuſt. And that therefore the ancient Heathens did not think they diſhonoured, but greatly honoured their Gods, when they introduced them in their Poems, committing Rapes, Adulteries, Thefts, and other great, but unjuſt or unclean Acts. For tho’ it might be granted, that the Foundations of Honours may ſo far, be properly enough reduced to Power, namely, as they are naturally apt to produce ſome Effect or other in Human Life; ſince what is of that dull, unactive Nature, as will produce no Effect either Good or Bad, ſeems to be capable of having no Value one way or other ſet upon it: Yet that Power alone, without Relation to, or Conjunction with Goodneſs, ſhould be the Proper and Natural Foundation of real Honour, is what is contrary to Reason, and Hobbes himſelf: For in his Book De Cive, c. 15. §. 9. he gives this Definition of Honour; that It is an Opinion of the Power of Another in Conjunction with Goodneſs. And thence he infers, that There are Three Affections neceſſarily conſequent upon Honour; Love, that bears relation to Goodneſs and Hope, and Fear, that have Regard to Power;

and thus That only is True Honour, which is attended with all theſe Three Affections together. Fear alone, excited by a Power determined to Evil, can never be look’d upon to be a Sign of Honour. For Fear hath always a mixture of Hatred in it; and where a Man bates, he naturally wiſheth Harm, and Ruine, and not Honour (c). Thus by the Chriſtian Religion we are affured of the great Power of the Devil, but that it is utterly averſe to all Goodneſs, and always bent upon all Evil; but certainly no Man in his Senſes can ſuppoſe that he deſerves Honour upon that Account. And therefore, he himſelf, when he tempted our Saviour, did not ſhow him his Force and Power, but his Gifts, the Glories and Kingdoms of the World, Matt. IV. 8, 9. Nor can any Man of Senſe think it a good reaſon, which the People of ſome Barbarous Countries in the Indies give for their Worſhipping the Devil, that he ſhould do them no Harm. And therefore alſo methinks I have no Patience to ſee Hobbes mentioning Flattery among the reſt of his Natural Signs of Honour. For Flattery in every Kind of it implies and ſuppoſes ſome Deficiency, or Blemiſh, both in the Perſon that gives, and in him that receives it; and is an Act and Species of Scorn and Deriſion, without the leaſt mixture of Love or Sincerity in it (d). But as to the Fables of the Poets, there are ſome Men indeed that think, that they imply no more than that the Gods are above all the Confinement of Laws. And Others rather ſuppoſe (e), that All was Mystery in them, and that many ſecret Truths were conceal’d under the Diſguiſe of thoſe Vices and Abſurdities. But whatever they make of them, it will never by me be conceivable, that Rapes and Adulteries could be an Honour to the Gods, any more than they would be to any ordinary Mortal here on Earth (f).

XIV. But after all, theſe Foundations of In-

(a) Eſther, VI. 8. (b) Bern. Varen. Japon. Deſcript. p. 21. Add Neuhof. in Gen. Deſcript. China, c. 4. Vid. Rochefort. Deſcript. Antill. part 2. c. 19. where alſo he tells us of ſome unuſual ſigns of Honour.

(c) Silius Italicus, lib. 1. v. 149.

— Et metui demens credebatur honorem.

— And vainly thought it Honour to be Fear’d.

(d) And therefore Lucan, l. 5. v. 385, 386. calls it, — Voces per quas jam tempore tanto Mentimur dominis.

The Words with which we have long time abus’d Our Princes. —

Vid. Plutarch. de adulator. & amici discrimine. Pſcennius Niger in Spartianus, c. 11. when one was preparing to addreſs him with a Panegyrick upon his being made Emperour, ſtop’d him by ſaying, That he ought to write an Oration in Praise of Marius, or Hannibal, or any one of the famous ancient Generals, and recommend their Brave Actions to the Imitation of the preſent Age. For to commend Perſons that are living, added he, is only to deride and expoſe them, and eſpecially Emperours, ſince ’tis evident, what you may hope, or what fear from them, ſince they have the Power of the Laws, can do as they pleaſe, and take away your Lives, or ſend you into Baniſhment.

(e) Salluſtius Philoſoph. de diis & mundo, c. 3.

(f) Pindar ſays very well, Olymp. Od. 1. 55 ἀνδρῶν φάμεν ἑοικὸς ἀμφοὶ δαμόνων καλὰ. Men ought to ſpeak with Reverence of the Gods. Iſocrates in laudat Buſrid. p. 395. calls theſe Fables Blasphemies, by which (ſaith he) they boldly fix ſuch things upon the Gods, as no Body would dare ſpeak of his Enemy. For they do not only charge them with Thefts, Adulteries, and Slavery to Men; but accuſe them further, of devouring their Children, depriving Fathers of their Genitals, Copulation with Mothers, and a Thouſand other wicked Actions. The Authors of which Stories were not indeed puniſh’d as they deſerv’d, but yet neither did they altogether eſcape; for ſome of them were Stroalers, Vagabonds, and Beggars, others were ſtricken Blind, and others were driven out of their own Country, and forced to make War continually upon their Relations and Friends; and Orpheus the chief Inventor of theſe Fables, was torn to pieces. Seneca de brevitat. Vitæ, c. 16. To make the Gods Authors of Vice, what is it but to encourage and inflame our own Luſts, and to bring the Example of the Deities for our Liberty and Excufe. Fulgentius Mytholog. l. 1. p. 55, &c. If the Gods were guilty of Theft, Justice would have nothing to do with Criminals or Crimes, ſince they would be countenanc’d by Heaven.

sensitive Esteem, produce only an Imperfect Right to demand Honour and Respect from others, so that if a Man deny it where it is really deserv'd, he cannot be said to have done an Injury, but only to have been guilty of some Discourtesy or Incivility: For among Persons that live in a Liberty of Nature, where All are Equal, it doth not appear how any Man can pretend Right to demand Honour from another; since from that Love every Man naturally bears to himself, it is very easy for him to imagine that there are Qualities or Endowments in himself, equal or perhaps superiour to those which others value themselves upon. For instance, One Man thinks his Age deserves Reverence and Esteem; Another, that Youth and Vigour have a much better Title to it (a). The Hopes and Expectations of Some, raise them to as great a Pitch of Vanity, as the real Success of Others. Some value themselves upon Strength of Body; Others think Wit and Prudence, the Endowments of the Mind, much Nobler Qualities (b). This Man measures his Worth by the Largeness of his Fortune, Another by an Easiness and Freedom of Mind, which he thinks equal to all the Wealth and Opulence in the World. Some presume upon their Learning; Others will suppose that there is nothing True and Real in Human Knowledge, more than Resolution, Fidelity, and Sincerity; the τὸ βέλαιον ἢ πῖσόν ἢ ἴπνεις, as Plato states it (c). Some insist upon the Honours they have attain'd, Others satisfy themselves that Honour is not always paid where it is deserv'd, or deserv'd where it is paid (d). And others set little Value upon Greatness of Birth, and despise it when it is not attended with an answerable Greatness of Fortune (e). And certainly the Wiser part of Mankind will always think it as false a Method, to value (1) Men by their Riches, Dignities or Honours, or by Things External to them, as it would be to take the Worth of Horses from the fine Furniture which may belong to them. But besides, since Honour is then properly paid, when a Man acknowledges superiour Excellencies in Another, and pays some voluntary Submissions to him upon that score; and since no Man can be forced to pay This by outward Violence, that Method being more likely to confirm him rather in an obstinate Refusal of them; it is evident, that it is a Mistake to allow these Foundations the Force of any such perfect Right which might be asserted by Violence and Arms. For the Respect a Man pays to Another upon

Compulsion and Command, is no Sign of any Internal Reverence he has for him, but only that he is afraid of Punishment. And further, since External Signs of Honour, unless they proceed from Submission of Mind, are to be call'd Show and Mockery rather than Honour, it would be Folly to threaten Violence when they are denied; especially if the Person from whom they are expected declares, that it is not out of Contempt that he omits to pay the Formalities of his Respect, but only because he would enjoy his Liberty, and not be forced to do that which ought to be left to his own Pleasure and Courtesie. And therefore the Scythian Ambassadors told Alexander the Great, 'that They hoped it was excusable in them 'that lived in Desarts, not to know who He 'was, and whence He came. And Ariovistus in Cæsar's Commentaries, tells Cæsar, 'That if 'He had been to desire any thing for himself, 'He would have attended him in Person, and 'that He could not but expect that Cæsar 'should show him the same Respect (f). From all which, it seems to be evident, that tho' it be agreeable to Natural Reason, that Honours should be paid to Persons of Superiour Excellencies; or further, that tho' it might be also allow'd, that it is no less a Command of the Law of Nature to honour Persons of Worth; yet still that this Duty must be One of those, which a Man hath no Right to demand from Others, but which must be left entirely to their Good Nature and Civility. But when a Man pretends Right to demand Honour, or any Sign of it from Another, 'tis necessary he should either have Power and Authority over him, or Produce some Compact for his Right, or Prove it by some Law made or approved by their Common Lord and Master. Mandeflo in his Travels (g) relates, That in a Treaty of Peace, after a long War between the Portuguese and the King of Cochin, it was a long time before the Disputes on each side could be brought to a Conclusion, because the Indian Nobles insisted, that the Portuguese should give them the Way, as the Common People of their own Country were obliged to do. But that the Portuguese refusing such dishonourable Terms, it was agreed at length, that the Debate should be decided by single Combat, in which the Victory happening to the Portuguese, the Indian Nobility were obliged to give the Way to the Portuguese, and to stand still till they were pass'd by.

XV. But however, between Private Men, certainly the Noblest Contest for Honour and

(a) Pind. Olymp. Od. 4. towards the End.

And Youth sometimes with hoary Hairs
Before the Noon of Life is crown'd.

(b) Sophocl. Ajax. Flagell. p. 69. Ed. H. Steph.

The strongest have not still the best Success,
But Prudence never is unfortunate.

(c) Plato. Ep. X.

(d) Cic. Ep. ad Fam. l. 3. Epist. 13.

(e) Euripid. Phœniss. v. 445. & Electra. v. 37, 38.

Ααυτοῖσις γένος γε. Χρημάτων δὲ πτωχότες.
Noble in Birth, but miserably Poor.

(1) See Mr. Barbeyrac's Fourth Note upon this Section.

(f) Cæs. de B. G. l. 1. c. 34. And Vologeses, King of the Parthians, answer'd Nero, when he sent for him almost in the same manner, It is easier for you to pass so great a Sea, than me; when your are in Asia, we shall easily agree when to meet. Xiphilinus Epit. Dionis.

(g) Mandeflo Itin. part. 2.

Eminence, would be to dispute who should express the greatest readiness to pay Honour to Others, or most Modesty in declining it themselves (1). And it is ridiculous enough for Men to grow warm and angry in a Contention about outward Honour; especially when there is little or no Profit or Advantage to be made by it, and when it may end perhaps like the Dispute mentioned in the Epigram (a), Who only shall go thorough the Dirt first. It was a Good Determination enough which a certain Prince made, when Two of the meanest of his Servants had quarrel'd which should take Place at Church, That the Greatest Fool should Sit first. For as to what Quintilian says, that a poor Man's Honour is his best Estate (b), it must be understood only of simple Esteem. But between Princes and Nations, the Disputes about Eminence of Worth and Dignity, and the Precedence which depends upon it, have generally and in all Ages been managed with greater show of Reason, and stronger Pretences. The Arguments usually urged in these Controversies will perhaps deserve closer Consideration. Thus much therefore is beyond dispute, that where a Prince depends upon Another of Superiour Power, the Greater is the most Honourable, and has a perfect Right to Precedence; tho' perhaps the same Title may be Common to Both of them. Thus there are Instances of Greater Kings that have Others call'd Kings under them, tho' in Reality they are no more than Magistrates and Governours of Provinces. Some Princes do Homage to Others for their Kingdoms, as Feudal, and there are Others that hold theirs by other Titles. So in Tacitus's Life of Agri-cola, 'tis said to be an old receiv'd Art of Rome, to make and maintain Kings to be their Instruments of Slavery. And thus Adherbal, in Sal-lust, says, that when his Father Micipsa died, he commanded him to think nothing in the Kingdom of Numidia his own, but the Administration of it, and that the Right of it belong'd to the Roman Senate (c). And so also a Prince, that has made an Unequal League with Another, doth by that very Act acknowledge a Superiority of Worth and Dignity in the Other; since he obliges himself to pay more Respect than will be given. And it is, I think, also further clear, that where a Prince hath obtain'd against Another a Right of Superiority of Dignity or Precedence, either for his own Person, or as Head of such a State or Common-wealth, whether by Compact or Custom, and such a sort of Sufferance, as no other probable Account can be given of, than that he was allowed to be the Greater Prince; that Right may be infilted on and maintained, as long as that Prince lives, who is as it were, the Character or Mark of the Dignity, and under whom that Right was at first obtain'd (d).

XVI. But where no such Right has been already fix'd, there variety of Arguments are used to prove Superiority of Eminence and Dignity. The Antiquity of Kingdoms, Families and Governments, the Extent, Riches, and Power of Dominions, the Quality of that Power which the Prince holds over his Subjects, and the Magnificence of his Title are the Common and General Topicks. That Antiquity adds a sort of Reverence and Veneration to States and Families, is an Opinion commonly receiv'd. And they that endeavour to support themselves upon the Strength of it, usually urge, that they enjoy'd their Dignity in full Lustre long ago, when other Kingdoms were subject to the basest Slavery; or, it may be, when the Family which now wears the Crown, and Triumphs so Insolently in its new Honour, lay undistinguish'd among the Common Herd of the People. That 'tis unpardonable Arrogance to dispute Precedence with Princes whose Predecessors might, if they had pleas'd, have made the Ancestors of Others their Slaves. That it is a sort of a Natural and Universal Law, that Things of Later should be Inferiour to Things of Earlier Original. And from hence they usually pass to a pompous Representation of the several Great Actions in War and Peace, which have been Atchiev'd in that Kingdom, by the Princes of the Blood Royal. Few of which sort those Upstart Nations and Families can presume to challenge. Moreover, Power adds Terror to Reverence, and makes it not only Impudence (2), but Rashness and Folly to contend for Honour with those in whose Power it is to do us Good or Harm as they please. And without dispute, 'tis a certain Way to demand and to obtain Honour, to tell the World with Sword in Hand, that if They will not, THAT shall give it. Further, 'tis look'd upon to be an Higher Degree of Eminence to be Free from all other Restraints of Subjection, but those which are due to G O D, the Supreme Governour of the World, than to be confin'd by Human Laws, and to live under Ties of Compact. And lastly, since the Title is Commonly used to express the Thing, the Magnificence and Greatness of it; That may be supposed also to imply an Argument against Inferiority of Dignity (e).

XVII. These with Arguments of a like Na-

(1) See Mr. Montaign's Essays, B. 1. c. 13.

(a) Mart. Ep. 10. v. 8. Per medium pugnas & prior ire lutum. Senec. de Ira. l. 3. c. 37. Because you were placed in a little less honourable Seat, you presently break into a Passion, and are angry with the Master of the Feast; him that invited you, and him that was put above you, How ridiculous is it? What difference is there, what part of the Table you sit at? Can a Seat make a Man more or less Honourable? (b) Declam. 252.

(c) Sallust. Jugurth. Bello. (d) Vid. Jac. Godofred. de Præcedentia, par. 1. c. 1. Add the Dispute between the French and Spanish Ambassadors in Andr. Maurocenus Hist. Venet. l. 8. p. 301, &c. & Memoirs touchant les Ambassadeurs, by Mr. Wicquefort. (2) The greatest part of this Chapter is Word for Word, taken out of our Author's Dissertation de Existimatione, which is amongst his Academical Dissertations.

(e) Vid. Andr. Maurocen. Hist. Venet. l. 12. p. 484. Where he talks of the Emulation that happened between the Princes of Italy, upon Pius Quintus's presenting Cosmus with the Title of Great Duke of Tuscany. Vid. Paul. Hist. Concil. Trident. l. 5. p. m. 402.

ture may perhaps be speciously urged: But after all, it must be confes'd, they can produce no more than an Imperfect Right, unless confirm'd by Compact Express or Tacit, according to receiv'd Custom. And it will be no Difficulty to destroy the Force of these and all such Arguments, by answering, That Antiquity alone can have no Real Honour in it, since it only implies Tract of Continuance, which may be urged for the most Inconsiderable Things as well as the most Valuable. That all Kingdoms are by their own Nature Free and Independent. And that it is not material to enquire how long they have been so. That it may indeed be allow'd, that when a Kingdom hath long continued in a flourishing Condition, the Strength of its Constitution and the Wisdom of its Government ought not to be question'd; and that it need not be denied, that the Favour of Heaven and the Bravery of Subjects, was sufficient to Defend them against Foreign Arms. But then, that Common-wealths of Later Growth may possibly be settled as Wisely and Govern'd as Happily, as those that have stood much Longer; nay, perhaps be Establish'd with greater Wisdom, and enjoy greater Happiness, since the Wise and Good Institutions of Ancient States and Common-wealths generally cost them dear, and they of Later Date have the Advantage of seeing and using what Others discovered before them. That the Favours of Heaven are not in Human Disposal, or certain to be long Enjoy'd. But yet that it is not impossible to provide so far, that the State may not fall to ruine of it self for want of Good and Wholesome Laws. In fine, that all things ought to be valued according to their present State; what is pass'd we have no more to do with, and what is to come doth not yet concern us. That distinct States and Common-wealths never unite into Systems, or form General Assemblies, where it may be necessary to oblige them of Latest standing to be content to be placed lowest. All are allow'd to enjoy distinctly their separate Freedom. That the Government of any State should continue in one particular Family for a long Course of Time, may be allow'd to be sometimes an Argument that the Posterity succeeded and imitated the Vertues of their Ancestors; but it must also be allow'd, that great Wealth and Riches only are sufficient Guards, and not easily to be over-power'd. Much also in the long Possession of a Throne must be ascribed to the Disposition and Temper of the People, averse to Change: And much in the Succession of Good Princes to the Blessing of Heaven alone. But still Princes and States of later Origine, ambitious to be thought Great, may easily answer, that they cannot look upon any thing as their Own, which was not got by their own Industry or Power (1). That it is a very easy thing to take Possession of large Estates or Dominions, purchas'd by the Success of Ancestors; but to raise a great Fortune, or an Empire, requires Bravery and Vertue. That Others owe their Greatness to the Chance of being Well Born, They to their own Worth and Excellencies. That Others can produce nothing for themselves, but old forgotten Monuments of their Fathers Great Actions; theirs is no Borrow'd Lustre, but the fresh Acquisitions of their own Vertue and Valour. Lastly, that no Degree of Honour is beyond that of being a Sovereign Prince, and that this sets the Latest Families upon the Level with those of the most Ancient Date (a).

XVIII. As for Power indeed, that may often force the Weaker to pay the Signs of Honour to the Greater, because it is Madness not to yield to them that have Power to do us Harm when they please. As Favorinus in Spartianus (b) pleasantly told his Friends (who were angry with him for giving up a Word to the Emperor Hadrian, that was used in Good Authors) Certainly he ought to be allow'd more Learned than every Man that has Thirty Legions at his Command (c): But if a Prince hath Strength enough to Defend his own Dominions, he cannot be obliged to yield Precedence to any others, however superiour in Riches, since he has no reason to be afraid of them, or to ask Relief or Protection from them. For where Liberty is equal, a Disproportion in Wealth can make no Difference. And therefore if One Prince's Territories be six Hundred Miles in Extent, and Another's but One Hundred, yet the Difference in the Kingdoms makes none between the Sovereigns; for their Power is of the same Nature in the Greater and in the Less; and the One may answer the Ends of Government as well as the Other. Not to say further, that Power alone, as it implies Ability to do Harm, doth not include any Excellence in it, which is naturally proper to command sincere Respect: For all Respect hath a mixture of Love in it, but Power to do Harm can certainly produce nothing but Hatred (d).

(1) Nam genus, & proavos, & que non fecimus ipsi,
Vix ea nostra voco. ———

Ovid. Metam. L. 13. v. 140, 141.

(a) Ovid, De Fast. L. 5. v. 26.

Quoque die partu est edita, magna fuit.

The Day that gave her Birth first made her Great.

And to this we may apply that of Arnobius, l. 2. Is this a new thing which we are engaged in? In time it will be old; is that old in which you are concern'd? In the times when it first began, that also was new.

(b) Hadrianus in Spartian. c. 15.

(c) Juvenal. Sat. 5. v. 130, 131.

Plurima sunt, que
Non audent homines perijsa dicera lana.

— No Freedom will from him be born,
Whose Cloaths are thread-bare, and whose Cloaks are torn.

Mr. Bowles.

(d) Add. Jacob. Godofred. d. tit. de precedent. part 1. c. 3.

XIX. Further, Absolute, Unlimited Power may perhaps force from Subjects greater Degrees of Respect, not without a mixture of Fear: But with Sovereign Princes it can have no such Effect, since they must look upon Another Prince's Absolute Power, as it relates to them, to be no more than Liberty of Nature, which in it self gives no Man Pre-eminence to Another, not Subject to him. And since every Prince is to be valued, not by his own Rights only, but by the State and Condition also of the Common-wealth he Governs; it will not be difficult to imagine, that a Limited Monarch may from that enjoy Advantages which will make him Greater and more Considerable, than a Prince entirely Absolute. Lastly, Titles and Words of all sorts, take their Value as Money doth from Use (1). And since the Highest Dignity of Princes is the Sovereign Power, it is sufficient if that be express'd in its natural simple Sense, or according to common Use. For the Pomp or Modesty of Words, neither can add to, nor lessen the Thing (a). So the Turkish Monarch is usually called Emperour, the Persian no more than King; yet this Distinction in it self gives no Preference one to the other. For an Affected Multiplicity of Titles added to the Proper Stile, seems to have a sort of Barbarism in it; and may perhaps strike some Awe upon Inferiour and Ignorant Subjects, but can make no impression upon Foreign States and Princes. For how was the Roman Emperour, for Example, concern'd, Whether Sapores King of Persia call'd himself, Brother of the Sun and Moon, (as Ammian. Marcellinus relates) or of Saturn and Venus (b)?

XX. From all which it is sufficiently clear, that there is no perfect Obligation, which presupposes Proper Right in Another, by which a Prince really possessed of Sovereign Power, is bound to yield Precedence to any other King or Prince as more Honourable, however Superiour in the Particulars before-mention'd, neither is one Free State or Common-wealth, obliged to yield more, tho' perhaps another is more Ancient or more Powerful. Nor indeed is a State Govern'd by the Populace, inferiour in Dignity to a State Govern'd by a Prince, tho' in a Democracy, there is no particular Person to be compar'd with a King. And hence an Ambassador from a free Common-wealth, is not necessarily obliged to give Precedence to an Ambassador from a Crown'd Head. But because Vicarious and Deriv'd Honour cannot be supposed to appear with the same Advantage as Original; and a Minister cannot be invest'd with the same Dignity as a Prince; and since free Common-wealths can never meet in the same Place with Sovereign Princes, but by their Ambassadors and Deputies; 'tis evident, that the Ambassadors of free States ought to yield Precedence to all Crown'd Heads, and Sovereign Princes.

XXI. And this Equality between the Persons invest'd with Sovereign Power, needs not be any Objection against Interviews, or Conferences to be made either in their own Persons, or by their Ministers, or against their Uniting into an Establish'd Council. For if a Prince make a Visit to Another in a Foreign Country, the Laws of Civility give the Stranger the Precedence, except he comes in the Quality of a temporary Subject. For tho' every Prince be Supreme in his own Dominions, yet Princes in the same manner as Ambassadors, by a sort of Fiction, seem still to continue as Persons free, and not within any Prince's Territories, to whom and by whose Consent they make a Visit, without laying aside or disguising their Quality. For 'tis certainly Unadvisable and Dangerous, for a Prince to venture Incognito into a Foreign Country, without having first procur'd Leave. 'Tis certain Gramondus (c) confidently pronounces, that it is no violation of any publick Law, to seize and detain disguised Princes. But I confess I do not see for what reason; unless it be, that to come in Disguise without giving Notice, may seem to imply some Suspensions of, and Disrespect to the Prince of the Country. If two or more Princes are to meet in a third Place, it would not be difficult to dispose Things so, that no Preference be given to either of them. For the Roomis they are to meet in, might be so contriv'd, as to leave it absolutely uncertain, which is the first and most honourable Place in it. And upon this View, round Tables have been sometimes used upon such occasions (d). The Princes may also declare before-hand, that the Congress shall be made without regard to Precedence, and that they intend to sit Promiscuously, or as they please or happen to place themselves. So Philostratus relates of the Brachmans of India (e), That they appointed no particular Place for their Prince, (as the Greeks and Romans would think it necessary to do) but every One sits where he pleases. But this will still be much easier to be done, if Princes will please to meet Incognito, and without their usual Pomp and Retinue. Nor could they by any other Method more fully declare, that they would not raise Difficulties or Disputes about the

(1) See Grot. B. 1. c. 3. f. 10. (a) Add. Geor. Bates Elench. motuum nuperorum in Anglia, part 2. p. m. 246, &c. & Author. Cardinalismi, part 1. l. 3. p. m. 375. (b) Ammian. Marcellin. l. 17. c. 5. Add. Ibid. l. 23. c. 6. (c) Hist. Gall. l. 13. (d) Ausonius in ludo septem Sapientum, v. 78, 79, 80.

*Reſte olim ineptum Delphicus luſit Deus, Quærentem, quiſnam primus Sapientum foret:
Ut in orbe tereti nomina eorum inſcriberet,
Ne primus eſſet, ne velimus quiſpiam.*

One to Apollo once this Question brought,
Which he the first of all the Sages thought?
Write in a Ring their Names, the God reply'd
And equal Dignity to each, divide.

(e) De Vita Apollon. Thyan. l. 3. c. 8. p. 134. C. D. Lucian. Epist. Sat. ad divit. p. 628. 'tis easiest and most agreeable in Entertainments, that all should be Equal. Add Athenæus Dipsoph. l. 1. c. 4.

Points of Dignity. Or if this Method be not thought the best, it may be determin'd by Lot; and that two ways, either with Condition that every Prince shall for the future remain contented with what place Chance determines for him; or else that every Prince in turn, shall succeed in a certain Order settled by Lot. But Disputes may be much more easily ended, if the Congress be form'd only by Ambassadors; especially since there is one Way more of preventing Difficulties among them, namely, if the several Princes their Masters send them with Characters of different Value. For since different Degrees of Dignity arise purely by Arbitrary Imposition, they may easily be varied several Ways (a). But here it is to be observ'd, that the Value of such Characters must be determined by the Common Consent of Sovereign Princes (b). For if One single Prince should by his own Authority alone, create a New Character, to bestow upon his Ministers, whenever the Ambassador makes his Demand for any such particular Honour from Others, They may justly except against his Master's Power to oblige them to pay it. But after all, it must be confes'd, that such an Evenness of Temper as Agefilaus express'd, when he was placed in an obscure Place in the Theatre, is often much the happiest, in preventing Disputes: For as he said, It should not be thought that the Place adds Honour to the Man, but the Man to the Place (c). It was a good Method which Abbas, King of Persia, took to prevent differences at a publick Entertainment; them that were inclin'd to the Persian Perswasion he placed on his Right Hand; those of the Turkish he seated on his Left, because the Persians thought the Right Hand the most Honourable, and the Turks the Left (d). And it was an Artful Stratagem enough, which Alphonsus XI. used to silence an old Dispute for Precedence, between the two Towns of Burgos and Toledo; when he came to ask their Opinions in Council, before any mention of their Dispute began; they of Toledo I know, saieth he, are ready to comply with my Commands; let them of Burgos speak; which immediately silenced Both; Both equally thinking themselves Preferred to each other; those of Toledo, because the King spoke in their Name First; and they of Burgos, because they were Commanded to speak for themselves First (e).

XXII. But if a Lasting Society is to be erected between a Number of Equals; and every Particular Member be desirous that the Equality should continue, but unwilling to admit the Determination of the Lot, or that a Constant Succession in Turn should prescribe their Places; There is another Method left resembling the Chance of Lots, and Which can be no way prejudicial to the Dignity of any Member; and that is, that Every Member should take Place in the Common Assembly, in the same Course and Order in which he was Admitted into It. And this Method is to be Particularly observ'd with regard to all Members that are admitted into the Society, after It is Established. For They that at First Constitute the Society had better perhaps take Place by Lot, or by common Consent and Agreement. And because it is generally received in Colleges, and other Societies, that every Member is to be Placed according to the Order of Admission, Grotius gives it for an Universal Rule, that the Natural Order between Fellows of Such Societies is to be Placed according as They were Received into them (f). But it must be observ'd, that in such Societies Priority or Posteriority of Place doth not in the least imply greater or less Degrees of Dignity, but is only the Order of Equals in Honour. And therefore there is no difference between the First and Last in that Respect. For it is a different Case, when the Preference is given for Superiour Eminence of Worth in the Person prefer'd; as Ausonius tells the Emperour Gratian, 'Tis no Dishonour 'to be Second, but of Two Honourable Persons 'He that hath the Precedence is the most Honourable (g). But it is also observ'd by Grotius in the Place before mention'd, that in Assemblies of Christian Kings and People, met to represent the Body of the Universal Church, it was the Custom, that They that embraced Christianity should in all Religious Assemblies have the Precedence to Others. And upon this bottom Some have taken the Liberty to challenge Precedence, and claim Superiority of Dignity as their Right, in all Other Assemblies of what Nature soever. But whatever Good Reasons, there might be to introduce Observation of such an Order in those Sacred Conventions; yet that the same should be observ'd in All Other Assemblies, and that the Antiquity of the Christian Profession alone should produce such Pre-eminence of Dignity, is what I can see no Reason for. Especially since it is one of the Commands of the Religion, In Honour to prefer One Another (h). Besides, in Councils The Clergy generally were the Parties Principally concern'd; the Lay Persons appear'd only as Assistants, and were to submit to the Decrees made by Them. But however this be, it cannot be Reason, that because a Person in a Certain Assembly, for a Certain

(a) See Mr. Wicquefort, des Memoirs touchant les Ambassadeurs. Add. Jac. Godofred. de precedentia, part 3. P. Paul. Hist. Con. Trid. The Dispute between the French and Spanish Ambassadors at Trent and Rome, about Precedence, l. 8.

(b) See Mr Wicquefort's Mem. touchant les Ambaf.

(c) Plut. Apoph. Lacon. p. 208. D. Damonides in a like Case said, 'tis very well you have found out a way to make even this place honourable. Ibid. Apoph. Add Plut. Symposiac. l. 1. c. 2, 3. (d) Pet. de Valle, Itin. part. 2. Ep. 5.

(e) Hieron. Osorius de Rebus gestis Eman. l. 1. Add. Gramond. Hist. Gall. l. 3. init. (f) Grot. l. 2. c. 5. §. 21. Add. Boecler. in locum, add. L. 50. t. 3. l. 1. D. de Albo scribendo. L. 12. t. 3. l. 1. C. de Consul. &c. tit. 44. d. l. C. de Tiron. l. 3. C. t. 5. d. l. de Præpos. sacri Cubiculi. l. 1. C. t. 4. d. l. de Præf. Prator. l. 2. C. L. 10. t. 52. l. 10. de Prof. J. Jac. Godofred. part 2. c. 3. §. 17, 18. de precedentia.

(g) Auson. Panegy. ad Grat. c. 24. in fin.

(h) Rom. XII. 10. Phil. II. 3.

Respect, which hath no influence upon his Honour in general, yields the Precedence to another; he is therefore obliged to yield it every where, and when there is no regard had to those Respects. And thus there are few States or Common-wealths, in which there are not particular Persons that are Members of several different Societies, and who therefore may in One be obliged to give Place to a Certain Person; when out of That, or in another, They are known to be his Superiours.

XXIII. But however it is evident, that there is that Force in Sovereign Power, which will always give the Person invested with it, Absolute right to the Preference to all Persons Subject to it. For without dispute, Authority is Superiour to Obedience; and it must be allowed to be greater, to controul and command the Wills of others, than to submit and comply one's self. Nor can a Man have Power to deny Reverence and Regard to that Person to whom he owes his Protection, and Who has power by Punishments to compel me to obey him. So that Government doth of it self naturally introduce Inequality among Men. Tho' it is not unnatural to think, that besides that Veneration which is due to the Place and Office of the Sovereign, Good Subjects often suppose themselves obliged to pay other Particular Marks of Esteem, to the Particular Vertues and Excellencies eminent in their Prince (a). But it is also further manifest, that the Greater and more Absolute the Prince's Power is, the Greater will the Honour be, his Subjects pay him. Nay, long Possession of Sovereign Power, tho' in it self it can give him no real strength, doth yet wonderfully raise the Dignity of the Prince. But notwithstanding, Subjects may sometimes excel their Princes in those Foundations of Esteem which produce only an Imperfect right. And therefore it was a most extravagant Vanity in Hadrian the Emperour, to make himself profess'd Rival to All the Best Masters in the Arts they were famous for. And it was ridiculous in Alexander the Great, when reading that Place in Homer, where the Greeks wish'd the Lot might happen to Ajax, or Diomedes, or Agamemnon, he broke into a Passion and said, He would have kill'd the Person that should have named him last. For it is no discredit to a General, to have Souldiers under him of more Prowess and Bravery than himself (tho' 'tis true, as Domitian said, the Honour of being a Good Commander, is as great as that of being a Good Prince (b). But among Subjects of the same Common-wealth, it is left entirely to the Sovereign to prescribe the Measures and Limitations of Intensive Esteem; and to grant to Some Persons Perfect Right of Precedence to Others. And whatever Station He thinks fit to assign to any Man, That He may lawfully maintain against any of his Fellow Subjects, and That He ought to be satisfied with (c). For as the Old Centurion in Liuy said (d), Subjects should think every Post honourable in Service. And tho' perhaps sometimes undeserving Persons may be prefer'd to Men of Worth and Merit; yet if a Man should upon that account be uneasy and dissatisfied with his own State, or give them disturbance in Theirs, He Will deserve to be punish'd for contempt of the Sovereign Authority. For, as Terentius said in Tacitus (e), 'It 'is not the Subjects business to enquire who 'their Prince prefers, or for what reasons, 'Heaven hath placed the supream disposal of 'things in his Hands, and it is their honour to obey (f). But it might seem a good way to silence the complaints of Ambitious Subjects, if Princes, when They prefer Persons to Places of Honour, would always have regard to those Foundations of Esteem which were before mentioned; and more especially to the particular Services they have done the Publick; which to reward with Eminent Degrees of Esteem, rather than with Money or Reward of like Nature, is generally the Politick Art of Princes (g). But so much the Rather, because, except the Dignity and Pre-eminence of Great Men among Subjects be measured by the Benefits and Assistance they give, or at least are capable to give among their Inferiours, it will be but Insignificant, and without Reality. But because, if Princes were obliged always to Place their Subjects according to their Intrinsic Worth and Merit, The Trouble would be infinite to make Reviews of them so often as it would be necessary; and besides, that no such Review could be made without displeasing the greatest Part of Them, since 'tis certain, that the Generality of Men never consider how many They have left below Them, but how Many They still see above Them; It might seem perhaps to be the most proper and easiest Method to bestow Honours upon the Subjects, at least upon them of the Best Rank, according to the Offices They bear in the Common-wealth (h). And Then again, it will be easy to pre-

(a) Nestor in Homer Iliad. l. 1. v. 277, &c.

Μήτε σὺ Πηλεΐδ' ἦδ' αὖτ' ἐπιζέμεναι βασιλῆϊ
'Αχιλλεΐω· ἐπεὶ ἕσσοθ' ὁμοίως ἐμμορε τιμῆς
Συμπλήρω βασιλῆος ὅτε Ζεὺς κῦδος ἔδωκεν.

Tho' Achilles rather submitted to the Conduct, than the Power or Command of Agamemnon.

(b) Tacitus Agricola, c. 39. (c) Vid. L. 1. t. 14. l. 3. De Offic. Prætoris. (d) l. 42. c. 34.

(e) Ann. VI. c. 8. (f) To this we may apply that of Lucian, Judic. Vocal. 'Tis fit and proper that every Letter should continue in that order in which it was at first placed; and to go out of that, is to break all that is just and equitable. And he that first made these Laws for you, settled this order, by which every Letter was for ever to continue in its own place and dignity. Plin. l. 9. Epist. 5. If the Distinctions between Degrees and Dignities, were mix'd, disorder'd, and confounded with one another, nothing would be more unequal, than Equality it self.

(g) Vid. Xenoph. Cyropæd. l. 8. p. 130. Ed. H. Steph. where he speaks of the order in which Cyrus placed his Friends at an Entertainment. (h) Add Ld. Bacon's Essays, c. 53.

vent Complaints, if none but Men of Merit, and Persons well Qualified are put into Those Offices (a); and if the Offices themselves are disposed in a Natural and Proper Order. And in General; the most just and perfect Order of Offices seems to be when the Honours annex'd to Offices are Greater or Less proportionably according to the Nature, Weight, and Publick Importance of the Affairs and Business which belong to the Management of Them; and according as it requires the greatest Parts and Accomplishments to discharge Them (b). In Homer, Dignity of Office is prefer'd to that of Blood, even of Natural Bravery and Courage, For thus Nestor tells Achilles:

ἴδ' ὅσ' κάρτερός ἐσσι, θεῶν δέ τε γέναίολο μῆτις,
Ἄλλ' ὄγε φέρτερός ἐστιν, ἐπεὶ μέγ' ἔουσιν ἀνδράσιν (c).

We own you Brave, your Race divine adore,
Him greater think, because his Power is more.

But It sometimes also happens, that Some Offices in the Common-wealths have larger shares of Honour annexed to them, than of Authority and Power; and sometimes the quite contrary; Perhaps, for fear, least Honour attended with much Wealth, and Power, might tempt the Magistrate to take Arms against the Common-wealth (d). But in every Rank of Offices, Men should be thought More or Less Honourable, according to the Dignity of the Employment They have in It. Now tho' it is unavoidable, that One Office will be look'd upon as more Honourable than Another; Yet this will be no Reason that All and Every Particular Person, entrusted in the more Honourable Office, should therefore challenge Precedence from All, and Every Person in the less Honourable; but only that the Highest Person in the Inferiour Office, ought to give Place to the First in the Superiour, but may still have Preference to All that are Subordinate to the First. It is but rarely seen, that the Person gives Lustre and Honour to the Office. So it happen'd once at Thebes, to the Office of Tax-Gatherer, after Epaminondas had born it (e). But as to the Intrinsic Value of all marks of Honour and Dignity, That depends upon the Vertues and Qualifications of the Persons that wear them (f). And This was what Antisthenes meant, when He desired the Athenians to make a Decree, that Asses should be Horses. 'For tho', As They told Him, Nothing could 'be more contrary to common sense and reason, yet, As He answer'd, to Prefer Persons 'to Places of Trust, and Command in the Common-wealth, that are no way qualified for Them, but only by that Publick Act and Declaration, which puts them into them, is almost as absurd (g). But if the Subjects come to an Agreement among themselves, about their Order of Place, or if Custom hath introduced any particular Order, Either Method may be supposed to have the force of Law, unless the Government except against, or forbid it (h).

XXIV. But if Comparison is to be made between Eminent Men of different Common-wealths, it is clear, that the Foundations of Intensive Esteem, even where such Persons are concern'd, can produce nothing more than an Aptitude to receive Honour from others, who have less Pretensions to those Foundations than themselves. And that Whether the Person of Greater Eminence come into a Foreign Common-wealth, as a Traveller or Stranger, or meet Others in a third Place: It must be excepted only, if the Prince oblige his Subjects to give place to the Stranger; or if the Dispute be determined by some Third Prince where they meet, or if it be decided by Agreement or Custom. And therefore the Dignity of an Office, which a Man bears in his own Common-wealth, gives him no Right to Prefer himself to the Subjects of a Foreign State that may perhaps bear Offices, which He in his own Country demands Precedence upon. For a Right which is of force against Fellow Subjects, is not therefore of force against all other Persons; for the same reason that the Laws of Foreign Nations oblige none but their own Subjects (i). Nor is it any material Objection, that perhaps the Foreigner in his Own Country may have a greater Title than the Person he disputes against. For every State and Common-wealth may set what Value they please (within themselves) upon Titles and other Marks of Honour, whether given by Themselves or Others. Besides, the Value of Offices, by the Greatness of which the Measures of Honour are generally taken, is different in different Nations. And even the most Beneficial and Useful Arts are not every where equally esteem'd; as it is well known, that in Some Countries the Arts of Peace are most Valued, in Others Those of War. Besides, it is particularly observable, that the Words by which the different Degrees of Honour are express'd, do not only denote different (a) Otherwise it will fall out, as Claudian saith in Eutropium, l. 2. v. 322.

Quis non consule tali Vilis honos?

(b) Ovid. Metam. l. 13. v. 366, 367.

Rate[m] qui temperat anteit,
Remigis officium.

(d) Vid. Bodin. de repub. l. 3. c. 6. p. m. 501.

(f) Sallust. Jugurth.

(g) Diog. Laertius, l. 6.

(h) Vid. L. 12. t. 8. l. 2. C. ut dignitatum Ordo servetur. And it is a remarkable place in Suetonius Vespas. c. 9. That it might be known, that the two Orders were not distinguish'd so much by the Liberties, they might use one another with, as by their Dignity; upon a Quarrel that happen'd between a Roman Senator and a Knight, he thus pronounced, That ill Language ought not to be given first to a Senator, but that it was lawful enough to return it, when he began it himself.

(i) Add Memoires de Wicquesfort touchant les Ambassadeurs, p. 519.

Honour it self grows mean
When such a Consul rules.

'Tis more to rule the Helm

Than ply the Oar.

(c) Hom. l. 1. Iliad. v. 280, 281.

(e) Vid. Plut. in præcept. gerend. reip. p. 811.

Dignities in distinct Common-wealths, but have also sometimes Greater value set upon them and sometimes Less, even in the same Common-wealths, according to the Alterations of time, which Raises or Lessens, we know, the Price of every thing else. For the External Signs of Esteem have their determinate Value set by the Imposition of every Particular Common-wealth; But the Foundations of Intensive Esteem, taken as they are in their own nature, and in the Estimation of Wise Men, can never lose their Value. And therefore the World is every where so just to Vertue, to all Celebrated Arts, Functions and Employments, as to pay them Honour and Respect. But by the Possession of these only, a Man hath no Right to demand any Particular Marks of Honour in Foreign States; except He can obtain such a Right by some of those Ways before-mentioned. But, because Marks of Honour are always presumed to be given as Rewards of eminent Vertues; therefore the Civiliz'd Part of the World Abroad, generally pay almost the same degrees of Respect to the Honours of foreign Nations, that are allowed them at home (1). But still they would be thought to do so, more out of Civility and Complaisance, than from any perfect Obligation. But there are also some States that allow but little Value to foreign Honours. Cicero speaking (a) of some Particular Foreigners, who were of noble Families, does not call them absolutely Noble, but says they were (Domini) at home, or (apud suos, nobiles) among their own People, Noble; the Meaning of which is, that foreign Nobility was not allow'd the same Value at Rome that it had in its own Common-wealth. What Cicero says in another Place seems more insolent (b). If (says he) We make a Comparison between the Men, the meanest Citizen of Rome, is Equal to the Greatest Man in Gallia. The Honours that were given Them that Won the Prize at the Olympick Games in Ancient Greece, are well known. But it would have been Ridiculous for them to have expected the same in other Places, where Strength and Activity of Body were not in so much Esteem.

XXV. Lastly, Since almost in every Nation some Degree of Dignity is suppos'd to adhere to Birth; It will not be improper in this place to Enquire particularly what is implied in Nobility of Blood, and what Value ought to be set upon it when consider'd in it self (c).

And here it will undoubtedly be allow'd, That Nobility of Birth doth not of it self bestow better Constitution of Body, (though perhaps Goodness and Elegance of Diet may sometimes seem to contribute to it;) Neither does it produce more excellent Dispositions of Mind, or a brighter Wit, or more vigorous Understanding; But all these Endowments may as well attend the meanest as the most noble Extraction. Nature does not take any other Method in giving Birth to noble, than She does to common Men. And Conjugal Honour is, or may be kept as Sacred among common People, as Persons of highest Quality. Nor would it be an easy Task to prove, that noble Families are less corrupted, or expos'd to Adulteries, than the poor or mean (d). So that if even the Vertues of Parents could be always suppos'd to be transfused into the Children, yet it would be extreme Difficult for many noble Persons to prove, that their Blood descended to them pure from the first Rise of their Family, without spurious or foreign Mixtures (e). And it is so far from being always true, that

Fortes creantur fortibus & bonis (2),

The brave do from the brave and good descend.

And that on the contrary, we see nothing more Common than Instances of the Degeneracy of the Children of the greatest Men. 'Our Parents (as Marius (f) saith in Sallust) may leave us 'all that it is possible for them to leave, Their 'Estates and Pictures, and an happy Memory 'of themselves; but their Vertue they never 'did nor can leave; for that alone is what can 'neither be given nor received. But further, 'Tis possible that common Persons may be as well Educated as the noble; and 'tis not unusual to see the Advantages the Great and Rich have of cultivating and improving their minds,

(1) V. Cicero. Orat. in Verr. 1. 3. c. 23. p. 44. Ed. Græv. (a) Pro M. Fonteio, c. 8. in fin. (b) Pro L. Flacco, c. 13. in fin. (c) And this Value, I believe, is scarce any where higher, than among the Indians, according to the Account we have of it in Orosius, De rebus gestis Emanuel. 1. 2. Who tells us, that if any of the Inferiour People chance to touch a Noble-Man, they think it a Stain upon their Nobility, and a Disgrace to their Family, and revenge it as an Injury of the highest Nature, by the Death of those unfortunate Persons, that happen'd upon them.

And therefore, he says, All below the Rank of Nobility, when they take a Journey any whither, are forced to call out and make a Noise; and by that, the Nobles, having Notice of their coming, command them to break the way, and so the Meaner People escape Death, and those of Quality, the Danger of a perpetual Blemish to themselves and Family. And as the greatest Crimes do not deprive the one of their Nobility, so neither can the greatest Vertues excuse Obscurity of Birth in the others, but every Man must of Necessity submit to the Condition and State his Father left him in. And these Nobles, we are further told, were allow'd the Privilege to lie with other Men's Wives when and where they pleas'd; and if any of them happen'd to be with another Man's Wife (a Sign of which was a Target hung up at the Door) the poor Husband dared not go into his own House.

(d) Phil. Baldeus descript. Oræ Malabar & Coromandel. c. 26. & de Idolat. Iudor. Part II. c. 16. Mandeslo Itiner. L. 2. c. 10. Add. Abrah. Rogerius de Bræminibus, c. 1, 2. Diodor. Siculus, 1. 1. c. 74.

In Euripides Hippolyt. Coron. v. 409, 410. 'tis said of Adulteries,

This Evil first from noble Families,
With wide Infection tainted the whole Sex.

(e) Vid. Dio. Chrysofom. Orat. 15. init. p. m. 236. Grotium, 1. 2. c. 7. f. 8. (2) Horat. L. 4. Od. 4. v. 29.

(f) B. Jugurth.

scandalously mis-spent in Sloth and Luxury, to supply and support the most extravagant Vices. It may well be presum'd, as Plato says (a), That Nobility of Birth, if attended with good Education, may produce eminent Vertues. But it is also evident in fact, what Degeneracy Noble Families sometimes sink into, and how much the Glory of Ancestors is obscured by the Blemishes of Posterity (b). And 'tis certain, that many that have been obscurely born, have rais'd themselves to the highest Honours, purely upon the Stock of their own Vertues. Isocrates (c) took it for a Topick to commend Nobility, That it did not, like other Gifts of Fortune, soon decay, or remove into other hands, but continued always with the Person it once belonged to; and therefore was the best Inheritance Men could leave to their Children. But certainly, except a Man can support his Nobility by his own Merits, or except he enjoys by it some particular Privileges in the Commonwealth, it can be but a very worthless inconsiderable Thing. And therefore, there is no Necessity in the Nature of the Thing, that the Son should succeed either to the Places, or Degrees of Esteem his Father enjoy'd only by his Birth. Especially, since in the last Resort, Mankind are deriv'd from the same Original. For as Marius in Sallust says (d), 'Every Man partakes of the same common Nature, and the 'Brave only have the best Title to Nobility. And therefore a Man's own Vertues, not those of his Ancestors, ought to recommend him; According to the Character Tibullus gives of Mesala (e):

(laudes,

*Nam Quamquam antiquæ Gentis superant tibi
Non tua Majorum contenta est gloria fama,
Nec quæris quid quaque Index sub imagine dicat,
Sed generis præcos contendis vincere honores,
Quam tibi Majores, majus decus ipse futuris.*

For You, tho' grac'd by long descending Fame,
Despise the dull hereditary Name.
Nor from the Dead will borrow sleeping Praise,
Or rob their Monuments your Own to raise,
Greater than all the Heroes of your Line,
To your own single Merits, you confine
Your Praise; and to Posterity will leave
A greater Name than all your Race could give.

XXVI. But however, it hath obtain'd in many States and Common-wealths, that Persons of Merit, who have been placed by the Government in Stations to which particular Privileges, and peculiar Degrees of Esteem are allowed, might have the Advantage of deriving the same down to their Children by Birth; and in the Nature of an Inheritance (f). For 'tis certain, that Nature has made no Real Distinction between the Birth of the Noble and the Plebeian. The Difference between them is grounded entirely on the Imposition and Indulgence of the Commonwealth, which allows, that such a particular State, to which certain Rights and Degrees of Esteem are annexed, shall descend to the Posterity of the Person it was first confer'd upon (g), barely by Birth, without any new Grant. And if this Imposition be taken away, all the Distinction of Birth ceases. And therefore when a Prince removes a Commoner into the Nobility, he cannot be supposed to make any Alteration in his Nature or Extraction, or to infuse new Vigour into his Mind, but only to place him in a State opposite to the Commonalty, and to give him Liberty to intail that, and the Rights consequent upon it, upon his Children. Which was properly enough signified by Amasis King of Egypt, when to show that the Obscurity of his Birth, was no Reason why he should be denied his due Honour as he was King, He melted a Bafon of Gold into an Image, and set it up to be Worshipped (h). On the other hand, if a Man be degraded from his Nobility, either by way of Punishment for some Fault, or because he refuse to conform to the Laws of the Nobility: It is not to be supposed, that his Nature or Temper of Mind is therefore altered, or that the Blood he derived from his Ancestors is changed; Neither can it be denied, that he continues to be of noble Extraction; but he is only deprived of a certain State, and of the Privileges that belong'd to it in the Commonwealth. And then he is in all respects no better than a Commoner. And in the same manner it must be said, that neither Legitimation nor Restitution (i) in Blood make any real Change in Nature, but only introduce certain moral Effects (i). Machiavel in his History of Florence tells us (k), That after the Tyranny of the Duke of Athens was expired, the Sovereign Power being lodg'd in the People of Florence, and the Nobility excluded by Law from any Share of the Government, a certain Gentleman call'd Benchi, of the noble Family of the Boundelmonti, for his Gallantry and good Services in the Wars against the Pisans, was pre-

(a) Alcibiad. I. p. 440, 441. Ed. Wech. (b) Aristot. Rhetor. I. 2. c. 15. Nobility consists in Greatness of Extraction; Generosity in not departing from Nature, which all that are Noble cannot pretend to; for many of them are Persons of no Worth or Value. Add. Stobæus Serm. 84, 85. (c) Encom. Helenæ. (d) B. Jugurth.

(e) Tibull. L. 4. El. 1. v. 28, &c. (f) Lesbonactes Orat. bartat. The Children of such as have behav'd themselves with Bravery, in Dangers that threaten'd the Common-wealth, are look'd upon to be Noble.

(g) Add. Huartus scrut. Ing. c. 16. p. m. 488, &c.

(h) Herodot. Euterp. p. 99. Ed. H. Steph.

(i) V. C. I. 6. t. 8 De jure aureorum annulorum, & de natalibus restituendis. (i) And in this Sense we may understand that of Euripides. Phænis. v. 821, &c.

ἔ γάρ ὃ μὴ καλὸν, ἐπὶ ἔφου καλὸν, &c.

For what is once dishonourable and foul,
Is never otherwise, the base born Son,

Still on his Mother black Reproach reflects,
And on his Father Obloquy and Shame.

(k) Lib. 3.

ferr'd to be one of the People; that is, was made a Plebeian. And the same Historian, in another place, says (*), That the same Privilege was granted to several others of the Nobility. And, among the Romans, Clodius left the Senatorian Order, and was adopted into the Plebeian, that he might be capable to be made Tribune of the Commons (1).

XXVII. But however it must be allowed, That generally all Governments, when they bestow any such publick Honour as that of Nobility on their Subjects, have regard to Persons known by some distinguishing Excellencies, or extraordinary Merits. And as such Persons justly deserve a larger Share of Esteem than others, so 'tis to be supposed that their Vertues are thought more Valuable, when the Rewards of them are allowed to be derived to those, for whom Nature gives all Men the strongest Affection. Especially since 'tis Natural to believe, such Favours may provoke the Emulation of other Subjects, and make them ambitious to gain the like Rewards. Besides, it is but natural to expect, that the Children influenced by the Example of their Parents, may be proud to rival the Vertues of their Families, and maintain their Title by their Honours, by the same Methods which at first gain'd them. Nor is it less easy to suppose, that Parents may think their Honour engaged to take Care, that the State should not have Reason to complain, that their Children were grown degenerate. Now, when it was allowed therefore, That Nobility should be annexed to the Birth, and run in the Blood, it was to be expected that Persons would not submit to mix with Families of mean Extraction; least by marrying beneath themselves, they might seem to debase their Quality, and cut off those Rights which they would derive to their Children. It might seem also Prudential, rather to admit the Daughters of Equals than Inferiors to share in their Dignity; and it might be thought of Moment, that the rich Tradesman's Daughter might not be Capable of being prefer'd before the poorer of the Nobility. And that Posterity might not dispute their Descent, it would seem necessary to keep an exact account of their Families and Pedigrees. When, on the other hand, it would be needless for Persons of meaner Rank to take the same Care to register their Ancestors, since they enjoy no special Privileges upon the Score of Birth, but are obliged to support themselves by their own Industry and Vertue.

XXVIII. Further to illustrate what has been said, it may not be improper to enquire, what particular Institutions relating to Nobility, were observ'd amongst the Romans. Now Romulus therefore, that he might digest his rude disorder'd Multitude, into the proper Form of a Civil Body or People, made Choice of an hundred Persons out of the Mafs (2) to be his Council; and these he call'd Patres, either to express the Nature of their Station, or their Age; The rest of the People were still no more than Commons. The Descendents of the first were call'd Patricians, by an easy and plain Denomination, implying, That they were of the Family of the Patres; or as others suppose, That they only could show their Fathers, the rest being only a Company of Fugitives that could not tell who their Fathers were, nor prove that they were free Parents, and therefore were no better than Filii Terræ (a). And this Supposition they attempt to prove, Because whenever the Patricians were to be assembled by their Kings, the Præcones or Criers, call'd every Man by his own, and by his Father's Name; But that the Plebeians were summon'd to the Assembly by a Trumpet of Ox-horn, the publick Servants going through the City and calling them by that Sound only. Dionysius Halicarnassæus indeed, according to his usual Turn, gives a softer Interpretation to this Custom (b), telling us that the Præcones, call'd the Patricians by Name, by way of Honour; and that the Commons were summon'd by the Horns only for Expedition. But 'tis clear that Decius in Livy seems to contradict him (c). 'For was it never heard, says he, 'in what manner these Patricians were at first 'constituted, that they did not drop down out 'of the Clouds, but were only such Persons 'as could (Patrem ciere) name their Fathers, 'that is, were no more than Free-born? I my 'self can now call a Consul my Father, and my Son, his Grandfather (d). From all which it appears, That it was Title enough to the primitive Nobility of Rome, to be born in lawful Wedlock and of free Parents; 'For indeed 'in all new erected Common-wealths, Nobility 'must necessarily be late, and rais'd by Vertue (e). And hence the Patricians urged, That they were the only Persons that were of any Family, or that were related by Gentility to one another. And therefore Cicero in his Topics gives this Definition of the Gentiles or Persons of Extraction and Quality. 'They 'are Persons that have all the same Name, 'are descended from free Parents, none of their 'Ancestors were ever Slaves, nor were they

(*) L. 5. (1) Vid. Livii Epitom. l. 103. (2) V. T. Liv. l. 1. c. 8. (a) V. Plutarch. Romulus, p. 24. D. Et Quæst. Rom. p. 278. C. D. (b) Rom. Antiq. l. 2. (c) Liv. l. 10. c. 8. in fin.
(d) Juvenal. Sat. 8. v. 272, &c.

*Et tamen ut longe repetas, longæque revolvas Nomen, ab infami gentem deducis Asyllo.
Majorum primus quisquis fuit ille tuorum,
Aut Pastor fuit, aut aliud quod dicere nolo.*

(e) Liv. l. 1. c. 34.

Boast then your Blood, and your long Lineage stretch
As high as Rome, and its great Founders reach;
You'll find in these Hereditary Tails,
Your Ancestors the Scum of broken Jails;
And Romulus, your Honour's ancient Source,
Was a poor Shepherd's Boy, or something worse.

Mr. Stepney.
'them.

‘ themselves ever depriv’d of Liberty (a). Though in Course of Time, ’tis certain the Plebeians also form’d and asserted their Gentes or Families (b). And hence the modern Languages, derived from the Latin, call Noblemen and Persons of Quality (Gentlemen) Gentiles Homines: But afterwards when the Plebeians were allowed to make Inter-marriages with the Nobility, and so all the Disbonour and Baseness of their Original, if there were ever any such, might seem to have been worn out; Then the Patricians found out another Difference to distinguish themselves from the Commons, by instituting certain Religious Rites Particular to each Family, and assuming a peculiar sort of Sanctimony to themselves. And upon this Account they insisted, that all the Offices in the Common-wealth ought to be given entirely to them, because they only had the proper Auspicia, or Omens of Success. But this ridiculous Pretence was soon, as it deserv’d, expos’d and neglected by the Plebeians. Though some of them too, to show that the Patricians had no just Grounds to assume such a Prerogative, set up their private Sacra and family Rites (c). Which afterwards growing Burthensome upon their Heirs, were taken off by Coemption, as Cicero informs us (d).

XXIX But afterwards, when the Senatorian Dignity, and Great Offices of the Common-wealth, which had been engross’d all by the Patricians, were left open and free from the Plebeians especially; the Nobility of Rome was not measur’d so much by Date of Families, or Patrician Descent, as by Number of Images. And from that time the noble Families of Rome were distinguish’d into Patrician and Plebeian (e). The Equestrian Order was not properly Noble by Institution of the Common-wealth. Tacitus says, indeed, in his Life of Agricola, That Agricola’s Grandfathers on both sides had been Procuratores or Solicitors to the Emperor, Which is the Equestrian Nobility: But the right Sense of that Place is, that as they were of Senatorian Families, measured their Nobility by the Great Offices they had born, usually call’d Magistratus Curules; so the Procuratorship to Cæsar was look’d upon by the Knights to have been a sort of Nobility, especially because, besides that of Prefect of the Prætorian Cohorts, or the Emperor’s Life-Guards, there was no higher Office which belong’d to that Order, as such. So that in the latter Ages, the Nobility of Rome did not constitute any particular Order, separated from the rest of the People by peculiar Rights, but every Man was allowed to be Noble upon his own, or his Ancestors Merits, either as he was able to produce their Statues or Images, or to raise himself to places of Honour by his own Vertue (f) (1). But though many of the Roman Offices were no less Necessary and Serviceable in times of War than Peace, as that of Dictator, Master of the Horse, Consul, Prætor; yet since Peace is as it were the ordinary State of a Common-wealth, War the extraordinary; and since those Offices also seem, as well by their Nature as Appellation, to bear a nearer Relation to Peace than War; it must be allowed that Roman Nobility had rather a Civil Original than a Military. And indeed, it would have been a Method altogether Impolitick, to have confined Nobility to simple Martial Courage, as separated and distinguish’d from the Office and Conduct of a Leader; (so as hereby to have constituted a particular Order enjoying large Rights and Immunities;) in such a Common-wealth, where War was the common Profession, as I may call it, of every Subject. The Roman Nobility therefore, did not constitute any peculiar Rank of Persons in the Common-wealth; Nor did it afford any other Advantage more considerable than this, that the Images of famous Ancestors usually made the way to Honour more open and easie.

XXX. From all which it is evident, That the Nature and Genius of modern Nobility in most of the Kingdoms of Europe is much different. For with us the Nobility constitutes a particular Order, distinguish’d from the rest of the Subjects in Dignity, and by extraordinary Rights and Privileges. Besides that, the Prince frequently confers the Honour of Nobility without giving any publick Employment with it, and that too, not so often in Consideration of Civil, as of Military Accomplishments and Vertues. One Argument of which, among others, is, That Noble Families distinguish themselves from one another, as well as from Commoners, by Devices impress’d upon Shields with an Helmet placed above; and which are therefore call’d Arms. Of the Antiquity of which, Diodorus Siculus may be thought to give an account (g), when he tells us, ‘That the Arms of the Gauls, were Shields about the Height of a Man, flourish’d and emboss’d

(a) Boetius in Topicis. The Gentiles are such as bear all the same Name, as the Brutus’s, the Scipio’s; but if they are Slaves they are not Gentiles. And though perhaps the Children and Descendants of Freed Men may have the same Name, yet they are not therefore in the Number of the Gentiles, because Gentility must be derived down from a long Race of such as were Free-born. (b) Add. Franc. Connanus Com. Jur. Civil. l. 2. c. 11.

(c) V. Liv. l. 4. c. 2. l. 6. c. 40, 41. l. 10. c. 7. (d) Cic. pro Murana, c. 12. Add. Godof. in Cic. Epist. Fam. l. 7. Ep. 29.

(e) Liv. l. 10. c. 7. The Plebeians can number their Triumphs; and it doth not now repent them of their Nobility, l. 6. c. 37. towards the End. From that Time the Commons will enjoy every thing the Patricians value themselves upon, Authority and Honour, Glory of War, Descent, Nobility. (f) To this Purpose is that of Claudian, De Cons. Prob. & Olyb. Paneg. v. 13, &c.

Quemcunque requires
Hac de stirpe virum, certum est de Consule nasci.
Per fasces numerantur avi, semperq; renata
Nobilitate vigent.

Through all the Line, each Worthy you can name,
His noble Birth doth from a Consul Claim,
Th’ Imperial Fasces each Descendent Grace.
And add repeated Honours to the Race.

(1) V. Juvenal. Sat. 8. v. 8, 19.

(g) L. 5. c. 30.

‘with every ones proper Device, as he pleas’d
 ‘to have it. Some (he adds) held before them
 ‘Images of Beasts in Brasses, Artfully contriv’d
 ‘to serve both for Defence and Ornament.
 ‘On their Heads they wore Helmets of Brasses,
 ‘beautified as they thought with some Mark
 ‘upon the Crest of them, which might be seen ‘at a Distance. Their usual Ornament was
 ‘the Horns, or the Head of some Bird or Beast ‘form’d upon them, or fix’d to them (†). For what Reasons this Part of the World seems to pay so much Honour only to the Vertues Military, when the Chinese, on the other hand, prefer the Men of Learning to those of the Sword, will not be difficult to resolve. For it may be consider’d, that tho’ the Advantages which the Common-wealth receives from Men of Civil Life and Profession, are no way inferior to those it gains by Persons Military:
 (For certainly, To form good Laws; To administer Justice impartially; To increase the Riches of the State by Improvement of Trade and Commerce; To be able, by the Force of Eloquence, to compose popular Discontents, and to incline the Minds of the People what way soever the Posture of Affairs requires; To discover the Counsels and Designs of Foreign Enemies, and to prevent, or frustrate them; are Excellencies of the Highest Nature, and that deserve the greatest Honours;) yet Civil Persons have not always that Esteem and Value paid them which is their due, and especially among People of scanty Knowledge and Observa- tion, both because the natural and acquired Per-fections which are necessary to the Attainment of Civil Accomplishments, lie generally out of common View, and are not well understood by vulgar Apprehensions; and because they seem to discover themselves in a sedate silent way, without Noise, or Violence, or Danger. But now the Vertues and Qualities Military are perfectly of another Nature. And therefore, though Courage and Resolution are no less necessary in Civil Administration and Conduct than Military; Yet People of Martial Temper and Spirit, that had rather purchase a Subsistence with their Blood, than by their Sweat and In- dustry, think nothing more Glorious and Noble, than to be prepar’d against all the Terrors of War, than to face and defie Death and Danger, and to Hazard, what is of all Things most Valuable, Life it self; that other Men may live in greater Ease and Security (a). For these Reasons in many Kingdoms of Europe, the No- bility hold their Estates by a feudal Right, and have Immunities from several Duties settled upon them which are exacted from those of in- ferior Rank, purely because they were obliged to attend the Wars, and assist the State in Military Service. The Original of which feudal Right seems to be hinted in Lampridius’s Life of Alexander Severus, c. 58. Where he tells us, ‘That the Lands which the Emperor took from ‘the Enemy were given to the Officers and ‘Soldiers that liv’d upon the Borders, to en‘joy them for ever, provided they would ‘oblige their Heirs to enter into Military Ser- ‘vice, and never to live a private Life; the ‘Emperor supposing, that they would be the ‘better Souldiers when they were also to defend ‘their own Estates. And hence it is unusual for the Nobility to turn to Trade or Mer- chandize, not because such Professions are really Mean or Dishonourable (b); but because they would divert them from their Military way of Life, and force them upon the Dishonour of enjoying Fiefs and Privileges gratis, without any Returns of Service. And therefore where-ever the Nobility are allowed, without Disparagement to their Honour, to apply themselves to Trade and Merchandize, it may safely be infer’d, that they had no Military Original.

 The Egyptians, Scythians, Persians, Lydians, and almost all the old barbarous Nations, according to Herodotus’s Account of them (c), look’d upon all Persons, that apply’d themselves to Trades and Handicraft Employment, to be the meanest and lowest sort of Subjects; And their Children they always thought mean and base.
 They only were allow’d to be of Quality, that were above all Mechanical Employments; and especially, that made War their Business and Profession (d). And at Rome there was a Law prefer’d by Q. Claudius Tribune of the Com- mons; ‘That no Senator, or Senator’s Father, ‘should have any Ship of greater Burthen than ‘would contain the Quantity of three hundred ‘Ampboræ. Such a Ship being suppos’d to be large enough to carry their Corn out of the Field; and all Trade look’d upon to be beneath Persons of that Dignity (e).

XXXI. But notwithstanding, There are and have been some States and Common-wealths, where the Honours allowed to Birth, have been and are very inconsiderable; every Man being left to raise and support his Nobility by his Merits to the State. ‘So the Egyptians, ‘we are told in their Funeral Orations, never ‘used to make Mention, as the Greeks did, of ‘the Family of the Party Deceased; because ‘they thought every Man equally Noble: But ‘his Education they were always sure to speak ‘of, and Manner of Life, his Piety and Devo- ‘tion, his Justice, Continence, and what other ‘Vertues he was known to have practis’d (f).
 So the Turks never set a higher Value upon (†) Add. Hobbes Leviathan, c. 10. in fin. (a) Vid. Arist. Probl. l. 27. q. 5. (b) Conf. Bodinus de Repub. l. 3. c. 8. p. m. 546. Some indeed fetch the Reason of this from Ecclesiasticus XXXVIII 25, &c. and because as Cicero saith, Offic. l. 1. c. 42. They make no Profit unless they resolve not to spare for Lies. (c) L. 2. p. 98. Ed. H. Steph.

(d) Add. L. 4. t. 63. l. 3. de Commercio & Mercator. & L. 12. t. 1. l. 6. G. de dignitatibus. Aristot. Polit. l. 3. c. 3. Cic. Offic. l. 1. d. 1. The Gains that all Mercenaries make, who sell their Labour and not their Art, are base and fordid; and the Wages they receive is the same thing as an Earnest of their Slavery. (e) Liv. l. 21. c. 63. and Juvenal calls the Merchant, Vilis sacci mercator olentis, Sat. 14. v. 269. a sordid Wretch that trades for nasty Wares.

(f) Diod. Sicul. l. 1. c. 92. Tullus Hostilius in Dionys. Halicarn. l. 3. p. 148. Ed. Lips. says, I cannot think that human Nobility can consist in any thing but Vertue.

themselves, than what may seem Due to their own Merits: To the Ottoman Family only they allow Nobility of Blood (a). Neither do the Chinese express any Honour for Antiquity of Descent, the poorest and meanest Person in the Empire is capable by his Learning only of preferring himself to the highest Places of Honour (b): And in their Marriages, neither the Emperor himself, nor any of his Children, make Choice of their Wives with regard to Extraction, but only to the Beauty and Agreeableness of the Woman (c). Such Customs perhaps, may be contrary to those which are receiv'd in this part of the World; but notwithstanding the Wiser part of Mankind ever have, and always must allow it to be true, That Nobility ought not to depend only upon the Blood, but should much rather be rais'd and establish'd upon Vertue (d). It was a severe, but a very proper Answer which Antigonus gave to the Son of a brave old Officer, Ambitious of Honours he had not deserved, 'Tis your own Vertue, and not the Blood you derive from your Father, that must recommend you to me (e). For as Plato saith (f), 'Every Man has had a numerous Race of Ancestors before him, some of which were perhaps rich Men, and some poor, some may have been Princes and some Slaves, some barbarous and some civiliz'd (g). And it is not unlikely, as another suspects (h), that the Poets deriv'd their Heroes from the Gods, only to cover some Misfortunes or Defects in Birth or Quality, which might perhaps have been found out, upon a strict Enquiry into their Descent. For 'tis certain, if we were to unravel any Man's Nobility, we should at last come to something Mean and Little (i): And therefore Lycurgus prov'd by the famed Example of the two Dogs, that it is not Nature but Education that forms Men to Vertue (k). And 'tis easy for a Man of the latest Quality to give them of Ancient but corrupt and degenerate Nobility, the same Answer that Iphicrates did to Hermodius, one of the old Race of the Harmodii, when he objected to him the Meanness of his Birth, I am the first of my Family, and you are the last of Yours (l). Nor are there wanting those that argue, That it is unjust to exempt any Man, or to grant him Immunity from any particular Duty and Burthen in the Common-wealth, to the Prejudice of other Subjects; or to give him easier Admission to Preferments and Offices barely upon the Score of Birth, which, 'tis certain, can of it self confer no extraordinary Vertues, and which it is in no Man's Power to procure for himself (m); since others may be as well, perhaps better, acquainted with the Arts necessary in the Administration and Management of those Offices than he is, and particularly if

(a) Auger. Busbequius, Ep. 1. Add what he saith of the Fanizaries in the same place. (b) Martin. Pref. Hist. Sin.
(c) Neuhof. in legat. pag. 280. (d) Senec. Hercol. Fur. vers. 339, 340. Qui genus jactat suum, aliena laudat.
Boetius de Consolat. Philosoph. L. 3. Metr. 6.

*Quid genus & promos strepitis?
Si primordia vestra,
Autoremque Deum spectes,
Nullus degener extat;
Ni vitiiis pejora fovens,
Proprium deserat ortum.*

Horace, Sat. 6. l. 1. v. 7, 8. to Mæcenas.
*Referre neqes quali sit quisque parente
Natus dum ingenuus.*

Claudian, l. 2. v. 123. de Laudib. Stilicon.
*Letos ex omnibus oris
Evehis; & meritum, nunquam cunabula queris
Et qualis, non unde satius.*

Add. Seneca de Beneficiis, l. 3. c. 28. & Epist. 44. and thus Canulejus in Livy, l. 4. c. 3. The Growth of the Roman Empire was owing to this. That no Family was thought mean or contemptible which was eminent for its Vertues. Herodian, l. 5. c. 1. The Gifts of Fortune are frequently bestow'd upon such as do not deserve them; but the Vertues of the Mind are every Man's own proper Glory. And Greatness of Birth, Riches, and the like, though we think them happy that enjoy them, yet can add no real Praise to a Man, because they are derived from others.

(e) Plutarch. de vitios. Pudore, p. 534. & in Apophth. p. 187. B. (f) In Theateto, p. 128. C. Ed. Wech.

(g) There is a Passage like this in Dio. Chrystome, Orat. 15. de Servitute p. 238. B. It is impossible, that from the Beginning of the World, there should have been any Race of Men, in which there have not been almost innumerable Instances of some of the Progeny that have been Slaves, of others of them that have been Tyrants and Princes, Captives and Criminals, Tradesmen and Mechanicks; and in short, some of all States, Professions, and Conditions, that have been in the World, and that have, in their Turns, gone through all the Business and Employments, all the Fortunes and Calamities of human Life. (h) Dio. Chrystos. ibid. (i) M. Seneca, L. 1. Controv. 6.

(k) Plut. Apophth. Lacon. p. 225. (l) Plut. Apophth. Add. Philo. Judæus de Nobilitate. Stobæus, Serm. 84, 85, 86, 87. Tho. Browne de Religione Med. Part II. c. 1. When I speak of the Vulgar, I do not understand the Common People only, and the lowest Dregs of the Rabble. For even among those of the higher Ranks, there is a sort of vulgar inferior Multitude, you may safely say, made entirely of the same Materials with the meanest of the Populace. For my part, I make no Scruple of ranking them with the Mechanicks, however their Fortunes may conceal the Defects of their Understanding, and their Riches seem to excuse their want of Sense.

(m) Euripides Electra, v. 551. Πολλοὶ γὰρ ὄντες ἀψήκτους εἰσὶ κακοί.

The Noble often are Degenerate.

Fondly our high Descent we boast,
If whence at first our Breath we drew,
The common Springs of Life we View;
The airy Notion soon is lost.
Th' Almighty made us equal all.
But he that slavishly complies
To do the Drudgery of Vice,
Disowns his high Original.

You own 'tis nothing whence a Man began
When every Action proves the Gentleman.

From every Land the Bravest you select,
And with their Vertues pleas'd, their Blood neglect.
Nor for Descent enquire, our Noble Lines; Careless of Birth, where Worth superiour shines.

he be a Person given to the Enjoyments of Ease and Pleasure (a). In short, that it may seem to be a very great Misfortune in a Common-wealth, when the Civil Sovereign is tied up and confin'd to a particular Order of Men, in disposing Places of publick Trust, that he cannot have the Assistance of his other Subjects, though in Business they are very well qualified for; and especially, if he has not Power to elect any Person of Worth into such an Order. For when it becomes necessary for Princes to support and favour the Nobility only, that by their Assistance they may more easily Restrain and keep in Awe the rest of their Subjects, 'tis certain that their Power grows feeble, and that the Reins of Government are ready to drop out of their hands; since they are forced to enter into a kind of Faction with Part of their Subjects, to distrust the Force of open Authority, and take Refuge in the Artful Designs of Secret Policy. I shall add only what my L<sup>d</sup> Bacon says in his Advancement of Learning (b), 'That a Kingdom that would be Great, 'must not encrease its Nobility to too great a 'Number.

XXXII. It may be proper now, in the last place to enquire, Whether Civil Dignity and Marks of Honour depend upon the Sovereign Power as to their Durations also and Continuance, as well as in their Original? And Here it must be enquired, Whether the Marks of Honour, and the Privileges and Rights annex'd to it, are confin'd to any Particular Office and Employment in the Common-wealth which the Sovereign has the Disposal of; Or, Whether they are settled upon the Subject in the Nature of Property? Upon the First Supposition, it is evident, the Sovereign must have the same Power that he has to appoint or remove his Officers and Magistrates. Fabius the Cunctator very well expres'd, not only the Greatness of his Spirit, but the Submission also he thought himself obliged to pay to the Power of the Common-wealths, by that Calmness of Temper which he show'd when the Master of the Horse was made Equal with him while he continued Dictator (c). Solon us'd to say, 'That Courtiers and the Favourites of Princes were like 'Counters used in casting up Summs; for as 'Counters sometimes signifie a greater Number, and sometimes a less: So these Creatures 'are absolutely at the Mercy of their Princes, 'Whose Pleasure makes them Great and Noble, 'or Mean and Despicable (d). But upon the Second Supposition, when the Subject enjoys his Dignity and the Marks and Badges of Honour in the Nature of Property, the Government cannot in Justice take them from Him, Unless by way of Punishment. And in this Case, as Aristotle in Ælian said (e), There is a wide difference between not obtaining Honour, and between being turn'd out of it after a Man has obtain'd it: For it is no great Pain to a Man not to gain what He Pursues; but to be dispossessed of what he has gain'd must be a sensible Affliction. But notwithstanding, the Immunities and Privileges annex'd to Honour may Either be laid under Suspension, or be Entirely taken away upon some pressing Emergency in the Common-wealth; Allowance being made for them, as it best may in some other Method. For since the Extremities and Necessities of the State must always be supposed to be Exceptions to all Such Privileges; It would be the most Extravagant Absurdity imaginable, to make them Sacred and Inviolable beyond the Necessary Defence and Preservation of the Common-wealth. From what hath been said It may also be discover'd, how far any Common-wealth may with Justice Enact, That Children of Traytors shall be Excluded from all Honours in the Common-wealth? So it was decreed by the State of Athens in the Case of Antipho, as appears in his Life (1): And at Rome, Sylla made a Law, That the Children of all Persons Proscribed should not appear Candidates for any Honour. And the answer to it in short is, that the State may justly enough deny them all Publick Dignities and Employments, but can not rightly deprive Them of simple Esteem.

(a) Such as those Aristophanes mentions, Ran. Act. 3. Sc. 1. v. 2. That were good for nothing but to Eat and Drink, or those Juvenal speaks of, Sat. XI. v. 11.

Mr. Congreve,

Quibus in solo vivendi causa palato est.

Such whose sole Bliss is Eating, who can give But that one brutal Reason why they live.

(b) L. 8. c. 3. n. 3. Vid. Essays, c. 14. by the same Author.

(c) Vid. Liv. 1. 22. c. 15. 26.

(d) Vid. Polyb. 1. 5. c. 26.

(e) Var. Hist. 1. 14. c. 1.

(1) Vid. Plutarch in Ejus Vit. in Orat. 10. c. 1.

CHAP. V.

Of the Power of the Sovereign, both over the Publick Patrimony, and the Estates of Private Subjects.

TO understand distinctly what Power the Sovereign has over the Estate and Fortunes of the Subject, it will be necessary to observe, that this Power is derived either from the Nature of Sovereignty in it self; or else from the particular manner of the Acquisition

quisition of it. For it is manifest, that there is a great difference between a Prince (1), that has rais'd his own Kingdom, collected, as it were, his own Subjects, and who was at first the Universal, Absolute Proprietor of every thing in the Common-wealth; and Another freely call'd to Government and invested with Sovereign Power, by Persons already in Possession of their distinct Proprieties. The First, it is clear, hath not only all that Power over the Bona Reipub. the Good contain'd in the Common-wealth which flows from the Nature of Sovereign Power it self; But also the same Which every Master of a Family has to his Estate, except He is pleas'd voluntarily to remit any Part of his Right. If such a Prince therefore keeps his Propriety entire, the Subjects can have no better Right to What they possess, than the Roman Slaves had to What they got by their own labour; that is, a Pre-carious Possession revocable at Pleasure, whenever the Prince thinks fit. But however, as long as the Subjects are in Possession of such Goods or Estates, they may justly supply themselves with Sustainance and other Necessaries from them by way of Wages for the trouble of improving and preserving them. And therefore what Hobbes falsely applies to all manner of Subjects (a) holds true only with regard to These, viz. 'That the Propriety, which a Subject hath to his Goods consists in a Right to 'exclude all other Subjects the Use of them, 'but not to exclude the Sovereign; As in a 'Family, the Father grants some of his Sons 'a Propriety to certain Goods, distinct from the 'Proprieties of other Sons of the same Family, 'but not from that of the Father himself; So 'that every Son in the Family enjoys a Propriety barely to so much, and for so long as the 'Father pleaseth. But if the Prince I am speaking of recedes from any part of his Right, the Subjects will have just as much Right to their Goods, as the Concessions of their Prince make over to them. And this, by different Princes hath been done different ways. Pharaoh was to have the Fifth part of the Increase of all the Land of Egypt to himself; the other Four were to continue to Husbandmen, only the Lands that belong'd to the Priests were not sold, and they had a third part of the Land by the Donation of Isis (b). Strabo says, that in India the Land was the Prince's, and Husbandmen were hired to cultivate it for the Fourth Part of the Produce (c). And this is the Custom now in the Dominions of the Great Mogul; Where the Emperour is also Heir to all his Ministers and Servants, and to all Merchants. In the Kingdom of Congo (2) no Subject has any Property which he can transmit to his Heirs, but all falls to the Prince; And he administers and disposes the Goods to what Uses he thinks fit. In such Countries therefore, all the Right Private Subjects have to their Goods and Estates, depends Originally upon the Favour of the Prince, who hath an absolute Power to dispose of all they have, so far as the Compacts and Irrevocable Grants He hath made will permit. But after all, it is usually observ'd by Travellers of those Countries, and particularly of the Empire of the Great Mogul (d), that That Absolute Propriety of the Prince has been the Reason why that and other Kingdoms of the East, otherwise very happy in the Advantages Nature has given them, should lie Wild, Desolate, and Barbarous, and either be always Poor and Decaying, or at least never arrive at the Splendor and Greatness of the European Nations, where the Princes are generally more tender of invading the Properties of their Subjects, and where Subjects have the Liberty to defend their Own, even against their Princes (e).

II. But there are, on the Other Hand, Common-wealths, where the Original Right the Subjects have to their Properties does no way depend upon the Favour or Indulgence of the Civil Government. And this seems to have happen'd these two Ways; Either first, when a People under the Conduct of a Prince they set over themselves remove in Search of new Seats: Or Secondly, when a Number of Masters of Families already possess'd of their several Properties freely erect themselves into a Common-wealth, or voluntarily join themselves to some Common-wealth already established, and submit themselves and their Fortunes to Civil Government. In the former Case, the Method usually observ'd is this, the Whole Body of the People under the Conduct of their Leader possess themselves of some New Country, Which perhaps in its large Extent is bounded by Limits which Nature her self, or the Arbitrary Constitutions of the World have given it; But which is afterwards canton'd into Parts and distributed to Particular Persons either by Lot or at the Discretion of the Commander, or possibly (tho' very seldom), by every Man's own Choice (f). Now in this Case, tho' Every Particular Man's Property seems rather to be grounded upon the Leader's Appointment than his own Seisure; Yet it does not follow, that therefore All He has is owing purely to the Favour of his Commander. For every Man that voluntarily went in the Expedition has certainly an absolute Right to share in the Acquisitions of it, and to be consider'd in the Divi-

(1) See above, in B. 7. c. 6. s. 16. (a) De Civitate, c. 6. s. 15. &c. 12. s. 7. (b) Gen. XLVII. v. 23, 24, 26. Vid. Diad. Sicul. l. 1. c. 21. 72. Et Grot. Com. in Gen. XLVII. 26. (c) Strabo, l. 15. p. 484. Ed. Genev. Casaub. Diod. Sicul. l. 2. c. 40. Vid. Garcilass de la Vega, Com. Roy. l. 5. c. 5. (2) Vid. Edward. Lopez.

(d) Bernier de Nuperis Motibus in Imp. Magn. Mog. (e) Garcilass de la Vega, Com. Roy. l. 5. c. 2. relates, That it was the Command of the Tuca's, That none of their Subjects should be obliged to Plow the Emperour's Lands, before they had taken care of their Own; because it was not likely any Man would be so Diligent as he ought, in his Prince's Business, that had not before well settled his Own. The Poor, the same Historian says, were always look'd upon to be an useless Multitude among them, both in War and Peace. (f) See Cornel. Nepos in Miltiades, c. 2.

tion of the Land (a). But much less do the Properties of the Private Subject own any Original Dependency upon the Favour and Indulgence of the Civil Sovereign, Where (as was supposed in the Second Case) a Number of Masters of Families possessed of their Liberties and distinct Proprieties, freely submit to Civil Government. For I take it to be clear, notwithstanding all that Hobbes has said to the contrary (1), that Persons that live without Civil Government in a Liberty of Nature may nevertheless enjoy their several Properties (2). For admitting, that Nature gave every Man a Right to Every thing, yet This is no Argument why every Man might not by Intervention of Compact have his Separate Property divided to him. And tho' a Compact of Two or more about Things left in a Community of Nature, does not in the least prejudice Other Men, but leaves them to their full Primitive Right; Yet if All Men consent by common Compact, either Express or Tacit, to make a Division of Things, without Dispute This must introduce a true and real Propriety. And therefore Hobbes's (3) Assertion is false, that every Father of a Family that is under no Subjection either to another Father, or to any common Master, has a common Right to every thing (b). Tho' it must indeed be allowed, that They that live under Civil Government have their Properties better secured and defended than They that live in a Liberty of Nature; for These must support Themselves by their own single Force alone, while the Others can call the whole Strength of the Common-wealth to assist them, either against the Encroachments of Foreigners or the Injuries of their Fellow Subjects (c).

III. In Common-wealths therefore where the Properties of the Subjects do not originally depend upon the Government, the Civil Sovereign hath no further power over them than what immediately flows from the nature of the Supreme Power in it self, unless the Subjects freely consent to enlarge it. Every thing says Seneca (d), by a Civil right may be said to belong to the Prince, while yet the particular parts of that wide Possession are divided among different Proprietors, and Every Thing belongs to a distinct Owner.

And therefore when we present our Prince with our Houses, our Slaves or our Money, we do not think we give him back his own. The Prince hath indeed a power over all We have, but the Propriety is in the private Subject. 'Tis common to say, that such and such Territories belong to the Athenians or Campanians; But the People of those Countries distinguish and divide them further between one another by Private Boundaries; The whole Extent of a Country may be under Such or Such a Common-wealth, but there are distinct Proprietors, who have their separate Portions of it. And therefore We may give away our Estates to the Publick, tho' in some sense They may be said to have belonged to it before; because the Title We have to them is of a very different Nature, from that which the Publick can be said to have. For the Prince possesses All by his Sovereign Command and Authority, the Private Subjects by their Propriety (e). And Therefore the Emperour Adrian, when the People petition'd him to give a Slave liberty that had pleas'd them in the Chariot-race, reprimanded Them for it, and told them, that it neither became him to free another Man's Servant, nor Them to offer such an injury to his Master (f). And the Emperour Claudius made an Edict, to suppress a common practice of begging other Men's Estates of the Emperour; It being an Opinion current at that time, that it was in His power to give them away; And He restor'd an Estate he had obtain'd that Way Himself, when He was a private Subject (g). But now this Power we are here speaking of may, I think, be properly enough reduc'd to Three Heads; First, to the Right of making Laws to direct such a Porportion in the Use and Consumption of certain Goods and Commodities, as the State of the Common-wealth requires. Secondly, to the Right of levying Taxes. Thirdly, to the Exercise of the Transcendental Propriety (h). To the first Head we may reduce all Sumptuary Laws (4), or such as prescribe bounds to Extravagant unnecessary Expences, which would in course of time be the ruin of private Families, and in consequence weaken the Common-wealth it self, by carrying the Publick Money abroad into

(a) Vid. Genes. XIV. 14, 21, 22, 23, 24. Vid. Supr. 1. 4. c. 6. f. 3, 4. (1) Ubi Supra.

(2) See above, in B. 3. c. 4. f. 2, 3. (3) De Civie, c. 6. f. 15. (b) Vid. Genes. IV. 4. XIII. 5, &c.

(c) Vid. Genes. XXXIV. 30. Vid. Xenoph. Memorab. l. 2. p. 433. Ed. H. Steph. where Socrates saith, a Man is happier that lives secure in Society with a moderate Fortune, than that leads a lonely melancholy Life, full of Fears and Dangers, in the Enjoyment of the Riches of a whole Common-wealth. And in this Sense we may admit of what Cicero saith, Orat. pro Caccina, c. 25. that if we take away Civil Right and Government, there will be no Distinction left between one Man's Property and another's; and in his 2d Book of Offices, c. 21. more clearly, Their chief Reason why Common-wealths were instituted, was that every Man might enjoy what was his own. For tho' Men were by Nature directed to Society, yet they found it necessary to erect Cities for the Security of their Properties.

(d) Senec. de Beneficiis, l. 7. c. 4, 5.

(e) Vid. Grot. Com. in 1 Reg. XVI. 24.

(f) Zonaras, Tom. 2.

(g) And therefore it was a Mistake in the Emperour Frederick to think that Quicquid habet locuples, quicquid custodit avarus,

Jure quidem nostrum, populo concedimus usum.
Rege figuratam Regis patet esse monetam;
Cæsaris & domino sub Cæsare fulget imago.

All that the Rich and Covetous receive,
Is mine by Right, to them the Use I give;
The Royal Stamp, who claims the Coin, declares,
And Cæsar's Money, Cæsar's Image bears.

Gunth. Ligurinus, l. 3. v. 480, &c.

(h) Dominium Eminens. (4) See Mr. Barbeyrac's First Note upon this Section.

Foreign Countries; whither the Humour or Vanity of Luxury and Waste generally runs (a). Besides another Inconvenience to be prevented by such Laws is this, That they that squander away their Fortunes Extravagantly, make themselves incapable of serving the Publick. For a Man, for Instance, that spends but Two Parts in Five of what he hath Yearly coming in, and pays Two more in Taxes to the State, feels no Inconvenience by it, and lays up to encrease his Stock one Fifth Part more; whereas One that spends every Year all He receives, if He pays never so little to the Publick, must either lessen his Estate, or retrench his Expences. Of this Sort were those Sump- tuary Laws in the Roman Common-wealth which P. Manutius recounts out of Macrobius (b). And that Law of Plato's (c), 'By which 'he would not have a Marriage Invitation 'bring together, more than ten Persons, and 'those Relations; Nor that Persons of the best 'Quality should spend above a Mina or ten 'Crowns on such occasions (d). To this Head also may be reduced Laws against Gameing (e), and Prodigality. Of which nature was Periander's Law at Corinth, by which no Man was allowed to spend more than he had coming in (f). A Law which deserves to be particularly enforced upon Persons concern'd in the publick Affairs and Places: Since it is very well observ'd (g). That 'tis Impossible any Man should govern well in the Common-wealth, that is negligent in his own Concerns, or forbear mis- spending the publick Treasure, that hath used to live above his private Fortune; for a Man that hath managed his Own ill, must be suspected when he undertakes for Others (h). And further, under this Head we may rank all Laws that determine the Rates and Quality of Possessions and Estates; Such was the Licinian at Rome, That no Man should have a Possession of more than five Hundred Akers of Land, nor above One Hundred Head of large Cattel, or five Hundred of the Less (i). As also the Law, which Aristotle says was generally observ'd in popular Governments, That no Man should sell his first Inheritance. And Oxyllus's Law, that Money should not be lent upon Mortgage of Land (k). As also that Decree of the Roman Senate (l). That all Candidates for Offices in the Common-wealth, should be obliged to turn a third part of their Estates into Lands in Italy. And We may further reduce under this Head all Laws that determine the Quantity and Measures of Grants and Legacies; That lay Re- straints upon the Power of making Wills, or that put a stop to Excess in dedicating things to pious uses (m). As also Laws That forbid Cer- tain Subjects to possess Certain kinds of Goods; As in India no private Subject is allowed to keep an Horse and an Elephant, the Prince only enjoying that Privilege (n). Moreover Laws against Idle and Lazie People; such as was that among the Nabathæi, by which every Man was Publickly punish'd that wasted his Estate (o). And those against Persons that suf- fered their Estates to run to ruin purely by Care- lessness and Neglect (p). And That made by Amasis King of Egypt, by which every Sub- ject in his Kingdom was obliged every Year to make it appear to the Governour of the Province he liv'd in, what Trade or Profession he was of, making it Death for any Man to refuse to obey (q). To this Head also belong Those Laws, by which Subjects are forbid the Acquisition of Certain Goods, and to encrease their Estates Certain Particular ways; So Pliny says, there was a Decree of the Roman Senate, to forbid the digging after any kind of Ore or Metal in Italy, tho' it was very well known, that no Country had greater abundance or variety (r). To this Head belongs also the famous Venetian Law, by which no Subject of that State can either by Will or Sale, or any other Way, upon any account leave, sell, or alienate the Perpetuity of any immoveable Goods to the Church, or Persons Ecclesiastical, without leave from the Senate (s). And lastly, the Laws That forbid the Exportation of Money, and com- mand, that all Trade with Foreigners shall be managed by Barter only, and Exchange of Commodities.

IV. But Secondly, a further Right which belongs to the Sovereign is, that he can take away part of the Goods of the Subject by way of Tax. For Taxes moderately imposed, and faithfully laid out in the service of the Publick, are only the Wages which every Man pays the Common-wealth for the defence and se- curity of Himself and Fortunes: and to main- tain the Expences unavoidably necessary to that End. And therefore when Nero propos'd to give orders to lay aside all Sorts of Taxes, supposing that That would certainly be the noble- est Grant he could ever possibly make to the World; the Senate put a stop to his heat, by show- ing Him that the Empire must be dissolv'd and ruin'd, if he cut off the Revenues from it that

(a) V. Plin. Nat. Hist. l. 6. c. 23. The Arabians are certainly the richest People in the World, for They are the Merchants that exhaust the Wealth of the Roman and Parthian Empires; They are continually importing among us the Produce of their Seas or Woods, and never buy any thing of us in return. N. H. l. 6. c. 28. Every year constantly the Indies drain us of little less than 500000 Sesterces, besides that, the Commodities We have from thence sell here for an hundred times double the advantage they do there. Vid. l. 12. c. 18. N. H.

(b) Manut. de L. L. Roman. Macrobi. Saturnal. l. 3. (c) Plato de L. L. l. 6. p. 870. D. E. Ed. Francof.

(d) Vid. Ælian, Var. Hist. l. 3. c. 34. Garcilass de la Vega, Com. Roy. l. 5. c. 11.

(e) Vid. L. 11. t. 5. D. & C. L. 3. t. 33. de Aleatoribus. Gratian. c. 7, 8, 9. Distinct. 80.

(f) Heraclides de Politicis. (g) Polyb. l. 10. Excerpt. Peiresc. (h) Lucian in Antholog. T. 2. p. 834. Ed. Amst.

(i) Vid. P. Manutium de LL. Rom. Numb. XXXVI. 7. 9. Aristot. Polit. l. 2. c. 5. 7. l. 6. c. 4, 5.

(k) Vid. LL. Burgund. tit. 84. f. 1. (l) Plin. l. 6. Epist. 19. (m) Exod. XXXVI. 6. (n) Strabo, l. 15. p. 484.

(o) Strabo, l. 16. p. 539. (p) Vid. Gellium, l. 4. c. 12. (q) Heroder. Euterpe. (r) Plin. Nat. Hist. l. 3. c. 20.

(s) Maurocenus, Hist. Ven. l. 17.

supported it (a). Which if a Man will be at the trouble fairly to consider, he will be forced to confess, that the Complaints of the People, (who are apt to think the Burthen of the Taxes the great occasion and cause of all their Miseries), are generally very unjust as well as very impudent (b). But their Complaints are most groundless and intolerable, That wear whole Estates upon their Backs (as Plautus says, (1) and yet when they are to be Tax'd, pretend They are not able to pay, tho' at the same time They find enough to allow their Vanity, Which lays a much more unreasonable Tax upon them, than the State. Archidamus in the Peloponnesian War, when his Allies desired him to settle some stated Proportion for their Contributions, told them, that War could not be carried on by fix'd allowances, for that there is no determining before-hand, what supplies of Money will be necessary (c). It being impossible for them that engage in a War to know what will be the certain Event of it (d): For it very seldom happens, that as Cato said, a War will maintain it self. And indeed in general, The publick Expences cannot be confin'd within any particular Bounds, because of that Variety of Casualties and Accidents which happen, and which do not depend upon our selves but our Neighbours, which will always demand supplies of Money to be defeated or avoided (e).

V. However, a Wise Prince will so far comply with the querulous Humour of his People, as to take care that his Taxes be collected with as little disturbance and as much gentleness as possible. Now the generality of People think it harder to be obliged to part with what They look upon to be their Property, than to be denied the Appropriation of some few particular things (f). 'Tis generally true, that Men have hardly any sense of publick Calamities, (as Hannibal told the Carthaginians) but when they affect them in their private Fortunes; and there is no Loss They feel so much, as that which touches any part of their Estates. And therefore Some have thought it the best way to provide for that inconvenience once for all; and set aside a Portion of their Estate, purely for the use and service of the publick (g). Some again are of Opinion, that the Generality of the People are burthen'd less by Taxes rais'd by Custom or Excise, than when levy'd in a way of Subsidy and Tribute. In laying Impositions or Customs upon Foreign Commodities imported, it should be consider'd, whether the Commodities are for necessary use, or only for Luxury. If they are of the latter kind, the Custom may very justly be laid heavier, to prevent and suppress Extravagance and Riot; and because the Rich, or they that enjoy large Privileges otherwise, and contribute little to the Publick, are generally the only Buyers. It should be also considered farther, whether the same Commodities might not be produced at home, or wrought to the same perfection, by the industry and application of our own People. And if it appears they may, the Imposts ought to be rais'd higher upon them, especially upon Commodities that serve only to supply Luxury and Vanity, and make us pay Tribute to other Nations, not for our Lands indeed, or Possessions, but what is much worse,

(a) Tacit. Ann. 13. c. 56. Vid. Hist. 4. Tac. c. 74. where Cerealis tells the Treviri, All the Harm we have done you by our right of Conquest, hath been only to defend and secure your Peace; for it is impossible to support Peace in the World without War, to maintain a War without Money, or to have Money without a supply from Taxes. Iseus, Orat. 6. He thought that he ought to be very thrifty in his own Expences, and reserve all that was left for the use of the Publick, that there might be enough to defray the Charges of the State. Themistius, Orat. 14. The Laws forbid every Man that is return'd into the Exchequer, to take any place of publick Trust, before he hath discharged that Debt.

(b) Vid. Hobbes de Cive, c. 12. s. 9. Plaut. Cistell. Act. 2. Sc. 2. (1) In Epidicus, Act. 2. Scen. 2. v. 42, &c.

(c) Plut. Apophth. p. 219. & in Crassus. (d) Procop. de Bello Persic. L. 2. c. 26.

(e) It will not be impertinent to the Discourse, or difficult to Apply to any Preparations for War, what is mention'd by Nicetas Choniates, l. 1. 'The Emperour Manuel Comnenus was over-perwaded by his Treasurer Johannes Puzenus to apply the Money that was usually raised to maintain a Navy to his own use, and bring it into the Exchequer. The Reasons he gave to induce him to it were, that the State had not always occasion for a Fleet, and that the Charges to keep it were constant, and ran generally very high; and that therefore it would be a better way to call the Money into the Exchequer, and whenever the posture of Affairs made a Fleet necessary, the Emperour's Coffers would be full enough to defray the Expences of it. The Proposition took, and Puzenus was applauded for an extraordinary Man, and look'd to have more than common Sagacity and Skill in the management of Publick Affairs. But in Reality, the greatest Enemy to the Common-wealth could not have given more pernicious Advice. For he deceiv'd the Emperour Two ways, On one hand by misrepresenting the Greatness of the Expence, And on the other by falsely Stating the easiness of the charge it might be reduced to. And upon this Counsel rashly given and obstinately adhered to, the Provinces that lay upon the Sea were continually afterwards infested with Pyracies. And therefore the Historian infers, that the Calamities that followed might as justly be charg'd upon the Author of that Advice, as a Fire is as much upon the Person that does not put it out when he can, as him that at first Kindled it. Vid. Nicoph. Gregoras, l. 6. who gives an account of some Instances, in the publick Affairs like this, in the Time of Andronicus Paleologus.

(f) Vid. Liv. l. 5. c. 23. l. 30. c. 44. Plut. Camillus. Where the People took it very ill, that they were forced to give back a Tenth part of the Booty that had been shared among them.

Homer. Iliad. l. v. 125, 126.

Ἀλλὰ τὰ μὲν πολίων ἔξεσθ' ἄποδωκεν, τὰ δὲ δάσαι,
 Λαοὶ δ' ἐκ ἐπίπτοις παλίνδοξα ταύτ' ἐπαίρειν.

Claudian de Laudib. Stilicon, L. 1. v. 379, 380.

— Graviolem amissa dolorem

Quam necdum quaerita, movent.

Vid. L. 24. l. 1. s. 5. D. de Donat. inter Virum & Uxor.

(g) Vid. Diador. Sicul. l. 1. c. 72. Paulum Warnefridum de Gest. Longobardorum, l. 3. c. 16.

We've shar'd the Spoils of the victorious Field,
 And none will to a new Division yield.

The loss of our Enjoyments grieves us more Than not to have enjoy'd.

for our Folly (a). As to the Exportation of Commodities of our own growth, it should be consider'd whether it be the interest of the Common-wealth, that they should not be exported; or whether it be necessary to send them to a Foreign Market, that the Subjects have a way to continue Trade or encrease their Wealth. The First naturally raises the Customs upon the Commodities, the Second lowers them. But besides it may be further consider'd, whether our Commodities are absolutely necessary in other Countries, and whether they are to be had from any other place. For all know the Industry and Diligence of the Merchant, and what difficulties and dangers He will venture himself in, upon the hopes of advantage; and that if the Impositions upon their Commodities be too high in one place, the Market will soon be carried to another; or else that they that buy, will content themselves to be without the Commodities: as Gallianus once said, what can't we live without this Egyptian Linnen, and can't the Common-wealth be safe without these Robes of Honour? And in my opinion, Hesiod's Rule may be very well apply'd to Customs, ἡ μὲν ἡμισυ πλεονεκτησιμῶν (i), The Half is more than the Whole. For a good Harbour is worth but very little when it hath lost its Trade. And such a Constitution too as Nero made, might possibly deserve Consideration, That Vessels of Trade should not be taken into the valuation of Estates, and that the Merchants should not be obliged to pay Taxes for them (b). The Government should also provide against the Frauds, which Collectors of Customs usually have, to promote their own private Gains, and take care to hinder their importunity and impertinence, and the trouble they give Subjects and Traders, which are born with more impaciencie and regret, than the Customs themselves. Thus Dio Cassius B. 42. saith, that Cæsar deliver'd Asia from the Exactions and Oppressions of the Publicans, and reduced all their Customs into a form of Tribute (c). So Tacitus (d) commends an Edict of Nero's, by which he Commanded, that the Laws relating to the Taxes, that had been out of use till then, should be entirely laid aside; and that no suit for any Tax that had been drop'd, should be reviv'd after the Year was expir'd; and that the Magistrate should have a Power extraordinarily to pass Judgment against the Publicans. Neither indeed should the Exchequer it self be always allow'd too much Favour, because that seldom loseth a Cause, but under a good Prince, and because there are never wanting those that have impudence enough to assist all its pretensions (e).

VI. But in levying Taxes, and indeed any sort of Imposition upon the Subjects, particular Care should be taken not to give any just Occasion of Complaint, which will be unavoidable where the Taxes are laid unequally. For as Hobbes very well observes, A Burthen which the whole Body of Subjects may possibly think easie and gentle will, if any considerable Number release or excuse themselves, lie heavy and insupportable upon the rest (f). For generally, it is not the Tax it self, so much as the Disproportion and Inequality of it, that sits uneasy upon the People, either from the Discontent that followeth upon the Injury, or from Envy that others should be excused. And indeed, since All the Subjects pay, the Common-wealth, in Reality, is nothing else but the Price of Peace; 'tis but reasonable, that such as have an equal Share in the Peace, should pay equally for it, by assisting the Common-wealth, either with their Money or their Persons; so that all Immunities and Privileges granted in Common-wealths to particular Men, or Orders of Men, are no further Reasonable, than as they who enjoy them ballance them, by the extraordinary Merit of the Service they do (g). But to discover in what this Equality consists, it must carefully be observ'd, that the Enquiry is not after Equality in Money, but in Charge and Burthen; or in other words, it is not necessary to this Equality I speak of, that every Man should pay an equal Sum of Money, but that the Share every Man is to pay, should not lie heavier upon one than another, which may easily enough be effected by making the Proportions equal, between the Burthen of the Tax and the Benefit of Peace. For though all equally enjoy Peace, yet they do not all make the same Advantages by it. Some get much more than others; and again some spend much more than others. And from hence Hobbes makes an Enquiry; 'Whether the Subjects ought to contribute to the publick, in Proportion to what they get, or what they spend, or whether a Man should be taxed according to what he hath coming in, or according to what he consumes? Where first I think I may say, that since every Man is secured in his Property, by the Care the Common-wealth takes of him, he may justly be taxed in Proportion to his Income, as Servius Tullius said, in Defence of the Institution of the Census (h). It is very Just I think, and very much for the Publick Good, that such as have large Fortunes should pay largely, and such as have less in a due Proportion. And thus all Subsidies levied upon extraordinary Exigencies in the Common-wealth, ought to be laid according to the Value of Estates. And then, Secondly, Since every Man's Life is defended by the Sword of the Common-wealth, and Life is equally dear to Poor and Rich, they are both equally obliged to attend the Service of the Wars, and to pay an equal moderate Tax upon that account, such as a Poll-tax, in which the Rich pays no more than the Poor. But because it is owing in like manner to the publick Care of the Common-wealth, that the Subjects have the Advantages

(a) Dio Chrysostr. Orat. 79. p. 664. D. (i) V. Hesiod. Oper. & Dier. v. 40. ubi vid. Cleric. (b) Tacit. Ann. 13. c. 51. (c) Vid. L. 39. t. 4. l. 12. Princip. D. de Publicanis. (d) Tacit. Ann. 13. d. l. (e) Plin. Panegy. c. 36. (f) Hobbes de Cive, c. 13. f. 9. (g) Vid. Diod. Sicul. l. 4. c. 73. de Machaon. & Podalir. Isocr. in laudat. Busirid. de Priv. Sacerd. Egyptior. p. 389, 390. (h) Dionys. Halicarn. l. 4. p. 215. Edit. L'epf.

and Opportunities of raising Estates by their own Industry; the great Difficulty in this case is, How the Tax upon this account ought to be laid? And perhaps the most Convenient way may be, to Tax Men according to what they consume, rather than what they get; especially, since Men generally spend in Proportion to what they have coming in. For if the Tax be laid according to what People have coming in; and it should happen that Some who have equal Incomes, should yet have very unequal Possessions, (which is as common as it is for one Man to be Frugal, and lay up what he can, and for another to spend what he gets in Waste and Luxury) The Consequence will be, that they that equally enjoy the Benefit of the common Peace, must yet bear an unequal Share of the Burdens of the Common-wealth. For Instance, Here are Two Persons which get equally an hundred Pounds a Year, and one of them spends constantly forty of it, and the other perhaps four score: Since both of them equally enjoy the Benefit of Peace, it seems Reasonable that both should pay equally for it. But then in this there will be these Two Inconveniencies. First, That it will be very difficult for the Government to discover what each Subject gets every Year by his Industry; besides that, there cannot be a Review made so often, of what every Man is Worth. And Secondly, That if the Tax be levied at the Years end, when both have made up their Accounts of what they have received, and how much expended, and the Tax be laid upon each of them in Proportion, to what they have remaining of the last Years Income; 'tis manifest, that one must pay double as much as the other, though both equally enjoy'd the common Peace. And what is worse, the one suffers for his Parimony, and the other is eas'd by his Extravagance. And therefore it must be the best Method to lay the Tax upon the things which are to be consumed, and then every Subject will insensibly pay his Share to the Publick, in Proportion to his private Consumption, not indeed for what he now actually is, but for what, by the Protection of the Common-wealth, he was formerly possess'd of; and so that which is paid to the Publick, will be look'd upon to be part of the Price of the things that are consumed. But what hath been said before, in other respects, of the Customs, may also be applied to Taxes and all other publick Impositions (a). What ways of raising Money Necessity may sometimes force a Government to take, may be seen at large in Aristotle's Oeconomicks, l. 2. c. 1. I cannot by the way forbear mentioning a very odd sort of a Tribute, which the Tuca's of Peru laid upon the poorest of their Subjects, which was to bring every Year to the Governours of their Provinces, a certain number of Gnat's Horns; the Design of which might possibly be, either that no Body should think himself exempt from paying Taxes, or else perhaps to free themselves from those Insects (b).

VII. (c) Sovereign or Transcendental Propriety (which is the Third head) is what some pretend to be afraid of, more upon Account of the Name, than Thing (1). The Sovereign Power, they say, was erected for the common Security, and that alone will give a Prince a sufficient Right and Title, to make use of the Goods and Fortunes of his Subjects, whenever Necessity requires; because he must be supposed to have a Right to every thing, without which the publick Good cannot be obtain'd. But the Transcendental Propriety is too Arrogant and Ambitious a name; and which ill Princes may sometimes abuse to the Damage and Ruin of their Subjects. But as it is trifling to dispute about words, so I think there can be no Absurdity or Danger in giving a particular Name, to a particular Branch of the Sovereign Power, as it exerts it self in a certain way, upon certain things. What the Force of this Propriety is, I shall now endeavour to explain (2). It will be confess'd agreeable to natural Equity, That when Contributions are to be made for the Preservation of some particular thing, by Persons that enjoy it in common, every Man should pay his Quota, and one should not be forc'd to bear more of the Burthen than another. And the same holds to be Equity also in Common-wealths; But because the State of a Common-wealth may often be such, that either some pressing Necessity will not give leave, that every particular Subject's Quota should be collected; or else, that the Publick may be forced to want the Use of something in the Possession of some private Subject; it must be allow'd that the Sovereign Power may seize upon it, to answer the Necessities of the State. But then, all above the Proportion that was due from the Proprietors, is to be refunded to them by the rest of the Subjects. For Example, When a Town is to be fortified, the Fields and Gardens of private Subjects must be laid open, and perhaps their Houses be pull'd down, to give room for the Works and Ditches. In Sieges, Houses

(a) Vid. Tacit. in Agricola, c. 19. Where he says, that if Agricola rais'd the Tribute upon the Britans, or obliged them to pay a greater Quantity of Corn, he made them Amends, by allowing them proportionable Favours, and by taking away all those Exactions and Oppressions which were more insupportable than the Tribute it self; for they had been forced before to wait ridiculously at the Granaries, though they were shut against them, and to buy their own Corn, and sell it again at a set Price; and it had been common to set them new Roads and Places at a great Distance, that the People might carry their Corn from the Incampments that were nearest to them, to those that were farthest off, and in the worst ways, that so what lay open for all, might turn to the Advantage of a few. Vid. Cic. in Ver. Sic. 3. And it was too severe an Answer, Pescennius Niger gave the Jews, when they begg'd him to lessen the Taxes upon their Estates; You would have me take off the Tax upon your Lands, but I assure you, if I could, I would lay one more upon the Air you breath, Spartianus, c. 7. (b) Garcilass. de la Vega. l. 5. c. 6. & l. 8. c. 5, 6. (c) Dominium Eminens. (1) See above in B. 4. c. 6. f. 3, &c. See Mr. Budde's History of the Law of Nature, in his Selecta Jur. Nat. l. 53. (2) See Grut. B. 1. c. 1. f. 6. and c. 3. f. 6. and B. 2. c. 14. f. 7, 8. and B. 3. c. 19. f. 7. and c. 20. f. 7, &c.

and Trees that belong to private Persons are taken down, that the Enemy may not be sheltered by them, or the Besieg'd incommoded. Materials, private Men lay by for their own Use, may be taken and made use of in publick Fortifications. In general Scarcity, the Store-Houles and Granaries of private Subjects are set open. In the Extremities of State, Monies entrusted with the Government are seized. And private Men's Coffers are rifled when they are not kind or publick spirited enough, to offer their Money voluntary by way of Loan. As Xenophon says Cyrus did (a). Perhaps what Cæsar did of this kind, when he came to Rome after the Defeat of Pompey, is not to be justified, though he be suppos'd a Lawful Prince. For as Dio relates it; 'He pretended to borrow the publick Money, when he found there 'was no other way of getting it, but continued 'to threaten Force, and to demand it as his 'due; and yet was resolv'd never to pay it 'back (b). So again, if there be no other way to oblige a common Enemy to retreat, our own Country is to be laid waste, and all Things which might be Serviceable, to be carried away, or left unfit for Use (c). From all which it appears, that Transcendental Propriety never takes place, but in the Extremities and Necessities of the Common-wealth. Tho' Bæcler in his Comment upon Grotius, l. i. c. i. f. 6. observes, 'That the Necessity here meant hath 'its different Degrees, and that it is not only 'at the last Extremity, this Power may be made 'use of. But neither, on the other hand, is this Power to be extended too far; but should be reduced to Equity, as nigh as it is possible. And a famous Example of this we have in Livy, l. 31. c. 13. From hence it may also be further infer'd, that the Prince himself cannot release a Subject from the Force of this transcendental Propriety. Because the publick Extremities of the Common-wealth must always be suppos'd to be unanswerable Exceptions to all sorts of Privileges. For it is a Contradiction to pretend to be a Subject, and yet to insist upon a Right, utterly inconsistent with common Safety. But however, without Dispute, They that have lost or sacrificed their Fortunes to the publick Safety in such Extremities, ought to have a Restitution or Satisfaction made them, as far as it is possible by the whole Common-wealth (1). Some indeed will make this Exception, when tho' the Damage sustain'd be unavoidable, it might yet have been easily foreseen and prevented. For the purpose, when Houses built in the Suburbs, are pull'd down in time of War. For the Proprietors of these can demand no Compensation for their Losses; because they knew before that they could not build in those Places upon other Terms. And consequently, by building there notwithstanding, did in a manner tacitely consent to them. But much less can any Compensation be allowed, where the Necessity was universal; and every Subject suffer'd equal Loss. For the Publick is concern'd no further than to take Care that the Subjects be not injured by any ill Conduct in Government, but never oblig'd it self to bear all the Damages they might at any time sustain (d).

VIII. As to the publick Goods which belong to the Common-wealth it self, as such, it is to be observ'd, that in some Kingdoms they are divided into two Parts, one of which is intended for the Maintenance of the Prince, and the other to defray publick Expences for the Preservation of the State (2). (So Dionysius Halicarnassens makes a Distinction between the Δημοσία κτήσις, or the publick Possessions, and the Τῶν αὐτῶ βασιλέων κτήσις, and the Patrimony of the Prince (e). And in China, One part in Nine of the Land belongs to the Emperor (f). By that Part intended to maintain the Prince, I mean, That the Prince in some States hath certain Goods assign'd him out of the Publick, the Income of which is to maintain the Expences of his Palace. And of all these the Prince hath the full Profits, and may dispose of what he hath coming in from them, as he pleases; and what he lays up out of his Income, where the Laws of the Kingdom do not provide otherwise, makes an Accession to his own private Patrimony (g). The Emperor Pertinax (h), upon this View refused to have his Name put upon any of the Imperial Possessions, because, as he said, They were not the Emperor's Propriety, but the common publick Estate of every Roman. In Peru, under the Empire of the Yuca's, the Lands were divided into Three Parts; One part belong'd to the Emperor, Another to their God the Sun, the Third to the Common-wealth; and therefore the Subjects paid no Taxes out of theirs (i). But Secondly, The Goods which are to defray the Expences for the Conservation of the State, are only barely entrusted to the Care and good Husbandry of the Prince, who should always have especial Regard for the publick Good (3), and express the same Caution and Conscience as a Guardian ought to have for the Estate of his Pupil. From whence it may be easily infer'd, on which side the Right lies, to what a Prince gets or lays up in the time of his Reign, on His or on the Common-wealth's. For if a Prince grows Rich out of that Branch of the Publick Revenues which belongs to the

(a) Xenoph. Cyropæd. l. 8. (b) Dio Cassius, l. 42. (c) Critolaus, when the Romans were making War upon him, agreed with the Achaian Magistrates, that all Suits for Debts should be put off, and no Man should be oblig'd to make any Payment till the War was at an end. Vid. Polyb. Excerpt. Leg. 144. c. 3. V. l. 18. t. 3. l. 8. D. de leg. Commisoria. Curtius, l. 3. c. 4. See Sueton. Ch. 42. of Jul. Cæs. the Law made by Cæsar about the Payment of Debts.
 (1) See Grot. B. 3. c. 20. f. 7. (d) Jo. Christoph. Becmannus, Medir. Polit. Diff. 21. f. 8.
 (2) See Grot. B. 2. c. 6. f. 11. (e) Dion. Halicarn. l. 3. Antiq. Roman. (f) Martin. Hist. Sin. l. 4. c. 24.
 (g) Senec. de Benef. l. 7. c. 6. Every thing belongs to Cæsar, but to his Exchequer nothing but his own private Fortune; every thing is at his Command, but his Patrimony only is his own by Propriety. (h) Herodian. l. 2. c. 15.
 (i) Vid. Garcilass. de la Vega Comm. Roy. l. 5. c. 14. (3) See the last Section of this Chapter.

Common-wealth; or by imposing Taxes upon his Subjects; or by the Expence of their Blood; or by employing them in any of those Services which by common Obligations they owe the Common-wealth; it is clear, that his Wealth must accrue to the Publick, and not to his own private Estate. But suppose, as it may also happen, that a Prince may make all necessary Preparation for a War, and carry it on afterwards, without any Assistance of the publick Treasure, upon the Strength of his own private Riches and Estate, without engaging the Common-wealth, either in the Expence or Hazard of it, or it may be perhaps, barely from the Profits and Revenue of his Crown-lands. In such a War 'tis also clear, that whatever Acquisitions a Prince makes will be absolutely his own Right, and that he may if he please exclude the Common-wealth. For I have an undeniable Right to the Profits of what I have the Use and Produce of, and therefore may dispose of them as I think fit (a).

IX. I shall in the next place enquire, what lawful Power any Prince may have to alienate the whole or any part of his Kingdom. By which I do not mean a Patrimonial Kingdom, but a Kingdom receiv'd by free Consent of the People. Grotius is very large upon this Question (b). The Issue of the Matter in Dispute in short is this; That a Prince hath no manner of Power to transfer or give away his Kingdom by his own single Authority; And that his Subjects are not at all obliged by such an Act if made; and that the Consent of the People is entirely as necessary as that of a Prince. For as the People cannot justly take the Crown from their Prince, so neither can He, without their Consent, set it upon whose Head he pleaseth. But in the Alienation of a Part of a Kingdom, besides the Prince's Consent, there is required not only the Consent of the People, that are to continue under their old Prince and Government, but the Consent of that Part too especially which is to be alienated. The Reason is, Because they that at first erected the Common-wealth, and they that came voluntary into it afterwards, bound themselves by mutual Compact, to be govern'd by one and the same Government, as long as they thought good to continue in the Dominions of the same Common-wealth. And therefore, as every particular Subject acquired a Right by Vertue of that Compact, not to be violently ejected out of the Common-wealth, nor to be given up to any Foreign Power, except by way of Punishment; So the whole Body of the Subjects from the same Compact, acquires a Right to it self over the particular Subjects, by which no Subject can put himself under a Foreign Government or Power, or disclaim and renounce the Authority of his own, as long as he is allowed to live in any of the Dominions belonging to it. And therefore, since all Common-wealths (as all Moral Bodies) are form'd and grow by a

Consent of the Parts, we must look back upon the Original Design, and Intentions of the Primitive Founders of them, when we enquire what Power the whole Body hath over the Parts in such a Case as this. And it cannot be presumed, that their Intentions were, that the Body should have a Right to cut off its own Members when it pleas'd, and deliver them up to another's Power and Command. And for this Reason the People of Guienne justly refused to be separated from the Kingdom of England, notwithstanding the Grant and Donation of Richard the II. (c). But indeed there is one Exception against what was said before, That a Part ought not to disown or separate from the Body, while it continues within the same Dominions, and that is this; Except it be in the last Extremities, and that it be impossible for it to preserve it self otherwise, than by submitting to the Enemies Power and Authority. For in all Agreements of this Nature, the utmost Necessity seems of Course to be excepted; which, it is always allowed, gives a Man full Liberty to secure himself all the ways he can possibly. And therefore 'tis no more than what must be expected, and is far enough from being Criminal, That a Town after it hath made the best Resistance it could against an Enemy, should at last chuse rather to surrender, than suffer it self to be carried by Storm, and be put to the Sword. For since every Man that submits himself voluntary to Civil Government, had before from Nature, a Right to defend himself all the ways he could, and therefore enters into the Common-wealth for the better Attainment and Security of that Right: When the Common-wealth can no longer afford Protection or Defence to the Subjects, they must be supposed to be releas'd from the Ties they were under before, and to be at Liberty to consult their own Safety as they think best. And without Dispute, the Common-wealth it self can have no other Right over the Members of it, than what was granted and left by them that at first erected it. And therefore as the Common-wealth engageth to protect and defend every one of its Members; unless hindred or prevented by unavoidable Necessity; So whenever it struggles under such a Necessity, it is supposed, that no Man is forbid to provide for his own Security as well as he can. In the Natural Body indeed, it is Lawful to cut off any particular Member to preserve the whole, because every Member lives entirely by the Life of the Body and cannot live otherwise; but in a Moral or Politick Body, 'tis possible the Members may exist and live in a separate divided State; and therefore the Body Moral hath not the same Right over his Members as the Natural. But if a Prince should be Necessitated by Extremity of his Affairs, to compound for a Peace with an over-powerful Enemy, by giving him a certain Country in his Dominions, and that Country should disown and deny the Grant; in this

(a) V. Grot. l. 1. c. 3. f. 12.
Annotations) & l. 3. c. 20. f. 5, &c.

(b) L. 1. c. 4. f. 10. & l. 2. c. 6. f. 3. (Upon both which Places see Bacler's
(c) Froissard. l. 4. Polyd. Virgil. Hist. Angl. l. 20.

Case, it is my Opinion, that the Prince may draw his Forces out of their Towns and Garrisons, and leave them naked, not hindering the Conqueror from taking Possession of them. But then that he hath no Power to oblige or force them to surrender themselves, or to submit to the Conqueror's Authority. Neither can I think, that the Country is under any Obligations, if they have Strength enough in it, not to make Resistance against such a Conqueror, or afterwards if they can, not to erect themselves into a distinct Common-wealth. For thus when the Emperor Jovian was obliged by Treaty to give up the City Nisibis to the Persians, the Citizens desired they might have leave to defend Themselves (a). By such Agreements therefore, the Prince indeed and People lose their Right to such a Country; but the Conqueror, if they consent to receive him and swear Allegiance to him, acquires a lawful Authority and Power over them. As to that Opinion some are fond of, either with regard to all Kingdoms, or perhaps only to some particulars, That whatever Goods are appropriated to, or as they say, incorporated in the Crown, can never be any way alienated, and that neither the longest Course of Years, or another's quiet and peaceable Possession can secure them from an Act of Resumption, at any time after, it is without Dispute, False and Groundless. And much more Absurd and Ridiculous is it to assert, that any Kingdom may have Privilege to waste and ruine others, and yet that what it hath once seized, can never afterwards be recover'd from it.

X. From what hath been said it is further evident, That a Prince cannot without his People's Consent (1), make his Kingdom Fendatory to another, or hold it upon Condition of (b) Forfeiture whenever the Feudal Oath is violated, or that when his Family is extinct it shall devolve to the Prince it is held from. For if the Conditions be such as these, the making the Kingdom Fendatory is indeed a Conditional Alienation. And again on the other hand, the People may recal any Act of Homage which the Prince hath remitted without their Consent. And it further follows, that a Prince cannot mortgage any part of his Dominions, so that the Government of it, and Natural Possession, shall be for so long resign'd to the Creditor, without the Consent of his People, and the Part engag'd by the Mortgage; and much less if there be any Conditions of (c) Forfeiture annex'd. The Reason of which is, Not only because a final Alienation is generally the Consequence of Mortgaging; but besides, because the People when they made Choice of their Prince, chose to be govern'd by him, and not by any other. And because it may justly be presumed, that they that are grown and are strictly united into one People, can never be willing to be broken and canton'd into Parts and Divisions.

XI. And it is also further evident, That the Prince hath no Power, without Consent of his People, to alienate those Goods, the Revenues of which are design'd, either to support the publick Expences, or to maintain the necessary Greatness and Dignity of his Court. For in those Goods the Prince is allow'd only the Use and Produce of them, which can never amount to a Right of Alienation (2). And tho' perhaps he may think himself well enough provided for, for his own Life, yet it should be considered that there are to be other Princes to succeed him, who are all to be maintain'd agreeably to the Dignity of Crown'd Heads. But however, we are to distinguish carefully between the Goods themselves or the publick Patrimony, and the Profits or Produce of them. The first the Prince hath no Power to alienate, the other he hath free Liberty to dispose of, as he pleaseth. Thus where the Right * of what the Sea or Rivers cast up and join to the Land, is the Publick Patrimony, or belongs to the Crown, the Prince cannot make away, or transfer that Right, to any one else; but I can see nothing that can oblige him, not to dispose of what is thrown up by the Tide or the Stream, as he thinks fit; because this is the Produce of that Right. So the Right of Confiscation may be a Publick Patrimonial Settlement, and the Confiscated Goods be the Produce of that Settlement. The First is appropriated to the Common-wealth, the Second belongs to the Prince. But after all, a Prince that hath Power when Reasons of State require it, to levy new Subsidies upon the Subject as he pleaseth, may when the Necessities of the Common-wealth command, Mortgage any part of the Publick Patrimony. For as the People are obliged to pay the Subsidies, such a Prince lays upon them, upon such Reasons of State: So are they obliged to redeem what was Mortgaged upon such Reasons. Since the thing is the same, whether They pay the Money beforehand, to prevent the necessity of the Mortgage or whether it be levied upon them afterwards to redeem it. And here it is manifest, that every Particular Subject is not the Debtor of that Money, tho' every one be obliged to contribute his Share to discharge it (d) (3). So also, Where the Prince lays out Money for the Use of the Publick out of his own Private Estate, the Common-wealth must be supposed to Mortgage to him the Publick Patrimony upon that Account, till such time as the Debts contracted upon it are clear'd by the People. But all this will hold only upon Supposition, that there be no Fundamental Law, or Capitulation, which provideth otherwise, and either enlargeth or confineth the Rights of the Prince or People.

(a) Ammian. Marcellinus, l. 25. c. 12. Zosimus, l. 3. (1) See Grot. B. 2. c. 6. f. 9. (b) Sub onere Commissi ex Felonia.
 (c) Lex Comm. soria. (2) Vid. Grot. ubi supra, l. 11, 12, 13. * Alluvionum Jus. (d) Vid. Senec. de Beneficiis, L. 6. c. 20. (3) See Grotius, B. 3. c. 2. f. 1.

C H A P. VI.

Of the Right of War.

SINCE every particular Man in a Liberty of Nature hath the same Natural Right, States and Commonwealths have, to defend himself against unjust Violence, and to defend and assert his Rights by Force, when Others injure him in, or endeavour to deprive him of them: it will, I think, be a proper Method to enquire, First, What may be supposed Common to the Wars of particular Men, and Commonwealths. And then Secondly, What hath either by Custom of Nations, or by Nature, been appropriated to the Latter.

II. First therefore, 'tis certain that nothing is more Consonant to the Law of Nature, than that no Man should offer Unjust Violence or Injury to Another; and on the other Hand, than that all Men should show Kindness and Humanity to one another, and be particularly exact in the Observation of Agreements and Compacts. And when Men duely attend to, and obey these Laws, they may be said to enjoy Peace; which is a State most agreeable to Human Nature, which tends most to promote its Happiness and Security, and indeed which the Law of Nature was given to Men principally to Establish and Preserve (a). Nay further, Peace is a State proper to Human Nature, as such; since it ariseth from a Principle peculiar to Mankind above the Brutes; whereas War flows from Principles common to Both. Brutes indeed by Instinct of Nature will endeavour to Defend and Preserve themselves as well as they can (1). But Man alone understands the Nature and Constitution of Peace. For it is he only, that can voluntarily undertake or forbear the Performance of any Action which may bring Good or Harm upon another Person, upon a Consideration of certain Obligations on one side, and certain Rights on another. All which depends entirely upon the Use and Exercise of Reason. Beasts indeed, perform the Service their Masters are pleas'd to use them in. But the Reason of that Obedience goes no higher than the Fear of Blows, or the Temptation of Good Keeping; for the Sense of any Obligation, without doubt, lies much out of their Reach. We find too, that Beasts are seldom inclin'd to hurt Men, or one another; but this must be supposed either the Effect of Fear and Weakness, or because they find nothing to Provoke their Appetite. Again, there are others of them that seem to be Fond of, and to Care for and Assist one another. But it is not to be supposed, that they do so, because they are sensible they are obliged to it (b). But notwithstanding, it is very lawful, and may sometimes be necessary for Man himself to make War; for Example, when he finds that another Person hath maliciously design'd to do him Harm, or denies him his Right. For in such Cases, the Care he is supposed to have of his own Safety, giveth him Power to Defend himself, and Assert his Right, what ways he thinks best, tho' it be with the hurt of the injurious Person; or to recover his Right by force, when he cannot obtain it by easier means (c). For Nature hath not only given Man a quick Sense of Injuries, that he might not suffer himself to be Oppress'd and Insulted; but she hath also armed him with Strength and Agility of Body, that he should not be forced tamely to submit. But then, when Nature permits War, Peace is the end she intends should be secured by it. For Peace is the Price and Reward of War. And when Men are forced to fight, it is not because they are to make War perpetually, but that they may enjoy a lasting Peace and Security for the Future (d). But besides, tho' the Person that doth Harm, doth immediately, as far as he is concern'd, give a Man Power to make War upon him, yet it ought to be consider'd, what Good

(a) Vid. Polyb. l. 12. c. 14.

(1) Vid. Laetan. Institut. Divin. L. 5. c. 17.

(b) To this purpose is that Passage of Quintilian, Declam. 9. p. 128, 129. Ed. Lugd. Bat. Nature seems to have infused into Man, more than into other Creatures, a certain Sociableness of Temper and Constitution, which hath taught us to think our selves Happy in one another's Company and Conversation, to unite into Nations, and erect Cities and Commonwealths; And among all the Impressions she hath made upon our Souls, there is none that can be of greater Use to us, than that of Kindness and Good-Will. For what can we imagine Happier than Mankind, if all the World could be perswaded to be Friends? We should have no Wars, Seditions, Robberies, Quarrels and Disputes, or any of those Evils which we our selves add to those of Fortune. It hath pleas'd Heaven indeed, that it should be otherwise, but however the World hath always been agreed, that Sincerity, Integrity, and Gratitude, ought to be the great Principles in the Composition of every Brave and Noble Spirit.

(c) Distys Cretensis, l. 2. c. 21. p. 41. Ed. Amst. Max. Tyrius, Dissert. 14. p. 138. Ed. Lugd. Bat. A good Man never begins a War but when he is forced to it, but a bad Man makes it his Choice. V. Becker in Grot. l. 1. c. 3. f. 1.

(d) Aristot. ad Nicom. l. 10. c. 7. We make War that we may live in Peace. There is no Body that desires, or makes Preparations for War, purely for the sake of the War it self. For a Man must be of an Inhuman Temper, that will make Enemies of his Friends, barely for the Satisfaction of the Quarrel. Tacit. Hist. l. 4. c. 76. There is no Body so forward in taking Arms, that had not rather obtain that peaceably, which he trusts to the Decision of a War. And therefore it is a very ill Character of some, which Silius Italicus describes, l. 3. v. 330, 331.

Nec vitam sine Marte pati: quippe omnis in Armis, Lucis causæ sita est, & Annatum vivere pati,

They think Life pleasant when in Arms employ'd, or Evil may probably be brought upon himself or others that did him no Injury by it. For Injuries, which do not entirely rob a Man of Quiet and Safety, ought not to provoke him to revenge them with War; when either the Inconveniencies he may bring upon himself, and those that belong to him by it, are like to be greater than the Advantages he can propose; or when others he at present is at Peace with, must by his War suffer such Evils as by the Laws of Humanity, on a quiet Submission to the Injuries offer'd, he ought to Defend them from. And therefore, That Man is justly to be commended, that will not Revenge an Injury, when he sees that a War will, in all Probability, produce greater Evils than Good.
But dull and worthless if in Peace enjoy'd.

III. The Causes of Just War may be reduced to these Three Heads. First, to Defend our Selves and Properties against Others that design to do us Harm, either by Assaulting our Persons, or Taking away or Ruining our Estates. Secondly, to Assert our Rights, when others who are Justly Obliged, refuse to Pay them to us. And Lastly, to Recover Satisfaction for Damages we have Injuriously Sustained, and to Force the Person that did the Injury, to give Caution for his Good Behaviour for the Future (1). And hence ariseth the Division of Just Wars into Offensive and Defensive. The Latter of which, I take to be those sorts of Wars, in which Men endeavour to defend and keep what is their own. The Former are, when Men Extort their Rights that are denied by Force, Attempt to Recover what hath been Unjustly Taken from them, and Require Caution for the Future. Sometimes indeed, the Party that first began the War, may have the Credit of being on the Defensive. For Instance, suppose he be often Alarm'd and Harass'd with sudden Incurfions upon him, the Enemy retiring always when he appears to oppose him; or suppose a Man be assured that his Enemy hath form'd Designs against him, and so disables him for the Attempt, while he is making his Preparation (a).

IV. But in General, the Causes (2) of every War, and especially of the Offensive, ought to be Evident, and without mixture of Doubt and Uncertainty (3). For it is very usual in Cases of this Nature, for Doubts to arise; either perhaps out of Ignorance of Matter of Fact, when it is not absolutely certain, whether it was done or not, or with what Intention it was done; or else out of a negligent, slight Comparison between Strict Justice and the Laws of Love and Charity; or, it may be, from a mistaken Computation of the proportion of the Utilities, which it is probable, will be Effects of undertaking or forbearing the War. In these Cases therefore, as no uncertain Pretensions (4) ought to be made use of; so neither should Men immediately seek Redress by Arms, but sincerely endeavour, and that these Three ways especially, to Compose the Differences, before they break out into a War. First, by Conference between the Parties, or their Agents (5). Secondly, by Appeal to Arbiters (6). Or in the Last Place by Lot (7) (b). But how evident soever the Causes of War may be, a Wise Man before he draws his Sword, ought to consider what Grotius says, l. 2. c. 24. And to think further, that it is great Folly in particular Men, as well as Common-wealths, not to accept of Accommodation, or hear of Reconcilement, while things stand whole on both Sides; But when they have sufficiently Punished and Mortified one another, then quietly to give over, without giving any Body the Trouble of parting them (c).

V. The Unjust Causes of War are recounted by Grotius, l. 2. c. 22. f. 5, &c. Some of them are manifestly Unlawful. Others of them have some Colour to be thought Lawful, tho' it be but weak and faint. Under the first Rank is to be placed Avarice and all extravagant Desire of encreasing Wealth, as also Ambition, and the Hopes of enlarging Rule and Dominion, of growing Great, and purchasing a false Fame and Glory, by the Oppression of Others. Avarice is a Cause of War usually conceal'd and dissembled with great Care, because it supposes a base and fordid Spirit. But Ambition is generally favour'd in the World, under the Name of Gallantry and Fortitude. And it is commonly thought Greatness and Bravery of Mind, to grasp after, and fight for what belongs to other Men. But yet Princes as Phisiscus told Alexander (8), Tho' they are never so Ambitious of Glory, should not think it any, to be remember'd, as Famines and Pestilences are, as the Plagues of Mankind; but as the greatest Blessings, as Peace and Happiness. For tho' the Great GOD often makes use of War to Purge and Punish the World (d); yet when Princes make War without any other Design than that, it is the greatest Impiety. And yet the Jews thought that They were allow'd, when their Sanhedrim

(1) See Mr. Barbeyrac's 1st, 2d, and 3d, Notes upon this Section. (a) Vid Justin. l. 2. c. 3. n. 12.

(2) See Grot. B. 2. c. 1. f. 1. and c. 22. f. 2. and Mr. Barbeyrac's First Note upon this Section.

(3) See above, in B. 1. c. 3. f. 7, 8. and Grot. B. 2. c. 23. f. 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, and 16. (4) See Grot. B. 2. c. 24.

(5) See above, in B. 5. c. 13. f. 3. (6) See the same Book and Chapter, f. 4, &c. (7) See the same Book, c. 9. f. 2, 3. (b) Valerius Flaccus, l. 5. v. 663, &c.

An nullas præferre preces nec fœdera Regis
Ulla sequi? cæca sed cuncta impellere Pugna Debuimus? sic Thraces agunt.

Never to peaceful Overture to yield,
Or Sacred League, but in the bloody Field
Always in Arms to breath relentless War,
None but the wildest Savages will dare.

(c) Isocrates Orat. ad Philip. p. 154. Ed. Min. Paris.

(d) As in Euripides, Hællena, v. 38, &c. Jupiter is said to have engaged the Greeks and Phrygians in a Quarrel.

To ease the Earth of her too numerous Sons.

declared War, tho' without any other Reason, than barely for the Greatness and Glory of their Nation, to invade their Neighbours, and if they could, make an absolute Conquest of them (a). Under the Latter Class may be Rank'd Fears, which arise from the Strength and Power of Neighbours; and when Men think, as the Poet says, They don't want Will to do what they have Power (b). But this single Suspicion is not sufficient to make a Cause of War Just, unless Men have very good Moral Certainty, that They have form'd Designs against Them. For an uncertain Jealousie of Danger, may be reason enough to persuade a Man to be Circumspect, and Fortify himself as well as he can, but can never give him a Right to strike the first Blow, tho' it be only with Intent that the other should give him Real Caution, as they call it, that he will attempt nothing against him (c). For as long as my Neighbour doth me no Injury, and I do not apparently take him in any Preparation for such a Design, (for sometimes an intended Injury, and but begun, may as justly be punish'd with War, as an Injury that is finished) I ought to presume, he will always continue in the same Mind. But especially, if I have his Word and Faith to assure me of his Sincerity. And it would be extremely Unjust in me to force him to give me Real Caution. Because thus he must be in a more suspected Condition than my self, being forced himself to rely upon my Faith alone. Supposing indeed, that there be Just Cause of War, the Growth and Power of Neighbours may very well deserve immediate Consideration and Regard, in Debates about it. For Experience hath often proved it true, that Men's Desires of being Great, encrease in Proportion to their Strength and Power (d). 'And 'it is Natural for Men to be suspicious, and 'afraid of being oppress'd, whenever they apprehend that there is an Over-Balance of Power in their Neighbours; for it is easie to imagine, that such as have too great a share of Strength, will find Reasons when they please to make Use of it, upon them that are Weaker, tho' they do nothing to deserve it. But now as for Utility, to make that a Cause of War, or to pretend the same Right from thence to what belongeth to Others, as Necessity may give, is Unpardonably Impudent. Tho' it is no more than what the Athenians, in Thucy- dides (1), said for themselves, That 'no Body 'is so much a Friend to Justice, as to neglect 'an Opportunity of possessing himself of what 'he can get by Force, barely because it is Un-just. Especially, since nothing can be more opposite to the Publick Interest of Mankind, than to admit the Introduction of such a Right, which will give a Man leave to take away any Thing by Force from another Person, which he thinks will be an Advantage to himself. For it must be expected that other Persons will use him with the same Liberty, he takes with them. And as to other Pretences for War, which Grotius mentions in the same Place, they may be answer'd the same way. My Lord Bacon in his Advancement of Learning, gives this for a Sufficient Reason for making War upon the Americans (e), which I must confess, I cannot agree with him in: 'That they were 'to be look'd upon as People proscribed by 'the Law of Nature, inasmuch as they had a 'Barbarous Custom of Sacrificing Men, and 'feeding upon Man's Flesh. For it ought to be distinctly considered, Whether Christian Princes have sufficient Licence given them to Invade those Indians, as People proscribed by Nature, only because they made Man's Flesh their common Food? Or because, they eat the Bodies of Persons of their own Religion; or because, they devoured Strangers and Foreigners? And then again it must be asked, Whether those Strangers they are said to Kill and Eat, come as Enemies and Robbers; Or as Innocent Guests and Travellers; Or as forc'd by Strefs of Weather? For this last Case only, not any of the Others, can give any Prince a Right of War against them; and this to Those Princes only, whose Subjects have been used with that Inhumanity by them (2).

VI. Tho' it be also Common to all Sorts of War, that the particular Nature, and, as I may call it, Genius of them is Violence and Terror; yet it is also Lawful to make use of Stratagem and Fraud, against any Enemy; provided there be no Treachery or Violation of Compact and Faith in it. For as Agefilas said, To Break the Faith of Articles and Leagues, is no less than a Contempt of G O D. But to Circumvent an Enemy, is well enough Consistent with Justice, and may be attended with as much Glory as Success (f). And the proper Sense of That Famed Saying of Cleandridas, implies no

(a) Seldenus, de J. N. & G. Sec. Hebr. l. 6. c. 3. & 12.

(b) Lucan. Pharsal. l. 3. v. 100, 101.

(c) Gellius, l. 7. c. 3. A Gladiator that prepares himself to fight, must accept of these Conditions of Combat, either to kill his Enemy, or to fall himself; but the Life of Man is not confin'd by any such hard and severe Laws, as to oblige us to do others Injuries First, that we might not Suffer them our Selves.

(d) V. Cumberland. de Leg. Nat. C. 2. f. 15. in fin. Bacon's Essays, c. 19. Seneca, Oedip. v. 542, 543. Stat ingens arbor atque umbra gravi sylvas minores urget.

A lofty Tree that stands, which with its Shade
Oppresseth all the Under-wood. —

Procop. Hist. Goth. l. 4. Herodes Orat. de Repub. Neighbouring Nations are never concern'd at the Mischiefs which befall one another from their own Domestick Broils and Quarrels; the weaker have no reason, because thus they are secure from being enslaved, they that are equal in Strength, think of gaining a Superiority by it, and the strongest of purchasing an easier Conquest. Polyb. l. 1. c. 83. A Man should never trust another with so much Power, as to place him out of his reach, when he is to contest with him about any Right that is confessedly his own. Appianus Alexand. Lybic. p. 32. Ed. Steph. Tho' it be a Friend, yet it is necessary to be cautious how he is made too Great (1) B. l. 1. c. 76. Ed. Oxon. (e) De Augmen. Scient. p. m. 348. (2) See Mr. Barbeyrac's Fifth Note upon this Section. (f) Plutarch. Apophtheg. Lacon. p. 209. B.

more; When the Lyon's Skin fails, It is necessary to put on the Fox's (a).

VII. But the better to understand how far it is Lawful to pursue Revenge, and use Violence against an Enemy, it will be necessary to observe; That there is a great deal of difference between the Liberties which a State of Hostility simply considered, gives a Man against his Enemy, and the Liberties which the Mercifulness and Gentleness of the Law of Nature would suffer him to take. The Law of Nature obligeth Men to a mutual Exercise of the Offices and Duties of Peace; and the Person that First violates them to my Prejudice, releases me, as far as lies in his Power, from paying any of those Offices to himself: And in Consequence, as long as he professes himself my Enemy, he gives me a Liberty to use Violence against him in infinitum, or as far as I please. Especially since, if I am not allow'd this Liberty, but necessarily obliged to confine my Violence within certain Bounds, and in no case to proceed to Extremities, the proper End of War, whether Offensive or Defensive, can never be obtain'd. And therefore every open publick War, seems to have something in it, like such a sort of Compact, Try Your Strength, and I will try Mine. And this holds, not only where my Enemy resolves to push Things to the Utmost against me, but also, tho' he designs to destroy me, without going to Extremities. For he hath no more Right to give me a slight Wound, than one that may prove Mortal. And therefore, it is not only so far Lawful for me to use Violence against my Enemy, till I have repulsed the Danger he threatned me, or till I have recovered, or forced from him what he either Unjustly Deprived me of, or Refused to Pay me; but I may further oblige him to give me Caution for the Future. Which if he suffers to be forced from him, he sufficiently discovers, that he still entertains Malicious Designs against me, and that one time or other, he may put them in Execution. Neither indeed is it always Unjust, to return a greater Evil for a less. It may, 'tis true, be objected, that Retribution ought to be made in due Proportion; but it must be said, that this is to be applied only to Courts of Judicature, where Punishments are inflicted always by Superiours. The Evils which are the Effects of a Right of War, are properly Punishments, because they are not inflicted by a Superiour as such, nor have any Tendency to Reform either the Injurious Person or any Others, but only to defend or regain the Security of a particular Man's Rights and Properties. In pursuance of which End, it is Lawful for me to make Use of such Means as I think will best prevail against a Person, who by his Injurious Treatment of me, hath put me out of all Capacity of doing him any Injury, till such time as it shall be agreed between us, to forbear Hostilities. But now the Law of Humanity would have Men consider, not only what an Enemy may suffer without Injury, but what it may be proper for a generous Conquerour to inflict. And therefore they ought to be particularly careful, that as far as is possible, and their own necessary Defence and future Security will permit, to proportion the Evils they inflict upon their Enemy, to the Measures and Moderation observed by Civil Courts in Punishing Criminals and Offenders. Upon this Moderation Grotius is very large, l. 3. c. 11, &c. ad 16. And the Three Rules he prescribes, l. 3. c. 1. § 2, 3, 4. will give us a clear View of the Liberties of Hostilitie (1). But besides the Uncertainties and Turns of Fortune, which may happen in War, ought to persuade Men to be very temperate in the Use of those Liberties, for fear an Alteration in Affairs should, as it were, make their own Weapons recoil, and return upon themselves the Usage they gave others (b). So when Colonna, in Gratianus (c), gave Orders that the Turks which were taken Prisoners in the Fight at Lepanto, should be well used at Rome, he turn'd to Mahomet and said aloud, Learn to be Merciful of Us, You that are generally so Cruel and Barbarous to Christian Captives; to which the Turk replied, the Cruelty Sir You Object, is, however, pardonable in Us, because We never knew before what it was to be Prisoners, and be left to the Mercy of an Enemy. The Turks understood well enough how to take Prisoners, but never thought of being made such. How they are to be dealt with, that supply an Enemy with what he wants, may be seen in the Author mentioned before, l. 3. c. 1. § 5. & c. 17.

VIII. I come now to consider what Difficulties and Enquiries relate to Wars raised by Common-wealths and Civil Governours. And here it is first to be observ'd, that the Right of War, which always attends all Men in the State of Nature, is taken away from private Persons in Common-wealths; and that therefore in Civil States, Subjects are not to punish such as injure them with their own Swords, and as they please; nor endeavour to recover their Rights, when denied them, by their own Force; but they must apply themselves to the Magistrates in such Cases, whose Duty it is to take Care that their Wrongs be redress'd, Satisfaction be made for Damages sustain'd, Caution be given (a) Cleandrid. in Polyen. Strateg. l. 2. c. 10. n. 5. Vid. Xenophon. Cyropæd. l. 1. & Grot. l. 3. c. 1. f. 6. add. supr. l. 4. c. 1. f. 19. (1) See Mr. Barbeyrac's 1st and 2d Notes upon this Section. (b) Vid. Diad. Sicul. l. 10. c. 47. Virg. Æneid. 10. v. 533.

— Belli commercia Turnus
Sustulit illa prior, jam tum Pallante perempto.

(c) Gratianus de Bello Cyprio. l. 5.

for the Future, and that every Man be maintain'd in his own Just Rights (a). For tho' at some Times, and in some Cases, private Subjects may be allowed Liberty to Defend themselves with their own Strength; yet such a Liberty is by no means to be called a Right of War. For a Right to make War, implies Power to begin it at my own Discretion, to Continue it as long as I please, and to put an End to it by Compact with the Enemy. But Subjects are never to be permitted to Defend themselves by their own Force, except in Dangers unavoidable (1), and then no longer, than till they have overcome them. And as no private Subject hath a Right of War; so neither is it necessary that Peace should be made by any Compact of the Subjects, when the Authority of the Sovereign hath sufficiently settled it before. Nay, tho' private Subjects be perfectly Reconciled to One Another, yet when all is over, the Magistrate may, if he pleaseth, punish the Injury, which first gave occasion to the Quarrel. But, it may indeed sometimes happen, that any private Subject may assume the same Right of Defence, which he would have had in a State of Nature; for Instance, if he happen'd to come into any place which belongs to no Common-wealth, but continues in its primitive Liberty of Nature. But then in this Case it is to be considered, whether the Person be assaulted by his Fellow-Subject or by a Stranger. For if we suppose by the First, he is allow'd the use of his own Force to resist only the present Danger. But the further Punishment of the Injury must be refer'd to their common Sovereign; except it appears that the Person who makes the Assault, intends to return no more into his own Country, and hath left nothing behind him that can make Satisfaction for the Injury. But if a Man be assaulted in any such Place by a Foreigner, he hath Liberty, if he can prevail against him, to bring him to the last Extremities. And he may also enter an Action against him in the Common-wealth he is a Subject of, and there demand Satisfaction and Punishment, and make use of the Interposition of his own Common-wealth. And then if Justice be denied him, his own Common-wealth hath Right to demand Satisfaction for him in a way of War. And therefore if a Man be set upon in the open Seas, he need not give himself the Trouble to use all his Force; but only just so much as will resist present Danger, because when his Enemy comes back to his own Country, he may enter an Action against him there. But if a Man be assaulted by a Subject used to despise and defie the Authority of the Magistrate, or the Magistrate himself openly refuse to do Justice, he must Right and Defend himself as he can, when ever he goes out of the Dominions of his own Common-wealth. But if the Magistrate should excuse himself, by pleading the Iniquity of the Times, or the bad State of the Common-wealth, and desireth either that the Prosecution of the Cause should be deferr'd to some other time, or that the neglect of Justice should be thought pardonable in the present unhappiness of the Common-wealth; every Sensible and Good Man ought to acquiesce in, and be satisfied with the Answer.

IX. War is commonly Distinguished into Solemn, and Less Solemn (2). In the first, it is necessary the War should Commence and be directed by the Supreme Authority, on both sides, and that it should be Duly Proclaim'd (3). The Less Solemn Wars are those that either are not publickly Declared, or else that are levied by, or against private Subjects. The first looks like an Incurfion or Depredation of Robbers. The second supposes that one side or other is in Rebellion, or at least in such a way of Life, as can at no time make the War Just. And thus Civil Wars may happen to be a Species of the Less Solemn, when the Common-wealth is so divided, that it doth not appear on which side the Sovereign is engaged. And here it is observable with regard to Solemn Wars, that Authors usually call two distinct People their Generals and Governours concern'd in them Just Enemies, in opposition to Robbers and Pyrates (b). So Cicero says (c), 'A just Enemy is One that hath a Common-wealth, Courts of Justice, and publick Treasure under his Command. And besides also, the Consent and Agreement of his People, and Power, when occasion offers it self, to make Peace, or enter into League. Tho' a Common-wealth is not therefore to be look'd upon as only a confluence of Robbers, when it hath been publickly guilty of some Unjust Things. Neither on the other Hand, can a Company of Robbers assume to themselves the Honour of a Common-wealth, though perhaps there be some appearance of Justice among them (d).

X. And here, upon what Grotius asserts; l. 1. c. 3. s. 4. A Question is moved, Whether a Magistrate properly so called, as such, hath Power to make War? Which I think is to be denied. For since War is a matter of that Nature and Consequence, that it may involve the whole Common-wealth in Danger, to give the Magistrate, as such, Power to Declare, and Determine War by his Own Authority, would be the same Thing with giving him the Sovereign Power (e). It must be allowed indeed, that whatever Branch of publick Business the Sovereign entrusts with the Magistrate, he must be supposed to give him all the Power necessary to the due discharge of his Duty in it. And therefore it is a Maxim of the Roman

(a) Vid. L. 50. t. 17. l. 176. D. de reg. juris, & L. 4. t. 2. D. Quod metus causa gestum erit, l. 11, 12, 13. & L. 43. t. 24. l. 7. s. 3. D. quod vi aut clam. (1) See above, in B. 2. c. 5. s. 7, 8. (2) See Grot. B. 1. c. 3. s. 4.

(3) See Mr. Barbeyrac's First Note upon this Section. (b) Vid. L. 50. t. 16. l. 118. D. de verb. signif. L. 49. t. 15. l. 21. s. 1. & l. 24. D. de captivo, &c. (c) Cic. Philip. (d) Vid. Grot. l. 3. c. 3. s. 2.

(e) Vid. L. 48. t. 4. l. 3. D. ad L. Juliam Majest.

Law (1), 'That every Magistrate that hath Jurisdiction, as such, hath a mixt Authority; which mixt Authority is defin'd by a Moderate Power, to punish Obstinate Offenders, as far as is necessary to support his Jurisdiction, and a due Administration of Justice. But when a Magistrate who is entrusted with Jurisdiction, useth Force only to reduce a few Disobedient Subjects; it is not to be supposed that he is making War; for a coercive Power over Subjects is not a Right of War: War seeming to lie entirely between Equals, or at least those that pretend themselves to be such. But if the Number of the Malecontents, or disaffected Persons grow so incurable, as to make it to be fear'd, that an Attempt to Suppress them would endanger the Safety of the Common-wealth, and the common Officers of Justice are too weak to reduce them, the Magistrate ought to expect the Resolutions of his Sovereign to direct him in his Proceedings in the Matter. And therefore Grotius is under a mistake when he says, l. 1. c. 3. s. 4. 'That if we consider the Thing without Relation to the Civil Laws, every Magistrate as he ought to protect the People under his Charge, so if he be opposed by Force in the exercise of his Authority, he hath a Right to make War. For the Defence and Protection of the People, properly belongs to the Sovereign. And a Magistrate entrusted with Jurisdiction, is only so far to defend Them, as he is obliged to guard the Poor and Weak by Justice against the Oppressions of the Rich and Great. To which End there is no necessity he should have a Right of making War. By the Way it may be observed, that tho' the Slaughter of about Three Thousand Men, at the Command of Moses, upon the Idolatry of the Golden Calf, may with more Propriety be call'd a Punishment than a War; yet that the destruction of the Benjamites (a), looks more like a Rout in War than Punishment, tho' Erasmus is of a different Opinion (b). And here it will not be improper to add something in General, of the Power of Military Magistrates, or of Generals and Leaders, to whose Conduct the War is entrusted by their Sovereign. A General therefore sent to take the Field with an Unlimited Power, may use what Measures he thinks fit, either to Disquiet and Offend his Enemy, or Defend himself; but as he is not empowered to levy any New War; so neither when War is begun, can he make Peace without the Authority of his Sovereign. But Generals confined by Limited Commissions have, 'tis plain, no further Power than those give them. However so much Power every General, whether his Commission be Unlimited or not, may justly assume, to use what Method he thinks best, to Defend himself against the Enemy, when they have Advanced too far, to give him an Opportunity of making an Honourable Retreat. And in such a Case as this, only what Tully saith ought to be allow'd (c): 'That in Affairs of such unexpected and streightning Circumstances, a Man should not think of staying for the Instructions of the Senate, but be a Senate to himself, and do what he thinks will be best for the Advantage of the Common-wealth. But a Defence indeed, doth not consist only in a brave Resistance, or in repelling or avoiding the Enemy's Attacks; but also in making an Assault upon him, and returning the same Treatment back. And therefore for Example, an Admiral at Sea, who is by his Orders to be only on the Defensive, may yet notwithstanding such a Confinement, upon Provocation sufficient, break in upon the Enemies Fleet, and sink and burn as many of their Ships as he can; all that he is forbidden is to Challenge the Enemy First, when they don't think of Fighting. And so a General at Land, tho' his Instructions be not to Engage the Enemy, may yet if he be Attack'd in his Intrenchments, not only Repulse them when they would force his Camp, but make a Sally, and give them Battle; and if he be set upon in his March, and finds he cannot make a Safe and an Honourable Retreat, he may justly venture a Fight. And therefore a Governour of a Province or Town, especially if he hath any good Number of Souldiers under his Command, ought to make the best Resistance he can, when he is invaded by an Enemy, without expecting Instructions from his Sovereign. But he is not to carry the War into a Foreign Country, without Express Commission. An Inferiour Commander that is left in trust with a Body of Souldiers for the Defence of a Town, or Fort, is obliged to do the utmost he possibly can for its Security; and indeed, to hold out so long in Defence of it, till he sees the Place must inevitably be carried by Storm, and his Forces cut off. And therefore from what has been said, we may judge of the Action of Pinarius, mention'd in Livy, l. 24. c. 37. His Orders were to Defend the Castle of Enna; and to deliver up the Keys of it to Them of the Town, would have forfeited his Head; and therefore when he saw that both himself and Souldiers must necessarily have been left to the Mercy of the Enemy, and be put all to the Sword, unless he prevented it by suppressing the Insurrection that was forming in the Town against him; he did nothing beyond what the Powers he had would allow him, in putting the faithless Citizens to Death; except, perhaps, it was in carrying his Severity too far without Necessity, after he knew the Danger was over. Neither can it be said that Pinarius rais'd a New War (d). For the Publick War was at that time carried on in Sicily, against the Cartha-

(1) V. D. L. 2. t. 1. De Jurisdictione, l. 3. V. etiam L. 1. t. 21 De officio ejus cui mandata est Jurisdictione, l. 5. s. 1.
 (a) See Exod. XXXII. 27, &c and Judges, XIX. 20. (b) Erasms. Epist. l. 6. ep. 29. (c) Cic. Ep. ad Famil. l. 10. c. 16. (d) As Manlius made War upon the Gallo-Græci. See Liv. l. 38. c. 45, &c. and l. 41. c. 7. and Florus, l. 2. c. 11. ginius ginians and their Allies, with whom They of Enna endeavoured to join. But whether particularly when a War is at an End, the same Arms may be turn'd against them that assisted the Enemy with Succours and Supplies, is more than a General hath power to determine. But if a Governour of a Province, at a great distance from the Metropolis of the Empire, be empower'd to make War or Peace with his Neighbours; the Wars he undertakes must be look'd upon to be Solemn. Because he that gives another power to do a Thing, must be supposed to be the Author of what he doth, in Virtue of that Power. But if a Governour that hath no such Power, make War upon another, without Authority from his Sovereign, it is left to the Sovereign, whether he will own the Action of his Minister or not. If he owns it, the War must be look'd upon to be Solemn. And this Ratification doth as it were, reflect back an Authority upon the War, so that the whole Common-wealth is obliged by it. But if the Sovereign disown the Action of his Governour, the War must be look'd upon to be a sort of Robbery; and if the Governour be given up, or punish'd at home, and Satisfaction be made for the Damages sustain'd, the Common-wealth is not engaged in, or obliged by the War. And this was the reason why the Roman Ambassadour demanded of the Carthaginians, Whether Hannibal laid Siege to Saguntum, by his Own or by the Publick Authority (a)? To which the Carthaginians rightly Answered, 'That the Question First to be determined was, Whether the Siege of Saguntum was contrary to any Articles of League, 'between Them and the Romans? That before this was decided, the Romans had no Reason to enquire, whether a Subject of Carthage did any thing by his Own or Publick Authority (b).

XI. It may be further enquired, whether a Prefect or Governour, that hath no General, or Particular Commission to warrant him, can justly make War upon a Foreign State or Prince, only upon Presumption, or because he believes his Sovereign will approve his Action? Which in my Opinion must be denied (1). For it is not sufficient to know what it is probable his Sovereign would approve, if he were consulted in such a particular Posture of Affairs, but it should rather be considered, what it is probable he would desire should be done without his Advice, when the Matter will bear Time, and the Point is nice and difficult, if a Law were to be made upon it, or where he must determine universally of all such cases. And then no doubt it will appear that it would be provided, that no Minister should undertake any Action in which the Common-wealth is nearly concern'd: (such as a War is, and especially the Offensive, which is the proper Subject of the present Enquiry, and which will Generally well enough admit of Delays) without the Advice of his Sovereign. And therefore, though it should happen that the Sovereign should at the same time think a War with a certain Enemy necessary, yet to be sure he cannot be pleased to see his Minister go beyond the Bounds of his Duty. Thus Cambyfes put his Servants to Death that sav'd Craesus's Life, tho' at the same time he was well enough pleased that they had spared him (c).

XII. But now, as Persons that live in a Liberty of Nature cannot justly be punished with War, unless the Injuries they themselves do to others deserve it: So how it comes to pass, that in a Civil State, the Guilt of the Injuries, and the Cause that gives Birth to War, diffuse themselves from the Persons that were immediate Authors of them over the whole Common-wealth, will be matter of further enquiry. This therefore is certain, that no Community whether Civil, or Otherwise, is obliged by any Action of Particular Members, without some culpable Act or Omission of its own. For how severely soever the Common-wealth may threaten, the Subjects are still left to their Natural Liberty, to do otherwise if they please. So that the Common-wealth can no way be Responsible for the Actions of the particular Subjects (d). But among the several ways, the Governours of Common-wealths are involv'd in Wars, from the Injuries committed by their Subjects; these Two I think, will most deserve our Consideration, viz. (e) Sufferance, and Reception. As to the matter of Sufferance, it is manifest, that the Person who knoweth the Commission of a Crime, and hath Power to hinder it, without apparent Danger of greater Evil by doing it, and is obliged to do it, must be supposed to be guilty of the Crime himself. For it is necessary the Knowledge of the Fact should be attended with Power to hinder it; one of these separately, not being sufficient to communicate any Share in the Guilt (f). And the Governours of Common-wealths are presumed to know what their Subjects openly and frequently commit, and their Power to hinder it, is always supposed, unless the Want of it be manifestly proved. 'The guilt of a Crime before it hath been Judiciously tried, remains upon them that committed it; but after Sentence is passed upon it, they are the Criminals that neglect to put the Law in Execution (g).

(a) Livy, l. 21. c. 18.

(b) Vid. Xenophon. rer. Græc. l. 5. Where the Justice of the Action of Phœbidas in seizing Cadmea, is disputed.

(1) See Grot. B. 1. c. 3. f. 5. with Gronovius's Notes.

(c) Herodot. Thalia,

p. 112. Ed. H. Steph. Vid. Senec. de Irâ l. 1. c. 16. Concerning the Action of Piso, Pro-prætor of Sicily. Livy, l. 44 c. 10.

(d) Vid. Grot. l. 2. c. 21. f. 2. and the Examples he there produceth out of Livy, l. 29. c. 16. l. 35. c. 31. l. 45. c. 23. Valerius Maximus, l. 6. c. 6. f. 3, 5.

(e) Patientia &amp; Receptus.

(f) Vide L. 47. t. 6. l. 1.

f. 1. D. si Familia furtum fecerit.

(g) Lycurg. Orat. advers. Leocratem. Polyb. l. 4. c. 27. ab init. Gratianus, Caus. 1. &amp; 3. distinct. 86.

The case of Reception, and how far the Commonwealth gives Reason for War against it self, by receiving and defending Persons that have injured Others, may be seen at large in Grotius, l. 2. c. 21. § 3, 4, 5, 6.

XIII. The same Author also, l. 3. c. 2. gives us a full Account of the Nature of Reprisals, which are Violent Executions made upon the Persons or Goods of the Subjects of a Foreign Commonwealth, that refuseth to Administer Justice (1). In defence of the Equity of which, I further add, that as it is a Natural Consequence of the Combination of Men into Civil Bodies, that the Injuries which one Member suffers from a Foreigner, seem to affect the whole Commonwealth; so it doth not appear to be Unjust, that every particular Subject should be obliged to assist the Discharge of the publick Debts. Since whatever they pay upon that Account, must be refunded to them by the Commonwealth. But if it should be any Man's Misfortune to be a Loser by the Publick, he must look upon it to be one of those Inconveniencies, That are almost unavoidable in a Civil State; and consider that These are very tolerable Evils, in Comparison of Those, which he must have felt in a Wild Liberty of Nature.

XIV. It is manifest that Men often make War, not only upon their own Accounts, but also for others (2). But to answer for the Justice of it, it will be necessary, First, that the Party who is assisted, should have Just Reasons for War. And Secondly, that the Party that assists should be under some Particular Ties and Obligations to him that is principally concern'd in the War. Because otherwise it would be very Unjust to assist one Man against another; since as they are Men, they both equally deserve Favour (a). They therefore, whom we not only may, but are obliged to Defend, are First of All our own Subjects. And that not only because they are, as it were, a part of the Government, but because the End Men at First propos'd to themselves by giving up their Natural Liberty, and submitting voluntarily to a Civil State, was the enjoyment of such a Defence. So the Campanians thought that by yielding Themselves, and All that they had to the Romans, they laid a Necessity upon them to Arm in their Protection (b). Tho' in this Instance it may be observed, that since the Campanians had exasperated the Samnites, and raised an Unjust War against them before, the Romans could not justly resolve to Defend them, notwithstanding that they had yielded themselves to be their Subjects, till they had made Satisfaction for the Damages, and Defray'd the Expences of the War. But in Defence of any particular Subject, the Government can then only Justly make War, when it will be no great Inconvenience, or Disadvantage to the Whole, or the Majority of the other Subjects; because the Government is obliged to have a greater Concern for the Whole than for a Part; and the greater the Part is, the nearer it approaches to the Whole. The next to Subjects whom we are obliged to assist, are those Allies that have made this particular Condition and Article of League with us. But then all Allies are to give Place to our own Subjects, when both cannot be assisted; and that without any breach of the League. For no Commonwealth can be more obliged to a Foreign State, than to its own Subjects. And therefore in every Promise of Aid and Assistance, the Commonwealth makes, this Limitation is implied, As far as is consistent with the Obligations owing to the Subject. And therefore it is very Absurd to place any Confidence in a League, which it is not the Interest of our Ally to observe. But as we ought not to undertake any Rash or Unjust War, so neither can we be obliged by any League to assist an Ally, that engages only in such. 'Tis true this holds chiefly in Offensive Wars, but it may also bear sometimes in the Defensive. For if my Confederate is sensible, that he is much weaker than his Enemy, and that his own Forces, and All I can supply him with, will not make him a Match for him; and yet is obstinately bent to hazard himself, tho' it be to his Certain Ruine, when he may treat upon tolerably good Terms; I should be a Mad Man to join my self with him, in so extravagant and hopeless an Attempt. And thus far what Grotius saith (c) is very true, 'That we are not obliged to send Assistance, when there is no Hopes of Success; for Society is form'd for Good and not Evil. But then it is also to be consider'd that it would be to no purpose to make Leagues, if we were to run no hazard, or sustain no Losses in the Defence of an Ally. Next to our Allies are our Friends, or those we have join'd our selves to, by particular Ties of Kindness and Respect. To these, tho' we have not promised by exprefs Article of Treaty, to send a certain determinate Aid or Supply, yet the Nature of Friendship it self supposeth an Interchange, and Union of Faith, and that one Friend must be concern'd for the other's

(1) This Definition of Reprisals is taken out of our Author's Abridgment De Offic. Hominum, & Civis, L. 2. c. 16. f. 10. See Mr. Barbeyrac's Note upon this Section.

(a) Lucan, l. 4. v. 707, &c.

*Quis conferre duces meminit? Quis pendere causas?
Qua stetit inde favet; veluti fatalis arena
Muneribus, non ira vetus concurrere cogit Proditos, odere Pares.*

(b) Livy, l. 7. c. 31. Florus, l. 1. c. 7.

(c) Vide Grot. l. 2. c. 25. f. 4.

safety, as far as the stricter Obligations he is under will suffer him, and that his Concern ought to be much stronger for Him than that which is due from one Man to another, by the common Affinity and publick Relations of Mankind: Tho' sometimes those alone may be sufficient Motives to us to undertake the Defence of a Person manifestly injured and abused: Especially since it may easily be made our own Interest to do it; and since nothing can tend more to promote Publick good, than to punish those that take pleasure in disquieting and injuring Others. And therefore Solon upon this view when he was asked, how there might be Fewer Injuries committed in the World, answered, If they that were not injured, would be as much concerned as they that were (a). But then we are not to imagine that every Man, even they that live in a Liberty of Nature, hath a Right to correct and punish with War any Person that hath done Another an Injury, barely upon pretence, that Common Good requires, that such as oppresses the Innocent, ought not to escape Punishment, and that what toucheth one, ought to affect all. For otherwise, since the Party we suppose to be Unjustly invaded, is not deprived of the liberty of using Equal Force to repel his Enemy, whom he never injured; the Consequence then would be, that instead of One War, the World must suffer the Miseries of Two. Besides, it is also contrary to the Natural Equality of Mankind, for a Man to force himself upon the World for a Judge, and Decider of Controversies. Not to say what dangerous Abuses this Liberty might be perverted to, and that any Man might make War upon any Man upon such a Pretence. The wrong therefore Another Man suffers, is not reason sufficient to engage me in his Quarrel, unless he calls me particularly to his Assistance, so that Whatever I undertake to do, is not to be charg'd upon me, but upon the Person that desires my help. But whether it be lawful to take Arms in Defence of the Subjects of a Foreign Common-wealth, against the Invasions and Oppressions of their Sovereign, is a Question; for the Solution of which I refer you to the Opinion of Grotius, (1) the safest Answer that can be given to it seems to me to be this, that we cannot Lawfully undertake to defend the Subjects of a Foreign Common-wealth in any other Case, than when they Themselves may Lawfully take Arms to repress the insupportable Tyranny and Cruelties of their own Governours.

XV. Of the Declaration necessary to Solemn War, Grotius largely informs us, l. 3. c. 3.

XVI. The same Author, l. 3. c. 4, &c. gives us a long Account of many Nations that never set bounds to Themselves in any of those Liberties, Which as I said before, the Law of Nature allows against Enemies. But here it is to be observed; That tho' Generals usually give Laws to their Souldiers, prescribing how far they are to use Hostilities against the Enemy, and punish the violation of Them upon the Offenders; Yet this is not done because they suppose the Enemy is or may be injured; But because it is necessary that the General's Orders should be obey'd, and that Military Discipline should be strictly observ'd. So that tho' a Person, who in a Solemn War had behaved himself with greater Cruelty and Outrage than the Law of Nature will permit, should afterwards happen to be indicted or accused for it in any third Common-wealth Unconcern'd in the War; it would be a very Uncommon way of Proceeding, should He be sentenced for a Ruffian or Murderer, and be used as such. Because as it does not belong to the People of one Nation to enquire what others are guilty of abroad; So there seems to have been a Tacit Kind of Agreement of Nations that one should not pass Judgement upon the Wars Another engages in. For why should One at a distance from the Dispute, and no Ally to either of the Parties engaged, give Himself the trouble of making another's Quarrel his own? Besides, that, even in a Just War, it must be allow'd difficult to know what are the just Measures of Self-Defence, in what Method to exact Satisfaction for Damages, and what ways to take Caution for the Future. So that in short, it is safer to leave these Things to the Consciences of the Parties engaged in the War, than to venture to give sentence upon an Affair, the Condemning of which may be of dangerous Consequence to our selves; Especially since the Parties at War themselves by a Tacit Sort of Compact agree, Either to encrease or abate the Heat of the War as they please.

XVII. How far in Particular it is usual to extend the Liberties of War upon the Persons of the Enemy, may be seen at large in the same Author, l. 3. c. 4.

XVIII. It may also in the next place, be particularly enquired, Whether it be lawful to Assassinate an Enemy? And here Grotius (2) thinks that there ought to be a Distinction made between Persons that violate their Faith whether Expresly or Tacitly given, as Souldiers, Subjects, Vassals, Refugees; and Persons that were never bound by Faith. And that to employ the Latter as Assassines, is what no Law forbids (b): But that to make use of them, who must by the Act be guilty of Falshood and Treason, is what the more Civilized part of Mankind, always look upon as the greatest Infamy and Baseness. Tho' against Rebels, Pirates, and High-way-

(a) Plutarch in Solon, p. 88. D. Quintilian Inst. Orat. l. 4. c. 1. p. 270. 'Tis natural for us to Pity the Distressed: Euripides Suppl. v. 267, 268.

Ἐχεν καὶ πυλῶν δὴς ἀπὸ μίτρας, &c.

(1) B. 2. c. 25. f. 8. (2) L. 3. c. 4. f. 18.

The Beasts pursued, to Rocks and Cliffs retreat,
The Slave clings to the Altars of the Gods,
And States distress'd their Neighbours Aid implore.
(b) Mori, Utop. l. 2.

men, the most Scrupulous Princes never doubt to propose even Rewards to the Person that can kill or apprehend them. Nor does any body blame the Conduct, or think the Measure hard; because these are known to be common Enemies, and lie under the Publick Odium of all. The same Answer will serve that other General Question, Whether it be lawful to use any Mans Service Promiscuously in War? Where we are to distinguish between them that betray, or Revolt from their Masters and offer themselves Voluntarily, and them that suffer themselves to be corrupted in their Faith by the force of Rewards and Promises. By the common practice of the World the Former may lawfully be employ'd; But as Grotius thinks, l. 3. c. 1. § 21, 22. not the Latter (a). Tho' I think it may very well bear dispute. For supposing the Cause I engage in, be Just, I have Right to divest my Enemy of all Forces and Succours, to make him as defenceless as, and to give him all the disturbance, and do him all the damage, I can, which are the Things aim'd at, in solliciting his Subjects to a Defection. And I do not see any sufficient Reason, why I may not pursue that End, by tempting my Enemies Subjects with the Hope of Rewards, as well as any other way. Especially since it is on all Hands allowed, that an Enemies Subjects may be lawfully frightened by false Threats and shows of fear, to surrender themselves, and consequently to desert their Master. Which sort of Desertion is not wholly excusable; since it is known that by the Laws Military, they that suffer themselves to be imposed upon in that Manner are as liable to Capital Punishment, as they that are guilty of perfidiousness and disloyalty. For Cowardice and Credulity are as inconsistent with the Duty of a Souldier, as Faithlessness and Treachery. And further, tho' Force is the most Lawful, and the Bravest way of attacking an Enemy, yet this doth not make it unlawful, to have recourse to Fraud. And tho' these Deserters I speak of, are certainly criminal Themselves, yet there is no Reason, why the Party that sollicitated them to a Desertion, should bear any share in the guilt of it. Because I don't see any manner of Obligation, why I should abridge my self of the Liberty of making Use of the easiest Methods to obtain my Right, only because by doing so, I may give Them Occasion to be guilty of Sin, who have already by the Injuries they have done me, broken off all Communication of Right with Me. And why may it not be lawful for me to win those with my Money, whom I might otherwise conquer with my Sword? Especially since after all the Propositions and Sollicitations I can make to them, it is still left to their own Choice, whether they will look upon me for an Enemy, or buy my favour by entering into my Service. But in time of Peace there are these two Reasons, why I ought not to importune another Man's Servant, or Subject, Unjustly to desert from his Master, and come over to Me. First, because I have then no lawful Power to intercept any thing that belongs to Another. And Secondly, because I cannot justly punish, or do any Harm to Him, tho' he should refuse to desert, and make Me his Master. Both which are manifestly allowed Me in the Case before us. As therefore the Propriety my Enemy hath, to what he calls his own, is no manner of reason to Me, why I may not take it from Him; so the right he hath over his Subjects is so far insignificant with Me, as I am under no obligations to be in the least concern'd, that He should always inviolably enjoy it. And therefore the Objection usually made against this Opinion, that a Man cannot incite another to do a thing, which He must sin in doing, or that, That Man is guilty of Sin himself who supplies another with a Cause or Occasion of Sin, seems to Me, to hold only between such as are not Enemies. For an Enemy in respect to Me, is in such a State, that as long as I am in pursuit of my Right, and in Arms against Him, I have no reason to trouble my self whether He takes from thence, an Occasion to sin or not. And therefore tho' perhaps my Promises, or my Money may be really the Inducement to Another to be false and desert; yet in Reason, the crime of Falseness and Perfidiousness cannot be charged upon me as my own; because for the Present, the State of War hath entirely broken off all Commerce and Communication of Right, between Him and Me; and He himself, as far as in him lay, gave me an Unlimited, Infinite Power, and Liberty against Himself. And since it is not in the least unlawful to put an Enemy to the Sword, when the State and Posture of War requires it; I do not see why it should be thought Criminal, to offer Him a Temptation that may possibly tempt him into Sin. For it is evidently a Weak Argument, which some produce to the Contrary, that Faith ought to be kept by Enemies; and that therefore an Enemy's Subjects are not to be seduced to Desertion. But after all, a Man should be cautious, that he don't set an Example to others, that one Time or other may be of dangerous Consequence to Himself. And without dispute, it is an Evidence of uncommon Greatness, and Generosity of Spirit, when a Man hath it in his Power, to refuse to make Use of so easy a Way of Acquisition. Besides that, 'It is certainly True (b), that a Man that accepts the Service of a Traytor, tho' upon the heat of his Success, he may think himself obliged by him; yet afterwards when he reflects upon the Action, he will begin to suspect and then to fear, and so to hate the Traytor, tho' he loved the Treason, because he knows he hath had already sufficient Experience of the Insincerity of his Faith (c).

(a) Vid. Quintil. Decl. 255.

(b) Precop. Hist. Getib. l. 1. c. 8.

(c) Vid. Valer. Max. l. 6. c. 5. § 7.

XIX. How far the Liberties of War may be extended upon the Goods of an Enemy, and Things we call Sacred, we are inform'd by Grot. l. 3. c. 5.

XX. The Laws of Nature and Conscience in a Just War allow (1) a Man to make such Acquisitions out of what his Enemy possesseth, as will either restore Him what was due to him, or give him an Equivalent to it (2), further, and all that, the refusal of the payment of which, gave Birth to the War; And besides, to satisfy himself for the Charge he was at in recovering his right by Force; and to all if there be any thing else, which he thinks necessary to secure further to himself, and take by way of Caution from the Enemy. And therefore if a Man insults and oppresseth his Neighbours, upon the Confidence he reposeth in his Riches when he happeneth to be overpowered; it is but Just he should be deprived of his superfluous Wealth, that for the future he may learn to be more Quiet and Peaceable. But by the practice of the World, a Man makes himself Absolute, and Perpetual Master and Proprietor of every thing he takes from his Enemy in a Solemn War, tho' much exceeding the Pretensions the War begun upon, Vid. Grot. l. 3. c. 6. f. 1, 2. Where He also sheweth, When both Moveables and Immoveables may be supposed to be Taken (3). Where it is to be observ'd, that the Right to Acquisitions of War is of Force only against any Third dis-interested Party. But to give the Conquerour a right of Propriety, that will hold good against the Conquer'd, there must of necessity be a Pacification and Agreement between both the Parties; otherwise the Right is supposed to continue still in the old Proprietor, and whenever He is Strong enough, He may justly struggle to recover it.

XXI. It is also disputed, to whom the Acquisitions of Solemn War belong; whether to the whole Body of the People, or to any Particular Persons among the People, or to them that made the First Seizure? (4) Which Controversy I think may thus in short be concluded. It is certain that the Right of War is lodg'd in the Sovereign, under which Right is comprized that other, of Arming the Subjects, of Leading, or Sending them abroad upon Expeditions, as also the Right to Raise Money upon them, and other Necessaries for War. But since Wars are undertaken, Either to recover the Rights or Dues of the Private Subject, which the Enemy wilfully refuseth to pay, or Else upon some Publick Cause, which concerns the whole Common-wealth; It easily appeareth, that in the First Case, the principal thing to be taken care of is, that the Persons, upon whose Wrongs the War began, may be restored to their Rights. And the Overplus in This instance, and in Wars that begin from a more Publick Cause, All that is Taken is First Acquired to the Sovereign, as to Him that gives

Authority to the War, whatever Hands it first fell into, Whether the Mercenary Souldiers, or Subjects obliged to Military Service upon Summons without receiving Pay (a). But because War lies heavy upon the Subjects, Whether they are only Taxed to support it, or are obliged to serve in it Themselves, it is no more than a Good Prince, that hath a Love for his Subjects would yield to, That the Subjects should be allowed in Return to make some advantage to Themselves by the War. Which may be done, Either by assigning to them a Certain Pay from the Publick, when They go out upon any Expedition (b), or by sharing the Booty among Them, or by giving every One leave to keep the Plunder He gets himself, (As the Custom was among the Greeks, when they proclaim'd War, to declare at the same Time, that every Man should have Free Plunder (c), ) Or Else by giving the Booty to the Publick, in order to ease the Subjects of the burthen of the Taxes for the Future. Mercenary Souldiers have no Right to any Thing but their Pay. What is given them above that, is Matter of Bounty; or perhaps Reward for their Good Service, or Encouragement to their Valour; Grot. in the place, above mention'd is very large upon this Subject. But upon His distinction of Acts of Hostility into Publick and Private Acts, Which are undertaken only upon the occasion of the Publick War, it may be observ'd, That it may be very justly question'd, Whether every Thing taken in War by Private Hostilities, and by the Bravery of Private Subjects, That have no Commission to warrant them, belongeth to Them that take it. For This is also Part of the Right of War, to appoint what Persons are to Act in a Hostile manner against the Enemy, and how far. And in Consequence, no Private Person hath Power to make Devastations in an Enemies Country, or to carry off Spoil or Plunder, without Permission from his Sovereign. And the Sovereign is to determine how far Private Men, when They are permitted, are to use that Liberty of Plunder; And whether They are to be sole Proprietors in the Booty, or only to share a Part in it. So that all that a Private Adventurer in War can pretend Right to, is no more than what his Sovereign will please to allow Him. For to be a Souldier, and to Act Offensively in an Hostile manner, a Man must be Commission'd by Publick Authority. And therefore Cato us'd to say, that no Man had any Right to fight an Enemy that was not a Souldier (d).

XXII. As to the Acquisition of things Incorporeal, it is to be particularly observed, that They are never acquired but with the Subject they inhere in. The Subjects they inhere in, are either in Persons or in Things. Thus to instance, in Things; There are often certain peculiar Rights inherent in certain Lands,

(1) This is shown above, in B. 4. c. 6. f. 14. (2) See Mr. Barbeyrac's Second Note upon this Section.

(3) Vid. Grot. d. l. f. 3, 4. (4) See Grot. B. 3. c. 6. f. 8, 9, &c. (a) Ælian. V. Hist. l. 6. c. 6. The Spartan Souldiers were not allowed so much as the Spoils of the Enemy. (b) Vid. Liv. l. 4. c. 60. & l. 5. c. 4.

(c) Vid. Polyb. l. 4. c. 26. 36. (d) Cic. Off. l. 1. c. 11. Add. Ziegler upon Grot. l. 3. c. 6. f. 23.

Rivers, Ports, Towns, and Countries, or rather the Persons that are the Proprietors of those Things, are invested with certain Rights, over other Persons and Things. But here it is to be considered, Whether this Right be annexed to this particular Thing, by Personal Compact, or by Real; Or Whether the Person that First united this Right to the Thing, agreed by Compact, that that Right should continue in the Proprietor of the Thing, Whoever He might happen to be, or by what Title soever He came to the Possession of it; Or Whether He intended that the Right should be no longer valid, than Certain Persons should possess the Thing by a Certain Title. If the Right be annex'd to the Thing in this Latter Method, it is manifest, that it is not Every One that possesseth himself of the Thing by any Title whatever at Random, that hath Power to exercise that Right; but it must be considered, Whether that Right ought to follow a Title of an Acquisition of War, by its First Institution. But those Rights (1) which are Immediately, and in Themselves applied, and annex'd to Persons, relate either to other Persons or Things. The Rights which are annex'd to Persons, over other Persons, Since they are not obtain'd but with the Consent of the Persons Themselves (and this Consent doth not respect any Man Promiscuously, but only some Certain Men) cannot be supposed to be acquired with the Persons, Tho' perhaps, the Persons they were annex'd to, and lodg'd in, may fall into their Enemies Power. Thus for instance, tho' a Prince happen to be made Prisoner of War, his Enemies have not therefore acquired his Kingdom with Him. And the taking an Husband, or a Father, doth not give an Enemy power over the Wife or Children (a). When indeed an Enemy hath taken the Wife and Husband together, He hath a Right over the Captive Wife, but not because He took the Husband with Her, but solely because He hath made Her his Prisoner. Neither would He have had more or less Power or Right, whether he had taken her Husband at the same time or not. Neither doth the Conquerour acquire any Conjugal Power over the Captive Wife, but barely such a Right as is usually acquired over Captives. As to the Rights that relate to Things, we must distinguish, whether the Person be Member of a Commonwealth, or live out of Civil Government, in a State of Nature. If he liveth in a State of Nature, the Enemy that taketh the Person, is supposed to have taken all the Things with Him, or at least to have possess'd himself of power to take them, because there is no Body to resist Him, or that hath any Right to hinder him from seizing upon all he had. But in Commonwealths, the Thing is not lost with the Person, but the Right of it devolves to other Persons of the same Commonwealth, or upon Default of these, to the Publick. And therefore if a Subject of any Commonwealth be taken by an Enemy, his Goods that were not taken with Him, are not acquir'd by his Conqueror, but fall to him that would have been his Heir at Law, if he had died a Natural Death. But if the Enemy hath taken the Goods with his Person, that the Things taken are Prize of War, is Title enough to justify his Propriety in them, and it is perfectly needless for him to derive that Propriety from the Person of the Last Possessor, whom He took with Them. And so the Thing is the same, as far as concerns the Right of the Conqueror, to the Things He hath taken, whether He take the Proprietor with them or not.

XXIII. The Fam'd Question once moved in the Great Council of Greece may serve to illustrate what hath been said which Quintilian (b) says, was occasion'd Thus. When Alexander the Great took and destroyed the City of Thebes, He found an Instrument, in which it appear'd, that the Thebans had lent the Thessalians an Hundred Talents. Alexander, because the Thessalians were in his Service, freely gave them up the Instrument. The Thebans who afterwards were restored by Cassander demanded the Debt. The Reasons the Thebans brought to justify their demand, are to be seen in the same Place (b) in Quintilian. To which the Thessalians might have answered. First, that what was taken away by Just force cannot be demanded again. That by the Custom of Nations, the Hostilities committed in Solemn War are look'd upon to be Just; and in consequence, the Former Proprietor can have no Pretension left to any Thing that was taken from him, after a Peace is established. Secondly, that a Right of War is a Valid Title, when a Thing comes to be disputed in the Civil Court. For after a War is ended, if any Controversie arise about any Thing I have taken in the War, 'tis enough to plead that I have a Title to it as prize of War. Thirdly, that What is taken in a Just War may very justly be retain'd in Peace, Especially after the Articles of Peace are settled and agreed upon on both Sides. For then, every Thing is supposed to be left entirely to the Possessor, which He is not expressly obliged to restore by the Articles of Treaty. Fourthly, those Rights which are Properly and Ultimately founded in the Things themselves may be acquired with the Person that is made Captive, supposing the Captive giveth his Consent to transfer them to Me; which Consent I have power to force him to by threatening him with some greater Evil. Wherefore as I can make over an Action of Debt to another Man, and the Effect will be, that the Debtor must be obliged to pay his Debt to him, as much as he was before to me; so if a Captive consent to make over his Action to me, what the Debtor owed before to my Captive is now become due to me. And thus Alexander might, if he pleas'd, have made Himself the Creditor, in the Instance before us, tho' he had left the Theban Commonwealth standing, only by forcing them to transfer their Right to the Debt to him. And indeed, he must be supposed to have made himself such, since He made himself Absolute Master of Thebes, without any exception. And therefore had a Right, either to demand the Debt of the Thebans, or to forgive it them. Nay, he might immediately have forced the Thebans to remit the Debt. And therefore when Alexander gave up the Instrument of the Debt, to the Thebans, it is not to be supposed, that he did it for fear the City of Thebes, which he had then laid in Ruins, might sometime or other afterwards demand the Debt of them, but to give them Assurance, that he himself would never require any thing of them upon that Account. Fifthly, It is Absolutely false, that as long as there is any One Subject of a Common-wealth left alive, that he must be supposed to be the Creditor of the whole Debt, and consequently, that he hath the same Right the Common-wealth had to demand its Debts. For those Particular Persons that out-live the utter Dissolution of the Body of the Common-wealth can have no manner of Pretence to assume to themselves the Right of the Common-wealth; since it is not to be supposed that they any longer constitute it. And it is manifest that Alexander totally dissolv'd and extirpated the Theban Common-wealth, so that, they that escaped the general Destruction, could not be look'd upon to be a People. And they that afterwards re-establi'd the Common-wealth of Thebes, were manifestly a New People. And tho' perhaps the Ancient Thebans might have had certain peculiar Rights, yet these New Inhabitants could not pretend to assume the same to themselves, barely from the Place they liv'd in, unless they obtain'd them all anew. Which was not done with relation to the Theban Debt. Sixthly, the Thebans did not take any unjust Methods to obtain the Instrument, but received it from One that voluntarily offer'd it to them, and who had Thebes, and all that belong to it at Mercy, purely with Intent to pardon them the Debt.

(1) See Grot. B. 3. c. 7. f. 4. and c. 8. f. 4. (a) Vid. Grot. d. 1. (b) Inst. Orat. l. 5. c. 10; p. 387, 388.

XXIV. Conquer'd Nations, as well as Particular Persons, may be brought under Dominion: but that it be lawful and oblige the Consciences of those who submit to it, it is requir'd, that the Vanquish'd promise Expressly or tacitly to acknowledge the Conqueror for their Master, and that he for his part will not treat 'em any longer as his Enemies (1).

XXV. I shall now briefly enquire how things Lost in War return to the ancient Proprietors and Masters. And here in my Opinion, nothing can be more agreeable to natural Equity, than that such as have been made Prisoners of War, when they find Means to escape out of their Enemies Reach, and are under no Obligations of Faith to them, and return to their own Country, should not only recover their former Quality and State in the Common-wealth, but be also restored to all their Rights, Goods and Fortunes. But with Respect to Things, whether they be Moveables or Immoveables, if while the War continues, they are retaken from the Enemy, either by our Selves, by our Subjects, or our Souldiers, it is just and reasonable, if they are to be distinguish'd, that they should be restor'd to the Ancient Proprietors. For since the Common-wealth is engaged to defend and secure the Subjects as far as is possible, in their Goods and Properties, there must, it is evident, be the same Obligations upon the Publick to take care that what is taken from them be restored. And it is no Exception, that the Goods were recovered by the Souldiers. For Souldiers are only the Hands of the Common-wealth, and what they win with their Swords, they acquire to the Common-wealth, and are not to make their own Private Purchase. And since it would be Oppression and Injustice in the Common-wealth to recover those Goods only for it self, which the Private Subjects Lost in War; there can be no Way left but to return them to the Ancient Proprietors (a). Thus in Homer, 'tis said that the Booty was divided among them, that had lost to the Enemy before. How the Roman Laws provided in such Cases, and especially with regard to the Postliminium, is with much Exactness explain'd by Grotius, l. 3. c. 9.

XXVI. A whole Nation, when it hath Either by its own Strength, or by the Assistance of Friends and Allies, shaken off an Enemies Yolk, without doubt recovereth its Liberty, and Ancient State. And if any Part of what they were possess'd of remains still in the Enemies Hands; they have just Pretensions to attempt to recover it, as long as a War is kept on Foot, and Peace is not yet concluded. But if a Third Common-wealth rescue a Nation by a War, which was overpower'd and enslaved by Enemies, in its own Name, and for its own Advantage, the Nation only changeth its Master, but is as far from Liberty as ever. And we may say the same of a Part of any Nation. But if a Part of a People be recovered by the People they were for some time divided or torn from, or by their Allies, they again incorporate with the old Body, and return to the Place and Rights they had before. Tho' perhaps indeed, with an Ally it may be agreed, that he may keep what he won from the Enemy, tho' it before belonged to us. Demetrius, in Justin, when he lost his Kingdom, chose rather to yield it to Philip, than leave it to the Romans (b). But tho' a Part of a People assert their own Liberty, and suppress their Enemies by their own Strength, they must return of Course to their Ancient Body, and must not pretend to erect a Separate Common-wealth by themselves, when the old Common-wealth hath not quitted its Right to them, as a Part of its Body.

(1) This Paragraph is taken out of our Author's Abridgment de Offic. Hom. & Civ. B. 2. c. 16. s. 14. See Grot. B. 3. c. 8. s. 15. See above, in B. 7. c. 7. s. 3, 4. See Mr. Barbeyrac's Note upon this Section.

(a) Vid. 1 Sam. XXX. 22. &c. Homer. Iliad. l. 11.

(b) Just. l. 29. c. 2.

C H A P. VII.

Of Compacts that relate to War.

IT may now be proper to take a view of that Sort of Publick Compacts, which presuppose a State of War. And these are of two sorts. First, Such as put an end to War. Secondly, such as do not put an end to it, but only in some Respects, qualifie and confine it. but because I consider these Compacts in particular, I shall first enquire in general, into the Validity of those of the latter Sort.

II. All Compacts therefore made with an Enemy, saith Grotius in general, ought to be observ'd, l. 3. c. 19. which indeed is true of Compacts that tend to Peace, but is I think liable to dispute with Relation to such as leave us in a State of War, without design to remove it. For I question, whether it be a Conclusive Argument, that because a certain particular Man understands what is done, and hath power to give his Consent to it; therefore that from his Promise Another Person may derive a Right, and he himself may contract an Obligation to the Other. For a State of War, as such, hath no other Measure of Action but Force. The proper use of Faith is to advance Peace. And therefore it looks like an Absurdity to employ Faith without thoughts of restoring, or preserving (1) Peace by it, and much more to make use of it, to protract and carry on War, rather than put an End to it. Besides, when I enter into Articles of Treaty, 'tis implied, that I desire the Person I treat with should believe me and rely upon my Faith; But now it is a sort of a Contradiction, to require of him such a Dependence upon me; and yet at the same time to profess, that I resolve to continue his Enemy; that is, to do him all the mischief every way I can. For a State of Hostility in it self gives a Man unlimited Liberty, to take all the Advantages he can against his Enemy. And it is a Contradiction to my Actions to make a Protestation not to use the Liberty of an Enemy, while I persist to continue in an absolute State of War. And therefore what I said before doth not extend to this Case; that such as enter into Compact with one another, do by that very Act renounce all Exceptions to one anothers Persons, which may make them suspect one another to be false to their Faith. For where both Parties do seriously renounce all such Exceptions, they are already ceased to be Enemies. But where they openly profess that they intend to continue Hostilities; the Evidence of Fact confutes their Promises. And therefore a Man must rather suppose that they only design to impose upon and ensnare one another, and by making one another heedless and secure, to lay Trains for further Mischiefs. So when Narsetas, in Procopius, sent to ask Totilas, what Day he would set for Battle, His Answer was, after eight days I'll meet you in the Field. Upon which, they that were sent return'd and told their Master what was agreed to. But he suspecting some Falshood, put himself in a readiness to give his Enemy Battle the next day; and He proved not to be mistaken, for the next Morning, before Intelligence could be brought by the Scouts Totilas was advanced and marching towards him with all the Body of his Army (a). But then, neither can the Person that happens to be surprized by such a Compact, claim any new Right against the Person that betray'd him by it; because the State of Hostility it self already gives him as much Liberty as he desires. If it be said, that such Compacts should be observ'd, for fear the Enemy when he finds himself deluded, should be exasperated, and pursue the War with greater Rage and Obstinacy: I answer, that this Objection allows, that these Compacts are to be measured only by the use and advantage of them. And I confess it is true, that when the time or place for Battle is agreed upon with an Enemy, it is a sort of Injustice to fail in either, because the revenge of it will generally recoil upon the cruel and the faithless (b). We are not always obliged indeed to make use of the utmost Liberties of War; nay, it is often the greatest Glory to spare an Enemy, when it is in our power to ruin and destroy him. But since War becomes lawful upon this Account, namely, when it is necessary we should defend or assert our own Rights, where they are not to be obtain'd by peaceable means, we ought to think that the shortest way to the attainment of that End is most agreeable to Nature. And therefore since by Compacts, that tend only to moderate and qualifie Hostilities, the War is only drawn out into greater Length; 'tis evident they must be contrary to Nature (c). But however this be, it is a Custom which among others hath obtain'd in the more Civiliz'd Part of the World, (perhaps out of a particular Respect to Military Bravery;) that such Compacts should be look'd upon to be valid which were not intended to put an End to the State of War, but only to abate the Heat of it, and give the Parties engaged, Liberty to take breath. Of this sort are Truces for certain Days, and sometimes Hours to bury the Slain; The Agreements to grant Passage through one anothers Guards (2); And sometimes that no Hostilities shall be used in certain Places, upon certain Persons and Things; that there shall be Cessation of Arms at such a par-particular time; that certain Weapons and Instruments of War shall not be made use of. Olearius relates (a), 'That the Turks and Persians made 'an Agreement, that the Merchants on both 'sides should have free Exercise of Traffick and 'Commerce, and Liberty to pass to and fro unmolested; because it was the Interest of them 'Both to continue their Trade with one another. For since Men, to gratify their Ambition and Avarice, will often raise Quarrels and foment Wars in the World; it may be thought absolutely necessary to the State of Human Affairs, to make War a sort of Trade and Profession, and to form it into an Art; that so at least, the Injuries which the Innocent must suffer may be less insupportable, when the Liberties of the Sword and the Miseries natural to a State of War are more restrain'd. Besides, the Reputation of being false and treacherous, and of deluding others by Compacts, is generally of dangerous Consequence to Persons often engaged in Wars; Since no Wise Man will be imposed upon more than once. But after all, a cautious Man can never lay any great Strefs upon such Compacts; because if he perswades himself into Security by them, he leaves himself open to the attempts of his Enemy. And therefore he ought to be careful, how he agrees to any such without manifest necessity, unless he is in a Capacity, upon any foul Play, to give himself Satisfaction, or hath other sufficient Caution to depend upon.

(1) See Mr Barbeyrac's Note upon this Section. (a) Procopius Hist. Goth. l. 4. (b) Ambros. De Offic. l. 1. c. 29
(c) Vid. Hobbes de Cive, c. 3. f. 27. (2) See Grot. B. 3. c. 21. f. 14, &c.

III. Among other Compacts, which do not put an End to the War, but only suspend the Effects of it; must be number'd Truces, which are Agreements to forbear Hostilities for a particular time, the War still continuing. Which Definition is explained by Grotius, l. 3. c. 21. § 1. For Truces are sometimes granted for several Years. But in that place, it may be said in Excuse, for Varro and Paulus, that they had regard only to such Truces, that are usually made when the Armies on both sides are in the Field and in Motion (1), which are generally limited to few Days, and not to those which put a stop to all Hostilities, and Preparations for War, and for the time they last, are little different from an absolute Peace; particularly where any Clause is inserted in the Truce, that mentions any Conference to be formed in the mean-time, towards the settling a full and entire Peace. But it must be observed, that tho' Truces of this latter sort, do generally comprehend all the Territories and Dominions of both the Parties engaged in the War; yet it may be, and often is agreed, that the Truce shall be observed only in certain particular Places, and that the War may be carried on, as it was before in others. For Instance, those Nations in Europe that have Plantations in the East or West-Indies, may make a Truce, that shall be of Force only in Europe, and continue the War all the while in the Indies.

IV. But it is a Question, Whether if Peace be limited to any determinate Time; for Instance, that it shall continue for Twenty or Forty Years, or the like, it should be look'd upon to be a Truce? Now I confess, that in my Opinion, every Peace is in its own Nature Eternal, that is, when-ever a Peace is Concluded, both Parties agree never to take up Arms again upon that Controversy which first gave birth to the War; but that the Dispute shall be absolutely Silenc'd; or be referr'd to the Decision of Mediators; or be some other way amicably Composed. And the Perpetuity of such a Peace is not to be supposed to be interrupted, tho' a fresh War afterwards breaks out between the same Parties upon new Reasons, and different from the former. For it is not to be imagined, that a perpetual Peace obliges Men always tamely to submit to another's Injuries, without opposing him, or making Resistance. And therefore tho' the Word Peace may be used, yet if the particular Time be Limited for its Continuance, so that the Dispute upon which the War began, is not entirely at an End, it can amount to no more than a Truce; which as long as it Continues, obliges them mutually to exercise the Offices of Peace. Thus the Lacedemonians (2) are said to have made a Peace for Fifty Years, but yet when the War broke out again Six Years after, they were complain'd of, only for breach of Truce. But then, on the Other hand, it may seem absurd to make a Truce, as Romulus did with the Vejentians, for an Hundred Years (b). Tho' Dionysius Halicarnassens, l. 2. calls it simply a League, because there can hardly be any Injury, but must be worn out of Memory, in so long a course of Time; so that to defer the Revenge and Prosecution of it to another Age, seems Unreasonable. Livy indeed says, l. 7. c. 20. that a Peace was granted to the Cerites, but that the Act of the Senate run only for an Hundred Years Truce. But I am inclin'd to think, that the design of that was, that the Senate might not seem to lessen their own Authority, by appearing easy in pardoning so sensible an Injury (c). Thus also Theodosius the Second, made a Truce with the Persians for an Hundred Years. And Diodorus Siculus, l. 12. c. 60. mentions a Peace made for an Hundred Years, between the Ambraciota, and the Acarnanians. And thus Ferdinand King of Spain, and Alphonsus the First of Portugal, agreed to a Peace for an Hundred and One Years (d).

V. Since therefore, notwithstanding the Truce, a State of War continues; which could not be, unless the Pretensions were still kept on foot, and the Controversy the War begun upon remained Undecided; it is evident, that it would be absurd to desire to make only a Truce with an Enemy, and yet require him to give up all his Pretensions. For if this be done, an absolute Peace is concluded. And it would be

(a) Itin. Persic. l. 5. c. 20. (1) V. D. L. 49. t. 15. De Captivis & de Postliminio, &c. l. 19. (2) Iustin. l. 3. c. 7.

(b) Livy, l. 1. c. 15.

(c) Vide Socrom. Hist. Eccles. l. 9. c. 4.

(d) Comnestagius de Unione Lusitan. l. 1.

unreasonable to desire to have Liberty to renew the War without Grounds, when such a particular time is expired (a).

VI. And it is further evident from the Nature of Truces, that if after the Truce expires, Hostilities begin a-fresh, there is no need the War should be Proclaim'd again (b). But yet, where the Truce is of long Date, and hath entirely put a stop to the progress and appearance of War; and where there is any Clause in the Truce, that expressly mentions Conferences to be held in order to put an End to the Dispute; if it be not Necessary, it is at least Honourable, sometime before the Truce expires, to signify our Design to the Enemy, and to make such Overtures as may convince him, that we take no Delight in War, and that it is no fault of ours, that the Peace is not concluded.

VII. It may also be further observed, that all Truces which have any binding Force and Obligation in them, are contracted either by express Compact, or by Acts that bear such an Affinity to Friendship and Peace, as they can be referr'd to no other Cause. Tho' Treaties of Peace have not in themselves the force of Truces, except it be expressly so agreed. And therefore an Enemy can have no good reason to conclude, that because I forbear Hostilities for a little time, therefore I consent to give him Truce. Neither can he charge me with Breach of tacit Faith, if after such a Cessation of Arms, which he hath been so unhappy as to grow secure upon; I make a sudden Descent upon him, and surprize him. And in this Sense are those Authors to be explain'd, that give such accidental Intermissions of Hostilities without Compact; the Name of tacit Truces, as Justin and Livy frequently do (c); But which must be supposed to mean no more than that for such a time the Enemy lay still, without offering any Action in the same manner as is usual upon formal Agreements, or Truces.

VIII. As for the Time, Truces are generally limited to, I refer you to Grotius in the place before-cited, § 4. But I cannot by any means allow what he there insists upon, that the Day from which the Measure of the Time is to commence is not included within that Measure or Compass of Time, because (says he) the force of the Proposition (From) implies Separation and Division, and not Union and Conjunction. For certainly, the Beginning of any thing is a part of that which it Begins. And therefore if, for Instance, it be agreed that there shall be a Truce for ten Days, from the first of July, I believe it would be difficult for any Man to interpret this otherwise, than to take in the first Day of that Month within the Compass of the Truce. Besides, it is not true that the Particle (From) hath always such a Force as to divide what it is join'd with, from what follows it. For it often signifies a Beginning comprehended within that which it begins. Thus what Expressions are more common, than From Head to Foot, and from the Beginning to the End (1)?

IX. When Truces begin more particularly to oblige the Subjects on both sides, we may find in Grotius, in the Place before-cited, § 5.

X. What Liberty a Truce allows and what it forbids, Grotius also accounts for in the same Chap. § 6, &c. But here I confess I am of Opinion, that Acts barely Defensive are lawful in Truces of any sort; tho' perhaps Truce was desired and obtained upon some other Pretext. Thus for Instance, tho' Truce be granted only to Bury the Slain, yet I should not think it unlawful to make use of it to Retreat to a Place of better Defence, or to Repair or Raise a Fortification; or if a Besieged Town request Truce only to defer the Assault, I should not question but that they meant also to take in fresh Supplies of Men and Provisions. And Grotius's Reason to the contrary, seems to me to have no force in it, l. 3. c. 21. f. 10. that since the Truce makes for the Advantage of One Party, the Other that granted it ought not to be prejudiced by it. For since Men cannot by any sort of Compact give up their Right of Self-Defence; the Party that granted such Truce can only charge the Fault upon his own Easiness and Ill Conduct, that he did not take sufficient care that the Enemy should have no opportunity to re-inforce himself (d). So Tissaphernes in Xenophon, made Truce with Agefilaus; but continued his Preparations for War all the Time. And I do not think that if he really signified his Circumstances to his Master the King of Persia, and had leave from him to enter into Articles with the Lacedemonian, that he was guilty of Perjury only for Arming, and putting himself in Readiness to expect any Event (e).

XI. When the Truce expires Grotius says, that a Man taken in his Enemy's Territories, and forcibly stopp'd, may be detain'd Prisoner, l. 3. c. 21. § 9. (2).

XII. When either Party breaks Truce, the Party injured is at Liberty to renew the War without making new Proclamation of it. Tho' if he thinks it convenient he may forbear till the Truce expires. But if it happen'd to be Agreed, that the Party that first broke Truce should be liable to pay a certain Sum of Money by way of Penalty; where the Money is demanded and paid accordingly, it is evident that there is no Pretence for War left. For the reason why the Party pays the Money is, because he is willing to keep himself secure from War. But on the other Hand, if the injured Party make War, he must be supposed to recede from his Right to the Penalty. Tho' it must certainly be contrary to the Agreement, to declare War immediately and neglect the

(a) Vide Baudium de Inducis belli Belgici, p. m. 128.

(b) Vide Grotium, l. 3. c. 21. f. 3.

(c) Vide Just. l. 6. c. 7. Livy, l. 2. c. 18, & c. 64, & l. 23. c. 46.

(1) See Mr. Barbeyrac's Note upon this Section.

(d) Vide Xenophon. Orat. de Agefil. laudibus. Cornel. Nepos, Agefil. c. 2.

(e) See Montaign's

Essays, l. 1. c. 6.

(2) See Mr. Barbeyrac's Note upon this Section.

Penalty. For it is not usual in such Compacts, to leave it to choice, whether the Penalty shall be accepted, or the War be renewed (a).

XIII. Compacts that relate to Safe-Conduct, that secure Free Passage, and Return through Places in an Enemies Power, and how they are to be interpreted are largely explained by Grotius, l. 3. c. 21. § 11, 12. to whom I refer you.

XIV. Compacts relating to Redemption of Captives (1) are allowed much Favour among Christians, especially when the Captives are detained in Barbarous Countries; and even the Treasures and Consecrated Vessels of the Church are sometimes justly given for Ransom (b). The Practice indeed of the Old Romans is known to have been contrary (c): For when Hannibal permitted them to Redeem their Captives, the Senate answered, That they that would be made Prisoners when they had Arms to Defend them, were very unnecessary Subjects (d). And Plato (e) determines, That in his Common-wealth, If a Souldier were made Prisoner he should be left to the Enemy's Mercy, tho' they were willing to give him Liberty. Nor were they without reason thus Severe. For (as the Disclaimer says) (f), 'The greatest Glory in War is Victory, and next to Victory, the greatest is to Die for the Cause you engage in: There is indeed a Third Way too, but that a dishonourable one, which is to fly when there is no Hopes of Conquest. But then it may be said in excuse for such a Person, that he reserved himself for a second Trial, and that he hath still Courage to meet his Enemy once more. But a Man that yields in the Heat of Fight, that lays down his Arms and tamely submits to the Conquerour's Mercy, must for ever be given up for Lost. For what hope can be entertain'd of a Person that had rather be a Slave than Free, and that makes Captivity his Choice? What is to be observed upon this sort of Compacts may be seen in Grotius, l. 3. c. 21. § 23, &c. to the 28th Section. I shall only add this Story (g) out of the Life of Castriot; A Young Man of the Barbarous Nations, that happened to be made Prisoner, was presented to Musachius for his Share of the Booty; who agreed to give him his Liberty for two Hundred Pieces in Gold. The Young Man immediately took the Money out of his Pocket and offer'd to give it for his Ransom: But Musachius refused to accept it, or to give him Liberty, telling him that That Money was his Own before when he became Master of his Person. But when the Case was brought before Castriot, he determined in Favour of the Young Man.

XV. Of Compacts of Generals of Armies, and what Observations may be made upon them, see Grotius, l. 3. c. 22. But to the 8th Section of it. I add, That Generals have power only to grant Truces of Shorter Date, and not such as withdraw all Appearance of War; for these are to be granted only by the Sovereign Power.

XVI. Lastly, How far private Persons have Power to make Compacts with an Enemy, may be seen at large in the same Author, l. 3. c. 23. (2). To which I add the Custom observ'd formerly between the English and Scots, with regard to Compacts of this Kind. If any Person (says the Historian Buchanan, l. 9.) did not make his Appearance at the Day appointed, this was his Punishment. 'In the Publick Meetings upon the Borders between the two Nations, (which usually were held in order to the recovering and restoring what had been lost on either side in War) If any Person happen'd to complain of another's Falseness to him, he only carried Publickly a Glove or Ganilet upon the Top of his Spear: And this they look'd upon to be the greatest Disgrace that could be inflicted. Nor was it usual for Persons that had thus violated their Faith, ever after to be received by Friends or Relations, or ever to be admitted to the Acquaintance or Conversation of Persons of Reputation or Quality. It was also a Memorable Compact which happen'd to be made between a Roman and a Gothick Souldier, mention'd by Procopius, when they were both fallen into the same Pit (h), by which they promised to Assist one another; and the Goths afterwards ratified their Agreement.

(a) Vide Grot. l. 3. c. 21. f. 11, 12.

(1) See Grotius in the Place above-mentioned, f. 23, &c.

(b) Vide L. 1. c. 2. l. 21. C. de S. Ecclef. Gratian. Jus Canon. Cauf. 12. Quæst. 2. c. 13, 14, 15.

(c) Livy, l. 22. c. 59, 61. Herat. Carm. L. 3. Od. 5. Silius Italicus, l. 10.

— Noxam superaverat omnem,

Armatam potuisse capi. —

(d) Eutrop. l. 3. c. 6.

(e) De Republ. l. 5. p. 662. Ed. Wech.

(f) Quintil. Declam. 339.

(g) Vide Marinus Barletius de Vita Castriotæ, l. 7.

(2) See Mr. Barbeyrac's Note upon this Section.

(h) Procopius Hist. Goth. l. 2. c. 1.

CHAP. VIII.

Of Compacts that restore Peace.

I Should now consider that sort of Compacts which entirely put an End to War; but Grotius is so large on this Subject, l. 3. c. 20. that all I can add upon it, will be only a few things he happen'd to omit. The Principal Doubt on this Head is, Whether an Exception of Fear Unjustly given, is sufficient to disannul or rescind these Compacts? Which Grotius in the

the Case of a Solemn War denies, l. 2. c. 17. § 19. and l. 3. c. 19. § 11. Because it is contrary to the Common Practice of the Laws of Nations; and because it would be otherwise impossible to put an end to This sort of Wars, which are known to be very frequent, when it is the Publick Interest of the World that there should. But it must be said, That the Extortions and Ravages of Unjust War, can never be retain'd or defended by Conscience. And as it is beyond Dispute, that an Unjust Conquerour is obliged to make Restitution; so I cannot think it appears by any Law of Nations, that it is unlawful to plead an Exception of Fear against him. And tho' there were such a Law, yet I confess I do not apprehend, what Injury it would be to the common Quiet and Security of Mankind, if no notice is taken of it. For according to Grotius (1), whatever be the Justifiable Cause of Solemn War, the Effect of it is the Acquisition of the External Dominion, as he calls it, of what belongeth to the Enemy. If therefore the Vanquish'd return a Solemn War upon his Conquerour, however he may have no other Justifiable Reason for doing it, beside that of Fear; yet if he happeneth to be successful, he will not only recover what he himself lost before to his Unjust Enemies, but possess himself also of what he can win from his Conquerour. And therefore a Man must be very impudent, that imagines to secure himself in the Possession of what he hath Unjustly gotten, but by the same Force and Violence that made him at first Master of it. And it is equally absurd in a Conquerour, after he hath forced the Vanquish'd to submit to hard Terms and Conditions of Peace, not to see them obey'd while he hath him under his Reach, and at Mercy: But to content himself barely in the Agreement and Compact of the Vanquish'd, and then leave him in a Posture which may give him Power to turn the Game upon him (a). And therefore in Reality, the Case seems to be This, if a Prince be invaded with an Unjust War, and after he hath offer'd peaceably to Concert and Compose the Difference, be forced to Consent to Rigorous Demands, and accept an Hard Peace, he is under no Confinement from any Law, while the Peace continueth unsettled, not to object his Exceptions of Fear; or afterwards as he seeth Opportunity, to endeavour to give himself Satisfaction for the Injury. And so Polybius, l. 3. c. 30. pronounceth, that the Carthaginians had Just Reasons for their declaring a Second War against the Romans upon this Account, because while they were embroil'd in Troubles and Confusions at Home, the Romans forced them to give up Sardinia, and Extorted a vast Summ of Money from them. And therefore saith That Author, the Opportunity the Carthaginians took to Revenge themselves, was of the same kind with that the Romans had taken to injure them. But the State and Decision of the Case will be different, if the Parties engaged in a War consent at first, as it were, to a Contract of Fortune; That is, if while the Reasons of War lie yet in Dispute, They reject all Terms of Accommodation, take Arms, and commit the Justice of their Pretensions, and the Pursuit of their Revenge, which might have been determined and ended by Treaty, or some other way of Composition, to the Event of War. For in this Case, the Sword is evidently made Judge of the Dispute, and both Parties put the Controversie upon this Issue, Either I will Right myself, and Redress the Injuries I have Suffered, or Lose or Suffer more; and they that begin a War with such Resolutions as these, have no more Reason to complain of the Injustice done them, than a Man would have that is hired to Fight a Duel and happeneth to be wounded in it. And therefore, where a Man pushes on the Contest to such Extremities, and then finds the Fate of the Day turn against him, he must be content to say as one of Plautus's (2) Sofia's did to 'other, Well, do as You please, since you have the Strongest Arm (b).

II. It hath likewise been a Question variously Disputed, Whether the Common-wealth or Government is obliged to observe a Treaty or Peace made with Rebellious Subjects? Grotius is very large in the Affirmative, l. 3. c. 19. § 6. &c. But in my Opinion the Case in a shorter and clearer View is this. A Prince that hath suppressed his Rebellious Subjects, may deal with Them as he sees best; but if he recovereth them by Compacts, the very Nature of such a Negotiation is an Evidence that he pardons the Crime. So that the Compact is not to be declared void, upon pretence of the Rebellion: But the Rebels are by that Accommodation, restored and re-united to the Common-wealth, and are supposed to promise Obedience to it. And the Observation of those Compacts by the Common-wealth, The Rebels may well suppose to be the Condition of the Obedience they promise. So that in Kingly Governments especially, such a Composition may sometimes obtain the Force of a Capitulation or Fundamental Law. But as Gramondus observes, 'When Subjects Rebel purely that they may Force their Prince to Yield to their Demands, they certainly quit the only Bond of Security Subjects can have, their Allegiance to their Sovereign (c).

III. What Power the Common-wealth hath to Excuse the Goods (d) of the private Subject upon a Pacification, must be discovered from the Nature of (e) the Transcendental Propriety (3): Upon the Force of which, the Goods and

(1) See B. 3. c. 7. f. 6. and c. 10. f. 5.

(a) Vid. Guicciardin. Hist. l. 16. sub. fin. & l. 17. sub. init.

(2) Plaut. Amphitr. Act. 1. Scen. 1. v. 240.

(b) Vide L. 47. t. 10. l. 3. f. 3. D. de Injuriis, & L. 9. t. 2. l. 7. f. 4. D. ad L. Aquiliam.

(c) Gramond. Hist. Gall. l. 2.

(d) Circa condonanda Bona.

(e) Dominium eminens.

(3) See Grot. B. 3. c. 20. f. 7, 8, 9, 10.

Fortunes of private Men, whatever Title purchased and possessed by, may be given up, whenever the Necessities of the State and the publick Interest require it. But with this Consideration, that the State is obliged to make good such Losses to the Subject, out of the publick Revenues, either immediately, or at least as soon as it is able. But whether a particular Subject's Goods ought to be excused, or taken from him, must in a Monarchy be determined by the Prince. And the whole Body of the Subjects, upon his Command, is obliged to make Satisfaction to the Person that has sustain'd Loss upon the publick Account beyond his own Proportion. But the Foreigners that are left to the Possession of such Goods, need not trouble themselves to enquire, Whether it was for the Interest of the Common-wealth to part with them or no. For the Act of the Prince is sufficient to give them a just and lawful Propriety; because of the Presumptions that attend the Actions of Princes, and because there could be no way of negotiating with Foreigners, without admitting that things are justly disposed, when managed under the Conduct of the Head of the Common-wealth. Besides, as the Laws of Society oblige the Rest of the Subjects, to make Good what hath been given up to the Enemy; so they seem to engage them also to the Relief of those Persons that have suffered Losses by the War; especially if it began without any particular Fault of theirs (a). Though it is too Evident, that the unfortunate Subjects have hardly any where other Redress or Satisfaction, than to be told that it was an Unforeseen and Unavoidable Calamity.

IV. If the Time be limited, in which the Conditions of the Peace are to be performed (1), it must be interpreted in the strictest Sense; so far as to exclude all Excuses for the least Delays, except such as are manifestly the Effects of Force and Necessity, and such as give no Jealousy of Design and Subterfuge. The Reason is plain; because a short Delay may make a strange Turn and Alteration in Affairs. If therefore either of the Parties should be indulged in deferring Performance of the Conditions, it would be easy for them to find Occasions, to elude the Agreement. Besides that, it must be a vast Expence to a Prince to maintain a standing Army; as he must in Prudence be obliged to do, till the Articles of Peace are put in Execution.

V. Sometimes (2) the Peace, and the Conditions of it, are left to be determin'd by a decisive Battle; in which sometimes only two particular Combatants for both sides, and sometimes two, and sometimes three on each side, and sometimes whole Armies engage. And here a difficult Question occurs; Whether the Fate of the Common-wealth may lawfully be committed to the Fortune of such a Fight? This seems indeed to be a way to prevent a greater Effusion of Blood, and to reduce the Miseries and Calamities of War to lesser Compass. But then on the other side, it is more satisfactory, promiseth fairer, and looks like a better Venture to stand the Shock even of a bloody War, than to lose the Security and Liberty of the Common-wealth all at once in such an Engagement. Since, on the other hand, the War may be set on foot again, and perhaps the Success of it be changed after two or three unhappy Encounters or Defeats. But indeed when there are no Hopes of making a good End of a War, though the whole Force of the Common-wealth should engage, if the Enemy will admit of it, the Dispute may justly be decided by some such sort of Combat, as the least of two Evils. Nay, and where Princes themselves make War upon their own private Disputes, without any Respect to the Interest or Rights of the Common-wealth, the State may easily give them leave to decide the Controversy between themselves by single Combat. And we have an Example of this Nature in Diodorus Siculus, l. 4. c. 60. (b). Tho' Princes ought not to proceed to such violent Methods while the Matter in Dispute is doubtful and uncertain. But here it must be observed, that they that leave the Issue of the Controversy to the Event of Combat or Battle, may determine as they please of what themselves are possessed of, but cannot transfer or lose to others any of those Rights which are not in their Power to dispose of. And therefore if a Prince set his Kingdom to Stake, except it be his in a Patrimonial Right, it will signify nothing, unless he hath his Peoples and their Consent for it, that have by Birth a Right of Succession. But farther, in such pitch'd Battles it often comes to a Dispute on which side the Victory lies. And here it is to be consider'd, that generally such Fights are Decisive, and put an End to the Controversy they began upon. And therefore where two particular Combatants engage, the Victory must be declar'd for him that kills his Enemy, or at least that so weakens and disables him, as to force him to confess himself conquer'd; as Turnus, when he was wounded, doth in Virgil (3). Where a greater Number fight, That Side is Victorious which destroys the Enemies, or puts them into such Disorder, that they are not able to make longer Resistance. But where the Quarrel is left to be disputed between two entire Armies, The Plunder of the Field, The burying the Slain, The lodging upon the Place of Action, The offering Battle a second time, are not in them-

(a) Vid. L. 17. t. 2. l. 52. s. 4. D. pro Socio, & t. t. D. de lege Rhodiâ, de jactu, L. 14. t. 2. (1) See Grotius, in the above-cited place, Seç. 25. (2) Vid. Grot. ubi supra, c. 42, &c. (b) Dionys. Halicarn. l. 3. p. 149, 150. Ed. Lips. When the Generals design only to assert their own Power and Authority, the single Combat between them is an Honourable and Necessary way to end the Dispute; but when the Common-wealths themselves contend for Superiority, the Uncertainty of such a Trial, makes it mean as well as unsafe to venture it.

(3) Virg. Æn. 12. v. 931, &c.

selfes any Proof of Victory; since all these may happen when the Battle is fought with equal Bravery and equal Loss. But if other Circumstances concur, there may perhaps be Arguments enough to prove the Enemy fled. And certainly when an Enemy retreats so far as to quit the Field after the Engagement, it is a just Suspicion that he is fled. But when neither Side can show any good Arguments to prove a Victory; Matters continue in the Posture they were in before the War, and the Parties must either come to a new Trial by the Sword, or end the Dispute by Treaty (a). Thus when the Dispute was between the Lacedemonians and Argives about the Thyreatick Lands, it was agreed in a general Assembly of the States of Greece, that the Controversy should be decided by Battle between a select Number of Subjects on both sides, and that the Lands should fall to the Conquerors. The Lacedemonians pitch'd upon Othryades for their Part to command in the Engagement; and the Argives made choice of Thersander. Two of the Argive Party surviv'd the Fight, Agenor and Cronius, who came Home and brought News of their own Victory to the State: But after the Battle had been some Time over, Othryades, with the little Life he had left, made a Shift to support himself with Pieces of broken Launces, took off the Shields from the dead Bodies, and erected a Trophy with them, leaving upon it an Inscription in his own Blood, To Jupiter Guardian of Trophies. For my part I should make no doubt to pronounce the Victory for the Argives (b).

VI. As to Hostages (1) given for the Ratification of the Peace, besides what we find in Grotius (2), it may be further observ'd, that if the Hostage happeneth to be the Prince's Heir and Successor that giveth him up, when that Prince dies, he is no longer to be detain'd as an Hostage, though the League doth not expire at his Death. For this Case is supposed to be tacitly excepted; That he should be no longer an Hostage when he succeeds himself in the room of the Principal: But then he is obliged to substitute another in his stead whenever it is demanded.

VII. There is also another way of securing Peace, and that is when others, and especially such as interposed as Guarantees and Mediators of the Peace, engage their Faith that the Articles shall be observed on both sides; which Engagement of theirs implies a sort of Agreement, by which they oblige themselves to assist the Party invaded contrary to Treaty against the injurious Aggressor (c). But the Guarantees are not obliged to send Aids to any War that begins upon other Reasons, than the Violation of the Articles of Peace.

(a) Vid. Plut. in Parallis Herod. Clio. (b) Vid. Jo. Meurf. Miscell. Lacon. l. 4. c. 14. (1) See the 2d Chapter of this Book, Sect. the last. (2) See Grotius, B. 3. c. 20. f. 52, &c. (c) V. Diad. Sicul. l. 4. c. 55.

C H A P. IX.

Of Leagues.

I Shall in the next place consider that Species of Publick Compact (1), which is usually called, Leagues (2). Pliny in his Natural History, l. 7. c. 56. gives Theseus the Honour of being the First that made or used them: which is not to be allowed, in any other Sense, than that perhaps he might be the First in Greece that entred into League, or that perhaps annex'd certain Rights and Solemnities to be observ'd at the making of them. The most proper Division of them arises from the Matter of them; And from thence they may be divided, First, into Leagues that constitute what was an Obligation of the Law of Nature before. Secondly, into Leagues that superadd some Particulars to the Duties of Natural Law; or at least that, where these are too General and Indefinite, restrain them to certain and particular Articles.

II. Under the first Head may be rank'd all Leagues (3) that provide barely for the Exercise of Civility and Humanity, or to prevent Injuries on either hand, See Genes. XXI. 23.

And in the League the Lacedemonians made with the King of Persia there was this Article (a), Whatever Towns and Countries the King is at present in Possession of, and were before in the Possession of his Predecessors, shall continue in Subjection to him. And no Lacedemonian, or Ally to the Lacedemonians, shall make War upon them, or injure them any other way, or demand Tribute from them upon any Pretence whatsoever. The King shall have the entire free Rule in his own Dominions. But perhaps it may be thought, that by this Article the Lacedemonians renounced all Claims and Pretensions whatever, in Asia: For Asia was the King's notwithstanding the Lacedemonian League. And 'tis Essential to all Propriety, both that what is mine should be free from the Invasions of other Men, and that I should have Liberty to do with it as I please. With this League may be compar'd the Treaty of Peace between the Athenians and the Persians, Diad. Sicul. l. 12. c. 4. 'Tis certain the Athenians look'd upon such Leagues to be necessary; especially between Nations that never had Intercourse with one another before. And no wonder, since the greatest part of the World had lost the Sense of that Law of Nature, that there was a sort of Natural Kindred between Men; and therefore that it was highly Criminal for them to injure one another without Grounds of Provocation. Nay, so far was this Truth unknown to them, that the common Opinion was, that Offices of Humanity were due only to Fellow-Subjects; that all Strangers and Foreigners were Enemies, and might lawfully be treated as such upon any Prospect of Advantage (a). However, at this time of day, when all Nations almost know more of the Law of Nature, are more strict in the Observation of it, and more polish'd in their Manners, such Leagues may be supposed absolutely unnecessary (1); unless, perhaps it be allow'd, (as it is between particular Men,) that when the First Advances are made towards Acquaintance, Good Breeding should make the Preliminaries to Friendship a little ceremonious and solemn. As Cicero says in his Epistles (b), 'In every new Acquaintance must be consider'd, what are the first Steps to be made, and by what Recommendations the Passage is to be opened to Friendship. In any other Respect, 'tis a Scandal to human Nature that any Civil People should enter into any Treaty, the Articles of which, have no further Intent than to provide that the Law of Nature should not simply and directly be broken; as if a Man could not have a proper Sense of his Duty, unless he bound himself under such an Obligation. Such Leagues indeed are commonly call'd no more than Treaties of Friendship. But certainly the strict proper Notion of Friendship, also includes much more than the common Offices of Humanity. For tho' the Actions due to Friendship are not so Determinate, as those due by Compact; yet in general every Man will allow that it is the Duty of one Friend to impart Himself and his Fortunes to the Relief of the Other, to provide for his Happiness and Security, to assist him with Advice, support him with Counsel and Comfort, to protect him as far as he has Power from Evils and Dangers which threaten him; And that all this is to be done with greater Intensity of Passion, than common Offices of Humanity pay'd to other Men indifferently require. Further, Under this Head Grotius reduces all Leagues made for the Establishment of mutual Correspondence and Hospitality, and of Trade and Commerce, as far as due by Right of Nature (c). But that All are not properly Allies and Confederates, who have made an Agreement barely to observe common Duties of Humanity, may appear from Livy, l. 41. c. 24. Where the Achaians upon Displeasure conceiv'd against King Perseus, forbid the Macedonians their Country. Whereupon Macedonia became the Refuge to all their fugitive Slaves, the Achaians not daring to attempt to recover them by pursuing them thither. But Perseus to regain their good Opinion promised them, that if they would take off the Prohibition of Intercourse between Macedonia and Achaia, he would send them back their Slaves. Upon which the Matter was debated in the Meeting of the States of Achaia. Callicrates opposed their gratifying the King, for Fear of giving Umbrage to the Romans; And on the other Hand, Arco contendd that notwithstanding their League with the Romans, they might safely accept the King's Offer and satisfy his Desire, urging, That the thing in Debate, was not whether they should enter into any new Alliance or Confederacy; but only whether they would give and take the Liberty of Trade; to let their Country be open to the Macedonians, that they might have free Passage into theirs, and that their Slaves might not be out of Reach when they fled thither. And that all this was not inconsistent with their Alliance with the Romans, since that did not oblige them to act particularly against Perseus.

(1) See Grot. B. 2. c. 15. f. 1, &c. (2) See Mr. Barbeyrac's Note upon this Sect. (3) Vid. Grot. ubi supr. f. 5.

III. Secondly, Leagues which superadd to the Duties Men owe one another by the Law of Nature are of two sorts, some equal, others unequal. The First are such as are alike on both sides (2); or, when not only the Engagements and Promises are either simply, or, in Proportion to the Strength of either Party, on both sides equal; but also when the Manner of passing them is equal, so that neither of the Parties is obliged to harder Conditions, or left any way obnoxious to the other. The unequal I shall consider by and by. Isocrates (3) distinguishes after the same manner, 'That Covenants or Leagues are equal, when the same equal Right is divided to both Parties; and that That is a Command or unequal League, when one hath harder Terms than the other, (for I see no Necessity of adding contrary to Justice.) The End of both sorts is chiefly the Advancement of Society. And this Society either relates to Commerce; or to Community of War; or to Mutual Promises of Aid and Supplies in Wars Offensive and Defensive; or in short, to any other Matter. Equal Leagues relating to Commerce, may be various. For Example, Suppose it be agreed that none of the Subjects of the Confederate Commonwealths, shall be obliged in any of the Ports, or any other Parts of the Territories belonging to one another, to pay Custom or Toll; or not more than is paid at present; or not above a certain Rate or Quantity; or not more than Subjects, or other Allies pay; and the like. Equal Leagues relating to a Community of War are settled thus; When for Example, it is agreed that both the Confederates shall furnish out an equal Aid of Men and Ships and other Necessaries for War; and that, either both when either of the Con-

(a) V. Grot. l. 2. c. 15. f. 6.

(1) See above in B. 2. c. 2. f. 11.

(b) Cic. Ep. ad Fam. L. 13. Ep. 10.

(c) Vid. Supra, l. 3. c. 3. f. 9, 11, 12.

(2) See Grot. B. 2. c. 15. f. 6.

(3) Isocrat. Panegy. p. 132.

federates is invaded by Enemies, or make War upon others, or only when either Party is invaded. Sometimes Aids and Supplies are promised only for a particular War, or against a particular Enemy, or against all Enemies in general, excepting only the particular Allies of each Confederate. Lastly, Leagues about any other Matter are Equal, when it is agreed that one shall have no Forts upon the others Confines, that one shall not defend the other's Subjects, or receive them into Protection, but apprehend and send them back to the other; that one shall not give the other's Enemies Passage through his Country; and the like.

IV. Having thus explain'd the equal Leagues, it will be easy to understand what are the unequal (1). And these are when either the Promises are unequal; or when either of the Parties is obliged to harder Conditions. The Promises may be unequal, either with Regard to the superior or inferior Confederate. The First happens when the more powerful Confederate promises his Assistance to the other, without requiring the like; or when the Aids he promises, are greater than what the other promiseth; or when the other is not bound to bring Proportionate Aids. The Latter happens, when the inferior Confederate is obliged to Conditions of larger Extent than the other. Some of this sort of Leagues include a Diminution of the Sovereign Power. Of this Nature was the League between the Romans and Carthaginians, in the End of the second Punick War; by an Article of which the Carthaginians were not to begin any War without Leave from the People of Rome. And thus Armenia Major received its Kings from Rome, tho' it paid no Tribute to the Romans (a) (2). On the other hand, Those Leagues are no Diminution to the Sovereign Power which include only a * Transient Burthen; or one which may be complied with once and for all. For Instance, if when a Peace is concluded, one Party is obliged to pay the other's Army; to defray the Charges of the War; or to pay a Sum of Money by way of Mulct; or when either Party is obliged to dismantle Towns, demolish his Forts, evacuate certain Places, remove from certain Countries, give Hostages, deliver up Ships, and Arms, and the like. Thus in the Articles of Treaty, which Porsenna allowed the Romans upon their Exclusion of the Kings; it was particularly mention'd, That they should have no Instruments of Iron for any Use, but in Husbandry (b). And here by the way, the Story which Procopius relates in the Fourth Book of this History of the Goths, may perhaps deserve Observation. 'When the Truce was made between Justinian and Cosroës, by the Conditions of it, Justinian was to pay Two Thousand Libræ of Gold; Whereupon Isdiaganus the Persian Am- bassador demanded immediate Payment; but Justinian propos'd rather to pay every Year Four Hundred, thinking by that means to lay the stronger Obligations upon Cosroës, not to break the Truce. But the Romans complied at last, and paid the entire Sum, for fear a Yearly Payment might look like Tribute. So common (saith the Historian) it is for Man to be more afraid of a dishonourable Name, than dishonourable Actions. But here it may be ask'd, Whether such unequal Leagues as are attended with permanent and perpetual Burthens do always and in themselves lessen and impair the Sovereign Power? or, Whether an unequal Confederate may be supposed to retain his Sovereign? Now permanent and perpetual Burthens are such as these; When the one is obliged to have the same Allies with the other, and not on the contrary; When one Party is obliged not to build Forts in such particular Places, not to levy Forces or raise an Army; (And this was one of the Conditions of the League, between the Romans and the Latines, That the Latines should make no Levies of Men, nor set any Officers of their own over them, or send them out upon any Expedition. The necessary Consequence of which was, that the Romans pass'd the Decrees of War or Peace, and that the Allies were Partners only in the Toyl, while they took the Conduet themselves, and enjoyed the Honour and the Benefit of the Victory) (c). That one shall not have above a certain number of Ships, shall not build new Cities, set out Fleets to Sea, raise Souldiers in such particular Places; and the like; (3) But especially when one of the Confederates is obliged to pay a Deference and Submission to the Other; or what is the same thing, to acknowledge him Superiour in Dignity, and to express a Reverence to him in all his Actions (d). Thus the Athenians allowed their Allies their separate Liberties, and erected a Popular Form of Government among them; But reserved the Superintendence and supreme Direction of Affairs to Themselves. Grotius answers this Question, L. 1. c. 3. s. 21. out of L. 49. t. 15. l. 7. s. 1. D. de Captivis, &c. But the Difficulty lies in the following Words of the Civilian, At fiunt apud nos rei ex civitatibus federatis, & in eos damnatos animadvertimus. But the Subjects of our Confederates are brought to Tryal before Us; And we pass Sentence, and punish them. For this certainly implies Subjection, when another hath a Right to Summon our Subjects to appear and stand their Tryals in his Courts, and to punish them according to Sentence given. The Story of Decius Magius in Livy, is an Instance of this (e). But particularly, that which Pausanias relates (f). When upon the Motion and Instance of Callicrates, the Roman Legate charged the Greatest Men

(1) Vid. Grot. ubi supra, l. 7. (a) Appianus Alexand. Præfat. p. 2. A. Ed. H. Steph. Vid. Procop. Hist. Gothic. L. 1. c. 6. The Agreement Peter made with Theodatus, concerning Sicily. (2) V. T. Liv. l. 30. c. 37. * Onus Transitorium. (b) Plin. Nat. Hist. L. 34. c. 14. See also 1 Sam. XIII. 19, 20. (c) Vid. Dionys. Halicarn. l. 8. (3) See Mr. Barbeyrac's Second Note upon this Section. (d) Vid. Isocrat. Panegy. (e) Livy, l. 23. c. 7. (f) Pausanias in Achaicis.

among the Athenians with being in Perseus's Interest; Xenon, who was one of them, upon Confidence of his Innocence in that Matter, answered, That he did not doubt but he could clear himself of that Charge, even before the Roman Senate it self; Which the Legate immediately took the Advantage of, as if he had appeal'd to Rome, and thereupon he and several others were sent to Rome. And yet Polybius informs us (a), speaking of those that were sent thither, That the Senate did not think that it belonged to them to bring them to a Tryal. And therefore, the Answer to the Difficulty mention'd is easy, That the former part of the words must be understood of the Primitive Times of the Roman Commonwealth, when they were strict in their Observance of the Laws of Confederacy, and us'd to make a Distinction in their Carriage and Treatment, between such as voluntarily entered into an Alliance with them, and such as their Arms had Conquered. And this Cicero confesses, That the old Romans thought themselves obliged to protect their Allies, and never assumed the Command over them (b). And Scipio made it a particular Part of their Commendation, that the Romans did not confine the Foreign Nations to their Interest by Severity and Servitude, but by the Tyes of Friendship and Alliance. But the latter words refer us to after Ages, when the Respect and Reverence they had to their old Confederacies ran low, and their Allies as well as the conquer'd Nations were reduced to equal Terms of Slavery (c). So Sylla forced all the Roman Allies that had been Free till his time to pay Tribute. At which Time it was also common to bring the Subjects of the Confederate States to Rome to be tried, and to punish them there, as Roman Subjects. But it is evident, that in the Epistle of Proculus, between the former and latter Words, there were several intermediate things mention'd. But here Grotius after he hath tediously recounted the several Kinds of Disputes, which might happen between Allies and Confederates, at last dismisseth the Difficulty, without answering any thing to it (d). However, it is well observ'd by wise Men that it generally happens, That if the Party Superiour in the League, be considerably stronger, and more powerful than the other Confederate, he will by Degrees arrive at an Absolute Sovereignty over them, especially if the Confederacy be Perpetual, and allow him a Right to place Garrisons in their Towns (e).

V. Another Question Grotius enters upon, (f) is this, Suppose two Parties both Allies, and Confederates to a Third, make War upon one another, which of them the Third Confederate ought to assist (g)? In which Place it may be added, that in all Leagues which a Prince enters into with his Neighbours, upon the Points of Assistance and Supplies, this Exception ought always to be supposed, If the Condition and Circumstances of my own Kingdom will permit? For that Consideration ought always to over-balance, not only any private Respect, but even the Ties of Blood and Affinity (h). For since it is impossible a Prince should be under nearer or stricter Obligations to an Ally, than to his own Subjects; 'tis plain he can make no Promise that can be binding to any Confederate, when it is manifestly inconsistent with the good of his own Subjects. It was said by King Francis the First in Guicciardine, that he thought the Oath he took at Rhemes was of the strongest Obligation; and by that the Kings of France were obliged not to alienate any part of the Patrimony of the Crown (i). And in this Sense, what my Lord Bacon saith, in his Wisdom of the Ancients, c. 5. may be very well admitted, 'That there is but one true and proper Bottom of Faith among Princes, and that is Necessity (a Deity of great Power with the Great) the Danger of the State, and the Communication of Profit. And Aristotle speaks very plainly (k). Advantage seems to be the main cause of Confederacies, between Commonwealths (l). Polybius says of the Rhodians (m), that they made no Alliance with the Romans for a Hundred and Forty Years together, tho' they sent them Assistance in several Wars; And the Reason of this, he saith, was, 'Because they were willing to appear fair to all the World, and to give every Prince hopes of their Assistance and Friendship, but at the same time unwilling to abridge themselves of any Part of their Liberty, by binding themselves under Oaths and Compacts, to adhere to the Interests of any one Nation. Sir Thomas Moor would have his Utopians forbear entering into Confederacies upon other Reasons (n). But a Prince that suffers by an Alliance, that expires upon

(a) Polyb. Excerpt. Legat. 105. (b) Cic. Off. 1. 2. c. 8. (c) Vid. Liv. 1. 42. c. 1. Appian. de Bello Civ. 1. 1.

(d) Vid. Anton. Matth. de Criminibus, ad tit. ad L. Jul. Majestatis, c. 1. f. 5, 6.

(e) Vid. Bodin, de Repub. l. 4. c. 6. Isocrates Archidam. p. 217. People that are jealous of their Liberty, should avoid all unequal Confederacies, for there is hardly any difference between Them and Slavery.

(f) L. 2. c. 15. f. 13. (g) Vid. Simlerum de Repub. Helvetiorum, l. 1. p. 119. (h) Vid. Gallium, l. 2. c. 29.

(i) Guicciardine, Hist. 1. 16. (k) Arist. Nicom. 1. 8. c. 5.

(l) Arist. Rhet. l. 3. c. 14. 'Tis incredible, that any Man should choose to do a thing without any prospect of Advantage by it. Valer. Flaccus, l. 4.

Certa fides animis idem quibus incidit hostis,

They're certain Friends that have a common Foe.

Isocrates Orat. ad Philip. p. 156. A Commonwealth hath no regard, either to Enemies or Oaths, or any thing else, further than it thinks it tends to Advantage: Thus Polybius l. 2. c. 47. saith of Aratus, that he knew Kings naturally look'd upon none, either as Friends or Enemies, but rated Friendship and Enmity, purely according to their own Profit. Andr. Maurocenus, Hist. Venet. l. 1. speaking of the State of Venice, saith, We measure our Alliances, and Friendships only by the Credit and Interest they bring Us. (m) Ployb. Excerpt. Legat. 93. c. 6.

(n) More, Utop. l. 2.

a Change of Affairs with his Confederates, must charge the misfortune upon himself, that he did not make a stricter Search into the Circumstances of his Ally (a). Tho' an Honourable Confederate, when he finds that the Posture of Affairs he is in will not suffer him to continue any longer in the Alliance, should give Advice of it to the Others that are concerned, that they may have time to provide for themselves, and secure their own Interest. For it is certainly the highest Pitch of Baseness possible, to Sacrifice a Friend to save my self (b). And therefore in all Leagues of War, it is look'd upon to be a very important and necessary Article, that no one of the Confederates shall make a separate Peace with the Common Enemy, excluding the rest of the Allies. Tho' 'tis reasonable this Article should be understood with this Limitation, supposing the other Confederate or Confederates, do not refuse to comply with fair Terms and proper Overtures of Peace. For in such a Case, this looks like a Violation of the Confederacy, and in consequence the other Ally may justly take separate Measures for his own Security. But then this also must be allowed in a mitigated Sense only, and with certain Alleviations, that it may not be a Pretext to elude Confederacies, and that one of the Allies may not in some Sense be made the Other's Judge (c).

VI. Another Celebrated Distinction of Leagues is that which divides them into Real and Personal. The Latter are such as are made with the Prince, purely with Relation to his Person, and expire with him. The Former are such as are made with the Kingdom and Common-wealth, rather than the Prince or Government; and these outlive the Ministry and the Government it self under which they were first made. To which of these Every League belongs, will appear from what follows. This therefore is certain, that whatever Leagues are made with a free People are in their own Nature Real, and must continue till the Term limited in the League, notwithstanding that the Government by whose Intervention the Leagues were made, may die or be changed. And hence we may refer, that if a Free People enter into a League, and afterwards the State of the Common-wealth happen to be changed from a Democracy, into a Monarchy, the League is still in force, because the People is the same, tho' the Form of the Common-wealth be changed. And because a Prince call'd to the Throne by the free Voice of the People is always suppos'd to take the Sovereign Power upon him, together with all the Obligations contracted by the People, when it lay in their Hands. Besides, Leagues are made by them that are invested with Sovereign Power. The Common Subject of which Power is the Common-wealth; and Sovereign Power is the same, both when it is exercised by the common Suffrages of the whole Body of the People, and when it is afterwards entrusted to a Prince, created by the Consent of the People. But here all those Leagues are excepted, that were made only for the Preservation of the present State of the Common wealth. For Example, suppose two Free Common-wealths enter into a Confederacy, by which they agree to Aid and Assist one another, against all such as shall endeavour by Force to subvert the present Establishment of the Government in either Common-wealth. For if afterwards, either of the two Nations freely consent to an Alteration of the State of their Common-wealth, the Reasons ceasing, the Confederacy is supposed of Course to expire. But however in the General, tho' every League made with a free People be Real; Yet it does not follow on the other Hand, that therefore every League made with a Prince is Personal, and dies with him. For the Inserting a Person in a Compact, doth not make the Compact Personal, but only shows by what Person's Intervention the Agreement was made (d). But because it is evident, that Princes make some Leagues with no farther Intention, than that they should continue till their Death; and others with Design to derive them down to their Successors; it must therefore be enquired, What are the Marks whereby we may distinguish, which Sort every Regal League ought to be reduced to.

VII. And it is Grotius's Opinion (e), that it is easier to discover this, from the Form and Phrase of the League it self, than from any General Rules or Observations. And thus all Leagues will appear to be Real, in which 'tis expressly mention'd, either that they are to be perpetual; or that they are made for the Common Good; or made with the Prince and his Successors; or when a particular Time is limited for the Continuation of them. But besides, the other Words of the League sometimes, and sometimes the matter of it; and sometimes the Motives of entering into it, may make a Conjecture easy in this Case. If the Conjectures are equal on both sides, Favourable (†) Leagues must be supposed to be the Real, and the (*) Odious, the Personal. The Favourable Leagues are those that are made for the Advancement of Commerce. Not that all Leagues of War are Odious; For the Defensive generally incline to the Favourable Part; the Offensive have more of that which is Odious in them.

VIII. But how far a Successor is obliged by the Leagues of the Prince his Predecessor, is what we may take a more distinct View of. For in the First Place 'tis certain, that if the Predecessor make a Peace, the Successor is obliged by it. For by a Peace 'tis manifest, all past Injuries that gave Birth to War are forgotten, the Articles of the Peace being duly observed. And then Secondly, 'tis beyond dispute, that the

(a) Vid. L. 50. t. 17. l. 19. init. D. de reg. juris.

(c) V. Joh. Labard. Hist. Gall. l. 5. p. 313. Ed. Paris. An. 1671.

(e) Grot. L. 2. c. 16. f 16.

(†) Favorabilia

(b) Euripid. Iphigenia in Tauris. v. 605, 606, 607.

(d) Vid. L. 2. t. 14. l. 7. f. 8. D. de Pañtis.

(*) Odiosa.

Successor is obliged to stand to all those Lawful Agreements, by which his Predecessor transferr'd any Right to a Third Person. And again Thirdly, It is also certain, that when one of the Confederates hath performed what the League obliged him to, and the Prince dies before he Satisfies What was required on his Part, the Successor is obliged to Satisfie it. For since what the Other performed upon a Condition of an Equivalent to be paid him, did either really, or at least was intended to promote the Advantage of the Common-wealth; it is evident, that unless the Equivalent be paid him, he hath a Right to demand Restitution or Satisfaction, for what he perform'd, in a manner before it was due; and consequently, that the Successor is obliged to refund all back, except he chooseth to pay the Equivalent, according as the Articles of Confederacy before determined. Lastly, as to these Leagues, Where nothing hath been Performed on Either hand; or Where the Performances have been Equal, it may I think be said in General; that the Prince if he entered into the League as Head of his People, and with design to advance the Publick Good by it, must be supposed to have made a Real League, and to have obliged his Successor by it. Because such a League affects the whole Mass of the People; and the Succeeding Prince the Head of them, enters upon the same Rights, and takes upon him the same Incumbrances with his Predecessor. But where the League directly regards the Benefit of the Prince's Person and Family; 'tis evident that when he dies, or that is extinct, the League must also be at end. But it is grown into a Custom upon any new Succession, to renew the Leagues, tho' in themselves undoubtedly Real at least in general Terms, for fear any Dispute or Exception should arise, that since the Common-wealth hath not yet perceived the use and advantage of such a League, that therefore it hath no other Bottom but his Faith that made it, and doth not descend to the Successor. And especially since the design of every League is to promote the Publick Good; and since the Successor may perhaps have Sentiments in Relation to that different from his Predecessor, he hath in consequence a Right to take different Measures; and therefore may neglect a League, which he thinks is now grown uselefs and Unserviceable to the Common-wealth (a). And here it may be observed, that where several Different Leagues have formerly pass'd Interchangeably between Nations, and they afterwards renew them in General (1), the League that was last made, must be supposed Chiefly to be renewed. Since the latter always lessen the Force of the Former (b). And therefore it was unpardonable Inadvertence and Neglect in the Ambassadors, that went to renew a League with King Ptolomy, and in them too, who sent them without knowing what Treaties and Leagues had formerly pass'd between that Prince and the Achaians, or which of them, the Achaians were desirous to Renew.

IX. And here Enquiry may be made, Whether if one of the Princes of a League happen to be expos'd and expell'd by his own Subjects; the other Confederate be obliged to send him the same Aids and Supplies, which were promised when he was in Possession of his Kingdom? Grotius, in the Chapter before quoted, § 17. affirms that he is. Because a Prince unjustly depos'd and expell'd, hath still a Right to his Kingdom, tho' he hath lost the Possession. To me, so much in this Case seems to be certain, That if the Terms of the League expressly mention and intend the Defence of the Prince's Person and Family, he ought to be assisted in the Recovery of his Kingdom. But if the League was formed for publick Good only, 'tis a disputable Point, Whether the exil'd Prince can demand Assistance in Vertue of his League. For the Aids mention'd, are presumed to have been promised against foreign Enemies, without View of this particular Case. Not but that still such a League leaves Liberty to assist a lawful Prince against an Usurper. And thus if while we are engaged in League with a free People, an Intestine Domestick Enemy endeavours to enslave them, we may with Justice send them Assistance to suppress him, before he is grown into a lawful Prince. For the * Qualities in Leagues (as suppose it be expressly mentioned, that the League is made with the Prince and his Successors;) imply a strict and proper Right, and intend such Princes only as have a Just Title to the Kingdom, not that keep it by bare Usurpation, or that have no other Title to depend upon, but Force and Power.

X. It is also a famous Question, Whether it be provided by the League, that neither of the Confederates shall Injure or Invade the other's Allies? By Allies, is meant such only as were Allies at the time the League was made, or such as were afterwards taken into Alliance on either side. What was urg'd in a Dispute of this kind between the Romans on one hand, and the Carthaginians on the other, at the Beginning of the Second Punick War, may be seen in Polybius, l. 3. c. 25. 27. and Livy, l. 21. c. 19. The Decision Grotius makes of it is this (c), That it was no Breach of League either for the Carthaginians to make War upon the Saguntines, though after, they were taken into Alliance by the Romans, or for the Romans to undertake to defend them. For it may happen without Breach of League, that of Two Confederates, One may make War upon, and the Other assist the same Party. And it is usual in Leagues to make Articles that relate particularly to such Cases, See the Leagues made between the Romans and the Carthaginians in the Time of the Tarentine War, Polyb. l. 3. c. 25. Tho' when Confederates are so far engaged in opposite Interests, 'tis Evident, they must be upon the Brink of an open Rupture. For the Sense of Pain is the same whether the Wound be given in another's name, or in the Striker's own; but it is yet clearer, when the Seat of the War happens to be carried into the Assisting Prince's Country (a).

(a) Vid. Johan. Labard. Hist. de Reb. Gall. l. 5. p. 74, 75. Ed. Par. An. 1671. (1) See above in B. 5. c. 12. f. 6. In the Beginning. (b) Vid. Polyb. Excerpt. Legat. 41. * Qualitates. (c) Grot. l. 2. c. 16. f. 13.

XI. And it is to be further observed, That Leagues limited to a particular time, when that expires, must not be suppos'd to be tacitly renewed. Both because no Man can be presum'd to bind himself rashly by new Obligations (1); and because otherwise it could never be known how long a League is to continue. And therefore if after the League expires, some Acts of seeming Alliance are continued, they are to be look'd upon as Acts of Kindness and Good Nature, but not as Arguments of the Renovation of the League. For Friendship continues after the League is at an End. Again, it is evident from the Nature of all Compacts (2), That where one of the Parties refuseth to stand to the Conditions of the League, the other is at Liberty to break too. Confederates may indeed agree, That though one Article of the League be neglected, yet the rest shall be inviolably observed. But then the other Party is not obliged to perform the Equivalent to the neglected Article, and so not to suffer any positive Evil by it.

XII. I come now to consider the Nature of * Engagements, or those publick Compacts which are made by Ministers of State (3), in Negotiations relating to the Sovereign Power, but without Advice and Command from it. And here, The First Question is concerning that difficult Case, Where if the Engagement is pass'd absolutely without Proviso, or Condition of being accepted and ratified by the Sovereign, and the Sovereign afterwards refuse to give it any Ratification; What the † Engagers are obliged to do in Satisfaction to the Party they made the Engagement to? This was a Case once warmly disputed among the Old Romans, upon the Engagement made at the Furcæ Caudinæ. The Story is at large in Livy, l. 9. c. 8, &c. And indeed if the Measure of that Matter were to be given by strict Justice, it must be said that the Romans were neither obliged to ratify the Engagement, nor to set things in the Posture they were in before. But then it had been enough for them to surrender up the Persons that made it (b). But if the State of the Case be rather estimated by Equity, certainly the Romans ought to have ratified the Agreement, however it was concluded without their Advice and Consent. The Consuls indeed had not Power to determine War, conclude Peace, or enter into League with an Enemy without particular Instructions and Commissions from their Masters, the Senate and People: yet since they did not presume upon the People's Consent without very good Reason; when it was impossible otherwise to save the Lives of many Thousand Citizens, the Flower of all the Roman Common-wealth; and when the Enemy had perform'd all that could seem Equivalent to a formal Peace and League; the People in reason, ought to have confirmed the Conditions, especially since there was nothing intolerably hard or unjust in them (c). For it would have been enough for the People to have stood Resolutely to their Principle, That their Magistrates could oblige them to nothing without their own Consent and Command, if the Samnites had demanded any thing that was Unreasonable and Insupportable. But 'tis Clear, the great Mortification to that proud ambitious People was, That their Army was forced to submit to the Ignominy of passing under the Jugum. Which was indeed very ill Conduct in the Samnite General. For that Disgrace did not lessen the Strength of the Romans, but only provok'd and exasperated that fierce People to revenge the Dishonour. However the Roman Army very well deserved the Treatment they met with, for venturing rashly to pass a Place they were Strangers to, without sending before to discover it. And it was certainly their wisest way rather to submit to the Disgrace, rather than suffer the Strength of Rome to be cut off. And here the Arguments Lentulus offered to persuade the Engagement may be consider'd, Liv. l. 9. c. 4. And further, That a Common-wealth may often be obliged to ratify the Acts and Promises of its Generals, because of their Authority, and to oblige them not to go over to the Enemy. Hence Tacitus saith, Ann. 12. 'That Mithridates was 'at a loss whose Pity he should address himself to; because None of the Romans had 'Powers large enough to give him any Assistance in Depending upon their Promises. But in the Case before us 'tis manifest, that the haughty Romans never consider'd, that they might some time or other be forced to accept as hard Conditions themselves as they had imposed upon others. However it was a Strain of Generosity in the Samnites not to accept the Surrender of the Sponsors: And it was an extravagant Action in Posthumius, when the Surrender was offer'd, to strike the Fecialis, and then cry out that he was a Samnite Subject, and that, contrary to the Laws of Nations, he had injured a publick Minister; and therefore, that the Romans might carry on their War with more Justice. The Judgment of Livy upon this whole Proceeding may perhaps deserve our Observation, The Sponsors, says he, after they had been offer'd to be yielded up, and were not accepted, return'd back to the Roman Camp, sua fide liberati, Absolv'd from their own Faith and Engagement; But he adds Doubtfully, for san & publica, and perhaps from the Publick.

(a) V. Justin. l. 3. c. 7. (1) See Grotius, B. 2. c. 15. f. 14. (2) See the above quoted place of Grotius, f. 15. * Sponsiones. (3) See Mr. Barbeyrac's First Note upon this Section. † Sponsors. (b) V. Grot. l. 2. c. 15. f. 16. Val. Max. l. 4. c. 8. f. 1. Jo. Mariana. Hist. Hisp. l. 21. c. 11. (c) See Guicciardine's Hist. L. 12. p. m. 342 & 344. Where he talks of the Engagement Tremolius Divione made to the Switzers. Sir W. Temple, in his Observations upon the Government of the United Provinces, saith, That in the Year 1668. he prevail'd with the States-General to conclude Three Treaties, and upon them draw up and sign the several Instruments in the space of Five Days, without any Recourse to the Provinces, and from them to the several Cities, whereby the Interest and Arts of others, the Affair would have been opposed and eluded, tho' it was of the greatest Importance to the States that it should be concluded. He adds, That doing this without Commission from their Principals, they ventured their Heads if they had been disown'd by their Provinces.

XIII. The Last Question upon this Subject is, If the Sovereign knows that his Ministers have pass'd Promise and Engagement, and is silent upon it, Whether it may be infer'd from thence, that he owns and approves it? But for an Answer to this, I refer you to Grotius, L. 2. C. 16. §. 17.

CHAP. X.

Promiscuous Compacts of Sovereign Princes.

I Am, in the next place, to consider the Difficulties which relate to any sort of promiscuous Compacts made by Sovereign Princes, which may be reduced to these Three Heads (1). First, Whether a Sovereign Prince has any particular Power, with Regard to Compacts that affect himself? Secondly, What Liberty he hath in Obligations contracted with his Subjects? And Thirdly, How, and how far he can oblige his Succeffors.

II. The First Difficulty therefore is, That since a Prince has the Power to reverse any Contract made to the Prejudice of his Subjects, and can restore them to the State they were in before such a Contract was made, or upon just Reasons release them from their Obligation to observe it: Whether he cannot make Use of the same Power in Cases that concern himself? For Example, Supposing that by Fraudulence or Force, or through Indiscretion of Age, he should have agreed to prejudicial Terms; or hath been any other way notoriously abused in his Contracts; or bound himself by any rash Oath? (2) And here it is to be observed, that the Question as it is stated in this rude Form, and as the Words of it lie, implies a Contradiction. For to restore Persons to the State they were in, and to release from Oaths, are Acts which bear Relation and Tendency to another Person; and which are derived and flow from one invested with Power and Authority over the Person that is to be restor'd and releas'd. And therefore the Question ought rather to be stated thus; Whether, when a Prince has prejudiced himself, by consenting to certain Obligations and Conditions of Contract, upon a Sense of the Injury he suffers, he may by his own Authority declare, that by Reason of certain Faults adhering to the Contract, he looks upon himself to be released from the Obligation? To which it may be answer'd; That as Persons that live in a Liberty of Nature and own no Subjection, are under their own Conduct, and are Judges in their own Affairs; so if they are Unjustly injured in their Contracts, they may by their own Authority demand Restitution, or Amend- ments to be made to their Agreement; on Supposition the Prejudice and Injury they sustain be visible and manifest. For when the thing is disputed, the Matter must be referred to the Decision of Arbitrators. And therefore if a Prince, since he is still in Possession of his Natural Liberty, find any Abuse put upon him in the Terms he has consented to, he may by his own Authority declare to the Party concern'd; that he will not be obliged to stand to any such Contract. And there is no Necessity that he should procure a Release, since the thing is in its own Nature incapable of producing Obligation or Right. Thus Lewis XIII. of France declared, That there lay a just Appeal from the King under Confinement and Bonds, to the King at Liberty. But because it may sometimes happen, that ill Men when they have a Mind to put a Cheat upon the World and falsifie their Faith, may pretend an Abuse or Fault in their Contracts to cover their own Frauds and Perfidy; therefore under Civil Government it is very necessary to enact, what Acts shall in their own Right be look'd upon to be invalid and null, and what are to be examin'd into and determin'd by Sentence of Court.

III. But when the Case lies between the Prince and his Subjects, the Difference of the Circumstance will, I think, deserve a distinct Consideration. A Prince's Minority is supposed to continue as long as the Administration of the Government and Affairs of the Kingdom remains in the Hands of his Governours and Tutors; and during their Administration, the Prince himself can make no Contract with any Person of a foreign State: But if he enter into any Contract with a Subject, and afterwards find himself injured in it, I see no Reason why he should not enjoy the same common Benefit of the Law which he allows and secures to other Men, otherwise his Condition would be more confin'd than that of private Subjects: Nor can any Renunciation of Exceptions which might be made to his Minority, be supposed of Force sufficient against the Presumptions of the real Weaknesses that Age is liable to. A Prince

(1) See Grotius, B. 2. c. 14. (2) See Grotius, in the place above-mentioned, Seff. 1, 2, 3, 4, 5.

cannot disannul the Treaties and Compacts that were lawfully made by his Governours with foreign Powers or Persons, when he is come to Age, upon Pretence that they were made in his Minority. Because then, nothing could be pass'd with any Security under a Prince that happen'd to be a Minor. However the Prince's Governours the Regents are obliged to give an Account of their Administration. But no Exception whatever of Fear, Injury, or Fraud is of Force against any of those Capitulations, which in limited Monarchies the People propose, and the Prince consents to, at his Accession to the Government. For if the Capitulations or Conditions seem'd too strict and severe, the Prince had his Liberty of accepting or refusing them; the People would not have forced him to take the Government upon him. And it is not to be supposed, that any People would be so inconsiderate, as to tie up the Hands of their Prince with such Laws as must make the Sovereign Power weak and feeble, and his Government unactive and unprofitable. And here I will by the way enquire, Whether David could have retracted his Oath, when he swore not to punish Shimei that cursed him as he fled from Absalom? And I confess in my Opinion he could not. For the King was under no Apprehension of Force or Fear when he gave him his Oath, neither could he be thought to have sworn out of Rashness or Indiscretion; but on the contrary, rather with mature Consideration and Design, that upon so remarkable an Instance of his Clemency, the People that had been engaged in the Rebellion, might return the more Willingly, and with greater Assurance of being pardon'd, to their Obedience. Neither was the Promise of Impunity in it self unlawful; For the King might very justly, and without Injury to any Man, pardon a Crime which was committed purely against his own Person. But it hath given further Matter of Dispute to some, Whether he can be excused for leaving such a Remembrance of Shimei's Crime in his last Commands to Solomon. In my Opinion, David did nothing in this, contrary to his former Oath; For he did not leave any Command with his Son to punish Shimei for his Crime; but only advised him to keep a strict Eye upon that malicious bad Man and Enemy to his Family, and to take Care that he did not create him any fresh Disturbance; and that if he should afterwards find him guilty of any Misdemeanour, not to be easy to forgive him. And therefore Solomon commanded him to live in Jerusalem under the Eye of the Court, and forbid him to pass over the Brook Kidron, that he might not insult upon his Impunity, nor conceive any secret Satisfaction in seeing the Place where he had with so much Bitterness reviled and cursed David. But Divine Providence so disposed, That he should break those easy Con*ditions* which he had himself approved and consented to, that there might be just Occasion given to take off so ill a Man by punishing him as he deserved.

IV. But here it is to be observed, That however Princes, when they enter into any particular Acts with their Subjects, not as Princes but as other private Men, are presumed always to comply with the positive Laws of the Common-wealth which relate to the Validity of such Acts; yet since they are above the Civil Laws, they are under Necessity of following those Laws always in their private Acts. And therefore if they voluntarily and advisedly enter into any Contract, that would otherwise be Invalid in Law: They are supposed to have exempted that particular Contract from the Force of the Laws, where there are such, and and to declare that no Nullity shall ensue upon that Account. For otherwise, all that was done would signify nothing (a). And I think it is very reasonable to allow, that if a Prince find himself very much injured in a Contract, which at first he did not perceive, he may if he please annul, or at least correct and amend it (b).

V. That no Prince hath Power to release himself from his Oath, when there lies no Objection either against the Validity of his taking it, or the Matter contain'd in it, or the Circumstances belonging to it, upon Pretence that it is lawful for him to relieve his Subjects in some particular Oaths, I think is evident. For the Oaths which he has Power to vacate in his Subjects, have always this Condition annex'd to them, If it please the Sovereign. And 'tis certain it would be impossible to bind any Obligation upon a Man, if he reserves to himself a Power to break from it, whenever he thinks fit (c).

VI. But though Princes are as much obliged in Conscience by their Promises and Compacts as private Men; Yet, in this Respect, there is a Difference between the Obligation of a Prince and that of a Subject, that 'tis easy for the Prince to force the Subject to stand to Terms, when perhaps he would willingly go back; but a Subject, as long as he is such, hath no way to oblige his Prince to give him his Due, when he refuses it. But no wise Prince will ever refuse to stand to a lawful Contract; since he must necessarily consider, that his Honour and Security depends upon the Credit he hath of observing his Compacts; and that it is the worst thing that can be said of a Prince, that he observes not himself that Justice which it is his Duty to administer and support. But however, if a Prince upon Contract give the Subject Liberty to enter an Action against him in his own Courts, the Action it self proceeds rather upon natural Equity than the Civil Laws; as if it were implied, that upon the Knowledge of his Obligation, he would not refuse the Performance of it. And therefore the End proposed by such an Action is not to force the Prince to stand to the Contract, but only to make it appear to the Subject, that the Prince had obliged himself to observe it. And in such Tryals, there should be no regard had to Honour or Greatness. but Judgment ought to be given barely according to the strongest Probabilities of Argument (a).

(a) Of the Action of Philip II. of Spain, That by a Fetch of Law would have released himself from paying his Debts. See Grot. Hist. Belg. l. 5. (b) Vid. Grot. l. 2. c. 14. f. 2. (c) Vid. Grot. l. 2. c. 14. f. 3.

VII. It may also happen that the Subjects may be deprived of a Right acquired by Contract (1), either by Way of Punishment, or by the Force of the Transcendental Property. * Always supposing in this Case, that the Necessities of the Common-wealth demand it, and that the Publick ought to make Restitution. And therefore for the same reason the Prince may defer his Payments, when any pressing Exigence of State obliges him to turn the Money another way, which should have been paid the private Subject. And from hence it appears, what is to be determined about the Tabula novæ, or general Discharges from Debts or Obligations, which Solon call'd Στοιχθισια, or the shaking off a Burden (b).

VIII. But Lastly, that it may appear, whether and how far a Prince hath Power to transmit an Obligation upon a private Contract down to his Successors; it is to be first considered, whether the Prince's Kingdom be his Patrimony, or whether he posses it only as it were upon an Usufructuary Right. A Successor to a Prince that holds his Kingdom in the Former Right, since he succeeds to all his Goods and Possessions, must be supposed to inherit all Debts of Princes that posses their Kingdoms; in the Latter, Grotius l. 2. c. 14. § 10. &c. is of Opinion, that the Successors are not immediately, and purely because they succeed them in the Kingdom, obliged to discharge them. For such Princes do not derive their Right to the Throne from the King their Immediate Predecessor, but from the People themselves. But ever these Successors are obliged by the Debts of their Predecessors, mediately and by Interposition of the Common-wealth, not as upon their own Account, but as they are Heads of the Common-wealth. For in the last Resort the Debts of the Prince affect the State it self, as they were contracted by the Head and Governour of it. And the Truth of it this, that Princes have Power to devolve Debts upon the Common-wealth it self, is evident from hence, that sometimes it would be impossible to supply the Necessities of the State otherwise than by contracting such Debts. And since the Administrations and Security of the Common-wealth is entrusted with the Prince, he must be allowed to have the Command of all those Means, without which that End cannot be pursued or obtain'd. But then on the other hand, this Power to oblige the Common-wealth, ought to be strain'd no farther than the Prince can have Good Reasons for Contracting the Debt. But then again, neither ought the Prince to be so far limited, as not to have Power to devolve any Debts upon the Common-wealth, but what have actually given some Advantage to the State (tho' 'tis fit Inferior Magistrates should be so confin'd (c). But 'tis sufficient if he hath a fair Probability in Reason for what he attempts, tho' perhaps the Event may fall out contrary to his Expectations. And therefore upon the Whole, all Contracts made by the Prince, oblige the Common-wealth, unless when they are manifestly absurd or unjust. And when the Case is doubtful, 'tis always to be presumed in favour of the Prince. And such Contracts as these, also oblige the Successor, as he is the Head of the Common-wealth. Nay, the People themselves will be obliged by them, if they should change their Form of Government, and erect a free State. And so whatever a free People contract, devolves upon and oblige the Person they afterwards confer the Sovereignty upon, tho' they give him never so full and absolute a Power. And this I think is a better way of deciding the Question, than by distinguishing between the greater and the lesser Injuries. For in the Administration of publick Affairs, the Probability of the Means ought to be allowed a fairer Consideration than the Success of the Event, since an unforeseen Accident may sometimes break and distract the wisest Measures and Designs.

IX. What hath been said of the Contracts of Princes, may also be applied to their Grants and Donations (2), viz. that they cannot be recall'd by the Successors where they were made upon fair and favourable Reasons (d). Yet 'tis certain on the contrary, That Galba endeavoured to recover the Largeesses and Donatives made by Nero, allowing no Man to keep more than the Tenth Part of his Liberality (e). So also the Roman Senate reduced those Cities to a Tributary State, that had bought their Privilege or Immunity of Sylla. Cicero indeed thought them too severe in it (f). And I think indeed it had been but reasonable to have refunded them their Money, since it had been employ'd in Publick Uses. And so Basilius of Macedon, when his Predecessor Michael had exhausted the Publick Treasure, published an Edict, commanding all Persons that had received any of the Money, and could give no fair Account, why, or for what they received it, to return it again, or at least the half part of it (g). But indeed as to Grants of this Nature, it ought to be considered out of what they are made. If the Prince give out of his own Pocket, or Estate, without dispute the Grant is irrevocable. And if he distribute his Bounty out of the Revenues or Income of those Goods or Possessions which are intrusted to his Administration, it ought always to be considered, upon what Reasons and with what Caution and Moderation the Donations were made. For as no Body denies but that the Prince hath Power to reward the Services of his Friends and Subjects out of the Publick Moneys, as far as the Riches and Occasions of the State will allow; so if the Money of the Nation be profusely squander'd away upon Persons that do the Common-wealth neither Credit nor Service, and the publick Stock is lavish'd away only to satisfy their Ambition; in my Opinion, they should be replenish'd from their Purses, that at first exhausted it. It was the wisest Method Ferdinand King of Arragon observ'd, never to part with any of the Lands that belonged to his Crown; and his Reasons were good, that Princes that alienated their Lands, generally created themselves more Enemies than Friends by it, because they made some of their Subjects so great by it, that they would always be suspicious and fearful of being deprived of their Rights (a). What hath been said with Relation to Grants, may also be applied to Privileges and Immunities, namely, that it ought to be considered upon what Reasons, and with what Caution and Moderation they were given; and whether they are consistent with the common Peace and Security of the State. For without dispute, these Things are of far greater Concern than the unwary Easiness of the Prince. And indeed all Privileges are to be confin'd under such Limitations and Restrictions, whenever they begin to lie heavy upon the other Subjects (b). So when the Romans demanded an Aid of Men and Money from the Celtiberi, and they thought to excuse themselves by pleading the Privileges that had been granted them by the Romans themselves, the Historian says, 'That what they insisted upon was allowed to be true, but that the Senate when they gave such Privileges, always annexed this Exception, that they were to continue in force as long as it should seem good to them and the Roman People, and no longer (c). Lewis King of France, after he had reduced the Genoese that had revolted from him, disannull'd all the Agreements and Treaties formerly pass'd between him and that State, and gave them all back again by the way of Privileges, not as Compositions or Compacts; that so it might be always in his Power to recal them. Perhaps indeed that was not to hold with relation to Privileges of all Kinds, but to such only as were to have barely a Precarious Dependence.

(a) Heliad. Æthiop. l. x. (1) See in Grot. the place above quoted. f. 7. * Vi Domini eminentis.
 (b) Vid. Plutarch. Solon. Cic. Off. l. 2. c. 24. ad fin. (c) Vid. L. 12. t. 1. l. 27. D. de rebus Creditis. &c.
 (2) See Grot. ubi supra, f. 13. (d) Vid. Sueton. in Tito. c. 8. Plin. L. 10. Ep. 66. Gratian. Caus. 25. Quest. 1. c. 15. (e) Vid. Sueton. in Galba. c. 15. (f) Cic. Off. l. 3. c. 22. (g) Vid. Hæmon Qsorium de Reb. gest. Emanuel, l. 1. Where he gives an Account of the Grants King John made just before his Death.

(a) Vid. Bæcl. ad Grot. L. 1. p. m. 107. Grot. L. 2. c. 14. f. 12. Laurentius Valla de rebus gestis. Ferdinand. Arrag. L. 3. (b) Vid. L. 43. t. 8. l. 1. f. 16. D. ne quid in loco publico, &c. Demosthen. Orat. adv. Leptin. (c) Appian. Iberic. Guicciardine Hist. L. 7.

C H A P. XI.

How Subjection ceases.

AMong the Several Ways by which Men cease to be under Subjection, it is by Some thought to be One, when a Prince dyes and leaves no Heir or SUCCESSOR behind; or gives his Kingdom for lost. For then (they say,) every particular Subject is left free to a Liberty of Nature. But since it is clear that a Kingdom in such a Case, is not Absolutely dissolved, but only reduced to a State of Interregnum; It follows, that tho' the Obligation of the Subjects to the Prince they have lost, are indeed at an End; Yet that they continue still united to one another, by the Original Bond and Compact of Society.

II. But now the usual way by which Subjection ceases is, When a Man by Permission of his Own Common-wealth voluntarily removes into Another, and settles Himself and his Effects, and the hopes of his Fortune there (1). How far such Voluntary Removes may be permitted, must be discovered by the Methods by which Subjects are admitted into the Com- mon-wealth. For some Persons are forced to put themselves under the Protection and Governement of certain Common-wealths, by being conquered in War or reduced to the last Necessities. And what Liberty is allowed to these must be known by the Laws of those Common-wealths. But if a Person Absolutely free, that never knew what it was to be Subject, (Such as the Patriarchs and Masters of Families of old,) or is at Present free from any Subjection he had been under before, voluntarily joyn himself to any Common-wealth; it must also be determined by the Constitutions of that Common-wealth, what Liberty to remove thence was left him (2). For in some Common-wealths no Man is permitted to leave them without the Express Consent of the Governement. In others, a Man may be allowed that Liberty, if he will submit to certain Impositions; as suppose, if he will pay a certain Sum of Money, or leave part of his Goods behind him (a). But where there are no Laws about the

(1) See Grot. B. 2. c. 5. f. 24.

(2) V. D. L. 49. t. 15. De Captiv. & de Postliminio, &c. l. 12. f. 9.

(a). Ovid. Metam. l. 15. v. 28, 29. speaking of the Argives, — Prohibent discedere leges,

Panaq; mors postea est patriam mutare volentem

The Laws forbid my flight, and threaten Death
To those that leave the Land which gave them breath Matter,

Matter, we must be determined by Customs arriving from the Nature of Civil Subjection. What Custom admits of, every Subject is supposed at liberty to use. But if This gives no Light to the Matter, and the Compact of Subjection makes no Mention of it; it must be presumed, that every Man reserved to himself the Liberty to remove at Discretion, and that he chose rather to be a Citizen of the World, (as Socrates said,) than a Subject in any particular Common-wealth (a). For when a Man enters himself into a Common-wealth, it cannot be supposed that he gives up all Care of himself and Fortunes, but rather that by so doing he takes the best Expedient to defend and secure Both. But because it often happens, that the Nature of the Government does not suit with every Private Man's particular Circumstances, or he thinks at least he can make his Fortune with more Advantage elsewhere; And since it would be unreasonable to Reform and make Alterations in the Common-wealth at the desire, and for the benefit only of a Few Private Subjects; the only Method left is, to give them leave to Remove, and provide for themselves where they think best. 'So Demaratus the Father of King Tarquin, fled with his Family to Corinth, and settled there, because he could not bear the Insolence of the Tyrant Cypsellus, wisely preferring Liberty, tho' in Banishment, to Servitude at Home (b). So also Sometimes it is known, that there is not sufficient Encouragement allowed to Men of Parts in their own Nation. And some have found it true by Experience, that a Prophet hath no honour in his own Country (1). For Men of base natures, are apt to look with envy upon Persons that would rise by their own Worth to an Height of Greatness above their reach; when perhaps they remember themselves once Superiour, at least upon the Level with them; And as Lacydes said (c). Statues ought to be seen at a distance, because too near a View lessens the Beauty of them. Now to deny such Persons the Liberty of Removing would in effect be all one, with laying a Command upon Men free and at their own disposal, not to presume to rise above the Rank and Condition of their Ancestors. But the Common-wealth also it self may make Advantages by these Removes, by inviting in, Persons of Worth and Eminence from Abroad. 'By the Constitution of the Roman Common-wealth, no Citizen could be forced to leave the Common-wealth,

'or if he pleased, not to leave it, when he was made Member of Another he prefer'd to it. 'And therefore Tully says (d), That a little before his Remembrance, several Citizens of Rome, Men of Credit and Fortunes, voluntarily left that and settled themselves in other Common-wealths. And the Way, saith he, lies open from every State to Ours and from Ours to every other. And this Right he often very highly extols (e). Or is it any Objection against what is here said, that the Father of Families, who at first erected the Common-wealth, may be supposed to have bound one another by Compact, to assemble and unite their strength in common. For even in other Societies any Member has Liberty to leave it, so it be not with fraudulent design, at an ill time, or to the Prejudice of the other Members, especially if the Society were not established with any particular Limitation of Time. And therefore many Common-wealths have appear'd to be very little concern'd when their Subjects left them, as being already overstock'd with Men, and glad to have their Numbers lessened.

III. But however, since 'tis generally the Interest of every Common-wealth to know the Number of its Subjects; they that remove ought in Point of Duty or Honour to signify their Departure; unless a Man has good Reason to suppose, that it will be no Publick concern whether he leaves it with such Ceremony or not. But all Persons that have engaged themselves in any particular Service or Employ for a certain time, ought without Question to have the express Consent of the Common-wealth for their Remove. For Example, Subjects that are sent on Embassies, Expeditions, or that are entrusted in any other Business which they undertook upon particular Compact and Agreement. But besides, a Remove ought to be at a Proper time, and when it is not directly against the Interest of the Common-wealth to suffer it. For Example, (to make use of the Instances in Grotius in the place above quoted,) when the Publick Debts are great, a Subject should not have leave to depart, except he would pay his Share of them before he Remove; nor when the Common-wealth is engaged in War upon Presumption of the Number or Bravery of Certain Subjects; And especially when there is danger of Invasion, or of being besieged; Except the Subject that would depart can be sure to leave others be-

(a) Valerius Flaccus, Argon. L. 7. v. 227, &c.

*Omnibus hunc potius communem animantibus orbem,
Communes & crede Deos; patriam inde vocato,
Qua redit itque dies; nec nos diis nata Malignis
Cluserit hoc uno semper sub frigore messis.
Fas mihi non habiles, fas & tibi linquere Colchos.*

The World to all, her ample Fields extends,
And God and Providence are common Friends;
Where e're the Day discovers distant Earth,
The Country's mine; nor are we doom'd by Birth
To this cold frozen Soil; but unconfin'd,
May change our Country, as we change our Mind.

(b) Cic. Tusc. Quæst. l. 5. (1) Luke IV. 24. (c) Diog. Laert. l. 4. f. 60. (d) Cic. Orat. pro Balbo, c. 13.

(e) O jura Præclava, atque divinitus jam inde a Principio Romani nominis a majoribus nostris comparata, &c. Cicero d. l. What noble Rights are these! Which by the Blessing of Heaven have been enjoy'd by us and our Ancestors, ever since the Roman State began, that none of us should be forced to leave our Country, or to stay in it against our Wills. This is the immoveable Foundation of our Liberty, that every Man is Master of his Right, and may keep, or resign it, as he pleases.

hind him, every way as fit to defend the State as himself (a). Neither can they be Good Subjects that serve their Country, as Horace (1) speaks of his Friends, Diffugiunt cadis cum facie siccatis amici, ferre jugum pariter dolosi, that is, Who when they have drain'd all they could from it, leave it to struggle with Misfortune by it self. But then it must be observed, that by Removing in this Place I understand the departing out of the Dominions and Territories of the Common-wealth, and not the denying its Authority, and continuing to live in its Dominions. For the Common-wealth, when it bounds its Power within Certain Limits, is supposed at the same time to prohibit every Person to inhabit within that Compass, who will not acknowledge its Authority. And therefore it may be observ'd By the way, that the Grandeos of Spain were very much mistaken, when they thought themselves released from the Obligations of the Common-wealth, by renouncing the Laws of their Country, and then retiring to other Places. Tho' it was usually supposed that when that was done, they might lawfully take up Arms against their Prince, and begin open Hostilities, without incurring the guilt of Treason and Rebellion (b). From what has been said we may infer, what force those Avocatory Commands may be supposed to have, by which the Common-wealth endeavours to recall its Subjects from Employments in Foreign Countries. For Instance therefore, if a Subject that is under no particular Ties or Restraints remove from his Common-wealth, where that Liberty hath always been promiscuously allowed, and settles himself and his Effects under the Protection of a Foreign State; the Common-wealth he left hath no longer any Authority over him. And therefore it is to no purpose to think to reduce Such an one by threatening him with loss of Fame, which is the utmost that can be done, when he is determined not to obey. But the Common-wealth hath still Authority over Subjects that depart either contrary to the Laws, or are obliged to it by any particular Ties, or hold Possessions of Goods, especially of Immoveables under its Dominions, or are absent only upon Travel, and reserve to themselves the Right of Subjects. And by the way, it was a prudent Law of Solon's which Plutarch (2) mentions in his Life, by which he obliged the Athenians, 'To admit no Persons into their Common-wealth, except such as were condemned to perpetual Banishment from their own Country, or else such as remov'd with their whole Families to Athens, for the convenience of Trade and Employment in the Arts they profess'd. And this Law it was said he made, not so much to keep out Foreigners, as to invite them to settle at Athens, by giving them assurance of incorporating them into the Body of the Common-wealth.

' For he made no doubt, but both these sorts of People would make very good Subjects, the one because they voluntarily quitted, and the other because they were forced out of their own Country. But further, since the Common-wealth really hath no Power or Authority over Persons free from all Civil Obligations to it, it is manifest, that if the new Common-wealth They settle in, send them in Quality of Ambassadors or Publick Ministers to the State they left; that they ought to be received agreeably to their Characters, and enjoy all the Privileges of Ambassadors. One of the chief of which is to be free from the Authority and Power of the Common-wealth they are sent to. For if this be thought too great an Honour to be shown to Persons who have formerly been Subjects, 'tis easy to deny them Reception. Nay, to carry the thing farther, if for Instance, a Subject in the Face of his own Common-wealth engage his Faith to a Foreign State, in order to take upon him to Negotiate for it there, under the Character of Ambassador and publick Minister; the Common-wealth must be supposed to have releas'd him from all Civil Obligations to it self. Since it is impossible the same Subject should be capable of two Obligations of the same Nature. And in consequence, that Person must from that time be admitted to all the Rights and Privileges of an Ambassador in his own Country, which by a sort of Fiction he is supposed to have changed.

IV. But however to depart in Companies, great Numbers together, Grotius (3) thinks unlawful for this Reason, because such a Liberty would be utterly inconsistent with the Nature of Civil Society. And in Morality that must be judged necessary, without which an End proposed, cannot be attain'd; and that inconsistent with it, which prevents or destroys the End (c). But the truth of this Opinion may I think be question'd (4), for if it be lawful for particular Subjects to remove as they please themselves, why is it not lawful for greater Numbers to take the same Liberty, who all propose to themselves the like Conveniences of bettering their Fortunes by changing their Country; supposing none of those Objections against it that were mentioned before? For it is nothing to the purpose to answer that by this means the Common-wealth must be enfeebled and dissolved. For where a Person hath no Right to detain me contrary to my own Inclinations, he suffers no Injury, tho' perhaps by my Departure some future Benefit, but not yet due, is intercepted from him. There is no necessity such a particular Common-wealth should have so many Millions of Subjects, or should always appear formidable to its Neighbours, any more than it is that any particular private Man should be worth so many Thousand Pounds, tho' 'tis true indeed, that neither one nor the other ought to be reduced to a lower Condition by unjust Means. And therefore I think there is but little Force in Grotius's Argument. For though perhaps, this or that particular Common-wealth may be much weakened, or perhaps by continual Drains in time be utterly dispeopled, where the Subjects are permitted to desert in Numbers together; yet Civil Society among Men, is no Danger of being absolutely dissolved by it. For the Corruption of one Common-wealth is the Generation of another, and what is lost in one place is gain'd in another. Nature, when Men began to encrease and spread themselves over the World, formed and divided them into Civil Societies, but never gave Command that such or such a particular Common-wealth should stand for ever in an uninterrupted Course of Greatness and Fortune. Babylon was exhausted by Seleucia, and that by Ctesiphon (a). However, when Companies depart, they are obliged as well as particular Subjects, to depart out of the Dominions and Territories of the Common-wealth. For otherwise there must ensue such Distractions and Confusions, as would necessarily be fatal to all Governments; that is, if whole Cities or Provinces were allowed Liberty, to withdraw at pleasure from their Obedience, and either to put themselves under the Protection of Other, or to erect separate States of themselves.

(a) Vid. Lycurg. Orat. contr. Leocratem. (1) B. 1. Od. 35. v. 26, 27, 28. (b) Vid. Mariana de rebus Hisp. L. 13. c. 11. (2) Plutarch, p. 91. F. (3) Ubi supra. (c) V. Liv. 1. 41. c. 8, 9. (4) See Mr. Barbeyrac's Note upon this Section.

V. I shall now in the next place enquire, Whether and how far those Persons may be justified, that pretend to be Refugees and Deserters only with Design to injure them that receive them, and to bring some Advantage to their Prince or Country. It is indeed to be excused from great Imprudence, to be easy in giving Credit to such sort of Men, 1 Sam. 29. 4. nor does the World generally appear dissatisfied, that Traitors are punish'd though their Treason hath taken Effect (b). Yet it ought not to be thought therefore Lawful or Honourable for me to betray a Man, because I find him of an easy Temper, and likely to be taken by the Train I have laid for him. Nor is any Man obliged to serve his Country at the Expence of his Honour and Conscience, as has been already shewed. And without Dispute, for a Man to engage his Faith, purely with Design to make Advantage by the Violation of it, in doing Harm to a secure and heedless Enemy, is a very great Sin. And it was no Question an execrable Saying of Lysander's, or Philip's, That Children were to be cheated with Trifles, and Men with Oaths (c). If therefore a Deserter expressly engages his Faith, he cannot break it without Sin, whatever Pretence or real Design he may have of advancing their Interest he deserted from. It may perhaps be replied, That since they that give Reception to Deserters, know before-hand, that they can do them no Service without Sin, and that no Man can lay any binding Obligation upon himself to commit Sin, and therefore that the Faith given by Deserters, signifies nothing; it follows, That no Injury is done them, if they are imposed upon by their own Credulity in depending upon such slender Arguments. But I answer, That it is Foreign to the Question, to enquire whether it be a Sin or not, to make use of the Service of Deserters. For it does not follow, that if I sin my self, in employing such a Person in my Service, That therefore, for that Reason he hath a Right to do me an Injury. As it does not follow; That because if a Man hire a Ruffian to commit Murther, he contracts the same Guilt with the Villain himself, Therefore it is lawful for the Ruffian to kill also the Persons that hired him. It is commonly said indeed, that Deserters are received by the Laws of Arms †; that is, that it is contrary to the Laws of Arms, not to give Admittance to Persons that leave the Enemy and come over to us, as Grotius and Cujacius explain that Law (d). But whether we ought to understand this Passage of the External Laws of Arms (as Grotius calls it,) or of the Internal, may very well be Matter of Dispute. But however, if a Man will defend that all Persons have absolute Liberty to make use of the Assistance of Deserters; methinks it should not be thought so proper for that Purpose to insist, That even God himself makes use of the Actions of the Devil and wicked Men; as to plead the Favour which ought to be allow'd to the Justice of Arms taken up, either to punish the Insolence of an injurious Enemy, or to assert and regain just and oppressed Rights (1). For upon the Supposition of this Favour, a Prince engaged in a just War, needs not think himself obliged to make a curious Enquiry, Whether the Deserters gave over Hostilities against him upon Honourable Motives or not? And since he may presume, that they had good Reasons that moved them to relinquish the Cause they were before engaged in, he cannot contract Guilt by seeming to give Encouragement to unjust Desertions. But however this be, 'tis certain, that it is utterly Unlawful to make Faith an Instrument to deceive and abuse Mankind. And again, 'tis also certain, that where a Deserter owns he deserted without reasonable Cause, his Faith can signify little; since it must either tend to advance new Treasons, or to continue the old; And therefore that it must be very great Imprudence to lay any Stress upon it (e). But Deserters therefore that propose to ingratiate themselves with them that receive 'em, and yet to carry on their secret

(a) Vid. Plin. Nat. Hist. l. 6. c. 26. (b) Vid. Vopisc. in Aurelian. c. 23. (c) Vid. Ælian. Var. Hist. l. 7. c. 12. † V. D. l. 41. De acquirend. rerum dominio, l. 51. (d) Cujac. Obf. 4. c. 9. Grot. l. 3. c. 1. f. 22. (1) See the Sixth Chapter of this Book, Sect. 16. (e) Liv. l. 22. c. 22. Vid. ap. Eund. Orat. Indibilis, l. 27. c. 17. and that of Cn. Marcus to the Volsci, in Dionys. Halicarnass. l. 8. And that of Segestes, in Tacitus, Ann. l. 1. c. 58. Neque odio patriæ, &c. This I did not out of any Ill Will I bear to my Country (for Traitors are hated even by those they design'd by their Treason to oblige) but because I look'd upon it to be the common Concern both of Romans and Germans, and because I was more inclined to Peace than War. Vid. Ammi. Marcellin. l. 18. c. 11. in fin.

Designs under the Mask of Refugees, generally pretend that the insupportable Nature of the Injuries they suffered, forced them to take this only way for their Security. The Stories of Zopyrus (1) and Sextus Tarquinius are very well known; and what Arts the one used to gain upon the Credulity of the Babylonians, and the other upon the Gabinians (2). So Mezeras the Syrian, as Florus calls him, or Abarus the Arabian, as Appian, or Ariamnes as Plutarch, that drew Craesus into the Plains, gained Credit with him by extolling the Favours and Obligations he had received from Pompey, and by relating the Misfortunes he had suffered in espousing the Roman Cause. Virgil (3) seems to describe the Cunning of Sinon with more than usual Life and Beauty, that he might free the Trojans from the Imputation of being an imprudent credulous People. For first, Sinon pretends he was a Person mortally hated by Ulysses, a Man the Trojans would easily think bad enough to be guilty of any Fraud that could be charged upon him, and to whom to be an Enemy was with them the greatest Recommendation. The Cause of this Animosity between Ulysses and himself he then derives from the Death of Palamedes, who was put to Death for having imposed the continuing the War. He goes on with his Story, That he was at last doom'd to be sacrificed, not by any Oracle or Command from the Gods, that he might not seem to have refused even to be made a Victim for the common Safety; but only by the Malice of Calchas, who was suborn'd and hired to do it by Ulysses. And certainly an Injury of so high a Nature as this might very well justify him in saying, He thought himself now releas'd from all Obligations to his Country. And yet with much Perswasive Art and Cunning, he first of all beseeches Heaven that it might now be lawful for him to renounce Faith and Love with those Greeks, that were so unjust and unkind to him tho' he had once considered them as Country Men and fellow Subjects. And yet all he could say was hardly enough to overcome the Trojans, till the Gods themselves seem'd to confirm the Truth of what he had said by a very Ominous Accident. But after all, 'tis certainly true, That a Deserter that comes over to an Enemy singly by himself, without betraying some considerable Advantage to him, brings but a poor Prize with him either of Credit or Value. But however such Persons are not to be look'd upon as Deserters, that go over privately to an Enemy with Design to surprize, or make a sudden Attack upon him, without engaging their Faith to draw their Swords in his Assistance. And it is not to be supposed, that such are under any tacit Engagement upon this Account, Because 'tis not probable they would make any Attempt against an Enemy, when they were within his Reach. For such a tacit Obligation can be presumed only in Persons, who go over to a foreign State in time of Peace, and not in War.

VI. The next Enquiry I shall make is, Whether the Commonwealth on the other hand can forcibly eject the Subject at Pleasure, and without antecedent Transgression. Cicero, in the Passage before cited, makes it one of the Foundations of Liberty, That a Subject should not be forced to change his Country. But now admitting this to be true, The State of the Commonwealth is not therefore granted to be Inferior in the least to that of private Subjects, because they are allowed to have Liberty to remove as they please, when the Commonwealth has not Power to force them to depart against their Will. For when a Man puts himself under the Protection of any Commonwealth, he does, at least for the present, entrust himself and Fortune entirely with it, and that at least, must necessarily be exposed to Distraction and Ruin, if he may at any time be forcibly ejected from it. And since this would be the greatest Hardship imaginable upon the Subject, every Man must be supposed to have made an Agreement with the State, That he should not be forced to leave it contrary to his own Demerits. But now on the other hand, the Commonwealth doth not build its Fortune and Security upon a few common Subjects, and therefore loses little or nothing by the Departure of some Few of them. For where the great and particular Trust is placed in any Subject of extraordinary Value, 'tis usual to oblige him by particular Ties and Agreements not to leave the Commonwealth without Licence from the Government. And certainly it hardly deserves any Man's Envy, that the Subject in this Particular, should be allowed to have more Liberty than the Commonwealth. For the other Advantages which the Commonwealth enjoys more than, and beyond the Subject, are of much larger Extent. So when a Subject refuses to conform to the Commands of the Sovereign, 'tis an easy thing to force him to comply. But when a Subject is dissatisfied with the publick Administration, he hath nothing else to do, but to submit and be patient, or to remove. But however, there is sometimes a less invidious Way made use of in Commonwealths to remove suspected or useless Subjects, or burthenfome Numbers of them, to make room for the others; and that is by sending them abroad in Colonies. Tho' Colonies indeed generally consist of Persons that Voluntarily offer themselves, either upon the Hopes of mending a Broken and Decay'd Fortune; or else, that are out of Humour with the Government, and willing to be out of its Sight, when they find they are not to expect Favours from it. So Isocrates perswaded Philip to build (a) 'Cities in Asia, and to people them 'with such sort of Persons whose Poverty forced them to lead loose vagabond Lives,

(1) V. Herodot. l. 3. &amp; Justin. l. 1. c. 10.

(2) Liv. l. 1. c. 53, 54.

(3) V. Virgil. Æn. l. 2. v. 57, &amp;c.

(a) Orat. ad Philip.

‘and to rob and pillage the Country; in short, ‘with the Scum and Refuse of the People. And he commends the Prudence of that Method in the Athenians (b). What Account is to be given of that Custom, common among the Ancients, both of barbarous Nations as well as the Greeks, of sending out great Numbers of their Young People in Search of new Seats, as it were under the Conduct of some Titular God, to whom they were supposed Sacred, may be seen at large in Dionysius Halicarn. L. 1. And the same Author is of Opinion, That the Aborigines were a Settlement of this Kind, that is of Young People, who after the Custom of their Countries had been consecrated to the Gods, sent in Quest of new Seats, and that settled wherever their Valour or Fortune carried them (c). And so Pliny tells us, That the Picentes were sent out by the Sabines, Upon a Vow which they look’d upon to be sacred. And Strabo says the Samnites were descended from the Sabines the same way (d). ‘So Lydus ‘and Tyrrhenus (as Paterculus tells the Story) ‘upon a great Scarcity, threw Lots which of ‘them should take his Share of the People, and ‘go out in Search of new Seats (e). And Paulus Warnefridus † gives very near the same Account of the People of Scandinavia. But Colonies may be, and often are settled in different Methods. For either the Colony continues a Part of the Common-wealth it was sent out from; or else is obliged only to pay dutiful Respect to the Mother Common-wealth, and to be in a Readiness to defend and vindicate its Honour, and so is united to it by a sort of unequal Confederacy; or Lastly, is erected into a separate Common-wealth, and assumes the same Rights with the State it is descended from.

VII. A Man ceases to be a Subject against his Will, when for some Crime, whether truly or wrongfully laid to his Charge, he is ejected out of the Common-wealth. For when the Common-wealth refuses to own any Man for a Member of it, and forces him to depart the Dominions; he is releas’d from all Obligations which before, as a Subject, he ow’d to it. Upon which he is left to his own Choice to settle where he can. And as long as he continues in this Exile, the Common-wealth hath no Authority over him. So Jolaus (f) (1) said, That the Argives had no Power to bring him away from Athens, when they had before condemn’d him to Banishment. But certainly to be forced into Banishment, if upon a false Accusation, is a very great Injury, (though a Man of Courage will not want Supports under such a Misfortune.) And if upon a real Crime, a very severe Punishment. Philo the Jew thinks it worse than Death it self (g). For though the exiled Person may perhaps be allowed to enjoy the best or greatest Part of his Estate in his Banishment, yet the Difficulties and Inconveniencies that must attend removing it to another place are unavoidable. It must be allowed too, that ’tis a very sensible Affliction to a Man to be forced to part with his Relations and Friends; And besides, to be judged a Person unfit to live any longer in the Common-wealth is a severe Disgrace, and must leave a foul Blot upon a Man’s Honour and Memory (h); Nor can a Man have lost less than all sense of Shame, that can have no Apprehensions of the Infamy of it (i). Tully saith much on the other hand to the contrary, but it does not seem to me of much Force (k). ‘Banishment, says he, is so ‘far from being a Punishment, that I think it ‘a Refuge only and Security from it. For when ‘Men fly from Punishment and Misfortune, ‘they only change the Air and Soil, remove ‘and settle in other Countries. And therefore, ‘by the Roman Law, Exile is never made a ‘Punishment, as it is in those of other Common-wealths. But when Men would avoid Imprisonment, Death, or Ignominy, or other ‘Punishments which the Laws appoint, they ‘take Sanctuary in Exile; If they choose to stay ‘in the Common-wealth, and suffer the Law, ’tis ‘certain they cannot be deprived of the Right of Subjects, but with their Lives; but because there are none that will make that ‘Choice, their Rights are not forcibly taken ‘away from them, but they voluntarily relinquish and resign them (l). It was indeed peculiar to the ancient Roman Constitution, that no Man should be forcibly deprived of his Right of being a Member of that State (m). And by the Porcian and Sempronian Laws it was provided, that no Magistrate should inflict Capital Punishment on any Citizen without the People’s Consent. But that Criminals might not enjoy absolute Impunity, and none seem to be ejected, or forced to quit his Privilege of Citizen; they would have had it believed, that the Citizens Voluntarily chose Exile to escape Punishment (n). But the Necessity of

(b) In Panathenaic. See Bacon’s Essays, c. 33. (c) Dionys. Halicarn. l. 2. Plin. N. H. L. 3. c. 13.

(d) Strabo, l. 5. Vid. Justin. l. 24. c. 4. & Festum in Ver sacrum & in Mamertini. Liv. L. 34. c. 44.

(e) Paterculus, l. 1. c. 1. † Paulus Warnefridus de gestis Longobardorum, l. 1. c. 2. (f) Eurip. Heraclid. v. 186.

(1) See Grotius, B. 2. c. 5. f. 25. (g) Philo Judæus de Abrahamo, p. 359. A. Ed. Paris. (h) Oppian. Halicut. l. 1. v. 274, &c. (i) As Juvenal describes Marius, Sat. 1. v. 47, 48, 49.

————— Hic damnatus inani

Judicio, &c.

Exul ab octava Marius bibit & fruitur Diis

Inanis.

————— Contemns his Infamy,

Can rise at Twelve and get him drunk e’re Three.

Enjoys his Exile, and’s condemn’d in vain.

(k) Vid. Cic. Orat. pro Cæcina, c. 3. (l) V. Polyb. l. 6. c. 12. (m) Cic. pro domo sua hoc jus a majoribus prolatum, &c. C. 29. This is a Right we all received from our Ancestors, That no Roman Citizen should ever lose that Privilege but by his own Choice. (n) Diodorus Siculus, l. 3. c. 5. mentions an Institution of a quite contrary Nature among the Æthiopians. Sallust. Bell. Catilin. Cæsar in his Oration to the Senate tells them, That there were Laws, by which no Citizen’s Life could be taken from him, but that after Condemnation he should be permitted to go into Exile; and again afterward, Banishment was always allowed the condemn’d Criminal.

the Delinquents leaving his Country was sufficiently implied in the forbidding all that were condemn'd to Capital Punishment, the Use of Fire and Water within the Roman Dominions. Though it is to be confess'd, that when Banishment is inflicted, Care should be taken that the Common-wealth may be secure from all Danger that may happen, by making the Person banished an Enemy to It. For which Reason some Nations never punish with Banishment; As the Turks and Moscovites now, and formerly the Jews tho' they might be rather supposed to have had Regard to other Reasons, viz. That they might not change their Religion. The Relegatio is a milder sort of Punishment, by which the Criminal is not entirely divested of the Right of a Subject, but is only confined to inhabit within a particular District, or else prohibited coming within a particular part of the Dominions. They that lay under this latter Penalty, were by the Romans properly called (Interdicti) Persons interdicted (a). But to be banished some particular Countries and People, may well enough be thought no Punishment; As Diogenes said, when one told him that the Sinopenses had condemn'd him to Banishment, And I have condemn'd them to stay where they are.

VIII. Again, A Man is forced, against his Will, to change his Common-wealth, when he is subdued and mastered by a powerful Enemy, is forced to put himself under his Protection, and to submit to his Authority as a Subject, whether at the same time he be removed into another Country or not. And this Method must be allowed to be lawful, not only for particular Subjects to take, at least for such as are under none but the common Obligations of Subjection; but also for entire Cities and Provinces, when they find no other way left open for their Safety and Preservation (b).

IX. Sometimes also it happens, that a Subject upon Injury done by him to a Foreign Commonwealth, is by his own Sovereign deliver'd up to the injured State, to prevent Wars that might otherwise follow upon his Account. Herodotus, in his Calliope (1), gives us the Story of Timegenides and Attaginus to this purpose, who had been Authors of engaging the Thebans in an Alliance with the Persians. And here a Question is moved, Whether a Subject surrendered by his own State or Common-wealth, but not accepted by the other, continues a Member of that which was his own or not (2)? P. Mutius was of Opinion that he did not (3), because when a Subject is deliver'd up by the publick Voice and Consent of the People, he seems to be as much ejected out of the Common-wealth as he would be, had he been forbid the Use of Fire and Water. And the same Question was disputed with great Heat in the Case of Mancinus (4), who had been surrendered at Namantium, but not received. For when Mancinus afterwards offered to go in to take his place in the Senate, Rutilus the Tribune of the Commons stop'd him, and refused him Admission; telling him, That when the Pater Patratus, to release the Common-wealth from the Obligations of the Treaty he had signed, surrendered him up to the Enemies of the Roman State, he then ceased to be a Roman Citizen. However, when the Case was debated and put to the Vote, the Majority declared in Favour of him; and among others for this Reason, That no Person could properly be said to have been delivered, who was not accepted by the Party the Offer was made to. Now to me the State of the Controversy seems to be this, The Common-wealth that suffer'd the Injury, hath a Right to prosecute the Subject of the Foreign State with War. But by the Surrender of him, he is entirely consigned over to the injured Commonwealth, and may be punished as one of its own Subjects. And if he be received, the Common-wealth he was formerly a Member of, must be supposed to quit all Right to him; since by publick Consent and Approbation, he is delivered up to the Authority of the Foreign State. But if the injured Commonwealth refuse the Offer, and decline the Acceptance of the surrendered Person, the State that offered the Surrender may dispose of him as it pleases, and may either absolutely eject, or punish him according to the Demerits of his Crime. But if no Punishment happen to be inflicted on him, it is not to be supposed that he hath lost the Right of a Subject. For the Act of Surrender is in its self only a Tender made to the Foreign State of that Right, which every Common-wealth hath over its own Subjects, and not an utter Abdication and Renunciation of him. And therefore the Surrender doth not in it self deprive any Man of the Right of a Subject, unless it be declared by any particular Law in express words, That in a Concurrence of such Circumstances, the Person shall be supposed to have forfeited all Rights of a Subject. And Cicero is of the same Opinion, For, says he (c), A Citizen that hath been delivered by the Pater Patratus, if he is not accepted by the Enemy, retains the Rights and Privileges of a Citizen entire (5). But from what hath been said it may be infer'd, That if the Surrender is accepted, and afterward the Person that was given up should happen by some Chance or other to return to his own Country again; he cannot be admitted as a Subject, but by a new Grant of Favour (d). For the Right of Postliminium belongs only to Persons forced to submit to an Enemy's Power, contrary to the Consent and Approbation of their own Common-wealth; not to those that are voluntarily given up to Foreign Authority by their own State.

(a) Vid. Brisson. Select. Antiq. l. 3. c. 5. Anton. Matthæ. de Crimin. ad Tit. de Pena, c. 1. f. 6, 10. (b) Vid. Grot. l. 2. c. 6. f. 5. (1) Pag. 344. Ed. H. Steph. (2) See Grot. B. 2. c. 21. f. 4. (3) Vid. D. L. 50. t. 7. De Legat. l. 17. (4) Vid. Freinshemii Supplementor. Livianor. Decas, in Lib. 55. (c) Cic. Orat. pro Cæcina, c. 34. (5) Vid. Ciceron. in Topic. c. 3. Vid. etiam de Orat. l. 1. c. 40. & l. 2. c. 32. (d) Vid. L. 49. t. 15. l. 4. D. de Captiv. & Postlim. &c.

C H A P. XII.

Of the Changes and Dissolution of the Common-wealth.

Changes happen in the Common-wealth Three Ways; First, It may be so changed as still to continue the same; Secondly, it may be so changed as still to continue, tho' not the same it was before; Thirdly, it may be so changed as to be utterly destroy'd. The First sort of Change happens when the Form of the Commonwealth is changed; as when a Monarchy changes into an Aristocracy, or an Aristocracy or Democracy change themselves into a Monarchy (1). For in either of these Changes the Essential Form of Civil Government is still preserv'd, only the Accidental Form which results from the proper Subject of Sovereign Power is changed (2). So that the People are the same, whether the Government be Monarchical, Aristocratical, or Popular. Nay tho' it should happen, that a free People should in some War with a Sovereign Prince, be reduced to so entire a Subjection, as to be made an Accession to his Patrimony, yet they do not cease to be the same People as long as the Conqueror governs them as a distinct and separate Kingdom, and does not annex them as a Province to another People. For since the People in a large Extent, may be supposed to comprehend the Sovereign Power, it is no material Difference, whether the Prince exercises the Government over them in the most Full and Absolute manner, or not. For either way he is Head of one, and the same Body.

II. From what hath been said, the Question proposed by Aristotle (3) may be answered, Whether if a Common-wealth from a Tyranny, or an Oligarchy, become a Free Popular State, It be obliged (4) after such a Change to observe the Treaties, Capitulations, Pacta Conventa, and other Acts, made during the Government of the Tyrant or Oligarchy? The Reasons of the Negative are, That the Acts of a Tyrant or Oligarchy are not Acts of the Common-wealth, and that the Common-wealth can be obliged by its own Acts; That the Common-wealth is concern'd only where the Advancement of the publick Good is consider'd, and that where it is otherwise, the Right and Name of a Common-wealth is abus'd, and Force and Violence only have the Rule. But these Reasons are certainly weak. For not to repeat, what was said before (5) concerning Tyranny; A distempered and disordered Head is certainly a Head; and the Acts of an Head, though indisposed, are look'd upon to be Acts of the Common-wealth. And a Common-wealth must not be denied a Being, because it is in some Disorder. There was a Dispute of this Nature formerly among the Athenians which begun upon this Occasion. The Thirty that govern'd the Athenian State, borrowed Money of the Lacedemonians upon publick Faith, after the Athenians had ejected the Thirty and recovered their Liberty, the Lacedemonians demanded their Money of them; the Matter was debated at Athens, and it was resolved that it was Just, and for the Peace of the State to pay it. Demosthenes's Opinion of the Case was (a), That the People chose rather to pay the Money, than not make good their Articles of Agreement; And again, (he says) speaking to the Athenians, And then You consented to pay your Money to Those that had injured you, rather than go back from any part of your Articles (b). Nay, though a Common-wealth should be reduced to a Province, and lose the very Nature of a Common-wealth, yet the Debts it has contracted are still due. For Debts being founded in the Common-wealth, not precisely as such a Common-wealth, but as possessed of certain Goods, whoever is Master of those, must take the Debts with them.

III. But tho' the Case seems to be beyond Dispute, as to the Debts contracted for the Use of the Common-wealth, and supposed to continue upon the whole Body of it; yet whether All the Acts of an Usurper will fall under the like Determination, when he is deposed or ejected, is still a Question. If an Usurper indeed make a League with a Foreign State, for mutual Supplies of Aid against some common Enemy, and then either divide the Booty of War with his Confederate, or sell Part of it to him; The League, the Donation, and the Sale, must continue in Force after the Usurper is deposed. For the Foreign Common-wealth acquires a solid Right from such Acts, because it agreed upon Them with the Usurper as Head of his Common-wealth, and in Appearance for its Interest and Advantage: And there was no Reason why the Foreign Common-wealth should concern it self what Title the Usurper might have to this Government; supposing there be no other Fault in the Acts supposed. But then the Difficulty is, if any Usurper by Oppression and Violence rife his own Subjects of their Goods and Fortunes, and sell them to Foreign States, Whether upon Dissolution of Government, They can demand them back again? Bæcler (c) thinks they may, and that if they that bought them did it Advisedly and Deliberately, they ought to acknowledge their Fault, and be content to part with what they could neither buy, nor the other sell, without Injustice. He adds, Nay though they knew

(1) See Grot. B. 2. c. 9. f. 8. (2) See above, in B. 7. c. 5. f. 1. (3) Aristot. Pol. l. 3. c. 3. (4) V. Grot. ubi supr.
 (5) In B. 7. c. 8. f. 3, 8. (a) Demosthenes contra Leptin. (b) See Isocrates in Areopag.
 (c) Bæcler. Dissert. de eo quod agit Civitas.

nothing of the Case when they bought them. All which may perhaps appear reasonable enough in Foro Conscientiæ; but if we consider the General Practice of the world, I don't see how the Sufferers can recover what they have been thus deprived of. For as long as the Usurper continues his Oppressions, he is look'd upon to be an Enemy to the Common-wealth, and the Spoils he takes from his Subjects when transferr'd to Foreign States, are retain'd with the same Pretences of Right as other Acquisitions of War (1). But if the Usurper's Government has been confirmed by the Consent of his Subjects, Foreigners may pretend Right to the Goods of his Subjects, as Lawfully Confiscated. For as in other Cases, Nations at Peace with, and unconcern'd in the Wars of their Neighbours, treat the Parties engaged with equal Respect, attending only to the Event: So Foreign States are not supposed to be concern'd what Measures their Neighbours take in their Government at Home. But the Unjust Acts of Usurpers which are confin'd within the Common-wealth, may, when their Government expires, be rescinded and repeal'd by a Lawful Power, as far as the Occasions of the Common-wealth require. And by the Acts is also meant, not only the Laws They made, but all Grants and Alienations whatsoever, contrary to the Constitutions of the Common-wealth.

IV. In the next Place, it is a common Question, What Place ought to be allowed Princes that have rais'd themselves to Sovereign Power over People before Free, and what to Free People after Extirpation of Kingly Government? To this Grotius answers (a), that a Common-wealth may challenge the same Place after such a Change, which it had by it self, or Representative in any Assembly before. But to me it seems necessary to distinguish, whether for Example, the Prince that has obtain'd the Government of the People before free, continue in the Assembly or System he was before Member of: Or whether he divides from it, and enters upon a Separate Administration of his own Affairs. For in the First Case, without dispute he can have no Precedence to any other Place than what the free People were before contented with, notwithstanding that Greatness and Majesty with which the Persons of Sovereign Princes are invested. And so on the other hand, a free People after Extirpation of Kingly Government, may demand the same Place in any Common Assembly which was allowed to their Princes before. But if the Prince or People separate from their Old Assemblies or System, the Place that anciently belonged to them ought to be no Prejudice to them, or be any Argument for the Precedence of others that had formerly that Privilege in the Common Assembly; since all Sovereign Powers are naturally equal.

V. Changes which so disguise the Commonwealth, that it appears no longer the same, happen generally these two Ways; either First, when One Common-wealth breaks into Two, or More; or Secondly, when Many distinct Common-wealths Unite into One. The First, may be the Effect either of Mutual Consent, or else of Force of War (2). Different Common-wealths may be Form'd out of one by Common Consent, by sending out Colonies in the manner usual in Old Greece. For the Romans afterward, (who are followed now by the Nations of Europe,) when they sent a Colony abroad, continued it under the Jurisdiction of the Mother Common-wealth or Greater Country. But the Colonies planted by the Greeks, and after their Method, constituted Particular Common-wealths, were oblig'd only to pay a kind of Deference and dutiful Submission to their Mother Common-wealth (b). But however a Colony settled after this Form is not oblig'd to pay the Debts contracted by the Mother Common-wealth, Unless that Article was expressly agreed upon when the Colony was settled. Because All Publick Debts in the last Resort affect the Goods and Effects of the Common-wealth, which the Colony ('tis supposed) hath no share in. And tho' Particular Persons in the Colony might perhaps have enjoy'd the Benefit of those Debts while they were Members of the Old Common-wealth; yet when the Mother Common-wealth dismisses them Free, It seems to declare that they shall not be liable to pay any thing upon that Account. But indeed, upon a stricter View, the Common-wealth is not really in it self Changed upon the sending out Colonies; Neither doth it cease to appear the same; but only, as in a Natural Generation, one Common-wealth gives Birth to another. But where a Kingdom divides by common Consent into Two or more distinct Common-wealths, the Publick Patrimony, with all the Debts and Incumbrances upon them, ought to be equally shared among them. Tho' indeed when such Separations are made by mutual Agreement, there is commonly express Provision made for such Cases.

VI. Another Change in the Common-wealth, and by which it ceaseth to be the Same, is, Where Two People Unite (not by way of Confederacy or Subjection to one common Sovereign, but) in such a manner that the Two States grow entirely into One. In which Case Grotius (3) thinks, that the Rights, which the particular Common-wealths that make the Union enjoy'd before, are not lost, but communicated to the Whole Body, as also the Debts and Incumbrances, unless the contrary hath been particularly agreed upon (c). But it must be considered, whether the Two or More People Unite with design to erect a New Common-wealth, where all are to enjoy the same Rights; as suppose Two Distinct People subject to a Government of the Populace abolish

(1) See Grot. B. 3. c. 9. f. 14.

(a) L. 2. c. 9. f. 8.

(2) See Grot. ubi Supra, f. 10.

(b) Vid. Thucyd. l. 1. Hen. Valerius ad Excerpt. Peiresc. p. 6. & 7. Hobbes de Cive, c. 9. f. 8.

(3) Ubi Supra, f. 9.

(c) Vid. Liv. l. 1. c. 52. init.

their Form of Constitution and unite into one Kingdom; or Two Kingdoms take away their Fundamental Laws, displace the Ancient Line Royal, and set up a new Kingdom. By this Union 'tis manifest, that their former Common-wealths are subverted, and a New One erected upon their Ruins. But when One Common-wealth unites with Another, in such manner that One keeps its Government and States, and the Subjects of the other change their Country, and are taken into the Rights and Privileges of the Foreign Common-wealth, it is evident that One is swallowed up and lost in the Other. But that which remains doth not cease to be the same, tho' from such an Accession it receiveth a considerable Increase in Strength and Power. But there are no ways of Uniting distinct Common-wealths, so that Each shall preserve its own separate Constitutions, and be as it was before; but by strict Alliance and Confederacy, which rather gives Rise to a System, than a Common-wealth, properly call'd.

VII. The last Change, that by which the Common-wealth entirely ceaseth to be, happens when the People themselves are either dissolved, or destroyed (1). It is a common saying, that Kings are Mortal but Common-wealths Eternal (2). By which it is not meant, that it is impossible that a People should ever be scatter'd or utterly extinguish'd by any Violence or Fatal Period; but that they do not suffer such Decays of Nature, as particular Men do, after a certain Course of Years. For tho' Individuals change, yet there continues a constant Succession, either by Resort from Neighbouring States, or by the natural Issues of Procreation at Home. By a continual Course of which Successions, the People always appear the same, and possess the same Rights and Privileges, tho' particular Subjects are frequently changed (a), As Virgil saith of his Bees,

*Ergo ipsas quamvis angustus terminus ævi
Excipiat, (neque enim plus septima ducitur ætas)
At genus immortale manet, multosq; per annos
Stat fortuna domus, & avi numerantur avorum.*

Tho' seven short Springs conclude their vital Date,
Yet by re-peopling their decaying State,
Their Ancient Stocks eternally remain,
And in an endless Race their Children's Children reign.
Mr. Addison.

The Sense of the Old Philosophers upon the Diversity of Bodies will perhaps give us a clearer view of this matter. And Plutarch tells us, (b) that some Bodies (according to them) are compounded of Parts disjoin'd, as a Navy, an Army, and the like; others consist of compact'd Parts, as an House, a Ship, &c. a third sort are framed of United Parts, such as are combin'd into one Nature, as Every particular Animal (c). Which in other Words may be thus express'd; A Body in general is a thing contain'd by some Habitude, Coherence, or Tie, so that it constitute One. The Ligament, or Tie, by which the Parts of a Body are join'd and united, is threefold, Natural, Artificial, and Moral. The Natural Tie or Bond, is that by which Natural Bodies are contain'd, the Artificial is that by which things otherwise divided in Nature, are by Human Industry brought to Unity and Continuity: and the Moral Tie lastly, is that by which several Individuals are connected by Human Institution, and supposed to make one Body. And this Body may indeed consist of Beast, as in a Flock or Herd: But here, I suppose it to extend no further than to a Combination of a Number of Men. And from these different Modes of Union, result those three sorts of Bodies, the Natural, Artificial, and Moral. All which are supposed to continue the same, as long as that Connection which at first join'd the Parts together, is not all at once dissolved and broken. And thus therefore a Man still appears the same, tho' innumerable little Particles of his Body perspire; and are constantly supplied with new, from the Nutrimment he takes in (d). And tho' some of the Ancients thought Theseus's Ship (about which they had so many Disputes), the same; tho' in Tract of Time it went through so many Repairs, that hardly any thing remain'd of the Materials it was first built with (e). Plutarch says on this Subject (f). A Common-wealth is One entire Body, which comprehends a Number of Members, and resembles the Natural, that it neither loseth its nature by Succession of Years, nor is it liable to Change by alteration of time, but always preserves the same Affections and Properties, that are agreeable to its Constitution, as long as it continues united by common Ties and Obligations, and preserves the Unity of a publick Body. He adds, That particular Men are more exposed to the Injuries of Time, than Common-wealths; for if a Man be absent from his Friend but a few Years; at his Return he discovers a Change in his Constitution and Face, and often such Alterations in his Humour and Behaviour, that he hardly knows him again.

(1) V. Grotium, ubi Supra, f. 3.

(2) Tiber. apud Tacit. Annal. L. 3. c. 6.

(a) Vide Lucianum, in amoris, p. 888. Ed. Amst. T. 1. Nature, being sensible that We were all framed of perishing Matter, and that Fate had given so short a Period to every Man's Life, provided that the Loss of one Man should be repair'd by the Birth of another; and balanced the Number of Them that died with a new Generation, that so by continued Successions we might in some sense, live to Immortality, Virg. Georg. l. 4. v. 206, &c.

(b) Plutarch. conjug. Præcep. p. 142. F. (c) Vide L. 4. t. 3. l. 30. D. de Usurp. Usucap. & L. 6. t. 1. l. 23. f. 5. D. de rei vindicat. Seneca Epist. 102. (d) Brown. Relig. Med. S. 36. This very Body I carry about me came in at my Mouth, and all this Bulk of Flesh lay once upon my Trencher; in fine we devour our own selves. Seneca Epist. 58. Plut. de Ei apud Delph. edit. Xyland. p. 392. A. B. Lucret. l. 3. v. 860, &c. But this Passage must be cautiously interpreted, that it may not reach the Article of the Resurrection. (e) Plut. Theseus. p. 10. C. Vid. L. 5. t. 1. l. 76. D. de Judiciis. Vid. L. 7. t. 4. l. 10. D. quibus modis Ususfructus amittitur. Tho' this Law seems to be contrary to those in L. 46. t. 3. l. 98. S. ult. D. de Solution. in l. 83. f. 5. Vid. Dionysium Halicarnassæum, l. 1. de Casâ Romuli. Alex. ab Alex. andro. l. 3. c. 1. Mich. Piccardus ad Polit. Aristot. l. 3. c. 3. (f) Plutarch. de fera Num. Vindict. p. 555. B. C. Edit. Wesh.

But if a Man after Thirty Years absence, come again into the same Common-wealth, he not only finds the same Houses and Buildings, but the same Institutions, and the same Manners and Dispositions in the People (a). Tho' indeed it is impossible but in long Course of time, A Nation should receive some Alterations and not appear the same as to all Effects (b). Hobbes (Philos. Prim. c. 11. f. 7.) chooses to express the same thing thus, When any thing is denominated from such a Form, which is the Principle of Motion in it, as long as that Principle remains, the Individual is the same.

VIII. But notwithstanding the Truth of all this, it is possible for a Common-wealth to be utterly destroy'd; And that either when the Materiale of the People or whole Number of Subjects perish or scatter, or when the Moral Tie which joins the People together is utterly broken and dissolved; the Materiale or Body of the People perishes, either when the Parts absolutely necessary to the Subsistence of the Body are taken away, or when the Body it self is destroy'd. Grotius (c) gives us several Instances of Nations utterly destroy'd all at once, by publick Fatalities. And here Enquiry may be made, whether if after such a general Desolation some Weak Remainders are left that cannot be call'd a People, They may be supposed to retain the Rights of their Ancient Nation? Grotius is of Opinion, l. 2. c. 9. §. 4. That the Propriety which the People had, as They were private Persons, might still subsist in their Remains, but that nothing belongs to them which agreed to the People, as Such: That is, that They may claim Inheritance of the Possessions and Substance of those that were once their Fellow Subjects, but have no Right to assume Sovereign Power, or any of those Rights that are the necessary Consequents of it (d). But however, if the Few that are left were reduced to so thin a Number not by War, but some other Casual Misfortune, and are able to defend themselves against the Invasions of their Neighbours, till either by Supplies of their own Growth or by invitations to Others to settle among them, They grow up again into a People, I see no reason why They may not claim the Rights of the Former People (e). Especially since it has not yet been agreed what Number of Masters of Families is necessary to make a People; and since when first Mankind divided into Nations, a very small Number made a People. In Justin (f) Artaxerxes's Fifty Sons are call'd Tantus Populus, and Niobe calls her fourteen Children a People (g). Again, a Multitude of Men of which a People consists is broken and dissolved, when not every Particular Subject perishes; But when upon Pestilence, Discontent, or Sedition they voluntarily desert and scatter elsewhere; or else are disunited and forcibly carried away, so that they can never meet or make Head again. And therefore it was Flattery rather than Truth, when the People of Ilium boasted, that they were Ancestors to the Romans (h).

IX. The Form or Species of the People is destroy'd, (1) if either the whole, or the perfect Community of Right be lost. The Community of Right and Government is entirely lost, when the Subjects scatter different ways and settle in different Common-wealths, whether they retain Personal Liberty, or are forced to submit to a Condition of Slavery; the Story of Capua is an Example of this Nature (i). A perfect Community of Right between the Members of the same Common-wealth is lost; when tho' the particular Subjects are allowed their Personal Liberty, and are permitted to inhabit their own Cities, and live in their own Country, yet they are under the Government and Dominion of a Foreign State. And such a People are usually said to be reduced into the Form of a Province. But barely the changing Country, evacuating Towns, Law of Forts, are not Alterations sufficient to make a People cease to be the same.

(a) Vid. Grot. l. 2. c. 9. (b) Vid. Supra, l. 8. c. 3. f. 29. (c) L. 2. c. 9. f. 4. Vid. L. 7. t. 4. l. 21. 31. D. quib. modis Ususfruct. amit. &c. (d) Vid. D. d. 1. (e) Vid. Justin. l. 5. c. 6. n. 5. (f) L. 10. c. 1. s. 6. Ovid. Met. l. 6. v. 197. (g) Apuleius Apolog. Fifteen Freeman make a People. Vid. L. 3. t. 4. l. 7. f. 2. D. quod cujuscunque Univerfit. &c. Where the Title of a Community (a Corporation, not a Commonwealth) is said to remain in one Person, but that he is under a Necessity of taking in Associates in time. (h) Vid. Buchanan Res. Scot. l. 4. fin. How the Scots were dispers'd by Maximus, Just. l. 28. c. 1. & l. 31. c. 8. (i) Grot. ubi Supra, f. 6. (i) Vid. Liv. l. 26. c. 16.

F I N I S.

A N

INDEX of the AUTHORS Explain'd, O R, Cited in the Text or Notes of this Edition, Or refer'd to in Monf. Barbeyrac's Translation.

The Roman Characters refer to the Book, the First Figure to the Chapter, the Latter to the Section.

A.

- A Gathias (Hist.) I. 7. 6. II. 3. 9. II. 4. 13.
Ælian (Claud.) I. 1. 10. I. 5. 2. Ib. 14. I. 6. 3.
 II. 4. 13. II. 4. 19.
Alvarez (Franc.) Of the Practice of Thieves in Abyssinia.
 II. 3. 8.
Ambrose (Saint) II. 3. 3.
Antonine (Mar. Aurel.) Reflections upon one of his Maxims in relation to Sinners. I. 3. 12. cited I. 5. 13, 14. I. 6. 11. I. 7. 15. II. 2. 7, II. 3. 10, 14, 15, 21. II. 4. 4, 5, 15.
Aristophanes (Poet) I. 4. 8.
Aristotle (Philos.) I. 2. 4, 6, 7. I. 4. 8, 9, 10. I. 4. 1, 4, 6. His Contradiction in relation to Pleasure and Pain. Ib. f. 7. I. 5. 7, 10. His ἀμαρτήματα. Ib. f. 13. I. 6. 11, 18. His Thoughts upon Justice. I. 7. 12, 13. False Reasoning. Ib. f. 17. His Notion of Injury. Ib. f. 15, 16, 17. II. 1. 6. II. 2. 7. III. 5. 6, 8, 9. II. 4. 10. His Definition of an Oath explain'd. IV. 2. 18. His False Reasoning to decry lending Money upon Usury. V. 7. 10. The inhuman and wicked Expedient he approves of, to stop the too great Increase of Citizens. VI. 1. 8. His False Reasoning upon the Antiquity of Monarchical Government. VII. 5. 4. His Thoughts upon mixt Government. Ibid. f. 12. Reflection upon what he says of Absolute Monarchy. VII. 6. 5.
Arrian upon Epiſtetus. I. 3. 11. I. 4. 3. I. 5. 14. I. 6. 5, 12. I. 7. 9. II. 2. 9, 16, 23. II. 4. 7, 10, 13, 15. II. 5. 3.
Aulus Gellius. I. 5. 14. II. 4. 13, 15. II. 5. 4. A Passage of his explain'd. V. 4. 5.
Author de Principiis Justi & Decori. I. 5. 13. His Reasons not strong enough to establish a Twofold Natural Law, Divine and Human. II. 3. 5, 11, 12. II. 4. 18. II. 5. 2.

B.

- Bacon* (Francis) I. 4. 5. I. 4. 6. II. 3. 15. II. 4. 4, 5, 13, 14, 15. Examination of what he says in Defence of taking up Arms against the Americans. VIII. 6. 5.
Balcanon (Theodore) What he says upon Self-Defence referred. II. 5. 9.
 The Author of the Political Balance consider'd. VII. 5. 9.
Benzo Hist. Nov. Orb. II. 4. 4.
Bion Idyll. II. 4. 10.
Boccaline (Trajan) His Reason of Mahomet allowing Polygamy, consider'd. VI. 1. 16.
Bodin (John) His harmonious Proportion of vindicative Justice, unjust. VIII. 3. 25. The weak Reason he alleges in the Matter of Divorce. VI. 1. 22.
Bæcler on Grotius. I. 6. 15. II. 2. 4. II. 3. 22, 23. censured in relation to the Right of Self-Defence. II. 5. 3. proves not fully that an equal Distribution of Goods is commanded in the Decalogue. IV. 4. 4. Examination of his Thoughts upon the Original of the Propriety of Goods. Ib. 12, 13.
Poetius (de Consol. Philos.) II. 4. 3.
Brayere (De La) One of his Thoughts taken from Seneca. III. 6. 16.

- Budeus* (Jo. Franc.) expresses not well Hobbes's Thoughts upon the Power of a Mother over her Children. VI. 2. 2. Reflections upon what he says of the Condition of Children in Comparison with that of Slaves. VI. 3. 9. His Thoughts upon War when just or not. VIII. 1. 8.
Busbequius. Of the Practice of the Colchians in relation to Theft. II. 3. 8.

C.

- Cato* (Marc.) I. 3. 7. Censured. V. 7. 10.
Chamberlain's present State of England. I. 5. 14.
Cæsar (Ca. Jul.) Bel. Civ. II. 2. 8. Bel. Gal. Ib. f. 10. II. 3. 14.
Charron (Peter) censured for his Thoughts upon the Faculties of Beasts. I. 3. 1. I. 4. 5. II. 1. 4, 6, 7. II. 2. 7. II. 3. 7, 8. II. 4. 4, 10, 11, 13, 16, 19. A Reflection upon what he says of Revenge. VIII. 3. 23. Censured. VI. 1. 10.
Cicero (M. Tullius) I. 1. 1, 7, 14. I. 2. 10. A Passage in his Tuscul. Quest. explain'd. I. 3. 3. I. 3. 8. How he ought to be understood concerning the Foundation of Honesty and Justice. II. 4. 3. I. 4. 7. I. 5. 5, 9, 10, 12, 14. I. 6. 6, 11, 14. I. 7. 2. I. 8. 4. II. 2. 4, 6, 7, 8. II. 3. 6, 13, 14, 15, 16. II. 4. 4, 5, 13, 14, 15, 19. II. 5. 3, 4, 14. Defended against Lactantius. II. 5. 14. A Passage of his Off. censured. III. 2. 2. See his Defence in Barbeyrac's Notes, N. 4. A Reflection upon what he says of Promises made to Robbers and Pirates. III. 6. 2. In what sense he ought to be taken concerning Diffimulation. IV. 1. 9. What he says of an Oath made to a Pirate, defended against Grotius. IV. 2. 8. A Passage about an Oath explain'd. IV. 2. 15. His too rigid Determination about Merchants. V. 3. 4. Censured for what he says upon Promises which one is not oblig'd to keep. V. 12. 22. See his Defence in Mr. Barbeyrac's Notes. Ib. N. 1.
Claudian (Poet) I. 5. 11. II. 2. 10. II. 4. 9, 10. prais'd VII. 6. 3.
Connarus (Francis) An Examination of what he says in Relation to simple Promises. III. 5. 9, &c.
Corinthians (1 Epist.) VI. 12. VII. 6, 7, 8, 9. I. 2. 8. VII. 38. II. 3. 21. A Passage in the XI. Chapter explain'd. V. 3. 10. Mr. Barbeyrac's Notes, N. 3.
Cujacius (James) censured for what he says of one Law of the Twelve Tables. II. 5. 17. Concerning Prescription. IV. 12. 7.
Cumberland (Richard) I. 2. 4, 5, 6, 11. I. 3. 2, 3. I. 4. 4, 7. I. 6. 4. An Examination of his Opinion upon the Sanction of Natural Laws. I. 6. 14. I. 7. 13. II. 1. 3, 5, 7, 8. II. 3. 5, 10, 15, 16, 20, 21. His Prolegom. II. 3. 12. His Maxim about Marriage censured. VI. 1. 7. His Arguments against Hobbes. VII. 2. 4.

D.

- Des-Cartes* (Renat.) I. 2. 7. censured for what he says concerning Doubts. I. 3. 9. I. 4. 7. I. 5. 5. De Pass. II. 3. 14.
Demosthenes (Phil.) II. 5. 6, 7, 14

An INDEX of the AUTHORS Explain'd, &c.

Diodorus Siculus. I. 5. 14. I. 6. 14, 17. I. 8. 3. II. 2. 2, 10. II. 3. 10, 20. II. 4. 13, 15, 19. His false Hypothesis upon the Original of Mankind. IV. 4. 8. The meaning of the Law of Charondas, which he relates. VI. 1. 7.
Dio Crysoftom. II. 3. 3, 12, 18, 20. His Definition of a State. VII. 2. 13. See his Defence in Mr. Barbeyrac's Notes, N. 1.
Dio Cassius. I. 6. 13. II. 2. 10.
Diogenes Laertius. I. 5. 11. I. 8. 1. II. 3. 1, 8, 10, 14. II. 4. 4.
Dionysius Halicarnassens. I. 5. 8. I. 6. 2, 10.

E.

Empiricus (Sextus) II. 2. 10. II. 3. 7. censured. II. 8. 9.
Epicetus. I. 3. 7. II. 3. 14.
Euripides (Poet) I. 5. 10. I. 8. 5. II. 2; 2. II. 3. 5, 9. II. 4. 1, 4, 10, 11. VIII. 6. 5. Hipp. VI. 1. 10.
Eusebius (Eccl. Hist.) de Præpar. Evang. II. 3. 8. Eccl. Hist. II. 4. 19.
Eustratius upon Arist. A false Maxim which he advances concerning Adultery. I. 4. 9. I. 5. 13.
Exodus, III. 4. I. 1. 14. II. 14, 16. II. 5. 3. XXIII. 4, 5. Ib. The Reason of a Law, concerning things borrowed and lost. V. 4. 6. See Mr. Barbeyrac's Notes, N. 12.

F.

Felden (ad Grot.) I. 6. 7. I. 7. 12. II. 3. 23.
Filmer (Robert) censured concerning the Foundation of the Right of Propriety. IV. 4. 4. Concerning the Foundation of the Authority of Kings. VI. 2. 10.
Florus (Lucius) II. 4. 19. II. 5. 3.

G.

Gassendus (Syntag. Epicu.) I. 7. 13. II. 3. 10.
Gramond (Bartholomew) A Reflection upon a Maxim of that Historian. VIII. 4. 21.
Grafwinkel (Theodore) A Remark upon what he says concerning Natural Instinct. VI. 1. 3.
Grand (Le) I. 4. 2. I. 4. 7.
Gronovius (John Frederick) explains not right a Passage of Grotius. V. 6. 2. about Princes are above the Laws. VII. 6. 3. Against the perpetual Superiority of the People over the Prince, Ib. 5. Concerning Debts contracted by the Prince's Predecessor. VII. 7. 12. Concerning Disputes about Succession to the Throne. Ib. 15. Of the Power of a Governour of a Province. VIII. 6. 11.
Grotius (Hugh) censured for what he says concerning the Foundation of the Morality of Human Actions. I. 2. 6. Defended, see Mr. Barbeyrac's Notes on II. 3. 4. n. 4. The Application he makes of some Passages of Scripture. I. 2. 6. Defended, see Mr. Barbeyrac's Notes. An Examination of what he says concerning Doubts in Matters of Morality. I. 2. 9. Censured for his Definition of Law. I. 6. 4. A Reflection upon what he says of the Sins of Infirmary. I. 5. 8. What he says concerning Doubts of Conscience. I. 3. 8. Concerning his Division and Thoughts of Justice. I. 7. 11. His false Application of a Passage in Plutarch. II. 3. 4. His Definition of Natural Law, Ibid. An Examination of his Opinion, That the Laws of Nature would take place, even if there were no God, Ib. f. 19. A Remark upon the Reason he gives of Moses's Law concerning Thieves. II. 5. 18. What he says about the Lawfulness of taking another Man's Goods in extreme Necessity. II. 6. 6. A false Application of a Maxim of the Civil Law, Ibid. A Refutation of what he says concerning the Reparation that a Thief owes when the thing stolen is quite lost or perish'd. III. 1. 11. An Examination of what he says concerning the Right of passing through another Man's Ground. III. 3. 5. Concerning Transportation of Merchandize. Ib. f. 6. Concerning Forc'd Promises. III. 6. 12. A false Explication of a Law of the Digest. Ib. f. 15. An Examination of his Opinion concerning unlawful Promises. III. 7. 8. An Explication of what he says concerning the Conditions annex'd to a Promise. III. 8. 4. A Reflection on what he says concerning Equivocations. IV. 1. 13. Concerning his Reason why one may speak a false thing to Children, Ib. f. 15. Why the Action of Rahab is commended in Scripture, Ib. f. 15. Censured for what he says about the Oath that Laban made to Jacob. IV. 2. 4. Defended, see Mr. Barbeyrac's Notes, Ib. n. 2. A Refutation of his Thoughts upon the Oath of Joshua, Ib. f. 7. Concerning the Obligation of an Oath, Ib. f. 6. An Examination of his Thoughts upon the Original of the Community of Goods. IV. 4. 9. A Remark upon his Proof, that one may have a Propriety in a River. IV. 5. 3. A Passage of Ovid is misapplied by him. IV. 6. 8. A Remark upon what he says of the Acquisition of Propriety by the Right of the First Possessor. IV. 6. 14. An Observation ill founded upon one of the Roman Laws concerning Accessions. IV. 7. 5. A false Explication of some Terms which concern the Measures of the Limits of Lands. IV. 7. 11. An Examination of his Definition of a Will and Testament. IV. 10. 2. The Power of disposing of our Goods by Will is derived from the Law of Nature. IV. 10. 4. An Examination of his Thoughts concerning the Foundation of Prescription. IV. 12. 8. A false Application of some Examples to the Possession of the Goods of another upon Credit. IV. 13. 4. A Reflection upon what he says of the Natural Measure of the Price of Things. V. 1. 4. Examples of a mixt Contract not rightly apply'd. V. 2. 10. Why the Seller ought to discover the Faults of the thing sold. V. 3. 3. Explication of what he says concerning Commissions. V. 4. 5. An Examination of his Decision in Case that Two buy the same thing. V. 5. 5. His Misapplication of the Action of Joseph the Patriarch. Ib. f. 7. An Example from Strabo misapply'd, Ibid. An Examination of what he says concerning one's Labour being serviceable to many at once. V. 6. 4. A Remark on his Thoughts upon Usury. V. 7. 11. Of his Distinction of things Favourable and Odius. V. 12. 12, 13, &c. A Remark upon a Rule he gives in Case Two Negative Laws clash. Ibid. 23. An Examination of what he says concerning the Division of Sovereignty. VII. 4. 14. That Princes are above the Law. VII. 6. 3. See Barbeyrac's Notes, N. 4. An Examination of his Thoughts on the Authority of the Roman Dictators. Ib. f. 15. That the Christian Religion does not permit the Resistance of the Supreme Power. VII. 8. 5. An Examination of what he says of Justice, to which the Imposition of Punishment belongs. VIII. 3. 5. A Reflection upon what he says of some Sins which ought not to be punish'd before a Human Tribunal. Ib. 14. A Reflection upon his saying that there is Room for Pardon even antecedently to the Penal Law. Ib. f. 16. The Reasons for granting Pardon. Ib. f. 17. An Explication of his Maxim concerning the Succours that one ought to grant to an Allie. VIII. 6. 14. A Remark of what he says of those to whom belongs the Booty taken from the Enemy. Ib. f. 18. An Examination of what he says, that all Compacts made with an Enemy ought to be observ'd. VIII. 7. 2. Censured for what he says concerning the Time that Truces are limited by. Ib. f. 8. Acts of Hostility are Unlawful during the Truce. Ib. f. 9. Concerning Men taken in the Enemy's Territories when the Truce expires. Ib. f. 11. That 'tis Unlawful for Subjects to depart in great Companies out of the Kingdom. VIII. 11. 4.

Gunther (Poet) I. 4. 4. A Remark on what he says of the Emperor Frederick Barbeross. VIII. 5. 2. See Mr. Barbeyrac's Notes.

H.

Herodotus. I. 4. 5. I. 5. 8. II. 3. 9. II. 4. 19. V. 1. 13.
Hesiod. II. 3. 2. II. 5. 3.
Hobbes (Thomas) censured for what he says concerning inanimate Beings. I. 1. 12. A false Reason, that he alleges to prove that Morality and Polity are capable of Demonstration. I. 2. 4. Censured for what he says of Liberty. I. 4. 2. and of the Nature of Good. Ib. 4. and of the common Rule of Vertue and Vice. I. 4. 6. A Reflection upon what he says of Counsels. I. 5. 14. I. 6. 1. Ib. f. 2. Censured about the Foundation of the Obligation of Natural Laws. Ib. 4. and II. 2. 20. and about the Foundation of the Sovereignty that God has over Men. I. 6. 10. An Examination of what

An INDEX of the AUTHORS Explain'd, &c.

what he says of Distributive Justice. I. 7. 9. Of Justice, Injustice and Injury. Ib. f. 12. His Comparison betwixt the State of Nature and that of a Society. II. 2. 3. Of the Foundation of Natural Law. Ibid. and II. 3. 16, &c. A Refutation of his Principle, That the State of Nature is a State of War. II. 2. 5, &c. What he says of Robbery authoriz'd among the Ancients. Ib. f. 10. Censur'd about the Natural Equality of Men. III. 2. 2. What he says of Lots examin'd. III. 2. 5. His false Opinion of Atheism. III. 4. 4. An Examination of his Opinion about the Nature of conveying a Right. III. 5. 2, 3. Fear of being deceiv'd does not justify the Non-performance of a Contract. III. 6. 9. Of the Validity of Promises and forc'd Contracts. Ib. f. 13. Concerning his Maxim, That 'tis sufficient for one to do all he can to keep his word. III. 7. 4. Whether a Man can by Covenant oblige himself to suffer such Evils, as exceed the ordinary Strength of Human Nature. Ib. 5. His difference between simple Pacts and Contracts. V. 2. 1. Of the Foundation of the Authority of Fathers and Mothers. VI. 2. 2, 3. That a separate and independent Family is a State. VI. 2. 10. VI. 3. 1. Of Slaves. VI. 3. 7, 8. Of the Means of living securely in the State of Nature. VII. 1. 8. That there is no Covenant between a Sovereign and his Subjects. VII. 2. 9, &c. That the People rule in every State. Ib. f. 14. Of the Constitution of Democracy. VII. 5. 6. Of Aristocracy. Ib. f. 8. Of Criminals, who are executed without the ordinary Course of Judicial Proceedings. VII. 6. 12. That Sovereignty is absolute. Ib. f. 13. Of Kingdoms establish'd by a free Consent of the People. Ib. f. 17. Concerning Interregnums. VII. 7. 9. Of the Succession of Hereditary Kingdoms. Ib. 11. That Frugality is not a Virtue in Princes. VII. 9. 10. That Civil Laws ought not to be contrary to Natural Laws. VIII. 1. 2. That the Precepts of the Decalogue are Civil Laws. Ib. f. 4. There was nothing Just or Unjust before the Civil Government. Ib. f. 5. Of the Foundation of that Power that Sovereigns have over the Lives of their Subjects. VIII. 3. 1. Of the Definition of Pain. Ib. f. 7. Of Criminals guilty of High-treason. Ib. f. 33. Of Duelling. VIII. 4. 8. Of the Foundation of Honour. Ib. f. 13. Of the Fables of the Heathen Poets. Ib. The Right that Sovereigns have to the Goods of their Subjects. VIII. 5. 1.

Homerus (Poet) A Remark upon a Reflection that he makes of Heſtor. IV. 2. 14. Whether Money was us'd in the time of the Trojan War. V. 5. 1. See Mr. Barbeyrac's Notes.

Horace (Poet) I. 4. 5. I. 8. 5. II. 2. 2. Ib. f. 6. II. 3. 10. II. 4. 9, 10, 15, 17. II. 5. 1.

Hornius (John Frederick) The false Reason he makes use of to prove, that some Societies are call'd Simple. VI. 1. 1. Of the Foundation of the Authority that a Husband has over his Wife. Ib. f. 12, &c. How Civil Societies are form'd. VII. 1. 5. Of the Original of Sovereignty. VII. 3. 3. His Opinion of Free States censur'd. VII. 5. 5. Of Conquests. VII. 7. 3, 4.

I.

Iamblicus Protrept. II. 1. 6. II. 3. 15, 18. Explain'd. Ib. f. 20.

Josephus (Jewish Hist.) censur'd about Gain. IV. 4. 6.

Joshua (his Book) in Chap. IX. of his Oath to the Gibeonites. IV. 2. 7.

Isocrates ad Dem. I. 4. 8. IV. 2. 2. Ad Nicoel. IV. 1. 1. VI. 1, 19. VII. 9. 2, 4, 5, 8. Nicoles. VII. 5. 22. Paneg. III. 2. 8. IV. 5. 8. Explain'd and Defended. VII. 2. 13. See Mr. Barbeyrac's Notes. VIII. 9. 3, 4. Ad Phil. II. 3. 7. VIII. 6. 4. Ib. 9. 5. Ib. 11. 6. Archid. I. 3. 7. VIII. 4. 12. Ib. 9. 5. Areop. I. 7. 11. II. 3. 10. Ib. 4. 15. V. 9. 1. VII. 2. 13. Ib. 9. 4. VIII. 4. 5. Ib. 12. 2. De Pace. VII. 1. 2. Ib. 5. 11. H. l. II. 4. 13. Bufir. II. 4. 15. An unfit Epithet apply'd to Nile. IV. 5. 7. VIII. 4. 12. Of Nobility. Ib. f. 25. VIII. 3. 17. Ib. 4. 14, and 5, 6. Panath. Of the Triballians. II. 2. 10. The Persian's Hatred of the Greeks. III. 2. 8. IV. 1. 13. VII. 9. 5, 11. VIII. 1. 3. Ib. 11. 6. De Parm. II. 5. 3. VIII. 3. 10, 27.

Trapez. V. 13. 9. Adv. Call. I. 6. 2. II. 5. 2. III. 4. 1. VIII. 4. 7. Agin. IV. 11. 18.

Juvenal. A Thought of that Poet concerning Nobility, taken from Sabbust. VIII. 4. 31. See Mr. Barbeyrac's Notes.

L.

Lactantius. II. 3. 1. Ib. 4. 18. II. 4. 19. Concerning Self-defence. II. 5. 14. His false Explication of a Passage in Virgil. IV. 4. 8.

Laertius (Diogenes) I. 5. 11. I. 7. 13. I. 8. 1. II. 3. 1. Ib. 8. 10, 14. II. 4. 4.

Law (Roman) How Justice is defin'd by it. I. 7. 6. The Definition of Natural Law. II. 2. 2. By the Delivery of the Deeds, the Creditor forgives the Debt. V. 11. 7. Concerning an Article of a Lease. Ibid. A Limitation of that Maxim, That what is Null in its Original, cannot be made Valid by an After-Act. III. 6. 14. An Explication of a Law concerning Simple Promises. III. 6. 15. Of another which relates to Strumpets. III. 7. 9. Of the Law that permits the swearing against a Woman, that she is not with Child. IV. 2. 2. A Remark upon the Institution of the Emperor Frederick, concerning the Oaths of Children in their Minority. IV. 2. 11. Pigeons and Peacocks are falsely reckon'd amongst those Fowls which are term'd Wild. IV. 6. 5. A Remark on what they say of wild Beasts which recover their Natural Liberty. Ib. f. 12. A Defence of that Maxim, That Plants go with the Soil. IV. 7. 5. About Paper and Parchment. Ib. f. 7. Concerning Specification or turning a thing into a new Form or Shape. Ib. f. 10. Disputes about Possession. IV. 9. 7. Of the Definition of Prescription. IV. 12. 2. Of the Division of Conventions and Contracts. V. 2. 2, 3. An Examination of a Law, which prescribes, what Damage is sufficient to make void a Contract. V. 3. 9. Of another Law which permits one Man to overreach another. Ib. f. 10. A Defence of that Law, which concerns Judges whose Opinions are different. VII. 2. 18. A Remark upon a Division of Obligations. VIII. 3. 5. Examples of an unjust Partiality in punishing Crimes. Ib. f. 25. A Reflection on what the Civil Law saith concerning the Infamy of the Fact. VIII. 4. 7.

Libanius. I. 3. 15. I. 5. 14. I. 6. 14. I. 7. 2. II. 1. 6. II. 3. 15, 18. II. 4. 7. II. 5. 2, 12.

Lipſius (Justus) A false Maxim in Politicks that he advances. IV. 1. 19.

Livy (Titus) I. 2. 4. I. 4. 10. I. 5. 9. I. 6. 10, 14. I. 7. 4. A Passage explain'd. VIII. 9. 2.

Lucian's Dialog. I. 4. 3. I. 5. 14. II. 3. 18. II. 4. 3, 13. In conviv. II. 4. 13. II. 5. 3.

Lucretius (Poet) II. 2. 2. II. 3. 10. II. 4. 9. A Reflection on what he says against Pyrrho's Sect. V. 12. 19. See Mr. Barbeyrac's Notes.

M.

Matthaus (Anton.) A Refutation of what he says of Meri reduced to extrem Necessity. II. 6. 7. Of Oaths extorted by unjust Fear. IV. 2. 8. Of Julius Caesar's Oath to the Pirates. Ibid.

Milton (John) An Examination of his Reasons concerning Divorce. VI. 1. 24.

Montaigne (Michael) I. 8. 5. II. 3. 7, 8. II. 4. 19. V. 4. 5. What he says of a Prince of Lithuania. VIII. 4. 6.

P.

Plato (Philosopher) Of his Community of Goods. IV. 4. 7. And of Women. VI. 1. 15. A Reflection on what he says of the Punishment of incorrigible Sinners. VIII. 3. 10. I. 2. 6. I. 3. 8. I. 4. 3, 5, 8, 13, 14. I. 6. 10. II. 3. 2. His Opinion of the State of Nature. II. 2. 3. II. 3. 1. Ib. 7. II. 4. 13, 19. II. 5. 14.

Plutarchus. His Opinion of Providence. I. 6. 13, 17. I. 7. 10. II. 1. 8. II. 2. 2, 10. II. 3. 3. Ib. 10. explain'd. Ib. 20. II. 4. 7, 13, 14. II. 5. 2. What he says of Civil Society. VII. 1. 11. False History concerning the Patricians. VIII. 4. 28.

An INDEX of the AUTHORS Explain'd, &c.

Pliny (Sen.) I. 4. 8. II. 1. 6, 8. II. 3. 14. II. 4. 13, 15, 17. Of those that invented the Custom of making Slaves. VI. 3. 5. Of the Original of Alliances. VIII. 9. 1.

Q.

Quintilian. A Reflection on a Passage of his concerning Advocates for Criminals. IV. 1. 21. His Opinion about restoring a Charge. V. 4. 7. Of Punishment. VIII. 3. 4.

R.

Roy (Hugh de) An Examination of the Principles, on which he founds the Right of Prescription. IV. 12. 6.

S.

Samuel (First Book of) An Explication of a place of this Book. VII. 6. 9.

Sanderfon (Robert) A Remark upon what he says of Oaths. IV. 2. 2.

Sharrock (Robert) A Remark upon what he says of this Rule. Quod tibi fieri non vis, &c. II. 3. 13.

Selden (John) That Slaughters committed in War are a sort of Punishments. VIII. 3. 4.

Seneca (Philos.) A false Opinion of his concerning Contracts and Bonds of Obligation. III. 6. 16. About Pardon. VIII. 3. 15. Of Communion. IV. 4. 2.

Sidney (Algernoon) A general Remark upon his Book of Government. VI. 2. 10. See Mr. Barbeyrac's Notes, N. 2. A Reflection upon what he says of a Thought of Aristotle. VII. 6. 5.

Sophocles (Tragœd.) A Passage of that Author explain'd. II. 4. 6. See Mr. Barbeyrac's Notes, N. 6.

Spinoza (Benedict.) A Remark upon what he says of the Foundation of Natural Law. II. 2. 3. Of Atheists. III. 4. 4.

Strabo (Histor.) commended. IV. 1. 15. A Passage of that Author explain'd. V. 2. 3.

T.

Tacitus (Cornelius) A Remark upon a Passage of that Historian. IV. 11. 18.

Terence (Comœd.) A Thought of that Poet explain'd and defended. VIII. 3. 20. See Mr. Barbeyrac's Notes, N. 4.

V.

Valerius Maximus. I. 5. 14. I. 6. 17. I. 7. 4. II. 3. 7. II. 4. 19. II. 5. 15. A Passage explain'd. III. 1. 6.

Vasquez. An impious Maxim of that Casuist. II. 3. 4. A Reflection on what he says of Penal Laws. VIII. 3. 5.

Veltbuysen (Lambert) An Examination of what he says of Moral Causes. I. 5. 3. Of his Fundamental Principle of Natural Law. II. 3. 6, 12. His Opinion of Shame. VI. 1. 30.

Victoria (Francis de) An Examination of what he says in Favour of the Spaniards. III. 3. 9. Concerning the Liberty of Commerce, Ibid. f. 12.

Virgil. An Explication of a Passage in that Poet against Lactantius. IV. 4. 8.

Z.

Ziegler (Gaspard) confounds Two sorts of Moral Certainty. I. 2. 11. A Remark upon what he says of the Obligation of repairing a Damage. III. 1. 4. Concerning the Gain that a Man may make. Ib. f. 7. Of securing the Legitimate Children from any Damage by an adulterous Off-spring. Ib. f. 9. Of a Contradiction attributed to Grotius. III. 3. 6. Of Negative and Positive Communion. IV. 4. 2. Of the Original of Propriety. Ib. f. 11. Of the Propriety in Wild Beasts taken as Game. IV. 6. 7. Of wild Beasts which return to their first Owner. Ib. f. 12. A false Application of a Law of the Digest. IV. 13. 5. A Reflection ill founded on a Distinction of Grotius, concerning Paternal Power. VI. 2. 7.

A N INDEX of the most Material THINGS

WHICH ARE

Mention'd or Explain'd in the Text or Notes.

A.

Abandon'd; How a thing abandon'd may return to its first Proprietor, IV. 6. 12.

Abdication; What it is, Ib. 11. 11.

Abraham; Whether Abraham acted prudently in calling Sarah his Sister, IV. 1. 11.

Absent; Absent Members, when not to be consider'd in Assemblies, VII. 2. 19.

Absurdities; To avoid them General Terms are to be restrain'd, V. 12. 19.

Acceptance; It is necessary to make Promises irrevocable, III. 6. 15. Whether a third Person may accept in our behalf a Promise made to us by another, Ib. 9. 5.

Accessions; What they are, IV. 7. 1. Rules to determine to whom they belong, Ib. 2, &c. When a Prince out of his own Income may make an Accession to his own Patrimony, VIII. 5. 8.

Account; How many ways one gives an account of his Conduct, VII. 6. 2.

Accusations; Unjust are disadvantageous to the Persons accus'd, VIII. 4. 7. None wou'd be innocent, if it were enough to bring an Accusation against a Man, Ib.

Accuser; Why he ought to lay open all the past actions of the Delinquent, Ib. 3. 22.

Accused; Whether the Person accused may innocently deny the Fact with which he is charged, IV. 1. 20. An agreement with the Accuser is supposed a confession of the Crime, VIII. 4. 7. Why the Person accused may appeal to his past Conduct, Ib. 3. 22. A Man does not become infamous by being barely accused, Ibid. 4. 7.

Acquittance or Discharge; What it is, V. 11. 7.

Acquisition; Originary, IV. 6. 1. Derivative, and the sorts of it, Ibid. 10. 1. Natural and Civil, Ibid. 6. 11.

Aff; How far those who concurr'd to the same Aff of Damage, are all Responsible for it, III. 1. 5. There are Dividual and Individual Affs, Ibid.

Affairs upon the Stage; They had a mark of Infamy set upon them by the Roman Laws, VIII. 4. 6.

Action; In what cases one Man may be answerable for the Actions of another, I. 5. 14. Because an Action is advantageous, or hurtful, it does not follow that 'tis morally good or evil, Ibid. 2. 6. Good Actions are the surest Foundations of glory, VIII. 4. 12. In what sense Human Actions are indifferent in themselves, I. 2. 6. Actions Pure and Mixt, what they are, Ib. 7. 7. When a Man is said to be compell'd to act, Ib. 4. 10. Mixt actions, Ibid. f. 9. Actions, which make a part or no part of Commerce, Ibid. 7. 7. What it is that sets a greater value upon those, that make a part of Commerce, V. 1. 6. What a Moral Action is, I. 5. 1. What is the matter of it, Ibid. f. 2. The Form of it, Ib. f. 3. It has the Nature of a Positive Form, Ib. f. 4. How its Effects are dissolved and extinguish'd, Ibid. 9. 6. How many different Qualities it can have, Ibid. 7. 1. Its Quantity or absolute Estimate, Ibid. 8. 1. Its Relative, Ibid. f. 5. What Moral Action is perfect in its kind, Ibid. f. 4. What is meritorious, Ib. 9. 5. Actions necessary or indispensable, and lawful or allow'd, Ib. 7. 2. Good or Evil, Ib. f. 3. Indifferent, Ib. f. 5. One good action is not better than another, Ib. 8. 1. Actions just, Ibid. 7. 7. Unjust, Ibid. f. 14. When it is not imputed to the immediate Performer, of it, Ibid. 5. 14.

Action in Law; There are actions wholly privileg'd by the Civil Law, V. 11. 15. Actions after a constant silence for Thirty Years utterly drop, IV. 12. 2. A Personal action upon a Right to a thing, Ib. 9. 8. A Real action upon a Right to a thing, Ibid. Actions in five Forms of Proceeding, V. 2. 7. Unseasonable action, III. 4. 5. Inscriptoria maleficii, VIII. 1. 1. Institoria, III. 9. 1. Exercitoria, Ibid. De tigno juncto, IV. 7. 6. Noxalis & pauperiei, III. 1. 6. Of Robbery, Ibid. 1. 4. Action founded upon Commission, V. 4. 2. Quod jussu, III. 9. 1. Action of false Debt, IV. 9. 4. Of things given upon a certain Cause, which Cause did not follow. Ibid. f. 4. Actions whereby one may recover a thing given, and when not, Ibid. Action upon concealing the Qualities of any thing sold, &c. V. 3. 2. Of Condemnation, Ib. 11. 15. Rerum amotarum, VIII. 1. 3. Negotiorum gestorum, IV. 13. 13. V. 4. 1.

Adam; He had the sole Propriety of every thing, while he was the only Man in the World, IV. 4. 1. Whether his Posterity are beholden to him for their Right to the Goods of this World, Ibid. f. 4, 11. Whether he gave Names to all Creatures agreeable to their Natures, Ibid. 1. 4.

Additio in diem; What it is, V. 5. 4.

Adoption; What it is, Ibid. 12. 11. An Adoptive Father should be preferr'd to a Natural Father, and the Reason of it, IV. 11. 13.

Adpromissor; What it is in the Roman Law, V. 10. 11.

Advantage of another; How many ways it may be procured, III. 3. 2.

Adventure; If one may adventure Money, IV. 7. 12.

Advocate; He ought not to take Money of both Parties, V. 1. 5. He ought not voluntarily to undertake a bad Cause, IV. 1. 21. If he may use false Colours, or feigned Arguments to defend his Party, Ibid.

Adultery; What it is, I. 1. 6. VIII. 1. 3. A just Cause of Divorce, VI. 1. 21. Whether the Husband, who lies with his own Wife, taking her for another's, commits adultery, I. 3. 16. Whether the Adulterer ought to indemnify the Husband and his Children, III. 1. 9.

Affairs; When one manages another's affairs at his own Cost and Charges, the other ought to requite the Pains, and refund the Charges, Ibid. 6. 2. IV. 13. 13.

Affinity; When it ceases, VI. 1. 36. What degrees of affinity are forbid, Ibid. f. 35.

Age; its different Degrees, I. 1. 10. What Age is capable of meditating Guile, Ibid. What is the foundation of that Respect and Honour, we pay to old Age, VIII. 4. 12.

Aggressor; He is not always the Aggressor, that first takes up Arms, II. 5. 6. If one may always slay an unjust Aggressor, II. 5. 1. and Sect. 3d. Or one that assaults another by mistake, Ibid. f. 5. Or one that is more useful than the Person assaulted, Ibid. f. 14. Or who only would maim, not kill, Ib. f. 10. Or who makes an attempt upon another's Honour, or Chastity, Ibid. f. 11. Or for giving a Box of the Ear, Ibid. f. 12. If the aggressor who first gave the Injury, may fairly resist the other Man when he endeavours to revenge it, Ibid. f. 19.

Air; Whether it may be appropriated, IV. 5. 2.

Alienation; A Consequence of full Property, Ibid. 9. 1. Its necessary Conditions, Ibid. f. 2, 3. Whether in the alienation of Property, Delivery is requir'd, Ibid. f. 5, &c. The Right of Alienation is not always join'd with a Right of Property. Ibid. 4. 2. See Mr. Barbeyrac's Notes, N 8. Alienation is either simple or conditional, Ibid. f. 4. If the Alienation of a Kingdom, or any part of it is in the Power of the King, VIII. 5. 9.

Alliance;

An INDEX of the most Material THINGS, &c.

- Alliances*; What they are, and of how many sorts, VIII. 9. 1. They are made by both Parts in prospect of some Advantage, Ib. f. 5. How they may be broke, Ib. f. 11. Real and Personal Alliances, Ib. f. 6. Rules to distinguish them, Ib. f. 7, 8. Equal Alliances, and their different sorts, Ib. f. 3. Unequal Alliances, Ib. f. 4. Alliances for the Establishment of some things, as far as they are due by a Right of Nature, Ib. f. 2. and II. 2. 11.
- Allies*; If by Allies are meant such only as were Allies, when the League was made, or such as are afterwards taken into Alliance on either side, VIII. 9. 10. He that hath bound himself in an unequal Alliance with another, doth by that very Act acknowledge a Superiority of Worth and Dignity in the other, Ib. 4. 15. Whether an unequal Allie does not thereby endanger his Sovereignty, Ibid. 9. 4. Every Allie is to have his Share of the Booty, Ib. 6. 18. In what Cases he is oblig'd to assist his Allies, Ib. 6. 14. When Two Parties, both Allies to a Third, make War upon one another, which of them the Third Allie ought to assist, Ib. 9. 5. When he may break his Alliance, Ib. Suppose it had been stipulated between Two Allies, that one should not pass through the other's Territories with an Army, what is to be done in point of Convenience in time of War, V. 12. 4.
- Ambassies*; Law of Ambassies upon what founded, II. 3. 23.
- Ambassador*; His general Duties, VII. 8. 10. He is not responsible for what he says by his Master's Order, I. 5. 14. When he can return Home of himself, V. 12. 20. When he may be look'd upon as a private Person, VIII. 4. 21. Whether an Ambassador of a Republick ought to yield to that of a King, Ib. f. 20. Whether Reprisals may be made upon an Ambassador, Ib. 6. 13. & Ib. 9. 12. Whether he is to enjoy the Privileges of an Ambassador in a State whereof he was a Member, Ib. 11. 3.
- Ambiguities*; How they may be explain'd, V. 12. 5.
- Ambition*; A general Evil, VII. 1. 7. That of Conquerors does not make a War Just and Lawful, VIII. 6. 5.
- Analogy*; It ought to yield to Use, IV. 1. 4.
- Ancestors*; Their Glory serves but to set in a clearer Light the Shame of their Degenerate Posterity, VIII. 4. 31. Their Posterity is frequently respected upon their account, Ib. 3. 17.
- Animals*; To whom belong their Breed, IV. 7. 4. Tamed and Wild, Ib. 6. 5. Sociable Animal, VII. 1. 3.
- Antiquity* alone hath no real Honour in it, VIII. 4. 17.
- Apology*; If those who make an Apology for a bad Action are answerable for the Damage, III. 1. 4. If one can make Justly an Apology for the Crimes of his Prince, VIII. 1. 7.
- Apprentice*; If one may Justly exact of every Apprentice so much as he alone should pay, if none else were to be taught the same thing, V. 6. 4.
- Approver*; If he ought to be punish'd as much as the Author of an evil Action, III. 1. 4.
- Arbitrators*; Who they are, V. 13. 3. How many sorts there are of them, Ib. f. 5. The Duties of an Arbitrator, Ib. f. 4. Whether there may be any Meeting betwixt the Arbitrator and the Parties concern'd, Ib. If one is oblig'd to acquiesce at his Determination, just or not, Ib. What Persons ought not to be Arbitrators, Ib. After what manner he ought to execute his Sentence, Ib. f. 10. Of referring a Matter to his Judgment, V. 13. 3.
- Aristocracy*; What it is, VII. 5. 3. How it is formed, Ib. f. 8.
- Arms*; What we understand by the Word in Treaties, V. 12. 7.
- Army*; What is understood by it, V. 12. 4. If one should give Passage through his Country to a strange Army, III. 3. 5.
- Coats of Arms*; Their Use and Antiquity, VIII. 4. 30.
- Arts*; Men were timely instructed in such Arts as are most necessary for Life, II. 2. 4.
- Articles*; The particular Articles of a Contract are as so many Conditions, III. 8. 8.
- Ascendants*; They succeed upon Failure of Issue in the Descendants, IV. 11. 13.
- Ass*; The Decision of a pleasant Dispute about the Shadow of an Ass, V. 1. 5.
- Assassines* are infamous, VIII. 4. 5. If one may make use of them against an Enemy, Ib. 6. 16. They cannot demand their Reward, nor be compell'd to commit that Murder, they were engag'd in, III. 7. 7. Whether the Man that only makes an Attempt to kill another, ought to be punish'd with Death, VIII. 3. 23.
- Assembly*; How many Persons it ought to consist of, VII. 2. 19.
- Associates* or Partners; Their Mutual Offices, V. 8. 4. If one Associate is responsible to the rest for the Losses occasion'd by him, Ib. He ought to have a part of the Profit, that partakes of the Loss, Ib. f. 3.
- Assurance*; A Contract of Assurance, VII. 9. 8.
- Asylums*, or Places of Refuge; Why they were establish'd under the old Law, II. 5. 15. If those who fled thither were not liable to repair the Damage, III. 1. 7.
- Astrology*; It is contrary to Religion and Morality; II. 4. 4.
- Atheists*; How many sorts there are of them, III. 4. 4. If they have any true Idea of Duty, Right and Obligation, II. 4. 3. If they ought to be tolerated, VII. 4. 2. If one may justly punish them for their Infidelity, III. 4. 4. If one may place any Trust in them, Ib. 6. 9. If a Society of Atheists would not be more corrupted than those which keep the Fundamental Principles of Religion, though mixt with Error and even Idolatry, II. 3. 19.
- Atheism*; It wholly destroys all natural Obligation, III. 4. 4. It is not a simple Fault of Imprudence or Ignorance, Ibid.
- Auction* (Publick) What it is, V. 5. 6. The Law of this sort of Sale, V. 1. 10.
- Avocatory Commands*; What they are, and of what Force, VIII. 11. 3.
- Authority*; What it is, VIII. 4. 12. How it may be the Principal Cause of Moral Actions, I. 5. 14. The Authority of Masters is a Hindrance to the Discovery of Truth, II. 4. 13. See Mr. Barbeyrac's Notes, N. 11.

B.

- Bail*; See Surety.
- Bailiffs*; Why their Office is accounted dishonourable in many places, VIII. 4. 6.
- Banishment*; When it is lawful or not, VIII. 11. 7. He that is condemn'd to it, ceases to be a Member of the State, Ibid.
- Barbary*; Part of Africa, if the People of it ought to be look'd upon as wholly infamous, VIII. 4. 5.
- Barrenness*; It is not a sufficient Cause for breaking Marriage, VI. 1. 21.
- Basbards*; They are as near related to their Parents as Legitimate Children, IV. 11. 6. Maintenance is due to them, Ib. They may share with the Legitimate, if their Parents die Intestate, Ib. How they are look'd upon in many States, VIII. 4. 6. Their Legitimation or Restitution in the Blood does not change the Nature of the thing, but only produces certain Moral Effects, Ib. 26.
- Batchelor*; If he is always free to remain so, VI. 1. 7. If the Civil Laws can oblige certain Persons to it, Ib. f. 8.
- Beasts*; Wherein consists their Liberty, II. 1. 4. There are Two Extreams to be avoided in Reasoning upon the Springs of their Motions, I. 3. 1. Morality taken from their Example is not solid, II. 3. 2. No Law common to them and Men, Ib. f. 2. and IV. 3. 5. If we may Lawfully kill and eat them, Ib. f. 4. 5. We ought to spare Those which are Serviceable to us in our Husbandry, Ib. f. 6. Why God forbid the Israelites to eat some Beasts, Ib. f. 2. If the Owner of a Beast is responsible for the Damage it causes, III. 1. 6. and IV. 3. 5. When our Neighbour's Beast falls into a Ditch, we ought to help it out, though he is our Enemy, III. 3. 4. Why the Law of Moses order'd the Beast to be slain with the Man that had abused it in an unlawful way, II. 3. 3. Wild Beasts of a Park or Forest, to whom they belong, IV. 6. 11. How they may be restored to their first Owner, Ib. f. 12. If the Marks which one puts upon them is sufficient to preserve his Property in them, Ib.

An INDEX of the most Material THINGS, &c.

- Herd of Cattel*; How to take Possession of a Herd of Cattel, IV. 9. 7. The Right of putting them to drink in a Neighbour's Field, IV. 1. 12.
- Beatitude*. See Felicity.
- Beauty*; It is not a lawful Reason to pardon one convinc'd of a Capital Crime, VIII. 3. 17. Disfiguring the Face of a Virgin requires compensation, III. 1. 8.
- Bees*; They are wild by Nature, IV. 6. 5. The Difference between their Communities, and human Societies, VII. 2. 4. Whether that Man is guilty of Trespass, who, by poisoning the Flowers of his Garden, causes the Death of his Neighbour's Bees, III. 1. 3.
- Beggars*; The Profession of Lusty Beggars is Shameful and highly Blamable, II. 4. 15. III. 3. 2. Upon what Condition they ought to be regarded in States, where they are tolerated, VIII. 4. 5.
- Being*; What a Physical or Natural Being is, I. 1. 2. A Moral Being, ib. f. 2, 3. Who is the Author of Moral Beings, ib. Their Original and End, ib. f. 4. Their Effects and Vertue, ib. Their different sorts, ib. f. 5. How they are destroy'd, ib. f. 23.
- Benefice*; When 'tis vacant, V. 12. 8.
- Benevolence*; The Excellencies and Rules of that Virtue, III. 3. 15.
- Benefactor*; If in the Inheritance of an Intestate he ought to be prefer'd to Parents, IV. 11. 16.
- Benefits*; What they are, III. 3. 15. We ought not to be curious in enquiring into the Motives of it, III. 3. 16. It is not a Benefit to abstain from doing us harm, I. 9. 4. Nor to bring one out of that Danger, into which he had brought him, III. 3. 16. If 'tis of greater Worth from an Enemy, than from a Friend, VIII. 3. 20.
- Benevolence*; It is most Agreeable to Human Nature, II. 2. 7.
- Blank*; What the Effect of Blank Papers subscrib'd, III. 9. 2. What a Blank is, and how it is legitimate, V. 9. 7.
- Body*; In what the Care which every one ought to take of his Body consists, II. 4. 14. How many sorts of Bodies there are, VIII. 12. 7.
- Body of Men*, (Community) How it may be reduced to one only Person, VI. 2. 19. Men attribute to it different things which differently agree with it, VIII. 3. 29. How it may be punish'd, ib. f. 28. Crimes committed by a Body are effac'd by Length of Time, ib. f. 29. The different sorts of subordinate Bodies of the same State, VI. 2. 21, 22.
- Borrower*; His Engagements, V. 4. 6. ib. 7. 1.
- Booty*; How a Man acquires the Propriety of the Booty, which he takes from an Enemy, IV. 6. 14. VIII. 6. 17. To whose Profit it is, ib. 6. 18. To whom that which is retaken ought to be restor'd, ib. f. 22.
- Brothers*; In what Order Brothers, both of the same Mother (Uterins) as well of the same Father as Mother succeed abintestate, IV. 11. 17.
- Buildings*; whether they go along with the Ground, IV. 7. 6. The Right of raising a Building higher, ib. 8. 11.
- Buyer*; Whether one Man is oblig'd to buy the Commodities of another, III. 3. 12. Obligations between the Buyer and the Seller, V. 5. 5. The Buyer ultimately resolves upon the Price of any Commodity, ib. 6. 1. Who takes any Commodity without agreeing upon the Price, is suppos'd to oblige himself to the common Price, ib. Whether the want of any Commodity can justify the selling it the dearer, ib. 1. 4. Whether the not wanting it can justify a Man's buying it too cheap, ib. f. 10. Whether the Buyer can innocently give for a Commodity less than the Price appointed by the Law, ib. f. 8. If Two buy the same Commodity, how it is decided, ib. 5. 5. IV. 9. 8. See Mr. Barbeyrac's Notes.
- C.
- Cabals*; See Factions.
- Calumniators*; They cannot be too severely punish'd, VIII. 3. 27.
- Capacity*; The Natural Capacity of commanding is not of it self a Title sufficient to give us any Authority over those who are not in a Capacity of governing themselves, III. 2. 8.
- Captain*; If a Captain of a Ship may leap into the Air without being guilty of Self-murder, VIII. 2. 4.
- Cardinals*; The vain Formality that Cardinals use in entering into the Conclave, IV. 2. 5.
- Care*; Three Degrees of it, I. 7. 16.
- Career*; If one ought to give the Reward propos'd to those that arrive the same time at the End of the Career, V. 12. 14.
- Carthage*; How we ought to understand these words of the Treaty concluded with the Romans, Carthage shall abide free, V. 12. 16.
- Causes*; In what sense Natural Causes furnish us with Matter for an Imputation, I. 5. 6. The invariable and inevitable Concatenation of Causes and Effects, is an Opinion contrary to Religion and Morality, II. 4. 4. Moral Causes, I. 5. 3. The Principal Cause, Subaltern Cause, and Collateral Cause of an Action, I. 5. 14. Cause (in Matters of Law) what it is, V. 2. 3.
- Certainty*, (Moral) There are two sorts of it, I. 2. 11.
- Charges*, (Publick) See Employment.
- Chance*; The Injury that is done by meer Chance, is not to be imputed, I. 5. 5. III. 1. 6.
- Children*; If one may do a Child an Injury while he is yet in his Mother's Womb, I. 1. 7. Why they correct Children, ib. 5. 10. If a Child can have any Right of Propriety, IV. 4. 15. VI. 2. 8. If his Promises are Valid, III. 6. 3. Why one ought to take great Care of hindring them from Lying, IV. 1. 7. How long they are incapable of contracting any valid Obligation, III. 6. 4. If it is lawful to tell them any thing that is false, IV. 1. 15. Whence comes the easiness that they have to discern Just from Unjust, II. 3. 13. If one ought to put an Enemy's Children to Death, VIII. 6. 7. A Child which is but conceiv'd, is regarded in many matters of Law, as if he were already in the World, IV. 12. 10. The Rights which ought to pass to a Child not yet born, but even conceiv'd, ib.
- Children*; (Sons or Daughters) What is meant by them in the Law, IV. 11. 6. One may make them perish to save their Mother, but not kill or expose them, VI. 2. 6. To whom a Child that is expos'd belongs, IV. 6. 14. VI. 2. 3. If a Father may pretend to the Succession of his Child, IV. 11. 13. Children do not always resemble their Fathers, VIII. 3. 33. ib. 4. 25. In what their Dependance on their Parents consists, and what is the Foundation of it, VI. 2. 1, &c. If they may marry without the Consent of their Parents, ib. f. 14. The Duties of emancipated Children, ib. f. 12. Legitimate Children ought to be acknowledg'd such by their Fathers, IV. 11. 10. They are prefer'd to Natural Children in Successions abintestate, ib. f. 9. Children pass before all other Relations, ib. f. 3. If they ought to inherit what is beyond their Nourishment, ib. f. 7. If their Fathers and Mothers are Indispensably oblig'd to nourish them, ib. f. 4. If they may be punish'd for their Father's Crimes, I. 9. 10. VIII. 3. 33. ib. 4. 32. If 'tis properly a Punishment for them, to be excluded from the Inheritance, or have the Goods of their Fathers confiscated, ib. 3. 31 & 32. How one imputes to them the good or evil Actions of their Fathers, I. 9. 2. The Number of Children was (according to the Emperor Adrian) a good Reason for alleviating the Punishments of their Fathers, VIII. 3. 17.
- Christianity*; The Precepts of Christianity are not contrary to the just Defence of a Man's-self, II. 5. 14.
- Citizen*; what he properly is, VII. 2. 20. An Idea of of a good Citizen, ib. 1. 4. VIII. 6. 14. Their general and particular Duties, VII. 8. 10. A Citizen ought, notwithstanding an Oath to the contrary, to discover the Plots that are contriv'd against the Prince or State, IV. 2. 9. If he ought to sacrifice his Honour for the Good of the State or Sovereign, VIII. 4. 10. If they have a Right of requiring Indemnity for the Losses they have sustain'd upon the Publick Account, ib. 8. 3. What Rank Citizens of some States ought to hold amongst those of another, ib. 4. 24. If every one is a Debtor for the Summs borrow'd in the Name of the State, ib. 5. 11. If he may be deliver'd to any Foreign Power that demands him, ib. 2. 5. If he may

An INDEX of the most Material THINGS, &c.

- may retire when he pleases, VIII. 11. 2, 3, 4. If he may be banish'd without having merited it by some Crime, ib. f. 6, 7. If some Citizens assembled in so little a Number, that they cannot make up a Body of the State, preserve the Priviledges of the ancient People, VIII. 12. 8. See more under the word Subjects.
- Civility; One ought not to push Civility too far, VIII. 4. 15.
- Clauses; The different sorts of them, III. 8. 1. What is the Effect of those, where one declares that all posterior Acts or Ordinances shall be Null, I. 6. 6. What a Commissary Clause is, V. 5. 4. VII. 5. 17.
- Clemency; How many Parts it hath, VIII. 8. 23.
- Cognati; Who they are in the Roman Law, V. 12. 11.
- Choler; (Anger) It ought to be repress'd with a great deal of Care, II. 4. 12.
- Collaterals; When they are call'd to Succession, IV. 11. 14, 17.
- Collegues; How many sorts of Collegues there are, VII. 2. 19.
- Colonies; The Use and different sorts of Colonies, VIII. 11. 6. & ib. 12. 5. If a Colony, which forms a new State, ought to acquit the Debts of that from whence it proceeds, ibid.
- Combats; If single Combats, or those of an entire Army, made to decide a Difference are legitimate, VIII. 8. 5. Those who prais'd themselves for a Fight with Beasts were declar'd infamous amongst the Romans, VIII. 4. 6.
- Commerce; The general Law establish'd in Commerce, V. 3. 10. The just Bounds of the Liberty of Commerce amongst all People, III. 3. 11, 12. IV. 5. 10. VIII. 5. 4. The different sorts of Alliances in Matters of Commerce, ib. 9. 3. The Treaties of Commerce run upon a favourable thing, ib. f. 7.
- Commissiion; The different ways of giving a Commission, V. 4. 5. How one ought to execute it, ib. f. 2, 3. If it can be satisfy'd by an Equivalent, ib. f. 5. He who gives a Commission to commit a Crime, is as Culpable as the Author of the Action, I. 5. 14.
- Common; How many ways a thing is said to be common to many, IV. 4. 3.
- Community; How the primitive Community of things hath been abolish'd, ib. f. 6. How it was prejudicial to Society, ib. f. 7. How many sorts of it one may conceive, ib. f. 2.
- Compassion; It is an interested Sentiment, III. 3. 4.
- Competition; What it is, and in what things it hath place, V. 11. 5, 6.
- Complements ought not to be taken, at the End of a Letter, as if they engag'd to any thing, III. 5. 10.
- Compulsion; there are two sorts of it, I. 5. 9. In what it differs from Obligation, I. 6. 5. III. 4. 6. If it always hinders one from having the Guilt of an Action, to which he was forc'd, imputed to him, I. 5. 9.
- Conduct; How many ways one may give an account of his Conduct, VII. 6. 2.
- Concourse; How in a Concourse of Many Persons to the same Action every one is responsible, III. 1. 5.
- Concubines; What is meant by Concubines, VI. 1. 36. What Claim the Children of a Concubine have to the Succession of their Father, IV. 11. 9.
- Condition; What it is, III. 8. 2. What are the Effects of it, ib. f. 2. If they have sometimes Relation to the present or time past, ib. f. 3. Tacit Conditions, III. 6. 2. & ib. 8. 1. Chargeable Conditions cannot be added to a Promise after the Moment it hath been offer'd and notify'd, ib. 9. 7. Conditions possible or impossible, ib. 8. 4, 5. Conditions Casual, Arbitrary, and Mixt, ib. f. 4. Conditions which include something unlawful, ib. f. 5. A Condition is held for accomplish'd, when the one Party hinders the Execution of it, ib.
- Conditions; (Estate of Life) The Difference of Conditions does not make one Man more Honest than another, VII. 4. 3. When it comes to pass, that certain Conditions pass for dishonourable, although they do not of themselves include any thing vicious, ib. f. 6. One ought to be content with his Condition, II. 4. 9.
- Confederation; A perpetual Confederation is the most strict of all Leagues, VIII. 9. 6.
- Confederate Powers; How one ought to regulate the Order of Ranks and Precedency amongst many Confederate Powers, ib. 4. 22.
- Consequences; The necessary Consequences of an Action entering in the Estimation of Damage, III. 1. 3. The Consequence of a Crime render it more grievous and worthy of greater Punishment, VIII. 3. 18.
- Confidence or Trust; What a Contract of Confidence, or Trust is, V. 10. 8. One ought not to make it to evade the Force of the Law, ib.
- Confiscation; To whom the Right of Confiscation belongs, VIII. 5. 11.
- Confusion; What it is, (in the Style of the Law) V. 11. 14.
- Conjectures; The Uses of them for the Interpretation of things, ib. 12. 5; &c.
- Conjunctions; Those which are against Nature are unlawful, as well as confus'd Conjunctions, VI. 1. 4, 5.
- Conquerors; They have no Right over those who have been their Companions in their Conquests, VIII. 6. 21.
- Conquests; The Foundation of the Right of Conquests, ib. Just Conquests, VII. 7. 3. Unjust, ib. f. 4.
- Consanguinity; What Degrees of it are forbid, and why, VI. 1. 32, 34.
- Confiscance; What it is, and the different Actions of it, I. 3. 4. Different sorts of it, ib. f. 5, &c. The Rules which it ought to follow, ib. Its Sentiments are not a Bridle sufficient to restrain the Malice of all Men, VII. 1. 11.
- Consent; The conditions that are essential to every true Consent, III. 6. 3. The signs of Consent, ibid. f. 16. Consent is the Foundation of every Obligation impos'd by Promise or Conventions, ibid. f. 1. Express, and Tacit Consent, ib. f. 2. If it is necessary to suppose a Presum'd or Feign'd Consent, as the Roman Lawyers do, ib. f. 2.
- Consent; (an agreement of many Persons to acknowledge the same thing) if the Consent of the People is the Foundation of Natural Law, II. 3. 7, 8.
- Consolidation; What it is in the stile of the Law, IV. 8. 7.
- Contract; The difference between Contracts and simple Pacts, V. 2. 1. The essential, natural and accidental Qualities of a Contract, ibid. 10. 2. Obligatory on one side, or two, or mixt, ib. 2. 5. Real or simple Consent, or verbal, ib. f. 6. Nam'd or nameless Contracts, ibid. f. 7. Gainful and chargeable Contracts, ib. f. 8. Of Trust and strict Right, ibid. f. 9. III. 6. 8. The different sorts of Chargeable Contracts, V. 2. 9. Mixt Contracts, ibid. f. 10. There ought to be an Equality in Chargeable Contracts, ibid. 3. 1, &c. But not in Gainful, ib. f. 7. In Chargeable, nothing is to be taken upon presumption that 'tis a gift, ibid. f. 8. What a Contract of Estimation is in the Roman Law, ibid. 2. 9. Contracts which are entred with hazard, ibid. 9. What is the meaning of the Distinction of voluntary and involuntary Contracts in Aristotle, I. 7. 12. VIII. 3. 5. A Contract concerning any thing belonging to another, but of which one is in Possession by Trust, is null, IV. 13. 5. See more under Pact.
- Contracting; (The Parties) The Infidelity of one Party disengages the other, V. 11. 9. They ought and are suppos'd to know the state and interest of each other, VIII. 9. 5.
- Contradictions; How one ought to reconcile seeming Contradictions, V. 12. 6. And manifest ones, ib.
- Conversation; If in Conversation one may express himself after a manner, which may make a third conceive a false Opinion, IV. 1. 18.
- Corn; Ears of Corn may be pluck'd by those that pass by, III. 3. 4. One ought to leave for the Poor the gleanings, ibid.
- Corporal; Things Corporal or Incorporal in the stile of the Law. See Things.
- Correction; If any one may use Correction towards all others, VIII. 3. 10.
- Counsel; It is in some respects Sacred, III. 3. 3. In what it differs from Law, I. 6. 1. How they, who give Counsel, which engages to Sin. participate of the

An INDEX of the most Material THINGS, &c.

- Crime of another, ib. 5. 14. How they are Responsible for the Damage, III. 1. 4.
- Counsellors of a State*; Their Duty, VII. 8. 10. If they are Responsible for the Damage, for not having oppos'd the pernicious Designs of the Prince, III. 1. 4.
- Country*; How one renders himself Master of a Desart Country by right of first Occupant, IV. 6. 3, 4. All that is inclos'd, not belonging to any particular Person, belongs to the State, ib.
- Cowards*; A Stratagem which the Cowards amongst the Romans made use of to avoid going to the Wars, and how they punish'd those who had recourse to this Expedient, VIII. 2. 3.
- Courtisans*; See Whore.
- Creatures*; It is with the permission of GOD that Men make use of Creature, IV. 3. 2.
- Credit*; What it is, V. 5. 4. They who Sell upon Credit, may set a great Price on their Goods, ib. 1. 10.
- Creditor*; What is meant by a Creditor in the Roman Law, V. 11. 1. In rendering his Bond of Obligation he quits the Debtor, III. 6. 2, 16. How he ought to use the thing given in Pawn, V. 10. 14.
- Crime*; It is Personal, VIII. 3. 33. Legislators cannot determine at their Will, the nature of Crimes, ibid. 1. 3. One must distinguish in every Crime, the Vice and the Punishment, IV. 1. 20. By what Circumstances one judges of the Greatness and Enormity of a Crime, VIII. 3. 18, &c. In what sense Crimes are said to be perfected, even before their Execution, I. 7. 4. VIII. 3. 18. Crimes to come cannot be imputed by a retroactive Effect, I. 5. 12. One ought not to be punish'd for another's Crime, VIII. 3. 33. How one may be as guilty as the Author of a Crime, I. 5. 14. When it is that one punishes a Crime that is but in its Birth, VIII. 3. 14. What Crimes carry Infamy, ibid. 4. 7. If there are properly any publick Crimes, ib. 3. 28. How many ways a Crime may be abolish'd, I. 9. 6. One ought not to commit a Crime to obey a Superior, VIII. 1. 7. It is not a good Deed nor a Merit to abstain from a Crime, I. 9. 4. 5. When it is that the prosecution of a Crime before Civil Tribunals hath Prescription, IV. 12. 2. The Crimes which often pass unpunish'd, ought to be punish'd more severely, II. 5. 17. Those which have been committed a long time, ought not to be punish'd so Exactly, nor with so much Rigour, as those which are quite recent, VIII. 3. 29. Princes sometimes punish Crimes by which they get an Advantage; as Treason, &c. III. 7. 8. They who get some Profit from a Crime committed by their Consent, cannot complain of the Author of the Crime, ibid. The Crimes against which it is most hard to precaution ones self, are those which deserve the most Rigour, V. 8. 4.
- Criminal*; If he may to avoid punishment, fly, or deny his Crime, IV. 1. 20. VIII. 3. 4. It is not a valid Excuse for him to have Accomplices or Companions of his Crimes, ib. 5. 17. If he who marches of himself to the Place of Punishment, or mounts the Ladder, is guilty of his own Death, I. 5. 3. The Criminals to whom one ordains to kill themselves, VIII. 3. 1. If a Criminal may be punish'd by another Person as culpable as himself, ib. 5. 7. If one ought to permit Criminals the choice of their Punishment, ibid. 1. 4. Why they punish those who forbear saving them, ibid. 5. 32. If one may sometimes pardon a Criminal, ib. 5. 15, &c.
- Criticisim*; The general Rules for it, V. 12. 3. What the Use and Necessity of it is, II. 4. 13.
- Curious*; How one may gull People which are ridiculously Curious, IV. 1. 18.
- Custom*; If those Customs which have relation to the Law of Nations are Obligatory, II. 3. 23.
- D.
- Damage*; What it is, III. 1. 3. In what it differs from Injury, I. 7. 13. How many ways one causes a Damage, III. 1. 6. Rules for judging whether one is bound or not to repair it, ib. 5. 4. Exteriour Damage, ibid. 5. 3. Who they are that one ought to regard as the Authors of a Damage, ibid. 5. 4. What is the order according to which they who concur in the causing a Damage are oblig'd to repair it, ib. 5. 5. The indispensable necessity of repairing a Damage which one has caused, ibid. 5. 2. The general Rule which the Author of a Damage ought to follow to make an Estimation of it, ibid. 5. 7. If a Magistrate may dispence with this Reparation of a Damage, VIII. 3. 4. If in the Reparation of a Damage caused without design, one ought to take account of the Esteem that the Person endamaged had for the Thing that is spoil'd, or made worse, V. 1. 7. The Action which one had by the Roman Law, to oblige him from whom one apprehended a Damage, which was not yet happen'd, but which one had cause to fear, to prevent it, II. 6. 8. Damage Direct, or caused by Accident. VIII. 3. 31.
- Danger*; No Danger ought to make us abandon our Duty, II. 4. 18. When one is in danger of his Life, he ought to think of nothing but saving it, II. 5. 2. III. 7. 8.
- Dart*; If with a Dart one may take Possession of an Immoveable, by right of first Occupant, IV. 6. 8.
- David*; If King David might revoke his Word which he had given to Shimei with an Oath, and if he violated his Oath by the orders which he gave to Solomon at his Death, VIII. 10. 5.
- Day*; What they intend by that in a Treaty of Truce by Example, V. 12. 7.
- Days*; Services for Days, IV. 8. 11.
- Death*; How one must understand that common Maxim, That Death puts an End to All in matter of Engagements, III. 1. 11. V. 11. 12. It is not absolutely above the Firmness of human Spirit to suffer Death, III. 7. 5. Why several expose themselves to Death to save the Persons they love, II. 3. 14. Civil Death, III. 6. 3.
- Dying Persons*; Whether one ought to execute their Orders, IV. 10. 8.
- Debts*; Active Debts are taken according to the number of the Creditor's Goods, I. 6. 11. If one may acquire them by Right of War, VIII. 6. 20. What Passive Debts are, in the Roman Law, V. 11. 1. If one may remit them, or give Delay to the Debtors, when they are Men that are very Necessary in the time of War, VIII. 5. 7. Or in some other Circumstance, where the Good of the State demands it, ib. 10. 7. How the Members are bound to the Debts contracted in the Name of the Body, VII. 2. 22. The Debts of Kings, if their Successors, or the People, ought to acquit them, VIII. 10. 8. The Changes which happen in a State do not annihilate publick Debts, ib. 12. 2. If a Colony ought to contribute to the Acquitment of the Debts of the State from whence it proceeds, ib. 5. 5. Whom the Debts fall upon, when two or more distinct States are formed or reunited into one, ib.
- Debtor*; What is meant by Debtor in the Roman Law, V. 11. 1. When it is that he is acquitted by having recovered his Bond, III. 6. 16. If he may be acquitted by the giving up his Goods, V. 10. 10. He who swears not to pay, is not acquitted by that, IV. 2. 6. If another may disengage him, V. 11. 1. When a Debtor is held insolvable, III. 7. 3. All the Goods of a Debtor are tacitly mortgaged to his Creditor, V. 3. 10. If he is oblig'd to reimburse to those who have paid without his Order, ib. 11. 2. Privileged Debtors who are only oblig'd to what they can do without incommoding themselves, III. 7. 3.
- Decalogue*; If the Commandments of the Decalogue are Civil Laws, VIII. 1. 4. It only mentions the most Enormous Crimes of every kind, ib. If the Division of Goods is a Commandment of the Decalogue, IV. 4. 4.
- Deceit*; What it is, III. 6. 8. Real Deceit oppos'd to Personal Deceit, ib. How Deceit annuls a Covenant, ib. 5. 8.
- Decimation*; Why there is a Decimation of Souldiers, VIII. 3. 28.
- Declaration*; If Natural Law indispensably requires a Declaration of War, ib. 6. 9. If it is necessary after the Term of a Truce expir'd, ib. 7. 6.
- Defect*; One ought faithfully to discover the Defects of the thing about which he treats, V. 3. 2, &c. If a Defect perceiv'd after, breaks the Contract, III. 6. 7.

An INDEX of the most Material THINGS, &c.

- It imposes an indispensable Obligation to repair the Damage done to him who makes the Contract, V. 3. 9. A considerable Defect annuls a Contract made even with an Oath, IV. 2. 11.
- Defendent*; In an Equality of Voices the Defendent is acquitted and absolv'd, VII. 2. 17.
- Defence*; If the Defence of ones self by Action is permitted, or prescrib'd by Natural Law, II. 5. 1, 2. How far one may use it in a Natural Liberty, ib. f. 3. And in Civil Society, ib. f. 4. Upon what its Right is founded, ib. f. 5.
- Deformity*; Whether in the Reparation of Damage, one ought to have regard to the Deformity caus'd by the Hurt, III. 1. 8.
- Delegation*; What it is, V. 11. 13.
- Delictum*; What it is, I. 7. 12. By what one Judges of its Enormity, VIII. 3. 18, &c.
- Delivery* is either real or suppos'd, IV. 9. 9. It is done either in short, or by a round-about way, ib. If it is absolutely necessary for the Alienation of a thing, ib. f. 5, &c. If when it is not founded upon any Title it transfers Propriety, ib. f. 5.
- Demand*; How one sometimes eludes a Demand, III. 8. 5.
- To Demand*; He who demands is under a greater Obligation than the Possessor, to try all possible ways of Accommodation, V. 13. 3.
- Demerit*; What it is, I. 9. 5.
- Demefne*; What a Demefne of the State is, and what that of the Crown is, VIII. 5. 8. If the King may absolutely dispose of it or engage it, ib. In what sense it is as mortgag'd to the King, ib. The King hath the full use of it, If the Goods incorporated to the Demefne of the Crown are entirely unalienable, ib. f. 9.
- Democracy*; What it is, VII. 5. 3. Its Constitution and proper Characters, ib. f. 6, 7. There is a Sovereign in it as well as in other Forms of Government, ib. 2. 8. & ib. 5. 5.
- Demonstration*; What it is, and what are its Principles, I. 2. 2, 3. What is that which is made a Posteriori, II. 3. 7.
- Depositum*; See Trust.
- Dereliction*; Tacit Dereliction is the Foundation of Prescription, IV. 12. 8.
- Descendants*; What we understand by them, V. 12. 13.
- Desertion*; A wilful Desertion is a just Cause of breaking Marriage, VI. 1. 21.
- Deserters*; If one may lawfully receive and make use of Deserters, VIII. 6. 16.
- Desires*; They ought to be proportion'd to the just Price of things, II. 4. 9.
- Destiny*; The Opinion which establishes it, is contrary to Religion and Morals, ib. f. 5.
- Devotion*, without Probity and an exact Practice of our Duty towards our Neighbour, is but Hypocrisy, equally contrary to Religion and good Morals, ib. f. 4. The Devotions which they practice in Japan, and some other places, are contrary to Natural Law, ib. f. 18.
- Diffiators*; If they were Sovereigns at Rome, VII. 6. 15.
- Differences*; If in a Natural State there is any one who may, with Authority, decide Differences, V. 13. 2, 3.
- Diffidence*; The Necessity and just Bounds of it in a Natural State, VII. 1. 7, &c.
- Dignities*; When they are really Honourable, VIII. 4. 23.
- Disabled Persons*; They ought to be maintain'd at the publick Expence, ib. 2. 1.
- Discipline*; (Military) It ought to be very strict, ibid. And why so, ib. 3. 26.
- Discovery*; One ought to communicate all Discoveries which are profitable to Life, III. 3. 2.
- Disinheritance*; There should be just Causes for disinheriting Children, IV. 11. 7, 11.
- Dispensations*; What they are, and how one ought to manage them, I. 6. 17.
- Dissent*; The mutual Dissent of the Parties disannuls the Engagement, V. 11. 8.
- Disimulation*; It is a necessary Consequence of Silence and Secrecy, IV. 1. 7. In what Cases it is permitted or even laudable, ib. 1.
- Divinities*; The Ideas which Men form of the Divinities of Paganism are pernicious and contrary to good Morals, as well as true Religion, II. 4. 4.
- Divorce*; If a Divorce is entirely contrary to Natural Law and the Gospel, VI. 1. 22, &c.
- Doctrines*; How and how far a Sovereign has Right to examine Doctrines, and Defend those which appear false or pernicious, VII. 4. 8.
- Doctor*; One ought not to receive an ignorant Doctor, V. 1. 5. The Intention of him who installs a Doctor does not hinder him from being receiv'd in Form, IV. 2. 5.
- Dominion*; See Propriety.
- Domesticks*; The reciprocal Duties of Domesticks, and their Masters, VI. 3. 4. 1.
- Doubt*; The general Rule of conducting ones self in a Doubt, I. 3. 8.
- Dowry* is a favourable and privileged thing, V. 12. 12. The Recovery of a Dowry, IV. 9. 4.
- Dreams*; If one is responsible for them, I. 5. 11.
- Duels*; The Antiquity of them, VIII. 4. 8. There is no real Dishonour in refusing a Duel, ib. He who in a Duel kills or wounds his Man does not do any Injury to him properly, I. 7. 13. And is not bound to have him healed at his Expence, III. 7. 8. Nor to indemnify his Wife or Children when he is dead, V. 9. 3. He who goes to a Rendezvous, cannot alledge for an Excuse, the Necessity of a just Defence of himself, II. 5. 9. The Means to prevent Duels, and render the Laws Effectual, ib. f. 12. Why they were formerly permitted, V. 9. 3.

E.

- Ecclesiasticks*; The Duties of them, VII. 8. 10. Their Negligence and Ignorance in what concerns the Study of Morals, they do not Right in attributing to themselves, Mal a Propos, the first place in Assemblies, as well Politick as Ecclesiastick, VIII. 4. 22. And in Publick Prayers, ibid. As well as in the Numeration of divers Orders or Estates of a Kingdom, ib. They have no particular Privilege which authorizes them to dispence with Vows and Oaths, IV. 2. 24. The same Sin notoriously committed by an Ecclesiastick is greater, than if it were a Person of another Order that was Guilty, VIII. 3. 20.
- Edifice*; One cannot build a lasting Edifice upon a River, without the Permission of the Sovereign of the Country, III. 3. 8.
- Education* is the proper Duty of Fathers and Mothers, and a Matter of the greatest Consequence, VI. 2. 6. It very much conduceth to the Good of the State, VII. 9. 4. It is also the Foundation of the perpetual Obligation of Children, VI. 2. 12.
- Effects*; How Natural Ones may be imputed, I. 5. 6. Retroactive Effects. See Civil Laws.
- Election*; How Election of Sovereigns is made, VII. 7. 6.
- Eloquence*; The Art of it is often pernicious, II. 4. 13.
- Emancipation*; How it was made amongst the Romans, V. 10. 8.
- Emperors*; What the Dignity and Authority of the Roman Emperors was when there was more than one at a time, VII. 5. 15.
- Empire*; What Reasons oblige us to submit to the Empire of any one, ib. 6. 5. If every Empire is founded upon the Consent of those who are subjected to it, III. 4. 4. If there is amongst Men any Natural Empire which excludes all Liberty absolutely independent, II. 2. 4.
- Employments*; Which are most honourable, I. 1. 9. How one ought to confer publick Employments, and what Degree of Honour one should allow to every one, VIII. 4. 23. One ought not to give them Singularly, as to the Nobleness of their Birth, ib. f. 3. It is bad Politicks only to prefer Men of a certain Order, ib. No Citizen hath a perfect Right to pretend to have Employments before others, whatsoever Merit he hath, he hath only a Right to require them, III. 1. 3. They who have given them to unworthy Persons are responsible to the State or Sovereign for the Evil that proceeds from them, ib. If they who have a publick
- Employ-

An INDEX of the most Material THINGS, &c.

- Employment may quit it, and retire any where else without the Consent of the State, VIII. 11. 3. How pernicious and blameable the felling of Ecclesiastical Employments is, V. 1. 5. What an Honorary Employment is, I. 1. 6.
- End*; Of what Actions of the Will the End is the Object, I. 4. 1. How many sorts there are of it in general, III. 6. 10. One ought to propose one which is conformable to our Nature, II. 4. 6.
- Enemy*; What Acts of Hostility one may lawfully exercise against an Enemy, VIII. 6. 7. If one may deceive him by false Discourse, IV. 1. 19. If it is permitted to defame him without a Cause, ib.
- Enmities*; They ought not to be perpetual, V. 13. 1.
- Entities*; What a Physical or Natural Entity is, I. 1. 2. What a Moral Entity, ib. f. 2, 3. Who is the Author of Moral Entities, ibid. f. 3. Their Original and End, ib. f. 4. Their Effects and Vertue, ib. Their different sorts, ib. f. 5. How they are destroy'd, ib. f. 23.
- Envy* is a Passion entirely vicious, II. 4. 12. And a Sentiment contrary to Humanity, III. 3. 1.
- Equality*; What Equality there ought to be in Contracts, V. 3. The Natural Equality of Men is either Physical or Moral, III. 2. 2. The last ought to be acknowledg'd by every one in relation to others, and how, ib. One ought to procure himself Equality of Mind, II. 4. 6.
- Equity*; The different Significations of it, V. 12. 21. Interpretation according to Equity, I. 6. 17.
- Equivocations*; If one may sometimes use them, IV. 1. 13.
- Error*; The different Sorts and Effects of Error, I. 3. 11, &c. In Regard of Promises and Contracts, III. 6. 6, 7. Oaths, IV. 2. 7. It diminishes the Enormity of a Crime, VIII. 3. 19. If one may cast others into any innocent Error, IV. 1. 18. That which one is cast into by the Discourse of publick Doctors is more Excusable than into which one falls by following the Principles of particular Men, VIII. 3. 19.
- Estates*; See Heritage.
- Esteem*; What it is, ib. 4. 1. How one ought to seek it, II. 4. 9. How many sorts there are of it, VIII. 4. 1. In what, simple Esteem consists, and how it may be impair'd, ib. f. 2. Esteem of Distinction, ib. f. 11, &c.
- Establishment*; Every human Establishment always supposes the Exception of a Case of Necessity, II. 6. 2.
- Event*; One should not judge of Actions by the Event, ib. 4. 8.
- Eunuchs*; If it is permitted to make Eunuchs, VI. 1. 6. If natural Law permits them to marry, ib. f. 25.
- Exactions of Publick Taxes*; We ought to hinder their Impositions, VIII. 5. 5.
- Examples*; Of those who induce others to a Crime by their Example, I. 5. 14. How pernicious Evil Examples are, VIII. 3. 22.
- Exchange*; What it is, V. 2. 9. ib. 5. 1. There are two sorts of it, ib. If it is a Contract which hath a proper and peculiar Name, V. 2. 7. Dry Exchange, ib. 7. 12.
- Exceptions*; Tacit Exceptions, III. 6. 2. Peremptory Exceptions, ib. f. 12.
- Execution*; if the simple Execution of an Order manifestly unjust, is Criminal, VIII. 1. 6. Imperfect Execution when punishable, ib. 3. 27. Of the Execution of Criminal Promises, III. 7. 8.
- Executioner*; He is not guilty of Murder in executing his Office, VIII. 4. 5. Why his Office is infamous, ib. f. 5, 6.
- Expiation*; The Expiation of a Crime is not one of the Natural Ends of Punishment, ib. 3. 12.
- Expences*; What Expences one must put in the Line of Account, in stating the Price of Merchandize, V. 1. 10.
- F.
- Fables*; If one may invent Fables, IV. 1. 15.
- Faction*; What it is, VIII. 2. 23.
- Faculties*; Why the Faculties of our Soul have been principally given us, II. 1. 5. How the Effects of the Natural Faculties of the Body and Mind, may be imputed to any Man, I. 5. 7.
- Faith*; If one ought to keep his Faith to one who has none, III. 6. 9.
- Fairs*; One ought to let Strangers carry from Fairs, what they have bought, ib. f. 2.
- Falsity*; All Falsity is not a Lye, IV. 1. 9.
- Family*; If a separate and independent Family may pass for a State, VI. 2. 20. The Interest of great Families, requires that the Eldest have some Advantage in the Succession, IV. 11. 8. One sometimes pardons a Man, because he is the last of an Illustrious Family, VIII. 3. 17.
- Farmer*, If the Accidents, which befall a Farmer, afford a just Reason for diminishing the Rent agreed upon, V. 6. 3.
- Fathers*; Whence comes the great Tenderness, which a Father hath for his Children, II. 3. 14. The extreme Grief that Fathers have to know their Children wicked, VIII. 3. 32. What Authority they have over their Children, (See Paternal Power.) If a Father has more than a Mother, VI. 2. 5. If he can sell his Children, ib. f. 9. He ought to nourish and educate them, IV. 11. 4, 5. Why he has Right to chastise them, VIII. 3. 10. If he can favour any of his Children in the Division of his Estate, IV. 11. 8. He has the Profit of his Children's good Advancements, ib. 8. 7. When he succeeds his Children, and when he is excluded from their Succession, ib. 11. 13. The Foundation of the Right of Life and Death, which Fathers of Families have over their Children and Slaves, in some States, VIII. 3. 13. How they may become Sovereigns in the independent State of Nature, VII. 3. 6.
- Adoptive Father*; The Roman Law did not permit an Adoptive Father to marry his Adopted Daughter, VI. 1. 32.
- Fault*; What a Fault is, and how many sorts of it, I. 7. 16. If the smallest Faults are real Sins, ib. 5. 8. If they ought to be punish'd at Human Tribunals, VIII. 3. 14.
- Favourable*; What it is in the Style of the Law, V. 12. 12.
- Fear*; 'Tis a Passion hurtful to Men, II. 4. 12. What Fear induc'd Men to form Civil Societies, VII. 1. 7. If Fear annuls the Oaths which it forc'd Men to take, IV. 2. 8. If the Fear of being deceiv'd, or an unjust Fear of Evil, annuls Pacts, III. 6. 9, 10, 11. If the Fear of a Neighbour's Power is a just Reason to make War against him, II. 5. 6. VIII. 6. 5.
- Felicity*; What Felicity one may promise himself in the World, II. 4. 8.
- Feller of Wood*; See Wood.
- Felony*; What it is, and what is the Consequence of it, IV. 8. 12.
- Fiefs*; What Fiefs are, ibid. Their Original, VIII. 4. 30. When they return to the Lord, IV. 8. 12.
- Fine*; We ought not by paying it to insult the Magistrate, VIII. 3. 4.
- First*; An Explication of the Maxim, that the First in Date hath the best Right, III. 7. 11. He that hath First committed a Crime, ought to be punish'd more severely, than they who are seduc'd by his Example, VIII. 3. 22.
- Fishing*; Upon what is founded that Right of Fishing which particular Men have, IV. 6. 5. Whether one can appropriate to himself the Fishing upon any part of the Sea, ib. 5. 7.
- Fishers*; They ought not to fish (according to a Chinese Philosopher) but with Nets with large Meshes, ibid. 3. 6. Why the Roman Law forbids them to burn Fire upon a River in the Night time, III. 3. 4.
- Flattery*; It is a kind of injury and mockery, VIII. 4. 13.
- Flatterers*; How pernicious they are to Princes, VII. 9. 2. If they are oblig'd to repair the Damage that proceeds from their flattery, III. 1. 4.
- Flesh*, If in a great Scarcity of Victuals, one may eat Human Flesh, II. 6. 3. If the Custom of it which is establish'd amongst the Savages of America, is a sufficient Reason to declare War against them, VIII. 6. 5.
- Flight*; Whether in cases of Assault, a Man is oblig'd, if he can conveniently, berake himself to flight, II. 5. 13. Whether in flight one may break down a Bridge behind him, or shut a Gate, when by that he leaves

An INDEX of the most Material THINGS, &c.

- leaves his Companions expos'd to the Fury of the Enemy, or run over an innocent Person, who is in his way, II. 6. 3.
- Force; If Force alone produces any Obligation, I. 6. 9, 10. Whether Contracts made by Force are null and void, III. 6. 10.
- Fornication; Whether simple Fornication be contrary to the Law of Nature, VI. 1. 4. How it was look'd upon in different Nations, ibid.
- Fortifications; If, to make them, one may take the Gardens, Houses or Lands of particular Persons, and the Materials which were prepar'd for their own use, VIII. 5. 7.
- Fortitude; If they can demonstrate that Vertue without supposing the Immortality of the Soul, II. 3. 19.
- Fortune; Men cast upon Fortune the evil Effects of False Measures which themselves take imprudently, II. 4. 8.
- Found; A Man that has found any thing, ought to endeavour that the Owner may recover it, IV. 13. 4. When a Man becomes lawful Owner of what he has found, ib. 6. 12.
- Fountain; One should not stop it up, or conceal it, after he has made use of it, III. 3. 4.
- Fraud; It is put in the same rank with Violence, with relation to the Validity of Contracts, ib. 6. 10. Whether it makes Oaths void, IV. 11. 17.
- Friends; We ought to succour them, VIII. 6. 14. If in Point of Succession, they ought to be prefer'd to Relations, IV. 11. 15. Injuries done by a Friend affect us more than those of an Enemy, or a Stranger, VIII. 3. 20.
- Friendship; Wherein consist its Duties, ib. 9. 2. Friendship and Faith two most sacred things, V. 4. 2.
- Fruits; What they are, and how many sorts of them, IV. 7. 3. To whom the Off-spring of Living Creatures belongs, ib. Whether Fruits are reckon'd in the Estimation of Damage, III. 1. 3.
- Fruition; What it is, I. 4. 1.
- Function; No Member of a State ought to render himself incapable of Military Functions, VIII. 2. 3.
- G.
- Gain; Whether the Gain, that a Man that is kill'd, could have made, may be reckon'd in the Estimation of Damage, III. 1. 7.
- General of an Army; What the Extent of his Power is, VIII. 6. 10. He can assign every Man his Post, ibid. 2. 4. If he may tell his Soldiers any thing that is not true, IV. 1. 16. If the Sovereign is oblig'd to ratify the Agreements which the Generals or other Officers of War make with the Enemy, VIII. 7. 13.
- Generation; Whether it be the Foundation of Paternal Authority, VI. 2. 4, 12.
- Gestures; They are imperfect Signs of Consent, III. 6. 16.
- Gibeonites; Whether the Trick they us'd to Joshua be Criminal, IV. 2. 7.
- Glory; In what true Glory consists, VIII. 4. 12. Vain Glory is nothing but an imaginary Good, ib. 3. 19.
- God; Although God cannot do certain things, he is nevertheless Omnipotent, II. 3. 4. If his Sovereignty is founded upon his Omnipotency, I. 6. 10. He is not the Cause of the Malice of human Actions, ibid. 7. 5. Universal Liberty void of all Hindrance and of all Defect, is applicable only to God, II. 1. 3. In what Sense God is a Law to Himself, ib. If there is any Law common to God and Man, ib. 3. 5. If Men can do any meritorious Thing in relation to him, I. 9. 5. A general Idea of the Duties of Man towards God, II. 4. 2. His Will is the Foundation of the Obligation we lie under to observe the Law of Nature, ib. 3. 20.
- Good; What it is, and how many sorts there are of it, I. 4. 4. Real and imaginary, VIII. 3. 19. In what sense Good or Evil depends upon the Determination of the Sovereign, or of the Civil Law, ib. 1. 5. Good which happens to Man is of Three sorts, II. 3. 21. The Scarcity of a Good thing does not make it more valuable in it self, V. 1. 6. When the Prospect of an Agreeable and Profitable Good lessens a Crime,
- VIII. 3. 19. Any Good thing may be communicated gratis and without any Motive, I. 9. 2. How one may do another a real Good Turn, III. 6. 13.
- Goods; (Riches) They are the Object of the greatest Part of the Law, and are as it were the Life of Mortals, IV. 3. 1. The Inequality of the Goods of Fortune are not contrary to the Natural Equality of Men, III. 2. 2. If we may lawfully kill him who would take them from us, II. 5. 16. The Prince may direct what Use we should make of them, VIII. 5. 3. If he has a Right of disposing of them absolutely, ib. 1. 2. If he can give up at a Pacification, the Goods of private Subjects, ib. 8. 3.
- Goods of another; Every one ought to abstain from them Religiously, IV. 13. 1. If one may take them in extreme Necessity, II. 6. 5, 6. If one may destroy them to save his own, ib. f. 8. Promises of another Man's Goods are null, III. 7. 10. The Duty of him who is entrusted with them, IV. 13. 2, &c. Different ways of having a Right over the Goods of another, ib. 8.
- Publick Goods; How many sorts of them, VIII. 5. 7. How far the Prince has the Power of disposing of them, ib.
- Goodness; The Goodness of an Action is not absolutely in it self susceptible of Quantity, I. 8. 1. Wherein it consists, ib. 7. 3.
- Good-luck; See Felicity.
- Government; (Civil) It binds stronger than Government form'd by ordinary Compact, VII. 4. 9. If accidental Circumstances change the Form, ib. 5. 1, 12. What a regular Government is, and how many sorts there are, ib. f. 3. Irregular Governments, ib. f. 14, 15. Whether they are reckon'd among mixt Governments, ib. f. 13. The Difficulty of the Art of Government, ib. 9. 2. What is the best Government, ib. 5. 22. The Government may be different according to the Genius of the People, ib. 6. 5.
- Governor of a Province; Whether he can of his own head, make War or Peace, VIII. 6. 10.
- Gownsmen; They are as Profitable as Swords-men, ib. 4. 30.
- Grafts; Whether in Accession, they follow the Stock on which they are grafted, IV. 7. 5.
- Grapes; They should be left after Vintage to poor People, III. 3. 4.
- Gratitude; The Necessity and Rules of this Virtue, ib. f. 16. A Comparison betwixt its Duties, and those of Beneficence, V. 12. 23.
- Guarantees of a Peace; What they are oblig'd to, VIII. 8. 7.
- Guests; If they sit down to Table at a Publick House, they are oblig'd to pay their Scott, tho' they made no Agreement with the Host, III. 6. 2.
- Gulf; To whom it belongs when many different Nations possess the Lands on its Shores, IV. 5. 8.
- Gutters; The Services for Gutters, ib. 8. 11.
- H.
- Habitation; The Right of it what it is, IV. 8. 9.
- Habit; What Influence it has upon Moral Actions, I. 4. 6. ib. 5. 13. The Terms which constitute it are capable of any Latitude, ib. 2. 10.
- Hatred; We ought not to nourish it, II. 4. 12.
- Hazard; Of Contracts wherein is Hazard, V. 9.
- Heard; In what Case one is Culpable for having heard a thing said, I. 5. 14.
- Hereticks; How unjust the Animosity is which Men have against them, and how Detestable that Opinion is, which permits a Violation of Faith with them, II. 4. 4.
- Heritage; Heritage in the City (Prædia Urbana) what they are in the Roman Law, IV. 8. 11. Heritage in the Country (Prædia Rustica) ibid.
- Hair; He is thought to have the Propriety of the Fruits of the Deceas'd, before the Formality of taking Possession, IV. 4. 10. Whether he can lawfully receive in the Name of the Deceas'd, the Offers which he had refus'd, III. 9. 6. Whether he can claim any of the Fruits of the Grounds, of which the Deceas'd had the Use and Profits, without the Property, when he dies before Harvest, IV. 8. 7. If he finishes the - Time

An INDEX of the most Material THINGS, &c.

- Time of the Prescription which run before the Death of the Deceas'd, IV. 12. 4. How far he is liable to pay the Debts of the Deceas'd, ib. 11. 20. And to answer for his Oaths, ib. 2. 17. His Promises or Contracts, ibid. If he ought to pay the pecuniary Reparations to which the Deceas'd had been condemn'd, VIII. 3. 3, 33. If one may inflict any infamous Punishment upon him as he is an Heir, ibid. To what the Heir of a Thief is liable, III. 1. 11.
- Hermits*; Whether they do well to withdraw themselves from human Society, II. 4. 15.
- Hiring or Renting*; What it is, V. 6. 1.
- History*; What the Knowledge of it is necessary to, II. 4. 13.
- Historian*; He is indispensibly oblig'd to tell the Truth, as far as it is known to him, IV. 1. 7.
- Honage*; Forc'd Honages are no real Marks of Honour, VIII. 4. 14.
- Homicide*; What it is, I. 1. 6. Whether it is Culpable when one only intends a Wound, ib. 3. 16. How the Damage done by it ought to be repair'd, III. 1. 7. Whether it should always be punish'd with Death, VIII. 3. 26. See more in Murder.
- Honest*; If the honest and dishonest are such of themselves or by Appointment, I. 2. 6. II. 3. 4. The Ideas of Honesty separated from the Relation which they have to the Will of God, are nothing but fine Chimæras, or barren Principles, II. 3. Every one is suppos'd Honest, as long as they cannot prove to the contrary, VIII. 4. 3.
- Honour*; (of Distinction or Preference) What it is, IV. 4. 11. What are its Foundations, ib. f. 12. How one must seek it, II. 4. 9. Whether Honours depend absolutely upon the Will of the Sovereign, ib. f. 32.
- Honour*; (the Reputation of an Honest Man) Whether it depends upon the arbitrary Determination of the Sovereign, VIII. 4. 9. Whether one can without a Crime sacrifice it for his Prince, ib. f. 10.
- Honour*; (Chastity) Whether 'tis lawful for a Woman rather to kill her self, than lose her Honour by being ravish'd, II. 4. 19.
- Point of Honour*; The vanity of Point of Honour in relation to Duels, ibid. f. 8.
- Hope*; How it ought to be ruled, ibid. f. 12. If one may sometimes make a Man conceive false Hopes, III. 5. 5.
- Hospitality*; In what its Rights consist, ib. 3. 9.
- Hostage*; If one may give himself an Hostage, II. 4. 18. If the Sovereign can force us to it, VIII. 2. 6. If he engages the Life of Hostages, or only their Liberty, ibid. If they should be punish'd for the breach of a Treaty, ib. If when an Hostage comes to be Heir to him, who sent him, he be bound to stay, ib. 8. 6. Of Hostages given to Robbers, III. 6. 11.
- Humanity*; Wherein the Duties of it consist, ib. 3. 1, &c. In what they differ from those of Justice, ib. 4. 1. To what Nations one may refuse them, ib. 3. 3. and VIII. 4. 5.
- Humour*; If the Inconsistency of Humours be a Reason sufficient for the dissolving of Marriage, IV. 1. 22.
- Humility*; In what honest and reasonable Humility consists, III. 2. 6.
- Hunting*; 'Tis an Exercise fit for Nobility and Princes, IV. 6. 6. To whom the Right of Hunting belongs, ib. f. 5. How one may make the Laws concerning Hunting valid, ib. f. 7.
- Huntsman*; If the Beasts he hath taken contrary to the Laws belong to him, IV. 6. 7. If a Beast belongs to him after the Moment he has kill'd it, ib. f. 10.
- Hurt*; One is not hurt for being frustrated of that which others owe us by virtue of an imperfect Obligation, III. 1. 3. He who is hurt is not oblig'd to content himself with the Punishment of the Offender, ib. f. 11.
- Husband*; His Authority does not necessarily imply the Power of Life and Death, VI. 1. 13. The Foundation of his lawful Authority, ib. 11, &c. Whether he be Responsible for what his Wife does, I. 5. 14. If when he consents to the Prostitution of his Wife, she commits Adultery, ib. 7. 17. The Laws absolve him who kills his Wife with her Gallant, surpriz'd in the very Fact, II. 5. 15. VIII. 3. 13. Whence it comes that the Disgrace of the Immodesty of a Woman reflects upon her Husband, VI. 1. 10. If when a Husband is taken Prisoner, the Enemy thereby gets any Right over his Wife and Children, VIII. 6. 19.

I.

- Ideot*; His Promises are null, III. 6. 3.
- Idle*; One ought not to assist idle Men, ib. f. 6.
- Ideas*; (innate) If there be such, II. 3. 13.
- Jealousy*; If it be Unjust and Ridiculous in it self, VI. 1. 15.
- Ignominy*; Marks of Ignominy are little mortifying to those who have many Companions, VIII. 4. 11.
- Ignorance*; Its different sorts, I. 3. 10. The Actions which proceed from it are more involuntary, than those which fear Causes, ib. 7. 17. Invincible Ignorance excludes all Imputation, ib. 5. 10.
- Immovable Goods*; What is meant by them, IV. 6. 3. How one makes himself Master of them by Right of first taking Possession, ib. f. 3, 8. When 'tis that they are taken by the Enemy, VIII. 6. 17.
- Immunity*; How one can lawfully grant an Immunity, ib. 5. 6. No one extends to a Case of Necessity, ib. f. 7. and ib. 2. 1. ib. 4. 33. They who have Immunities ought not to abuse them, by making the Goods of others, which are not free from Imposts, pass under his Name, V. 10. 8. They ought not to be given purely and simply for the sake of the Nobility, VIII. 4. 31.
- Impossible*; An Explication of that Maxim, No Body is oblig'd to Impossibleities, I. 5. 8. III. 7. 2, &c. Evil Actions are esteem'd Impossible in the Roman Law, I. 7. 2. How one must explain it, when one finds Impossible in a Law, Contract, or in a Will, ib. 5. 8.
- Impossibility*; It is either Physical or Moral, ibid.
- Imposts*; Who has a Right to exact them, VIII. 5. 4. Rules which one must follow in their Establishment, and in the Taxing of every particular, ib. f. 5, 6, 8, and ib. 9. 10.
- Impudence*; In what it consists, I. 2. 6.
- Impotency of Husbands*; When it is Incurable it annuls the Marriage, VI. 1. 25.
- Impunity*; Why 'tis given to certain Crimes, I. 6. 15. One ought not to grant it to certain Persons without very great Reason, VIII. 3. 17. Frequent Examples of Impunity lessen the Heinousness of a Crime, ibid. f. 22.
- Impurity*; If those Inconveniencies caus'd by them, which are mention'd in the Law of Moses, were Punishments properly so call'd, ib. 3. 4.
- Imputation*; Whence it proceeds, when a thing is capable of Imputation, I. 5. 5. What things are capable of it, ib. f. 6, &c. What is an Imputation which is grounded upon Favour, ibid. 9. 2. An Imputation concerning Right, ib. f. 3. Simple Imputation and Powerful Imputation concerning Right, ib. f. 6.
- Incest*; What it is, ib. 2. 6. Whether one can commit it to preserve one from Death, ib. 5. 9.
- Inclinations*; To what their Diversity tends, II. 17. 9.
- Incorrigible Persons*; it would be better for them to be dead, VIII. 3. 10. Whether none but incorrigible Offenders ought to be punish'd, ib. f. 10.
- Inequality*; Whence come those Inequalities between Men, III. 2. 9. How one ought to set right that Inequality which appears in a Contract, V. 3. 9.
- Infamy*; How one is marked with Infamy, VIII. 4. 6, 7. Infamy de jure & de facto, what it is among the Lawyers, ib. f. 7. How, and by whom, Infamy can be wip'd off, ib. f. 10. Whether one is oblig'd to incur real Infamy to obey ones Sovereign, ib. f. 9.
- Infant*; See Children.
- Informers* ought to take care not to be guilty of the same Crimes of which they accuse others, ib. 3. 7. Altho' they be suborn'd by their Sovereign, they commit an Evil Action, ib. 1. 7.
- Ingrateful*; Whether one can lay an Action of Injustice against ungrateful Persons, III. 3. 17. In what places it is impracticable, ibid.
- Ingratitude*; The Baseness of that Vice, ibid. Why it is more shameful and odious than Injustice, ibid. Complicated Ingratitude, ibid.

An INDEX of the most Material THINGS, &c.

Injury; What it is, I. 7. 15. In what it differs from Damage, ib. f. 13. From Injustice, ibid. And from Fault, ibid. From Misfortune, ib. f. 16. Injuries can produce no Right, III. 6. 10. How they judge of its Greatness, VIII. 3. 20. Every one has a Natural Right not to suffer Injuries, III. 2. 4. Rules of Prudence which they ought to follow who have receiv'd any, II. 5. 3. There is sometimes a Greatness of Mind to despise Injuries, VIII. 4. 8. When it is that an Injury is esteem'd morally not done, I. 9. 3. How they make Compensation for Injuries, or Benefits with Injuries, V. 11. 6.

Injustice; What it is, I. 7. 14. It can produce no Right, nor impose any Obligation, III. 6. 10. A less gives no more Right to its Author than a greater, ibid.

Innocence; It does not always find its Defence in it self, VII. 1. 8.

Innocent; It is better to hazard letting a Criminal escape, than to punish an Innocent, I. 3. 6. In what case one can hazard the perishing of an innocent Person, ib. 5. 3.

Instinct; Whether those things to which natural Instinct carries us, can be the Matter of any Obligation, VI. 1. 3. When it is we must restrain it, ibid.

Instrument; They spoil exterior Instruments sometimes as well as those inanimate and destitute of Reason, II. 3. 3. How the Nature of the Instrument tends to aggravate a Crime, VIII. 3. 20.

Intention; What it is, I. 4. 1. Full Intention, and imperfect Intention, ibid. The good Intention does not render an Act materially good, ib. 7. 4. In Judgment, When there is a doubtful or equivocal Intention, it must be taken on the more favourable side, ib. 8. 3. What sort of Intention is necessary to make a moral Action good before the Divine Tribunal, ib. f. 2. How far it has Regard in Human Tribunals, ib. f. 3.

Interest of Money lent; Whether natural Right forbids absolutely to take it, V. 7. 9. Interest lucratory and compensatory, what it is, whether both of them are Lawful, ibid.

Interpretation; How one ought to take it in that of Laws and Conventions, V. 12.

Interregnum; What it is, VII. 7. 7.

Invention; One ought to communicate the Inventions of things necessary to human Life, III. 3. 2.

Joy; How, and how far, that Passion is Lawful, II. 4. 12. Malignant Joy for Mischiefs which happens to another, is contrary to Humanity, ib. 3. 1. Whether the Joy one shews at the Wrong which one sees done to any one, obliges one to repair the Damage, III. 1. 4.

Joshua; Whether the Oath which he made to the Gibonites be valid, IV. 2. 7.

Judge; He ought not to sell Justice, V. 1. 5. Whether he who pronounces an unjust Sentence, but by order of his Prince, commits by that, any Crime, VIII. 1. 7. In what consists the Equality which he ought to observe in the Exercise of Justice, ib. 3. 23. When it is that he can administer the Oath to Parties, IV. 2. 22. Whether he can use an Artifice to discover a Crime that is not proved, ib. 1. 20.

Just; Whether there was any thing of Just and Unjust, without the Establishment of Civil Laws, VIII. 1. 6.

Justice; Of the Justice of Actions, I. 7. 7. Of that of Persons, ib. f. 6. Justice universal and particular, ib. f. 8. Distributive, ib. f. 9. Commutative, ib. f. 10. Avenging or Vindicative Justice, VIII. 3. 5. In what consists the Inequality which one must observe in the Exercise of it, ib. f. 23. Its Exercise is capable of being understood, both with relation to Clemency, and to Rigour, I. 2. 10. Whether Satisfaction to Justice be a Natural End of the Punishment of Crimes, VIII. 3. 12.

K.

Kings; To whom it belongs to give the Title of King, VIII. 3. 9. If the Power of a King flows from Paternal Authority, VI. 2. 10. If a King is above all his People, VII. 6. 5. If the People may depose their Kings as they think good, ib. 5. 9. The different sorts of Promises Kings make at their coming to the Throne, ib. 6. 10. How Important it is for the Good of the State, and the Interest of Kings that their Authority be limited, ib. f. 9. Who are Kings, whose Authority is not inviolable, ib. 8. 8. Kings ought indispensibly to keep the Oaths they have made, VIII. 10. 5. In what sense their Contracts are above the Rules of the Civil Law, ib. f. 4. How long their Minority endures, ib. f. 3. If Contracts made in their Name during their Minority are valid, ibid. How he may free himself from Engagements made to Strangers, ib. f. 2. And to his own Subjects, ib. f. 3. If one King really ought to give place to any other King, ib. 4. 2. If he may leave the Decision of a Quarrel, or of Articles of Peace to a single Combat, or to a Battle of two Armies, ib. 8. 5. If when he is fallen into the hands of his Enemies, they become thereby Masters of his Kingdom, ib. 6. 19. If his Alliance with a King who hath been since chas'd from his Kingdom, do still continue, ib. 9. 9. See more in Prince and Sovereign.

Kingdom; what it is, VII. 6. 17. A Patrimonial Kingdom, ibid. f. 16. What Power the Master of such a Kingdom hath over the Goods included in his Dominions, VIII. 5. 1. The Order of Succession abintestate to such a Kingdom, VII. 7. 11. A Kingdom establish'd by the free and voluntary Consent of the People, ib. 6. 17. If the King of such a Kingdom may alienate it, either wholly or in part, VIII. 5. 9. Or engage it, or make it a Fief to another, ib. f. 10. Or discharge a Vassal of his Kingdom from the Homage he owes him, ibid. If a part of a Kingdom may separate it self from the whole Body, ib. f. 9.

Knowledge; An indifferent Knowledge of profitable things is more valuable than a perfect Knowledge of unprofitable things, II. 4. 13. The Necessity of the Knowledge of Ones-self, ib. f. 5.

L.

Labours; If one may shorten his Life by hard Labour, II. 4. 17. When Labour is in the place of Punishment, VIII. 3. 4.

Lands; If one make a Division of Land amongst Men, IV. 5. 4. If Strangers may without the Permission of the Sovereign seize on the vacant Lands which they find in a Country, III. 3. 10. What Lands are, IV. 6. 3. How they take Possession of them, ib. 9. 7. If a little is better than more, when Money circulates in a great Quantity, V. 1. 16. If 'tis for the Interest of a State to permit Subjects to bequeath their Lands by Will, IV. 11. 18.

Landlord; In what Case the Loss that happens to the Tenant ought to be charg'd upon him, V. 6. 2.

Languages; Of their Original, IV. 1. 3. To what the Knowledge of divers Languages tends, II. 4. 13. It is no matter in what Language a Contract is wrote, provided the Parties understand one another, III. 6. 16.

Latitude; (Moral) In what it consists, I. 2. 8, &c.

Law; What it is in general, I. 6. 4. What difference there is between Law and Counsel, ib. f. 1. Between it and a Compact, ib. f. 2. Between Law and Right, ib. f. 3. The essential Parts of a Law, ib. f. 14. Its Matter, ib. f. 16. and I. 8. 4. Its different sorts, ib. f. 18. An Obligatory Law, and a Law of Simple Permission, ib. f. 15. If one ought to divide it into Directive and Coactive, ib. f. 14. In what sense the Law acts, ib. and VII. 6. 11. It ought to be known by them for whom it is made, ib. f. 13. Who ought to explain the obscure Parts of it, ibid. Imperfect Laws, ib. f. 17. Who can dispense with them, and how, ibid. Laws Affirmative and Negative, II. 6. 2. V. 12. 23. Whether all Laws ought to be publish'd by Writing, I. 6. 4. and II. 3. 20. Cases of Necessity are tacitly excepted in Laws, II. 6. 2. Why particular Cases are not express'd, I. 2. 5. Rules for the Interpretation of Laws, V. 12. An Opposition between two Laws, I. 3. 8. V. 12. 23. The Cincian Law; I. 6. 14.

Civil Law; What it is properly, VIII. 1. 1. How they ought to be made, VII. 9. 5. We must distinguish two Reasons upon which they are founded, VIII. 3. 17. If they can be contrary to Natural Law, ib. f. 2.

An INDEX of the most Material THINGS, &c.

M.

3. If the Nature of Crimes depend absolutely upon their Determination, ibid. Why they do not give all the Force of the Civil Law to all the Maxims of the Law of Nature, ib. 1. 1. and ib. 3. 14. The Publick Interest requires that their Rigour go sometimes beyond Justice, I. 2. 10. Necessary obliges us sometimes to mitigate, or quite abolish them, VIII. 3. 17. They ought to have been very few, before the Establishment of the Propriety of Goods, IV. 4. 13. If the Consent of the People be always necessary to make them oblige the Conscience, I. 6. 13. How far they extend their Power with Relation to those who are simply in an Error, ib. 3. 2. When the Laws are extended to Cases not express'd, ibid. f. 17. They ought not to be purely Penal, VIII. 3. 4. Of Laws whose Prohibitions are Conditional, ibid. How the Civil Laws ought to be made, VII. 9. 5.
- Laws; (Fundamental) What they are, ib. 6. 10. If a Prince can dispense with them, VIII. 10. 3.
- Law; (Licinian) What it is, ib. 5. 4.
- Law; (Mosaic) If it is the whole Rule of Punishment, ib. 3. 26.
- Law of Nature; What it is, I. 6. 18. If its Principles be innate, II. 3. 13. What is the Foundation of the Obligation which it imposes, ib. f. 20. In what consists its Sanction, I. 6. 14. II. 3. 21. III. 4. 6. If it has not the Force of a Law, as it is publish'd in the Holy Scriptures, II. 3. 20. If its Precepts are always in force, IV. 4. 13. If Equity has a place in its Interpretation, V. 12. 21.
- Law; (Penal) What it is, VIII. 3. 16.
- Law; (Positive) What it is, I. 6. 18. If there are Divine Positive Laws which oblige all Mankind, ib.
- Law; (Rhodian) II. 6. 8.
- Laws; (Sumptuary) How they are profitable to the State, VIII. 4. 3. Their End is sometimes Alternative, ib. 3. 4.
- Leagues; See Alliances.
- Legislators; How they may be known, I. 6. 13. In what Sense they may force Men to obey, ib. f. 14. They cannot specify and foresee all Chances, V. 12. 17. What Rules they ought to follow in the Determination of the Obligation to which they would give the Force of the Civil Law, III. 4. 6. VIII. 1. 1.
- Legacies (Pious) for restoring the Frauds and Thefts which have been committed, are contrary to Religion, II. 4. 4. The Sovereign can prescribe Bounds to Legacies, VIII. 5. 4.
- Libels; They are Culpable who publish them, III. 1. 4.
- Liberality; The Excellency of that Vertue, ib. 3. 15. The Rules which all Men ought to follow in the Exercise of it, ibid.
- Liberty; A Faculty of the Soul, I. 4. 2. II. 1. 2. Its Indifference, I. 4. 3.
- Liberty; (Independency) If that of the State of Nature be contrary to Nature, II. 2. 4. Why Liberty is call'd an inestimable Good, V. 1. 5. There are two sorts of Obstacles to that Liberty, VII. 3. 10.
- Lie; Wherein it consists, IV. 1. 8. 9.
- Life; What use one ought to make of Life, II. 4. 15. If an active Life is preferable to a contemplative one, ib. 3. 15. and ib. 4. 13. In what Case it is permitted to expose or sacrifice it for the Advantage of another, ib. f. 17. The Life of a free Person is not capable of Estimation, III. 1. 7.
- Loan; A Loan for spending, V. 7. 1, &c. What a Loan for Use is, ib. 4. 6. If a Loan for Usury is contrary to Natural Law, VII. 7. 9. What a Lender is oblig'd to, V. 4. 6.
- Lot; A Decision by Lot is not always the Voice of God, ib. 9. 2. Why 'tis made use of, III. 2. 5. V. 9. 23.
- Lottery; What it is, and what Conditions are necessary to make it lawful, ib. f. 6.
- Love; When 'tis Lawful, II. 4. 12. Self-Love is the strongest of all Inclinations, ib. 3. 14. Well understood it is one of the three great Springs of the Law of Nature, ib. f. 15. and ib. 4. 1. How far the Love of our Neighbour should carry us, ib. 5. 14. To love our Neighbour as our selves, in what sense it is to be taken, ibid.
- Luxury; How it is Pernicious to a State, VIII. 5. 3. Means to make it cease, ibid.
- Madness; If it seizing a Man makes his Compacts null and void, III. 6. 3. If a Madman have any Right of Propriety, IV. 4. 15. One may disguise the Truth to him, ibid. 1. 15.
- Magistrate; What he is, I. 1. 12. VII. 2. 24. Magistrates ought to judge according to the Laws, VIII. 3. 17. If they ought to punish Crimes, which they themselves are guilty of, VIII. 3. 7. If they may use sometimes a Lie, IV. 1. 17. Their Connivance is Criminal, I. 5. 14. In what Cases they may use Connivance, VIII. 3. 17.
- Majority; What it is, I. 1. 10. ib. 5. 1.
- Malice; In what the malice of an Action consists, ib. 7. 3.
- Man; His Natural Weakness, II. 1. 8. He is more wretched than the Beasts, ib. f. 6. If he can be Sociable, and live without Laws, ibid. 1. If he Naturally loves Society, VII. 1. 2. He is liable to correct the Evils which trouble Society, ib. f. 4. If all Things were created for Man, IV. 3. 2. If all Men have Will and Power to hurt one another, II. 2. 6. What Right he has over the Goods of this World, IV. 3. 1. If he is always in a state of War with the Beasts, ib. f. 5. He ought not to abuse the Right he has over them, and why, ibid. If they have Power to confer of themselves, on one of their Equals, a Power so Eminent and Absolute, that it may exempt him from all Obligation, with relation to them, III. 4. 8. If it be unjust for one Man to punish another, VIII. 3. 6. What care Men ought to take of themselves, II. 4. 1. They ought to be Easy and Compliant one to another, III. 2. 4. To do good to each other, ibid. 3. 1. If supposing they had continued in a State of Innocence, they would have Establish'd a Positive Law, or Civil Society, I. 1. 11.
- Mandate; See Commission.
- Market; Strangers which are permitted to come to Markets, ought to be suffer'd to carry away what they have bought, III. 6. 2.
- Marriage; It is the Nursery of Human Kind, VI. 1. 2. The Foundation of the Order of Civil Society, ibid. f. 5. Irregular Marriages, or according to the fashion of the Amazons, ib. f. 9. The Laws of regular Marriage, ib. f. 10. Whether a Marriage be valid, when one has sworn not to marry him or her whom one espouses, IV. 2. 11. Whether Consent of Parties Constitutes Marriage, VI. 1. 14. Natural Obstacles which hinder Marriage, ibid. 1. 14. and f. 25. Moral Obstacles, ibid. f. 27. And so on just Reasons of dissolving it, ibid. 21, &c. It ought not to be broken without great Reasons, not even by the Consent of the Parties, ibid. 5. 20. Whether one can be oblig'd to enter into an Engagement of Marriage, and how far, ibid. f. 3, 6, 7. Of forced Consent or Error on the Subject of Marriage, ibid. 1. 26. Whether a Marriage against the Consent of Parents be null, ibid. 2. 14. Whether the Sacerdotal Benediction be necessary by the Law of Nature to finish the marriage, ibid. 1. 4. Of Marriages of Conscience, ibid. f. 36. How they annul Marriages, or strip them of certain Effects, ib. The facility of Marriages is very useful to the State, VIII. 5. 3. Whether one be indispensably oblig'd to permit Strangers to contract Marriages in our Country, III. 3. 13.
- Masters; How far they extend their Power over their Domesticks, VI. 3. 4.
- Mathematicks are useful Sciences, II. 4. 13.
- Mediator; The difference which is between a Mediator and a Person simply charged to notify and declare the Will of any one, III. 9. 4. Of Mediators of Peace, V. 13. 7.
- Members of Human Body; Whether of themselves they are capable of Esteem, III. 1. 8. What Power Necessity gives us over our Members, II. 6. 3.
- Members of an Assembly; Whether they ought to be punish'd when they have advised any thing contrary to the deliberation which had prevailed, VIII. 3. 28.
- Merchant; How he ought to set a Price on his Merchandizes, V. 1. 10. Why an insolent Merchant is treated more Rigorously than a Debtor that does not trade, III. 7. 3. Whether one can sometimes compel the

An INDEX of the most Material THINGS, &c.

the Merchants to sell their Merchandizes or Wares, V. 3. 6.

Merchandize; the loss of it sold but not delivered, upon his account, whose it is, ibid. 5. 3. Whether one has a Right to Transport his Merchandizes through the Lands of another, III. 3. 6. Whether one can establish the Rights of coming in, and going out, upon Merchandizes or Wares, ibid. f. 7. Upon what foot one ought to regulate those Rights, VIII. 5. 5.

Merit of a Person; What is its Foundation, II. 4. 7. One cannot precisely mark the degree, I. 2. 10. It is the only reasonable foundation of Esteem and Honour, VIII. 4. 12. It however does not suffice for giving a perfect Right, to require the marks of Honour, ib. f. 14.

Merit of Actions, What it is, and what is its Foundation, I. 9. 5.

Metals, which are proper for Money, V. 1. 12. To whom they belong which are hid in the Entrails of the Earth, IV. 6. 4.

Mine and Thine; Whether it is the Cause of Divisions and Wars, ib. 4. 7.

Minors; Whether the Engagements of a Minor be always invalid of themselves, ibid. 2. 11. Whether he who borrowed without the Approbation of his Tutor be obliged to pay, III. 4. 5.

Ministers (Publick) of the State or the Prince, VII. 2. 24. Their Duties in general, ibid. 8. 10. What Persons the Sovereign ought to chuse for his Ministers, ibid. 9. 9. How one knows when they Act in his Name and in his Authority, I. 6. 13. Whether a simple presumption of the Will of their Master Authorizes them to exceed his Orders, VIII. 6. 11. Whether to avert a Great Evil with which the State is Menaced, they are bound to Expose themselves to any feigned Disgrace, ibid. 4. 10. To what they are obliged who have concluded any Publick Treaty, without Orders of the Prince or State, ibid. 9. 12. Means to avoid Contestations for the Precedency between the Ministers of many Potentates, ibid. 4. 21. Ministers of Religion, their Duties in general, VII. 8. 10.

Modes; What it is, and how many sorts there are, I. 1. 3. Simple moral Fashions, ibid. f. 17.

Moderation of Soul; One ought to procure one's-self that, II. 4. 6.

Monks; Their Life is of it self contrary to the Law of Humanity, III. 3. 2. The greatest part, even of their Societies, do not agree with the Maxims of Religion and Right Reason, II. 4. 4, 15.

Monarchy; What it is, and how it is formed, VII. 5. 3, 9. In what sense the Will of the King is in a Monarchy the Will of the State, ib. 2. 14.

Monarch; Whether there are Monarchs for a time, ibid. 6. 14, 15.

Money; Its Original and Use, V. 1. 12, 13. Whether it was in the time of the Trojan War, ib. 5. 1. Whether it is little worth in its own Nature, ib. 7. 10. How Sovereigns can regulate its Value, ib. 1. 14, 15. Its intrinsic Value if subject to Change, ib. f. 16. Whether in restoring things lent for Consumption, one ought to have Regard to the extrinsic or intrinsic Goodness of the Money, ib. 7. 6, 7.

Monopoly; Whether all Monopoly be contrary to the Law of Nature, ib. 5. 7.

Mortgage; What it is, ib. 10. 16.

Mulleter; How he is responsible for the Damage caus'd by his Mules, III. 1. 7.

Multitude; The difference which is betwixt a Multitude and a People, VII. 2. 14. What it is, ib. f. 6. Its Approbation is oftentimes a Mark of Error, ib. f. 15.

Mutilation; One can to avoid it defend Ones-self so far as to kill the Aggressor, II. 5. 10. How one ought to be recompensed, III. 1. 8.

N.

Names; To whom it belongs to impose proper Names upon another, IV. 1. 4. Whether it be permitted to change a Name, ibid.

Nature; The Excellency of it does not suffice for giving a Right to impose any Obligation upon another, I. 6. 11.

Nature; (Human) Its Constitution is the Foundation of the Law of Nature, II. 3. 14.

Natural; What Force it has with Relation to the Production of Moral Actions, I. 4. 5.

Naturally; The Sense which that Term has sometimes, V. 3. 10.

Nakedness; Whence comes the Shame of Nakedness, VI. 1. 30, 31.

Necessary; That which is Physically so, cannot be imputed to any one, I. 5. 6.

Necessity; There is an absolute and a conditional Necessity, II. 3. 4. In what the Priviledges of Necessity consists, and what is its Foundation, ib. 6. 2, &c.

Negligence; How many sorts of it there are, I. 7. 16. It does not dispense with repairing any Damage, III. 1. 6.

Nephews; In what order Nephews, both by the Father's and Mother's side, come to the Succession Abintestate, IV. 11. 17.

Neutral; To what Neutral Nations are obliged, VIII. 6. 7.

News; Whether one can spread false News to raise the cast-down Courage of the Soldiers, IV. 1. 16. Whether one can sometimes be Responsible for the Evil which false or uncertain News, which one has spread causes, ib. f. 8.

Nobility is not a thing which belongs truly to us, VIII. 4. 17. Nor a Natural Title of Distinction, ib. f. 25. Its Rights dependously upon the Institution of the Laws of every State, ib. f. 26. They ought notwithstanding, and are even ordinarily founded upon some Merit, ib. f. 27. The History of the Original, and Revolutions of Nobility among the Romans, ib. f. 28, 29. In what it consists now among most of the Nations of Europe, ib. f. 30. The too great Multiplication of Nobility is contrary to the Grandeur of a State, ib. f. 31.

Novation; What it is, and how many sorts there are, V. 11. 15.

Nourishment; What they mean by that, IV. 11. 5.

O.

Oath; What an Oath is, IV. 2. 2. Its Use, its Signification, and its inviolable Sanctity, ibid. It ought to be interpreted conformably to the Religion of him that takes it, ib. f. 4. In what Sense the Intention of swearing and engaging is requisite, ib. f. 5, 15. Obligatory Oaths, ib. f. 19. If in these sorts of Oaths the Obligation of an Oath is distinct from the Engagement of it, ib. f. 6. The Interposition of an Oath doth not render an Action valid which is null of it self, ibid. A posterior Oath doth not annul a Convention which is otherwise valid, ibid. Error and Fraud, as well as Fear, annul Oaths, ib. f. 7, 8. Every Oath which regards a thing unlawful, or hinders a greater Good is null, ib. f. 9, 10. An Oath doth not change the Nature of things to which one adds it, ib. 1. 11. It excludes all perplexing Tricks and vain Subtily, ibid. f. 12. But not Conditions and tacit Restrictions, ib. f. 14. The Words of an Oath ought to be understood in the same sense as he that takes it understands them, ib. f. 15. How one may defer or refer an Oath, ib. f. 21. If the Violation of a Part of the Engagements to which a Man was entred, by one and the same Oath, makes him guilty of Perjury, ib. f. 23. How one is dispensed with, or discharged from an Oath, by a Superior, ib. f. 24. Oaths made in the Name of a Person absent, ib. f. 16. What Oaths of another Man one is oblig'd to keep, ib. 5. 17. If one may defer an Oath in Matters of Criminal Causes, VIII. 3. 4. If a King may dispense with keeping Oaths, ibid. 10. 5.

Obligation; What it is, I. 1. 21. ib. 6. 5. What is that which makes capable of Obligation, ib. f. 6, and so on; Its Vertue of what one can impose any thing upon another, ib. f. 9. Why one cannot enter into an Obligation with Ones-self, ib. f. 7. Whether the Impressions which an Obligation makes upon the Conscience

An INDEX of the most Material THINGS, &c.

- ence diminishes any thing of natural Liberty, ib. 4. 8. ib. 6. 5. Obligation exterior and interior, ib. f. 6. Natural and additional Obligation, III. 4. 3. Natural and Civil, ib. f. 5, 6. Perfect and Imperfect, I. 7. 7. Perpetual and for a time, III. 4. 7. Reciprocal and not Reciprocal, ibid. f. 8. V. 12. 23. Obligations contracted by an Attorney, III. 9. The want of satisfying an imperfect Obligation, does not engage one to repair the Damage, ib. 1. 4. The just Meaning of those which one contracts voluntarily, V. 12. 2. The Obligation appointed to a certain State of Life can be drawn from many distinct Principles, I. 1. 11. What Legislators have Regard to, in determining the Obligations, to whom they give the Force of the Civil Law, III. 4. 6.
- Oblige; In how many ways one obliges Ones-self for another, V. 10. 9.
- Occasion; What they mean by that, I. 4. 2. ib. 5. 5. Whether he who gives Occasion to a thing, is always the Cause morally speaking, ib. f. 3.
- Ocean; Whether the great Ocean be capable of Propriety, IV. 5. 9.
- Odious; What it is in the Stile of the Law, V. 12. 12.
- Offended Person; What he ought to do when the Offender makes Shew of repenting, II. 5. 3. V. 13. 1.
- Offices; Good Offices ought to be Reciprocal, III. 24.
- Oligarchy; What it is, VII. 5. 11.
- Olives; One must leave to the Poor, those which remain after one has shaken the Olive-trees, III. 3. 4.
- Omission; When it is that the Omission of a thing can be laid to one's Charge, I. 5. 5.
- Opinion; What Opinions are contrary to Religion, II. 4. 4.
- Orders; (Command) Whether one can change or exceed one's Orders, V. 4. 5. Secret Orders and known Orders, the Distinction which one must make to that Regard, III. 9. 2. Whether one can sometimes innocently exceed the Orders of a Superior, VIII. 1. 6.
- Ostracism; Honourable Punishment, ib. 3. 25.
- Outrages wound the natural Equality of Men, III. 2. 7.
- P.
- Pacts; See Contracts.
- Pagans believed the Gods to be Authors of the Law of Nature, II. 3. 20. The Description which the Pagans made of the Life of the first Men, ib. 2. 2.
- Pardon; Whether the Sovereign can give it sometimes to Criminals, VIII. 3. 15.
- Parole; Its Original, IV. 1. 3. Its natural Use, ib. f. 1. How it is that words ought ordinarily to be explain'd, V. 13. 3.
- Parting; Rules which one must follow in the parting things between many Persons, who have no more right the one than the other, III. 2. 5.
- Partners; See Associates.
- Particular Persons; In what Case they can defend themselves without attending the Help of the Magistrate, VIII. 6. 8. How far the Conventions which they make of their own Head with the Enemy have Force, ibid. 7. In what Cases they can do themselves Justice for certain Crimes, ib. 3. 13.
- Parts; (Natural) What Use of those Parts is contrary to the Law of Nature, VI. 1. 4.
- Patricians; What they were among the Romans, VIII. 4. 28.
- Pawn; What it is, V. 10. 13. Its different sorts, ibid. f. 14.
- Pedantry; It is a Vice of the Mind, and not of the Profession, II. 4. 13.
- People; In what sense a People is immortal, VIII. 12. 17. Whom the Oath of a People obliges, IV. 4. 17. If Prescription hath place amongst a People, ib. 12. 11. If the Change of Inclination which happens to a People, authorizes it to shake off the Yoke of a lawful Prince, V. 11. 10. VII. 6. 6. How it is disengag'd from its Obedience to its Sovereign, ib. 7. 5. How the Form of a People is destroy'd, VIII. 12. 9. How it is again restor'd, ib. 6. 23. If its Consent is always necessary to give Laws the Force of obliging in Point of Conscience, I. 6. 13. The barbarous manners of some particular People don't make an Example for the Rights of a Natural State, II. 3. 10. There is no People which is entirely conducted by the Laws of Nature, ib. f. 9.
- People; (Common) Whence comes that Facility that the Common People have to discern Justice from Injustice, ib. f. 13.
- Perfection; A Man ought to endeavour his own Perfection, ib. 4. 1.
- Permission; There are absolute and imperfect Permissions, I. 6. 15. ib. 7. 2. The Permission of Human Laws does not hinder a thing from being contrary to the Divine, ibid. and VIII. 1. 3. How the Permission of a Crime makes a Man Partaker in it, I. 5. 14.
- Persecutions for the Cause of Religion are Criminal, II. 4. 4.
- Person; What a Moral Person is, I. 1. 12. The Rights and Advantages of a Moral Person, ib. f. 13, 14. Feign'd Persons, ib. f. 15. Free Persons cannot be taken for a Reward of Money, V. 1. 5.
- Petitory; What it is, ib. 13. 6.
- Philosophy; Wherein it consists according to Plato, VIII. 4. 14.
- Physick; The Use of that Science, II. 4. 13.
- Place; What is meant by a strong fortify'd place, V. 10. 4. How long a Commander ought to defend it, VIII. 6. 10. When a Man may seize on a Place in his own Country, II. 6. 8.
- Places of Honour; How a Man may order Places of Honour to avoid Contefts, VIII. 4. 21, 22. Every Place is Honourable, where a Man finds himself posted for the Defence of a State, ib. f. 23.
- Pleaders at Bar; Their Duties, V. 11. 6.
- To Please; Who it is that a Man may be glad to please, VIII. 4. 12.
- Pleasure; How a Man may seek after it innocently, II. 4. 11. What Pleasures are the most lively in all Creatures, VI. 1. 1.
- Plants; They follow the soil in Case of Accession, IV. 7. 5.
- Plebeians; What they were among the Romans, VIII. 4. 28.
- Pledge; What it is, V. 10. 12. If one Man may give himself as a Pledge for another, II. 4. 8.
- Poesie; What it is, and of its Use, ib. f. 18.
- Point of Honour; The Vanity of it, VIII. 4. 8.
- Pond; To whom the Fish in it do belong, IV. 6. 11.
- Polygamy; It is contrary to the Law of Nature, VI. 1. 17, &c.
- Portions; What is meant by equal Portions in the Distribution of an Inheritance, IV. 11. 8.
- Possessor; In what the Right of the Possessor of another Man's Estate upon Trust consists, ib. 8. 5.
- Possession; What it is, ib. 9. 7. Natural or Civil, ibid. How it is interrupted, ib. 12. 4.
- Posts; How a Man ought to assign perilous Posts, VIII. 2. 4.
- Postliminie; What it is, ib. 6. 12. If this Right is for those, who had been deliver'd by the State and accepted, ib. 11. 9.
- Power; What Power (Moral) is, and how many sorts there are of it, I. 1. 19. In what the absolute Power of Sovereigns consists, VII. 6. 7. If the absolute Power of a Prince, does of it self give him the Precedency over another Prince whose Power is limited, VIII. 4. 19. The Power of making Taxes, VII. 4. 7. Judiciary Power, ib. f. 4. The Power of making War and Peace, and of contracting Alliances, ib. f. 5. The Power of establishing Magistrates, ib. f. 6. The Power of inflicting Punishments, ib. f. 3. Legislative Power, ib. f. 2. The Power of examining Doctrines, its just bounds, ib. f. 8. Power is not the only Foundation of Honour and Authority, I. 6. 10. VIII. 4. 13. 18. If the Suspicion which a Man takes from the Power of his Neighbour, is sufficient to give him Right to attack him, II. 5. 6. VIII. 6. 5. The Law of an inferior Power gives place to those of a superior Power, V. 12. 23. What is the Foundation of paternal Power, VI. 2. 1, &c. How far it extends, ib. f. 1, &c. If it can be transfer'd to another, either wholly or in part, ibid. f. 9. How it hath been taken or bounded in civil Societies, ib. f. 11. How it ends, ib. f. 13.

An INDEX of the most Material THINGS, &c.

- Power* (Physical) does not always imply a Moral Power, III. 5. 3. IV. 1. 10.
- Prayer*; The Impiety of those Prayers which Men make to desire God to send Evil to their Neighbours, and to implore the Benediction of Heavens, or to give God Thanks for advantageous Success in an unjust War, II. 4. 4.
- Prescription*; What it is, IV. 12. 12. In what things, and at the End of what times it hath place, ibid. Necessary Conditions to make this Right lawfully prevail, ib. f. 3, 4. Why it was introduced, and what is the Foundation of it, ib. f. 5, &c. If it hath place amongst different Nations, ib. f. 11.
- Precedency*; Upon what its Right is founded, VIII. 4. 15, &c. A Man may have Precedency in one place and not in another, ib. f. 22.
- Presents*; Some are injurious, III. 2. 7. The Presents which a Man makes of things that he doth not care for, are but a sottish and ridiculous Liberality, ib. 3. 3. V. 7. 1, &c.
- Princes*; The Duty of Princes (see Sovereign and King) as they are Men, and as they are Sovereigns, VII. 8. 4. It is easy for them to strengthen and preserve their Dominions by just ways, ib. 2. 10. The Maxims which they ought to follow in the Distribution of Honours and Recompenses, and in the Government of places amongst their Subjects, VIII. 4. 23, 31. How they may dispose of the Goods of particular Men, ib. 5. 2, 7. And of publick Goods, as well those of the Demesne of the State, as those of the Demesne of the Crown, ib. f. 8. How many ways Princes may be injurious to their Subjects, VII. 8. 4. Of Precedency amongst Princes, VIII. 4. 15. How they may meet without having any Dispute of their Passage, ib. 6. 21.
- Prisoner*; What evil a Man may make a Prisoner suffer, who is not yet either Condemned or Heard, ibid. 3. 4. If only because a Man holds him Captive, he is thought Master of all his Goods, without excepting those which he himself hath not in his own Hands, ibid. 6. 29. If he who hath been released upon condition of not serving against the Enemy, may be constrained by the State to break his Promise, ibid. 2. 2. If he is obliged in Conscience to come and put himself into his Enemies Hands, when the condition upon which he was releas'd, is not fulfilled, ibid. If he who escapes re-enters into the Possession of all his Goods, and all his Rights, ibid. 6. 22. The Conventions which concern Prisoners of War, are a most favourable Cause, ibid. 7. 12.
- Price*; What Price is, and how many sorts there are of it, V. 12, &c. What is the Foundation of proper and intrinsic Price, ibid. f. 4. The Price of Things and Actions is capable of a great Extent, I. 2. 10. What is the Reason there's no Price bound to certain profitable Things, V. 1. 5. What it is that augments and diminishes the Price of Things, ibid. f. 6. The Price of Inclination, ibid. f. 7. Legitimate Price, or Price ordain'd by the Laws, ibid. f. 8. Ordinary or Current Price, ibid. f. 9. The Meanness of Price is sufficient to demand an Indemnifying, or to Annul a Contract, ibid. 3. 9.
- Privation* does not constitute the Essence of a Thing, I. 7. 5.
- Privileges*; When a Man may revoke Privileges. See Immunities, VIII. 10. 9. A Man may renounce his Privileges when he can do it without Prejudice to a Third, II. 5. 2.
- Profit*; If a Man may never make any Profit of another's Disprofit, IV. 13. 6.
- Promises*; There are perfect Promises, and imperfect Promises, III. 5. 6, 7. If a plain simple Promise obliges in point of Conscience, ibid. f. 9, &c. If a Promise without a Cause obliges, ibid. If all sorts of Incommodities and Damages have the vertue of excusing a Man from keeping his Promise, V. 12. 22. Promises of that which is already engag'd to some other Person are null, II. 7. 11. And those which are made of another's Goods, or of what depends on another, ib. f. 10. If every Promise includes the tacit Condition, supposing the Things remain in the same State or Condition, V. 12. 20. The lawful Matter
- of Promises, III. 7. The different Causes which are capable of making them void, III. 6. 3, &c. What acceptance is necessary to render them Irrevocable, ibid. f. 15. If a third may accept a Promise, ibid. 9. 5. If this acceptance may be made by Heirs, ibid. f. 6. If a Man may add any burthensome Condition to a Promise already accepted, ibid. f. 7. Of Promises made by the mediation of a Solicitor, ib. f. 3, 4. Absolute and Conditional Promises, III. 8. 1.
- Propagation*; How Propagation of Mankind ought to be made, VI. 1. 5.
- Propriety* (of Goods) is a Moral Quality, I. 1. 16. IV. 4. 1. What it is, ibid. f. 2. The different sorts of Propriety, ib. f. 2. The End of the Establishment of Propriety, II. 6. 5. In what sense it is from Natural Law, IV. 4. 14. What Qualities a thing ought to have to be Capable of Propriety, ib. 5. 1. What Persons are Capable of enjoying some Right of Propriety, ib. 4. 15. Duty as to the Propriety of Goods, ib. 13. 1.
- Protector*; He who makes himself Protector of a Crime is Responsible for the Damage which proceeds from it, III. 1. 4.
- Prudence*; What it is, I. 2. 4. If it comes only from Experience, III. 2. 2. A Man ought always to act with Prudence, II. 4. 6.
- Punishment*; What it is, VIII. 3. 4. To what sort of Justice it relates, ib. f. 5. To whom it belongs to inflict it, ib. f. 7. What is the End of it, ib. f. 8. If it hath place amongst those who live in the Independence of a Natural State, ib. f. 2. All sorts of Sins are not subject to the human Tribunal, ib. f. 14. The Proportion of the Punishment to the Crime cannot be exactly determined, I. 2. 10. They do not inflict Punishment upon the same Crime twice, ibid. 9. 6. What Rules a Man ought to follow in the precise Determination of the Nature and Degree of Punishment, VIII. 3. 23, &c. A Man is not secure from Punishment, tho' he have repair'd the Damage, III. 1. 6. If Punishment can wholly be inflicted upon many Persons who have concurr'd in the same criminal Action, ib. f. 5. If Legislators are obliged to govern themselves, in the Determination of Punishments, according to what the Law of War permits in the Independence of a natural State, II. 5. 17. The natural Punishments of Sin, ib. 3. 21.

Q.

- Quality*; The different sorts of Moral Qualities, I. 1. 17. The particular Qualities of a Person are sometimes a lawful Reason for pardoning him a Crime, VIII. 3. 17.
- Quantities*; The different sorts of Moral Quantities, I. 1. 12. V. 1. 1.
- Questions*; Why they make use of an Oath in Questions of Fact, and not in Questions of Law, IV. 2. 18.
- Quitt*; When a Debtor is quitt, V. 11. 7.

R.

- Rahab*; If she did well to hide the Spies of the Israelites, and why, IV. 1. 16.
- Rape*; A Young Woman, to avoid a Rape, may kill him who endeavours to force her, II. 5. 11. Rapes ought not to be permitted in War, VIII. 6. 7.
- Rarity*; It contributes very much to raise the Price of Commodities, V. 1. 6.
- Reason*; How one knows if a Maxim be agreeable or not to Right Reason, II. 3. 13. Its Light can discover the Foundation of Natural Right, ibid. If its Maxims alone impose any Obligation, ib. f. 20. The Use of Reason is absolutely Necessary to give a true Consent, III. 6. 3.
- Reason of State*; What it is, VII. 9. 3.
- Reason of the Law*; What it is, V. 12. 20.
- Rebels*; If a Treaty of Peace made with Rebels is valid, VIII. 8. 2.
- Recompense*; What it is, I. 9. 5. When a Man has full Right to demand a Recompense, ib. f. 3. There are Natural Recompenses of Vertue, and Arbitrary Recompenses, II. 3. 21.

AN INDEX of the most Material THINGS, &c.

- Refugees*; If one ought to give a Retreat to Refugees, III. 3. 10. If one is always oblig'd to deliver up those which are accus'd of any Crime, VIII. 6. 12.
- Refusal*; The blameable Easiness of those who cannot give a Refusal to any one, III. 5. 10.
- Regents*; The Authority of the Regents of a Kingdom during the Inter-regnum, VII. 7. 8.
- Relapses*; Frequent Relapses aggravate a Crime, VIII. 3. 22.
- Religion*; The Opinions contrary to Religion, II. 4. 4. The Sovereign may limit the Liberty of consecrating certain things to the Use of Religion, VIII. 5. 4.
- Render*; The sense of that Maxim, That a Man ought to render to every one his own, ib. 3. 15.
- Rents*; Appointed according to the Price of Money, V. 7. 12. See more in Hiring.
- Repentance*; There is no true Repentance without Restitution of what a Man hath taken unjustly, III. 1. 6.
- Representation*; What the Right of it is in case of Succession, and what is the Foundation of it, IV. 11. 12. It hath no place in the Line of Ascendants, ibid. f. 13.
- Reprimands*; Of an Equal to an Equal are not permitted but amongst Friends, VIII. 3. 10.
- Reproaches* of some Corporal Infirmity are absurd and unjust, I. 5. 7.
- Republick*; If all Alliances made with a Republick are real, VIII. 9. 6. Most important Maxims for maintaining a Republick, V. 7. 9.
- Reputation*; What Care one ought to have of his Reputation, II. 4. 9.
- Reservations*; (Mental) How ridiculous and absurd they are, IV. 1. 14.
- Resistance*; Interpretative, or presumed, Resistance, I. 4. 10.
- Retaliation*; (Law of) If one ought always to follow it, VIII. 3. 27.
- Retention*; The Right of it, V. 11. 6.
- Retreat*; He who gives a Retreat to Evil-doers is as Guilty as they themselves, I. 5. 14. If a Man may sometimes fall upon his Sovereign for giving a Retreat to one who has injured him, VIII. 6. 12.
- Revenge*; Simple Revenge is condemn'd by the Law of Nature, II. 4. 12. ib. 5. 3. The Satisfaction which a Man finds in it, is but an imaginary Good, VIII. 3. 19. How Ridiculous that is, that proposes to it self the Death of the Offender, ib. f. 23. Particular Revenge is permitted in some States, and why, ib. f. 11.
- Revenger*; Why the Law of Moses gave the Revenger of Blood Permission to kill out of the Bounds of the Asylum, him who had fled thither for Refuge, III. 1. 7.
- Right*; The Right of holding in Fee, IV. 8. 3. Different Senses of the Term Right, I. 1. 20. The Sense of the Maxim, That he who uses his own Right does not injure any one, I. 5. 3. VIII. 3. 31. If one ought always to grant others the same Right, that he has himself, III. 2. 4. In what sense Right is the strongest Will, I. 6. 12. In what the transferring a Right consists, III. 5. 2, &c. How the Right over Persons and Things is acquired, ib. f. 4. Negative Right, IV. 9. 7. Personal or Real, VIII. 6. 4. Perfect and Imperfect, I. 1. 19. ib. 7. 7. In what strict Right differs from Equity, ib. 2. 8. See more in Law.
- Riches*; How one may seek Riches innocently, II. 4. 10.
- Rivers*; The Use of Rivers ought to be Common, III. 3. 4. To whom they belong properly, IV. 5. 3. If Additional Lands go to them whose Banks Rivers augment, IV. 7. 11. If they improve in like manner private Estates, ib. f. 12.
- Robbers*; They are wholly infamous, VIII. 4. 5. If an Oath is Obligatory in Respect of them, ibid. f. 5, &c. III. 6. 11.
- Robbery*; Amongst whom it passes for an Honourable Profession, II. 2. 10.
- S.
- Sacrifices*; What is meant by Sacrifice, V. 12. 7.
- Sages*; If Sages have Right of exacting to the Rigour, that those which are less Wise and Provident than they, should put themselves under their Direction, III. 2. 2.
- Sale*; What a Sale is, and when it is accomplish'd, V. 5. 2. Of forc'd Sales, ib. 3. 6. Of those where a Man runs a Hazard, ib. f. 6. Of whole Sales, ibid. If in a Sale Men may deceive one another in Regard of the Price, ib. f. 10.
- Salary*; What it is, I. 9. 5. II. 3. 21. V. 6. 1. If one may demand the Salary he had given for the Commission of a wicked Action, III. 7. 8.
- Sanction of the Law*; What it is, I. 6. 14. Penal Sanctions are sometimes Alternative, VIII. 3. 4. In what the Sanction of Natural Laws consists, I. 6. 14. II. 3. 21.
- Satisfaction* to Justice is not one of the Natural Ends of the Punishment of Crimes, VIII. 3. 12. The false Notions of the Satisfaction of Jesus Christ are contrary to Religion and Morality, II. 4. 4.
- Scandal*; (Receiv'd) What it is, I. 5. 3.
- Sciences*; Some are profitable, some curious, and some vain, II. 4. 13. How one ought to study them, ibid. Those which teach a Science ought not to conceal any thing that has Relation to it, IV. 1. 7.
- Schools* (Publick) are Necessary in a State, VII. 9. 4.
- School-master*; He has Right to use moderate Correction towards the Children, which are under his Direction, VIII. 3. 10.
- Scruples*; How a Man ought to cure himself of them, I. 3. 9.
- Sea*; Of the Dominion of the Sea, IV. 5. 5, &c.
- Secret*; If one may dispense with communicating to others an innocent Secret and profitable to Mankind, III. 3. 2. Especially when he has taken an Oath not to discover it, IV. 2. 10.
- Seller*; His Engagements towards the Buyer, V. 5. 5. He ought Faithfully to discover the Defects of his Merchandize, ib. 3. 2. See more in Buyer.
- Sentinel*; He is Responsible for the Damage occasion'd by Fire happening through his Inadvertency, I. 5. 14.
- Separation*; If that of Body and Goods, the Bond of Marriage still subsisting, is conformable to Natural Law, VI. 1. 22.
- Sepulture*; If one may refuse Sepulture to those that die insolvent, V. 10. 12.
- Services*; Of innocent Profit, III. 3. 3. If one may exact Payment of one for Services which turn to the Advantage of many, V. 6. 4. Services done to a State by a Criminal, or even his Ancestors, may sometimes obtain him his Pardon, VIII. 3. 16.
- Servitude*; If God is the immediate Author of it, VII. 3. 3. Its Original and Extent of Power that it gives to a Master, ib. f. 4.
- Sexes*; Why God hath establish'd the Difference of Sexes, V. 1. 2. There are some Foundations of Honour which are common to both Sexes, and others which are particular to one, VIII. 4. 12.
- Siege*; If in a Siege one may pull down the Houses of particular Men, ib. 5. 7.
- Signs*; There are Natural Signs, and Signs of Institution, IV. 1. 2. Wherein Signs of Consent consist, III. 6. 16. Without these, internal Action hath no Effect of Right, IV. 12. 8.
- Silence*; In what a Man is oblig'd to keep Silence, ib. 1. 7. When it is Criminal, ibid. and I. 5. 14. V. 3. 4. How one ought to interpret the Silence of the Law, I. 6. 15. Long Silence is not sufficient to make one presume, that a Man abandons his Goods, or Right, IV. 12. 8. If upon the Silence of a Sovereign, one may presume, that he ratifies a Treaty concluded without his Order, VIII. 9. 13.
- Simony*; What it is, V. 1. 5.
- Sin*; How many things include the Idea of Sin, VIII. 3. 2. Why it is compar'd to a Debt, ib. f. 5. If Sins of Weakness are truly Sins, I. 5. 8. If all Sins are Punishable at a Human Tribunal, VIII. 3. 14. The Limitation of that Maxim, That those who induce others to Sin, sin themselves, ib. 6. 16. If the Natural Consequences of Sin are instead of Punishments, ib. 3. 4.
- Sinners*;

An INDEX of the most Material THINGS, &c.

- Sinners*; Charity does not permit us to despair of Sinners Amendment without great Reasons, VIII. 3. 10.
- Sisters*; In what Order Sisters ought to succeed, IV. 11. 17.
- Slavery*, VI. 3. 3. In what its Inconveniencies consist, ib. f. 10. What is the Original of it, ib. f. 4. 5. If there is any who is Naturally a Slave, III. 2. 5. The Condition of Slaves is vile and disadvantageous in many States, VIII. 4. 6. In what Sense they make a Part of their Masters Goods, VI. 3. 7. If one may do them an Injury, ib. f. 8. What is the Condition of the Children, ib. f. 9. What is the Foundation of the Obligation of a Slave made by War to his Master, ib. f. 6. How a Slave is deliver'd from Servitude, ib. f. 11. If a Master is Responsible for the Damage caus'd by his Slave, III. 1. 6. The Right of having the Service of another's Slave, IV. 8. 10.
- Sociability* is the Foundation of Natural Law, II. 3. 15. A Man is dispens'd with for not practising the Laws of Sociability toward them who violate 'em in regard to us, ibid.
- Societies* are Simple and Compound, VI. 1. 1. Society in general which is betwixt all Men, must not be confounded with particular, II. 3. 17. How one ought to rule himself in the Distribution of Advantages and Charges amongst Members of the same Society, I. 7. 9. Society may treat with one of its Members, as from a Particular to a Particular, ibid. In what Case one may lawfully renounce Society, VIII. 11. 2. The divers Means of contracting a Society, V. 8. How they call its Parts, ib. 6. 2. Irregular Society, ib. f. 3. Universal, or of all Goods, ib. f. 4. How, and why Civil Society was established, VII. 1. 7.
- Sodomy* is a Sin contrary to Natural Law, VI. 1. 4.
- Soldiers*; If they be oblig'd upon Pain of Death, firmly to hold a Post, where they run the Risque of Perishing, III. 7. 5. VIII. 2. 4. If one ought to give some Salary, even to Citizens, when the State is Rich enough to make such Expences, ib. f. 1. If a Soldier who in Exercising kills a Man undefign'dly is guilty of Homicide, III. 8. 7.
- Son*; Every Son must be presum'd to be the Son of his Mother's Husband, IV. 11. 10. VI. 1. 10.
- Soul*; How it ought to be taken care of, II. 4. 1, &c. How one endamages another in Relation to his Soul, III. 1. 3. The undeniable Possibility of its Immortality, is sufficient to fix any Man's Resolution upon a virtuous Life, II. 3. 21.
- Sovereignty*; The Duties of a Sovereign in general, VII. 9. His Rights and Power, VII. 4. 2, &c. It's easy for him if he performs his Duty to make himself obey'd and loved by the greatest Part of his Subjects, ib. f. 5. A Man ought to obey him rather than his own Father, V. 12. 2, 3. In a Matter of Doubt, a Man ought always to presume upon the Justice of his Orders and Enterprizes, VIII. 1. 7. How far his Power of ordaining the Value of sorts of Money extends, V. 1. 14. And of constraining his Subjects to make certain sorts of Contracts, ib. 3. 6. Of ruling Matriages, and of compelling and hindering Men to enter into this Engagement, VII. 1. 8. Of granting to some particular Persons, or certain Societies, the sole Privilege of driving certain sorts of Commerce, V. 7. Of pardoning Criminals, VIII. 3. 17. If he may use mental Reservations, or innocent Dissimulations, IV. 1. 17. He cannot, out of a meer Caprice, blot any of his Subjects with Infamy, VIII. 4. 9. Nor banish an innocent Subject, ib. 11. 6. And in what Case he is Responsible for the Injuries done by his Subjects, III. 1. 11. All Actions cannot be revoked, I. 6. 6, 8, 10. See Princes, King. The Original and Foundation of Sovereignty, VII. 3. How many distinct Parts it includes, VII. 4. 1, &c. Its common and proper Subject, ib. 6. 4. If there is a real and personal Sovereignty, ibid. How far its Rights are Inviolable, ib. 8. The different manners of acquiring it, ib. 7. And of possessing it, ib. 6. 14. If there may be a Sovereignty which is but for a time, ibid. f. 15. If it receives any Taint by unequal Alliances, VIII. 9. 4. The proper Character of Sovereignty, VII. 6. 1, &c. Why, and in how many manners it is limited, ib. f. 9.
- Stratagems* are permitted towards an Enemy, IV. 1. 12. VIII. 6. 6.
- Subjects*; Their Duties, See Citizens. If the State may do them an Injury, ib. 8. 2. The unjust Complaints that they sometimes make against their Sovereign, ib. f. 3. They can promise nothing to the Prejudice of him, III. 7. 11. How the Sovereign may deprive them of the Right they had got by Contract, VIII. 10. 7. How they may have an Action at Law against their Prince, VII. 6. 2. VIII. 10. 6. How far their Goods are in the Disposal of their Sovereign, ib. 5. 1, &c. The Disposal of places amongst them depends upon their Sovereign, ib. 4. 23. If they may sometimes resist their Prince, VII. 8. 5.
- Successor*; How he is oblig'd to the Contracts, Treaties, and other Engagements of his Predecessors, VIII. 9. 8. ibid. 10. The General Foundations of Successions Abintestate, IV. 11. 1, 2. Successions by Heads, and Succession by Pedigree, ib. 6. 12. and 11. 2. The different Ways that Successions are rul'd by the Civil Laws, ib. f. 18. Of Succession to Patrimonial Kingdoms, VII. 7. 11. Of Succession to Kingdoms established by the free Consent of the People, and of the different sorts of them, ib. f. 12, &c. What ought to decide Disputes in subject of Succession, ibid. f. 15.
- Suffrages*; Why Plurality of Suffrages carries a thing in Deliberations of Assemblies, ib. 2. 15. A Limitation of this Maxim in certain Assemblies, ib. f. 16. Of a Case where the Suffrages are Equal, ib. f. 17. When one ought to join or separate them, ib. f. 18.
- Superior*; If one may sometimes execute the Orders of a Superior, which are manifestly unjust, VIII. 1. 8. How a Superior may engage himself in Relation to the Goods and Actions of those that depend upon him, III. 7. 10.

T.

- Talents* are only Estimable as a Man makes good Use of them, VIII. 4. 12.
- Tax*; How to order the Tax of Subjects, ib. 5. 6.
- Time*; If Course of Time gives any Right, IV. 12. 7. The Effect of Time insert'd in a Promise, III. 8. 7. The Time of Truces, VIII. 7. 8. The Time appointed for settling the Articles of Peace, ib. 8. 4.
- Terms*; They signify nothing but by Institution, IV. 1. 3. There is a principal and an accessory Signification of Terms, ib. f. 6. Every one may sometimes forge new Terms, I. 1. 1. Two different Ideas, which one must distinguish in the Terms which relate to Morality, ib. 2. 6. Of Terms which have many Significations, V. 12. 11. If one may sometimes make use of particular Terms, IV. 1. In a Contract the Terms ought to be understood according to the Custom of the place in which the Contract is made, ib. f. 6.
- Testament*; What a Testament or Will is, ib. 10. 3. If one may in Conscience make void a Will, where there is some Formality wanting, ib. f. 8. If a Testament may be revok'd by the Testator, when there is a Clause intimating that every posterior Testament shall not be valid, I. 6. 6.
- Theft*, See Robbery.
- Titles*; Diverse remarks upon the Subject of Titles, ib. 1. 18. If they of themselves give a Prince Precedency above another Prince who hath not so proud Titles, VIII. 4. 19.
- Traitors*; If one may make use of them, ib. 6. 16.
- Transactions*; How far the Transactions of a Crime are valid, ib. 31.
- Transfugees*; If the Desertion of Transfugees, true or feign'd, is innocent, ib. 11. 5. If one may receive and make use of them, ibid.
- Treaty*; The Maxims of Prudence which one ought to follow in making a Treaty, III. 6. 9. If there is any need of making a Treaty about those things to which a Man is already oblig'd by Natural Law, II. 2. 11. VIII. 9. 2. Treaties ought to be more inviolably observ'd by a King than by a Commonwealth, IV. 2. 17. If a Treaty of Alliance is renew'd tacitly, VIII. 9. 11. Of a Case where one renews many Treaties different in certain things, ib. f. 8. If publick Treaties ties made without the Order of the Sovereign are valid, ib. f. 12.

An INDEX of the most Material THINGS, &c.

Treasure; To whom a Treasure which is found, ought to belong, IV. 6. 13. What publick Treasure is, and who may dispose of it, VIII.
Troops; If one ought to give Passage to strange Troops, III. 3. 5. One ought to give nothing to strange Troops which are enrolled beyond single Pay, VIII. 6. 18.
Truce; What it is, and how many sorts there are of it, ibid. f. 3. If there is any tacit Truce, ib. f. 7. It leaves the Subject of the War, and the Pretensions of the Parties subsisting, ibid. f. 5. What is permitted, or not permitted, during a Truce, ibid. f. 9. Of the Duration of a Truce, ib. f. 8. Of its Infraction, ib. f. 11. If the Enemy may retain Prisoners, those who by Accident are found in their Territories after the time of the Truce is expired, ib. f. 10.
Tutors; The Use of Tutors, and the different sorts of them, IV. 4. 15. They have Power to use moderate Correction upon their Pupils, VIII. 3. 10.
Tyrant; If one may take up Arms to deliver Subjects from the Yoke of a strange Prince who is become a Tyrant, ib. f. 6. 14.
Tyranny; What it is, VII. 5. 11.

V.

Vanquish; By what one knows which vanquishes in a Combat, VIII. 8. 5.
 A Valet cannot require that it may be permitted him fraudulently to dissipate his Master's Goods, V. 10. 3.
Vengeance; The Content which a Man finds in it is an imaginary Good, VIII. 3. 19. How sottish and ridiculous that is which proposes to it self the Death of an Offender, ib. f. 23. Particular Vengeances are permitted in certain States, and why they are, ibid. f. 11. Why the Law of Moses gave a Revenger of Blood Permission of killing out of the Bounds of the Asylum him who had fled thither for Refuge, III. 1. 7.
Virtue; What it is, I. 4. 6. The Profit of it, II. 3. 10. The Practice of it is more easy than the abandoning of it to Vice, ib. f. 21. The Exercise of most Virtues has much Liberty and Extent, I. 2. 10. No Virtue counsels any thing which engages to a Crime, VIII. 3. 19.
Vice; What it is, I. 4. 6. It is equally dishonest and pernicious, II. 3. 10. It is more fatiguing than Virtue, ibid. f. 21. There are National Vices, I. 4. 5. VIII. 3. 21. Whence the Horror which we have for some Vices from our Infancy proceeds, ib. 2. 6. What is the best way of noting up Vices, VIII. 3. 14. What Vices one ought to leave unpunished, ibid. 25. If the particular Vices of a Person authorize us to break our word with him, III. 6. 9.
Vow; What a Vow is, and what Conditions are necessary to render it Valid, ibid. f. 15. IV. 28. Absurd and impertinent Vows don't oblige, ibid. 2. 10. How one is dispens'd with, and discharg'd of his Vows, by a Superior, ibid. f. 24. Fathers may annul their Children's Vows whilst they are under Power, VI. 2. 1.
Volition; What it is, I. 4. 1.
Use of a thing, In what it consists according to the Lawyers, IV. 8. 8. Use is the Master of Languages, ibid. f. 6.
Usury is Blameable, I. 7. 10.
Usurper; How, and how far, an Usurper's Orders oblige Subjects, during the Life of their legitimate Sovereign, VII. 8. 10. How his Empire may become Legitimate, ib. 7. 4. ib. 8. 9. How far his Actions, Contracts, and other Engagements are valid, after he hath been chased away, VIII. 12. 3.

Utility; There are two sorts of it, II. 3. 10. Particular Utility is not the Foundation of Natural Law, ibid. f. 10, &c.

W.

Wager; How it is permitted, V. 9. 4.
War; What it is, I. 10. 8. How many sorts there are, ibid. and VIII. 6. War Offensive and Defensive, what it is, ib. f. 3. Solemn and not Solemn, ib. f. 9. What End they ought to propose to themselves in making War, ib. f. 2. Just Causes of undertaking it, ib. f. 3. The Justice of the Causes of War ought to be clear and manifest, ib. f. 4. How far Acts of Hostility can be carried, ib. 6. 7. How far the Custom established among Nations have carried the Licence of War, ib. f. 15. When it is that a Prince may undertake a War, VII. 9. 13. Whether Subject can without Crime bear Arms for his Prince in an unjust War, VIII. 1. 8. In a Civil Society no particular Person has a Right to make War of his own Head, ib. 6. 8. How it is, that in a Treaty, these words (To make War) are to be understood, IV. 12. 15. Whether the Prescription ought to run during War, ibid. f. 5. The diverse sorts of Alliances which have Relation to War, VIII. 9. 3.
Water; If one may appropriate Water to himself, IV. 5. 2. The Right of drawing it out of a Neighbour's Well, ib. 8. 12. Services for Running-waters, ib. f. 11. If one ought to let every one draw, III. 3. 3, 4.
Widows Marrying before the time were noted with Infamy by the Roman Law, VIII. 4. 6.
Will; What the Will is, I. 1. 2. Its different Actions, ib. 4. 1. If a simple Declaration of our Will, in the favour of another, imposes an Obligation upon us, III. 5. 5. When a Man may revoke his Wills, I. 6. 6. How many distinct Wills are united, VII. 2. 5. In what Sense Men say the Will is as Criminal as the Action, VIII. 3. 18.
Free-Will; See Liberty.
Will or Testament; See Testament.
Witness; The Use of Witnesses, III. 6. 16. Their Duties, V. 13. 9. What Witnesses are receivable or refusible, ib. Whence it comes that there must be Two at least, ibid. The Oath which they take, IV. 2. 20. They ought to tell what they know even without an Oath, when they are required by the Magistrate, ib. 1. 20.
Whores; How they ought to be regarded in the World, VIII. 4. 5.
Women; The Brightness of their Husband's Honour reflects upon them, ib. f. 12. Those that sell their Favours sin doubly, V. 1. 5. If it is against Natural Law, That one Woman should have many Husbands, or that Women should be common, VI. 1. 15. If one ought to permit Strangers to marry Wives in his Country, III. 3. 13. If one can swear that a Woman is not with Child, IV. 2. 2.
Young Women; Those that let themselves be debauch'd cannot complain that their Gallants do 'em an Injury properly so call'd, III. 7. 8. How one ought to indemnify a Young-woman he has abused, ibid. 1. 10. A Young-woman cannot demand when she marries, that she may grant any Favours to any other than her Husband, V. 10. 3. She who is married against her Will is nevertheless oblig'd to be True to her Husband, I. 6. 11.
Worship; God himself allows one in a pressing Necessity to suspend the Actions of his Worship, VIII. 3. 18.
Writings; They are the most sure Signs of Consent, III. 6. 16. What is the Force of Obligations by Writings, V. 2. 6.
Writing-Masters; They ought not to debase themselves in writing Scandal, V. 1. 5.

F I N I S.

